Dear Friends:

Thanks to everyone for this good report. I try to teach every child here that "thank you" are two words far more important than "help me." To be sure a call for help is right and proper at the time of real need. The S. O. S. of a ship foundering at sea is a distress-call for help, and is worthy to be heard. A child lost on the street, confused and afraid may rightly ask for help. A person in a burning building—where I once was—may call for help. No, "help me" is not a wrong phrase when rightly used. Our whole basis of dependence upon God and a major part of prayer may be a living soul's desire for sustenance and help from above.

But "thank you," why they are the humble, beautiful words of gratitude. I rhyme it in my own verses as follows:

"HELP ME" AND "THANK YOU."

"Help me" is important
As everyone must know,
Helping on each other
Makes life worthwhile below;
"Help me" is the signal
Of ships at sea distressed,
"Help me" brings the answer
By which the ships are blessed.

Equally important—
We never need be told—
Are certain words spoken
Worth more than wheat or gold;
Must never be omitted,
Lest one be crass and rude,
Must be spoken humbly Expressing gratitude:

"Thank You!"

These lines came to me as I rode along thinking of a very kind deed done for the orphanage by a good friend. It is important that we express our gratitude to scores and scores of people who never forget these little children here.

It is a very busy time here these days. All the bigger boys are out in the fields with the farmers making hay, chopping and replanting corn and silo; helping in the dairy and everywhere around. The girls are doing their share around the kitchen, diningroom, inside the buildings and out on the lawn. There is plenty of time for rest and play, and plenty of good things to eat.

But the main burden of this letter is to say thank you for all you are doing to help us here. We do greatly appreciate it, and we realize that thank you are two of the most beautiful words in the English language. But happy is the man who pulls his share in life whether anyone ever says to him thank you or not.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JUNE 10, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Mrs. T. G. Proctor, Sanford, N. C.
Mrs. Joe K. Landrum, Vernon Hill, Va.
Holy Neck Missionary Aid Society, Holland, Va.

Mrs. James M. Bradshaw, Franklin, Va.

A Friend, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mrs. H. W. Trump, Sr., Suffolk, Va.

Coupons and Buttons:

Sophia Missionary Society.

Coupons, Buttons & Clothing:

Mr. & Mrs. A. L. Murray, Haw River, N. C.

Clothing & Costume Jewelry:

Civinettes, Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 6,278.53

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Morrisville $ 10.00

Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem (Nans) S. S. $ 31.35
Christian Temple 20.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Greensboro, Calvary, S. S. $ 15.00
Hebron 10.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Smithwood $ 45.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester S. S. $ 8.34

Total $ 139.69

Grand total $ 6,418.22

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $17,431.64
Class No. 15, First Christian Ch., Reidsville, N. C. $ 15.00
Stevens Holland, Randleman, N. C. 25.00
Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. (dividend) 36.00
John Chamblin, Gibsonville, N. C. 1.50
Woman's Convention of the Southern Convention 12.00
Missionary Society, Cong. Christian Ch., Lincoln, Kansas 5.00
Mary Sue Brittle S. S. Class 5.00
Special Gifts 352.60

452.10

Grand total $17,883.74

Total for the week $ 591.79

Total for the year $24,301.96

SECURITY AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

(Continued from page 3.)

sponsibilities to the church. I believe that no one should turn aside anything that is asked by the church without careful thought being given. It may seem that many of the responsible tasks that are offered are more than we are able to do. My personal experience has been that I have never felt that I was worthy or qualified for a given responsibility, and too, I always thought that some other person could do the job better, however, with the help of God, and a good try, I find that there is a great blessing in store and life has been greatly enriched by so doing. God blesses when we are willing to accept responsibilities, then perform

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $..... as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

WE NEED PENTECOST IN '54. (Continued from page 5.)

tive pace when a young athlete came into the community and pointed out how much the neighborhood needed a recreation and fellowship area—a place to sit in the shade, have a picnic, play a game, and so on. He interested a near-by church to head a movement to secure an open field and to equip it for recreational purposes. This brought great interest in the church itself, and Sunday afternoons song services, with brief message, were arranged, assisted by a good public address system.

Nothing will stir churches like practicing some of the beliefs they regard as so important.

As they help a young couple who, perhaps, were having it hard financially or whose marriage was threatened by misunderstanding, they become stirred and renewed. As they go out to homes and hospitals, bringing words of faith and cheer and join in prayer to heal and renew.

God will stir us and renew us if we give him a chance. Our churches can have a real, moving, genuine revival of interest and faith if they want it. We must seek, above all, to have the indwelling Holy Spirit; we must pray; and we must work. We must not be content with letting affairs go droning on just as they always do—and then surely nothing will happen!

Let's have Pentecost in our lives, our homes, and our churches throughout 1954!

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON. (Continued from page 12.)

and breakup of the nation, and you will see how much meaning this story has for us in our time. Idolatry, intemperance, materialism, corruption, Sabbath desecration, neglect of worship, miscarriage of justice, class consciousness, reliance on military power and military alliances, secularism—the organization of life without God—lack of vital religion, love of ease, luxurious living—these and other sins caused it to happen there. They just as surely will cause it to happen here.

A few years ago a cartoonist pictured Civilization, a forlorn figure with bedraggled hair, exposed to a terrible thunderstorm. In despair, she had thrown herself upon a large rock, trying to hide her face and crying, "Has God forgotten us?" Old

Father Time, writing his book of history near-by sagely replies, "No, he has not forgotten you, but you have been neglecting him." "Be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget!"

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1951 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

"WHAT ABOUT SPIRITUAL HEALING?"

(Continued from page 13.)

victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Dr. Bruce Wright tells of hearing Fannie Crosby, blind hymn writer, sing one of her hymns before a packed audience in Carnegie Hall. It was the beloved hymn "Some Day the Silver Cord Will Break." There was a heavenly radiance on her face as she sang,

"And I shall see him face to face,
And tell the story saved by grace."

It was when she put special emphasis on the word "see" that a thrill went through the audience. You could never forget it. Fannie Crosby was thinking, was she not, of the healing of the Resurrection? Her blind eyes would be opened, and she was to see her Saviour, face to face.

Then let me never complain nor ever limit the power of my Master through stubborn unbelief. Never! Let me be a channel of sunshine and healing to others in their sufferings. Yes, let me look away from my weaknesses, to Christ in his power and his strength. And let me pray, as did those first disciples, astounded as they were in his presence—"Lord increase my faith!"

SECURITY AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

(Continued from page 14.)

them in the best way we know. So often we miss the boat in the story of the talents as told by Christ. We try to determine how many talents we have rather than using the one or more that we already possess.

I believe that as a Christian I have an obligation to the community, state, nation and world in which I live. There is no suffering, at any place, that I should not be concerned about. There are millions of people in the world that are without food and clothing. There are a great number that suffer from disease.

There are many that have never heard of the Christ, that I claim to know. Here again the task is larger than I am able to do alone. It will take all the other Christians joining in a united effort to alleviate the needs of the world. Yes, I must remind you that with the privilege of being a Christian come responsibilities. It is not only true in the Christian way of living, it is true of all privileges. I challenge all men everywhere to a closer communion with the Christ, my Saviour.

I believe that in living as a Christian we live a life of service, not a life of do nothing, first for the sake of Christ, ourselves and others.

I furthermore, challenge the laymen of our Fellowship to join me in this declaration, "Some may choose to serve other gods, but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." This I believe to be right, this I believe to be good for all, for in so doing we may have peace of mind, contentment, security and comfort as only God can give it, and a life of usefulness in the service of one who sitteth as Judge - Supreme, before whom we shall come and hear, either "depart for I know you not" or "well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." This I believe.

Questions for Discussion.

1. What is real security?
2. Why should Christians have heavy responsibilities?
3. How can the church best enter community life?
4. When should the church declare itself on political issues?
5. What are the responsibilities facing you as a layman?

Special Note.

Mr. S. H. Pell of Ramseur, North Carolina was the author of this meditation. Mr. Pell is a farmer and worker in a textile mill; he was the organizer and first chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference and has long been active in his local church as a deacon and teacher of a Young Adult Sunday school class.

The Seagrove Church has spent over $1,200 on landseaping, grassing and laying of walks. This improvement program not only makes the property more useable, but beautifies the church grounds. Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp is the pastor of our Seagrove Church.

"The Quest of an Ideal"

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D.D.

Pastor of First Church, Richmond, Virginia

The quest of an ideal is the glory of human life. It is the distinguishing characteristic of the human family. The quest of an ideal—the search for something better and for the best—separates mankind from all the rest of the animal kingdom.

The horse pursues no ideal of greater strength or greater swiftness. It simply responds to whatever endowment nature has given. The song bird pursues no ideal of improving its quality of voice, or of increasing its repertoire of note combinations to enhance its power to gladden the human heart. The song bird today sings the same song, without any modifications or variation, as was sung by its first ancestors at creation's dawn. It sings because it is its nature to sing. All life, except human, is but a response to nature's endowment.

But not so with man. He has an inborn desire to enlarge upon nature's endowment, to realize even more than nature has bequeathed, to improve upon the past, to surpass his ancestors in their accomplishments and their capacity for service. For man, life is a constant pursuit after higher, and even higher ideals.

The robin and the mocking bird this spring built the same kind of nest in your lawn tree, and built it in the same kind of way as robins and mocking birds have been building their nests from the beginning of time, for birds build their nests and live their lives by the impulse of instinct.

But man does his work and lives his life by the motive power of ideals. Man does not build or finish his home in the same way, and of the same plan today as he did a thousand years ago. He is always finding ways to improve upon the past. The anthropologist tells us that in the beginning, man's place of abode was inferior even to that of the birds and the beasts. Sometimes primitive man followed the example of the animals that live underground and used the caves provided by nature for his dwelling place. Sometimes he followed the example of the climbing animals, and with branches and leaves fixed his resting place in the forks of the trees. He had no houses or artificial dwellings of any kind in those days, for he had no tools with which to build. We are told by students of antiquity that the first shelter man built for himself had but one wall made of sticks and mud. If the wind blew from the west, he got on the east side of the shelter; if it blew from the east, he got on the west side. He shifted the wall to protect himself when the wind blew from the north or the south. And had it not been for his quest of an ideal, we would have been living in the same way to this day. But he had an ideal of a shelter which would not necessitate such inconveniences upon his part, so instead of having just one wall to protect him from the east wind and the west wind, he built one like it to protect him from the north and south, shifting his position as circumstances demanded, and later he put on the other two sides so he wouldn't have to change his position with any change of wind. And still his protection was not complete, for when it rained, the rain beat down through the branches of the trees upon his upturned face. So he made a roof, and the reed thatched hut of the Indian wigwam type was the result of man's first quest of an ideal shelter.

From that crude beginning has evolved the modern home.

Not only in architecture, but in every interest common to man, each generation has followed the gleam of its own ideal, making improvement and advancement over the creative powers of the preceding generations.

Who has not been filled with wonderment when first he became aware of the marvelous climb humanity has made from the dim, dark past to the enlightened present? How interesting is the evolution of language, the development of means of communication between individuals. How wonderful is the development not only of architecture, but of agriculture, commerce, science and religion.

The quest for the ideal, the search for something better, has given us all our present day advantages. Had it not been for the quest of the ideal in the past, today we would have no houses, no railways, no seamships, no automobiles, no schools, no churches, and none of the countless modern inventions for convenience and efficiency such as we enjoy.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY. 1956.
Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1954

NUMBER 25

The Sun's New Editor and a Group of Convention Officials

Shown above at the extreme right is Dr. Stanley C. Harrell who was elected editor of The Christian Sun at the recent biennial session of the Southern Convention and assumes his position with this issue. Others shown, from left to right, are George D. Colclough, former treasurer, and now vice-president of the Convention; J. T. Kernodle, managing editor of The Sun; Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, recently elected Convention president, and Dr. Henry E. Robinson, secretary. Other Convention officials are Walter L. Cooper, treasurer; J. W. Barney, historian, and Dr. Wm. T. Scott, superintendent.

News Flashes

We wish for our readers a safe and sane and glorious Fourth of July!

Dr. Wm. T. Scott attended the General Council as a member of the Nominating Committee and a Corresponding Member of the Executive Committee, representing the Southeast.

For the picture on the front page this week we are indebted to Mr. Preston Charles of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot and Mr. J. T. McClemy of Suffolk, the photographer and a good member of our Suffolk church.

At the Pre-Council Seminar on Evangelism held in New Haven, on June 22, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein of our Richmond church was one of the speakers, his subject being Seasonal Evangelism and the Preaching Mission."

In this issue of THE SUN we print the first of the letters from Dr. and Mrs. Sloan, who are on an extended trip to the Orient. Though he states in the letter that they had not yet been on foreign soil, the letter itself was later mailed in New Zealand.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention has invited Dr. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro, N. C., to speak at its annual meeting on July 21, at Franklin, Virginia. His subject will be "The Importance of the Sunday School as a Part of the Church." The three North Carolina Conferences have asked Dr. Wisseman to speak on the same subject at the following places: Oak Level on July 7, Needham's Grove on July 13, and Hopedale on July 15.

Six representatives of the Youth Fellowship of First Church, Richmond, had charge of the morning worship service on Sunday, June 27, in the absence of Dr. Helfenstein, who was attending the General Council sessions in New Haven, Conn. The sermon for the day, especially prepared by the pastor, was presented by Russell Seldon. Other young people participating in the service were Joy Gravely, who presided, Peggy Proctor, Carroll Gravely, William Blaylock, and Shirley Parsons. Mrs. Virginia Dofflemeyer sang a solo.

Independance Day, 1954!

Our National Hymn

A FOURTH OF JULY STORY

By H. H. SMITH.

While "The Star-Spangled Banner" is prescribed by army and navy regulations as our national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," is our popular national hymn. Samuel Francis Smith, who was a class-mate of Oliver Wendell Holmes at Harvard, is the author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." In a class poem, Dr. Holmes once described him thus:

And there's a fine youngster of excellent pith,
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith;
But he shouted a song for the brave and the free—
Just read on his medal, "My country," "of thee."

Later in life, when Smith's hymn had become universally admired as our patriotic air, Dr. Holmes said to him: "Your name and fame will live when I and my works are forgotten."

It was while he was a student for the Baptist ministry, at Andover Theological Seminary, that he wrote "America." It was written in less than an hour. Dr. Tillett, in the Methodist Hymnal Annotated, says: "The author had not the remotest idea that the words he dashed off thus hurriedly would ever become a favorite with any lovers of music and song, much less become the national hymn of a great and growing nation. National hymns do not become so by virtue of their loftiness of poetic thought and expression, but because they have in them that indefinable simple something that gets into the hearts of the people. Greater national songs than this have been written—hymns surpassing it in dignity and nobility of thought—but it is doubtful if we shall ever have in America a national hymn more popular with the people than this."

When someone expressed regret in the presence of Dr. Smith that our national hymn should have the same meter and tune as the national hymn of England, he replied: "I don't share this regret. On the contrary, I deem it a new and beautiful bond of union between the mother country and her daughter."

It was written in 1832, and was first sung that year at a children's Fourth of July celebration in Park Street Church, Boston.

The following verses, published in the Boston Courier in 1885, indicate the wide use our public schools have made of this national song:

PASSING THE PRIMARY SCHOOL.

Again each morning as we pass
The city streets along,
We hear the voices of the class
Ring out the nation's song.

The small boys' treble piping clear,
The bigger boys' low growl,
And from the boy who has no ear
A weird, discordant howl.

With swelling hearts we hear them sing
"My Country, 'Tis of Thee—"
From childish throats the anthem ring,
"Sweet land of liberty."

(Continued on page 15.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Work Day at "Moonelon" Success

About sixty men from churches in both states put in three hundred man-hours on June 5 at "Moonelon," Elon College, N. C. "Moonelon," as our readers know, is being developed as a conference center and assembly grounds with a major portion of the improvements having been undertaken by the Laymen's Fellowship of the convention.

A bulldozer, three tractors, a shovel, two trucks, and many smaller tools including power saws cleared, cleaned, scraped, dug, and in general made a fine start on the project. Footings were dug for the new building, the ball field was enlarged, a parking area was cleared, trees were white-washed in the picnic area, the trim on the lodge was painted, and much underbrush removed from around the lake. The swimming pool had been previously scrubbed out and the diving board was set in place with water gathering for swimming.

The ladies of the Elon Community Church served a barbecue dinner and young people peddled soda during the day. The weather was ideal.

Since June 5 the road has been widened and graded with storm drains installed. The footings of the new building have been poured with mason work to be started as of June 21 under the supervision of the Building Committee, T. A. Vincent, chairman. Carl Monroe of Greensboro is supervising construction. Mrs. H. W. Gerringer of the Berea Church and family will take engagement dates for the use of "Moonelon" by church groups. This family has already moved into the lodge. Rev. J. S. Graves of Burlington is chairman of the Properties Committee in Charge of activities at the conference center. The pool is already in use and was greatly enjoyed by the Elon Young Peoples Conference in session June 13-19.

The Finance Committee is charged with raising funds to keep our building program moving ahead. About $3,000 is in hand but much more is needed. All laymen's groups, individuals, and classes are urged to make their solicitations and forward checks marker "Moonelon" to the convention office. Care is being taken to see that all conference Laymen's Fellowships will receive credit. Dr. Henry E. Robinson is chairman of the Finance Committee.

A meeting of the full committee in charge of the entire project met at Elon June 17 to set policies and map plans for the immediate future.

H. E. ROBINSON.

North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention

The 1954 meeting of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention will be held at Hopedale Church, near Burlington, North Carolina, on Thursday, July 15, beginning at 10:00 a. m.

Groups of young people from two of the churches in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference will give devotional services at the opening of the morning and afternoon sessions.

The featured address for the meeting of the Sunday School Convention will be given by Dr. W. E. Wiseman, pastor of First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C. Dr. Wiseman will speak on the topic "The Place of the Sunday School in the Church."

A panel made up of leaders of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and Sunday School Conven-

(Continued on page 7.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Editorial Policy

To be elected to the position formerly graced by such notables as Drs. J. O. Atkinson, F. C. Lester and Robert Lee House, to say nothing of their predecessors who wrought nobly and well, is a signal honor. I acknowledge with humility and appreciation the confidence in me, expressed in the vote of the Southern Convention to elect me Editor of The Christian Sun. It will be my pleasure to do my best to live up to the trust.

The step from the pulpit to the editor's chair does not now appear to be as easy as one might suppose. If as we go along, "preachments" raise their heads in places where they do not belong, the reader's indulgence and sympathy are respectfully solicited. After all, the habits of a life-time are not easily shaken off.

This may be reassuring: drastic changes will not be precipitately made. Such thinking as has been done relative to future policies has, of necessity, been sandwiched in with the manifold duties of the pastorate. This situation will continue for a time; therefore our readers are requested to keep that fact in mind.

All interested parties will probably agree that the main and only reason for the continuance of The Christian Sun is to promote the work of the churches of our fellowship within the bounds of the Southern Convention. There is however a wide difference of opinion as to what will best promote the work of the churches in the Southern Convention. This difference of opinion must always be recognized.

The Christian Sun is the medium to carry to our constituency the goals and objectives for which the churches are working. These goals and objectives are adopted by the Convention in its biennial sessions. Every church is entitled to representation in the Convention, and every ordained minister is a voting member. But not all those who may and should attend the Convention are there. Of those who do attend, only a few try to take back to their churches the full message of what was done. It is the task of The Christian Sun to acquaint our people with the over-all program.

The columns of The Christian Sun are open to all of our churches and people. This affords a splendid opportunity for every church to know what the other churches are doing. Under Congregational Christian polity the local church enjoys a large measure of liberty and independence. There is no definitive program of activities formulated and handed down to the local church. Yet all the churches are working together in a common cause. How can they work together in cooperation and coordination unless each church knows what the other churches are doing? And how can all the churches know unless each church reports its outstanding achievements?

At this point we would like to raise a question. How much does the average church member know about what sister denominations are doing, even though they are working in the same area in which he lives? Should Mr. Average Church Member have this information? Should The Christian Sun attempt to impart to him a little of this information from time to time?

The church is working in the midst of a social order which is beset, and oftentimes bewildered, by moral and social issues which vitally affect the well-being of both the church and the social order. The church member has a twofold interest in these social issues. He is interested in them as a church member. He is also interested in them as a citizen. There will be wide differences of opinion as to how best to deal with such issues. These differences of opinion present a challenge which the church periodical cannot afford to ignore.

It shall be our purpose to try to do two things. We shall try to make The Christian Sun the sort of church paper which our people would like to have. But we shall also have to work within the frame of reference of what we believe The Christian Sun ought to be. Much has been said about what The Christian Sun ought to be and how it can be improved. If you have pertinent ideas concerning these two themes, send them to the editor. He does not promise to try them all at once; but he does promise to give each of them careful consideration, and to try as many of them as possible.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

The Sloans Cross the International Date Line

Now that we are south of the equator and expect, within five minutes, to cross the international date line, it is time to report on the first part of our trip around the world.

To date we have been in no foreign country, for Canton Island which we have just left is jointly owned by the United States and Great Britain and flies the American flag, while Hawaii is definitely very much a part of the United States.

The most interesting thing about us seems to be our tickets. Each of them has eighty-four pages. They call for travel on forty different planes on eighteen airlines. I am writing this in our ninth plane. At every airport, when our tickets have been checked, someone has called other employees to see our tickets; no one has ever seen such extensive ones before.

The Hawaiian lei (rimes with say) is a great institution. Can't we adopt it in North Carolina? On every special occasion one's friends place a lei, or garland of flowers, about his neck. A kiss always goes with the lei. For a fifty-cent lei, one can kiss the prettiest girl in Honolulu—and there are a lot of pretty ones. However, the nicer, heavier leis cost several dollars.

We were greeted with leis on our arrival at the airport and when we left. At a reception given us by some of the leading ministers of Honolulu Mrs. Sloan was "lei-ed." Harry S. Truman fell into strong disfavor the first time he visited Hawaii, because he removed his leis after a few minutes. The Hawaiian is proud of his flowers; they grow in profusion the year around.

Hawaii is the world in miniature. People from all parts of the world have found it an ideal place in which to live. They very quickly become enthusiastic Americans. Although the largest element in Hawaii is of Japanese ancestry, the FBI was unable to find a single case of sabotage on the islands during World War II. The attack upon Pearl Harbor welded the people into a united whole. We found numerous interesting stories about Pearl Harbor Day and the subsequent black-out.

Young men of Japanese ancestry rushed to volunteer for the armed services and won more medals for heroism than any other group.

Hawaii definitely should be the 49th State. Wages and taxes already average a bit higher than on the mainland. Statehood for Hawaii would greatly increase the respect in which America is held in the Orient and would help the world learn that our talk about democracy is much more real than much of the world thinks it is.

We were surprised to find how many friends we have in Hawaii—friends Mrs. Sloan knew in Washington, college and seminary friends of mine, and even a young woman who was in my New Testament adult education class at Elon College.

Some of our friends discovered that we like Chinese food. Within eight days we were guests at three monstrous Chinese feasts. Friends in Portland, Oregon, who first learned to use chop-sticks while our guests at the Ding Ho in Burlington, wanted to show us their proficiency and took us to a large Chinese restaurant in Portland. A college friend of mine repeated this in Honolulu. And last night we were guests at a dinner at a Chinese church celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary. Two large tents had been erected in front of the church. Eight hundred adults were seated at tables there, while the children were served in the parish hall. The meal was listed in the program as a nine-course dinner, but according to my count, there were twelve courses—not counting the orchids given to each guest.

This is one of the numerous Congregational churches in Hawaii. The first Christian work in Hawaii was under the leadership of that denomination. By 1863 practically all Hawaiians had become Christian, the church became self-supporting, and the mission work moved elsewhere. However, other denominations still consider Hawaii a mission field, for many thousands of non-Christians have since come into Hawaii from China and Japan. The Filipino and Puertorican immigrants have largely been Roman Catholics; the Koreans and Portuguese, Protestants, Honolulu has a number of Buddhist, Shinto and Taoist places of worship. It is not only a racial but a religious melting-pot. Last spring's World-Day of Prayer was participated in by Buddhists, Jews and Christians.

In the past, certain churches were considered Japanese, others Chinese, and still others Caucasian. These distinctions are rapidly disappearing. The Union Congregational Christian Church, with 2300 members, used to be considered the leading "Caucasian" church. Today more than 60 per cent of its Sunday school members are Orientals and many of the church officers are non-Caucasians. The "Church of the Crossroads," another Congregational church group, is very proud of its highly mixed membership. Hawaiians are demonstrating Paul's statement that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek.

W. W. SLOAN.

Ancient Drinking Cup Presented to Yale Divinity School by Pastor of the Richmond Church

During General Council Week, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, the pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Richmond, Virginia, presented to the Yale Divinity School a greatly prized and ancient Drinking Cup which archaeologists say is of the type of cup used by Jesus and the disciples when instituting "The Lord's Supper." This rare specimen was secured by Dr. Helfenstein at an excavation site off King David Street in the oldest part of Jerusalem during a trip to the Holy Land. An exact likeness of the cup is in the Museum of the University of Jerusalem and is dated 227 B. C.

This rare and priceless cup has been used at the Maundy Thursday Communion Service each year during Dr. Helfenstein's pastorate in Richmond, as it was likewise used in the last two of his former pastorates.

Dr. Helfenstein gave the eup to the Yale Divinity School, his Alma Mater, in memory of his only son, Dwight, who had planned to attend Yale in preparation for the ministry, but who lost his life at the age of 18 in combat in Germany during the historic Rhur Drive. The cup is to be placed in the Library of the Yale Divinity School.

One of Richmond's leading cabinet makers and a member of the local

(Continued on page 13.)

Our Churches Report . . .

Vacation Bible School at Hunterdale Christian Church

The Community Vacation Bible School was held at the Hunterdale Christian Church, near Franklin, Virginia, from June 11 to 18, 1954. Classes were held each day from 9:00 to 11:40 for Kindergarten, Primary and Junior children. Nearly 100 children, with 20 teachers and helpers made up the vacation school, with Mrs. Clyde Fields as director.

Integrated courses on the "Life and Teachings of Jesus" were used for all classes. There were three Kindergarten classes, four Primary classes and two Junior classes. The children and staff came from the Hunterdale-Bethel community.

Various groups from Hunterdale Christian Church furnished refreshments for each day. On the closing day, Friday, June 18, a picnic lunch was enjoyed by the children and the staff.

The commencement program was held on Friday at 8:00 p. m., in the Fellowship Hall of the church. The classes shared what they had learned and done during the school with their parents and friends. Each department shared an equal amount of time for the commencement program. Certificates of attendance and achievement were given to all the children meeting the requirements.

The missionary project undertaken by the school was the sending of American baby chicks to the poor farmers and families of Egypt through Heifer Projects, Inc. The American chickens lay twice as many eggs and grow twice as large as the Egyptian chicken. It costs about 25 cents to send a chick by air express to some Egyptian farmer. The Egyptian families are given a flock of 15 chicks to care for and seem to be quite grateful for the American chicks. Well over 100 chicks were sent by the children of the Hunterdale Vacation School.

Mrs. Clyde Fields, the director of the school, expressed her gratitude to the parents and school staff for making the school a success.

After a tour of the class rooms where the handwork projects were on display, parents and children together expressed their desire to make plans for another such school for the next year.

"World's Fair" at Asheboro Church

This year the Asheboro Church, instead of having the regular vacation Bible school, tried an experiment in missionary education. For several weeks, each class in the Sunday school devoted time to studying some phase of our denomination's missionary activity. This included, of course, a background study of the area, as well as finding out about our own missionaries and their work.

The classes studied as follows:

Kindergarten—Peurto Rico, Mrs. Roy Moore.

First Grade—Africa, Mrs. Jim Flynt.

Second Grade—India, Mrs. Helen Beane.

Third Grade—Micronesia, W. H. Hughes, Jr.

Fourth Grade—Mexico, Jim Flynt.

Fifth Grade—Japan, Mr. and Mrs. Orva Brown.

Sixth Grade—Greece, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Caviness, Jr.

Intermediates—Turkey, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Branson.

Young People—Church - Related Colleges, John Griffin.

Young Adults—China, F. C. Lester.

Friendly Class (Women)—Ceylon, Mrs. Street Morgan.

Truitt Class (Women)—Philippines, Mrs. F. C. Lester.

Wright-Keeling Class (Men)—Service Committee, H. L. Beane.

On Sunday morning, June 13, the classes completed their exhibits during the Sunday school hour, and Dr. Lester preached on "Our Christian World Mission." In the evening a "World's Fair" was held, with a program presented by several of the classes and a filmstrip showing our work in Mexico, called "The Waking Giant." Following the program, to which some 130 people came, each classroom was visited. Here were people in costume, maps of the countries studied, things from those countries, and even refreshments served by some of the groups. Clothing to be sent through our Service Committee for overseas relief was brought for the project sponsored by the men's class.

All in all, the study and the exhibit were very successful. We recommend this plan to other churches in our area.

MRS. F. C. LESTER.

Home-Coming at Leaksville

Sunday, June 13, 1954, was Home-Coming and Memorial Day at Leaksville Congregational Christian Church, Rev. R. E. Newton, pastor. Beginning with Sunday School at ten o'clock the program continued until 3:30 in the afternoon. K. T. Rothgeb is the efficient superintendent of the Sunday school.

An excellent program was prepared by the committee of which B. F. McDaniel was chairman. At the eleven o'clock service a visiting minister was the preacher. Rev. Max Martin Eikrodt, of Basil, Switzerland, delivered a message based on the story of the two men who traveled on the road from Jerusalem to Emmaus on the resurrection morning. He reminded us that often when the great disappointments of life come upon us that Jesus Christ is near us if we would only recognize him.

At noon a delicious basket luncheon was served to a record congregation. People from Washington, D. C., Maryland, West Virginia and other states were represented. A real fellowship was enjoyed.

The afternoon program began with a devotional service conducted by Page Painter, of Leaksville, a student of Hartford Seminary, where he is studying for the ministry. Several quartet numbers were offered by local young people.

Following the devotional service, G. H. Clark, District Agricultural Agent, delivered an address on the influence of the small church and the small community upon the larger towns and cities. He pointed out that the larger communities did not have a sufficient number of births to carry on without the influx of people from the rural areas. The moral and religious effect upon the towns and cities is great.

In addition to the excellent musical selections contributed by the local quartet, composed of Richard and Page Painter and Miss Charlotte (Continued on page 7.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Young People's Conference at Elon College

The Young People's Summer Conference of the Southern Convention is in session at Elon College the week of June 13. The youngsters arrived Sunday afternoon, enjoyed a picnic supper on the grounds at six o'clock. Members of the conference brought their own supper with them. The college prepared tables and furnished drinks for the occasion. After the picnic supper vespers were held on the South Campus. They were welcomed by the president of the college and addressed by Dr. W. T. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Convention, and James H. Lightbourne, Jr. Mr. Lightbourne is Dean of the summer conference and is doing a very excellent job. The enrollment for the conference is larger this year than formerly. There are enrolled 104 young men and young women from our churches in Virginia and North Carolina. There are fifteen members on the faculty, making a total of 119 for the school. There are 38 churches of the convention represented, 21 of these churches are from the Eastern Virginia Conference. The loyalty and support of the churches in Eastern Virginia are most encouraging. Elon College is delighted to have this group of young people on its campus. This is one group of young people not enrolled as students at Elon College on its campus who are all members of our church. We are delighted to have them visit the college, see something of the campus, the accommodations, and to feel the spirit of the campus. Previous years we have had students to enroll in the college as a result of this conference. We are hoping that the same may be true of the group this year. It is always wholesome and helpful when the young people from our churches come to Elon College for their college training. The conference will close Saturday morning after breakfast.

All youngsters seem to be having a delightful time and I am sure a very helpful and profitable experience while here. I wish to express my appreciation of the presence of the members of the faculty and the services that they are rendering. It is good to experience the cooperation of our ministers and co-laborers in the church.

N. C. AND VA. SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

(Continued from page 3.)

tion will demonstrate the functions of a local church's Board of Christian Education and Worker's Council. Special emphasis will be placed on such topics as: The Church and Sunday School Library, The Parent Council, The Daily Vacation Bible School, Sunday School Literature, and Why Have a Board of Christian Education or a Worker's Council in the Local Church.

The individual Sunday schools make up the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention will be asked to make reports on the most outstanding item of their year's work.

Past sessions of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention have been highly successful and worthwhile and have been well attended. It is sincerely hoped that the 1954 session will find all Sunday schools in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference represented and participating in the program of the Sunday School Convention.

All Sunday schools in the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention appreciate the invitation of the people of the Hopedale Church to hold their 1954 session there and are looking forward to a worthwhile and enjoyable day on Thursday, July 15, 1954.

It is sincerely hoped that all Sunday schools in the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention are making plans to have delegates present for the 1954 meeting of the convention.

M. T. GARREN,
President.

OUR CHURCHES REPORT.

(Continued from page 6.)

Rothgeb and Miss Jane Short, the musical program was highlighted by the singing of the Candlelighters of Woodstock. This chorus of male voices, under the direction of Floyd W. Haines, a business man of Woodstock, is composed of men of Woodstock, Fort Valley and the vicinity.

Altogether the day was an enjoyable, inspiring and profitable one.

—Page News and Courier.

Student Summer Service Work in the Virginia Valley

Miss Patsy Tate from near, Burlington, North Carolina, is in the Shenandoah Valley for four weeks to help lead in four vacation Bible schools. Miss Tate will be a senior in Elon College next year, where she is majoring in Religious Education. She is supported in her work by the Student Summer Service system of the Congregational Christian Church. She is already receiving enthusiastic response at the first of these schools.

The Vacation Bible School for the Bethlehem and Concord churches has been in progress the week of June 20 in the new church building at Tenth Legion. The enrollment has reached seventy-four lively children. The final program to which the public was invited was on Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock.

Woods Chapel, northeast or New Market, is having the benefit of Miss Tate's services during the present week. The Vacation Bible School at Woods Chapel began June 28, and will close July 2. The hours are from 9:00 to 11:30 a.m. A teachers meeting with Miss Tate was held in connection with the Woman's Missionary Society meeting at the home of Mrs. Cecil Stroop on last Friday evening.

Miss Tate will be teaching at the Mt. Olivet Church near McGaheysville, from July 5 to 9. The pastor, Rev. Henry V. Harman of Elkton, is planning the school.

During her final week in the Valley, Miss Tate is scheduled to teach and lead the school at Wissler's Chapel north of Quicksburg. The congregation there voted to have their school from July 12 to 16. The children of Palmyra Church are invited to attend either the Woods Chapel or the Wissler's Chapel school.

RALPH M. GALT.

Since our last report Burlington, First Church, Mt. Pleasant and Randleman have sent in Church Building Loan Fund Declarations of Purpose. The amounts of their pledges were, respectively, $6,390, $187 and $215.

If industry is clean and has no dirty hands to hide, it should be proud to display its purity.

—Robert W. Sparks.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Editor of Woman's Page to Take a Vacation

The editor of this page expects to be in attendance at the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in New Haven, Connecticut when you read this. Following the Council meeting she expects to go with her family to Vermont where they will spend several weeks in the area from which her parents originally came.

All of which, being interpreted, means: Do not send any material to the editor of this page for printing before August 1. If you have material with current news value, please send it to the new editor of THE SUN, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, North Carolina, and mark it "Women's Page." Thanks!

* * * * *

The Riggs Unable to Attend School of Missions

The committee arranging for the School of Missions regrets that Dr. and Mrs. Ed Riggs of China and India cannot be at the School of Missions, as originally planned. As readers of THE SUN know, from recent letters from the Riggs, they are planning to work with the Department of Public Health in Georgia during their furlough period. This job begins on July 1, and it will be impossible for them to take "time out" so soon after starting upon this new work.

However, the Speakers' Bureau of our denomination has arranged for an able substitute—Miss Miriam Brown, about whom you can read elsewhere on this page. Our study for next year will be India, so we feel fortunate to have as our resource leader at the School of Missions someone who has as wide a background experience in that country as has Miss Brown.

Unfortunately, the programs were printed before the change was made, and so you will need to remember in telling about plans for the School of Missions that it is Miss Brown who is the visiting missionary teacher and speaker.

Miriam Dalton Brown Will Speak At the School of Missions

"India is the largest democracy in the world. The Indian people feel a strong kinship to Americans through the sharing of democratic ideals," says Miriam Dalton Brown, a Congregational Christian educator from Madura, India who will speak at the School of Missions at Elon College, July 13-16, according to announcement by Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, chairman.

MISS MIRIAM DALTON BROWN

Since 1937, Miss Brown has been serving under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, first among the Marathi and then among the Tamil peoples. She is manager of the Lucy Perry Noble Institute, which is called "Rachanyapuram" in Tamil, and means, "Place of Salvation." It is a fine Christian school and community center which is reclaiming Indian girls and women from poverty stricken villages. It does not educate them away from the village economy to which they must return, but specializes in teaching them helpful crafts including agriculture, so that they can earn their own living in their home towns.

"The sympathy, understanding, and aid which we as church people offer in the name of Christ is of the greatest value in India today. Her leaders and people appreciate the pioneering of Christian missions in education, medicine, and social work. Our efforts are directed toward assisting the Indian church in its task of evangelization and Christian nurture, help to the needy, and the training of young people for posts of responsible leadership in many walks of life," says Miss Brown.

When Miss Brown first went to India as an educational and social worker, she was stationed in the Criminal Tribe Settlement in Sholapur in the Marathi Area, but shortly thereafter she went to the faculty of Capron Hall School for Girls in Madura where she worked with Tamil people. Since 1948, she has been manager of the Lucy Perry Noble Institute.

She has been in the center of one of the terrible famine areas where the drought, which has continued for six consecutive years, has wrought heart breaking havoc. Her school has been a refuge for girls and women for the entire area. With a tragic procession of starving children coming to its gates, Miss Brown brings back with her deep thanks to the churches of America for the gifts of food and clothing from them and other groups like CARE and Church World Service.

"We cannot thank you adequately," she wrote from India. "All we can do is to tell you that your interest and help is remaking lives. What we need now is money to buy milk powder and vitamins to feed our many undernourished children . . . India has made tremendous strides in many directions since the war. It is tragic that this long failure of crops is hindering her so badly now. This is the time for us to show that we are good neighbors in our Lord's sense of the term. The Point Four program helps, but at the moment no matter how good one's agricultural techniques, one cannot run a farm without water. This is our sixth year of drought."

There is a strong Communist movement in India which has flourished in the hardship caused by the six-year drought, Miss Brown points out, but it is being fought relentlessly by both the Central and State Governments.

New England born and bred, Miss Brown was educated at Boston University; the American International College; and Hartford Theological School.

Package From India

And, speaking of India, the Asheboro Woman's Society, upon receipt of a letter from Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, friendly service chairman, ordered a parcel for $25 from one of our Indian missions containing articles from there for resale. They thought it would be the end of the summer before it arrived, but it came by the first of June, in time for a "World's Fair" exhibit by the Asheboro Church on June 13. This means that societies wishing to have such articles for sale in a fall bazaar still have plenty of time to order one of these packages—and you will be thrilled at the contents as are the Asheboro women.

This will help the mission which is trying to help the people become self-supporting, will give your people a glimpse of articles from another country, and (if you sell at a profit) may give your women some extra money.

* * * * *

Program of Ninth Annual School of Missions of the Woman's Missionary Convention

TUESDAY THROUGH FRIDAY
July 13, 14, 15, 16, 1954
Elon College, North Carolina

* * * *

THEMES FOR 1954-1955

Mission: Home Theme—"The City."
Foreign Theme—"India, Pakistan and Ceylon."
Bible Study—Book of Acts.
Program—"Out of the Heart of the Gospel."

* * *

TUESDAY, JULY 13

1:00 Registration (West Dormitory).

Afternoon Session

Whitley Memorial Auditorium
Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Presiding.
2:30 Call to Order.
Worship Service—Mrs. Carl Dawson.
Greetings—Dr. L. E. Smith.
Greetings—Dr. W. T. Scott.
Introductions.
Announcements.
Presentation of the Program—Mrs. H. G. Ballinger.
Presentation of Literature — Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.
Hymn.
Prayer.
4:00 Visit to Book Store.
6:00 Dinner (College Dining Hall).

Evening Session

6:45 Tour of the College.
(Directed by Dr. Smith).
7:45 Vespers on lawn—Mrs. Mark Andes.
8:30 Get Acquainted Party (Presented by the Ladies of the Pleasant Ridge Church).

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding.

7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. Garland Spratley.
8:00 Breakfast.
8:50 Quiet Music.
9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardeastle.
9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.
10:10 Visit to Book Store.
10:40 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.
Hymn.
11:35 India, Pakistan and Ceylon—Miriam Dalton Brown.
12:45 Lunch.

Afternoon Session

Mrs. Carl Wallace, Presiding
2:30 Hymn.
Prayer.
Officers Training Class—Mrs. Richard Jackson.
3:45 Friendly Service Projects—Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.
4:00 Trip to the Orphanage—Conducted by Mrs. J. G. Truitt.
5:00 Picnic at Moonelon.
Group singing and vespers.

Evening Session

Mrs. Ray Gordon, Presiding
8:00 Prelude.
Hymn.
Prayer.
Visual Aids—Mrs. Harry Nelson.
Film—"In The Beginning."
Family Altar—West Dormitory Hall—Mrs. June Joy House.

* * *

THURSDAY, JULY 15

Morning Session

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding
7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. Cecil Whitlock.
8:00 Breakfast.
8:50 Quiet Music.
9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardeastle.
9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.
10:10 Visit to Book Store.
10:40 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.
Hymn.
11:35 India, Pakistan and Ceylon—Miriam Dalton Brown.
12:45 Lunch.

Afternoon Session

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Presiding
2:30 Hymn.
Prayer.
Memorial Service—Mrs. W. B. Williams.
Worship Workshop—Miss Virginia Brinkley.
4:00 Close of afternoon session.
6:00 Dinner.

Evening Session

Mrs. W. B. Williams, Presiding
8:00 Prelude.
Hymn.
Recognition Service.
Address.
Communion Hymn.
Communion Service—Conducted by Rev. Richard Jackson.

* * *

FRIDAY, JULY 16

Morning Session

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding
7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. W. T. Scott,
8:00 Breakfast.

8:50 Quiet Music.
9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardeastle.
9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.
10:10 Break.
10:30 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.
11:20 India—Miriam Dalton Brown.
12:00 Reports and Impressions.
Closing Moments.
12:45 Lunch.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS COMMITTEE

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger.
Mrs. Carl Wallace.
Mrs. Ray Gordon.
Mrs. W. B. Williams.
Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

BUSINESS MANAGER

Mrs. M. F. Hall.

REGISTRAR

Miss Ruth Dunn.

HOSTESS

Mrs. George D. Colelough.
Mrs. Ray Gordon, Assistant.

DINING HALL HOSTESS

Mrs. Cecil Whitlock.

* * *

BE SURE TO VISIT THE BOOK STORE AT EVERY OPPORTUNITY.

* * * * *

Report of Treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Conference

QUARTER ENDING JUNE 15, 1954.

Following is the Quarterly Report of the Treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference:

RECEIPTS.

Woman's Societies.

Albemarle	$ 18.75
Amelia	5.00
Antioch	5.00
Apple's Chapel	16.17
Asheboro	35.00
Auburn	3.00
Berea	10.00
Beulah	11.33
Beverly Hills	12.00
Burlington	267.85
Carolina	6.00
Concord	6.25
Damascus	2.50
Durham	76.81
Elon College	117.70
Flint Hill (R)	3.75
Gibsonville	26.00
Greensboro, First Ch.	116.00
Greensboro, Palm Street	19.00
Hank's Chapel	12.00
Happy Home	20.00
Haw River	12.50
Henderson	35.00
High Point	6.25
Hines' Chapel	10.00
Hopedale	18.68
Ingram, Virginia	14.10
Kallam's Grove	2.50
Liberty, Vance	50.00
Long's Chapel	12.50
Mount Bethel	10.00
Mount Gilead	11.00
New Lebanon	15.00
Pfafftown	7.50
Pleasant Grove, N. C.	5.00

(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Last Sunday we heard Dean Danieley preach in the absence of the college pastor. This was not the first time we had ever heard him preach, for he supplied at Southern Pines during Dr. House's illness and made many friends there. We knew him as a friend, as a member of a fine family, and the father of Ned who has a sparkle and a special locomotion all his own.

But when we heard him preach last Sunday, it was something new for we heard him with different ears and saw him with different eyes because we have sat in his classroom and heard him teach science. There has been a time when many older people and some wise people have said: "God and Science do not go together." Dr. Danieley (he got his Ph.D. from Chapel Hill just last month) blends his beliefs and makes the wonders of God's Universe seem in their right proportion. Now, science isn't our field, and never will be, but we are proud and happy to say that Elon has been blessed by this young man.

Things are always happening on a campus. Week before last the young people came to hold their conference. They made a lot of noise, had a lot of fun and did some serious work. We enjoyed their leaders very much. Some of them were old friends like Dean J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., the Rev. Richard Jackson and Dr. Henry E. Robinson. We knew Mrs. Ralph Galt and felt that we knew her husband too! The Olin Pendleton's came from Norfolk and the Rev. George D. Alley of Suffolk who proved himself as an able doctor of injured heels, sore toes and sick middles.

Perhaps the most colorful leader was Max Martin Eichrodt who hails from Basel, Switzerland. He is very blond, tall and fair. He speaks precise English, quite British because he spent some months there, and sings amusing songs in German, French and Italian. He can sing the high, clear Alps yodel and swoop to the depths! For the past winter he has been studying at Hartford Seminary and then summer finds him in many conferences of Congregational Christian young people as a world friendship leader. It would be nice if more of us could know Christians like Max Martin Eichrodt. He is going to the meeting of the World Council of Churches before returning to Switzerland this fall.

Many pass these portals—give us a little, and we hope, take a little with them.

Do you know that THE SUN has a new editor? He is a wonderful person and we wish him well as he begins. I admire him as a minister, like him as a friend, and recall that he and my father were first cousins. A welcome to Dr. Harrell.

* * * * *

A Few Safety Habits

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Let us think for a few minutes about the importance of forming safety habits.

Just yesterday, at about six in the afternoon, we, my husband and I, stopped our car to wait for the green light at what is usually a busy intersection in the suburb of Lakewood, Ohio, where we live. It was a dark, rainy Sunday, with not another car nor person in sight. Suddenly I heard a tap on the car-door window, on my husband's side. Glancing up I saw a man with a sinister-looking face, almost covered with heavy black whiskers and beard, peering in at us, his hand on the door of the car. Ross, intently watching the light, did not hear nor see the unwelcome stranger, whose appearance so clearly threatened danger. Nervously, I called out to my husband, "Go! Go! Go!" My excitement, however, upset Ross so that he slowed down after starting instead of stepping up the speed. It seemed as though we would never get far enough away from that huge dark figure.

Nevertheless, in a very few moments we were at a safe distance, and my heart sang with gratefulness that we had recently acquired the habit of locking our doors after entering the car. The man had tried the door and failing to open it he, no doubt, had hoped his tap would cause the driver to lower the window.

This experience made me realize, more than ever, the importance of teaching our children all kinds of safety habits.

I have a friend who is extremely careful to have her two children habitually safety-law abiding. When the three ride in their car, Connie and Carl sit quietly and calmly, as they have been taught to do. No fear is expressed. It is just a hard-and-fast rule, understood and taken for granted.

A small cousin of mine once fell from a moving automobile. "I do not trust even so-called locked doors!" the mother declares when discussing her firm stand on safety measures. "The youngsters must sit still when in the car. They entertain themselves by watching from their windows or playing quiet talking games. When they return home they let out their pent-up spirits with lively games, running and romping."

As another safety precaution this mother has taught the children to put their toys away in boxes or on shelves, so that there is no chance to trip over them. Having a definite place for things, as these children do, always impresses me. Only recently, I am ashamed to say, have I formed this habit, which had I acquired in the past would have saved hours of hunting and a good deal of wear and tear on emotions.

I once lost a Liberty bond, a Christmas gift. After much searching by the entire family, Teresa, our faithful cook, found it among discarded wrappings in a wastebasket in the basement. My dad, bless him, who was always pointing out, "You're so careless, dear!" had never done anything constructive to guide me in the other direction.

Returning to my safety-conscious friend of whom I was speaking, her youngsters, on arriving from school, put coats, hats, caps, mittens and galoshes in place immediately. "Boys and girls are happier when they're orderly," Carl's and Connie's mother will tell you. "I helped my son and daughter to form these habits and they know now that it's their responsibility to keep them active."

Our next-door neighbor is careful, too. He insists on an extra light being carried on his son's bicycle as soon as it is dusk. Even the younger boy's wagon has a light on dark days.

Another neighbor teaches her daughters to glance ahead and to look down whenever they are about to

(Continued on page 11.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

News Notes

The Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship sent Sylvia Coggins of Sanford as a delegate to the National Pilgrim Fellowship being held at Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Conn. Miss Coggins is the vice-president of the W. N. C. Youth organization and a good worker in the local group at Grace's Chapel.

* * *

Three student workers were reported as being at Crabtree Camp for the past two weeks. They were Miss Betty Vann Sharpe of Graham, Miss Patsy Fuller of Epsom, and Miss Patsy Tate of Mebane. These workers and others are also helping in Bible schools this summer.

* * * * *

Activities of New Hope Youth

The Youth Fellowship of the New Hope Congregational Christian Church, Route 1, Louisburg, N. C., reports a very active season.

One project this year is to buy a mimeograph machine for the church. We take an offering each Sunday night. We gave the seniors of our high school who are in our church a supper at Pullen Park on June 12.

Rev. Carl Wallace has asked the Youth Fellowship at New Hope to hold the worship service at the Sunday School Convention which will be at Oak Level on July 8. We accepted and hope to do a good job.

BETTY ARNOLD, Reporter.

* * * * *

Junior Youth Fellowship of Liberty (Vance) Reports

The Junior Youth Fellowship of the Liberty (Vance) Congregational Christian Church takes great pride in its report of a very successful and active season.

This church in the Epsom community has some very faithful young people and they are doing what the leaders suggest for them to do, such as learning Bible verses that tell them how good their Heavenly Father is.

We have been collecting old scrap iron around in the community, and Mr. Fuller is selling it for us. From this we plan to finance a social and weiner roast at our play ground back of the church annex.

We have an out-door fireplace and a nice table out in the play ground. We and the Senior Fellowship group use it for such socials.

Each person is given a part on the worship programs. It is nice to hear the sentence prayers from some so young. We have a little boy who read the scripture who is only six years old, and he did it beautifully. If the parents would take as much interest as these boys and girls, our room would overflow.

Mr. Fuller gave a picnic supper for all the boys and girls under twelve years of age. There were 33 present. This group is our future church. We will go to Henderson this Sunday night in a joint meeting which we all enjoy.

The leaders are hoping to train up a minister from this group. We have six juniors who attended the camp at Crabtree Creek.

F. B. FULLER, JR.,

Reporter.

* * * * *

A Report on the Summer Camp at Crabtree Creek

When this is being written the grown-ups of our church have gone to the General Council, the young people have been in conference at Elon, and the younger generation has been to Crabtree Creek for camp. Here is a Crabtree Creek report by one of the campers:

* * *

We went by car with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. She picked me up at Elon and stopped in Gibsonville for two boys, Larry and Charles Hershey. We went to our cabins, put up our stuff and then went to supper.

The next morning we had breakfast for which some of our group had worked (called K. P.). First came our discovery groups with games, stories and talks. Then we went to the swimming hole and followed it with lunch.

At lunch, Mr. Wallace (Rev. Carl Wallace), the leader of the camp, said: "This afternoon after the rest period, we are going on a nature hike with a North Carolina Forest Ranger." When that was over, we had swimming again and then supper. Back to cabins and played until the whistle blew, when we went to the Ball Park for Vesper Services. The different Discovery groups had the Vespers each night. Games and stunts were held in the dining hall that night. The last night, instead of going to the dining hall to eat, we had a cook-out, so we could cook our own hamburgers on our home-made stoves. After that we went for a two-mile hike to the Raleigh-Durham Airport, which is near Crabtree. We watched some of the planes land and take off. Then we came back. We went to different cabins, and our counselors read us Bible stories and had prayer. Then lights out and good night!

When I came home to Elon I gave my mother the rocks I had collected at the Rock Quarry where we went the second day. I picked up iron, quartz, sandstone, granite and shale. We both like and collect rocks and stones.

I stayed in the cabin with my old friend, Harry Lester, whom I last played with in California, Dennis Morgan from my old town, Southern Pines, and Larry, who was new, and Bobby Ray, who was also new. Other friends from Southern Pines were Dianne Gorman, Donna Dawson and Jimmy Parker. I saw Wally Wallace again. I liked David Stucky and Mr. Rich who were counselors.

We came back in the car with bedding, lanterns and suitcases. Pattie Lee saw us back safely. My mother was waiting on the porch, and my sisters had gone to the Parkers in Southern Pines to visit. I hope that many boys and girls will go to Crabtree next year or any church camp, for they are the best. I think they will like nature and craft work, music and vespers.

JONATHAN HOUSE.

FOR OUR CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 10.)

alight from a bus, so as to know in advance where they are going to step.

If these and many other safety habits are developed it is not needful to keep harping and cautioning. A child with a little timely help learns good habits easily and then practices them automatically, scarcely thinking of them at the time they put them to use. Fear stifles the power to think clearly, but good safety habits build confidence and self-reliance; they are a wonderful protection in time of need.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Are We Growing as Christians?

LESSON II—JULY 11, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—II Peter 3:18.

SCRIPTURE BACKGROUND: I Corinthians 3:1-3, Ephesians 4:11-16, II Peter 1:5-8; 3:18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 4:25; 5:2.

Today's lesson walks up to us, grabs us by the shoulders, looks straight into our eyes and asks "Are you growing as a Christian?" It is a disturbing question. It goes deep. It searches the heart. It does not ask "Are you a good fellow? Are you about as good as the average member of the church? Are you as good as you were this time last year? Do you go to church? Do you give something to the church? Are you a Christian?" They are good questions, but they are not the most important question, or the question asked by today's lesson. That question is "Are you growing as a Christian?" Are you really better than you were last year? Are you growing? Do you have an increasing mastery over that evil habit? Are you more kind toward others? Have you conquered your prejudice toward the people of other races and religions? Is prayer more meaningful to you? Do you worry and fret and complain less? Do you know Christ better? Are you following him more loyally? Are you growing in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ? Are you still trying to learn? Is your face still toward the light? Are you willing to get out of the rut and make a new adventure with God? Is religion more real and more vital than it was at this time last year? "Are you growing as a Christian? Are you more Christ-like?" That is the question. It is a stabbing, sobering question. But it is a sound one. Oliver Crownwell once said, "He who stops being better stops being good." He was saying in one way that Paul said in another way—we are to press toward the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, or saying what Peter said, that we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Babes in Christ.

It is no disgrace to be a babe in Christ. We must be babes in Christ if we are to be a Christian at all. We must be born as a babe again, or born anew, or born from above. And as a person comes into the world as a babe in body, so does he come into the Kingdom as a babe in Christ. He is spiritually immature, undeveloped, a babe in Christ. That is no disgrace. It needs must be.

But it is a disgrace and a disaster to remain a babe. I had a friend once who had a daughter born into the world who never was anything but a child. Although that baby girl did grow up somewhat in body, she was never anything but a baby. She never walked a step, she never spoke a word, she never fed herself—she was as helpless as a new-born baby. And although she lived for eighteen or more years, she remained a baby. It was a great tragedy to her fine parents, and to those of us who knew them and loved them.

But that girl was a symbol of many who are babes in Christ in the spirit. They have confessed Christ, accepted Christ, been enrolled among the members of the church, the body of Christ, and that was about all. They have not grown in grace or in a knowledge of him. They have to be fed milk, and not meat. They cannot walk on their own feet. They cannot talk the language of the things of the spirit. They are children, and alas, childish. There are many men and women with strong, able bodies, and keen, well-trained minds, who are babes in the things of the spirit. They have not grown as a Christian should and could and must grow.

Growing Up in Christ.

Now growth is subject to law. What would happen to a baby, even if he were born with a healthy and vigorous body and a normal mind, if no attention were given to the matter of growth? Suppose he was never given anything to eat or to drink, if he never took any exercise, if no provision was taken to guard him against disease and disaster, if he were never sent to school or given any training in life! Well, a soul is subject to the laws of growth. Granted the presence of the Spirit at the new birth or at conversion, that soul must be nurtured, it must be given attention, it must be fed, it must be nurtured, it must be exercised. Growth in the Christian life does not happen, willy-nilly. The soul grows by contact and communion with God in Christ.

Grown-Up Babies.

Paul had a problem on his hands—some great big grown-up folks who were acting like children or babies. He referred to them as "babes in Christ" and he tells them why. They were bickering and quarreling and "acting up." There was jealousy and strife among them. He told them they were carnal. It is a strong hard word, and as used in this connection it means, "worldly, not spiritual, pertaining to the fleshly nature." All right, says Paul, if you want to act like babies I will have to feed you with milk instead of beefsteak.

The readers of these notes do not have to be told that there are many grown-up folks in the world, and in the churches, who are babies. They are just like a boy who takes his bat and ball off in a huff if his playmates won't allow him to be the first batter, or to play a certain position. And what minister is there who does not know the pettiness and the childishness of some of his people. It would be comic if it were not tragic to see how some grown-up folks act. And alas, some preachers also sometimes act like little children.

The Measure of the Stature of the Fulness of Christ.

"We are to come unto the full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ... that we be no more children...but speaking the truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ." We are to keep on keeping on. We are not to measure ourselves by others, but by Christ. He is our Example, he is our Goal, and he alone is our Help. If we worship him in spirit and in truth, if we feed upon his word and upon him, if we commune with him in prayer and meditation, if we work with him in service, if we wait with him in silence, if we share with him in sacrifice, we shall grow in grace and in a knowledge of him.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1951 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

The Ministry of Reconciliation

By Rev. H. S. HARCADSTLE*

"All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation."—II Cor. 5:18.

Something momentous happened in our nation last month. The date was May 17. On that day, Chief Justice Earl Warren of the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting with the other eight members of the court at a long mahogany desk or bench, picked up a printed document from his desk and began to read in a firm, clear voice. He was reading the long-awaited decision of the Supreme Court concerning segregation in the public schools. When he had finished, it was crystal clear that the Supreme Court unanimously agreed that racial segregation in the public schools violates the Constitution of the United States.

In all the 164 years of the court's history, no decision of the court was more important. None of them directly and intimately affected the lives of so many American families. Because of that fact I feel that it is my duty as your pastor and friend to say a few words about this decision and its implications for our lives. I speak to you out of a full heart. And in order that I may be sure of what I say, I have written down what I feel I must say. I ask you to listen to me carefully and sympathetically.

This is the first time that I have had an opportunity, at a morning service to speak to you about the matter. It seems to me that this is a good time and a good place to speak about it.

That decision poses some difficult, and even dangerous problems—economic and financial problems, personal problems, social problems, psychological problems. With you, I am concerned and disturbed about them. I have a sinking feeling in my heart when I think about them. With you, I wish that we knew all the answers to them. With you, I hope we shall find the answers to them. For find them, we must. The decision was unanimous and final. We face a problem which we must solve.

There are some signs of promise and hope. The reaction of the people, on the whole, has been sound and good. Our governmental and educational leaders are making a common-sense approach to the problems. The decision of the court provides for an element of time, perhaps a long time. And the spirit of the American people, including the people of the South, encourages us to believe that they will face this difficult and dangerous problem with courage and wisdom and patience and good-will, and solve it, under God, in an acceptable and adequate way.

I cannot tell you where we are to go from here. Others far wiser than I will have to tell us that. But as your pastor and friend, I want to tell you in what spirit we are to go from here, and the only spirit in which we can ever solve our problem right.

I hope we will maintain a Christian attitude and spirit as we seek the solution to these problems, that we will embody and express the spirit of patience, and tolerance and understanding and cooperation and good will and brotherly love. I hope we will pray for our leaders, and for one another as we deal with these problems. And I pray God that in his wisdom and mercy, we may solve these problems under his guiding and sustaining hand.

For he hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. Who knows but what we Christians have come into the Kingdom for such a time as this! May God help every one of us to be ambassadors for Christ, and to exercise a ministry of reconciliation. Some has said that when the world is at its worst, Christians ought to be at their best. When in our day, or in a coming day, men look back at what we did in this trying time, may they say of us, "This was their finest hour."

ANCIENT DRINKING CUP PRESENTED TO YALE.

(Continued from page 5.)

church, Mr. J. O. Gulbranson, made the artistic glass and walnut case in which this rare specimen will be kept.

Dr. Helfenstein has received numerous large offers for the cup, but declined each offer, his idea from the beginning being to present it to Yale University where he received his M. A. and B. D. degrees. The cup is insured for $1,000.00.

To give real service you must add something which cannot be bought or measured with money, and that is sincerity and integrity.

—Donald A. Adams.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

(Continued from page 9.)

Pleasant Grove, Va.	37.50
Pleasant Ridge (G)	29.00
Pleasant Ridge (R)	20.00
Plymouth	22.04
Pope's Chapel	5.00
Raleigh	50.00
Reidsville	20.00
Sanford	50.00
Shallow Ford	10.00
Shallow Well	25.00
Spoon's Chapel	6.25
Tryon Cong. Church of Christ	92.50
Turner's Chapel	15.00
Union Grove	7.50
Union, N. C.	25.00
Wake Chapel	75.00
Winston-Salem	30.00
	$ 1,519.93

Junior Societies.

Durham	$ 16.61
Elon College	38.55
Elon College, Wiling Workers	23.51
Greensboro, First	12.10
Henderson	9.00
Ingram	2.10
	101.87

Cradle Roll.

Burlington	$ 11.55
Durham	7.79
Greensboro, First	12.10
Turner's Chapel	5.00
	36.44

District Rally Offerings.

Asheboro	$ 25.00
Burlington	30.15
Greensboro	29.02
Halifax	25.45
Raleigh & Henderson ...	38.45
Sanford	19.11
	167.18

Total Receipts $ 1,825.42

DISBURSEMENTS.

United Church Women, World Day of Prayer $	5.33
Miss Margaret Hargrove, Rally Speaker	35.00
Expense of Rallies	90.08
Expense of Program Com- mittee Meeting	7.38
Expense of the president	5.71
Expense of Dept. of In- terdenominational Co- operation	15.63
Trollinger's Florist	5.33
	$ 164.46

Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Tr.,
For:

Thank Offering	$ 58.27
Life Memberships	20.00
Memorials	60.00
Puerto Rican Goat Fund	65.00
Scholarship for India ...	50.00
Our Christian World Mis- sion	12.04
Rachanyapuram School for Girls	9.00
Missions, General Fund	1386.65
	1,660.96

Total disbursements $ 1,825.42

Respectfully submitted,

SUSIE D. ALLEN,
Treasurer.

*A Communion Meditation given at Oakland Congregational Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Va., on Sunday, June 20, 1954.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Probably one of the most important parts of my job is that of counselling with the matrons. A glance at my diary shows that daily there are such conferences. This morning I was talking with our matron at the Baby Home, Mrs. Margaret Pruitt. She has 28 children in her immediate care. It is very interesting and encouraging to see how well she has trained these little folks for the six weeks she has been in our employ here.

What does she do? Every morning she gets these children up for early breakfast. They are bathed and dressed in clean clothes, and are a pretty sight to see as they are coming into the diningroom. They seem so bright and happy. They know how to be quiet at the right times. They get to their places, as the two other buildings of boys and girls are getting to their tables. All is quiet. There is a moment of worship and gratitude expressed to God for the food and friends. The meal over Mrs. Pruitt leads her little ones back to their building. The building is set in order with everyone helping as far as possible and with the aid of the high school girls assigned to "work at the Baby Home." The children go to school, or now to play.

At 11:30 a warning bell for dinner is rung. There are thirty minutes of cleaning up for dinner. After dinner there is a quiet hour, and more play, television, radio, stories, clean-up for supper, and after supper goodtimes under Mrs. Pruitt's supervision. Then they are bathed and off to bed. But do you know what? There are reminders of God's care and love, Bible stories, "Mrs. Pruitt, come to our room and read the Bible to us tonight." Individually and in groups she makes herself available to them, and makes herself wanted by them. No, Mrs. Pruitt is not over-religious. Just reared in an average church home. Married and has three little children of her own. Felt the responsibility a normal mother would feel. And now sees this big, big responsibility as only one who faces twenty-eight little children as the major guide in the early, formative years of life.

Seems like one can never find a place in describing such a program for poison-oak, mumps, glass-cut feet, fights—oh! no, nor bad colds, nor high feavers, nor interfering relatives, and "sponsors" (It does not look like "sponsors" nor big cousin Sally would make nuisances of themselves and the work harder for our little wards, but some of them do—and I mean big double do!) but whoever loves their work and little children, and has good sense, and the gift of being able to relax and knows how to look to God in prayer can do great good for years to come in the lives of little folk. Mrs. Pruitt is on the right track. Let us all help her.

By the way, as I started out to say, I think one of the best things I can do for these children who look so good to me is to help them have wise, good, understanding matrons. Thanks to you who read these lines for being a blessing in any way you can in the work here.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JUNE 17, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Mrs. Thomas O. Morrison, Brooklyn, N. Y., Thread, needles, buttons, etc.
Pleasant Hill (W. N. C.) Missionary Society, Clothing, buttons, coupons and glasses.
Mrs. Herman Truitt, Glen Raven, N. C., Clothing and shoes.
Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Buttons.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 6,418.22
Eastern Va. Conference:
Rosemont, Special$ 40.00
Oakland S. S. 15.00
Windsor S. S. 10.00
65.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Greensboro, First$113.99
113.99

Western N. C. Conference:
Pleasant Cross S. S.$ 8.94
Ramseur S. S. 60.00
Shiloh 7.96
Zion 30.00
106.90
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.$ 2.00
Mt. Olivet (G) 3.00
5.00
Total $ 290.89
Grand total $ 6,709.11

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $17,883.74
A Friend, Winston-Salem, N. C.$ 5.00
Miss Vera Gilliam, Greensboro, N. C. 20.00
H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. . 10.00
The O'Kelley Bible Class, Greensboro, First Ch. . 48.00
Engineered Plastics, Inc., Gibsonville, N. C. 25.00
Vacation Bible School Children, Sanford Ch., for playground equipment . 10.00
Huber Class, South Norfolk Cong. Christian Ch., playground equipment . 15.00
Philathea Class, Suffolk Christian Church 5.00
J. H. Johnson, Norfolk, Va. 10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Louise H. Blake 10.00
Special Gifts 5.00
163.00
Grand total $18,046.74
Total for the week $ 453.89
Total for the year $24,755.85
* * *

REPORT FOR JUNE 24, 1954.

Commodities for the week.

Coupons:
Woman's Aux., South Norfolk Christian Ch.
Iris Holt McEwen Bible Class, Burlington, First Ch.

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS
"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

.....
(Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)
.....
(Survivor to be Written) (Address)
Name
Address

In Memoriam

GRIFFIN.

We, the members of the Women's Missionary Society and the Ladies Aid of the Windsor Congregational Christian Church wish in this manner to express our love and respect for the life of Mrs. Hattie Persons Griffin.

At the time of her passing on April 26, 1954, she was treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society. She was loyal and faithful to her church and took an active interest in all of its work. She was a kind, loving, devoted mother and a true, faithful friend. To know her was to love her.

Therefore be it resolved that the Windsor Congregational Christian Church hold in sacred memory the life long service to the church and loyal support of every worth while Christian cause that Mrs. Griffin rendered. Be it further resolved that this resolution be entered in the minutes of these societies. A copy be sent to the family of Mrs. Hattie Persons Griffin and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. J. M. Raby,
Mrs. C. E. FULGHAM.

DRAKE.

Mrs. Viola Holland Councill Drake died May 15 at her home, Drakeland, in Sedley, Virginia, after twenty months illness and was buried on May 18 in Rosemont Cemetery, Sedley, Virginia. Mrs. Drake was 71 years of age at her death. Funeral services were conducted by Reverend James A. Coney, assisted by Reverend Harvey L. Carnes and Reverend T. T. Trayham.

Mrs. Drake was a faithful Christian and will be greatly missed in her church and community. She is survived by six sons: Brady T. Drake, Sr., of Norfolk; Loreuzo Roy Drake; Freddie F. Drake; Theodore R. Drake; and James C. Drake of Sedley; and George O. Drake of Washington, D. C.; and three daughters: Mrs. Samuel Bradshaw of Franklin; Mrs. Harry Soden of Rocky Mount, N. C.; and Mrs. Wayland E. Major of Newport News, Virginia. Mrs Drake was the widow of George Thomas Drake and the daughter of the late James Jordan Councill and Martha Scott Councill of Southampton.

TRUITT.

The members of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, North Carolina, wish to express their deep sense of loss in the death of their member William O. Truitt. Mr. Truitt died in Greensboro on May 20. We cherish the memory of him as a friend, a co-worker, and a faithful member. As treasurer of our church and in many other capacities, he gave unselfishly of his time and talent toward the enrichment of his church.

- Now therefore be it resolved:
1. That we consider his death a great loss to our church and community.
 2. That we accept the challenge of his stewardship and strong Christian faith and be inspired, by having known him, to be nobler Christians.
 3. That we extend heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family and pray God's blessing on each member thereof.

R. G. MOFFITT,
Mrs. N. C. MONROE,
A. E. PYE,
MAURICE TATE,
G. F. GRIFFIN,
J. H. ROUNTREE,
ROBERT AUTHI,
DOROTHY S. DARNELL,
Mrs. D. L. DARNELL, Clerk.

Regrets

We learn with deep distress of the loss to Rev. and Mrs. Earl T. Farrell of their nine-months-old baby, Robin Diane, who was found dead in her crib in the home at Cypress Chapel on Wednesday morning, June 16.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle officiated at the services and burial took place in the church cemetery at Cypress Chapel, where Mr. Farrell is the minister.

We are sure that all members of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family will join with us in heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved parents.

OUR NATIONAL HYMN.

(Continued from page 2.)

Their little hearts aglow with pride,
Each with exultant tongue
Proclaims: "From every mountain side
Let Freedom's song be sung."

Let him who'd criticise the time,
Or scout the harmony,
Betake him to some other clime—
No patriot is he!

From scenes like these our grandeur springs,
And we shall e'er be strong,
While o'er the land the schoolhouse rings
Each day with Freedom's song.

Dr. Ninde, author of "The Story of the American Hymn," quotes Dr. Smith as saying late in life: "I have heard 'America' sung half way round the world. I have heard it on the Atlantic Ocean, on the Baltic Sea, and on the Mediterranean; in London, Liverpool, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Paris, Rome, Naples, in the baths at Pompeii, in Athens, Calcutta and Rangoon. On the earth, I have heard it on Pike's Peak, and under the earth in the caverns at Manitou, Colorado, where it was played on the stalaetites."

Ashland, Virginia.

The whole world is learning that treaties, constitutions, ordinances and bonds are good only to the extent that they are made coincident with basic human relationships which have the approval of that sensitive power, the public opinion of the world.

—Owen D. Young.

THE ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Mrs. J. W. Manning, Norfolk, Va.
Mrs. J. W. Wilson, Sr., Asheboro, N. C.
A Friend, Southern Pines, N. C.
Miss. Soc., Calvary Christian Ch., Greensboro, N. C.
Mrs. Elizabeth Hutcherson, San Diego, Calif.
Mrs. J. P. Bennett, Harrisonburg, N. C.
Mrs. J. I. Sharp, Reidsville, N. C.
Coupons & buttons:
Woman's Aux., Reidsville Church.
Woman's Aux., Ch. of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, N. C.
Clothing:
Holland Christian Ch., Holland Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 6,709.11
Eastern Va. Conference:
Liberty Spring S. S.	...$ 20.00
		20.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Howard's Chapel S. S.	...$ 2.00
Durham	161.44
Union (Va.)	5.00
		168.44
Western N. C. Conference:
Pleasant Union$ 14.71
		14.71
Total	203.15
Grand total	$ 6,912.26

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$18,046.74
Young Adult Class, Windsor Christian S. S., to send a child to camp	..$ 18.00
A Friend, Raleigh, N. C.	..25.00
Bible School, Turner's Chapel, Special offering	6.18
A Friend, Norfolk, Va.	..5.00
Philathea Class, Reidsville Church	20.00
Woman's Fellowship, Bay View Church	13.35
Vanceville S. S., Tifton, Georgia	3.00
In Memory of Mrs. Letitia Etheridge	10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Virgie W. Carr	2.00
In Memory of Robin Diane Farrell	5.00
Special Gifts	940.66
		1,048.19
Grand total	$19,094.93
Total for the week	$ 1,251.34
Total for the year	$26,067.19

The harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheap, we esteem to lightly; 'tis dearness only that gives everything its value. I love the man that can smile in trouble, that can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection. 'Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm will pursue his principles until death.—Thos. Paine.

"The Quest of an Ideal"

Number 2 of a Series

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Pastor of First Church, Richmond, Virginia

In the long ago, man saw the fish swimming through the water with dashing swiftness and realized that by his physical strength and cunning he could never compete with the fish in swimming. He set his mind to working, and today man has the submarine with which he can outswim the fish. In the long ago, man saw the eagle soaring through space, high in the sky, and realizing that nature gave him no wings with which to fly, he proceeded to use his intellect; and today man has the airplane with which he can out-fly the eagle. Long ago, man saw the deer running with amazing speed, and realizing that nature gave him no wings with which to fly, he proceeded deer in swiftness, he began to use his intellect, and today man has the automobile with which he can outrun the deer. And thus, whatever assets nature failed to provide for him, man by using his intellect has made for himself.

Man saw the desert waste-lands, with their burning sands, where even weeds would not grow, and in response to his vision of fields of growing grain and orchards of ripening fruit, he used his intellect, providing a system of irrigation which made these deserts the most fertile spots on earth. He took the wild rose which nature gave him, and because its beauty was so limited and its flower so frail, he began to cultivate and develop it under the guidance of his intellect, and grew for himself the gorgeous American Beauty and every other rose so fair. He took the wild crab apple that nature gave him and, because it was hard and sour and unpleasant to the taste, he used his intellect to cultivate and develop it, producing the Stamen Wine Sap and all other apples that are "delicious" in name and in fact.

Nature bequeathed to man only the protection found in the security of his family. But man used his intellect in effecting the larger protection as expressed in clans and tribes. The massing of tribes produced the state, and the union of states produced the nation pledged to protect and promote the common interests of each and of all. And under the providence of God, man, today, is seeking an even larger protection of World Federation, in which the nations shall bind themselves in a fraternal compact to protect and promote with equal fidelity the interests of every nation, both large and small.

All progress to date has been achieved, and life has been made more worthwhile and more enjoyable, by men and nations that were faithful in their quest of an ideal—in their search for something better.

The ideals cherished and attained by any generation is the supreme test of that generation's contribution to the progress of mankind. The supreme test of individuals and of races is the social and religious ideal they cherish and the intelligence and fidelity of purpose they exercise in realizing that ideal!

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1954

NUMBER 26

The Moderator of the General Council

DR. ALBERT BUCKNER COE

Dr. Albert Buckner Coe was elected Moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, at the opening session of the Council, June 23, meeting in New Haven, Connecticut. This is the highest honorary post of leadership within the power of the denomination to bestow upon a member of its fellowship. Dr. Coe was the only nominee for the position and was unanimously elected.

A son of the South, Dr. Coe was born in Henderson, North Carolina, and was educated at Western Maryland College and Yale Divinity School. He did graduate work at Johns Hopkins University and took special studies at Cambridge University, Cambridge, England. Dr. Coe is the son of a Methodist minister. He has two sons who are in the ministry, and two of his brothers are also Congregational ministers.

Dr. Coe was a preparatory school teacher until he entered the United States army during World War I, serving in France and Germany. In 1922 he began a highly successful series of Congregational pastorates in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Illinois. In 1949 he was called from a nineteen-year pastorate in the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, Illinois, to be he minister and president of the Massachusetts Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, with headquarters in Boston.

Mrs. Coe, the former Katherine Chalmers, is a graduate of Wellesley College, and is active in local, state and national church work, having served as a member of the Executive Committee of the General Council. Dr. and Mrs. Coe are now making their home on Beacon Hill, Boston, Massachusetts.

News Flashes

Deepest sympathy is extended to the family in the death of Mrs. A. M. House, mother of our late editor.

Dr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Scott are spending a few days vacation at the home of their son, Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Jr., and Cornwall, Connecticut.

Mrs. R. E. Newton of Luray, Virginia, who has recently been a patient in the Winchester Memorial Hospital, is now recuperating at her home.

We belatedly learn of the arrival of a grand daughter of Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton of Luray, Virginia, on May 22. The proud parents are Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Mitchell of Tampa, Florida. Mrs. Mitchell is the former Miss Edith Newton of Luray.

The Rev. Melvin Dollar, pastor of the Rosemont Church, has been selected as one of twelve ministers from the Norfolk Ministerial Association to be in charge of the devotional services on WTAR-TV. He will be on the program during the weeks of July 5 and 16, and will again be in charge of devotionals the last two weeks in December.

The managing editor has received a copy of the annual report of the Congregational Christian Pension Boards for 1953. A careful reading of this report shows the affairs of the boards to be in excellent condition. The church should be proud indeed to have such a capable board of trustees and in the person of Rev. Frank Scribner, such a faithful and untiring general secretary.

In submitting the address by the Hon. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., of Suffolk and Chuckatuck, Virginia, on page 5 of this issue, President L. E. Smith had this to say: "The article is an abbreviated resume of the address by Mr. Godwin to the graduation class of Elon College on Monday, May 31. It speaks for itself, but I should like to say that it is one of the most entertaining and effective commencement addresses that we have had delivered at Elon College in years. The audience was most appreciative and received Mr. Godwin's message with enthusiasm."

The Virginia Valley Sunday School Convention Meets

The Virginia Valley Sunday School Convention was held on June 15, at the Wissler's Chapel Congregational Christian Church, near New Market, Virginia. The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning by the president, Mr. Leonard Higgs. Miss Betty Showalter acted as secretary.

The opening worship service was by the Wissler's Chapel young people, led by Mrs. Ralph Galt.

The delegates of the churches were registered, with each one giving a report of the progress of their Sunday school during the past year. These reports indicated that the interest in the Sunday schools is increasing.

At the morning session a very interesting address was given by the Rev. C. D. Hayes, pastor of the Timber Ridge Church. He used as his topic "The Importance of the Sunday School."

A motion was adopted that the convention pass suitable resolutions of appreciation for the many ways in which Miss Pattie Lee Coghill had been of service to the convention and its constituents; also to send her an

(Continued on page 7.)

Christian Sun Subscription Rates

Beginning July 1 THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be available to our churches at a club subscription rate of $2 per family provided that 50 per cent of the families of the church subscribe. This is being done to get more of our people to read THE SUN. At present we have less than 1500 copies going to families in the Southern Convention. Also in this way we believe we can solve the financial problems of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. In fact more subscriptions will solve most of our problems.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has rendered a most valuable service to our fellowship. It has not only been a source of information but one of inspiration as well. Without THE CHRISTIAN SUN our work would be seriously handicapped. We hope all of our churches will give this plan serious consideration and accept it if at all possible.

The individual subscription rates will remain the same—$3.00 for one year and $5.00 for two years.

WALSTEIN W. SNYDER,
Chairman, Board of Publications.

Semora, North Carolina, Churches Hold Union Bible School

The Lebanon Congregational Christian Church at Semora, has just completed a very fine Vacation Bible School, which began on Monday June 21, and closed with commencement on Friday evening, June 25.

The Rev. Bland Leebrick, pastor of the Lebanon Church was the Bible school principal. He worked untiringly to have an excellent school and one that would bring happiness to the children.

The theme was "Building Citizens for Christ." The graded books for ages from three to eighteen proved to be very interesting.

For many years, the Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Christians at Semora have participated in a Union Bible School, as no one of the churches here has enough Sunday school pupils to have a separate Bible school. This year was the year for Lebanon to take the initiative, and the other three churches cooperated. The spirit of fellowship was wonderful. Each day one of the churches would have a group to serve iced drinks and cookies at 10:15. On Friday, from 12 to 1:30, a picnic lunch was served in the recreation center at the rear of the church.

The number of children enrolled was 63, which exceeded that of any previous year. The faculty, including the principal, the recorder and the director of music, was 18, and those serving on transportation gave us a total of 85.

The mission offering was received in the respective departments each morning, and the children voted to send CROP packages of food to help provide food for those who are suffering for lack of it. The total gift was $22.60.

Those in a position to know, assured the faculty that the school was outstanding in enrollment and the number of perfect attendance pupils and also teachers. The churches of Semora are grateful to Rev. Mr. Leebrick for his service and leadership in making possible the fine school this year.

REPORTER.

Valley Revivals

A revival was held at the Newport Church, Rev. R. E. Newton, minister, during May. Rev. Ralph Galt was the guest minister, and his sermons were most inspiring. The interest was good.

(Continued on page 10.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Elon Men Clean Vacant Lot

For the past four weeks every Thursday evening beginning at 6:30 the men of the Elon College Community Church have met on the vacant lot near the Parrish House and have brought with them power mowers, sling blades, hoes, rakes, pitchforks, and other working tools. They have cleared the lot where once stood high weeds and grass and where during the years brickbats, rocks, and other items of rubbish have been thrown. The group last Thursday night included Reverend Howard Bozarth and more than a dozen laymen. There were three power mowers in operation by Ralph Oxford, Biff Brafford, Carl Dawson. Ralph Oxford brought a large truck which was used for hauling brick, rocks and other materials which were cleared from the lot. The group was under the direction of Tom Smith and Ace Harrell.

The above is a factual account of what has happened recently with the men at Elon College. It does not, however, tell the whole story. Words fail to express the surge of good feeling that comes to one when working in a group of his fellow church members in the interest of the church. How the men raked and mowed and carried trash! It was a feeling of belonging to something worthwhile, of doing a job that needed to be done, and of a cooperative undertaking.

Those who pass the lot will deeply appreciate its nice appearance, and it is fine; but the truth is that the good done there is greatly overshadowed by the good experienced by the men who did the work.

Let all of our Laymen's groups recognize the possibilities for rich experience in cooperative undertaking in the interest of the church, and may more of our group accept the challenge of similar projects in their own communities.

The hand of God is at work upon mass man to create free souls, upon crude contemporary chaos to produce history and hope. Mass society presents a new frontier to conquer.—Ray Gibbons.

Town and Country Department Head Since 1936, Dr. Tripp Succumbs

The New York Times of Saturday, July 3, carried the notice of the death of Dr. Thomas Alfred Tripp, national director of the Town and Country Department of the Board of Home Missions, at the age of 59.

Dr. Tripp was stricken with an heart attack while attending the General Council, and died in the New Haven General Hospital on Friday, July 2.

Dr. Tripp attended the University of Oklahoma, Northwestern Oklahoma Teachers College and Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, where he received a B. S. degree in 1928. Yale University granted him a Bachelor of Divinity degree in 1936, and ten years later he received his M. A. from Columbia University. Last year he received a Ph.D. there. He received an honorary doctorate in 1941 from Piedmont College.

Almost immediately upon finishing at Yale, he took charge of the development of the rural churches of the denomination. He has conducted seminars and courses on rural sociology at many of the outstanding universities of the nation. He has visited the South on many occasions and his work has been most outstanding in that area. The denomination sustains a great loss in his going.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends sympathy to his widow and the family.

J. T. K.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
 Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
 Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardestale.
 Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.
 Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
 Two Years $5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
 Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
 () 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The General Council

The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, which was in session at New Haven, Conn., June 23-30, 1954, afforded the twenty-seven hundred people who attended a panoramic picture of the varied interests and activities of the denomination. If one desires a comprehensive grasp of the work being done by the Congregational Christian Churches, it is possible to get it only by attending a General Council session.

A delegate elected to the General Council is also a voting member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions. After the General Council has been in session for an hour or two, the Moderator may announce "The Council is now adjourned"; and the chairman of the American Board will immediately call the assembly to order for a business session of that Board. The delegates are the same people for both groups.

As the American Board makes its reports, one is brought face to face with the mission work that is being done in the Near East for the people of Syria, Lebanon, Greece and Turkey. One is told of the Mission of Fellowship to Europe, which is strengthening the forces of Protestantism in that section of the world. Then follows the story of what is being done in the Pacific Area, India and Ceylon, Africa, and Mexico. Before the American Board has finished its reports, one begins to realize the meaning of World Citizenship.

It is easy to lose oneself amid the organizations which comprise the Board of Home Missions. They are: The American Missionary Association, with its notable contribution to the welfare and advancement of the Negro and the American Indian; The Division of Christian Education; The Division of Church Extension and Evangelism, which comprises the Department of Church Building, the Department of City Work, the Department of Town and Country, the Department of Church Finance Advisory Service, the Department of Research, and the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life; The Division of Ministerial Relief; The Pilgrim Press Division; and The Treasury Department.

In addition to the work being done by the American Board and the Board of Home Missions, the General Council has a Commission on Inter-Church Relations and Christian Unity, a Commission on the Ministry, a Commission on Stewardship, and the Council for Social Action. Then there are the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women and the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches, which meet during the Council session and make report to the Council. The National Pilgrim Fellowship held its 1954 meeting at the Yale Divinity School for the seven days the General Council was in session, and gave the Worship Service for the Council on Tuesday evening.

The list of organizations which make reports to the Council may seem a bit appalling; but those who are responsible for making the Council Program know well the art of dramatization and pageantry. The body may grow weary, and it does; but the mind is caught and held, and the spirit is inspired by the story that is being presented.

The story would not be complete, if no mention were made of the way the General Council holds to the idea of being thoroughly democratic. The pattern of the New England Town Meeting is strictly adhered to in the business sessions. Every one who wishes to speak is given an opportunity to do so; and the presiding officer always appears to be slightly pained when the assembly votes to close the debate.

It is the policy of the Council to provide the most capable speakers who can be secured to address the Council on the vital issues that confront the world. Social and political issues that concern the welfare of all people are discussed by those who can present them most forcefully.

Another feature of General Council sessions is the music. The congregational singing at New Haven literally lifted one's soul. Superb church choirs, many of them came from a distance, rendered the masterpieces of religious music, with a perfection of technique and a spiritual interpretation which is rarely heard.

The New Haven General Council was undergirded by a spiritual devotion and passion which did one's soul good. Sometimes the human element projected itself with a bit too much emphasis. That perhaps is inevitable. But the fact that the Council is a part of Christ's Church was never lost from sight. Always the Council came back to the seeking of the Divine plan and the power of The Eternal with whom its work is to be done.

Address to the 1954 Graduates of Elon College

By MILLS E. GODWIN

I think we take our liberty too much for granted here in this land. We accept our heritage of freedom and its many blessings without ever stopping to reflect or meditate upon how it all happened. To me, it did not just happen. It has not all come about by any mere accident. It was not by any mere accident that the prowess of the good ships of Columbus and Vesputius turned westward in the fifteenth century. Nor was it any mere accident that prompted the adventurous Cavaliers to come to Virginia in 1607 and make the First Permanent English Settlement in the New World, at Jamestown, and to seek in this new land a haven from political persecution.

It was not mere accident either that caused the stern and sturdy Pilgrim Fathers to land on the barren, bleak and dismal shores of New England in 1619, and seek there a haven from religious persecution; nor for that matter was it an accident that caused the Huguenots to settle in South Carolina, the Dutch to locate in New Amsterdam, or the Quakers to found the City of Brotherly Love at Philadelphia.

All of us can say it was not a mere accident that caused the fire of Liberty and Justice to burn so strongly in the hearts and souls of Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and the other sterling patriots of the Revolutionary War period.

It seems to be difficult to say that during the turbulent days of the Revolution and the years that followed, before our Constitution was finally adopted in 1789, that the sequence of events just accidentally took place. Our American civilization is no accident, the guiding hand of Providence has shown the way. It exists, too, because it was founded squarely upon the concept of human liberty. It exists, also, because we have learned to defend the rights of the individual and to respect the dignity of man.

Let us review briefly and in part how we achieved the liberty and freedom we have today. Our forefathers were not mere political thinkers, they were statesmen of profound and sane convictions, convictions that had been born of abuse, hardship and oppression, for even in our Colonial Days persecution and intolerance had been rife, and some of the martyrs of freedom shed their blood upon these shores.

Our early forefathers had a burning desire to find liberty and freedom in the purest form. Thus it was out of a deep sense of Justice and Right that our Founding Fathers gave us the now famous Declaration of Independence, a part of which reads as follows:

HON. MILLS E. GODWIN

"We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created free and equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments were instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

In those words we find the very essence of the principles and philosophy upon which our nation has been built—acknowledgement to our Creator of the rights he has given to men, rights which civil government ought to protect. Then, after much debate, followed the adoption of our Constitution, to make these ideals safe for posterity. It, too, was amended almost at once to include the immortal Bill of Rights, the very first amendment of which gave the right of free speech and press, the right of peaceful assembly, and the right of every citizen to petition his government for redress of grievances.

One hundred and seventy-eight years have come and gone since 1776, when Thomas Jefferson gave us the Declaration of Independence. These years have given to us the greatest and finest period of liberty and freedom the world has ever known. Never in all the record of history has mankind had the privileges to enjoy freedom as we have known it. We have had the fullest measure of happiness along with the highest and best standard of living ever enjoyed by any people anywhere on the face of the earth. We have had more of everything than any other people have ever known. Here we have seen the highest value placed on the dignity and worth of the individual. Democracy has not been something dreamed of and hoped for, but it has been for our forefathers and for us a living and vital force.

However, recent times and events have materially affected our course of freedom. Democracy is being supplanted by autocratic and bureaucratic rule. People, through force, persuasion or indifference are yielding the prerogatives they once called their own. Individual freedom is being swallowed up by the urge for and the promise of economic and social salvation.

The Statue of Liberty faces East today and holds high the Torch of Freedom, and it is significant in a troubled world that it may be the last great light and mankind's best hope for Freedom.

There are some truths we should try to understand and teach others so as to safeguard our freedom and liberty. We should teach tolerance, respect for law and order, respect of and love for home and family, respect for justice—that is the heritage of every American, and surely we must renew for ourselves and instill in others a high moral standard that leads unerringly along the path of righteousness.

In recent years we have witnessed far too many demonstrations of moral decay in high places, both in and out of government. We have an appalling criminal picture that has vividly shown us how crime can seep into society in the most unsuspected places and have connections and influence that shock our consciences. Vice and lawlessness go hand in hand and we find among us a well-entrenched criminal element of sizeable proportions.

I think you must be alarmed, as I am, by the forces from within and without that would destroy the kind of government we have enjoyed, and

(Continued on page 13.)

The Sloans Make Their Acquaintance With the Fijians

Are the South Pacific Islanders lazy, lying around in little clothing, waiting for tropical fruit to drop into their mouths? That may be a popular opinion, but it is not what Mrs. Sloan and I discovered.

Our short visit in Fiji was a rich experience. We left Honolulu, Hawaii, on Friday midnight, and then dropped Saturday into the Pacific as we crossed the international date-line, and arrived at Nadi, Fiji, about noon Sunday. Shortly after landing, we had a phone call from the Rev. Kolinio Saukuru, pastor of the Methodist church at Lautoka, twenty-seven miles from Nadi, asking me to preach that evening in Lautoka. Eighty-seven per cent of the Fijians are Methodists, but today there are more Indians in Fiji than Fijians, and only a small part of the Indians are Christians.

The bus to Lautoka was crowded with Fijians and Indians. Most of the fields we passed were in sugarcane, although pineapples and a variety of trees broke the monotony. Most of the farm work was being done with oxen, but occasionally a tractor was seen.

"Tea," which turned out to be a generous dinner, was enjoyed at the pastor's home. His house of frame and thatch is complete with running water, electricity and phone. Mr. and Mrs. Saukuru speak English fluently, although their very dark skins and bushy hair standing out several inches, made them look far from English. Both were barefooted. Mrs. Saukuru, like most of the women of the church, wore a knee-length skirt over a slip six or eight inches longer. Mr. Saukuru is a well-built man. When he wears any shoes they are size 13. His white "sulu" or skirt to his knees, white coat and clerical collar with black vest gives him a striking appearance.

The church, a new building which as yet has only a few pews, was crowded. The choir, all in white, sat on the floor in front of the pulpit. This choir had recently received acclaim for its singing for Queen Elizabeth, when she visited Fiji recently. We soon discovered why. It would compete well with the Elon College choir.

The call to worship was pounded out on two great tom-toms in the yard in front of the church. The call is one formerly used as a war call. To the Fijians, Christianity has done away with wars as it did away with cannibalism. The public welcome given us by the pastor was extremely cordial. My sermon was translated by the son of another Fijian minister, although only the older members needed the translation, as all of the young people speak English.

Mr. and Mrs. Saukuru took us back to Nadi by taxi, where we had tea and sandwiches together; but their leaving us, and our leaving Fiji the next morning, was not the end of our relations with Pacific Islanders.

The Cook Islands and the Niue Islands belong to New Zealand. A part of Samoa is a New Zealand protectorate under the United Nations. There is a labor shortage in New Zealand, so large numbers of the islanders have come to New Zealand to work. Others are here as students. The island girls make excellent nurses and office workers. Each of the island groups has its distinct language, but many customs and outlooks are similar.

The mission work in these three sets of islands has been largely done by English Congregationalists, the London Missionary Society. Consequently, the largest Congregational church in Auckland, a city of 550,000 people, and Wellington, New Zealand's capital, are Pacific Island churches. Services are held in each of the three Pacific Island languages, but the major services are in English. I preached at each of them.

A theological seminary to train both Pacific Islanders and New Zealand ministerial students has been established in Auckland. Mrs. Sloan and I were guests of the president or "principal" of the seminary, attended seminary functions, and talked from time to time with the students. We were greatly impressed by the ability and skill of these young men, especially the islanders.

The Maoris, the people who were already in New Zealand when the English arrived more than 100 years ago, came here from the Pacific Islands 500 or 600 years earlier. They found an aboriginal group of people here at that time, but absorbed them—chiefly by eating them! The only form of "animal" life of any size in New Zealand then were the kiwi (wingless birds) and large lizards. Human flesh was the only meat. The Maoris fought the British bravely, but when defeated soon became a part of the new civilization. Maoris are now members of Parliament and hold other prominent positions, not only here but abroad. One who died recently was for twenty years a professor at Harvard University.

W. W. SLOAN.

Plowing and Praying

By S. M. SMITH.

The farmer who follows the plow is in a sacred calling. He helps to feed the world. He is independent. He always has something to eat. He is generous. He shares with his neighbor. His barns are full. His cattle are well fed. And yet he is very dependent!

He must depend on God for the sunshine and the rain. He plants an ear of corn and he reaps several bushels. He and God are partners in business. A friend of mine and his neighbor met one day. "John," he said, "You certainly have improved these acres here. I never saw such fine corn. The field next to it is all grown up in weeds and grass." Said John, "Yes, that field didn't have any help from man. God sent the same sunshine and rain as fell on my farm." All of which proves that both God and man are dependent on each other in making this old world a fit place in which to live. The farmer places the seed in the ground, and God does the rest.

The writer grew up between the plow handles on a Carolina farm. He learned to love the soil. He enjoyed planting the seed in the springtime and with his dad reaping the harvest in the fall. It is interesting as we sit down to a meal at home to try to figure out how many people had a hand in preparing that meal. The meat, the vegetables, the fruit, the desert, the drinks, all came from different sources.

The most independent country churches are those that follow the
(Continued on page 14.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

When Do We Begin?

The impression is about that Elon College is to erect new dormitories and a dining room. Scarcely a day passes and oftentimes many times during the day I am asked the question by interested friends, "When do we begin to build?" There is magic in the question. It implies resolute action. I am sure that few things could thrill faculty and students more than to see the ground broken for these improvements on our campus.

Yesterday, July 1, there was a joint meeting of the Executive Committee and the Building Committee of the Board of Trustees of the college with William Henley Deitrick and Mr. John Knight, architects, in an effort to come to an agreement as to the interior arrangements of the proposed new buildings, that the architects might be authorized to provide at once a completion of architectural drawings and specifications, that a complete application may be presented to the government for the proposed loan with which these buildings are to be paid for. There were differences of opinion but according to custom, the opinion of the majority was given to the architects with instructions. The architects assured the committees that they would have the plans completed at the earliest possible date.

There will be a joint meeting of the college and church officials Tuesday, July 13, for the purpose of forming an organization, laying plans, and selecting dates for an aggressive undertaking to secure cash and pledges necessary to complete the $2,500,000 campaign and arrange definitely to retire the loan ahead of due dates. Let every one be interested and enthusiastic about this undertaking for our college. Let no one plead poverty or unwillingness but may everyone be willing to do his share whether it be little or much. Together we can succeed and nothing can compel failure. Success is the watchword and forward we go.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The past two issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have not carried reports on conference apportionment. On one occasion the report was not received in time and the other the writer was in New Haven, Connecticut, attending the biennial session of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches.

I am happy to submit these reports that those Sunday schools and churches contributing may have the pleasure of seeing in print the amounts contributed. Personally, I am happy when I am in a position to meet an obligation of any kind and I am sure that all who contribute for the support and on-going of their college are happy when they can help in the support of the college that has rendered and is rendering today such a significant service to our church and to our country.

Previously reported $ 3,900.85

Eastern Va. Conference:
Berea (Nans.) $ 73.00
Dendron S. S. 2.80
Hopewell 6.00
Christian Temple S. S. .. 179.59

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Damasus $ 29.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Durham S. S. $ 20.79
Howard's Chapel S. S. .. 2.00
Apple's Chapel 33.00
Mt. Zion S. S. 4.55
Zion 5.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Spoon's Chapel $ 20.00
Liberty 35.00
Patterson's Grove 10.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Concord S. S. $ 11.00
Dry Run S. S. 24.15
Newport S. S. 28.19

484.07

Total to date $ 4,384.92

VIRGINIA VALLEY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

(Continued from page 2.)

offering as a small expression of the feelings of the group for her.

The convention adjourned for the lunch which was served by the ladies of the church.

The convention reconvened, with the Rev. R. E. Newton conducting the worship service.

The program of the afternoon was based on the subject, "Teaching in the Sunday School." A filmstrip, "Great Adventures," was shown, after which Rev. H. V. Harman led the group in a discussion of the problems of teaching. He stressed the need of each church arranging for a teacher training institute during the next year.

The officers for the next year were elected, and the installation service was conducted by Rev. R. A. Whitten. The officers are:

Mrs. Leonard Higgs, president;
Mr. Kermit Kibler, vice-president;
Miss Betty J. Showalter, secretary;
Miss Ruby Green, asst. secretary.

It was voted to meet with Mount Olivet (R) Church next year.

The meeting was adjourned with prayer.

BETTY J. SHOWALTER,
Secretary.

Virginia Valley Expresses Gratitude to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill

The Valley of Virginia Sunday School Convention offers the following resolution as an expression of appreciation to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, a dear and loving friend of the Valley Conference.

"The news of the resignation of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill as Southern Convention Educational Secretary has brought a feeling of sadness to many individuals and organizations, among which is the Valley Sunday School Convention.

"Miss Coghill has rendered invaluable service to every phase of our work. Her radiant personality and selfless service has been a great inspiration in the valley. We regret her decision to resign, but are confident of Divine guidance in all her decisions.

"Therefore, Be it resolved that this convention go on record as expressing our deep gratitude to Pattie Lee and assure her of our sincere love and earnest prayers for her in the paths into which God shall lead her.

"Be it further resolved that a copy of this expression be sent to Pattie Lee, a copy be sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and a copy be spread on the minutes of this convention."

"The accompanying check is but a small expression of our feeling."

BETTY J. SHOWALTER,
Secretary.

So long as we love, we serve; so long as we are loved by others, I should say that we are almost indispensable; and no man is useless while he has a friend.—Robert Lewis Stevenson.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Dedication of Women's Gift at the General Council

I have never attended any lovelier worship service than that conducted by the Women's Fellowship in the dedication of the Women's Gift at the General Council on Saturday evening June 26.

I wish that I might picture it for you. In the background was the worship center used all during the Council, created especially for the occasion by a New Haven architect who is a member of one of our churches here. There is a high white wooden arch, which forms the frame for soft blue cloth. A dark wooden cross hangs high in the arch. Centered beneath is a table on which is a tall brass vase holding white lilies, and with three white candles on either side.

Mrs. Bayard Buckham, president of the Women's Fellowship, was truly "pretty as a picture"—white hair, expressive face, white fluffy dress, and a lei containing 400 small orchids which had been sent from Hawaii for the occasion.

On the stage with her were 70 members of the New Haven Chorale, in bright red robes, who interspersed the scripture, prayer and meditative words of Mrs. Buckham with lovely music, including the familiar "Lord's Prayer," by Malotte, as well as the unfamiliar (to me) "There is a Balm in Gilead" and the "Prayer of St. Francis" set to music by Wright—a total of eight most inspiring numbers.

The women's state presidents, all dressed in pastel frocks, marched in during the singing of "God of Our Fathers," made especially impressive by the use of two trumpeters for the trumpet notes.

When the time came for the dedication of the "over and above" Women's Gift, which amounted to more than $282,500 (and which included the amount of our Thank Offerings) for the biennium, our own Tudor Williams, as vice-president of the National Fellowship, was one of the two who carried symbolic offering plates to Mrs. Buckham, who placed them on the altar for dedication.

Dr. Harcastle Will Teach at the School of Missions

Dr. H. S. Harcastle, who is to teach the course on Bible at the School of Missions of the Woman's Convention, at Elon College, July 13 to 16, is a native of Dover, Delaware. He is a graduate of Elon College and of Yale Divinity School. He taught for a while in Defiance College, Ohio, and was called to be pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, where he served for several years. From Suffolk, he was called to the pastorate of The Christian Temple in Norfolk, Virginia, where he remained for ten years. Then he served as pastor of Rosemont Church, South Norfolk, Virginia, for two years, going from there to the Newport News Congregational Christian Church for two years. He is, at the present time, the pastor of Oakland and Berea Christian Churches and resides at Chukatuck, Virginia, where the parsonage for this charge is located.

REV. H. S. HARCASTLE, D.D.

During nearly all of these years Dr. Harcastle has written a review of the Sunday School Lesson each week for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. His long pastoral experience, his college and seminary training, and his careful work in preparing the review of the Sunday School lesson over the years, plus his outstanding ability as a teacher, combine to make him a capable teacher in any Bible School sponsored by our church. Those who attend the school and take the course in his department will be richly rewarded.

I. W. JOHNSON.

* * * * *

Church Families Form "Church Family"

The woman's work of the Durham, North Carolina, Church has had a good year; there has not been very much of the spectacular, but the regular program is satisfying, and we are following and enjoying it. Perhaps the item of most general interest was the observance of Family Day. Mrs. Bradley Henderson, editor of the local church paper, has described the program, and I quote her account:

"A very impressive Family Day service was held on Mothers' Day, honoring Mrs. J. S. Glenn and Mrs. W. C. Cole, the only living charter members of our church. Mrs. Glenn and Mrs. Cole were nominated for this honor by the Woman's Auxiliary. The Walker Quartet, consisting of Clarence, Clifton, and Margaret Walker, and Peggy Walker Penny, sang at the service.

"Both Mrs. Glenn and Mrs. Cole have been very active in church work and have been an inspiration to their families, who have contributed so much to our church. Two of their grandsons, Curtis and Clifton Walker, plan to become ministers. (Another member of our church, Chris Mulholland, plans to become a minister, too.)

Mrs. Glenn has three daughters and one son—Mrs. Lee Draughan, mother of Lee Draughan, Jr.; Mrs. C. E. Young, mother of Curtis Young; Mrs. Arnis Glenn, mother of Francis Glenn, and Clyde Glenn. Mrs. Young and Mrs. Arnis Glenn are teachers in the Primary Department.

"Mrs. Cole has four daughters—the late Mrs. Ruby Carden; Mrs. Mabel Johnson, mother of Hubert Cole Johnson and Mrs. J. L. Perry; Mrs. Mollie Walker, mother of Clarence, Clifton, Peggy, Margaret, Danny, and the late Ernie Walker; and Mrs. Lottie Delionbaek, mother of Leon, Billy, Christian and Shirley Delionbaek. Mrs. Mabel Johnson served as the head of the Primary Department for many years. Mrs. J. L. Perry was general superintendent of the Sunday school until she moved to Morehead City. Mrs. Walker is the advisor for the Pilgrim Fellowship, and two of her sons, Clarence and Clifton, are teachers in the Sunday school. He daughters, Margaret and Peggy, sing in the choir, as do Clarence and Clifton.

"These families have made an enviable record of church service which should be inspiring to all of us."

One further item of real significance concerning these sisters is the fact that both Mrs. Glenn and Mrs. Cole and their husbands, had deep roots in our church. Mr. Cole was connected with the O'Kelly family and church in Chatham County.

It is not necessarily true that one's family tree must be rooted in the same church for many years in order for one to be a useful and valuable member, but it is one's advantage to have his church history so interwoven with his family traditions that he does not know where one leaves off and the other begins. There are several such families in our church: the Coles, the Glenns, the Highs, the Mulhollands, the Kernodles, the Boones, the Harwards, the Perrys, the Leas, and many others who have come from other communities and joined in spirit and in work to make our church a true church family.

Such members constitute a principal reason why Durham Church anticipates a gratifying final report of the year's work at conference in the fall.

ALBERTA B. HARRELL,
Program Chairman.

* * * * *

Women Minister at Home

At the General Council on Saturday evening, both Mr. and Mrs. Elton Trueblood spoke on "The Ministry of Unordained Men and Women." Mr. Trueblood emphasized the importance of lay activity in the church services and as men go about their regular business occupations.

But Mrs. Trueblood took an unusual approach to her subject, tracing the history of women in the Christian era, finishing with a picture of women in our country in our day, educated for everything but the job she thinks they are to do—provide Christian homes for their husbands and children. Thus many of them are frustrated individuals.

She declared, "The greatest ministry a wife can perform is to provide a retreat for her husband when he comes out of the competitive, democratic work-a-day world." And again, "Women must not provide a

(Continued on page 15.)

Program of Ninth Annual School of Missions of the Woman's Missionary Convention

TUESDAY THROUGH FRIDAY

July 13, 14, 15, 16, 1954

Elon College, North Carolina

* * *

THEMES FOR 1954-1955

Mission: Home Theme—"The City."

Foreign Theme—"India, Pakistan and Ceylon."

Bible Study—Book of Acts.

Program—"Out of the Heart of the Gospel."

* * *

TUESDAY, JULY 13

1:00 Registration (West Dormitory).

Afternoon Session

Whitley Memorial Auditorium

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Presiding.

2:30 Call to Order.

Worship Service—Mrs. Carl Dawson.

Greetings—Dr. L. E. Smith.

Greetings—Dr. W. T. Scott.

Introductions.

Announcements.

Presentation of the Program—Mrs.

H. G. Ballinger.

Presentation of Literature — Miss

Pattie Lee Coghill.

Hymn.

Prayer.

4:00 Visit to Book Store.

6:00 Dinner (College Dining Hall).

Evening Session

6:45 Tour of the College.

(Directed by Dr. Smith).

7:45 Vespers on lawn—Mrs. Mark Andes.

8:30 Get Acquainted Party (Presented by the Ladies of the Pleasant Ridge Church).

* * *

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding.

7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. Garland Spratley.

8:00 Breakfast.

8:50 Quiet Music.

9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardecastle.

9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.

10:10 Visit to Book Store.

10:40 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.

Hymn.

11:35 India, Pakistan and Ceylon—Miriam Dalton Brown.

12:45 Lunch.

Afternoon Session

Mrs. Carl Wallace, Presiding

2:30 Hymn.

Prayer.

Officers Training Class—Mrs. Richard Jackson.

3:45 Friendly Service Projects—Mrs. W. E. Wissemau.

4:00 Trip to the Orphanage—Conducted by Mrs. J. G. Truitt.

5:00 Picnic at Moonclon.

Group singing and vespers.

Evening Session

Mrs. Ray Gordon, Presiding

8:00 Prelude.

Hymn.

Prayer.

Visual Aids—Mrs. Harry Nelson.

Film—"In The Beginning."

Family Altar—West Dormitory Hall —Mrs. June Joy House.

THURSDAY, JULY 15

Morning Session

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding

7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. Cecil Whitlock.

8:00 Breakfast.

8:50 Quiet Music.

9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardecastle.

9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.

10:10 Visit to Book Store.

10:40 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.

Hymn.

11:35 India, Pakistan and Ceylon—Miriam Dalton Brown.

12:45 Lunch.

Afternoon Session

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Presiding

2:30 Hymn.

Prayer.

Memorial Service—Mrs. W. B. Williams.

Worship Workshop—Miss Virginia Brinkley.

4:00 Close of afternoon session.

6:00 Dinner.

Evening Session

Mrs. W. B. Williams, Presiding

8:00 Prelude.

Hymn.

Recognition Service.

Address.

Communion Hymn.

Communion Service—Conducted by Rev. Richard Jackson.

* * *

FRIDAY, JULY 16

Morning Session

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Presiding

7:30 Morning Watch—Mrs. W. T. Scott.

8:00 Breakfast.

8:50 Quiet Music.

9:00 Bible Study—Dr. Hardecastle.

9:50 Methods of teaching Bible Study—Mrs. Ralph Galt.

10:10 Break.

10:30 The City—Rev. W. J. Andes.

11:20 India—Miriam Dalton Brown.

12:00 Reports and Impressions.

Closing Moments.

12:45 Lunch.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS COMMITTEE

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger.

Mrs. Carl Wallace.

Mrs. Ray Gordon.

Mrs. W. B. Williams.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

BUSINESS MANAGER

Mrs. M. F. Hall.

REGISTRAR

Miss Ruth Dunn.

HOSTESS

Mrs. George D. Colclough.

Mrs. Ray Gordan, Assistant.

DINING HALL HOSTESS

Mrs. Cecil Whitlock.

* * *

BE SURE TO VISIT THE BOOK STORE AT EVERY OPPORTUNITY.

Every one comes between men's souls and God, either as a brick wall or as a bridge. Either you are leading men to God or you are driving them away.—Canon Lindsay Dewar.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

"Christmas in June"

A group of us were sitting around a work table in Elon's Art Studio, listening to the advice of artist-teacher Lila Newman. She went from person to person, looking at their work, adding a touch now and then, when suddenly one of the women looked at her watch and exclaimed: "Oh, my goodness, I must hurry or I'll be late for the Christmas party." These words brought looks of astonishment to our faces. "Christmas party—in June?"

"Yes," she said, "my daughter has gone to camp, and I'm going to drive over to see her and attend their Christmas party tonight. You remember that it is the 25th of June."

Even if you aren't good at counting, you can get someone to help you find that that is half-way to Christmas or six months before Christmas. The mother continued: "They hung up their stockings last night, they made gifts to send to Korea, they were having a turkey for dinner with all the good things to accompany it, and this afternoon a party for mothers."

And so she hurried off. This gave us an idea. Why don't Christian families remember the Christ Child on June 25? We heard of a minister that had a Christmas carol or hymn every Sunday to remind the people that Christ came to us. Perhaps we don't care to bake a turkey or hang the stockings, but we might well—

Read the Christmas story;
Sing some carols;

Plan gifts for Christmas (vacation time perfect for making gifts);

Exhibit a Christmas picture;

Have a family devotional about the First Christmas.

We don't know how you feel about it, but we stopped to remember the little Christ Child, who came to bring us so much. Happy Christmas in June! Remember this for next year.

We often discover what will do, by finding out what will not do; and probably he who never made a mistake never made a discovery.—Samuel Smiles,

Obedience Must Be Taught

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Adams gave her little daughter, Lorrie, plenty of commands and admonitions, but she seldom waited to see that the child obeyed them. Most of the time Lorrie did not obey. When a friend was at their home for lunch one day Lorrie chose not to sit at the table. She carried her plate and a bottle of soda pop into the living room and lay on her stomach looking at her picture book while she ate, idly kicking her heels in the air.

When her mother and friend came in from the dining room, Mrs. Adams said, "Lorrie, I told you not to bring that bottle in here. Now you take it right into the kitchen."

Lorrie paid no attention and Mrs. Adams did not stop to notice whether or not her child had obeyed her. She and her friend went on talking. Presently Lorrie's foot hit the bottle and a stream of brown liquid poured out onto the light gray rug. Mrs. Adams jumped up and slapped Lorrie hard. "I told you to take that bottle into the kitchen," she said angrily. "Now see what you've done!"

She hurried out and procured a pan of water and a cloth to mop up the liquid and prevent a stain. Lorrie was still wailing when Mrs. Adams had finished. Then the mother put her arms around the little girl. "I'm sorry, darling," she murmured, kissing her. "Mommie hated to punish you, but you didn't mind her."

The mother should have been sorry, but not in the way she meant. When she gave her child an order she ought to have made sure that it was heard and then she should have waited to see that her instructions were carried out. Besides this she should not have punished her daughter in anger. She was right to be sorry that she had done that. The child was used to having her own way. Why should her mother expect her to think this was an exceptional case?

There was an era when children were kept under an unreasoning discipline that was crushing. The slightest deviation from set rules was met with harsh punishment. It caused children to become either resentful or timid, entirely lacking in initiative. Often it made them untruthful. Fear is a poor motive for obedience.

In just plain fairness to a child, however, he should learn to obey. The wise parent will give no more orders than are really necessary, but when an order is given the parent should see that it is heard and obeyed. There should be no harshness about it. Very young children should be helped to obey without question, but older children should have the reason for the command explained to them.

We want the best for our boys and girls. We want them to grow up into well-adjusted men and women. We want people to like them and we want them to like people. Visitors in homes where children are allowed to do as they please can certainly not admire the results.

Mrs. Adams is a sweet, lovable woman and mother, but if she does not teach her child to obey while she is young, how can she expect Lorrie, when an adolescent, to pay attention to her important advice? That could well have very serious results. Then, too, there are our country's laws which must be obeyed. As yet, we have only touched on this all-important subject of obedience.

VALLEY REVIVALS.

(Continued from page 2.)

During the present week, the Rev. Clyde O. Koon of Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, will be the visiting minister at Dry Run Church.

Joppa will hold revival services July 11 to 18, and Mr. Koon will also be guest minister for these services.

July 19 to 26 are the dates for the Mt. Lebanon series of revival services, and Rev. Ralph Galt will be the visiting minister.

Rev. Walstein Snyder of Burlington, North Carolina, and a native of the Valley will preach for the people of the Leaksville Church and community, September 20 to 26.

I was just thinking, our bodies often show more sense than our minds do, because the organs do what God intended them to do, while our minds are striving against him. For instance, Drs. Bruel and Lecoq say concerning alcohol: "The organism refuses to utilize it in any manner whatsoever, drawing from it no assimilable product or any reserve. Rather, it puts all its resources to work to cast out the poison alcohol."

—Mary Stark Kerr.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

A Letter to Eastern Carolina Youth

524 Midland Avenue,
Sanford, N. C.
July 3, 1954.

Dear Young People:

Our Southern Convention Office has received a letter of resignation from our most efficient and loyal advisor and Educational Secretary, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Miss Coghill has had a travel job for a long time and is planning to teach in high school next year in order to stay at home for a while.

I am sure that you young people of the Pilgrim Fellowship would like to send a note of thanks and appreciation for the loyal and helpful service which she has rendered so devotedly to us for the past five years. Miss Coghill's address is: Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College, N. C., until July 31 and after that Lynbank Road, Route No. 4, Henderson, N. C.

Thomas Madren asked me to remind you if your group has any news which you would like to have printed on the Youth Page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, that you send it to me, or to Thomas Madren, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

It was wonderful to attend the meeting of the National Pilgrim Fellowship at Yale University, and I want to thank you all for electing me as your delegate. I hope we can have a report of the meeting at our Rally at Shallow Well on October 24.

Sincerely yours,

BILLY JOE WILLETT, President,
E. N. C. Youth Fellowship.

* * * * *

Graduates Honored by Portsmouth Church Group

On the evening of June 16 the First Church, Portsmouth, honored our young people who were graduating from high school and college. These were: James Parks, Boyd Griffin, Bill Rakestraw, graduates of Woodrow Wilson High School, and Harry Lee, Jr., graduate of VPI.

After a fine buffet dinner, which was served by the Woman's Fellowship, the program, under the direction of Miss Caroline Gort, was presented. Charlotte Martin gave the welcome, and Boyd Griffin responded on behalf of the graduates. Words of greeting were offered by H. F. Collette, chairman of the Official Board; W. W. Piland, chairman of the board of Deacons and church school superintendent; and the Rev. William P. Smith, pastor. An enjoyable musical program was presented by Miss Imogene Kitts, Miss Dolly Rutherford, and Marshall K. Moss. The program was concluded by the group forming the friendship circle and singing "Blest Be The Tie."

* * * * *

Young People's Summer Program at Hunterdale Church

The young people of the Hunterdale Christian Church near Franklin, Virginia, have adopted a program of worship and fellowship for the summer months of June, July and August.

The meetings are held on Wednesday nights at 7:00 with a varied program for the weeks. Rev. Clyde Fields is directing the worship programs and this month's programs have been around the organization and purpose of Youth Fellowship, the influence of T. V., comics, and movies on the life and morals of youth, a beside the lake service of worship at Camp Darden, and is drinking a problem for young people, followed by an outdoor movie on the church recreation area.

The Counsellors: Mrs. Larry Overby, Mrs. R. E. Carter, and Edgar Blythe rotate their sponsorship of recreational activities from week to week. So far they have led the young people in a Weiner Roast, a visit to an outdoor theatre, a trip to Camp Darden for campfire activities with the Boy Scouts, and ice cream from the freezers that turn. (Yum-Yum).

The response on the part of the young people has been most gratifying. Attendance has been high in the twenties and last week there were 32 present. Archie Howell, president of the Hunterdale Young People has been quite pleased with the response. Archie also represented the young people at the Elon Summer Camp at Elon College. He had a thrilling religious experience while there.

The Hunterdale Young People have bought and paid for the tables for the recreational area and new shrubbery for the Scott Memorial Wing. The Hunterdale Christian Young People are a part of the Eastern Virginia, Southern Convention, and the National Pilgrim Fellowship.

Our Youth and Alcohol

What influence is alcohol having upon our youth? The answer to this question is partly given in the results of a survey made at two recent Epworth Training Institutes in two districts of the North Alabama Conference. The youth involved were seniors and older youth whose average was 16 years.

On the first night of the institute, a questionnaire was passed out which included the questions: "Do either of your parents ever drink?" "Have you ever been offered a drink?" and "Have you ever taken a drink?" The youth were directed not to sign their names to their papers, and were honor bound not to try to see how any other youth answered their questionnaires.

The results are rather revealing.

Out of a total of 70 young people in the two classes, 39 per cent stated that either one or both of their parents used alcoholic drinks; 54 per cent answered that they had been offered a drink at some time or another; 51 per cent replied that they had accepted it.

Almost without exception, those youth who had come from homes where drinking was practiced, followed the example of their parents. Therefore, fathers and mothers today must come to realize that the precedent of indulgence or abstinence in alcoholic beverages will have a very strong effect on whether or not their teen-aged children will drink. Many parents who indulge today tell their children, "When you become an adult, you can drink too." But sociologists are quick to assert that it is the example, rather than the teaching, of parents that is most influential upon molding the habits of children and youth.

It is noteworthy that while 54 per cent of these youth had been offered a drink, only 3 per cent showed the conviction and strength of character to refuse it.

It is fallacious to think that our
(Continued on page 15.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Growing Through Bible Study"

LESSON III—JULY 18, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." Psalm 119: 11.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Acts 17: 10, 11; 3: 14-17; Hebrews 4: 12.

DEVOTIONAL: Psalm 119: 9-16.

A Neglected Book.

Most American homes have a Bible. It is still the "best seller," and innumerable copies of it are given at Christmas and on anniversaries. Most children receive a copy when they are old enough to read, or when they pass from the lower to a higher grade in the church school. But with all this widespread sale and ownership of the Bible, there are so many people who seldom if ever read it at all, and many, many people do not use it for regular reading or study, or follow its precepts. The Bible is a neglected Book. That is a sad, but a true statement. Do you read the Bible in any regular way? In your schedule of reading, is there a place for regular and adequate Bible reading? Are you availing yourself of this means of growing?

This Neglected Book and Growth in Christian Living.

There is a relationship between this neglected book and growth in Christian living. Its words are spirit and they are life. It contains food for the mind and food for the soul. It feeds, nourishes, develops the spirit of man. It is a means of grace and a means of growth. When a person reads it regularly, reads it intelligently, reads it prayerfully, reads it obediently, he will grow in grace and in a knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. The church ought to make every effort to encourage its members to read the Bible. Man cannot live by bread alone, let alone grow by bread only, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.

An Open Book and an Open Mind.

"Now these were more noble than those in Thessalonica in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the scriptures daily, whether these things were true." It is not enough to have an open Bible; we must also have an open mind. That is hard to do. All too often we go to the Bible to prove our opinions, to find some proof text that will confirm our prejudices or pet beliefs. It is hard to allow the Bible to speak to us its own message. We are often tempted to read into it our preconceptions. It takes courage to come to the Bible with an open mind and to look with unprejudiced eyes at what it says. Bible reading becomes vital and dynamic when we come to it with an open mind; and it often becomes dangerous when we do that. One had better not read the Bible with an open mind unless he is prepared to pay the price. But there is great possibility of growth in grace to him who reads the Bible with an open and eager mind.

A Workman That Needeth Not To Be Ashamed.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." If this Book is a means of grace, if it is an aid in growing as a Christian, we ought to give diligence in teaching it effectively. We ought to give ourselves with the utmost loyalty and devotion to teaching the truth as we find it in God's Word. We ought to find ways and means of presenting it that will capture attention and interest, and elicit a response. A Sunday school teacher must always be studying to make his teaching more effective. He ought to do his work in such a way that he need not be ashamed before men or before God.

The Bible and Children.

How did it come about that this young man Timothy became a Christian and a Christian minister? We do not know. But perhaps there is a hint in what Paul writes in his letter to his young friend. "But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them, and that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation which is in Jesus Christ." In imagination we can see Timothy as a mere child, sitting on his mother's lap or at her knee, as she read to him the story of Joseph with his coat of many colors, of Daniel and his companions. Here were the songs of David, the shepherd lad and the great king. Here was the story of God's dealing with his people through the centuries. Here were the moral and spiritual precepts which were the basis of the good life and the secret of happiness.

The boy listens attentively. He forms a love for the sacred writings. Later he reads them for himself. And now that he is a minister, he makes them the source of his preaching and of his personal conduct.

Mothers overlook the tremendous formative powers of the Bible on the lives of their children. It is all right to have "sets of books" of which there is no end, for children. But our homes need to introduce the Bible into the program of reading, and in this way introduce the children to this source of light and inspiration. Our day needs a new emphasis on Bible reading in the home, and for small children. There are both Bible Story Books and children's editions of the Bible which lend themselves to this great work.

An Inspired Book.

The Bible is an inspired book. It is a God-inspired book. Holy men of old wrote as they were inspired of God. His Spirit moved on their minds and hearts, and they wrote as they were moved by that Spirit. One has only to read this book with an open mind to know that it is inspired. This does not mean that it was a mechanical process. This does not mean that every part of the Bible has equal value. There is little inspiration in many chapters of the Old Testament—for instance, the minute details in some of the chapters of Leviticus, or some of the long genealogical tables. They had a practical value and they have a place in the Bible. But one would hardly read them for the inspiration they seek from the Bible. But the Bible is inspired, God-inspired, and as such it has the power to inspire.

"For the Word of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." It is a living thing, it searches the heart, it knows our thoughts, it discerns our motives.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

"The Glory of the Lord, in Nature"

A Nature Sunday Vesper Service

By REV JOHN F. C. GREEN, D. D. of McKeesport, Pa.

"Son of man, I have made you a watchman for the house of Israel; whenever you hear a word from my mouth, you shall give them warning from me . . . And the Lord said unto me, 'Arise, go forth into the plain;' and, lo, the glory of the Lord stood there, like the glory I had seen by the river Chebar; and I fell on my face."—Ezekiel 3:17, 22-23.

The Prophet Ezekiel found his communion with God, and the mission of his life in the message from the Most High in the beauty of the out-of-doors. The indescribable glory of nature, God's handiwork, speaks to men's souls. But they must be perceptive; they must understand his language, or even God speaks in vain. The character of the Prophet's mission was to hear, to understand and to speak for God to those who failed to understand his voice speaking in nature. As God spoke to Ezekiel, so he speaks today:

God is not dumb, that he should speak no more!

If thou hast wanderings in the wilderness,
And findest not Sinai, 'tis thy soul is poor.
There towers the mountain of the voice no less,
That whoso seeks should find.

This Sunday, June 27, has been called Nature Sunday. It is so from the thought that worshippers should bring into the church, for worship, the sense of the glory of God's nature. This is the season when nature—in these latitudes—is at her best. Instinctively, people seek to go out, to enjoy the beauty and the charm of nature. And that is good. Any experience of this world of God's creation is good. In seeing these things: the glory of the sun, the tender beauty of growing life about, the comfort of warmth, speak of him who made these things.

Thus nature is a corrective to the separation of man from the Creator, as it is brought about by modern urban living. The city child and youth tend to be aliens in God's natural world. They have little share in the wonder of on-going creation, of earing for fellow-creatures, the animals, of the farm, of planting and nurturing life in plants, as do those who live and work on the farms.

The city offers un-real substitutes for the gifts of the country. Youth, growing up in the un-natural environments of buildings and paved streets, and an absence of fellowship and work with domestic animals and plants and crops, is severely handicapped. Even its heroes, of the movie and the television, or the unworthy comic-strips, are synthetic, unreal, dishonest. And what the mental, occupational materials are, that take the time of youth, that youth must become, and does become.

Nor is it strange, therefore, that precisely those areas of American life where the most is done for children, where more money is spent upon youth, in play-grounds, entertaining, interests and occupation, there is also the greatest incidence of juvenile delinquency. Obviously, while these entertainments may have to be, they are not the answer to the problem of securing wholesome living, and, therefore, wholesome life, for the greatest national wealth—the oncoming generation of American citizens, the men and women of tomorrow. It is not strange, either, that those areas of our land where youth grows most naturally, in the rural states, where the least money is spent, where there is the least occupational direction of youth, the fewest play-grounds—it is there that juvenile delinquency is lowest.

The Bible stories are nature stories. The writers were nature-lovers. They experienced nature. They were co-workers with God. One of them wrote, "Out of the cities men cry."

Lorado Taft, the artist, and his family were living in their summer-home on Lake Michigan. It was the custom of the family to sit quietly by the shore as God unfolded his daily miracle of the sunset, whose magic beauty may be loved, though it cannot ever be truly described. One evening, their young maid asked permission to go to her near-by home. Why did she wish to go, asked the mistress! "To show the sunset to my folks." "But have they never seen it?" asked the mistress. "No," replied the little maid, "our family has never seen it as you do."

The Bible closes with the vision of the new heaven and the new earth. Through it flows "the river of the water of life, bright as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb, through the middle of the street of the city." The vision continues to say that beauty and justice of God and men shall unite there, in a holy family: the beautiful city of nature, inhabited by the children of God, ruled in infinite love by the Father and Creator of the world and his people.

This perfect picture of the city, where nature has been placed in the plan of its building, as the home of men, their hearts the home of God and the Lamb, must be the pattern for the City of God on earth.

ADDRESS TO GRADUATES.

(Continued from page 5.)

would put up in its place a Socialist or Communist government that outlaws competitive free enterprise and destroys all private initiative. We tolerate too much the forces that are arrayed against us, who expound the theory that the government owes every man a living, with security to all, and argue that we should adopt as our philosophy the system of taking from those who have and giving to those who have not, without any regard to the merit or need involved.

America can never remain strong and free if we follow this trend. Communism is a way of life that knows no God, and there is nothing connected with it that is attractive to us. Those who embrace it, or those who, through indifference or mistaken guidance, allow themselves to become enamored of its false principles, should not be entitled to the guarantees of individual freedom and self-expression that are the birthright of every American.

This may well be a fateful hour of decision for all of us. There are tremendous and perplexing problems with us to be solved. The challenge is for this generation to accept the opportunity and discharge our responsibilities.

May you have the courage to dare, the vision to see, the will to win and the fortitude to persevere! May you go with hope, with confidence and humility! May you go with determination and with high purpose! May you go with faith in yourselves and in your fellowmen! And above all, may you go with God! Man's reach must exceed his grasp, or what is heaven for?

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thanks for your help each week on the care of these children. In many ways besides the funds you send you are kind to the little folks. You are giving them vacations in your homes. You are sending some of them to camps. You are clothing some of them. You are showing concern for their welfare and progress. In other words you are showing compassion on them. You are not walking by on the "other side" of their Jericho road. You are picking them up, putting them in a good home where they are given understanding and guidance and Christian training. It is a joy and a privilege to serve you and to work with you in doing the best compassionate people can for homeless, needy children. It is a joy to serve the children, and to work with the staff who do a good part by the children and this institution.

A little word of caution is in order. You will not be doing a real service to an orphanage child in your home on vacation to encourage him or her to complain about his or her treatment at the orphanage. Most of the children here would make only good reports. No child here has been mistreated as far as I know, and I do not see how I could be kept from knowing it. I believe any child here would feel free to confide in me, or some other member of the staff. They would talk to their playmates. And when they confided in me I would do some investigating, because I would not want to hear only the child's side of a question. With 82 children given as much freedom and range of room and spirit as they are here they are going to need to be kept in the right way. To most people it will not be fun to hear children tell tales of woe about folks who are as kind and interested in these children as each of us here are. See what I mean. Be a blessing to the child and to the child's home.

Thanks for all your help everywhere, and may God bless us here and help us to deserve it every day.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JUNE 30, 1954

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:
Misses Lucille & Joyce Holland, Suffolk, Va.

Glasses:
Mrs. L. D. Martin, Elon College, N. C.
Coupons:
Woman's Aux., Greensboro, First Church.
Mt. Bethel Miss. Soc., Summerfield, N. C.
W. M. S., Pleasant Grove Ch., So. Boston, Va.
J. M. Spencer, Avondale Estates, Ga.
Mrs. B. G. Harrell, Norfolk, Va.
Buttons:
Sr. Woman's Guild, Shelton Mem. Ch., Portsmouth, Va.
Banaanas:
Pate-Dawson Co., Burlington, N. C.
Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
Amount brought forward	$ 6,912.26
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Wake Chapel	$ 55.68
	55.68
Total	$ 55.68
Grand total	$ 6,967.94
Special Offerings.
Amount brought forward	$19,494.93
United Cong. Christian S.
S., Columbus, Ga.	$ 4.62
Mr. & Mrs. W. R. Sellars,
Burlington, ... C.	50.00
Percy Smith, Newport
News, Va.	5.00
Miss L. Kennedy, Worth-
ville, N. C.	25.00
Amelia Christian Church,
Special Offerings	14.90
New Hope Christian Ch.,
Reanoke, Alabama ...	4.15
W. B. Truitt, Greensboro,
N. C.	10.00
In Memory of Walter H.
Norfleet	5.00
Special Gifts	69.60
	188.27
Grand total	$19,283.20
Total for the week	$ 243.95
Total for the year	$26,251.14
Seven million adult Americans are heavy drinkers, addictive drinkers, or chronic alcoholics.

PLOWING AND PRAYING.

(Continued from page 6.)

"God's Acre" plan. The men agree to plant and cultivate one acre, and give the proceeds to the church; and somehow God's acre always produces more. because the spirit of love is planted in every seed. Somehow, we feel that the country preacher gets more out of his work than the pastor of the big city church. He spends his time riding over the countryside and visiting his parishoners. His is a beautiful family relationship.

Sometimes things don't work out so well. There is drouth, storms and floods to deal with. And this demands faith, patience and perseverance.

There is something about country life that, in itself, is uplifting and inspiring. The country church bells that ring on Sunday morning, call the farmers and their families to go to church to worship the same God who richly sends the sunshine and the rain during the week. The children in the country schools find their way to college and university. The foreign missionary to some far away land must know how to teach agriculture as well as preach Christ.

The farmer is usually a good weather prophet. He follows the changes of the moon in planting his crops. He watches the clouds—can usually tell whether the season will be dry or wet. All this keeps him close to God and makes him feel his dependence.

Our strongest weapon in fighting Communism is in teaching coming generations to know God, who doeth all things well.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt

Christian Orphanage

Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written) (Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

HOUSE.

Annie Lee House, widow of Alexander Macon House, and the mother of the late Dr. Robert Lee House, died at her home, Franklinton, N. C., on June 30. She had been in poor health for the past two years, never having known of her son's passing, and critically ill for the past two months.

She was born in Franklin County on February 10, 1874, the youngest daughter of William and Lucinda Jones. During the Civil War, Annie Carter Lee, one of General Robert E. Lee's daughters, was sent to the Duke Jones family near Warrenton, N. C. in hopes that she might regain her health at their mineral springs. Despite all efforts, Miss Lee died and was buried in the Jones family plot. It was not until after the war that General Lee could visit the Jones family and see his daughter's final resting place. In memory of Miss Lee the youngest Jones daughter was named Annie Lee. The name Lee has now been carried to the third generation in the family.

Mrs. House was educated at home by her mother and later by her sister, Lucy, who attended school in Graham and who was one of the first women to study at Elon College. It was while teaching younger children in the House family that Annie Lee Jones married Alexander Macon House.

They had four children: Grace who died in infancy; A. M., Jr., and John, who survive; and Robert Lee. Mrs. House instructed all of her children at home, but the youngest one. She returned to teaching public school during World War I.

A life-long member of Pope's Chapel Church, she was an avid reader of "The Christian Sun," an interested attendant of conference for over 50 years, and contributed a son to the ministry. She was an accomplished organist and had a good singing voice. Much interested in history, in later years, Mrs. House turned to family history. She liked to gather her grandchildren at her knee and tell of yesteryears.

Services were held at Pope's Chapel Church on July 2, with the Rev. E. M. Powell, pastor, in charge. She was buried in the church cemetery.

Annie Lee House was big in statue and big in heart. She was blessed among women.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

democratic way for the home, but a Christian way, so that public life will always have the home as an example of what public life ought to be—a place of love and trust, the Kingdom of God on earth."

She stated that the greatest ministry a woman can perform is to "make a place where people find peace, and minister to the needs of her husband and children."

Thus, by inference, Mrs. Trueblood placed heavy blame for the ills of the world on women who work outside their homes, whether it be at "paying jobs" or community activities, making them responsible, in a measure for their husband's nervous breakdowns and the lack of peace in the world.

* * * * *

London Woman Speaks at Special Women's Meeting

For women at the General Council, one of the highlights was the speech of Dorothy Biggs at the special women's meeting on Sunday afternoon.

Miss Dorothy J. Biggs is from London, England, and her title is Associate Secretary, International Congregational Council. She is attractive, witty, clever, and has enough of an English accent to be especially interesting to an American audience.

Miss Biggs was introduced by Mrs. Robert Williams as the woman whose Christian ministry in the office of the International Council is comparable to woman's ministry in a home—at times bringing order out of chaos.

In her opening remarks Miss Biggs referred to Mrs. Trueblood's speech of the night before, stating that we ought to remember it was aimed at the men and not the women! She wondered about the 2,000,000 "extra" women in England who have no husbands to minister to. She also referred to the many fine women she knew who faced the democratic working world all day and then came home to make a peaceful place for their husbands.

The main speech of Miss Biggs, however, told of the Congregational Christian women around the world. Thus she illustrated the three areas of women's Christian activity.

In the area of "Home and Family" she told of Friendship Clubs organized in English churches for the young mothers, and showed how whole families were reached through enlisting children in Sunday schools. She also told of church women in Jamaica providing wedding rings, receptions, etc., for mass weddings for people who had been living as man and wife for years (perhaps even having grandchildren), but who had not been legally married before because of lack of money for licenses, rings, and so on.

Miss Biggs told of a visit she made to Finland in connection with "Evangelism," the second area of women's work. There she found 40 "Bible women" studying in the seminary of the "Free Churches." She went with one of them on a trip so far back in the country that it required transportation by train, car, sleigh and skis. The woman evangelist had visited the area the summer before, when everyone was busy trying to make a harvest during the brief growing season. Then she had pitched in and helped with the work, making friends with the people. Now in the snowy season, when the women had "time on their hands," she was back to teach them, to organize women's groups, to bring them the message of the "free church" as opposed to the "state church."

Finally, Miss Biggs told of a German woman who chose to stay in a refugee camp, rather than bring her children to relative security in the United States, so that she might carry on the work her husband had given his life for. She originated the plan of refugees giving hours of service in return for relief parcels—and thus they changed from a bickering, sullen group, to one that gave service joyfully to help individuals in the camps and to improve camp facilities. This was to illustrate Christian women's work in their community.

Miss Biggs was a delightful interpreter of English Congregationalism to our group. We wish you all might meet her!

OUR YOUTH AND ALCOHOL.

(Continued from page 11.)

Youth are not faced with the temptation to experiment or to go along with the crowd by taking a drink. The majority have not only been faced with it, but they have already taken that first step.

Significantly, the youth represented in this survey were not a general cross-section of the young people of our communities. They were Christian youth, in the large part officers in our Methodist Youth Fellowships, and so interested in church affairs as to take every night out of a school week to attend the E. T. I.'s; so there is no reason to believe that these trends do not represent the youth in our churches throughout Alabama.—Robert E. Hughes in The Alabama Christian Advocate.

So difficult is the Navajo Indian language to learn and to understand that Navajo signal men were in great demand in the South Pacific during World War II, because their speech was a code that baffled Japanese linguistic experts.—Missions Council.

"The Quest of an Ideal"

Number 3 of a Series

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D.D.
Pastor of First Church, Richmond, Virginia

What a challenge life offers today to alert young men and women to equip themselves with a fund of knowledge and a personality of power that they may worthily function as members of the social group, making their lives count for most for God and for humanity! Society no longer has room for drones or for pessimists. All reservations are now booked for optimists—for the men and women of ideals who are imbued with a passion for progress, who are willing to get under every load and help in every good cause.

We are disgracefully unworthy of the benefits handed down to us by past generations unless we enlarge upon those benefits in making our contribution to future generations. Truly, humanity has had a glorious past, but under the providence of God, it is to have a more glorious future! Humanity oftentimes has had a weary and perilous road to travel in its upward trend toward the new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. Every reader of history, however, should be able to see that winding path of progress up which humanity, under God, has been climbing. Every person who believes in a living, loving, triumphant God, believes that humanity is destined to continue to move forward.

The supreme end in life is character or, in the final analysis, preparation for service. The world will not measure our lives by what we have, but by the use we make of our possessions. The world will not measure our lives by what we know, but by the use we make of our knowledge. And the use we will be able to make of our knowledge in the busy activity of life will be largely determined by the quality of character we possess. Hence the thing of supreme concern to every person is the development of a true and noble character. The acquirement of knowledge is not the "summum bonum" in life. Knowledge is a liability or an asset according as the individual chooses to make it. Strength of mind and intellectual capacity are but elements that go into the super-structure of character. Men and women with keen intellectual capacity have used their knowledge and their shrewdness in perpetrating the most nefarious designs against society. All the hideous sins of our modern life find the most fertile soil for their growth and propagation in the lives of men and women who have intellectual capacity, but who are wanting in moral appreciations and ideals. The more knowledge a criminal has, the worse criminal he may be. Knowledge without an ideal of love and service is society's greatest enemy. But knowledge with an ideal of love and service is society's greatest friend.

The world ever stands with open arms ready to welcome into its confidence young men and young women who are in the quest of a noble character. The quest of character is human desire at its best, for character is the measure of a person's worth to himself, to his fellow man and to God.

There are two motives that respectively make for and against character—service and selfishness. The one enables the individual to achieve greatness; the other drags him into disrepute. The one inspires him to right and noble conduct; the other lures him into ignoble and unrighteous action. Service whispers the call of duty into his ear and leads him into the broad fields of human need. Selfishness tells him a monstrous lie, draws him away from duty, makes him believe that the man who wins in life is he who looks out for self even to the exclusion of his brother's welfare.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY, 15, 1954

NUMBER 27

Ethics for Churchmen

By RICHARD K. MORTON

CODE of ethical procedures might well be set up by our conscientious church people, to insure fair treatment of all and the proper functioning of church life. The following are a few items that might be in the code.

Notify your pastor promptly and accurately when and where ministry is especially needed. Do not expect him to learn by telepathy or by the courtesy of some neighbor that, for instance, you are in the hospital.

If you leave town or change your address, notify the church office. Don't just disappear, leaving all others wondering what happened to you.

Criticize only with due regard to all factors. Constant sniping and disagreement and displeasure can be a very unsettling and destructive force in a church.

Do your share. Join the church to be worker, not a spectator. Don't just let announcements go in one ear and out the other, exposing yourself to the full program, but never giving a hint as to what really interests you and what does not.

Face the matter of stewardship squarely and honestly. Do not try to fool your church fellowship, much less your Lord, about your capacity to pay.

In the same way and for the same reasons, do not vote in church for a certain policy and then during the week support the opposite one.

If you accept a chairmanship or a place on a committee, don't consider it of such little importance that you just do nothing or never let anybody know your problems.

Have the character and insight to serve in a church in such a way that people are not embarrassed to approach you on any matter of opinion or policy. Avoid getting into such a place of prominence or control, that people hesitate to say anything against you, even when it is necessary.

If you have occasion to deal with any facts connected with your fellow church members or the business of the church, consider the matter of sufficient importance to get the facts, and all the facts. Do not be a rumor broker or a scandal monger, or one who thinks anything is good enough for the church.

If someone does something you don't like, don't try to solve the matter by leaving the church or going off in a huff. Others deserve a better treatment than that at your hands.

News Flashes

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar will assist the Rev. Goff Bedford in a series of revival services at Langdale, Alabama, during the latter part of July.

Nearly 6,000,000 children are enrolled in Vacation Bible Schools this summer, according to reports sent out from Chicago. The number of schools has increased from approximately 55,000 seven years ago, to an estimated 100,000 this year.

The Rev. J. L. Neese of Bradenton, Florida, former pastor of the Palm Street Christian Church of Greensboro, N. C. is conducting revival services at the New Lebanon Congregational Christian Church near Bethany School. Services are being held at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m.

New church construction this year is running 21 per cent ahead of 1953, which until this time held the record. $205,000,000 worth of new buildings were started in the first five months of 1954, according to reports from the U. S. Departments of Commerce and Labor.

We reprint in this issue from the Scottish Rite News Bulletin an article entitled "Christian Missions Now Challenged in India." We do not agree with all that it says, nor do we think you will, but it is so thought-provoking that we believe it is worth while reading. We hope you will do this.

The Bayside Community Church project is reported making good progress under the leadership of Rev. Ernest Brickhouse. Sunday school and a brief worship service are being conducted each Sunday morning at 9:30 in the Chesapeake Beach Community House. The attendance has reached 35 in just three Sundays. It is the hope that a congregation may be organized in this Norfolk area in the early fall.

Correction of Date of Meeting

A notice was run in the issue of July 1, stating that Dr. W. E. Wiseman of Greensboro, N. C. would address the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention at its meeting in Franklin, Virginia, on July 21. We have received no official notice of the meeting of the convention nor any program of the same, so we were unable to check the date or give further publicity to the meeting. However, Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun has written us to the effect that she understands "that the program says" the proper date is July 20. We hope that those who expect to attend will check this and be sure to be in Franklin on the proper day.

Vacation Bible School at Rosemont

The Rosemont Christian Church started its annual Bible School on June 21, and ended with a Church Picnic on June 30, 1954. The Theme of the school was "The Bible." Classes were held for the Beginner, Primary and Junior children from 9:00 to 11:00 each morning. Some of the Intermediates helped in the different departments. There was an enrollment of 151 with an average attendance of 125 pupils. Miss Ruth Dunn, Director of Religious Education, was the superintendent of the Vacation Bible School with Glenn Garrett as recreational director. An offering of $17.00 was received to send Bibles to blind children through the American Bible Society. The Women's Missionary Society served refreshments each day.

The faculty of the school included: Beginners Department—Mrs. Geo. Simpson, supt.; Mrs. C. L. Cantrell, Miss Betty Ruth Carden, Miss Diane Pezzella and Miss Judy Wohlfret.

Primary Department—Mrs. John Swink, supt.; Mrs. W. M. Sparkman, Jr., Mrs. D. L. Liverman, Mrs. P. R. Johnson, Miss Wilma Davis, Mrs. T. D. Comfort, Jr., Mrs. J. J. Hathaway, Miss Barbara Lee, Mrs. H. M. Cannon, and Miss Betty Jane Hassell.

Junior Department—Mrs. L. L. Milteer, supt.; Mrs. W. R. Skelly, Jr., Mrs. Marvin Edwards, Miss Joyce Beard, Miss Barbara Kent, Mrs. H. R. Morrison, Jr., Miss Jackie Small, and Mrs. W. E. Hewitt.

Others helpers were Richard Milteer, as assistant superintendent of the school; Miss Ella V. Dunn, and the writer.

ELLEN HEWITT,
Secretary.

Attendance at General Council

The following persons were among those present from the Southern Convention at the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches held recently in New Haven, Connecticut:

Miss Susie D. Allen.
Rev. George D. Alley.
Rev. & Mrs. Mark W. Andes.
Rev. & Mrs. Wm. J. Andes.
Mr. & Mrs. Hubert L. Beane.
Rev. Ellis N. Clark.
Dr. & Mrs. Jesse H. Dollar.
Rev. & Mrs. Melvin Dollar.
Rev. & Mrs. W. A. Grissom.
Dr. H. S. Hardecastle.
Dr. & Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell.
Dr. R. C. Helfenstein.
Rev. R. L. Jackson.
Dr. & Mrs. F. C. Lester.
Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Jr.
Mrs. Mason.
Miss Virginia Mason.
Mrs. J. Mark McAdams.
Mr. & Mrs. I. L. McDowell.
Mrs. Carl Monroe.
Rev. J. Everette Neese.
Mrs. H. F. Nelson.
Dr. Will B. O'Neill.
Rev. Olin B. Pendleton.
Rev. M. A. Pollard.
Rev. O. D. Poythress.
Mr. & Mrs. C. A. Pugh.
Dr. & Mrs. Henry E. Robinson.
Dr. & Mrs. Wm. T. Scott.
Dr. L. E. Smith.
Dr. & Mrs. W. Millard Stevens.
Dr. & Mrs. John G. Truitt.
Prof. L. L. Vaughan.
Rev. & Mrs. Max Vestal.
Rev. & Mrs. Carl Wallace.
Mrs. W. B. Williams.
Dr. & Mrs. W. E. Wiseman.

Also in attendance at the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship in session at Yale Divinity School June 23-30 were the following young people from the convention:

Iris Allen.
Silvia Coggins.
Rebecca Mann.
Lois Robinson.
Lois Scott.
Mary Ruth Whitten.
Billy Joe Willette.
Curtis Young.

It was a wonderful representation from our convention to these national meetings. We were happy also to greet the following persons from the convention but now serving in other areas: Rev. & Mrs. Robert Kimball, Rev. Emanuel Hedgebeth, Rev. C. C. Thomas, Dr. James H. Lightbourne, Dr. Simon Bennett, Dr. Archie H. Hook, Miss Priscilla Chase, Miss Luey Eldredge, Rev. Fred Eutsler, Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Jr., Rev. Arthur Swartz, Rev. Carl Dollar, and others.

W. T. Scott.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

First National Convention Announced

The first nation-wide meeting of the Laymen's Fellowship will be held in the Palmer House in Chicago, Illinois, February 25-27, 1955. The purposes of the convention are these:

1. Enable the participants to feel the power of large gathering of Congregational Christian churchmen, receive inspiration through addresses, fellowship and discussion.
2. Challenge men to look at vocations with careful Christian analysis to see if Christianity is being applied effectively, to understand through participation the Christian ethics involved in specific vocations.
3. Raise informational levels above local or state viewpoint and on high spiritual plain in a modern city, demonstrate church is at work and witness that Christianity is full and complete answer.
4. Send men home with great appreciation for Congregational Christian heritage, on fire to improve local church, home, business and community Christian contacts and to keep well informed as to our changing world.

In addition to all of the general sessions, there will be Vocational Seminars which will attempt to answer the question, "What Does It Mean to be a Christian in Your Vocation?" Experienced leaders will preside over vocational groups which will include the following:

1. Accountants and bookkeepers.
2. Administrators.
3. Advertising.
4. Architects.
5. Bankers.
6. Doctors and dentists.
7. Engineers.
8. Farmers.
9. Governmentworkers (National-State-City)
10. Graphic Arts.
11. Hotel, motel and inn keepers.
12. Insurance (all kinds)
13. Labor leaders, building tradesmen.
14. Lawyers.

15. Manufacturers.
16. Merchants.
16. Ministers.
18. Miscellaneous.
19. Politicians (National, State and Local.)
20. Retired.
21. Salesmen (wholesale and retail).
22. Teachers and professors.

The Southern Convention should be well represented. Make your plans to be there. J. E. D.

Wise Counselling!

In the June 10 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN there appeared an article of exeptional merit from the pen of Prof. W. W. Sloan, under the caption of "If I Were Superintendent."

Many of our churches would definitely profit if their church school boards would make this prophetic pronouncement the basis of an evening's study and discussion in anticipation of Rally Day Observance.

Not only should every pastor and every church school superintendent read this challenging and thought-provoking message, but also every adult member of our church schools should read and reread it.

ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

God needs each of us to make his church vital and his kingdom strong. We need God to make our lives meaningful and worth while. Attend church every Sunday.—W. Millard Stevens.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Mission Enterprise

The mission enterprise is the heart of the Christian Gospel. It is the concrete expression of the redemptive love of God. It is the task assigned to his Church by Jesus Christ. It is the evangelistic passion expressing itself beyond the borders of the local church. It is the measure of the spiritual life and vitality of the local church.

The missionary motive is to be found in the teachings and the example set by Christ. The best mission literature ever written is to be found within the pages of the New Testament. The Acts of the Apostles is the story of the Holy Spirit quickening the hearts of the followers of Christ, and leading them into the task which the Master had appointed unto them.

It is always to be remembered that Christ became the Saviour of the world by the giving of himself. The very nature of Christ is expressed in the unfaltering willingness to give of his spirit to those who penitently open their hearts to receive him. It is this self-giving which is the predominant characteristic of the Christ spirit.

The only way whereby the spirit of Christ can be manifested in the life of the believer is by the sharing with others that which he has received from Christ. In the third chapter of The Acts, it is told how Peter and John healed the lame man who was lying at the gate of the temple. When the crowds gathered, Peter boldly preached to the people, saying, Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

Christ can truly live within the individual or within a church, only as he is shared. To attempt to have the Christ as one's own personal possession and to enjoy him only within the confines of one's own soul, is to lose him. When a church ceases seeking to share Christ with others, its members soon become strangers to the presence of the living Christ.

The mission enterprise is not the creation of man's mind. It is not the work of man's hands. It is Christ ordained. It is Christ inspired. It is Christ empowered. In it God's grace is being carried into the hearts and lives of perishing men and women. There Christ is to be found, and those who are his own may share with him his Passion.

The Building Loan Fund Campaign

The report of the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign was the culmination of a noteworthy undertaking of the Congregational Christian Churches. The 1952 General Council was faced with the challenge of hundreds of new communities which had sprung up almost over night and which were without churches. After lengthy consideration of the needs, the General Council authorized a campaign to raise a minimum of $4,500,000 to augment the Church Building Society's Loan Fund.

Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher was chosen as the national director of the campaign, with a number of the ablest leaders in the denomination working with him on the national committee. Campaign committees were set up in every State Conference, with similar committees working on the associational level, to carry the campaign to the local churches.

The amount which had been raised when the report to the General Council was prepared totaled $4,825,807. The number of churches which had pledged contributions to the fund was approximately 3,400. It was also reported that loans had already been voted to 110 churches. A part of these loans will come from the amount which was pledged.

In making his report, Dr. Stauffacher said, "It is my belief that when the last check is in, we will have gone beyond five million, in this biennium emphasis of ours." In evaluating the results, he said, "We have established a reservoir and a fountain of church building power that will stand for all time as a memorial of our concern for the vitality of the church and the spiritual welfare of the nation."

For the part which he had taken in the campaign, Dr. Stauffacher was awarded this citation: "For guiding to a successful completion the Congregational Christian Church Building Loan Fund Campaign for resources to be used for the multiplying of Christian sanctuaries in places of need throughout the land."

The Sunday evening program of the Council was a fitting celebration of an achievement which will bear abundant fruits in the years to come.

"What Did Jesus Say About Death?"

A Sermon

By REV. AARON N. MECKEL, D. D.
St. Petersburg, Florida.

"I am the resurrection, and the life. He that believeth in me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—
John 11: 25, 26.

A pastor recently went to call on a man in the hospital. When the nurse announced that a minister was waiting to see him, this man replied, "I'm not going to die! Why should a minister come to see me?"

There's the secular mind for you—fickle, morbid, suspicious at the very mention of anything beyond the range of the five senses. It is said of William Randolph Hurst, that he would not even allow the mention of death in his hearing, so fearful was he. Perhaps you have heard the popular cliché, that the reason so many people attend worship in the churches of St. Petersburg, Florida, is that many of them are "cramming for their finals!" How fickle and feverish, the secular, worldly mind! It only thinks on the surface level. It fails to plumb the deeper ranges of thought.

In contrast, see what Masfield calls "the glory of the lighted mind." Those who have visited the catacombs of Rome speak of the light and joy and expectation inscribed upon the walls. The first Christians were constantly face to face with death and danger. But they met it head-on with "the Light of life" in their hearts. In fact, it was said of them that when one of their number died, they would accompany the body with songs and shouts of joy, as though he were traveling from one place to another place near by.

Personally, I believe that there is a positive danger in the extreme "this worldliness" of our day. We push the thought of death down into our subconscious minds where it keeps bobbing up to annoy and frighten us. "I just never will become reconciled to the thought of death," said an acquaintance of mine. Well, is not that the trouble with us? We have never come to terms with the fact of our mortality. The first Christians faced it squarely. But see with what: "For this mortal must put on immortality. Then shall he brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory!" I Cor. 15.)

Today, we ask the question, What did Jesus say about death? We went to see how, in him,

*"Life is ever lord of death,
And love can never lose its own."*

Having arrived at the Bethany home, where Lazarus had passed away, Jesus is met by Martha with the words, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother would not have died." Then the Lord of Life speaks words which have consoled so many hearts down the centuries: "Martha, thy brother shall rise again. I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

As our good friend Rufus Moseley has said, "Jesus never conducted funerals, he conducted resurrections." Suppose we make a few inferences from this mighty promise of Jesus. For this mighty declaration of Life opens up into broad and challenging vistas.

For one thing, our Lord seems to infer that our destiny is, at least to some extent, in our own hands. We have something to do with the fashioning of our own destiny: He seems to be saying that, "Immortality is not just a gift, immortality is an achievement, and only they who strive mightily shall possess it."

Man, created in the image and likeness of his Maker, is a free moral agent. He is a sentient being, endowed with the capacity to think, choose, decide and discriminate. Every day of our lives, in fact, every moment of each day, we are casting a vote in the direction of either life or death. "What shall a man be profited," Jesus is saying, "if he gain the whole world and lose his soul? What shall he give in exchange for his soul?" See! we can invest in either life or death. St Paul takes up the thought when he says, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Man is a sower.

In the parable of the Rich Fool, Jesus brings this responsibility of man for his soul's destiny into stark clarity. Here was a man who glutted his barns with grain and starved his soul. He just wanted to sit back, take it easy and clip coupons! "My soul, take thine ease!" he is saying. Then comes the midnight hour with its demand for an accounting. And this poor chap stands there, spiritually bankrupt and poverty-stricken. He hasn't a thing to take with him into the Unseen. God speaks: "Thou fool, this night thy soul is required of thee. What now is all your material wealth worth?" And Jesus adds, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." (Luke 12:21.)

Henry J. Cowell tells how he had a long talk with Sir Oliver Lodge at the latter's home in Birmingham, in October 1915, during the First World War. He also heard him give an address in a church at the heart of London. Here, in substance, is what Sir Oliver had to say: "Death is a serious adventure, but it is not the end of anything. The spirit discards the body, and goes on without it. Personality, character, memory, affections, persist." And then this additional word which bears on what we have said thus far: "We go on as we are when we leave the body. You carry with you your real self; nothing more, nothing less."

Is that, do you think, quite in line with what Jesus said about laying up treasure in heaven? Every day of our lives we cast a vote for either life or death?

"I have a life I can't escape, A life that's mine to mold and make." Is it not so, my friend?

Again, to really know the Love that is characterized by self-giving, and to seek to build it into the larger structure of life all about us, that is to realize Eternal Life within ourselves. The nearest thing to heaven, we have here on earth, is a soul that spills over, joyously and radiantly, with the Love of God. The Christian by his very nature is already an immortal, here and now. He not only believes in immortality, he practices it! He is a practitioner of the highest art given to men, that of loving his fellows in the pure Love of God.

Hear how the New Testament, that
(Continued on page 13.)

Christian Missions Now Challenged in India

Those who have followed the news dispatches from India in recent weeks will have noticed that there is a widening rift between missionaries from the United States and the Government of India. This recently became an issue in the Lower House of Parliament (officially the House of the People). Deputy Home Minister Balwant Nagesh Datar was quoted in Time Magazine (April 26, 1954) as saying, that the right to propagate religion, as well as other rights guaranteed by the Indian Constitution, applies only to Indian nationals; foreigners are subject to any obligations the government might see fit to impose on them.

Home Minister Kailas Nath Katju made an appeal to the spirit of Gandhi, who had indicated that he did not desire the conversion of India to Christianity although he was on various occasions acclaimed a Christian. Quoting Gandhi, "If, instead of confirming themselves to humanitarian work such as education, medical service to the poor and the like, Christian missionaries would use these activities of theirs for the purpose of proselyting I would like them to withdraw. Every nation considers its own faith to be as good as that of any other. Certainly the great faiths held by the people of India are adequate for her people. India stands in no need of conversion from one faith to another."

President Rajendra Prasad said in an address to the hill tribes of Assam: "We want every man to feel he can reach the peak by any route he chooses. Christians are as dear to India as Hindus or Muslims or those of any other religion. There is no objection to any Christian preaching his religion, less (objection) to social service he may wish to render the people . . . Missionaries have done splendid work in our country, but they should render service out of love for the people, and not out of love for conversions."

The Protestant National Christian Council of India, in discussing this point said: "The hostility being displayed these days cannot be spontaneous. There seems to be an organized attempt to disrupt the good relations which have existed so far between Christians and their (Hindu) countrymen."

The Christian Century of Chicago in its issue of April 21, 1954, commented editorially regarding the denial of propagandizing rights to Christian missionaries by saying: "This is not only a denial of the fundamental human right of freedom of speech and conscience, but it also wrongly imposes the Hindu conception of the nature of man on all who may venture to come into the country. This conception is that man is bound to his family and society in an endless and inescapable sequence of reincarnations. Conversions break this sequence, so are against the nature of the universe. . . . It is to be hoped that the Indian government will realize before it is too late that it is playing into the hands of a totalitarian theocracy. . . ."

P. Oommen Philip, writing on "India: The Christian Outlook," in the Christian Century of November 18, 1953, quoted at length from a lecture delivered at Oxford by Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, a distinguished scholar and leader in India, who said: "To obliterate every other religion than one's own is a sort of bolshevism in religion which we must try to prevent. We can do so only if we accept something like the Hindu solution, which seeks the unity of religion not in a common creed but in a common quest."

The policy of most Protestant denominations relative to foreign missions is a growth of many years. It appears to have been established in accordance with the command of Jesus as translated and recorded in verses 18 to 20 of the 28th Chapter of Matthew and verses 13 to 15 of the 10th Chapter of Paul's letter to the Church at Rome. In 1819, Bishop Reginald Heber wrote the famous old hymn entitled "From Greenland's Icy Mountain," in which we are reminded that "they call us to deliver their land from error's chain" and that "the heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone." In still another stanza we are urged to proclaim salvation "till each remotest nation has learned Messiah's Name."

Later, at the turn of the century, (Continued on page 15.)

The Religion in American Life Story

This November will mark the sixth campaign in which American business and the advertising industry will support the Religion in American Life program. This program stands alone as the first effort in the history of religion to use all the facilities of national mass advertising in support of religious institutions. Through this program the total machinery of advertising is put to work for the churches and synagogues of the three major faiths in America.

"He restoreth your soul . . . Worship together this week" will serve as the central theme for the 1954 campaign running throughout November. This message will be repeated many times across the country by television, radio, newspapers, billboards and magazines. Millions of people who resist all religious appeals will be reached by the powerful persuasion of the most modern advertising techniques. The value of the campaign, if purchased by a commercial firm, is estimated to be worth more than $5,000,000.

The scope and penetration of the nation-wide advertising can be seen in a sampling of statistics from the 1953 campaign: Television announcements on a total of 162 network programs. Radio announcements on 249 network programs, 5,104 billboards, 9,111 platform posters, 66,817 bus and subway cards, and 11,085 advertisements in 1,205 newspapers. As an example of what the newspaper advertising represents, it is estimated that the RIAL ads in 1953 would amount to 2,200 full-page ads in an average city newspaper.

The success of the program is seen in the reports of local results sent in by hundreds of communities across the country. Detailed reports to the national office contain impressive evidence of benefits, both direct and general. Reports of increased church attendance over the months that followed last year's campaign vary from 4 to 30 per cent. Says Rev. Edward Mayer, Evangelical and Reformed Church minister of Corpus Christi, Texas: "It makes a community impact rather than denominational. . . . Gets the churches to working together on a program in

(Continued on page 14.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Time Has Come To Go Forward

There comes a time in the affairs of causes and institutions when forward steps must be taken for the permanency and progress of such causes or institutions. Where a number of individuals are concerned, there are always differences of opinions. In such instances in a democratic church, the majority opinion should prevail.

When Elon College was struggling to free itself from its retarding debt, the last step taken was in the form of a Convention-wide campaign which we called the "All or Nothing Campaign." This campaign was launched on September 17, 1941. It was to close at twelve o'clock midnight on July 31, 1942. During this allotted time, the entire amount of $105,000, the balance owing the Virginia Trust Company of Richmond, Va., was to be secured in cash and pledges. The entire debt was to be paid during January, 1943. It was the distinct understanding that if these conditions were not met that all cash and pledges were to be returned to the contributors.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees in May, 1942, the President's Report showed that only $60,000 had been raised in cash and pledges. This was a dismal picture, with only two months to go.

A loyal member of the Board of Trustees, after expressing his opinion that the campaign had failed, offered a motion that the campaign be closed and considered a failure, that we urge all who had given their money to let it remain with the college, and all who made pledges to pay them; and that we urge the Virginia Trust Company to accept the College's note for the balance and return the endowment securities to the vaults of the college.

Before the motion was seconded, the writer stated that the organization had been formed, that all of the churches knew about the campaign, and what the results would be if the total was not raised, that there was considerable interest being manifested in the campaign, that the seed had been sown, and pled with the Board not to judge the campaign a failure until the time of harvest had passed. The campaign continued.

Three days before the campaign closed, we lacked $10,000. Letters were mailed, telegrams were sent, and the writer drove day and night. The last report was received at 11:45 p. m. The campaign closed at 12:00. The total amount raised in cash and pledges was $117,000. The greater part of this amount was in pledges. These pledges were due and payable in January, 1943. On the 23rd day of January, 1943, the last $10,000 owing the Virginia Trust Company

Fifth Sunday

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS ARE PRIVILEGED TO MAKE
AN OFFERING FOR OUR COLLEGE

* * *

Elon College

* * *

Let every Sunday school in the Southern Convention take advantage of this opportunity!

was paid, leaving a balance of cash in the bank of $7,000 due the college.

We will recall that in 1946 a campaign to raise $1,000,000 for the College over a period of ten years was launched. Two years later, the amount was increased to $2,000,000. Two years later, $500,000 was added to the amount, making $2,500,000 for the college to be raised by 1956. In 1951, we had gone beyond the halfway mark. In 1952 an organization was formed and a campaign launched to complete the $2,500,000 campaign for the college. We were proceeding very well, not as rapidly as we had hoped, but the ground had been broken, the seed sown, an organization formed, and the campaign was in progress. At the request of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Church, the Executive Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches requested the college to halt its campaign, to get out of the field completely for the remainder of the year, with the assurance that the Building Fund Campaign would be over by January 1, 1954. There is no criticism of this act on the part of the General Council or the Southern Convention. The time had come for the building of new churches in our area. The Convention did not have the money to encourage these different communities in the erection of new church buildings.

However, the halting of the college campaign, as you will agree, dealt a very serious blow to the college. Now the time is come again when this campaign should be renewed with all diligence and determination. Every member of the church, every official of the organization should realize the necessity of the college and its need of immediate funds for the construction of dormitories and a dining room on our campus, sorely needed for years.

To succeed in this undertaking will require the cooperation of all. It is a big undertaking, but not too big. We are able to do this and meet all obligations assumed. To succeed, we must believe in the rightness of the cause and in the ability of us all together.

Unfortunately, two high officials of our church have advised that the college declare a two year moratorium so far as the solicitation of funds is concerned. This, in my judgment, would be another serious blow from which the college could scarcely recover. We cannot stand still. We either go backward or forward. We are able to go forward, and go forward we shall.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Cooperation is the key to success in any undertaking where two or more people are involved. The larger the number of individuals, the greater the need for cooperation. Henry Ward Beecher left a church meeting in which there were differences of opinion. As he came out on the streets of Brooklyn and walked along with two of his church officials, the snow was falling and the streets were covered with snow. He reached down and picked up a hand full of snow and threw it. It went everywhere. He reached down, picked up a second hand full of snow, pressed it together tightly and tossed it across the street and said to his parishioners, "The latter is an illustration of the effectiveness of cooperation."

(Continued on page 11.)

The Sloans in New Zealand

Our job in New Zealand is to be good-will ambassadors, but it is a sobering thing to be considered experts. I am not sure whether an expert is an ordinary man away from home, or, as President Smith claims, the "x" stands for an unknown quantity, and the "spert" is a drip under pressure. We are being honored on every hand, also called V. I. P.s. It is difficult not to have our heads turned and to take to ourselves the statement of Jesus that a prophet is not without honor save in his own community.

However, one thing keeps my head from swelling too much. That is that I am a mere man. Possibly it is partly because the Queen made such a "hit" here recently that more fuss is made about Mrs. Sloan than about me. Boquets and souvenirs are presented to her. Speeches of welcome are made to her "and Dr. Sloan"; our pictures appeared in the nation's leading newspaper under the heading, "Women's World"; and we spoke on a national radio program on what I later discovered was the "Woman's Hour."

But many things are in reverse here south of the equator. Not only does water whirl out of a drain in the opposite direction of that north of the equator, but these are the shortest days of the year. Winter is getting well under way, and there are heavy frosts. We can see snow on the hills. Easter is in the fall, which does away with the symbolism of new life—also new spring wardrobes. The noon-day sun is in the north. The English custom of driving on the left also makes this a land of reverse. Our biggest trouble at this point has been in going through a revolving door, which does not act in the way to which we are accustomed.

On the other hand, we have not found as many British expressions as we expected. American forces here during the war and American movies have Americanized the language here. When we expected to hear people speak of "wireless" we have found the American term "radio." Instead of the English "groundnuts" we have found the American "peanuts." However, we must still speak in terms of tram-cars, petrol and cinemas.

New Zealand is considered to be more English than England herself.

I believe it is true with the institution of tea. Tea is brought to us before we get up in the morning; there is mid-morning tea, as well as afternoon—and these always include small sandwiches or cakes. Again, there must be tea before going to bed. Supper is also called tea.

New Zealand is referred to by the English as the land of milk and money. Wool, dairy products and meat are the chief exports. This little nation, with less than half as many people as North Carolina, is one of the most prosperous. There are many more jobs than people to take them. The average wage is considerably lower than in the United States, but so are prices of essentials. Pasteurized milk is ten cents a quart; a two-pound loaf of bread costs eleven cents. Many products are subsidized by the government. A pound of butter sells for twenty-eight cents, but the government pays the merchant an additional fourteen cents.

The many social security provisions are not working as well as people had hoped. Hospitalization is free, if one can wait his turn in a government hospital. One may receive a payment of $1.05 for each time he visits his physician, but the physician's fee may be much more. There are government grants for old age, sickness, unemployment, large families and other conditions, but all this makes taxes extremely high. It is fortunate that New Zealand has very little government debt.

We have been having a good time meeting New Zealand church people, preaching, holding church clinics, and having teas and conferences with church leaders. Last Sunday night, Mrs. Sloan preached in the Terrace Congregational Church in the capital, across the street from Parliament Building. It is the oldest Congregational church in New Zealand. At the same time, I preached in one of the nation's leading churches, the St. John's Presbyterian. I am told I had the largest Sunday evening audience the church has had for several years. The church was full.

An effort has been made to have us meet at least the leaders of every Congregational church in New Zealand. In four or five chief cities church clinics have been held at which we each made addresses on church work, and then over the inevitable cup of tea, answered questions for an hour about church work in the United States.

New Zealand is ahead of the United States in the matter of church union. There is but one Presbyterian denomination and one Methodist. At present, plans are being worked out for a union of Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian groups. Such a union will be the largest church in New Zealand. At present 30 per cent of church members are Church of England people, similar to our Episcopalians, 25 per cent are Presbyterians, 15 per cent Catholics, 8 per cent Methodists, and a smaller number of Congregationalists and Baptists.

However, in some ways New Zealand church people are much behind those of the United States. There are many small churches; very few large ones. Church programs are inadequate. A question put to me several times is, Why is it that in the United States 59 per cent of the people are church connected, in England only 15 per cent, and in New Zealand probably fewer? I have been hunting for the answers, and I think I have found two:

The first answer I found to this question is the emphasis in the church program. When ministers listed the teachings, they felt most important the items that dealt with a religion about Jesus, not the religion of Jesus. The teachings of Jesus are being put in a secondary place. Young people of the Student Christian Movement at the university told us that their study last year was "The Meaning of Sacrifice in the Old Testament," and this year, "The Philosophy of the Eucharist." Possibly this is why New Zealand is producing very few ministers, is having to import them from England and Scotland. I am asked to try to get some from the United States.

The second weakness in the New Zealand churches is an attempt to maintain a nineteenth century program. Daily vacation church schools are unknown. Sunday schools are for children only. There are no junior churches. Youth Fellowships have not yet replaced the older Christian Endeavor Societies and similar organizations. There are no men's brotherhoods. No one seems to have ever heard of a church dinner. Attendance at Sunday morning services is increasing, but evening services are poorly attended, and mid-week services have about disappeared. Yet

(Continued on page 13.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

An Open Board Meeting

At the meeting of the National Women's Fellowship in connection with the General Council, one phase of the program had to do with plans for the women's societies. This was presented in "skit" form, showing a meeting of the executive committee in New York with our women's staff there.

The clever presentation, with extra "skits" on the side by other groups to illustrate the point under discussion, was planned by Marguerite Davison, whom many of our people knew when she was a worker with our denomination in Alabama.

The four points of emphasis developed at this imaginary meeting are the four things each women's group is asked to work on during 1954 and 1955. They are:

1. To deepen our spiritual lives as individuals and as families.
2. To further "Our Christian World Mission" by helping to establish and strengthen the committee on Stewardship and Missionary Education in every local church.
3. To encourage the commitment of our young people to full-time Christian service.
4. To promote the use of visual aids, particularly the current denominational and interdenominational films.

We shall seek to make further suggestions concerning these ideas in the weeks that lie ahead.

* * * * *

We Salute Two Women of the Southern Convention

Two Southern Convention women "shone" at the General Council. The dozen or so other women from our area there were so proud of them.

First of all, Graham Wiseman, in her capacity as a member of the Board of Directors of the Home Boards of our denomination, was on the platform during the presentation of that phase of our work. Then when the time came for elections, she was chosen as one of the three vice-presidents (and the only woman!) of the Home Boards. Wouldn't her parents have been proud of her!

And then, on Sunday afternoon, Tudor Williams, as vice-president of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women, presided over the women's meeting. She did the job with dignity and grace, introducing in a thoughtful and delightful manner Mrs. Bayard Buckham, our national president, and Mrs. Robert G. Williams, first president of the International Congregational Women's Fellowship.

Yes, indeed, we are proud of Tudor and Graham, as they represent us in these two important phases of our denominational work.

MRS. GRAHAM ROWLAND WISEMAN

* * * * *

Pleasant Grove Society Reports

The Pleasant Grove Ladies' Missionary Society met on Saturday evening, May 8, at 6:30 o'clock, at the Pleasant Grove Congregational Christian Church, Route 1, Bennett, North Carolina, for their annual "family night." A picnic supper was enjoyed on the church lawn by the ladies and their families.

The "high light" of the evening was an auction sale of a quilt that had been made by Mrs. H. H. Bray and Miss Nova Bray for the society. There was a total of 282 names embroidered on the quilt, and the sale of it was $100.00, making a total of $241.00 received.

Following the picnic supper and sale, the laymen of the church presented for our entertainment the play, "Simon, the Leper," under the direction of our pastor, Rev. Bill Simmons. This play was well given by our own local talent of which we are very proud.

REPORTER.

* * * * *

Ramsour Society Meets

Mrs. Tommy Cain and Mrs. Russell Stont were hostesses to the Woman's Missionary Society of the Ramsour Christian Church at the home of the former on June 11. Fifteen members were present and enjoyed a program on "Our Fellowship Purpose—Motivating Our Task."

Also Mrs. Elvin Cox gave a study of the 147th Psalm. For the past year, we have enjoyed our study in Psalms which Mrs. Cox has been giving.

DOROTHY CRAVEN,

Reporter.

* * * * *

Report of Treasurer of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference

Quarter Ending June 15, 1954.

Balance brought forward $ 171.58

RECEIPTS.

Women's Societies.

Antioch	$ 10.00
Berea	25.00
Bethlehem	32.00
Cypress Chapel	25.00
Cypress Chapel (Anges Brittle)	15.00
Dendron	15.00
Eure	14.00
Franklin	75.00
Great Bridge	20.00
Holland	40.00
Holy Neck	37.50
Hopewell	6.00
Isle of Wight	10.00
Liberty Spring	55.00
Mt. Carmel	25.00
Mt. Zion	7.50
Newport News	35.00
Norfolk:

Bay View	Paid up
First	7.00
Little Creek	8.75
Rosemont	50.00
Second	20.00
Oak Grove	9.60
Oakland	22.50
Portsmouth:
Elm Avenue	15.00
First	25.00
Shelton Memorial	15.00
S. Mem. Y. W.	10.00
Richmond	30.00
Spring Hill	3.00
Suffolk	435.00
Sunbury	25.00
Union Southampton	26.25
Wakefield	12.80
Waverly	15.00

1,176.90

Young People.

Berea	$ 12.50
Bethlehem	10.00

(Continued on page 15.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

There are many old churches clustered around Suffolk. There are equally as many old churches clustered around Elon. One Saturday afternoon we drove through the small village of Ossipee, across an antique steel bridge to the village of Altamahaw. We stopped at Berea Church which is more than 50 years old. The church is attractive, the grounds well kept and lovely organ music was coming through the door which was slightly ajar. We walked in the church yard and looked at some old tombstones and listened to the lovely music.

A few days before we had passed our church in Haw River. This church is a frame building and it has a stained glass window to the famed "White Pilgrim," the young minister who traveled North Carolina, not on power steering, but dressed in white, riding a steed. There is much history at Haw River.

Sunday morning found us worshipping at old Providence Memorial Church in Graham. This church has a history so old that it goes back to the Revolutionary War! The first church was built in 1763. Close by the present church was the school house, court and meeting place—all three in one building. The building in which services are now held is old. It is a lovely place. Sandy monk's cloths draperies don't quite cover the two-story clear glass windows, and the fanning breeze pushes them aside enough for us to catch glimpses of blue sky and deep pink crepe myrtle—reminders of God's beauty. The floor boards are wide, the pulpit is arched and centered with a keystone. Nowadays a deep red dossal cloth hangs behind the pulpit and a gilt cross is suspended on it. The choir sang well, and the old reed organ has the best quality tone we have heard in a long time.

Dr. Ferris Reynolds who teaches at Elon is the minister. Dr. Reynolds studied in Scotland and he is a Congregationalist. What a fine feeling of fellowship to find so perfect a blending of our faith in this old, historic church. He preached a very fine sermon and he is blessed among ministers for he has a passion for brevity which is a rare quality among the brethren!

After service we were greeted by people in the manner that Southern church people greet one another. Mrs. Stuekey (David's mother. David was a counsellor at Crabtree Creek) chatted with us and others. Several said: "We read the Children's Page every week." We keep reminding ourselves that big, middle and little sized people read this page.

As we sat in the pew and viewed the lovely interior, as we lifted our hearts in prayer, and as we listened to the sermon we thought again of the sameness of God's word in every place, in every land. We came back spiritually refreshed and feeling that it was good to have been there.

* * * * *

Teach Them Independence

By IDA M. HALIBURTON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

She was not a bit shy. While others seated themselves, she stood confidently beside the high stool I had pressed into service for her seat at the table. She was hungry, I knew, for she had come a long distance, and the train had been nearly two hours late. When she was lifted to her seat she did not begin to eat but looked expectantly at her mother.

"She doesn't feed herself yet?" I asked. I couldn't help a glance at my own two-year-old, who was making good headway with his soup—not a drop being misplaced.

"No, I've never let her attempt it," the mother replied complacently. "She would spill it, I'm sure, and that would cause more fuss and bother than feeding her. Besides, I like to feed her."

"Let's let her try," I suggested.

The mother looked doubtfully on as I tucked a large napkin under the wee one's chin, freed her arms, placed the spoon in her hand and guided it through the process of conveying the good thick soup to the hungry little mouth. She spilled some, but I made a joke of the mishap. "Oops! that nearly got away from us. Watch the next spoonful." Thus, encouraging and praising, the soup was finished. Meat and vegetables came next.

These, cut into small manageable pieces, were easy to dispose of, the child having first been shown how to raise her elbow so that the spoon would be properly tilted. A satisfactory replacement of fugitive pieces on the spoon always being accomplished, the difficulties had not been too many, and she was now ready for the next course. She was tired and sleepy by dessert time. After the first few mouthfuls, she murmured, "Nuff! Go bed." So, gladly, her mother bore her off for the afternoon nap.

Underprivileged children! The expression has come to mean children who are deprived of sufficient food and clothing, good homes, and healthful environments. Many persons do not realize that some children who have all of these blessings are nevertheless underprivileged, because they are denied the privilege of self-help, because Mother enjoys the feeling of being of paramount importance in her child's life.

I dare not sit in judgment, as I well remember the exulting feeling I had when my first child was placed in my waiting young arms. "Here is someone," I thought, "on whom I may lavish all of my heart's affection, someone for whom I may sacrifice, work, and plan without any repercussions." I soon learned the truth of a favorite saying of an old lumberman friend of mine. "There ain't no such animal." Maybe for a few short weeks a mother may serve unstintedly, but beyond that, such devotion, though intentionally unselfish, weakens the moral fibre of the one whom the mother would bless with her unfaltering devotion.

A small child loves attention—and don't we all? While he should always be sure of his mother's love, the child must not be allowed to become an attention-getter. If he is frustrated and his gentler wiles fail, he may burst into storm. The wise parent is not visibly affected, but looks at him calmly, speaks to him pleasantly, and lets the child know that his tempest is not causing any excitement, gaining him any special notice, nor changing the treatment he is receiving.

There are a number of things a very small child can do to earn for himself a measure of independence—service to a smaller child, such as picking up his dropped toys, standing guard by his carriage while Mother slips into the store for a brief mo-

(Continued on page 11.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Tips From Tom

Several articles have been written for this page about experiences in camps and conferences this year. In this issue is printed another. This one is written by Miss Maxine Godwin, a member of Amelia Congregational Christian Church, Route 1, Clayton, N. C. Other youth who wish to share experiences of camps with us are urged to write.

* * *

It has been learned that Bonneva Farlow, a member of our Sophia Church and a student of Woman's College in Greensboro, is to go abroad for mission work. Bonneva is an active worker in our youth groups, and we congratulate her on her high ambitions and ideals in this mission work abroad in Christ's name.

* * * * *

"Cupids Column"

Cupid has received international information about the ringing of wedding bells. It has been revealed that a friend of all of us is making plans for marriage.

Hosea Dabuet of the Philippines, a dear friend and loved one of the youth of our church, sends news that he is to be married soon.

Hosea was with us in school and worked among our youth groups in our churches and camps. Everyone learned to love him dearly. All were concerned about him and his work.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill received an invitation to his wedding. It was different from our own style. On one side was an invitation from the bride's parents, and next to it on the other side was the one from the groom's parents.

Our best wishes for happiness and success go to Hosea, our dear friend from across the seas.

* * * * *

Young People's Conference

Three girls from Amelia Christian Church attended the Young People's Conference held at Elon College on June 13-19, 1954. They were Maxine Godwin, Faye Dean Pulley and Carrie Ann Waters.

This was a week thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. The only complaint I heard was that the week was "not long enough."

After everyone had registered on Sunday evening there was a picnic supper followed by recreation.

Breakfast was served at 7:20 every morning, and at 8:30 we had Morning Assembly, which was conducted by Max Martin Eichrodt from Switzerland. Following that, we had fifteen minutes set aside to "think it over." This was a time for meditation and to think things over.

We had three classes, and each class was divided in to two sections. Our first class was "It's in the Book," taught by Mrs. Olin B. Pendleton from Norfolk, Virginia, and Rev. Henry E. Robinson from Burlington, North Carolina. Our second class, "I Do Believe," was taught by Rev. George Alley from Suffolk, Virginia, and Rev. Olin B. Pendleton from Norfolk. Our third class was called "This Is the Way." Rev. Ralph M. Galt from New Market, Virginia, and Rev. Richard L. Jackson from Chapel Hill, North Carolina, were in charge of this class. During this period we were shown a film strip. Then we were divided into groups and held a discussion about the film strip.

After being served a very delicious lunch, we had an hour to rest. Then it was time for recreation. Some of us played tennis and some played softball, followed by swimming for all. When rain upset our plans for outdoor recreation, we went to the gym and there we did the Virginia Reel and Square Dances, while some played volleyball.

After all this recreation, everyone had worked up a good appetite for another delightful meal, which was followed by Vesper Services conducted by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Jr., from Holland, Virginia.

We were then shown another interesting film strip, followed by more fun and recreation.

From 10 to 10:15 p. m., each group met with its counselor for devotions and to talk things over. At 11 p. m., lights were required to be out and everyone in bed for a good night's rest.

Thursday night was Stunt Night. Each group had a stunt and they were all very good. The judges said it was a tie between them all,

On Friday night there was a very impressive Communion Service held.

Let us not forget our fine group of counselors who were always ready to cooperate and lend a helping hand when needed. We would like to express our sincere thanks to the entire staff, who made our week at Elon a most enjoyable and impressive one.

MAXINE GODWIN.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

(Continued from page 7.)

Separately, we can accomplish but little. Held together by opportunity and responsibility, we can accomplish much; indeed whatever is necessary for the cause in which we are interested.

In the Southren Convention we have 200 churches, together with their Sunday schools and other organizations. All of these churches, Sunday schools and organizations have a stake in Elon College. By cooperation, everyone doing his part in service and contributions, we can do for our college whatever is necessary. Remember that snow loosely allied flies to the wind. When pressed together tightly, it becomes a force, as it is tossed by the individual who aims at his object.

Previously reported $ 4,384.92

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Liberty (Vance)	$ 50.00
Mt. Herman	34.00
New Elam	13.00
Wake Chapel	21.68

Eastern Va. Conference:

Centerville	$ 15.00
Portsmouth, Elm Avenue	28.00
Suffolk S. S.	72.51

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Burlington, Bev. Hills ..	5.00
Burlington, Lakeview ...	11.00
Elk Spur S. S.	5.00
New Lebanon S. S.	14.60
Pfafftown	18.00

Western N. C. Conference:

Bennett	$ 5.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Antioch S. S.	$ 23.69
Bethlehem S. S.	23.00
Dry Run S. S.	1.51
Linville S. S.	7.50
Winchester S. S.	8.34

356.83

Total to date $ 4,741.75

FOR OUR CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 10.)

ment. He can push his own chair to the table and, later, Mother's and Daddy's. He can open and close doors, carry Daddy's paper or slippers to him, also pick up after himself, and put his toys away. The

(Continued on page 15.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Growing Through Prayer"

LESSON IV—JULY 25, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Rejoice always, give thanks in all circumstances; for this is the will of God in Jesus Christ for you." I Thes. 5:16-18.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Luke 11:1-13; Philippians 4:6-7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 4.

A lesson on prayer may well raise some questions. Is prayer a lost art? Have we ceased to grow spiritually because we have stopped "practicing it"? Can we grow to full manhood without it, especially spiritual manhood? What is the nature of prayer? How can we all pray more effectively? How shall we pray? What can we expect to happen if we pray? Why pray anyway? What can prayer do in a world under the reign of law? These and many other questions come to mind when we think about prayer.

The lesson does not answer all of these questions. It does not pretend to answer them all. But it does give us some answers to some of these questions. And it emphasizes the fact that prayer is a factor in a growing Christian life. Indeed, it can be said that where there is no prayer, there is little or no growth.

Jesus Prays.

Jesus prayed. That in itself is significant, highly significant. There are many references in the story of his life, to his prayer life. Why should he, the Son of God, pray? Certainly not to ask forgiveness for sins, for in him was no sin. Prayer, for Jesus, was a means of deepening his sense of fellowship and friendship with God, of renewing his spirit, of rendering thanks, of seeking guidance, of insuring victory, of laying hold on power. He did not ask for things. He used prayer as a means of having communion with God, the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Prayer for Jesus was so real, so vital, that when the disciples saw him at prayer, they asked him to teach them how to pray. He had something which they did not have. They said prayers; he prayed. When he prayed, something happened. So, "as he was praying in a certain place, when he had ceased, one of his disciples said to him, Lord, teach us to pray, even as John taught his disciples to pray." "If prayer can do for us what it does for you," they said, "then we want to learn how to pray."

Jesus Teaches His Disciples to Pray.

In reply to their question, and in response to their appeal, Jesus gave the disciples what is generally known as The Lord's Prayer. Matthew Henry, the great commentator, wrote of The Lord's Prayer that "a child can play in it, and an elephant can swim in it." He was saying in a striking way that it is both very simple and very profound.

When Jesus said, "After this manner pray ye," he did not mean that we were bound to use his words. He was suggesting a pattern of prayer and the spirit of prayer. There was to be reverence for God and for God's name, there was to be a desire, even a yearning for the rule of God in the here and now of earth, even as in heaven, there was to be a prayer for forgiveness, based on our willingness to forgive others, there was to be a prayer for deliverance from moral evil, there was to be an ascription of praise and glory to God our Heavenly Father. O yes, the Master was practical. He knew that although men could not live by bread alone, they could not very well live without bread. So he includes the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread." One is justified in praying for daily needs. Perhaps the outstanding feature about the prayer is the absence of the first singular pronoun. It never once says "I"—it is always "our," "we," or "us." It is a social, an unselfish prayer. Prayer at its best, embodies these principles and this spirit.

Jesus Teaches His Disciples to Practice Prayer.

As was so often the case, Jesus emphasized the truth by telling a story. He told a story of a man who had put his children to bed and had gone to bed with them, when a fellow came along at midnight and asked him for some bread for company that had come unexpectedly. Because of the importunity of the midnight visitor, the man got up and gave him some bread.

Jesus told this story to encourage prayer, persistent prayer, but quiet, reasonable, non-violent prayer. A man does not shout at God to be heard. God can hear when one prays quietly. In contrast to the householder, God likes to hear your knock on his door. But if prayer is to mean the most, it must be more than an emergency thing like a shortage of bread at midnight. It must be persistent. The words, ask, seek, knock, as given in the lesson as written in the original Greek, have the meaning of keeping on asking, keeping on knocking, keeping on seeking. If one is to make the most of prayer and get the most out of prayer, he must practice prayer.

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" The good man would not think of giving his son a stone instead of a hot biscuit, or a scorpion instead of an egg! Well, God is so much better and wiser than the best and wisest man, that he can be counted on to give good gifts unto his children. He will not always give us what we ask for. Thank God for that! But he will give that best of all gifts, the gift of himself, the Holy Spirit. Not God's gifts, but God himself, is the greatest gift in prayer.

Paul Says the Same Thing.

On a sign in front of a city church there were these words: "Why worry, when you can pray?" That is what Paul is saying when he writes to his friends: "In nothing be anxious (or worried or fretful), but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving (notice how he puts the spirit of thankfulness at the heart of prayer) let your requests be known unto God, and the peace of God which passes all understanding shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." If we prayed more, we would worry less. If we prayed right, we would worry not at all. Peace of mind comes through prayer.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

You need always to get along well with yourself, for the art of getting along with everybody imposes some very personal obligations upon you.—Dr. J. Richard Sneed.

WHAT DID JESUS SAY ABOUT DEATH?

(Continued from page 5.)

immortal Book, describes it. "God is love, and he that dwells in love, dwells in God, and God dwells in him." Or listen to the first Christians sing it out: "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren." Our Lord made clear how the world was to differentiate between his followers and the mere worldling: "Hereby shall men know that you are mine, by the love you have toward one another."

An old legend says that, when the Apostle John was too old to attend the church in Ephesus, he would be brought into the church meeting on a stretcher. Invariably he would give the same counsel to the assembly: "Little children, see that you love one another, for love is of God."

Personally, I do not believe that we arrive at the sublime certainty of eternal life by means of clever argument, or abstract reasoning. Then how do we know? We know by tasting a Spirit by joining a fellowship, by putting heart and head and hand to a sublime task. Says Professor Jeans, "The ultimate realities of the universe are at present quite beyond the reach of science, and may be—and probably are—forever beyond the comprehension of the human mind." Does that mean that we cannot know? Not at all. "Out of death into life, because we love the brothers," so for those first disciples of Jesus, and so for us. We must be practitioners of immortality by expressing the spirit of Christ-like love.

A few months ago, in this church, we held a memorial service to the memory of one of our most-loved deaconesses, Mrs. Everett Sears. She had served her church and fellow members faithfully, and then rather suddenly "fell on sleep." People remarked after the service that her living presence was keenly felt all during the service. What is the secret of such a life? Does it not lie in the fact that Blanche Sears had intertwined her life in loving, sacrificial service with a multitude of other lives? She had learned the great secret: "He that is willing to lose his life for my sake and the gospel's shall find it." She practiced immortality.

There's nothing selfish about that kind of immortality. It doesn't beg the question. Quite the opposite, it rather reminds one of what was said of William Lloyd Garrison, who gave his life to free the slave: "He forgot himself into immortality."

Yes, we have a responsibility in the fashioning of our own immortality. And when our lives are filled with, and radiantly express, the great Love of God in Christ, then we have a foretaste of what heaven must be like.

But ultimately, our confidence in eternal life lies in the living relationship of the believer and his Lord. What did Jesus say about death? Listen once more to his words: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." There you have it, friend, "liveth and believeth in me." This is none other than the miracle Christ works in the soul through faith. It is precisely the wonder of the Gospel that the secular, worldly mind can never grasp. Here is Jesus, Lord of Life, saying of Lazarus—then and now—"This one I have redeemed can never die, because I live in him and he lives in me. In the spirit of the Cross he has already died to sin and selfishness in this life. Now he shares in the triumph and power of my resurrection!"

Viewed in that divine light death becomes transition, a door that swings outward on life, abundant, eternal, everlasting. In fact, every relationship of our lives is transformed within that revolutionary framework. Life, yes, but lived out from God, not self, as a center.

When Dr. Sherwood Eddy gave a series of lectures in this pulpit a few years ago, he told me he was preparing a book entitled You Will Survive After Death. I have read the book, an amazing spiritual Odyssey out of the soul of a man who has lived daringly. Now after two years, Sherwood Eddy sums up his faith in the following words: "I am ashamed of what I am at eighty-two years of age. Yet I am not discouraged. All this is but the first round of the fight. I have never been knocked out, and I shall live to fight another day." Our good friend speaks the glory of going on and of growing in the larger life beyond. He closes his testimony in the beautiful words of St. Paul: "What no eye has seen, no ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, God has in preparation for those who love him." (I Cor. 1:9.)

For myself, I can only say that I have no fear of the great transition, whenever it may come. No! Rather is it life, the day by day bearing of my Christian testimony, that sometimes baffles me. To live the kind of life that is worthy of survival beyond these little three score years and ten, there is the test. And because I am not sufficiently strong within myself to meet that test, I slip my hand into the Nail-pierced Hand. I seek by God's help to live each day to the full, until finally this earthly life shall open upon the brightness of eternity. When I shall come to the end of the way, then, "Sunrise Tomorrow!"

There is the story of the newspaper reporter who interviewed an old Lamp Lighter on his round, in the early hours of the morning: "What a dismal task yours must be putting out lights!" "Not so," said the lamp lighter. "You see, there is always another light waiting for me. It's a cheering prospect." The reporter remonstrated, "But when you come to the last light, and put that out, what then?" "Then," said the old man "then comes the dawn."

"I am the resurrection and the life," said Jesus. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die."

Never!

THE SLOANS IN NEW ZEALAND.

(Continued from page 8.)

little is taking the place of those older forms. However, summer and Easter camps, conferences and retreats are growing in popularity.

Congregational churches in New Zealand were established only in the older cities. Other denominations put churches in villages, and as the villages grew into cities, the churches developed. No college or training school for ministers was organized until three years ago. Congregationalists are few in number, but are able people wielding an important influence in the nation.

In all, New Zealanders are a friendly, generous people. We have made a host of friends among them. We did not bring overcoats, for we shall be spending considerable of this trip in the tropics. We are using our old scheme of wearing one suit over another. A woman in Wellington, the capital, insisted that Mrs. Sloan wear her fur coat until we left New Zealand. We mailed it back to her just as we took the plane for Australia.

W. W. SLOAN.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The kind heavenly Father looked graciously on us and we had good weather for harvesting our small grain. We harvested 3,810 bushels. Of this there were 1,969 bushels of wheat; 1,076 of oats; and 775 of barley and wheat mixed. We are so grateful for the good harvest, and now we are hoping for seasons to keep our pastures green, our corn growing, and our gardens good. We are praying that there will be good seasons for all our country that we may have a good harvest throughout the land, and that the people may turn their hearts to God in praise for his goodness.

Many of our children are on vacation. Friends, churches, classes and groups have seen to it that practically every child here has had or is to have a vacation away from the orphanage. We are thankful for every kindness shown a child at the orphanage.

We are looking forward now to Home-Coming Day here, September 5. We are anxious to have our first major services in the beautiful Holt Memorial Chapel on that day.

It is such a joy to see the "boys and girls" of recent and more remote times gather here. They see so many improvements, they say. And they reminisce in small and large groups. They wonder at how well so-and-so has done, and what a lovely family he has. It is the high day of the year. We do hope we shall have the largest attendance this year we have ever had. It would be nice for an increasing number of persons to love the orphanage with a big heart and an open hand. It has done good across the years. It deserves enough money with which to pay its bills and to do the necessary repairs. It has done well on a very needy and worthy job. It deserves well.

This week, besides several children, we have had also on vacation Mrs. Ruby Rash, house-mother at the Main Building; Mrs. Margaret Pruitt, house-mother at the Baby Home; and Miss Melva Foster, secretary and director of religious activities.

Now let me add this word or two: Did you read Dr. Stanley C. Harrell's opening editorial in THE CHRISTIAN SUN? It was his first as the new editor. It was most excellent.

I am not selfish enough to want you to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN just because it presents each week an orphanage report and a little pen picture of our orphanage prayers. But I want you to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN for its value to you as a Christian and church member, and for the good it will do every aspect of our whole church. You will find constructive, helpful reading in the editorials and you will enjoy every page if you are as interested in your church as I am.

Thanks to John T. Kernodle for his faithful, efficient and fine service to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He ably demonstrates his love and devotion to the church and to the church paper. May his services long continue.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JULY 7, 1954.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 6,967.94

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Mt. Auburn$ 10.88
Oak Level 11.47

22.35

Eastern Va. Conference:

Berea (Nans.)$ 34.85
Bethlehem (Nans.) 42.24
Dendron 26.00
Christian Temple 109.09
First, Norfolk 34.32
Windsor 10.00

256.43

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Apple's Chapel$ 34.00
Belew Creek 6.00
Mt. Zion 4.25

44.25

Western N. C. Conference:

Pleasant Grove$ 10.00

10.00

Virginia Valley Conference:

Concord$ 11.00

Dry Run	7.00
Newport	22.79
		40.79
Total		$ 373.82

Grand total $ 7,341.76

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$19,283.20
Progressive Bible Class,
Newport News, Va.	$ 20.00
John Craddeek	30.00
John Chamberlain	2.00
Mary Sus Brittle Class,
Bethlehem	5.00
In Memory of Otis Brown
Jones	5.00
In Memory of J. P.
Saunders	10.00
In Memory of G. P. Gray,
Sr.	10.00
Isabelle F. Robinson, New York	10.00
Special gifts	94.40
	186.40

Grand Total $19,469.60

Total for the week $ 559.82

Total for the year $26,810.96

THE RELIGION IN AMERICAN LIFE STORY.

(Continued from page 6.)

a way that is very unusual here in the South."

The 1953 campaign was opened with a 15-minute show carried by all major television and radio networks. In opening the campaign, President Eisenhower said in part: "It was once said, 'America is great because America is good—and if America ceases to be good, America will cease to be great.' By strengthening religious institutions, the committee is helping to make America good. Thus it helps to keep America great."

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

In Memoriam

MAYO.

We, the members of the First Congregational Christian Church, Newport News, Virginia, have lost from our fellowship a faithful and devoted member in the death of Fanye May Rountree Mayo on May 23, 1954. We sorrow that we have lost from us a valued friend and co-worker in our church, and yet we take confidence in the eternal hope that she has entered upon a life fuller, more complete fellowship with God.

She was a life-time member of our church. She was the loyal and consecrated superintendent of the Primary Department of the church school, in which capacity she served for over twenty years. Previous to this, she was a teacher in this department. It is beyond us to estimate the countless children whose lives she influenced for good. Her loyalty, her devotion to her task, her love for children and her patience with them were among the many gifts she brought to the church.

We commend to the love and care of God, her husband and family, praying that in their sorrow, they may find a peace that passeth all understanding. We pledge ourselves anew to him whose we are and whom we serve.

We desire that a copy of this token of our appreciation be sent to her husband, her parents, and "The Christian Sun" for publication. Also that a copy be kept for the church records.

HAROLD D. STALNAKER,
Mrs. C. L. ROUNTREE,
Committee.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS NOW CHALLENGED IN INDIA.

(Continued from page 6.)

the Student Foreign Missionary Movement was begun. Its conferences at East Northfield, Mass., the headquarters of Dwight L. Moody, were addressed by Dr. John Mott, Dr. Robert E. Speer, that brilliant Scotch clergyman Henry Drummond, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan of London, and others. Since that time, its slogan, "the evangelization of the world in this generation," has for many changed considerably in meaning and now implies a struggle "for a better world in terms of human values common to all religions" rather than a crusade "for a better Christian world." Unfortunately, this change has failed of recognition by a large and influential church group the nature of whose foreign missionary activity has never altered.

The right of each individual to worship his Creator in whatever manner he feels is fitting and proper must not only be tolerated, but should be insisted upon by Americans as a fundamental right. Who can say with assurance that tenets of any faith are erroneous and offer cogent proof to that effect?

Zeal and enthusiasm in the interest of a good cause are most commendable, but friendship, to be lasting, must be based on a broad mutual respect and a growing common interest combined with an ability to put oneself in the other fellow's place. Other factors may play a considerable part in our social relationships, but to these, at least, there is no alternative. An overweening desire to convince another of religious error can easily be interpreted as an attempt to destroy his intellectual and spiritual integrity and a lack of respect for values which he feels should not be subject to question. Something happened in India, and Western influence and prestige are suffering as a consequence.

It seems pertinent to suggest that in India proselytes might be much more easily acquired through silent example than by means found to be objectionable there. The cultivation of resentment is not the way to a loyal and sincere friendship.—Scotish Rite News Bulletin.

REPORT OF TREASURER.

(Continued from page 9.)

Cypress Chapel	50.00
Eure	5.00
Franklin	27.00
Holland	6.25
Holy Neck	18.75
Liberty Spring	25.00
Mt. Carmel	16.00
Norfolk:
Bay View	6.95
Little Creek	2.50
Rosemont	30.00
Oak Grove	2.50
Oakland	12.50
Sunbury	20.00
Union Southampton	12.50
Wakefield	12.00

269.45

Juniors.

Antioch	$ 6.50
Berea	12.50
Bethlehem	5.00
Cypress Chapel	5.00
Eure	1.25
Franklin	7.50
Holland	5.00
Holy Neck	5.00
Liberty Spring	6.85
Mt. Carmel	3.00
Norfolk:
Rosemont	20.00
Oakland	1.25
Portsmouth:
First	3.00

81.85

Cradle Roll.

Bethlehem	$ 1.00*
Cypress Chapel	1.00
Dendron	.95

Eure	1.25
Franklin	2.00
Liberty Spring	10.00
Mt. Carmel	2.00
Mt. Zion	1.00
Norfolk:
Bay View	4.60
Oakland	4.10
Portsmouth:
First	1.00
	28.90

Life Memberships

Bethlehem	$ 80.00
Isle of Wight	10.00
Mt. Carmel	10.00
Norfolk:
Little Creek	10.00
Waverly	20.00
	130.00

Memorials.

Spring Hill	$ 10.00
	10.00

Goats.

Norfolk:
Second	$ 45.00
Oakland	60.00
Suffolk	15.63
Windsor	8.00
	128.63

Grand total $ 1,825.73

Total Receipts $ 1,997.31

DISBURSEMENTS.

Mrs. W. V. Leathers—
Tr. Women's Board	$ 1735.91
Barbara B. Nelms—Tr. of
Young People	89.82
Bank book	1.50
Miss Margaret Hargrove,
Rally speaker	29.79
Check returned—I. F. ...	6.25
	1,863.27

Balance forward $ 134.04

MRS. GEORGE CORNELL,

Treasurer.

*In memory of Shelia Smith.

FOR OUR CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 11.)

things a young child can do are legion and really cannot be listed, as they arise out of the need of the minute. He should receive praise for these acts and be thanked with sincerity.

Most children will, before this, have learned little by little to feed themselves. If the child's chair is placed on spread newspaper or on linoleum at first, this precaution will teach him the need to avoid spilling anything. He should not be scolded for lapses when he is trying. If pains are taken to teach him to hold his spoon properly, he will soon realize that eating is a very important matter. Once he has mastered the art, he has planted his small feet more firmly on the road to independence, besides leaving Mother free to enjoy her meals and giving her the satisfaction that her child is gaining in independence.

"The Quest of an Ideal"

Last of a Series

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D.D.

In Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" we are given a striking example of the conflict between service and selfishness, and of the final victory of service. Jean Valjean had been nineteen years in the galleys for stealing a loaf of bread. He escaped finally, and determined to forget his past and shape for himself a different destiny.

Under an assumed name, he established himself in business in an obscure village and became the happy recipient of fortune, the leading citizen of his town—loved and respected by all. But one evening, returning from his work, he reads an account of "an old man who had been arrested on mistaken identity" as Jean Valjean, and was in danger of being sent to the galleys for life. The real Jean Valjean must now decide whether he will make known his own identity and give himself up to the authorities as the escaped convict, or allow the other man to go to the galleys in his stead. Selfishness whispers to him of the killing toil, the demoralizing influence, the misery and wretchedness of his old galley life. It tells him that he will be deprived of the privilege of helping the poor and sick. It tells him that the old man is a thief anyway and will only be receiving his just punishment. But after such a momentary victory for selfishness, his mind was in a terribly troubled condition. Even the stars of heaven were veiled from his sight. Raving as if mad, he passes the early hours of the night. But presently a calm steals over him. The clarion voice of honor and service is calling to him in no mistaken tone. He obeys the call, and goes to the place where the old man is being tried. As he enters the court-room, he hears the condemnation of the old man, who has been pronounced "Jean Valjean, the ex-convict" and sentenced to life service in the galleys. Hereupon the real Jean Valjean steps boldly forward and declares that he himself is the ex-convict.

Do we appreciate the sublimity of such a victory for character—a man of distinction, of wealth and of honor, denouncing himself that a poor old thief might not suffer unjustly? In the character of Jean Valjean, we see honor and service rising triumphant above selfishness, a man choosing to sacrifice everything in order to do the right. Such is true morality, the basis of all noble character.

Look at yonder army of the world's heroes. Who are they? Fluttering above their heads, we see their banner, and upon it is inscribed in letters of gold the one word that has made them heroes—"Character." They were true to their ideals. We see in that magnificent procession the early heroes of the Cross, who suffered martyrdom as a result of their unwaivering devotion to their Christ—men like Polycarp, who, rather than forsake his ideal, submitted himself to be burned at the stake—men like Wicliff, Huss, Savonarola, Luther, Knox, Baxter, Wesley, Wilberforce and Livingstone. The lives of Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Lincoln, Lord Shaftsbury, Florence Nightingale, Frances Willard, William Gladstone, Woodrow Wilson, and countless others, testify to the undying greatness of those who have followed their ideal of service to the end of life.

Every great work, every great achievement, every great reform, has been effected only in response to the vision and the courage of men and women who were true to their ideals regardless of opposition.

We today are living in the greatest period in the history of the world. Every noble walk of life is offering more opportunities to young men and young women than ever before. A time like this is a great time in which to live. No other period in all the world's history could ever compare with the present in its advantages and opportunities, in its joys and satisfactions. In spite of rumbling clouds of danger and peril, progress is being made in every realm of human interest. We are possessed with the conviction that the world will advance more in its life, attitudes, customs and policies in the next twenty-five years than in any century past. Every vocation, every profession, is calling for young men and young women of vision, whose "ideal" is to serve and not to get.

The world is full of challenging opportunities to young people of the present whose ideal is to serve their day and generation. Indeed, man's highest attainments, man's greatest achievements, have not yet been realized. Man's greatest accomplishments and life's greatest prizes are yet to be announced. The awards for the best and greatest of everything are awaiting those who live in "The Days Ahead"!

HISTORICAL SOCIETY
Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1954

NUMBER 28

The Women's School of Missions at Elon College

The above picture is ample evidence that an outstanding group of Southern Convention women attended the ninth annual School of Missions at Elon College last week. The women of our Convention are setting a standard for the entire church. Incidentally, how do Dr. Scott and "Hardy" Hardcastle rate? or are there other "mere men" hidden somewhere in the background?

News Flashes

What happened in your church this week? If it was of interest to you, why not give other churches the benefit of it?

Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of Altamahaw, N. C., near Elon College, has just concluded a series of special services. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, the minister, has been assisted by Rev. H. S. Hardecastle of Chuckatuck, Virginia.

Notice to Women's Groups Not Represented at School of Missions

The complete packet of literature for 1954-55 is $3.50 plus postage. Postage to North Carolina churches will be 31 cents and to Eastern Virginia and the Valley of Virginia, 34 cents. The packet without the home mission study book (the foreign book is not included this year because of other India materials) is $2.50 plus postage. North Carolina societies will include 27 cents for postage for this packet and the Virginia societies will pay 29 cents for postage. Order early as possible.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL,
Literature Chairman.

Dr. Dennison's Stewardship Schedule

Dr. Warren H. Denison has probably conducted more stewardship institutes in Congregational Christian Churches than any other man ever did. Certainly it would be very difficult to find any one who does more effective teaching of stewardship. The following is his fall schedule:

Rosemont, South Norfolk, Va.,
August 30-Sept. 5.

Greensboro First Church, Sept.,
13-19.

First Church, Burlington, N. C.,
Sept. 20-26.

Suffolk, Va., Sept. 27-Oct. 3.

Union, Alamance Co., N. C., Oct.
11-17.

Spokane, Wash., Nov. 8-14.

Seven One Day Institutes, Wash.
State., Nov. 16-23.

North Hampton, N. H., Dec. 6-12.

York Village, Maine, Dec. 13-19.

Arrangements have been agreed upon, that neighboring churches may send delegations to audit the institutes which Dr. Denison will hold in the Southern Convention. This is a real opportunity for those who wish to learn more about making stewardship effective in the local church.

Bethlehem Church Reports

The work at the Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, Altamahaw, North Carolina, moves along at a very satisfactory and steady pace. Our attendance has remained above par throughout the entire summer. Our Vacation Bible School was largely attended with a total enrollment of 91 pupils, and an average attendance of 76. The week of the 4th. of July, the church sponsored three nights of prayer services, conducted by the Joint Board of Deacons, climaxing the week's activities with a fellowship supper for the two boards.

Sunday, July 11, Rev. H. S. Hardecastle of Chuckatuck, Va., came to us and assisted in a week of preaching Mission Services, which resulted in a very fine spirit of Dedication on the part of the church, and having received ten new members at this date by confession of faith, which was directly the outcome of the meeting in this respect. We feel grateful for the very fine work that was done by Brother Hardecastle, as he brought us messages that were plain and simply understood, and that challenged the church in its every phase of activities. We feel that this meeting was the type of meeting that will live long in the life of our church.

On Monday night, July 19, the women of our church met in the capacity of a Woman's Missionary Meeting, and there was a very large and interesting group present for this meeting. The aims and goals of the society were presented, along with the literature that will be used and studied by our Women's Fellowship throughout the Southern Convention. It was most encouraging and inspiring to observe the enthusiasm manifested by the women in both the work that they face in the larger fellowship of our faith and also in interest of young people's work.

We feel that the work goes steadily forward at Bethlehem with many, many things for which to be both grateful and encouraged.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention

"The teaching ministry of the church is perhaps its most important function," Dr. W. E. Wisseman, of Greensboro, told the 200 church workers attending the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention which met at Needham's Grove on July 13. He stressed: "The Sunday school is a part of the church. . . . For boys and girls to reach that point where they choose to commit themselves to Christ—this is the supreme aim of the Sunday school. Sunday school teachers are in the front line trenches, fighting for the Kingdom of God."

Dr. Wisseman addressed the convention on its theme, "The Place of the Sunday School in the Church." The day's program was under the direction of Theodore Cox, of Ramseur, president of the convention.

Included among the visitors were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, the retiring secretary of Christian Education in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, and Roger Gibbs, field secretary of Elon College. Miss Coghill was given a rising vote of thanks for her devoted service over the past years. Miss Coghill announced for the first time her plans to continue in Christian Education, working with the church of South India in Ceylon.

A total of 30 churches reported to the convention this year, making an increase of six over last year. The six new churches reporting were Antioch (R), Bennett, Center Grove, Flint Hill (M), Providence Chapel, and Zion. Prizes for the year's attendance records were awarded to Shady Grove and Providence Chapel churches. The host church, Needham's Grove, won the attendance banner for the largest percentage of members at the convention.

Officers elected for the coming year were Theodore Cox, president; W. H. Hughes, Jr., of Asheboro, vice-president; Mrs. Winfred Bray, of Randleman, secretary-treasurer; and Mrs. J. C. Newell, of Ramseur, assistant secretary-treasurer.

One of the highlights of the day's activities was a demonstration of the Workers' Council by a panel composed of W. H. Hughes, Jr., chairman; Dolan Talbert, of Albemarle; Mrs. J. C. Newell; Rev. Bill Simmons, of Bennett; Mrs. Colbert Allen, of Ramseur; and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of Elon College.

MAX VESTAL.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Churchmen's Week Planned

A nationwide celebration of Churchmen's Week has been planned for this fall, October 11-17. The observance will be concluded with Laymen's Sunday, October 17. The following description of United Churchmen in America is taken from a recent publication from that office.

"During the last few years, the national leaders of men's work organizations and brotherhoods within the churches of Christ in our nation have been banding themselves together for a united crusade.

"Those communions or denominations within the National Council of Churches are organically related as United Church men. That body is sponsoring the crusade that calls us together today.

"To the crusade we invite all men of the churches of Christ who would join in the prayer of our Lord: 'Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.'

"Departments or councils of United Church Men are now being set up in the forty-eight states and in hundreds of communities over the land. Such bodies provide a means whereby the men of the churches may join together in a common crusade while strengthening their own local churches and the full program of their denominations.

"Offices of United Church Men are at 257 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York."

The projects which have been selected for United Churchmen for the year 1954 are these:

1. Distribution of surplus foods to other lands.
2. Support of the Christian Colleges.
3. Religion in Industry.
4. Lay Evangelism.
5. Christian Stewardship.
6. Concern for Youth.

We are printing a poem which came from a publication, Congregational New Hampshire, which was handed to me by Dr. Scott.

He couldn't speak before a crowd; he couldn't teach a class.
But when he came to Sunday school, he brought the folks "en masses."
He couldn't sing to save his life; in public couldn't pray.

But always his "jalopy" was just crammed on each Lord's day.
But although he couldn't sing, nor teach, nor lead in prayer,
He listened well, he had a smile, and he was always there. . . .
With all the others whom he brought who lived both near and far—
And God's work prospered—for he had a consecrated ear.

* * * * *

Men Elect Officers at their Largest Meeting

By WALTER A. GRAHAM.

Incomplete registration returns of the approximately 2,500 delegates and associate delegates to the General Council meeting show that there were more laymen present at New Haven than at any previous meeting of the General Council. Harold E. Wahlberg of Santa Ana, Cal., was elected the chairman of the national committee and also president of the board of directors. Lynn Sheldon of Spring Valley, Minnesota, was elected vice-chairman, Herman Cook of Lanett, Alabama, secretary, and the retiring chairman, Dr. Fred S. Richards of Forest Grove, Oregon, was elected to the executive committee. Walter A. Graham of Penbrooke, Kentucky, was re-elected national director.

The Board of Home Missions elected the following men to compose the class of 1960: Dr. Robert Bartlett of Ohio, Edward Chase of Connecticut, Herman Cook, John Crawford of Louisiana, Earl Daniely of North Carolina, Raymond Elliot of New York,

(Continued on page 13.)

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Laity and the Ministry

One of the vital issues which confronts the Church is that of supplying the churches with suitable and well trained pastors. It is becoming increasingly a problem in our Southern Convention. New churches are being organized. Churches that have had the part-time service of a pastor, now wish and are able to have a pastor living in their midst and devoting all his time to serving one church.

Most churches have assumed that the matter of calling men into the ministry is entirely in the hands of God. Only men that are called of God can effectively serve as under-shepherds of God's flocks; but it is the business of the churches to bring up young people who have a proper appreciation of the dignity and importance of the work of the church. The laity carries most of the responsibility for the attitude of the youth of the church toward the work of the church.

It needs to be sold to the layman that he shares the responsibility for the church equally with the minister. It is he who, with his fellow lay workers, determines whether the church is accomplishing worthwhile things or merely marking time. The laity can make the church a going concern whose minister is a respected and useful member of the community; or it can make of him a drudge who is tied to a hopeless task.

The home, the home atmosphere, the attitude of parents, the emphasis placed upon spiritual realities, have a tremendous part in determining what children regard as issues of primary importance. Many urban churches are finding it very difficult and frequently impossible, to bring into the membership of the church, children of the church school whose parents are not active in church work.

Much has been said about the mothers who have dedicated their sons to the ministry and who have prayed that God would call them into the ministry of his Church. It would be interesting to know how many fathers who are good churchmen really wish that a son of theirs should become a minister.

If ministers, serving as pastors, are absolutely necessary in the life of a church, and most denominations assume that they are; then it becomes the responsibility of the local church to raise up youth worthy to be called of God to do his work. That which is the responsibility of the church, is peculiarly the responsibility of the Christian home, and of Christian fathers and mothers.

Words of Appreciation and Thanks

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches since 1949, has resigned that position effective July 31, 1954. Her resignation was accepted by the Executive Board of the Convention, which expressed regret that Miss Coghill felt it advisable to relinquish her work.

Miss Coghill has greatly strengthened every phase of the work of the Southern Convention by the service she has rendered during her five years in office. Especially notable is the contribution she has made to Pilgrim Fellowship societies and to the organizations of the women of the Convention.

Pattie Lee, as she is affectionately known among us, grew up in one of the small rural churches of North Carolina. For a number of years she served as one of the national secretaries of the Missions Council. She is intimately acquainted with the problems and possibilities of all types of churches. She is equally at home in the small country church and the big city church. Her approach is always from the practical, rather than from the theoretical viewpoint. She can help people to begin just where they are, and show them the steps that must be taken in order to reach the point where they ought to be.

The most distinguishing characteristics of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill are her genuine love for people and her enthusiasm for the work that churches are doing and can do. Just her presence at a religious assembly makes a contribution to the meeting before she speaks—which she frequently does. Even her forgetfulness endears her to us less efficient people who do not always remember all the things that ought to be done.

There are thousands of people in the Southern Convention who will add their "Amen" to these words of appreciation and thanks to Miss Coghill. She is one of us; even her speech betrays her southern heritage. She has a large place in our hearts. We are grateful for the work she has done. The future will be better because of the foundations which she has laid. Our best wishes go with her wherever she may serve. It is our hope that she may never get away from the habit of attending the gatherings of our fellowship.

The Navy Recruit and His Chaplain

A Story of Chaplains' Work in the U. S. Naval Training Center At San Diego, California

As a man steps through the gates of the United States Naval Training Center to accept his first duty as a Navy recruit, he finds himself on the threshold of a new kind of existence. He faces a world of Naval life and Naval customs, governed by military law and procedure, where each man must learn for himself that he can no longer enjoy the comparative freedom of civilianhood, but must now fit into Navy life as an all-important cog in a huge machine geared to do a particular job and do it well.

The shaping of the recruit's thinking processes with relation to his new life begins the moment he enters the receiving and outfitting unit which gives him his brand new Navy uniform and his first Navy bunk. From that time on, the initial phase of his training period has begun and by means of a series of well-planned steps he is carried through Naval indoctrination. One of these steps which might well be considered of prime importance is the Chaplain's lecture. This is first in a series of lectures to keep the Navy man's moral strength on a par with his physical activity and is termed the "inprocessing" period. At this time the Chaplain acquaints the new recruits with just what they may expect from the Chaplain Department at the Naval Training Center and what sort of program the Chaplain Corps of the Navy offers with regard to counseling, special religious instruction, procedure in family emergencies, and of course, the divine services which are carried on as a regular part of Navy life. Through these lectures no denominational activity is overlooked and each is outlined to the satisfaction of all concerned. In order, therefore, to facilitate a complete program of religious activity for all denominations, a card information system has been devised whereby each recruit fills out a card containing pertinent information dealing with his particular denomination. These cards are in turn forwarded to the denominational Chaplain governing the preference the recruit has stipulated. Thus each shepherd has a card index file of his flock and each member of that flock may expect to receive individual attention as a result. Even during the first Chaplain's lecture, ample time is set aside so that each new man may have private consultation with the Chaplain if he so desires it.

Using all types of modern instructional improvements has become standard during Chaplain lectures, and so, in addition to the lecture proper, an exciting graphic film is presented to the recruits, emphasizing the importance of religion in the life of men in military service.

It is after this indoctrination period in the recruit's Naval career that he finds himself faced with eleven long and rigorous weeks of military training. Now the need for character Guidance becomes even more apparent. To fill that need the new men are given a series of six lectures by the Chaplain Department covering those topics which are most directly concerned with this new Navy life. The topics discussed range from Religion in the Navy to Marriage and Family Life and including such other subjects as Sex Education, Moral Principles, Moral Basis of Citizenship and Moral Responsibilities. Following standard procedure, each of these lectures is accompanied by an appropriately chosen motion picture and the lectures themselves are thrown open to question periods and topical discussion. But a recruit's contact with his Navy Chaplain does not end with lecture periods. They are only the beginning. Actually, the recruit is encouraged to visit his Chaplain whenever possible and to bring personal problems to his attention. The task of adjusting oneself to the requirements of military life is not always an easy one, and many recruits find that they are in sore need of correct counsel and advice. And so such problems as homesickness, study habits company commander-recruit relationships and boy-girl relationships all become an important part of the Navy Chaplain's daily routine. Any home problem which may interfere with the peace of mind of a man during training is worth the consideration of the Chaplain and is handled in such a way that the man concerned loses as little individual value to the Navy as possible. In such serious cases as the death of a loved one, the presence of the Chaplain is an absolute necessity when the recruit receives the news. Such delicate matters must be handled with care and understanding while at the same time a clear and level head is needed to make the necessary arrangements for such important details as emergency leave so that the man may return to his home as quickly as possible.

By means of personal contacts, the Chaplain daily touches on nearly every phase of recruit life. It may be a matter of a forthcoming marriage or legal advice coupled with verifications from the legal department, a financial problem or perhaps the state of a recruit's health. But whatever it may be, such work demands complete cooperation between the Chaplain Corps and other departments at the Naval Training Center. It is because of this cooperation that the recruit may count on the Chaplain Department to intercede for him whenever his case warrants the need of a Navy Chaplain.

But cooperation does not end with other departments in the Navy. The Chaplain is most aware of the fact that many civilians are eager and willing to help their men in service, and that strong ties can be made for the sake of good will. The Y. M. C. A., for example, is always more than happy to further a man's religious training and offers as a result a plan whereby a recruit may attend the church of his choice in downtown San Diego by taking a bus which is provided for that purpose. The bus carries the recruits to the Y. M. C. A. for an hour of fellowship prior to their being taken to their services. In this way a recruit who rates a Sunday liberty may have more time to keep in touch with God, while at the same time enjoying a welcome rest from military life.

The Red Cross too is at the constant call of the Chaplain. In cases of extreme emergency that organization is always ready day and night to make verifications of the necessity of emergency leave and to lend money to the recruit when the man has no funds to take such a leave. Even in less pressing cases where a recruit simply wants to know if his family is well taken care of and healthy the Red Cross is always standing by to wire immediately to the Red Cross chapter in the man's home town for information dealing with a loved one. Such information is always promptly returned to the satisfaction of the recruit and the Red Cross con-

(Continued on page 13.)

The Sloans See Australian "Teddy Bears" and Kangaroos

These constant "teas" are having a bad effect on me. Today I weighed eleven stone, eight. That is too much. The Australians seem to live on meat and starch. The scones and other pastries are delicious but hard on my waistline. We have taken to buying fruit at the markets to supplement the teas.

Our winter is over. On July 3 we threw snow-balls at one another on the top of Mt. Wellington in Tasmania, the island south of the mainland of Australia. That evening we flew eight hundred miles north to Sydney. On the 5th we were driven 250 miles inland to the national capital, Canberra, and went through snow and hail. Last Saturday we came five hundred miles further north. The first three days here we experienced three cyclones and a hurricane with continuous rain. Water on some roads is six feet deep. Today, however, proves that "Sunny Queensland" is more than a name. Saturday we fly two thousand miles to Darwin in the tropics on the north edge of the continent. From then till we get back to Elon College, the first of September, we shall have warm, generally hot, weather.

Despite the rain, we were taken yesterday to a preserve to see Kangaroos and Koala Bears. Most Australian animals are marsupials, carrying their young in pouches. One little Kangaroo stuck his head out of his mother's pouch, looked us over, then scampered back in and stuck his tail out. Later his curiosity got the better of him and he put his head out again. The Koalas look like Teddy bears, plump and about a foot high.

Australia's most common tree, the eucalyptus, sheds its bark rather than its leaves. Its best known bird, the kookaburra or laughing-jackass, sounds like its name. We have seen many wild parrots and magpies, and had the good luck to see four of Australia's most loved bird, the lyrebird whose tail resembles the musical instrument for which it is named. We have seen several of the wingless birds, the ostrich-like emu.

"Noted Preachers From America. Two outstanding church leaders will preach in Brisbane churches tomorrow. They are Rev. Dr. W. W. Sloan and Mrs. Sloan" is the headline splashed across a newspaper we were handed as we were met at the airfield last Saturday night. Wherever we go we are interviewed and photographed by the press. We have given about sixty sermons and addresses the past four weeks. We have not kept a record of the number of teas, receptions and conferences. We have broadcast on national hook-ups in both New Zealand and Australia. We have spoken in leading churches of the three chief cities, Sydney with two million people, Melbourne with a million and a half and Brisbane with a half million, and in smaller cities. These have been Presbyterian, Methodist, Church of Christ as well as Congregational Churches.

A report of Mrs. Sloan's recognition in America for her poetry reached New Zealand and Australia before we did. She has been asked to read her "Drums of Destiny" a number of times. She keeps our room furnished with flowers presented to her.

Last night Mrs. Sloan addressed the students of one college and I those of another. When it came to the question period almost all the questions asked me dealt with McCarthy. People feel that he is another Hitler rising up to try to conquer the world. We have run into these questions time and time again.

The next most common question here is, "Why are churches so much stronger in the United States than in Australia?" Along with this are inquiries about what American churches do beside holding Sunday morning services. Extensive interest is shown in our men's brotherhoods, young married people's groups, junior churches, and daily vacation church schools. These are almost unknown in Australia.

W. W. SLOAN.

Faith and Opinion

These two aspects of one's inner life are by no means identical. Their respective function is different and should be kept distinct in our thinking. Opinion is the product of one's mental make-up; faith functions in the realm of one's deeper self, where the inner life touches the Eternal. Opinions are on the surface and can be manipulated in the field of logic; faith is an attitude of the deeper self and is the inner response of the spirit to the impact of the Divine. Opinion may lead to negative attitudes and actions; faith leads to that which is positive and constructive. Opinion often rends persons, groups, classes, nations and empires; faith unites in spirit, in fellowship, and in cooperation in a constructive way and for constructive ends in these same spheres. Intellect is a high function of the human make-up; faith is a higher function, and should be thought of and cultivated as of primary necessity in making a great personality. Hence, when the Apostle Peter begins his Christian addition table, he starts with faith and closes with love (II Peter 1:5-7). Hence, again, when the Apostle Paul comes to name "The fruits of the Spirit" (Galatians 5:23), he ignores altogether what one might call the merely intellectual, and confines himself to those virtues that can be found only in a rich and fruitful personality. I would urge then, that we try to be as thoroughly Christian as possible. No one of us can claim perfection in the least degree, but we can identify ourselves with him who alone is able to mold and shape us towards God's ideal for us, viz., that we should be like him, to the end that "He may become the first born among many brethren" (Rom.8:29).

In the matter of opinion we may be far apart; it is in the realm of faith that we can sing, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." When we can go on then and sing, "The fellowship of kindred minds is like to that above," we shall have reached that ideal state pictured by Lord Tennyson:

We have but faith: we cannot know,
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it came from thee
A beam in darkness: let it grow.
Let knowledge grow from more to more
But more of reverence in us dwell:
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before,
But vaster.

W. R. CULLOM.

Wake Forest, N. C.

No man can tell whether he is rich or poor by turning to his ledger. It is the heart that makes a man rich. He is rich according to what he is, not according to what he has.

—Henry Ward Beecher.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The School of Missions

The Annual School of Missions conducted by the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches is in progress at the college this week, July 13-17. This study period has meant a great deal to our missionary program in particular and to our convention in general. The members of this school attending come from our churches located in North Carolina and Virginia. There are approximately 150 women in attendance. The curriculum of the school consists of worship, instruction and inspirational addresses. Miss Miriam Brown, missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, is speaking daily on India; social, economic, political and religious life of the people of India are emphasized in her addresses. She is an effective speaker, informed and very much liked by her audience.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle of Virginia, has the Bible study period. Hardie, as he is known among us, always gives interesting and helpful interpretations of the Bible. He is dealing principally with Paul's missionary journeys. Reverend W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem is leading the group daily in discussions of problems confronting the churches of America and particularly the city churches of this country. This is the subject of the Home Mission Study throughout the church for the ensuing year.

The members of the convention, as an expression of appreciation of the work that Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has done in our convention as secretary of Christian Education, presented Miss Coghill with luggage as a gift from the Woman's Convention. Pattie Lee has travelled throughout our convention and different parts of the country. In all probability, her luggage needed to be replaced. She has certainly been on the go. Pattie Lee plans to teach in the public schools of Henderson. The question is will she be able to stay on the job? Some morning she will wake up and feel that "I must get going—I have a long trip before me." We shall miss Pattie Lee in our annual and occasional church gatherings. Best wishes to her in her new work.

The chairman of the school is Mrs. H. G. Ballinger of Guilford College. Mrs. Cecil Whitlock from Winchester, Virginia, is president of the convention. It is always a delight and an inspiration to have this fine group of church women on our campus. They are friends of the college and will go back to make new friends of the convention's program of education as it is conducted at our college.

* * * * *

Summer School Session

The first session of the summer school at Elon College (six weeks) is closing today, Friday, July 16. At eight o'clock this morning the campus is comparatively free of automobiles and the halls of Alamance are abandoned. Everything is quiet. By nine o'clock this morning cars will be parked everywhere, the halls will be full of students and they will hie away to their several classrooms to face their professors and test their knowledge of subjects and study during the past six weeks.

The enrollment for this session of summer school is 334 which is a little more than 100 more than we enrolled for the first session of summer school in 1953. The second six weeks of summer school will begin Monday, July 19. The schedule calls for class six days in a week which means that the requirements for this session will be completed in five weeks. There is no way of telling what the enrollment will be for this next session of summer school. In all probability, the enrollment will be much less than the previous session. Some of the professors do not want to teach all summer and then a number of students want to take a little vacation before beginning another year's work on September 7.

For the past three years Elon College has held two commencements for the class graduating that year. The first commencement, of course, comes at the close of the spring semester of the regular college year, the last of May. The second commencement comes at the close of summer school. There are 27 young people on the schedule at present for graduation. The program has not yet been determined but will be later and publicity will be given to this important event in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

In providing for the support of Elon College, the convention has apportioned definite amounts to every local church for the college. In other words, it placed Elon College definitely in the apportionment table of every local church.

Because of continuous and continuing expenses of the college, the suggestion has been made that the Sunday schools and churches make weekly offerings for the support of the college. All offerings sent to the College through the convention office on apportionment are applied to the local church's obligation to the college on apportionment. The convention has also officially requested that all churches pay their apportionments quarterly, thus giving support to the college all through the year.

At this particular time the college is greatly in need of funds. Faculty salaries are paid in twelve equal monthly installments. In addition to these regular faculty payments, salaries for summer school teaching must be paid. Extra help is needed in making necessary repairs on buildings, equipment and grounds. Coal must be bought for the winter. These are conditions that church members and even pastors seldom think of, as we expect everything at the college to be ship-shape and no debts accumulated. These are extra financial burdens placed on the college administration during the summer, but they all would be easily borne if individuals and churches would contribute only as they are able. Your cooperation in these moments and days of need will be greatly appreciated.

Previously reported $ 4,741.75

Eastern Va. Conference:

Cypress Chapel$ 65.00

Spring Hill S. S. 3.81

Waverly S. S. 17.18

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Bethel S. S.$ 5.00

Ingram 30.00

Western N. C. Conference:

Pleasant Hill$ 75.00

Virginia Valley Conference:

Mt. Olivet (G) S. S. ...$ 5.00

200.99

Total to date $ 4,942.74

The illusion that times that were are better than those that are, has probably prevailed all ages.—Greely.

Missions at Home and Abroad

More About Christian Missions in India

Last Week THE SUN carried an article from The Scottish Rite News Bulletin entitled "Christian Missions Now Challenged in India." Anent this subject the Southern Asia Committee of the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of Churches is offering some advice. A statement just issued by Rev. Russell Stevenson, its executive secretary, says that Christian foreign mission groups must not "give way to a mood of desperation, but should demonstrate patience and understanding" in dealing with the Indian Government concerning the obtaining of visas for missionaries to that country.

The statement reads:

"Rather than emphasize exceptional cases of visa difficulties, our contribution to better understanding between the U. S. and India would be more effective if we show a fair, but sympathetic and patient attitude towards India's problems and actions."

Citing the successful efforts of many denominational mission boards in obtaining visas for their missionaries, the statement points out that a "total of 4,683 foreign missionaries are at work in India. Out of this total only a comparative few have been denied visas. And it appears that difficulties arise not in the central government but at the local levels.

"Although the constitution of this new democratic republic guarantees all religious groups the right freely to 'profess, practice and propagate' their faith, we need to recognize that India is subject to the same stresses and strains that affect us all today, in both the East and West. The leaders of India face the immediate need of stabilizing the central government, of welding together in a common loyalty the various segments of the population, and of building for a strong and secure future. . . . There is, in many quarters, a prevailing mood of nationalism that is strongly religious in character. Some groups regard the work of the missionaries as a threat to the heritage and culture of Hinduism and therefore, a threat to India herself. Also, there are Communist in India, who never cease to foment strife and dissatisfaction. They try to bring under suspicion all foreigners who come from non-Communist countries.

"... When difficulties do arise we must entrust to the leaders of the Christian community in India the main responsibility for whatever action is possible. (The Indian National Christian Council) is doing its utmost to preserve for Indian Christians and foreign missionaries their full rights as stated in the Indian Constitution."

The Southern Asia Committee is composed of representatives of the major denominational foreign mission boards who carry on work in Pakistan, India and Ceylon. Its program is concerned with the development of an over-all mission strategy for the area and supports a variety of inter-denominational projects in the area.

* * * * *

Dr. Brunner Joins University Staff in Japan

Dr. Emil Brummer, noted Swiss Protestant theologian, arrived in Tokyo on October 1, to join the faculty of the new International Christian University at Mitaka where he will be professor of Christianity for the next three years. He was accompanied by his wife and Miss Brun, the fiancée of Dr. Brunner's son who was recently killed in a train accident.

In order to take this position at International Christian University, Dr. Brunner gave up a professorship at the University of Zurich where he had taught theology for thirty years. He also relinquished a prominent place in the Swiss Church, and in the study work of the World Council of Churches with which he had cooperated for twenty-five years.

Prior to his departure from Switzerland, Dr. Brunner explained: "I go with the firm decision to give myself wholeheartedly to the task of helping to make Japan a Christian country."

More than twelve of the world's great universities have honored Dr. Brunner with degrees in divinity, humanities, letters and jurisprudence. He was also selected for special honor and individual recognition by his country during its recent 500th anniversary celebration.

* * * * *

New Missionaries Appointed

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Philip Blakney of Saxtons River, Vermont, have been appointed as Congregational Christian career missionaries to Africa by the American Board of Foreign Missions. Mr. Blakney is the son of Dr. Raymond Bernard Blakney, president of Olivet College, and Mrs. Laura Marsh Blakney, who were formerly Congregational Christian missionaries in Foochow, China.

Mr. Blackney was born in Sanford, Maine. He is a graduate of Williams College, and Andover-Newton Theological School. An ordained Congregational Christian minister, he has been pastor of Christ's Church, Saxtons River, Vermont, since 1952.

Mrs. Blakney, the former Lorraine Grim, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy a Grim of Hurdsfield, North Dakota. The Blakneys were married in 1949, and have two small sons, Robert Roy, and Richard Wayne.

Before going to their new work in Africa, probably in Rhodesia, the Blakneys will take a year of special study at Hartford Seminary in Hartford, Connecticut.

Pastors Take Note

I would call your attention to the fact that you should be giving thought to your Stewardship Materials for your fall Every-Member Canvass. You have received the packet from the Missions Council. It is excellent this year. Then, too, I would advise that Duplex Envelope Company has many fine pamphlets and other suggestions that are yours to sample on request to them.

Finally, may I remind you that The Rev. Fred P. Register is the new chairman of the Convention Commission and will no doubt give us much help through his articles and suggestions in THE SUN, as fall approaches. You may write him at Fuquay Springs, N. C., for suggestions and other helps. For those of us whose church year ends with September, we have no time to lose in making the selections of materials we will plan to use, and of getting an order in the mail for them. Vacation time is the best time to plan for your Every-Member Canvass, as well as the rest of the fall church program.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

School of Missions in Progress at Elon College

The ninth Annual School of Missions of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches is in progress at Elon College. The school will be in session through Friday having begun last Tuesday.

A registration of some 150 women from the churches of North Carolina and Virginia are enjoying a full daily schedule of worship, instruction and inspirational addresses. Miss Miriam Brown missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is giving a daily lecture on India. Dr. H. S. Hardeastle of Virginia is conducting the Bible Study. Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem is leading the discussion of the religious and social problems of the city. This is the subject of the home study for the ensuing year.

A highlight of the Wednesday evening program was a gift of luggage to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill whose resignation as secretary of Christian Education of the Southern Convention will become effective August first. Miss Coghill plans to live in Henderson where she is planning to teach in the local high school.

Chairman of the school is Mrs. H. G. Ballinger of Guilford College. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has been the staff officer in charge.

HENRY E. ROBINSON.

* * * * *

Gifts for Pattie Lee

There were several highlights at the School of Missions this year, and one of the happiest was the occasion of the presentation of gifts to our beloved Pattie Lee Coghill, who leaves her Southern Convention position on August 1. We are sorry that she is leaving her work among us, but the cleverness and hilarity of part of the presentation kept many an eye dry and brought laughter to all.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman is known to many for the various talents in which she excels and again her light shone. She was called to the platform to make an announcement during the Wednesday evening program. She asked Pattie Lee and Rachel Wallace to help her. Rachel and the audience were of course "in the know" but Pattie Lee's bewilderment was amusing. Ghaham had written a clever song to the tune of "Maryland My Maryland." She and Rachel took turns singing the verses and the audience came in with the chorus, "Oh, Pattie Lee, dear Pattie Lee, our love and thanks we give to thee."

I.

We'll sing a song to Pattie Lee,
We'll list her praises, one, two, three,
We'll tell you why we love her too
And maybe tell a fault or two!
We'll shout her praises, tell her worth—
O she's the finest gal on earth.

CHORUS.

Oh, Pattie Lee, dear Pattie Lee,
Our love and thanks we give to thee.

II.

A paper here, a program there,
The time of packets in the air.
The table's full and so is the floor,
Well move them over—she's still got more!
She's got to hurry and get them through,
Those School of Missions ladies will soon be due!

(Chorus).

III.

At summer camps and conferences too—
Just think how many she's been through—
She finds the leaders, each place she fills
And even cooks if no one else will.
She inspires our youth, gives them a hand.
She works and works as only she can—

(Chorus).

IV.

A postcard comes from Pattie Lee
What is more fun for you and me?
We read the front and then the back,
And round and round, keep on the track!
A word or two we can't figure out,
We try and try and then we shout!

(Chorus).

V.

The United Nations you'd like to see—
Just drop a line to Pattie Lee.
She finds a bus and charts it too
There's simply nothing she can't do
From coast to coast she takes the crowd
And goes to places we're not allowed.

(Chorus).

VI.

Oh, she's a friend to me and you
She loves us all, to all she's true.
She shares out troubles and our tears,
When we achieve, she gives three cheers!
O, she's a friend to you and me.
So many friends you never did see.

(Chorus).

After the music and laughter died away, Rev. H. E. Robinson, representing the Southern Convention, Mrs. W. B. Williams representing the Convention women, and Rev. W. J. Andes representing the Board of Christian Education each presented a gift with an appropriate speech. The gifts were three lovely pieces of "Skyway" luggage.

For once Pattie Lee was speechless!

MRS. RUSSELL V. POWELL.

* * * * *

Dr. Hatanaka Leaves Kobe College

Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, president of Kobe College, Japan since 1940, retired this spring. He accepted a call to be the pastor of the Issai Church in Honolulu. He left with his family on March 27th. Always loyal to the Christian ideals on which the college was founded, Dr. Hatanaka held Kobe College strongly, especially in the war years, against the tides that might have destroyed it. At the time of his American tour in 1949, when he was given a Doctor of Divinity Degree by his Alma Mater, Oberlin College, Professor Jelliffe said, in presenting him: "Throughout the long years of the war Hiroshi Hatanaka fought the good fight against militarism and government officialdom in his country, in the endeavor to keep the Christian traditions and principles of his institution from being utterly destroyed. That he won the fight, is in itself the highest possible tribute to his invincible spirit and to his faith in his own deepest conviction."

More recently Dr. Hatanaka has been heading a successful campaign for funds for the college. His American education and Christian upbringing, both given him by a missionary, Miss Wainwright, have made him a strong friend of the Christian movement in Japan. His preaching in the Kobe Church has been unusually strong, and the chapel at the college is always packed when Dr. Hatanaka is to be the speaker. He will be greatly missed in Japan, by the college, by all in the field of education and the Christian ministry. We count that church fortunate which has him for a pastor, and our prayers and good wishes follow him.

This is the school in which our friend, Miss Angie Crew, is a teacher.

Goodwill is the one and only asset that competition cannot undersell nor destroy.—Marshall Field.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

God has made a very wonderful world for his children. The earth's crust, the stars, the moon and even the sea water are the same as in days gone by.

The water is drawn into the clouds by the sun, the moisture floats along, the atmosphere is disturbed, and the same water falls to earth. Then the water is drawn up again and the whole story of water in a puddle, raindroplets in the air, and falling raindrops repeats itself. The sun and rain are great gifts to us.

Crystals are another of God's gifts to us. There are many kinds of crystals—in rocks and stones and in simple, every day things like salt. Snowflakes are among the most beautiful crystals in nature. If you would like to see crystals grow do this. Boil a cup of water and pour it in a clean cup, add a tablespoonful of table salt. Set the cup where you may tie a string above it and let it hang down in the cup, left alone, salt crystals will form. If you want to speed the work, put the cup in the refrigerator and you will get crystals quicker, but they will be smaller.

God's beauty is everywhere around us. We forget to look sometimes. Have you ever looked at a bird's feather under a magnifying glass? Look at the veins in a leaf. Watch for curious shaped toadstools.

* * *

Summer time is fun time and here are a few stories.

Little boy: "I would like ten cents' worth of bird seed, please."

Clerk: "How many birds do you have, sonny?"

Little boy: "None yet, I'm planning to grow some."

* * *

Teacher: "Who can describe the wind?"

Junior: "It's air that's in a hurry."

* * *

Father: "I can't understand what is the matter with my watch."

Mother: "Perhaps it should be cleaned."

Son: "Oh, no, it doesn't I washed it in the bathtub this morning."

Respect for the Home Beautiful

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

My friend, Melissa Jackson, has an engaging way of telling about her family experiences. One is of the love and understanding friendship between her and her mother-in-law.

On a certain occasion she told a group of us, "Before Jack and I were married his mother advised me with regard to our furniture, 'When you start housekeeping, buy the best, dear. Buy only what is absolutely necessary at first and then only a piece or two at a time. Cheap furniture is a poor investment.'"

"Tell us more!" A bride-to-be who was one of our group lifted sparkling black eyes from her knitting with lively interest.

"We followed those suggestions," continued Melissa. "I remember Jack remarked, 'I want our children, should we be fortunate enough to have any, to love and appreciate beautiful things. Darling, let's use our nicest china and silver all the time!' And that, my dears, is what we did."

"Our children learned to take care of valued possessions. There is scarcely a scratch on our furniture. Bob and Betty took pride and used care in washing and drying dishes. They frequently admired them, commenting on the coloring and the quality. Keeping the silver shining was no problem; they were polishing future heirlooms!"

"They acquired good taste because of their early environment!" Suzanne Summer spoke in her gentle voice.

"Yes, I am sure they did!" Melissa agreed. "I've watched our young moderns furnishing their new homes. They read, study, consult 'free decorators'—giving each purchase thoughtful consideration."

"Oh, the mistakes caused by spur-of-the-moment buying!" Florence Mathews rested her tawny head against an old-fashioned rocker as she spoke. "I remember, after Mother passed on, I decided Dad and I needed a new chair for the living room. I bought a huge overstuffed one which, to my inexperienced eyes, seemed a grand bargain. Dad took one look and shuddered. 'Send it back, child,' he said. 'Too much for your money!'"

We all laughed, thinking of similar purchases.

"To go back to children learning to take care of things," Molly, the mother of twins, joined the conversation, "a year after selling our house, including the dining-room furniture, we bought back the furniture when we moved from our apartment to another house and the owners of our old house moved to an apartment. Do you know, even though this family had seven supercharged youngsters, there wasn't a scratch on the furniture!"

"Children pretty much live up to one's expectations of them, I have found. My cousin frequently tells her brood, 'Now, fellows, enjoy the house. Dad and I will replace the furniture when you're grown-up.' Well, the 'fellows' enjoyed it all right! I wish you could see the scratches on the furniture and the spots on the walls and woodwork! It's shocking! I gave them a fine old chest of draws. It has half the knobs off the draws." So said "Aunt Beth," our neighbor, who is always interested in young people.

"Yes, children enjoy the responsibility of caring for beautiful things if they're encouraged. I remember I once suggested we have our meals in the breakfast room." Melissa reminisced. "Jack said, 'Oh, no, Lissa. That's all right for breakfast. But we mustn't lower our dignified way of living. The next step might be the kitchen table!'"

We all agreed on the importance of adhering to a well-bred standard of living.

When youngsters are allowed to tramp through a house with muddy galoshes, as I have seen them do, and bring mountainous pieces of bread dripping with jam into the living room, as I have seen them do, and break exquisite pieces of Royal Doulton or French china in tussling matches, as I have seen them come close to doing, how can you expect lively Jack and Jill to develop desirable and mature responsibility in their homes? These are extreme cases, and I am sure that you, mother, dad, are average parents with average boys and girls, like the rest of these thoughtful women who have been discussing their sons and daughters as the logs crackled in the grate. You don't have a destructive child, do you?

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Tips from Tom

Several articles have already been written on this page and in other places in THE SUN about Pattie Lee. Others will be found in this issue. Everyone regrets her leaving us and her work, and many have so expressed their feelings.

If you wish to have a part in expressing the gratitude of the youth concerning her work, write me before July 23, that it may be used in the issue of July 29, before she ends her work on the 31st.

* * * * *

I have received only two news reports in the last six weeks. There should have been at least 12 or 14 youth groups writting in. Under these conditions, we will soon be forced to discontinue this page. So please write today and send in your news.

* * * * *

Makes Second Step

One of our youngest and newest ministerial students has just made his second step in his high calling of the gospel ministry of Jesus Christ. This fine Christian young man is Lewis Guin of Norfolk, Virginia. He made his first step in his decision for the ministry, answering this call and beginning his study.

His second step was the preparation and delivery of his first sermon. Those who have traveled this road know that is a great accomplishment.

Lewis, of the Berkley section of Norfolk, entered Elon College in the summer of 1953 to study for the ministry. He has been doing fine work there in the preparation for his calling.

He filled the pulpit of his own church, Norfolk First, in the absence of his pastor, Rev. Olin B. Pendleton, on June 27, 1954. This first sermon was titled "My Church and Elon." It was reported to be a wonderful message.

Lewis has been offered the opportunity to study in school in Massachusetts, where he will also carry on church work. He has been offered the position of youth director at the Congregational Christian Church served by his former pastor, Rev. C. C. Thomas. He may wait and complete his study at Elon.

Whatever the plans for the future, we congratulate this young ambitious minister, and hope for him the greatest of success in his study and work in the future.

A Bible Temperance Catechism

Q. Does the Bible have anything to say about Alcoholic Drink?

A. Yes, the Bible has a great deal to say about it.

Q. What does the Bible say about the folly of drinking?

A. "Wine is a mocker; strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Proverbs 20:1.

Q. What does the Bible say about the results of strong drink?

A. "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babblings? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine."—Prov. 23:29-30.

Q. What is the safe way to deal with alcoholic drinks?

A. "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup; when it moveth itself aright."—Prov. 23:31.

Q. What happens to a person who gets the liquor habit?

A. "At last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Prov. 23:32.

Q. What does the Bible say about the future of a drunkard?

A. "No drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God."—I Cor. 6:9.

Q. Am I responsible for the protection of others against alcohol?

A. "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."—Romans 14:21.

Q. Is it a good thing to "treat" others to alcoholic liquor?

A. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also."—Hab. 2:15.

Q. Does Drinking lead to success in life?

A. "The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty."—Prov. 23:21.

Q. Is it good to say, "I can take it or leave it alone"?

A. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—I Cor. 10:12.

Q. Is it wrong to eat or drink anything that harms the body?

A. "Know ye not that ye are the temples of God? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy."—I Cor. 3:16-17.

Q. How shall we live and act each day?

A. "Be thou an example of the believers—in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."—I Tim. 4:14.

Q. What commandment bears against using alcohol as a drink?

A. "Thou shalt not kill."—Exodus 20:13.

Q. Can a follower of Jesus be a drinker?

A. "Be not among winebibbers."—Prov. 23:20; "Keep thyself pure."—I Tim. 5:12.

Q. Does what we eat or drink matter to a Christian?

A. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—I Cor. 10:31.

—Selected.

Leads Liquor-Ad Parade

Life Magazine carried three times as much liquor advertising in 1953 as its nearest competitor (Time—another Luce publication), reports the American Issue. Of the $22,410,943 spent for magazine liquor advertising last year, six magazines carried 81.5 per cent of the total. They were:

Life, $9,040,499;
Time, $3,006,044;
Colliers, $2,070,743;
Look, $1,714,044;
The New Yorker, $1,336,115; and Newsweek, $1,094,024.

The other magazines in the top ten were:

Esquire, $885,818;
True, $590,531;
Holiday, $522,743, and
U. S. News and World Report,
$346,209.

Life carried 583 pages of the 2,494 total pages of Magazine liquor advertising in 1953.

—Exchange,

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Christian Worship and Fellowship

MEMORY SELECTION: Hebrews 10: 23-25.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Colossians 3: 12-17; Acts 2: 46, 47; Hebrews 10: 23-25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 122.

After Joining the Church.

The story is told of a little girl who fell out of bed. When her mother rushed into the room, picked her up, and asked her how it happened, she said, "Mummy, I believe I went to sleep too close to the place where I got in." All unwittingly, that little girl diagnosed the trouble with so many members of the church—they go to sleep too near the place where they get in, and too soon. They fail to strengthen and to develop and to enrich their inner ties by Christian worship and Christian fellowship.

But not so with the Christians of the early church. Consider these new converts as reported by Luke in the second chapter of Acts, that section which comprises a part of our "Background Scripture" for today's lesson.

They had just been converted by Peter's sermon at Pentecost and by the Holy Spirit. What did they do? "They continued steadfast in the apostles' doctrine (or teaching) and fellowship and in breaking of bread and in prayers . . . and they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple and breaking bread from house to house . . . praising God, and having favor with all the people." They were eager to learn, they attended services of worship, they prayed, they associated themselves with God's people, with the members of the church of that day. They availed themselves of two great factors in a growing Christian life—Christian Worship and Christian Fellowship.

What does it mean to belong to a Christian fellowship? John Haynes Holmes puts it thus: "It will be agreed that fellowship is the controlling truth of life, the essence alike of morals and religion! And that the maintenance of fellowship is our primary duty. The men of the May- flower, in the famous voyage across the Atlantic, signed a compact binding themselves to stay together when they landed, and not to go off, wandering, singly and in small groups, into the wilderness. They did this as an expression of their fidelity to God and to each other, and as the sole means of securing the safety of the community. Fellowship is life; the lack of fellowship is death. Fellowship is heaven, and the lack of fellowship is hell; and the things which we do upon earth, it is for the fellowship's sake that we shall do them."

A layman had been absent from church for several Sundays. On the third Sunday evening, the pastor of the church called on him. The minister found him sitting alone before his fireplace on which a fire was burning merrily. The layman expected a sharp rebuke from his pastor, but the pastor made no direct mention of the man's absence from church. As they talked together, however, the minister picked up the tongs hanging by the fireplace and plucked a burning coal from the fire and laid it on the hearth. At first it continued to blaze like the other coals in the fire. But soon it lost its blaze, and simply glowed. Then it gradually cooled, until it was only a dark hunk of ash. Then the minister picked up the dull clinker and placed it back on the fire. Almost immediately it burst again into flame! The layman said "I get the point parson. I'll be at church next Sunday morning!"

There is an extra-biblical saying of Jesus as follows, "He that is near me is near the fire." "Not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." It is like the custom of some, indeed of many, to forsake the assembling of themselves together for Christian worship and Christian fellowship. In so doing they are neglecting a means of grace and a means of growth. When a man's record of church attendance stands at zero, it is not likely that his interest in the Kingdom, or even in the church, is at the boiling point.

Going to church should be a habit.

But it should go beyond duty to privilege. Men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls, ought to be glad when someone says, "Let us go into the house of the Lord." And they ought to enter "into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise." It was the custom of Jesus to go to the church of his day. The disciple ought not to be above his Lord.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

What About Cigarettes?

From the standpoint of health this subject seems to be more in the public mind now than ever. There must be a reason.

The facts presented here are authentic.

Dr. Clarence William Liek in Readers Digest of December, '53 says: "Tobacco, altho a poison relaxes the body and oppresses the mind." It is full of grave yard physical ills.

Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins University shows that up to the age of 50 the death rate of heavy smokers is more than double that of non-smokers. Studies made by cancer, stomach and heart specialists all indicate pernicious effects from the use of tobacco. Listen to radio broadcasts, "Not a cough in a carload," "More doctors smoke ———s."

Nicotine is a deadly poison. One drop placed on a cat's tongue and he goes into convulsions. Sweepings from the floors of tobacco packing houses are boiled and the juice used to make disinfectant and insect poisons.

Many doctors now agree that decreased sexual activity may be traced to smoking. The reason given is that tobacco causes toxic changes in the blood that destroys the hormones. This is more true in the case of women than men. A man can switch to a pipe or a cigar. This leaves the poor female no alternative. Over the radio she hears: "Reach for a ——— instead of a sweet."

After years of careful research the American Medical Association has recommended that the leading magazines refuse to run cigarette advertisements. Liquor and cigarettes go together. Why is it that smokers want to "light up" right after a meal? The poison of the nicotine upsets the digestion. Doctors' waiting times to wait faithfully for the next case.

(Continued on page 15.)

THE NAVY RECRUIT AND HIS CHAPLAIN.

(Continued from page 5.)

Through the help of the Chaplain, the recruit finds that in many instances of an emergency nature he may appeal to Navy Relief for financial aid. In such a case, a Red Cross verification is not always needed, and often the recruit may get a financial loan by showing that conditions are such that he merits such a grant. These conditions are carefully looked into by Navy Relief and with the Chaplain as a close cooperative factor, a satisfactory conclusion can usually be reached.

The Chaplain also finds himself called upon to participate on other boards which pertain to the welfare of the recruit. For example, he regularly serves on the Aptitude Board which through screening and survey, determines whether some men should be detached from Naval service. At such times it is often recommended that the man under consideration be given special psychiatric counsel. In addition to service on this board the Chaplain is always present at Captain's Mast, where he finds himself in close contact with each case presented.

But a pleasanter aspect of the Chaplain's counsel is that of marriage guidance. For it often happens that a recruit who has advanced in his maturity and financial stability desires to marry. At such times the Navy Chaplain of the man's denomination is called in to perform the ceremony. The marriage usually takes place in the beautiful North Chapel which has seen a constant stream of service weddings since it was built in 1942. Yet, in such lovely surroundings, each couple must feel the newness of their undertaking as they step to the altar and pronounce their vows in the presence of the Navy Chaplain.

Marriage guidance, however, is only one phase of a much larger and comprehensive program of religious instruction. For not only do the Chaplains themselves instruct through private interview, but also on a greater scale regular religious instruction classes have been organized to deal with the number of recruits who have stated their desire to further their education in their own faith or to study that faith which most appeals to their conscience. These instruction classes, which are so large in some cases that civilian instructors must be brought in to help with the program, prepare each and every recruit attending them for a strong and sure basis for belief in his faith and are considered to be of the greatest importance by all members of the Chaplains Department.

But the very foundation from which all Chaplains work is the divine service carried on by each denomination. The Chaplain Department is confronted with the problem of scheduling services to provide for as many of the major faiths as is possible. Aboard the Naval Training Center services are held for Catholic, Jewish, Protestant, Latter-Day Saints, Christian Science, and Greek Orthodox personnel. Communion is a general practice during the Episcopal, Lutheran, Baptist, general Protestant and Roman Catholic service. In addition to these regular weekly services, special Baptismal and Confirmation services are periodically arranged for the convenience of recruits who wish to embrace the Faith. Even those recruits who have stated their wish to be free of any sort of religious ties are required to attend special character guidance classes given in the offices of the Chaplain. Every effort is made to give each and every recruit at the Naval Training Center the moral and spiritual background so necessary in his becoming a better individual and therefore a greater asset to the Navy and to his country.

MEN ELECT OFFICERS AT THE LARGEST MEETING.

(Continued from page 3.)

Charles Glover of Illinois, John Gray of Indiana, Rex Jordan of Washington, Charles Kennedy of Nebraska, Lloyd Morton of Massachusetts, Dr. Fred Richards of Oregon, William Richardson of Rhode Island, Lynn Sheldon, William Smith of Wisconsin and William Zell of Pennsylvania. The national committee elected a seventeen-member board of directors which will serve for the biennium, 1954-56.

The men's meeting on Sunday in the Law School auditorium was the largest gathering of men at any council meeting. Clarence Beasley, president of the International Council of the Laymen's Fellowship, brought greetings from that group and reported on the recent meeting held at St. Andrews, Scotland. Robert Cashman, retiring moderator of the General Council, reported on his travels and observations of the last two years and Mr. Graham spoke on the coming first nation-wide convention of Congregational Christian Churehmen to be held at the Palmer House in Chicago, Illinois, February 25-27, 1955.

One of the most impressive occasions of the entire council meeting was the serving of communion to approximately 2,800 people on the first night of the sessions by eighty-two deacons who were commissioned in a service conducted by Dr. Douglas Horton.

Laymen were not only present in large numbers but took part in all group meetings and business sessions. Scores of them were elected to positions of responsibility on boards, commissions and committees. Speakers of the combined laymen's and women's evening program, after the dedication of the Woman's Gift, were Dr. and Mrs. Elton Trueblood.

The evening "bull session," held every night at the close of the official meetings, gave the laymen a chance to discuss the happenings of the day, to exchange information about their work at home and to enjoy fellowship on an informal basis. Various members of the national committee presided over these meetings, which opened and closed with prayer.

Dr. Horton met each morning with a group of the deacons for prayer, spiritual fellowship and a discussion of the program of the day before as well as of the coming day. Laymen left the New Haven council meeting feeling that it was good to have been there.—Advance.

Flag Pledge Has Interesting History

The House of Representatives, following the lead of the Senate, unanimously approved adding the words "under God" to the pledge of allegiance to the flag, in time for President Eisenhower to sign it before the observance of Flag Day, June 14.

Under the approved resolution the flag pledge will be to "one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice to all."

The pledge of allegiance to the flag was first given national publicity in the celebration of Columbus Day, in October, 1892. The pledge had been published in the Youth's Companion for September 8, 1892. During the celebration it was repeated by more than 12,000,000 public school children throughout the Union.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the good report this week. Thank you for the coupons, the clothing, the funds and the kindly vacations you are giving many of our children. The weather is very discouragingly dry here as it is over the country around here. Our pastures are brown, our corn is going back fast—only small areas of garden is being kept in a growing condition with our limited irrigation system. All we can do is to try hard and leave the increase to our heavenly Father.

The School of Missions meeting here this week has honored us with a visit. Around 100 of them came over in a city bus and some of their own automobiles. They stopped first at our beautiful Holt Memorial Chapel. It met with their enthusiastic approval. We were so glad, too, that Mr. Vitus R. Holt, president of our Board and one of the donors of the chapel, was here to turn them in and to receive their hearty applause for himself and the other members of the family of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. Kirk Holt.

One of the questions asked by some members of the School of Missions was: "Are you still collecting coupons?" Yes, yes indeed, we are. All who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN—and I do hope their number will greatly increase—know how much we need these coupons. They are almost worthless except in the thousands, but if every ladies organization in the convention had some one person designated to ask at each meeting: "Does any one have any coupons for the orphanage today?" Just that question repeated each month in every organization could mean a great deal to us here.

We hope our Home-Coming this year will be one of the biggest and best in the history of the orphanage. On that day there will be held the business session of the Home-Coming Society at 11:00 o'clock. At that meeting plans will be furthered concerning the installation of the cold-storage compartments by the former children of the orphanage in memory of their beloved late Charles D. Johnston. The Society has already put in the bank over $2,400.00 to that purpose. And this amount has come in voluntarily without any concerted effort to get it. It is no surprise, however, because they never had a better friend than Charles D. Johnston. It is good that one of the main buildings here bears his name, and that he is indelibly written into their hearts and minds.

This week we have been encouraged by a bequest of $1,000.00 from the will of the late J. R. Saunders, of our Holy Neek Church. How good it was for this kind friend to remember the Christian Orphanage in his will! No one in his church held a more universal esteem than did Jobie Saunders. He honored the good name he bore and his family and his Church by helping the instution of the church which cares for homeless children.

The help of many friends and the touch of sometimes soiled, little hands give me Joy. Today a little girl brushed the soiled spot off of my shirt with her perspiration covered little, dirty hands, and the more she "cleaned" the spot the larger it got, but she tried, and was thanked with all my heart.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JULY 15, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:
Mrs. Burton Daniels, Beaufort, N. C.
Miss Beatrice George, South Norfolk, Va.
Mrs. Gordan Bridges, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. T. Hayes Holland, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. H. B. Berry, Danville, Va.
Coupons:
Mrs. R. L. Gilliam, Sr., Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. E. N. Pearee, Burlington, N. C.
Iris McEwen Class, Burlington, First Ch.
Coupons and buttons:
Mrs. D. J. Kelley, Richmond, Va.
Buttons and canned goods:
Mrs. A. P. Coble, Greensboro, N. C.
Buttons:
Mrs. E. W. Neville, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
Amount brought forward	$ 7,341.76
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Auburn S. S.	$ 58.25
Liberty (Vauce)	21.03
New Elam	2.00
	81.28
Eastern Va. Couference:
Portsmouth, Elm Ave. ..	$ 20.00
Suffolk S. S.	150.00
	170.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Elk Spur S. S.	$ 5.00
Greensboro, First	50.24
Mebaue	10.00
Reidsville S. S.	53.00
	118.24
Western N. C. Conference:
Bennett	$ 5.00
Pleasant Cross S. S.	7.30
Shiloh S. S.	19.90
	32.20
Virgiaia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.	$ 2.00
Bethlehem S. S.	16.75
Dry Run S. S.	2.49
Linville S. S.	5.84
Winchester S. S.	8.34
	35.42
Total	$ 437.14
Grand total	$ 7,778.90

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$19,469.60
Woman's Auxiliary, Holland Christian Church ..	$ 10.00
Bertha S. Mitchell S. S.
Class, Liberty (Vance)
Church	10.00
Chester H. Roth Co.—
interest	7.50
Vacation Bible School,
Ingram, Va., Church ..	5.00
Special Gifts	502.50
	535.00
Grand total	$20,004.60
Total for the week	$ 972.14
Total for the year	$27,783.50

MEMORIAL GIFTS
"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

..... (Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)

..... (Survivor to be Written) (Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

CARR.

We, the members of the Women's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, wish in this manner to express our love and respect for the life of Mrs. Virgie Williams Carr, who passed away on June 13, 1954.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That God's way is always best, and that we bow in humble submission to our Father's will

2. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's Holy Spirit may give them comfort and consolation in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to be recorded in the minutes of this society, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Respectfully submitted:

Mrs. F. H. JOHNSON,

Mrs. E. W. BEALE,

Committee.

"The Student Prince"

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

With many embellishments and three new vocal interpolations, this well-known operetta with the Sig-mund Romberg score and which has entertained two generations will give evocative pleasure to many. It comes to the screen as a most lavish Cinema Scope production in Anseo Color. It is still the story of the prince who loves the barmaid but who eventually gives her up as a concession to his duty and to the affairs of state when he becomes king. The voice of the prince is supplied by Mario Lanza. Edmund Purdom makes a handsome Karl with the proper arrogance when his role demands it. Ann Blyth is a niece Kathie, in good voice and with a beautiful wardrobe. Louis Calhern is in excellent style as the old king who wants his grandson to acquire worldly wisdom before he succeeds him on the throne. The students are in boisterous mood in the Heidelberg tavern and join their voices in well modulated chorus. While much of their singing is motivated by the drinking of foaming steins of beer, the vivacious tempo of the music is remembered more than the topic of the songs. Satisfaction is obtained in a duel as demanded by tradition, with the resulting cheek sears as proof of the encounter. Comedy is provided by the pompous inkeeper, the prince's tutor and his formidable valet. It seems that, for a graustarkian kingdom with a depleted treasury, functions are run on a grand scale, as shown in munificent court ball and for mourning vigil whose setting is more reminiscent of a cathedral than of a court chapel, but we suppose it may be a part of the over-all spectacular effect for the production of this quasi-fairy tale.

Audio-Visual Educational Films

A hundred miles of film will go through movie projectors in the only projection room of its kind in the world at the International Workshop in Audio-Visual Education at Green Lake, Wis., August 30-September 4. Although films are but one phase of the program at the workshop, the quantity of productions to be reviewed requires that sixteen sound motion picture projectors be operated simultaneously in the same room.

The light beams even cross one another and the reviewers use ear phones, so that each person hears only the sound track of the film he is watching. This has been made possible by the manufacturers who will loan projection equipment. The latest development in audio-visuals will be demonstrated at an equipment "fair." Previews of a score of the most outstanding of 150 new religious productions will be shown. "Martin Luther" was among those shown at the workshop last year.

Audio-visuals are becoming so widely used in churches, reports Rev. George B. Ammon, director of the workshop, that "they should be planned for before building." Mr. Ammon is associate secretary for audio-visual aids of the United Lutheran Church and chairman of the A-V committee of the National Council of Churches, which sponsors the workshop. Presenting plans and blueprints for inclusion of audio-visuals in church buildings will be Harry F. Atkinson, director of the National Council's department of church building and architecture.

Also to be presented will be the report of the Eastman Kodak Co. research-survey on the extent of use of A-V's in churches. A keynote speaker will be Rev. S. Franklin Mack, executive director of the Broadcasting and Film Commission. Other A-V authorities on the "faculty" will be Dr. John W. Baehman of Union Theological Seminary, Dr. A. W. Vander-rooms are filled with patients who are neither sick nor well. Examination shows that a very large percentage of these are inveterate smokers. It is surprising, say the doctors, how many are cured by simply giving up smoking. Insomnia, nervousness, shortness of breath, irregular heart beat disappear. The easiest way to stop smoking is not to try to taper off. Stop at once. Imagine that the very smell of tobacco smoke would be nauseating. The writer has seen this tried. It's the inhaling that does the damage. If the smoke is exhaled through the nose the absorption of poison will be greater. The hotter the smoke the greater the danger.

Meer of Pennsylvania State College, Dr. Ernest J. Tiemann of the University of Texas, and Dr. Paul Wagner of the Film Council of America.

WHAT ABOUT CIGARETTES?

(Continued from page 12.)

Manufactures of cigarettes are wise. Nearly all are making them now in the "king-size." The smoker gets more for his money.

Then there's the "smoke filtered" cigarette. The smoker feels that he isn't absorbing so much of the poison. Next comes the denicotinized cigarette. The smoker thinks he can smoke so many more. The yellow stain on the fingers tell the story. To get rid of this use a long cigarette holder. Perhaps some day a synthetic tobacco can be produced that will satisfy the appetite without doing so much damage.

S. M. SMITH.

If you are poor, work. If you are burdened with seemingly unfair responsibilities, work. If you are happy, work. Idleness gives room for doubts and fears. If disappointments come, keep right on working. If sorrow overwhelms you, and loved ones seem not true, work. If health is threatened, work. When faith falters and reason fails, just work. When dreams are shattered and hope seems dead, work. Work as if your life were in peril. It really is. No matter what ails you, work. Work faithfully—work with faith. Work is the very greatest remedy available for both mental and physical afflictions.

—Korsaren.

Don't expect to be paid a dollar an hour for your working hours, when you use your leisure hours as though they were not worth a dime a dozen.

—H. L. Doherty.

Daniel--Foreign Missionary

By The Late DR. J. O. ATKINSON

When one wants a half hour of real good reading—thrills, adventure, courage, breath-taking experiences—try Daniel. No other book in the Bible, or out of it either, is quite like it.

The hero, the one whose name the book bears, is different. He is a nobleman, a prince of the blood royal and a genuine aristocrat. There are aristocrats who make the heart sick—the ones who boast of their blood, but never do anything to add any worth to it, and depend upon what they have to carry them through, rather than what they are.

Daniel was a king's captive, but when the king wanted to wine him and dine him on dainties and indulgencies, Daniel would have none of it. Let those who wished, feed and drink of the king's dainties, but none of it for Daniel. He would eat nothing, drink nothing, though all the others were doing it, that would weaken his body or becloud his mind. He was a man even if he was a prisoner.

Daniel, as a character of the Bible, differs in another particular. His ministry was all to kings, princes, the high and mighty. One recalls that when God commissioned Paul to preach, he said, "For he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings, and the children of Israel." Not so Daniel. He was God's chosen vessel to bear his name before the mightiest kings of the earth—and to them only, so far as the Book reads.

One day when a complete history of nations and civilizations is written, it is certain to be shown that some of the most lavish, luxurious and cultured civilizations have long since perished from the earth and have left few relics or remnants of their power, abundance or achievements. Some of these mighty kings, lords of all creation, lived and reigned in Daniel's day, and among these high and mighty, Daniel lived, wrought and preached.

And God certainly dealt with a high and mighty hand, through Prince Daniel, with these "kings of kings, and lords of all the earth." That which makes Daniel a real prince among princes is the fact that he did not bow down nor become obeisant to any of them; but in their presence, surrounded with all their power, Daniel dared to tell them the genuine, bare and naked truth.

Preachers are sometimes accused of preaching to please the rich and the great. Not so, Daniel. He told one of the mightiest of kings of all time just where to "head in and get off."

One sometimes wonders if what is called the "social gospel" is not a gospel of fear and intimidations—a "gospel" directed at conditions in general and people in the abstract. That is easy and requires little courage. But Preacher Daniel, a foreign missionary, in a heathen land, preaching to heathen rulers and monarchs, dared stand up to their faces and preach the gospel of righteousness, and to denounce their high and godless way of living. And Preacher Daniel brought these mighty kings to acknowledge his God as the true and living God. Look at the acceptance of the true and living God by that formerly idolatrous and wicked King Nebuchadnezzar (Daniel 4: 73), "Now I, Nebuchadnezzar, praise and extol and honor the King of Heaven: for all his words are true, and his ways justice: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase."

Daniel, a captive in a foreign land, remained a prince among princes, and preached the gospel of repentance and salvation with such force, rigor and power that he was honored and exalted among men, even in a heathen land, and the secret is all told in these words, "And this man Daniel was prepared, because an excellent spirit was in him."

Take this text he used one day in preaching to the king, "Wherefore, O king, break off thy sins by righteousness and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor."

If you don't believe in foreign missions, then leave Daniel out of your reading and your reckoning. Daniel is a Book written by a foreign missionary to heathen peoples.

November, 1937.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1954

NUMBER 29

Assurance of Things Hoped For

By WILLIAM H. LEACH

Editor of "Church Management"

"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for."— Hebrews 11:1.

MANY of us today need assurance that God is back of this universe—that there is a purpose in its creation, and that it is moving in a definite program. We need the assurance expressed by Alfred Lord Tennyson that there is "... one far off divine event, To which the whole creation moves."

We mortals are always limited in our vision. We see the world immediately about us. As children, we judged the whole world by the homes in which we lived. As we grew older it became the school community. Now as adults, and thanks to modern communications, we see an entire world. It is brought to our homes by the newspaper, radio and pictures.

It is a confused and troubled world. There is so much evil in it that we question any divine purpose for its creation. How can God permit the pestilences, the wars, the murders, the oppressions which are daily occurrences in this world? Out of this disorder can order come?

Unfortunately, we are still limited because we see the world only in the eyes of our own time. A little glimpse of history, perhaps, influences our vision. But none of us sees the future clearly.

Limited in this way, some of us lack faith in an orderly universe. We fear that some mechanical explosion created the world and that it has neither purpose nor order. In such a concept there is no place for piety. In such a world all must be black. There is no place for the divine spirit. We need to escape from such pessimism.

We hope for an orderly world with a divine purpose. Give us faith that the thing hoped for is true; ... bring us the satisfaction which comes with the belief that God is in his heavens; all shall be well with the world.

News Flashes

Rev. Howard P. Bozarth who recently resigned the pastorate at Elon College, is visiting in New England. He will leave for Yankton, S. D., to assume his new work there on about August 20.

Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro have gone to Nashville, Tenn., to visit their son, Rowland at Vanderbilt University. The Rev. A. Lanson Granger preached in First Church, Greensboro, on last Sunday.

The United Christian Youth Movement now has state youth councils in 37 states, eight of them having been established within the past year. The General Council of the organization will be held, beginning August 28, at Williams Bay, Wisconsin.

Rev. William J. Andes has resigned from his pastorate at Winston-Salem, N. C., and accepted the call to the Elon College Community Church. He will begin his pastorate there on September 1, 1954. His formal acceptance is announced by Mr. George D. Colelough, chairman of the Pulpit Supply Committee.

Addressing a national Conference on Juvenile Delinquency which was recently held in Washington, Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said: "Juvenile delinquency has grown with tremendous rapidity in the past five years. The number of delinquent youths appearing in courts is at an all-time high and there appears to be an increasing violence in the acts of some adolescents. For the most part, youngsters who appear before courts come from families that are economically insecure, but money alone cannot cure juvenile delinquency. It takes community, as well as individual, action to provide the solution."

Under a resolution recently adopted by the Delaware State Board of Education, released-time religious instruction in Delaware public schools has been banned. Dr. George R. Miller, Jr., state superintendent of public instruction, in announcing the action of the board, said, "The separation of church and state is a fundamental principle of democratic government in the United States. . . . The administration of public education is a state function . . . and has been most generously supported by the state. . . . To divert any part of the funds so allocated, or to use any portion of the time so designated, to the use of particular religious faiths, would be, in the opinion of the board, a violation of the principle of the separation of church and state."

Salem Chapel Will Observe 100th Anniversary, and Dedicate Remodeled Building

The Salem Chapel Congregational Christian Church, in Forsyth County, North Carolina, will observe its 100th anniversary and the dedication of its remodeled building on the first Sunday in August. Dr. Wm. T. Scott will preach the sermon in the morning and will preside at the dedicatory services.

The centennial exercises will be observed in the afternoon, with Mr. Wade L. Marshall, chairman of the Board of Deacons, presiding.

The exact date of the organization of the church is indefinite. However, it dates back to the early 19th century. At that time it was started with three members in a one-room log school house approximately one mile northeast of the present building.

In the spring of 1854 a white frame building was erected on the site of an old camp meeting ground, and through the years this building has undergone only minor repairs.

In the autumn of 1952, it was felt by the pastor, Rev. Clyde O. Koon at that time, the members and friends of the church that major repairs and remodeling were necessary in order to preserve the old building. At that time plans were formulated for the renovation which soon followed.

The building has been brick veneered outside and refinished on the inside. A choir loft and vestibule have been added to the original structure. New pews, chancel furniture and chimes have been installed as memorial gifts.

Some of the former pastors of this church were: J. W. Pinnix, 1876-1878; W. T. Walker, 1888-1890; J. W. Holt, 1891-1894 (Mr. Holt was ordained into the ministry at this church in 1876); L. I. Cox, 1897-1899; W. S. Long, 1900; W. T. Herndon, 1902-1904; C. C. Peele, 1904.

LUCY KATE STRADER,
Reporter.

The North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention

The North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention met at Hopedale Church, near Burlington, N. C., on July 15, 1954.

The convention was called to order by the president, Mr. Martin T. Garren. The opening prayer and welcome was by the pastor of Hopedale Church, Rev. J. Harold Loman. The theme was "Sunday Schools to Meet the Challenge of Our Times."

The roll call of the convention showed the following facts: There are 50 churches in this convention; of these 38 reported and paid their membership dues to an amount of $567.40. Expenses amounted to $19.60, the balance to be paid into the treasury of the Convention Office. There were approximately 200 in attendance. These included 17 ministers, 7 Sunday school superintendents, and 38 teachers.

The feature address, "The Place of the Sunday School in the Church," was by Dr. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of First Church, Greensboro, N. C. He delighted his audience with his quiet, forceful delivery. He told us of the master minds that have improved our Sunday School Lesson plans, and reminded us that the Sunday school is the most fertile field for church recruitment. He gave these as some of the aims of a Sunday school: Where God comes in, lead to understand Jesus, to make a better world church and more Christian homes. He said that the key person in the Sunday school is the teacher, who should be active, alert and consecrated to his work.

The worship services in the morning were conducted by the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Lakeview Community Church, which they followed in their printed bulletin form. In the afternoon, Shallow Ford Sunday School used readings which were well presented and thought provoking.

There were many tributes paid to Pattie Lee Coghill orally, and a love offering taken amounting to $29.58.

In appreciation to the church women of the Hopedale Church for their generosity in providing a sumptuous meal, a collection of $65.11 was given them to use for the church as they thought best.

A panel demonstration of the work of the Board of Christian Education in the local church was given by Mr. Martin Garren, chairman; Marion Foust on Music; Rev. John Lackey on

(Continued on page 7.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Laymen's Sunday

October 17 has been selected as Laymen's Sunday throughout the United States. The theme which has been selected for this year's program is "A Time for Decision." All of us are familiar with the hymn:

Once to ev'ry man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood,
For the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah,
Off'ring each the bloom or blight,
And the choice goes by forever
'Twixt that darkness and that light.

We are printing some suggestions from the material furnished by the United Church Men in cooperation with the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, Incorporated.

* * *

THE PURPOSE:

Laymen's Sunday recognizes the modern crusade of Christian laymen for Christ and his Church.

Laymen are on the march today. The signs of the times clearly indicate this. In some twenty of the major Protestant denominations, well organized laymen's movements are under way. In the local churches throughout the country, laymen are becoming participating members—true partners with their pastors and ministers.

Moreover, laymen are exercising their faith through their everyday life. "The Christian and His Daily Work" is a theme now echoed widely. The Christian approach to world problems, to civic concerns, to social issues is being stressed. Prayer in its application to everyday happenings at home and on the street is better understood and more effectively practiced.

For more than a decade certain communions and churches have observed a special day for men. Happily, the time has come when the third Sunday in October is universally observed by the major denominations gathered together in United Church Men and by the Laymen's Movement. This year it is expected that in more than a hundred thousand churches the celebration will take place on October 17. The observance may be variously named Men's Day, Brotherhood Day, or Laymen's Sunday, but the theme, "A Time for Decision," was the choice of representatives of the various participating bodies.

What an opportunity to dramatize the rise of the men in the churches to a new sense of their vital place in the Christian enterprise.

THE METHOD:

1. Selection of Leaders. The success of the Laymen's Sunday program when the men of the church "take over" in their home church may well be determined by the way we select the team to lead in the worship of their congregation.

This team may include:

One man to preside—giving the call to worship or opening prayer, announcing the order of worship if that be the custom, conducting the offertory, etc.

One or more men to lead in prayer.

One or more men to read the scripture lessons.

One or more men to lead in a litany or responsive reading.

One or more men to make the address or addresses.

In selecting this team, bear in mind the following:

a. The men should have the capacity to do their work well. It would be folly to select one who stumbles over words to read the morning lesson.

b. New voices are welcome. There is opportunity here for those who

(Continued on page 13.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church
Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Individual and the Individualist

God has highly exalted the individual human being. The Creation Story tells us, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." But so high is God's appreciation of the worth and dignity of the individual that we never see any two individuals who are exactly alike. Even between identical twins there are wide dissimilarities of personality traits and spiritual characteristics.

God also has manifested his wisdom by the creation of infinite variety in all that he has caused to be. The botanist tells us that there is a difference in the structure of any two leaves growing upon the same tree. Surely man has every reason to thank God that persons are not exactly alike. The confusion that would arise if all people were alike would drive every one insane. And if the confusion did not drive men crazy, the monotony would.

However, it was never the intention of God that individualism should run rampant. That too can make confusion worse confounded. In order that man might be able to curb his individual thoughts, actions and words within the proper limits, God gave man a mind which can comprehend the thoughts, wishes and plans of other men. He endowed man with a will whereby his actions may be directed according to a plan. He touched man with the power of imagination whereby he might know the dangers into which his individualism might carry him.

Then, when mind, conscience, imagination and will failed to hold the individual within the proper bounds, God revealed the beauty, glory and power of divine love in the life of Jesus Christ. God was saying through Christ, There is something more important than self; There is something bigger than that which can be compassed within the limitations of the individual life; There is no way whereby the fulness of life can be realized except within the right relations with all other individuals.

The individualist is an individual who has become an egoist. Few things which can happen to a person are worse than that. Being an individual is man's glory. Being an individualist is man's shame and dishonor.

Non-Segregation

In the Report of the Resolutions Committee, adopted by the General Council in its New Haven session, there was a section dealing with non-segregation. For the information of readers of The Christian Sun we are giving that entire section:

Whereas we proclaim the word of God that all are made of one blood to dwell upon the earth as part of one human family, and

Whereas our General Council has called repeatedly for a non-segregated church in a non-segregated society, and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has declared segregation in tax-supported accommodations and services, including the public schools, to be contrary to the Constitution:

Be It Resolved, That we recommend that local churches, where segregation has prevailed, move toward ways in which they and all churches can open their membership to all persons on a simple basis of faith and character, and that we call on Congregational Christian colleges, agencies and institutions to practice non-segregation and non-discrimination in enrollment, employment, church extension and church conservation; and

Be It Resolved, That we call upon all Americans to undertake timely and tolerant implementation of the Supreme Court decision, and that our Department of Race Relations and the Council for Social Action carry forward such activities as will develop public support for the Supreme Court decisions.

It is probably known to all our readers that the Southern Baptist Convention and the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church have taken very similar actions on this question within recent weeks. The actions taken by the Baptists and the Presbyterians were more detailed and more emphatic than the resolutions of the Congregational Christians.

In the light of Christ's teachings concerning Christian brotherhood, Christian fellowship and Christian love, it is difficult to see how any Christian group could take any other action or make any contrary pronouncement on the issue in question, if it were going to face the situation squarely.

It should also be noted that the actions of the three denominations did not place any mandate or restriction upon the local church. The Baptists and the Congregational Christians could not, and the Presbyterians did not. It is a matter, however, of such deep and far-reaching principles and implications, that the local church must eventually face it.

Our Testimony in the South

By DR. RICHARD K. MORTON, Jacksonville, Florida

In the South, our Congregational Christian churches have a definite and distinctive ministry to perform. There are specific ways to implement and promote this ministry.

We likewise have some needs which are more or less peculiar to our own area.

Concerning the ministry we may perform, we might mention first our responsibility to those who come day by day and year by year from points north and west. They have left their homes temporarily or permanently—many of them being where our denomination is quite strong—and, if not befriended and encouraged, they can easily be lost to us.

Recognizing this, all churches at all suitably located should send visitors and literature to places where these people can be found: hotels, motels, information bureaus, and the like. Our State Conference officers and offices could perhaps serve a little more definitely as means of putting these travelers or new settlers in touch with churches in particular and the life of the South in general.

This project manifestly has too many facets to have them all dealt with in any fullness here. However, our churches may also help to serve to interpret the background and the present needs of these people to the Southern areas where they will locate, temporarily or permanently.

It is possible in some areas, I think, to establish roadside shrines of a simple nature, at beauty spots where motorists might stop to rest and eat; and also to locate strategically information booths or centers where travelers will see them. Greater contact can also be maintained between local churches in the South and those in the Northern and Western fields.

After some considerable study and experience, here and in the North, with both youth and adult groups, I still see the merit of instituting—perhaps with the cooperation of educational institutions and the churches—an Institute of the South. This annual conclave could draw delegates and visitors from all of our Southeastern fields and could have as leaders nationally known figures as well as our own workers. Each year some poignant problem in human relations or in intersectional understanding could be chosen for analysis and discussion. We need a truly scholarly and representative treatment of many issues paramount in this area and to come to a better understanding, on our own part, of what the South is, what it can do, and how best its resources may be utilized.

Our ministry must also help to interpret our free and autonomous churches to the indigenous population. Our traditions, to some extent at least, come from backgrounds not fully understood or accepted by people of other denominations. We have problems associated also with the fact that in most communities we are definitely a minority group; and as such, we often do not have as large churches or as adequate equipment as other churches around us do. We may be located so as to serve only our own small parish from a central point. We may not be drawn into community life and affairs as some other groups are. We may have to compete with conservative and aggressive groups on a basis which greatly handicaps us.

Having been rebuffed or kept aloof for some time, perhaps some of our groups have not been as persistent to try to work out ways of being of service to our field as they might.

Chiefly, I think, we must, by the depth of our faith and the vigor of our labors and the sincere love of people, show those around us that our faith and our polity have elements in them of great value which those of any area might well investigate. We must make our own testimony as valuable as possible. Perhaps many others would join us, out of the ranks of many denominations as well as from none at all, if they saw our lives and our works were of obvious worth.

This witnessing must find channels and implements, and it must be of ever greater content. It must be shaped in accordance with local needs. We are little known, and greater religious groups are resurgent around us. But this is no cause for defeatism and do-nothingism. We are not going to attract people to our churches until and unless we can show them that we have some vibrant enthusiasms, some basic beliefs that are worth cherishing, and are ready to perform definite services to the field we seek to serve.

Our polity and our church social life, especially its midweek or week-day life, can be adapted to meet distinctly Southern needs.

The Congregational Christian tradition, also, has been one of freedom and individual responsibility and enterprise, but it has also been characterized by a social conscience and by the desire to implement its principles. It has not kept within the four walls of its meeting house. It has been ready to co-operate with other groups. It has sought to inspire and to aid community projects. And in our own field it has a glorious opportunity to show the merits of a free faith, based on individual faith, testimony, as it goes forth to meet the problems of its own time.

We have always valued the inner spirit and the development of genuine personal faith and happiness, more than ritual or ceremony or hierarchies or ecclesiastical authority and trappings.

Our broad faith, our honest approach to religious and special problems, and our willingness to co-operate with all persons of faith and responsibility, coupled with our eagerness to put ideas into action, should mean many a blessing to the South.

We have our needs and our problems as well—some of them stemming out from our ministry and our methods of implementing it.

We have a need for mutual counsel on the best ways of promoting a liberal, free, community-minded faith in a situation often filled with the aggressive action of others, and with the hostility of prejudiced people who think our tradition heretical and suspect.

We need more of a sense of our common purpose throughout the Southeast. Distances keep many of us apart, but there is no reason why we should not have projects and enterprises in which we all share, whether or not they call for regional or State-wide meetings.

We have not gone systematically and seriously enough into the business of supporting our church college, Elon, which merits consideration of our parents of college-age young people. We should have meetings promoting this great institution in every local field—augmented by pictures, moving and stereopticon, of its work. I should like to see us gather for a short time on the campus, to dis-

(Continued on page 13.)

Flying the Australian Desert

Two thousand miles of desert is what we are seeing today as we fly from Brisbane to Darwin on the northern edge of Australia. No wonder most of Australia's nine million people live in cities along the coast. Sheep and cattle are raised at spots in the "back blocks," but we have seen very few of them. Our plane put down at Alexandria, Australia's largest cattle run, but all we could see were thousands of ant-hills three to five feet high, and some scrub eucalyptus trees.

We almost missed the trip today. We were to leave the down town air office at 5:20 this morning. We packed and left word at the hotel office to call us at 4:45. The call-boy must have gone to sleep. We suddenly woke up at 5:25. We dressed more quickly than ever before and managed to get a taxi to the airfield.

The desert over which we are flying may have potentialities. A search for oil has been Australia's biggest recent excitement, until the current Russian Petrov trial. Traces of uranium are bringing numerous prospectors to this region. Gold discovered here gave Australia its big boom a couple of generations ago.

Australia is approximately the same size as the United States, but it has less than six per cent as many people. The national census was taken the night of June 30-July 1, so we are now included in Australia's numbers. The nation is eager to increase its population. This year 40,000 people are settling here from the British Islands, and as many more from other parts of Europe. These people are never referred to as foreigners, but as "New Australians."

I wondered why Australians have not asked us as many questions about racial segregation as the New Zealanders did. I discovered that they are ashamed to ask, because of their own "White Australian Policy" which is preventing Asiatics from settling here. Educators and church people realize that this policy is excellent Communist propaganda in Asia, and is also un-Christian. Both groups are advocating a change in the policy so as to admit limited numbers of Asiatics.

We have enjoyed visiting colleges here. Most advanced education is supervised by state universities. Around the university, in each of the six state capitals is located a group of church-supported "colleges." The universities have no dormitories, and while a great many students live at home and many others in commercial rooming houses, much of the school life centers about the colleges, their dormitories and their dining halls. The college offers some courses, especially in religion, and provides tutors to assist students in their school work. It also provides chapel services. The government pays fifty per cent or more of the cost of erecting the college buildings.

All students and faculty members wear academic gowns at the evening meal. Teachers, even in the grade schools commonly wear academic gowns in the class room

Australia claims to be the most sports-minded nation in the world. We drove around Melbourne one Saturday afternoon and found tens of thousands of the people at football matches. Students go in extensively for sports, but there are no "athletic scholarships"; each university has its sports club, which students join and support by dues. They also raise money for the club by giving dances.

Cost of athletic equipment is paid by the club. Universities are 500 or more miles apart, but each player must pay his own transportation to inter-university games, although in instances the club has paid a fourth or a third of the cost. Consequently only those play on the varsity who are willing to pay for the privilege, and trips are kept at a minimum. The most of the games are played against local city teams. Games between groups within the school are also popular.

W. W. SLOAN.

Emory University Town and Country School

"We did win fifty dollars for a third place state award, but the program itself has been worth thousands of dollars to us in terms of improving our own church program." So wrote a central Georgia Baptist church in expressing its appreciation for the Town and Country Church Development Program.

Such a reaction is typical of the several hundred churches in fourteen Southern States that have taken part in this program. Our own Wakefield Church won a second place state award in 1953. And similar enthusiasm was expressed to me at the tenth annual Town and Country Church session this summer by those of the 105 students there whose churches had participated, and especially those fourteen who had been chosen as "Rural Minister of the Year" from their home state.

Thirteen Protestant denominations and the Roman Catholic Church were represented. I regretted being the only Congregational Christian; it is too good an opportunity for us to miss.

Speaking with these pastors, learning of their accomplishments, their trials and their hopes, has really been the high point of the school. And the school officials realize it. An hour and a half is spent every morning in small discussion groups, considering personal problems, often with the help of resource persons. Each weekday evening, one or two of the "Ministers of the Year" tell about their work and exhibit the progress reports of their churches.

In addition to this invaluable fellowship and discussion, the student may choose one of four courses. With some twenty others, I studied and discussed "Community Dynamics" under Dr. Bardin Nelson of Texas A and M. Dr. Nelson knew both his general principles and his particular cases. Finest of all were his deep insights into the psychological problems of leadership—too much and too little.

Other students discussed "Agriculture and Our World Missions," under Ira Moomaw; "Marriage and Family Counseling," with Dr. John Greene of Boston University, and the "Economics of a Changing South," under the leadership of Dr. Fulmer of Emory. Each day also had its special lecture, by denominational leaders in the rural church field or by men like R. R. Paynor of International Harvester, who spoke on that important subject, "The Mechanization of Agriculture."

Several events have tied the school
(Continued on page 7.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH. Elon College, N. C.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention

It is good for any local Sunday school in a given conference for representatives of all the schools and churches to come together and take a look at what has been accomplished during the year and to give serious consideration to items of interest that will mean efficiency and progress during the coming year.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention met Tuesday, July 20, at our Franklin, Virginia, Church. The church certainly gave us a fine and most pleasant reception. The heat outside was excessive but the atmosphere inside the church was delightful. This church has recently installed air-conditioning equipment. It was working fine, everybody was feeling fine, the program was good and was executed smoothly and effectively. There were some differences of opinion, of course, but all were agreed on ends sought. Mr. Letcher Eley is the president of the Association. In addition to being a good presiding officer, he is a very good speaker and gave to his convention an interesting address. Visitors and officials were introduced to the convention and were given the privilege of the floor. The worship services were conducted by the young people from Rosemont Christian Church and Cypress Chapel Church. These young people acquitted themselves well. Their programs were enjoyed by the members of the convention.

The principal address was given by Dr. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of the Greensboro, North Carolina, Church. We are all reminded that Dr. C. H. Rowland, father-in-law of Dr. Wisseman, was pastor of this church for years and years. When he resigned as pastor at Franklin, he accepted the call to Greensboro where Dr. Wisseman is now pastor. It was a very distinct privilege to have Dr. Wisseman address the convention. Members of the Franklin Church who were in the church when Dr. Rowland was pastor, were particularly glad to have him and hear him. They also welcomed with a great deal of joy Mrs. Wisseman. They felt that she was simply coming back home for a visit.

The afternoon session was given over to a panel discussion. Topics pertinent to Sunday school as an organization, and the conduct of the school were discussed. The chairman of the discussion was Rev. J. E. McCauley of Waverly, Virginia. The ones leading in the different discussions were Reverends George Alley of Suffolk, H. E. Crutchfield of Great Bridge, Earl Farrell of Cypress Chapel, and Olin Pendleton of Norfolk First Church. Following the above presentation, opportunities for questions were given.

It was gratifying to find that the program dealt definitely with the Sunday school and Sunday school officials. Mr. Eley and his program committee did a very good job. All present seemed to feel that it was a worthwhile program and a day well spent.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

This week has been a very wonderful week for the farmers and all of Alamance County and adjoining counties. The rains have come in abundance. They say that it is never too late to do good, but there are times when rains come too late for certain crops. This is the case of the early corn crop in this section. The corn that had begun to silk and tassel ten days before the rains came will harvest but little if any corn. The corn that was planted later, if we have another week such as this, will harvest good crops. Tobacco is injured by the dry weather but it will recover rapidly with plenty of rain. We are always hopeful when the seasons are good.

Good crops make prosperous people. Prosperous people send their children to college. They pay their dues which includes conference apportionment. This week's report, so far as Elon College is concerned, is not indicative of too much prosperity. A casual glance at the report will reveal the churches and Sunday schools from which the contributions came. Bills must be paid during the summer just as any other season of the year. Elon is our college so long as we support it.

Previously Reported	$ 4,942.74
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Beulah	$ 18.00
Eastern Va. Conference:
Burton's Grove	$ 10.00
Mt. Zion	15.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Hines Chapel	$ 20.98
Mebane	21.00
	<hr/> 109.98

Total to date $ 5,052.72

N. C. AND VA. SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

(Continued from page 2.)

the Bible, and Miss Coghill and Rev. W. J. Andes asking and answering questions.

The following officers were installed by Rev. Mark Andes, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference:

Rev. John Lackey, president;
Leonard Powell, vice-president;
Maynie Flynt Neal, secretary;
E. W. Kellam, treasurer.

The Superintendents' Mid-winter Meeting was voted to be held in the First Church of Greensboro.

The Sunday School Convention voted to accept the invitation of the Concord Church for its next meeting.

MAYNIE FLYNT NEAL,
Secretary.

EMORY UNIVERSITY TOWN AND COUNTRY SCHOOL.

(Continued from page 6.)

up with the total Church Development Program of which it is but a part. On the second Sunday, many of us journeyed to the Chestnut Mountain Presbyterian Church, Georgia's 1954 Rural Church of the Year, for services and a dinner on the grounds. There was a sponsors' banquet to bring together the students and those organizations contributing to the program's expenses, foremost of which are the Progressive Farmer and Sears Roebuck. This sponsorship has enabled annual cash awards to be made to individual churches (the one Rural Church of the South receives $600.00). It has also reduced the individual student's expenses.

Total expenses, including tuition and average board and room, are $78 for the two weeks. Any student who needs it can receive a $38 scholarship in addition to what he may receive from his own denomination and our organizations.

I heartily recommend the school to our pastors and the program to our rural churches.

H. V. HARMON.

Missions at Home and Abroad

An American Board Missionary Receives Award from Greek King

To an American woman doctor, Dr. Ruth Azniv Parmelee, since 1914 a Congregational Christian medical missionary in the Near East, has been awarded The Cross of Commander of Our Royal Order of Beneficence by King Paul of Greece in recognition of her services to the people of that country.

The medal, in the shape of a five-petaled iridescent royal blue flower, hangs from a golden crown in French eloisonne. Within a white enameled circle is the red robed figure of the Madonna holding the Child, robed in blue. The medal bears the single word "ΕΥΦΡΑ" meaning "Beneficence." On the back is the royal insignia of the King of Greece.

This medal, in recognition of outstanding philanthropic service, has been conferred on only three foreign women: Dr. Ruth Parmelee, Miss Emilie Wilms, R. N., an associate of Dr. Parmelee, and Helene Nussbaum, R. N., a Swiss nurse who has done much anti-TB work in Greece.

Ruth A. Parmelee, who was born in Trebizond, Turkey, of missionary parents, speaks Armenian, Turkish and Greek fluently, the latter so well that she has written in Greek simplified text books on psychology for the use of Greek nurses.

A graduate of Oberlin College, the class of 1907 (Hon. D. Sc., 1943); the University of Illinois (M. D., 1912); Dr. Parmelee interned in the Philadelphia Woman's Hospital. In 1913 she earned her M. P. H. (Master of Public Health) at Harvard University School of Public Health.

Her career of forty years in the Near East has been a series of crises, including war, refugee work, D. P.'s and reconstruction. She began her service in Turkey under the American Board of Foreign Missions in 1914.

During World War I and subsequent post war years until 1922, Dr. Parmelee pioneered as the first woman to settle in the Euphrates River Valley, where she practiced medicine among the Turkish people, specializing in obstetrics, the training of nurses, and the care of orphans.

Following the Smyrna disaster in 1922, Dr. Parmelee opened and conducted hospitals for women and children in Thessaloniki, to which she came with refugees, and the following year was decorated by King George II of Greece.

An amazing piece of work was done by Dr. Parmelee from 1925 to 1933 in Kokkinia, Greece, where she directed the American Women's Hospital which then included wards for men and children and was carried on in a refugee barracks. It was the only hospital for more than 70,000 people.

Next came the Greco-Italian War (1940-41), when Dr. Parmelee served on the Archbishop's Committee for relief to bombarded villages; on the Greek War Relief Committee; and was consultant for the Seventh Military Hospital. She also founded and directed a center for medical relief to civilians. As a member of the Administrative Council, she helped organize a school for public nurses under the sponsorship of H. R. N., Princess Irene, and later under the Crown Princess Frederiki, now the Queen of Greece. In 1941, she was forced to leave Greece, as were all other Americans.

In 1943, Ruth Parmelee went back to the Near East under the Near East Foundation with a relief unit, and was assigned to work for Greek refugees in Camp Nuseirat in Palestine. She was senior medical officer for 8,000 escapees from German occupation of Greece, and in 1945 was given a citation by the British Commander of the Middle East Forces.

After the liberation of Greece in World War II, Dr. Parmelee was assigned for a time to UNRRA to serve as head medical officer for the 125,000 population of the Cyclades Islands.

The balance of her four-year period of service under the Near East Foundation, (1946 and 1947) was as Medical Advisor and Director of the School of Physical Therapy conducted by the Near East Foundation in Athens, Greece.

Since 1948, Dr. Parmelee has been a teacher of hygiene to high school and college students at Pierce College in Athens, Greece, and also taught community health in the social welfare school of the senior college. In addition, she gave a course in Greek in medical information for social workers with her students going out for a year of special training to rehabilitated villages under the plan promoted by Queen Frederiki.

Now, Dr. Parmelee is home to stay. As of July 1, 1954, she was placed on the Roll of Honor of the American Board, making her a missionary emeritus.

American Board Missionary Appointees

Miss Ann Mereness of 285 Central Park West, New York City, and Miss Elizabeth Ruth Tuers of Nutley, N. J. have been appointed by the American Board of Foreign Missions for three-year terms as teachers in the Near East.

Miss Mereness, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Mereness of Charlottesville, Virginia, is going to the American Academy for Girls, Uskudar, Istanbul, Turkey. She was born 23 years ago in Long Beach, California, and educated at William and Mary College in Virginia, Montreat College in North Carolina and the University of Wyoming.

Her career up to date has included service as a Nurse's Aid in the Martha Jefferson Hospital, Charlottesville, Virginia, Reservationist with the United Airlines, New York City, and Assistant Advertising Manager of Gregg-McGraw Hill Publications.

Miss Mereness expects to sail for her new work as a teacher in the American Academy for Girls on the S. S. Independence from New York, August 26.

Miss Elizabeth Ruth Tuers of Nutley will teach commercial subjects in the American College, Aleppo, Syria. Miss Tuers expects to sail for her new work, August 13, on the S. S. Exochorda from New York.

Born in Nutley, New Jersey, Miss Tuers is a graduate of the local high school and of Montclair State Teachers College where she was active in music, sports and dramatics. She has done much Girl Scout work.

For several years Miss Tuers was a teacher in Nutley and Millburn, New Jersey, teaching English in the Millburn High School from 1941 to 1942. More recently she has been Secretary to the Mayor of Nutley.

(Continued on page 15.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

• 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Asheboro Church Women Hold Regular Meeting

The Woman's Society of the Asheboro, North Carolina, Church, met on Monday evening, July 19, at the church. Mrs. Charlie Barnes and Mrs. Paul Shane of Circle No. 2, were hostesses.

Mrs. S. H. Pell of the Pleasant Ridge Society, was our guest speaker. She gave us a very interesting review of the Foreign Mission Study Book, "Where'er the Sun." The review of this book completed our work on achievement goals for the year.

Plans were made for our final meeting of the year, to be held September 7. Mrs. C. F. Craven and Mrs. Grier Gray were appointed to select a Life Membership or a Memorial for our society. Mrs. Street Morgan and Mrs. John L. Davis will present awards to all members having perfect attendance.

The nominating committee, composed of Mrs. Hubert Beane, Mrs. J. M. Farlow and Mrs. Henry Keeling, will present a slate of officers when our three circles meet together again in September.

MRS. ROY MOORE,
President.

* * * * *

Cradle Roll Party Held at Pleasant Ridge Church

A Cradle Roll Party for the small children of the Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church was held at the home of Mrs. Jimmie Scott on Wednesday, June 23. Mrs. Earl Lowdermilk and Mrs. Scott were in charge.

An impressive worship center was set up in the yard, with the children sitting in a half circle around it. Mrs. Scott read the scripture and led in prayer. Mrs. Lowdermilk told the story, "With Love for Friends," and Miss Shirley Jean Lowdermilk led the children in three songs.

Following the presentation of the Mite Boxes, Mrs. Lowdermilk led in prayer. Then games and refreshments were enjoyed by the following: Philip Wright, Howard Lowdermilk, Martha Ruth Joyce, Susan Pell, Mac

Scott, David Stewart, Melinda Cox, Clarice Newell, Lola Jane Wright, Willie Dee Cox, Keith Lowdermilk, Sarah Lowdermilk, Shirley Lowdermilk, Butch Newell and Cynthia Copledge.

Adults present were Mrs. Jimmie Scott, Mrs. Earl Lowdermilk, Mrs. Herbert Scott and Mrs. J. C. Newell.

MRS. J. C. NEWELL,
Reporter.

* * * * *

North Carolina District Officers for 1954-55

Halifax—

Superintendent, Mrs. G. W. Polard, Virgilina, Va.
Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. Joe Landrum, Vernon Hills, Va.
Secretary, Mrs. Lacy Lovelace, Vernon Hills, Va.

Raleigh—

Superintendent, Mrs. R. L. Jackson, McCauley St., Chapel Hill, N. C.
Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. C. C. Ferrell.
Sec'y-Treasurer, Mrs. Rex Powell, Fuquay Springs, N. C.

Henderson—

Superintendent, Mrs. E. M. Powell, Henderson, N. C.
Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. Allen Kimball, Manson, N. C.
Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. Fletcher Richards.

Sanford—

Superintendent, Mrs. R. M. Cline, Sanford, N. C.
Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. Carl Wallace, Stamper Rd., Fayetteville, N. C.
Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. Jack Campbell, Jonesboro Hts., Sanford, N. C.

Asheboro—

Superintendent, Mrs. Bill Shemons, Rt. 1, Bennett, N. C.
Asst. Superintendent, Mrs. Winfred Bray, Randleman, N. C.
Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. Sherman Manness, Ramseur, N. C.

Greensboro—

Superintendent, Mrs. R. W. Isley, McLeansville, N. C.
Asst. Superintendent, Mrs. J. P. Littican,

Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. R. E. Apple, R. F. D, Gibsonville, N. C.

Burlington—

Superintendent, Mrs. T. D. Sutton, R. F. D., Burlington, N. C.
Asst. Superintendent, Mrs. W. T. Mahan.
Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. A. H. Danieley.

Japanese Take Bible Study Course

The Pocket Testament League announces that 4,551 PTL converts in Japan have completed the first section of a Bible study course. Two hundred and six Japanese converts have completed the entire two-year Bible courses—plus the memorization of 108 Bible verses.

Mr. Alfred A. Kunz, Executive Director of the league, states:

"PTL has always had a policy of careful follow-up of each person who makes a profession of faith as a result of our scripture distribution and Gospel rallies. We are now very happy and fortunate to have the loyal cooperation of The Navigators in our follow-up work in Japan. This follow-up is done with two main objectives: first, to give the new Christian all possible help and encouragement in launching out on the Christian life; and second, to help him become an effective witness who will win others to the Lord Jesus Christ.

"It is encouraging to note that over 10,000 Lesson Ones have been sent out as a direct result of the witnessing of those already enrolled in the course."

Included among those who have completed the first section of the Bible study course are 173 converts in Hiroshima, where the first atom bomb was dropped; 45 in Nagasaki and 272 in Tokyo.

India Rejects Americans

For months it has been increasingly obvious that India's rejection of American missionaries is based primarily on the fact that they are Americans and not on the fact that they are Christian missionaries. The India Embassy in Washington has made this clear by quoting Premier Nehru as follows: "The question of foreign Christian missionaries in India is not considered by us from the point of view of Christianity but from the point of view of foreigners coming to India. . . . Any unrestricted entry of foreigners creates political problems which may give us trouble in the future."—Action.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

We read in the newspaper the other day that ice cream cones had just passed their 50th. birthday! They are still a summer time favorite and much as we like them, we wonder how the first boys and girls that licked and nibbled the frozen goodness must have felt! It was at the St. Louis World's Fair that children and grown-ups tasted their first cones.

In the same paper we read that boys and girls are eating less chocolate candy. Bad for appetites but good for teeth! Do you know that many boys and girls far across the sea have never tasted fancy chocolate candies? It is true, and often the beans from which coca and chocolate come are harvested in their very often backyards.

Someone told us of a family of four children that heard in their Sunday school that many children in Korea and other places do not have enough to eat. They thought about it and talked about it. After they had made something of a plan they asked their parents if they could follow a system like this—

Save all their spending money for sweets and ask their friends and neighbors to join them in this Operation Sweet. Their goal was to raise $5 in a month and so they went to work. The three boys talked to Scout friends, the girl talked to her Brownie friends. The whole neighborhood began talking about their plan and money began to come in.

When the end of the month arrived, the four plus their parents and some special helpers gathered around the dining room table and counted $17. Then the mother passed heaping bowls of ice cream plus cookies to the folks who had given up their extra sweets—this was her bonus. Another bonus came from a dentist friend who sent $3 to make them have $20 for children who don't have any candy.

Their dentist friend explained that sweets between meals may cause tooth decay and by helping others they had been helping themselves. That seems to be a part of God's plan for us—give and you receive, help and you are helped. Blessings on the "sweet money" that travels overseas and congratulations to the K. family!

Have you a plan to share with us? Have you or your Sunday school group helped someone? Let us know.

* * * * *

"Wait Till Your Father Hears About This!"

By MABLE-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

My own mother is not living, but, fortunately, I am in close touch with my husband's mother, who is a wise and kind woman and a good friend to me. Without giving direct advice, she has managed many times to convey counsel to me by way of relating reminiscences of her own young motherhood.

One day, when we were having a cup of tea together, she remarked, "My husband said to me, when Andrew was quite small, 'Don't ever promise the boys that I will punish them when I get home. I'm not going to be an ogre to them. If things occur when I'm with them, that's a different matter, but you are their mother and you are with them during the day. When problems involving punishment come up then, you are the one to handle them. I don't want them looking forward with dread to my homecoming.'"

At first I thought, "Well, he certainly laid down the law to his wife, didn't he?" But a little reflection made me realize how right he was and that the reason he said what he did must have been that he had known of mothers who had used this method—perhaps his own mother. I have never inquired. But I myself have been a visitor in households where punishment by the father was a threat held over the children's heads constantly. I have seen the children swallow nervously at their father's approach, and they would lose all pleasure in the rest of the day. Well-informed persons nowadays are aware that certain emotions have a detrimental effect on physical and mental health. It would be thought-provoking to know what those feelings of fear and apprehension did to the well-being of those children just described.

Parents should talk together about the disciplining of their children, which they will agree, should always be done in a loving, understanding and just manner. They should overlook many minor infractions of rules, which are often due to high spirits and forgetfulness. When the parents are in accord as to matters of discipline, there will be no passing along of punishment to an indulgent father, or vice versa. If the parents are not in agreement on certain points, then the disputed behavior should be threshed out between the parents when the children are not present.

There may be times when the mother is really at a loss to know how to handle matters that have occurred during the day. In that case she can wait until the children are in bed and then discuss the situation with their father. If she finds that she has not taken care of what has happened in the right way and she and her husband arrive at a better method, she is then prepared for the next time similar infractions take place.

No two persons on becoming parents are instantly equipped with parental wisdom. They have to learn from those with experience and from the study of their own children. This applies to the father as well as to the mother. Too many fathers leave the bringing-up to the mothers. Even though the father is tired when he comes home from work, he should expect and like to spend some time with his little ones. When the boys and girls look forward to happy contacts with him instead of reproof or punishment, their freely expressed pleasure at Daddy's homecoming will be a happy reward for him. Also, a growing closeness will ensue that will continue on into the adult lives of the children.

In my own case, my dear mother-in-law's adroitly given advice must have soaked in, because I know I have never threatened my youngsters with any warning like, "Just wait until your father hears about this!" Our children race to the door when they hear their father's key turn in the lock and throw themselves on him with shouts of joy.

A Prayer

*I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.
And Thou, O Lord, by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean,
My human heart on Thee.*

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

A Tribute to Pattie Lee Coghill

Everyone is expressing thoughts to Pattie Lee, and at this time the youth of the church express their regret of her departure from the work and appreciation for what she has meant to us. We give of the printed word on this page in honor of her work with the youth.

I was impressed when I first saw Pattie Lee. The life she lead, the way she worked in service of her Lord had great influence with me. I greatly admired the Christian character that she had. She not only possessed it, but she lived and shared it with others. It seemed to me that Pattie Lee tried very hard to pattern her life after the One who was always doing good. She was ever in loyal and devoted service for her God and his children. On one occasion I heard her say these words which have long remained with me: "I expect to pass this way but once. Let me do what ever good I can, live my best by my faith, not for great rewards in heaven only, but because I am trying to follow Christ."

The influence that this woman of great faith has had on others is unmeasurable. She has presented the Christ to others in many ways, one being just living him herself. She has made numerous silent and spoken words for Christ, as well as in action and deed. Her influence has been unusual, affecting many who have come in contact with her.

Last summer I attended a youth rally in the Valley of Virginia Conference. In one of the work groups we discussed the calling to service of God, and why we chose to answer the call. One of the reports greatly impressed me. It was a young girl from Winchester, Virginia. She had answered the call to work in the field of Religious Education. She said she had been greatly influenced just by watching Pattie Lee work.

Miss Coghill has witnessed for Christ before all manner of people, young and old, in various sorts of programs, as she fulfilled her calling or purpose.

The work Pattie Lee did would not stop when the whistle blew or when the eight-hour shift was over. It was a continual process, never caught up or never ceasing. Not only was her car ready to go, material on hand, suitcase packed, but her heart, mind and soul were always in tune. Ready to go when the call came for service—to speak, visit or witness.

Can you imagine a Youth Rally without Pattie Lee? Can you imagine a summer camp or conference without her? or a School of Missions? In all of these, her leadership, and efforts have stood out.

We do greatly appreciate the work that Miss Coghill has done for us. Often times we are critical and unjust, but I feel we must give credit where it is due, gratitude to a worker who needeth not be ashamed.

Personal Quotes.

Here are some personal opinions about Pattie Lee and her work:

"I feel that Miss Coghill has done a great work for the youth of our Conference."

"I know she will be missed—her smile, her influence, her work."

"She will be hard to replace in the work she has done. She has been a great help in the life of our church."

"Miss Coghill has rendered invaluable service in every phase of our work. Her radiant personality and selfless service has been a great inspiration to all.

"We regret her decision to resign, but are confident of Divine guidance in all her decisions."

The Future.

The future is undecided. She may teach school, or she may go to Ceylon to continue in Christian education. Whatever her decision, our thoughts and prayers go with her.

In closing, we would like to say "Thank You" for all you have done for us, and "Pattie Lee, we love you."

THE YOUTH OF THE CONVENTION.

Individual and political freedom is part of our Protestant religion. The love of liberty, to our forefathers stood next to the love of God. Freedom, for us, has a place near our Bibles.—William Leach,

The Big Bombs

This has nothing to do with the liquor traffic directly, but I'd like to offer my contribution to the discussion of the big bombs. It's this: The bombs, which we invented, and communism, which we could have prevented, are the nemesis that overtakes all who play fast and loose with the moral laws of the universe.

We are caught today in something we could have forestalled yesterday. The Christian people of the world have known from the beginning—in fact, it has been a part of their gospel—that there is a solidarity to humanity that can't be ignored with impunity, and that part of us can't be saved while the rest of us are lost. By saved I don't mean assured of heaven. I mean exempted from the ravages of preventable social evils.

Privileged nations and peoples have been relatively unconcerned with the poverty, disease, suffering and ignorance of underprivileged nations and peoples. They have not been alarmed at their plight, as their religion and their gospel ought to have led them to be. They have not looked on them as their brothers, God's other children, but as outside the orbit of their obligation. This, I am saying, was a blanket denial of their whole philosophy of life as derived from their religion.

Forty years ago, John R. Mott warned that unless we sent 10,000 missionaries to Japan then, we would send 100,000 bayonets forty years later. Well we've sent the bayonets, except that they were not merely bayonets, but battleships, airplanes and other engines of war such as Dr. Mott had not then heard of. And it was not 100,000 but more like a million.

Our bayonets put down the resentment in Japan, and we crowded her back into her little island where she belonged. And now it is occurring to us that the reason for Japan's resentment and unrest still exists, and that as far as settling things is concerned, we settled nothing. Japan still can't live on the little island that is her home, and she seems unable to be content with the poverty that must be her lot.

The big bombs, however dreadful, are not worse than the misery half the world suffered for centuries, and are not likely to deter the multitudes driven by hunger and despair. Furthermore, they are now as much a threat to us as to others.

(Continued on page 15.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Choosing the Best"

LESSON VI—AUGUST 8, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "It is my prayer that your love may abound more and more, with knowledge and discernment, so that you may approve what is excellent." Philippians 1: 9-10.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Matthew 6: 19-34; Galatians 5:16-23; Philippians 1:9-11, 4:8; Thessalonians 5: 21-22.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS Deuteronomy 30: 15-20.

The Cause and the Cure for Worry.

Worry is an evidence of the lack of faith. In the final analysis it means that we do not trust God, that we do not feel that we can depend on him to do his part. Tell a modern man not to worry about what he is going to eat or drink or wear, and he will say, "Phooey. If I don't worry about how I am going to live, who will? God helps those who help themselves." To be sure God does help those who help themselves, but he also helps those who cannot help themselves. Let us look at these words of Jesus. "Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on." Jesus is not minimizing foresight, thrift, economy, commonsense. But he is saying that we are not to be distracted by cares, that we are not to become the slaves to thousands of worries that will destroy our happiness. Come to think about it, what good does it do a man to get a million dollars, or even a thousand dollars, if he becomes a nervous wreck, or if he becomes tense and worried and anxious in the getting of it, or after he has got it!

Jesus says several things at this point. He says that men have a mistaken sense of values, and almost invariably put the emphasis on the wrong things. We never accomplish anything by worrying, and worse still, we unfit ourselves for dealing with our problems by our worrying. Some folks probably worry because they have nothing to worry about!

Again, Jesus said that the God who gave us life would make provision for our temporal care. He tells us to look around, and shame on us, to look at the birds and the flowers and the grass of the field. God provides for the birds and paints the flowers in lively colors. He even clothes and sustains the grass, which to day is, and tomorrow is gone. How much more will he take care of his children, the objects of his love and his care.

Again, Jesus says that worrying and being anxious and troubled about what we are to eat or to wear is pagan and not Christian. "After all these things do the Gentiles seek." Pagans, and many professing Christians, are more concerned with the means of life than with the ends and purposes of life. God knows what we have need of.

Finally, Jesus says that if a man seeks first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, life's necessities will come without our worrying. Let a man, any man, devote himself to the chief end or purpose of life, the kingdom of God, and he will have the means of life. He may not have a million dollars, he may not have luxuries, but he will have the necessities. And if one looks around him, he will find that Jesus was not repeating a pious platitude, but was declaring a tested and tried truth. The cause of worry and fear is lack of faith in God. The cure is faith in God.

Choosing the Best.

"And this I pray, that your love may abound more and more in knowledge and all discernment, so that you may approve the things that are excellent." Love of itself, is not enough. There is need for knowledge and discernment. We sometimes hear the statement, "She loved well, but not wisely." How many children there are whose lives and whose sense of values have been blighted because of the blind love of a mother or father. How many children are spoiled because parents are guided only by their hearts and not by their heads. How many people go off at a tangent in religion because they love God with their hearts, but not with their minds as well. How much charity there is that is not true charity, because it throws money away haphazardly on people who will waste it. Love must be intelligent. The apostle knew that, so he prayed that the love of his friends might increase in knowledge and discernment. Emotion without intelligence is like an engine with its throttle wide open without an engineer.

"So that ye may approve the things that are excellent." He is suggesting that his friends choose the best. This is one of the imperatives of Christianity. The good is often the enemy of the best. We are all too prone to accept the good, when we ought to pursue the best. Good, better, best, these three—but the greatest of these is the best. And not failure, but low aim is crime. The Christian can never be perfect in this life, but he dare not settle for anything less as his goal. As was quoted from Oliver Cromwell in these notes recently, "He who stops being better, stops being good." To be sure, it is high, we cannot attain unto it, but we can press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

"Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ." We are to be good for something. Christians are not shade trees; they are fruit trees. And their leaves and their fruits are for the healing of the nations. If we abide in Christ, we shall be neither barren nor unfruitful.

The Power of Positive Thinking.

A well-known, popular minister, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, has recently written a book with above title, "The Power of Positive Thinking." It is a stimulating, sound and helpful book. He emphasizes the fact that our thinking is vitally important and potentially transforming. And he emphasizes the power of thinking positively, of thinking health, of thinking success, of thinking courage, of thinking cheer, and so on. Dr. Peal would readily grant that there is nothing new in his book. He simply says, with many modern instances and cases in point to confirm his theses, what the ancient writer put in simpler form "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Or what Jesus had in mind when he said "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." Or what Paul was saying in the words of today's lesson, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any praise, think on these things." Nothing can be of greater vital importance than the proper control of thought, said Dr. Erdman. By our thoughts many of us condemn ourselves to unhappy, unhealthy, unwholesome lives. Much of our discouragement, our failure, our unhappiness is due to our thought life. By changing his thoughts, a man can, by the grace of God, change his life. And by the grace of God he can change his thoughts. Indeed Paul writes that we are to be "transformed by the renewing of our minds." Think low, mean, vicious thoughts and you will be low mean and vicious. Think about the pure and lovely and just and honorable things and you will be a good man. This is no blabbering of some modern cultist or faddist—it is the straight, sound, sober, sane teaching of the scriptures and of our Lord himself. Let a man think positively, persistently, about the better things of life, and he will become a better man.

Our minds can well be likened to a home in which we live. It is within our power to furnish the rooms of that house with fine, beautiful pictures and other treasures if we think on the things which Paul suggests in today's lesson.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

OUR TESTIMONY IN THE SOUTH.

(Continued from page 5.)

cuss common problems and hopes, sharing in a concerted attack upon many pertinent issues.

Likewise we have not done right by our church literature. It is distressing how few people really promote and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN and similar material. I have been in religious writing for 30 years, and I was an editorial assistant on our denominational paper when it was called The Congregationalist. I have been the church editor of a metropolitan newspaper, in Rhode Island, The Providence Journal. I have written all my life for the religious and educational press. Through it all, I have seen the value of such material as we get regularly in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Every issue brings its ray of hope and faith and fellowship. It is both truly Christian in every sense and it acts like a sun in the sky to many who are looking for help and cheer.

Our ministers, our churches and Christian people in general have woefully and unjustly neglected the Christian press, and to our serious loss.

We likewise need more good radio and television programs. We can import some of these from national or regional headquarters. We ought to do so. Then we ought to take the trouble to work up some from our own talent. Our own personal testimony ought to be spread abroad. This also applies to newspaper publicity and to that made available by other publications such as our State papers and our national organ, Advance. Our neglect of local newspaper publicity is perhaps the most puzzling to understand. A means of letting the public know about our Congregational Christian witness is absolutely ignored in some areas; in others it is so irregularly or ignorantly used that it is worse than nothing.

We also have need of some really high-class and ably conducted regional conferences for our young people and young adults. A conference experience for young families who might live in tents or in some other available accommodations might help a good deal. We may get together, in the summer or two or three days in the winter, maybe 100 young people. This is fine, so far as it goes; but it is not big enough or comprehensive enough to satisfy fully the need that is there. These future leaders need to catch a sense of the bigness, power and importance of the work being done for Christ. It must be ably done so that it will thrill and challenge them.

It might be possible also to hold regional conferences for our Christian education workers, to go over the coming Sunday school lessons and give them regional adaptation. We might also provide refresher courses for workers in our rural areas or for those whose training has not been adequate and who want to learn more.

Perhaps one way we could begin some action would be to suggest to our churches the adoption of some common home-mission project in the Southeast and do a real job with it.

These are rambling, bumptious ideas, I know, and perhaps entirely impracticable. But there may be some way in which we can increase the outreach and the effectiveness of our Congregational Christian testimony in the South. Let us all try to find it and to serve it!

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY.

(Continued from page 3.)

are not the well known "pillars of the church" to be heard.

2. Training the Leaders. Once selected, the team should be willing to meet together with the pastor for training in their duties. The objective should be to have the service move as smoothly under the leadership of the laymen as under the skilled guidance of the minister.

But more important still is the preparation of the men in spirit for the holy office they will perform. The team should pray together for God's guidance that his will should be done through them.

The lay message or messages should be such as will send the congregation forth invigorated and enthusiastic as to opportunity for laymen and women, young and old, to serve in the cause of Christ seven days a week.

Suggestions for the laymen's remarks and for the entire service of worship are offered in this pamphlet.

3. Special Music. Male members of the church choir or a man's chorus may well be used for special numbers on the program. The help of the organist and choir master should be sought in developing plans for appropriate music, both instrumental and vocal.

4. The Setting and Preparation. In the interest of adding to the impressive nature of the service, there should be given consideration to the following:

- a. Special decoration—flags, flowers, etc.
- b. Special corps of boy ushers—thus relieving all the men for other participation.
- c. A processional of the men of the congregation to reserved seats in the front of the church.
- d. The holding of a communion breakfast for the men of the church, prior to the Laymen's Day service, if your church does not have communion as part of the regular worship service on Laymen's Sunday.
- e. A special visitation by men to all men on the church roll in advance of the day—in the interest of having every man present.
- f. A mail reminder campaign to all men on the roll during the week prior to the service.
- g. Publicity in prior church bulletin, daily press, on radio.

* * *

More about Laymen's Sunday in a later issue.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the coupons coming in at this time. We have had one of our coupon companies to mail a letter, etc., to leaders of our women's groups—insofar as we had their addresses—telling them about saving coupons. We hope they made it sound real easy, but not so inviting that they decided to keep the coupons themselves! They will get nice silver but the orphanage needs the silver of the money we are able to realize out of these coupons. At the women's meetings it is "Have you any coupons this month?"

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Monroe (Mrs. Monroe is head of the Women's Auxiliary of the Greensboro First Church) have a "date" to take all the girls at the Main Building Saturday at 4:30 for a picnic to their farm out of Greensboro. This wonderful recreation and supper is being provided by the First Church women. Mrs. Nell Smith was the only one of the matrons who could accept their invitation to accompany them.

Again John Craddock. This time he has brought seven and a half gallons of ice-cream from Melville dairy and given the children a delightful treat. He brought his pastor and pastor's wife, and another layman with him. How the children enjoyed this treat! (Yes, I was there, too!) Thanks, John, for this wonderful time.

Did I tell you about going to Windsor, Conn., to see the lovely lady who sends a new dollar bill to us for each child on their birthday? It is such a fine thing to do. All this talk about "cold" Yankees is just "bush-wah." Even the weather up there was as hot as a ginger mill. Mrs. Chamberlain doesn't stop at the dollar per, but she sends other gifts during the year. No wonder Nat Newman, of Suffolk, Va., thought her daughter Nancy was lovely. Everyone who knows her and the noble family back of her thinks so too!

"These children all look to me like they are very happy, and getting along fine," said a layman this week after we had gone about the orphanage without seemingly noticing the children. He spoke as though he expected them to look sad, wan and woe-begone. He seemed surprised how fine, healthy and happy they looked. I told him that we who were here were happy ourselves and believed in this work, and that we were very pleased that our attitude was reflected in the children. You are our friends. You are our source of the feeling of goodwill and happiness, and encouragement in our work. On you we depend. The children look to us. Eight children within the last thirty days have been looking to us for a home and help. Some of them will, no doubt, be received here. For the others some arrangement will be made. But you can be sure the need for such care and help has not been erased from our day. It is still with us and some of it is very urgent.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JULY 22, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Isle of Wight Ladie's Missionary Society.
W. M. S., Pleasant Grove, Bennett, N. C.
Mrs. J. M. Riddle, Sanford, N. C.
A Friend, Franklinton, N. C.
Waverly Cong. Christian Church, Waverly, Va.
Windsor Christian Church, Windsor, Va.
Holland Cong. Christian Ch., Holland, Va.
Bethel Cong. Christian Ch., Elkton, Va.
Mrs. Selma Williams.
Cradle Roll Dept., Suffolk Christian Church.
Mrs. R. P. W. Seaman, Henderson, N. C.
Palm St. Christian Ch., Greensboro, N. C.
Mrs. F. E. Branch, Wakefield, Va.
Mrs. Bickett Arnold, Fuquay Springs, N. C.
Ladies Aid, Winchester, Va. Church.

Buttons:

Mrs. Harold Wright, Franklinville, N. C.

Clothing:

Mrs. C. C. Childers, Hillsboro, N. C.
Mrs. A. G. Burton, Greensboro, N. C.
Mrs. J. D. Newman, Henderson, N. C.
Mrs. W. C. Medlin, Henderson, N. C.

Miss Patricia Daniels, Beaufort, N. C.
Clothing, shoes and coupons:
Mrs. Emma Alston Anderson, Henderson, N. C.
Miss Margaret Alston, Henderson, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 7,778.90
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Bethel $ 28.05
Fayetteville 10.00

38.05

Eastern Va. Conference:
Cypress Chapel $ 26.00
Portsmouth, First, Special 11.15
Spring Hill S. S. 5.39

42.54

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Bethel S. S. $ 4.33
Ingram 35.00
Mt. Zion S. S. 4.18

43.51

Western N. C. Conference:
Zion $ 30.00

30.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Mt. Olivet (G) S. S. ... $ 3.29

3.29

Total 157.39

Grand Total $ 7,936.29

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $20,004.60
H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. $ 10.00
Lawrence S. Holt Trust
Fund 150.00
West Memorial Bible
Class, Suffolk Christian
Church 130.00
Lehigh Valley Railroad
Co., dividend 1.20
In Memory of Dr. Joseph
Minton Batten 5.00
In Memory of W. A. Newman 50.00
Special Gifts 15.00

361.20

Grand total $20,365.80

Total for the week $ 518.59

Total for the year $28,302.09

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

Monument Dedicated to Scientist Born in Slavery

A monument to Dr. George Washington Carver, who was born in the early 1860s and died in 1943, was unveiled late in July on the plantation where he was born in slavery. The plantation is near Diamond, Mo., which is 15 miles southeast of Joplin.

Doctor Carver was famed as both an agricultural specialist and chemist. He was first owned and then freed and raised by Moses Carver, a German immigrant and, as was the custom then, he took the name of the man who owned him.

His achievements included turning cotton into paving blocks, peanuts into hundreds of synthetic products and clay into paint.

The plantation is now under the control of the National Park Service, of the U. S. Department of the Interior. Douglas McKay, Secretary of the Interior, delivered the address at the dedication of the Carver monument. Among other things, he said: "This dedication demonstrates that we believe every man deserves to enjoy equal rights and liberties, and that there must not be any second-class citizens in this nation."

After reviewing President Eisenhower's promises to end segregation wherever the authority of the Federal Government extended, he commented: "These promises are being fulfilled quietly and determinedly, and are designed to remove terrible injustices rather than to capture headlines."

When Carver was only a few months old, a band of border raiders who roamed the area during the Civil War, swooped down on the Carver plantation and kidnapped the baby and his mother. Moses Carver formed a posse and, when the raiders were located, the mother had disappeared. However, on the offer of a race horse valued at $300, the child was returned to the Carvers.

With the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, the child was free, but he was reared for by the Carvers until his early teens when he left Diamond to go to Kansas. After he had succeeded in working his way through high school at Minneapolis, Kansas, he was accepted as a student at Simpson College, Indianola, Iowa. Three years later he transferred to Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, where he received a Bachelor's Degree in Agriculture and later a Degree of Master of Science.

He attracted the attention of Booker T. Washington, the founder of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. He went to Tuskegee and became its professor of Agriculture. He spent the rest of his life there improving the agricultural practices of the South and discovering new products that could be made from southern crops. He won awards from many scientific foundations and honorary degrees from many universities. He gave $33,000 to establish the George Washington Carver Foundation for research at Tuskegee. — Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

Lutheran Laymen Meet in Detroit

More than twenty-five hundred members and friends of the International Lutheran Laymen's League attended a worship service in Detroit, Michigan, on June 27, marking the opening of the thirty-seventh annual convention of this 80,000-member organization.

The speaker for the opening service was Dr. John W. Behnken, president of The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod. The two million-member church body has over 100 congregations in the Detroit area.

Business sessions opened in the Statler Hotel, the convention headquarters, with an address by the Rev. Edwin Pieplow, pastor of the Christ Lutheran Church of Detroit. He used as his subject the convention motto, "Men Whose Eyes Have Seen the King." Plans were laid for expanding the "Lutheran Hour," the league's major project. This program is now heard over more than 1,150 stations in fifty-eight countries, and is broadcast in fifty-six languages.

A panel on Christian education by a group of America's leading Lutheran educators was an outstanding feature of the open sessions.

All those attending the convention took a cruise to Bob-Lo Island one night, with the entire boat and island reserved for the Lutherans. The convention banquet was held in the Statler Hotel ballroom, with Major General Ivan Bennett, recently retired chief of chaplains of the U. S. Army, as the speaker.

AMERICAN BOARD MISSION- ARY APPOINTEES.

(Continued from page 8.)

William Buford Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Jones of Richmond, Indiana, since 1953 at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, has been appointed for a three-year term as a teacher by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in the American College for Boys, Tarsus, Turkey. Mr. Jones expects to sail for his new work, August 26 on the S. S. Independence from New York.

Born in Jackson County, Kentucky, Mr. Jones is a graduate of Earlham College (A.B.), and secured his A.M. from Harvard University this June.

Mr. Jones has acquired considerable practical experience through working for the Belden Manufacturing Company in its Richmond, Indiana factory during the summers and part time or at night during his high school or college career. In the summer of 1952 he was a member of a sociological and religious experimental group working with underprivileged people in Puerto Rico.

THE BIG BOMBS.

(Continued from page 11.)

The missionary enterprise of the Christian churches may look like a waste of money to some, but it is my judgment that no money we have ever spent will yield as handsome dividends in the future as that money. It is also my opinion that we are shut up either to such a crusade of giving and sharing, both in ideals and things, as we have not yet known, or else to chaos and confusion. The gospel of Christ is that central to the life of the world.

It has often been said that science has made the world a neighborhood and that religion must make it a brotherhood. But actually, according to our Gospel, it has been a neighborhood all along. At least, Jesus thought it was. But most of us could not believe it until science said it. Science didn't make the world a neighborhood. It proved that it had been a neighborhood all the time.

I didn't mean to discuss the liquor traffic here, but I can't resist saying, now that the stage is all set for it, that while the liquor traffic seems to some like only a minor domestic problem, or maybe only a private sin, our complacency with it will mock us some day when we are least in position to face the disadvantage that it will thrust upon us.—W. E. Setzer, The Missouri Issue.

Rare indeed is the person who never has committed the folly of talking before thinking.—Anonymous.

"The Pearl of Great Price"

The Parable of the Pearl of Great Price is one of the most beautiful of the sayings of Jesus, and we get from it one of the sublimest figures of speech in our language to express those eternal spiritual values which are worth more than all the world holds of material things. We link this Scriptural parable with a most interesting story that was heard some years ago.

Doctor William Dowell Cobb, an archeologist working in the Philippine Islands, came across the tragedy of a native diver entrapped in the jaws of a giant clam and drowned. When the shell was cleaned of its meat by the servant of the native chief who claimed it, there was found a great pearl of lustrous white, a gigantic gem—the largest pearl ever seen by human eyes. The shape of the gem resembled that of the turbaned face of Mahomet, and when the doctor offered to buy it from the native chief, he refused to sell for any price, saying that its possession was worth more to him than any amount of money.

About two years after the discovery of this treasure, the doctor was again working in this section of the Philippines. The son of this chief became desperately ill with a serious case of malaria which quinine failed to relieve. To treat the young man was dangerous, for had the doctor touched him and then he died, the natives would have killed the physician, and the party was too far from civilization to be rescued from peril. Bravely the medical service was given, and the young man soon recovered.

The chief asked the doctor how much he was owed for the treatment, and the good physician answered that the service was done for friendship sake and there was no charge. Imagine Dr. Cobb's amazement when the chief then presented to him the marvelous pearl.

Is not this the way that life's most precious treasures are exchanged? There are things that we get which we could not buy, and we give that which we would not sell. The most valuable commodities do not enter the market where money is the medium of exchange.

The pearl above price may be a symbol of the grace of God, which has come into the world through the death of his only begotten Son. This grace has been transmitted to us through those who counted not their lives dear unto themselves that they might serve and save others. No coin of any kingdom of this world could purchase such a redemption, but it has been freely given through the love of God the Father and his dear Son Jesus Christ. We have as a free gift that which we could never have purchased through any price which we had of ourselves. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

The pearl above price may also be the symbol of those priceless elements within each of us which we call personality. As in the heart of the giant clam, so all men are within a living environment where there are troubles, irritations, tasks and relationships, which year after year build us up with layers of strength, knowledge, emotions, ideals, conscience, convictions, experiences, purposes, loves, repugnances, that make us what we are. These combinations and complexes constitute the individuality in each person which separates him from all others and makes him different and distinct.

Each one has in himself something that no one else has, and can do something that no one else can do. We may call this his personality, self or soul. That is the pearl above price which lies in the spirit of every man.

No man should sell himself for any price. No man should keep himself lest he become lost and useless. All men should give themselves to God and the world through love and friendship. Through the unforced devotion of self the unpurchaseable powers of human life are released for the common good of mankind. Let us give away what we hold too precious to sell.

—RICHARD L. SHIPLEY, D. D.
(Adapted.)

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1954

NUMBER 30

The Rock Which Can Withstand!

WE HAVE fallen on easy times. Life is luxurious. Ours is an age of cushions and rose water. But there is arduous work to do. Our cities are so many battlefields on which resolute and flint-willed men must wrestle in terrific struggle with the forces of the devil. We have a gospel equal to the world's needs. All we lack is men. Never will Christianity subdue our American cities until there is brought into the field an army of Christians of firmer texture and sterner temper than that possessed by the cohorts now engaged. Some plead for endowments, and others advocate a change of methods, but what we want is men. The members of our churches, as a rule, are altogether too flexible and obliging. They do not know how to strike hard, nor are they willing to stand their ground. There is a widespread fear of being counted narrow, but there is a narrowness which leads to life. "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" So said the broadest man that ever lived. There is a dread of bigotry, but what is bigotry? If placing the kingdom of God first and compelling all things else to bend to it be bigotry, then what the world now needs is bigots. Bigotry is the persecution of others who do not agree with us. The steadfast and stubborn defense of those things which we deem of importance is sweet reasonableness and imperative duty. It is significant that the one thing which Christ first looked for in men on whose shoulders he wished to roll the world was something which he designated as rock. As soon as a man whose temperament had in it ingredients capable of being fused into granite came under his eye, he gave him a new name—"Rock." Lated on when the tides of the world were flowing away from Jesus, this man with the new name stood erect and declared that notwithstanding all learned men were saying one thing and the people another, he still was convinced that Jesus was the Messiah, the Son of the living God. It was then that the Lord declared he would build his church on rock. It is only rock which can withstand the assaults of the empire of death.—Charles E. Jefferson.

News Flashes

Wissler's Chapel, in the Virginia Valley Conference, has recently organized a Christian Endeavor Society. Mrs. Walter Tharpe of Mount Jackson, Va., is the president.

A daughter, Nancy Marelle, was born to Rev. and Mrs. Richard M. Petersen on Thursday, July 15. Mr. Petersen is the pastor of our Shallow Ford Church. Our congratulations to these proud parents.

Congratulations to Rev. and Mrs. Fred P. Register of our Wake Chapel Church upon the arrival of a son, David Lee, on Tuesday, July 27. May God make life beautiful, true and good for these little children.

Mrs. G. C. Crutchfield of Altamaha, N. C., will serve as counselor for the 4-H boys and girls at Camp Stone, near Aberdeen, N. C., August 2 through August 7. This camp covers the 4-H Clubs of both Alamance and Chatham Counties.

One way we can strengthen the hand of our new Editor, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, will be to send news in frequently regarding our churches. Please report the news from your church regularly. Send it to Dr. Harrell at 1010 W. Markham, Ave., Durham, N. C.

The annual meetings of the Shenrock Parsonage Committee and the Shenrock Pastoral Committee are to be held on Thursday of this week at 8:00 p. m., at the parsonage. Shirley White of Tenth Legion, Va., is the chairman of the Parsonage Committee, and Clarence a Phillips of Broadway heads the Pastoral Committee.

Rev. Wm. H. Hill, formerly of Iowa, is serving as supply pastor of the Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, N. C., during the vacation period of Dr. Woffard C. Timmons. Dr. Timmons had charge of the Pre-Convention Christian Life Convocation at the recent session of our General Council in New Haven.

There were over 60 present last week at the North Carolina and Virginia Ministers' Picnic, including, of course, wives and children. We suppose the picnic was held at Moonelon, and we are assured that "food was consumed in large quantities, and swimming, horseshoes and talk were in evidence."

Woods Chapel, in the Virginia Valley, will hold its annual homecoming rally on next Sunday, August 8. The ladies and children of the church are preparing a special program of worship, singing and recitations. The service will begin at 10:00 a. m. The pastor, Rev. Ralph M. Galt will bring the homecoming message. The formal services are scheduled to end at 12 o'clock, after which dinner will be served on the church lawn.

Union Christian Church of Hatterdale, Southampton County, Va., is to have air conditioning before the summer is gone. The Camp Manufacturing Company gave the church a contribution of $2,500 to be used for a special purpose. The chairmen of various groups of the church were appointed as a special committee to decide upon and initiate such a project. Air conditioning of the church auditorium was decided upon. The work of installation is now under way. Congratulations to the fortunate congregation and to the pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields.

Southern Convention Leadership in Our National Church

Ossasionally people ask whether or not our Southern Convention has any representative leadership in our General Council and on our National Boards and Committees. The answer is "Yes." In fact, according to our membership we are well represented. For instance, at the recent session of the General Council in New Haven, approximately ten of our people were named Corporate Members of the Board of Home Missions and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. To the Board of Directors and Executive Committee Mrs. W. E. Wisseman was named a vice-president; to the Prudential Committee of the American Board Dr. Henry E. Robinson was elected a member; Dr. Jesse H. Dollar was elected a member of the Executive Committee of the General Council, succeeding Dr. Stanley C. Harrell. Dr. W. Millard Stevens is a member of the important Commission on Christian Unity of the General Council. Superintendent Scott is a Sup-
(Continued on page 15.)

Resolution in Recognition of Service Rendered by Rev. Howard P. Bozarth.

In as much as Howard P. Bozarth has served the church at Elon College, N. C., for a period of four years with undivided loyalty and heart-warming devotion,

And since he and his family have shown by word and deed the way of Christ in the home and in the circle of a community,

And because Howard Bozarth has identified himself with the common endeavors of the churches of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, and in so doing has brought the keen insight of mind and heart to contribute to the solutions and ease the tensions which arise where differences occur,

And because he has been a strong, courageous and convincing voice in pulpit, counsel room and discussion group,

And since he has performed with faithfulness the duties of a pastor amongst the sick, the bereaved and the perplexed within the circle of his labors,

And since he has led forth with imagination and foresight in putting
(Continued on page 15.)

Group Subscriptions to The Sun

A number of our pastors and churches have indicated they expect to obtain subscriptions from at least 50 per cent of their families, thus qualifying for the new special rate of $2.00 per year for our church paper. We have already received group subscriptions from the following: Burlington, "Beverly Hills;" Franklin, "Union So.;" South Boston, "Center;" Eure, Turner's Chapel, and Hines Chapel.

This is a good start, but we are hoping to hear from other churches within the next few weeks.

To qualify for this special rate, the church should send subscriptions for at least one half of the families in the church membership. We are sure every pastor keeps an accurate list of the families of the church and this list will give the needed information.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN going into at least one half of the homes of the Southern Convention will bring deeper Christian devotion and dedication to our constituency. It will be worth your investment, Churches. Try it.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Laymen's Sunday

Last week in this column we made certain suggestions for Layman's Sunday in our churches. Today we are printing some ideas for Layman's addresses. As you know, October 17 is Layman's Sunday in our church. These suggestions come from the United Church Men.

* * * * *

Ideas for the Laymen's Addresses

THEME: "A Time for Decision."
This is a time for personal decision—
Every man must decide this day whom he will serve.
If our society itself is to be saved it must be by individual men of faith.
The decision for Christ and his way of life is now, therefore, both a personal and a social issue.
"It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh."
"Lay evangelism" then assumes new significance today.
This is a time for work-a-day decision—
Daily life presents a continuous procession of decisions for Christ or Mammon.
If the way of life we cherish—the way of freedom, the way of goodwill, the way of human dignity—is to survive, it will be because we are guided by the will of God in these work-a-day decisions.
Businessmen, labor leaders, professional men everywhere are discovering that as they seek God's guidance for their own lives, the right decisions will be made.

This is a time for national decision—
Shall we preserve "This Nation Under God?" If so, it will be because men of God see to it. For in this country we get the kind of government we want and deserve.

Momentous decisions confront the leaders of our nation today. During this session of Congress such momentous questions as these may be faced:
Shall we have an economic depression?
How about tax reductions and farm support?
How can we deal most effectively with subversive forces within our borders?

What can we do to preserve human dignity and personal freedom under the law regardless of race, creed, or economic status?
What shall be the nature of our foreign policy in these days of international tensions?
What must we do to maintain the free enterprise system under which America has so mightily prospered?
Do these sound like questions we, or our legislators acting in our behalf, should take to the Lord in prayer? Well, that is exactly what should be done if we are to preserve "This Nation Under God."
Then there is the great realm of voluntary nongovernmental action where decisions today are vital to the maintenance of a God-fearing republic.
How about Christian education for youth in our country? Today less than half of our boys and girls are getting religious training.
How about our ministry to migrants, to share-croppers, to India?
How about our hospitality to the 30,000 foreign students within our borders annually?
How about our help for the troubled spots on the earth where famine and death stalk millions?
How about our responsibility as laymen to help God answer our prayer "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven?"
Our decision on many of these
(Continued on page 13.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Evangelism

Evangelism is not a very sharply defined term in the ecclesiastical vocabulary. The word is not used in the New Testament; but the term evangelist is used three times. In Acts, Philip, one of the first seven deacons, is called an evangelist. In Ephesians, evangelists are listed among the group of specialized ministers whom the Lord had given for the edifying of the body of Christ. Timothy, the bishop-presbyter, was urged by Paul to do the work of an evangelist.

The New Testament evangelists seem to have been itinerants, who acted largely as "fellow laborers" of the apostles, and worked under their direction. In so far as it can be determined, the early evangelist was just a step above the average lay member. The difference between the two being the zeal, constancy and effectiveness which the evangelist evidenced.

The evangelists may have developed as lay workers who accepted literally and undertook seriously to obey the command of Jesus: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Evangelism, according to such information as the Bible gives, has a two-fold purpose. It is intended, first of all to so proclaim the message of Christ, that the individual may come to a saving knowledge of Christ; but its work is not complete until the individual grows up into Christ-likeness.

Evangelism is not a specialized task of the Church, to be done by a group of individuals set apart for that work. It is the work of the entire program of the local church. It is a task in which every member of the church should share. It is not to be confined to special times and seasons. It should be going on all the time, and in every department of the church organization. Of course, there are times of harvest; but there must also be a time of planting, a time of preparation, a time of seed-sowing and a time of careful cultivation, if the harvest is to be abundant.

The Christian, because of his professed faith in Christ, has a personal responsibility for the work of evangelism. He does not have to be ordained as a minister, or be elected to some special office in the church, before he becomes responsible to Christ for doing the work of an evangelist. If he has experienced in his heart and soul the saving grace which Jesus gives to them that are his own, then that makes him responsible for sharing with others that which he has received.

Evangelism is primarily an issue of spirit. It has its motivation in a love for God which is stronger than any other love that one can know. That is what Paul was talking about when he said: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." If one does not have in his heart such a love for God, he can have no idea of what the evangelist is expected to do.

Evangelism, in the second place, is a quality of life. The winsomeness of Jesus grows out of the sort of life he lived daily. Christians must acquire a spiritual radiance by living constantly in fellowship with Christ before they can witness effectively for him. For a church to be truly an evangelistic church, the members must let Christ dwell in their hearts richly through faith.

There is no more urgent need in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches than that every church within the convention face the responsibility for evangelism. Something more is needed than a sporadic campaign limited to weeks or months or a year. The first effort should be to seek to cultivate within the churches a spiritual understanding of the lives of church members. Until there is a quickening of spirits, it will be impossible to plan effectively.

One step that every church member can take is to begin to think and pray about the lack of spiritual concern about the luke-warmness of our churches. Praying churches are the ones which are visited by the Holy Spirit. If people are willing to do that which God wills for them, God can always reveal his plans and purposes. When the people of God are ready to undertake for God; God empowers them for the task.

News from Our New Churches...

We all rejoice to learn that two of our recently organized churches, Beverly Hills, Burlington, N. C., and South Boston, Va., will soon have their permanent buildings. South Boston, "Center Church," organized in January, 1954, expects to have its building completed by October 1. It was a joy to visit Rev. Mark W. Andes, pastor, and some of his leaders the week of July 26 and to see the walls of their beautiful building going up rapidly. The church is holding services at present in the elementary school of Halifax, where the Sunday school is running close to 70, and the church attendance over 50 each Sunday.

Beverly Hills, Burlington, organized about three years ago, expects to have its new building completed by November. Sunday school membership is approximately 175, and church membership about 140. Rev. W. W. Snyder and his people deserve the praise and prayers of all our people in their growing work.

In the construction of these new buildings for these young churches, our Congregational Christian Church Building Loan Fund is proving a timely help. Already we are seeing the wonderful results of the Building Loan Fund Campaign to which we have given our attention during the past year. Our college, orphanage, Mission Board, and every other department of our convention will receive strength from these new churches.

It was our pleasure to attend Sunday school and church services of our new Lakeview Church near Burlington recently. They had 101 at Sunday school that day, and a fine congregation for the morning worship. One new member was received and baptized at that service. Rev. Wm. Curtis Young, a member of our Durham Church and a student at Elon College, is the pastor and is doing good work.

A visit to Fayetteville recently was a source of encouragement. Rev. Carl Wallace, pastor, and the Eutaw Community Church are making splendid progress. Their beautiful new church (made possible largely because of aid from our Building Society and the Mission Board of the Southern Convention) has been landscaped, A growing interest is being manifested, and the attendance at both worship service and Sunday school gives a promise of continued growth. A significant service to that area, where we have so many young families because of Fort Bragg, is being rendered. This is in a sense "A National Christian Mission."

Supt. W. T. Scott and Dr. Henry E. Robinson will assist in a Preaching Mission at our new church in Hendersonville, N. C., the week of August 8. Dr. C. M. Haymann and his people are making good progress. A beautiful new church building site has been procured. A Woman's Missionary Society has recently been organized.

We are encouraged by two new churches being organized in the Eastern Virginia Conference: Bayside, near Norfolk, has been a project of the Christian Temple. Dr. W. Millard Stevens has given splendid leadership to this promising new work. Rev. Ernest F. Brickhouse, a product of Christian Temple, has been serving as pastor since June, and plans are now under way for organization of the church on September 12. Deer Park, near Newport News, is a project of our First Church, Newport News, where Rev. Lanson Granger and his people have given splendid leadership to a community survey, the organization of a Sunday school, and the conducting of a Vacation Bible School. A Student Summer Service Worker, supplied by our Board of Christian Education, has assisted Mr. Granger this summer. It is expected that the new church will be formally organized in the near future.

These examples of leadership in church expansion by Christian Temple and Newport News further convince us that the organization of new churches by "mother" churches offers a sound and productive method. No church ever suffers from the extension of its life into new frontiers. The Lord said, "A man who loses his life for my sake shall save it." We believe he was talking about churches as well as individuals. He also said, "He that saveth his life shall lose it." Churches have died because they have lived for themselves, but churches just do not die by giving themselves to others!

W. T. S.

A Significant Historical Event

In connection with the Report of the Congregational Christian Historical Society, at the New Haven General Council, Dr. Warren H. Denison, speaking for the Christian Church, presented to the Moderator of the Council the Elias Smith gavel. Dr. Denison said:

"Mister Moderator, Members and Friends of the General Council—

"At the October, 1922, session of the American Christian Convention, held at Burlington, North Carolina, the Reverend Lucian E. Follansbee, pastor of the then Christian Church of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, presented to the Convention this gavel made from the wood of a spruce tree which stood only five feet from the very spot where the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the first religious newspaper, was published, September first, 1808, by the Reverend Elias Smith. Mr. Smith had also organized a Christian Church in Portsmouth on January first, 1803. Our Advance takes its volume number, 146, from this first religious newspaper, the beginning of religious journalism. The mahogany box accompanying this gavel was made by a deacon of the church organized by Mr. Smith.

"At this Burlington Convention it was voted to change its name and incorporation from the American Christian Convention to the General Convention of the Christian Church. This same session of the convention was characterized by its re-emphasis on Christian Union, and it made overtures to some twenty denominations to help speed the answer to our Lord's prayer. From this came the happy union of the churches of the National Council and the General Convention.

"In September, 1908, representatives from some ten denominations met in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in celebration of the beginning of religious journalism, a century before, by the publication of the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"On behalf of the special Christian Church Committee of the Historical Society, I desire to present to the Historical Society, through you, Mister Moderator, along with this gavel, a copy of the 'Centennial of Religious Journalism,' by J. Pressley Barrett, the then editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and a copy of 'Modern Light Bearers,' which contains the addresses delivered at that centennial celebration and a Bibliography of the Reverend Elias Smith."

Committee Recommends New York City as Permanent Headquarters For the National Council of the Churches of Christ

A special committee of ten church leaders, meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, on July 19, decided to recommend that the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. establish permanent headquarters in New York City, and designate Chicago as the location of the major midwest office to "represent the whole life of the Council."

It was also decided to consider the continuance or establishment of other regional offices.

The Council now maintains general offices in New York, a midwest office in Chicago, and regional offices in Washington, D. C., Atlanta, Ga., and Fort Worth, Texas.

The recommendation, climaxing four years of consideration that began at the Constituting Convention in Cleveland, was reached by the Council's Headquarters Committee after an all-day session at the Hotel Cleveland on Monday, July 19. The vote was 7 for New York, and 2 for Chicago. The tenth member of the committee, Dr. Ben Lacy, Jr., of Richmond, Va., is in Europe. Dr. A. C. McGifford, president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, served as alternate for Dr. Robert Cashman of Chicago. The vote of the individual members was not announced.

The recommendation now goes to the Council's General Board—a 163-member policy making body—which has agreed to consider the Committee's action at a meeting to be held in New York, September 14-15. The report will be accompanied by full supporting data.

After the choice of New York as permanent headquarters had been announced by the chairman, Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, Baptist pastor of St. Louis, Mo., the committee designated Chicago as the location of a permanent, major midwest office. Two years ago the General Board had decided that an office should be maintained in the midwest, in the event that New York was chosen for the permanent headquarters, and vice versa. A statement by the committee, announcing the action, was made public in its behalf by Dr. Dahlberg.

It said that the committee had recognized the importance of two factors: (1) Proximity of the National Council's headquarters to the headquarters of its constituent denominations and their boards; and (2) Proximity to the member denominations' local congregations and to councils of churches—state and local. However, in view of the fundamental nature of the National Council as a "Council of member denominations," the committee decided that proximity to the "largest possible number of official offices and agencies of the member denominations" was of primary importance. This judgment, on what was regarded by the committee as a crucial question, was registered by a paper ballot vote of 7 to 2. It was the only question, other than the choice of the headquarters city, on which a secret ballot was taken.

The committee made it clear that it recognized the importance of helping denominations strengthen their 145,000 local churches, and of keeping in closer touch with councils of churches. In addition to designating Chicago as the major midwest office, and supporting regional offices, the committee expressed a conviction that the General Board should take steps to assure the Council's governing bodies—the 600-member General Assembly, as well as the General Board—holding sessions in various sections; to scatter conferences and meetings of the other Council groups; and to encourage a wider distribution of field services by the National Council staff.

The committee said that its discussions had been dominated by one primary consideration—to enable the National Council most effectively to serve Christianity, as the cooperative instrument of its communions.

Called into session for the express purpose of deciding between two cities—New York and Chicago—the committee received an extensive report from its research staff of Dr. David W. Barry of New York, and Dr. S. C. Kincheloe of Chicago. It set forth a mass of statistics on the relative merits of the two cities, on the basis of criteria which the committee previously had decided would be considered in making a choice.

On a basis of the survey, the committee found that Chicago and New York were equal in respect to cost of living, availability of office workers, and hotel facilities.

The committee held that both cities have adequate transportation facilities, adding that, from the standpoint of accessibility from all parts of the United States, the central location—Chicago—would be more favorable than New York.

It was decided that Chicago had the edge on several factors: proximity to the center of U. S. population; proximity to the center of population of the member churches; and postal facilities.

New York, the committee found, unquestionably was in closer proximity to more offices—headquarters and boards—of denominations and of world organizations; had better overseas shopping facilities; and had better facilities for national communication through mass media, such as the press, broadcasting and magazines, "thus enabling the Council better to serve the churches, through bringing influence to bear upon public opinion."

This session at the Hotel Cleveland was the eleventh, during the past four years, of the Headquarters Committee of Ten and its predecessor—a larger committee which had been discharged two years ago. During the four years, the committee considered the claims of several cities in addition to New York and Chicago. They included: Columbus, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Kansas City.

In addition to Dr. Dahlberg and Dr. McGifford, other members of the Headquarters Committee who were present are as follows: Dr. Gaines M. Cook, Indianapolis, Ind., executive secretary of the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ; Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, New York, president of the United Lutheran Church in America; Dr. Daniel M. Pattison, New York, treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.; Dr. J. Earl Morehead, Ashland, Va., president of Randolph-Macon College; Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, New York, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Bishop J. Clair Taylor, Montgomery, Ala., vice-chairman of the Committee and secretary of the Board of Bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and Dr. James E. Wagner, Philadelphia, president of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

"Fame," said Horace Greeley, is a vapor. Popularity is an accident. Riches take wings. Chose who cheer today will curse tomorrow. Only one thing endures—character." In a way our world is a college, events are our teachers, happiness the graduating point, and character the diploma that God gives to man.—Exchange.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Dr. William Samuel Long

Friends and officials acquainted with the early beginning of Elon College and interested in its continued progress will be grieved to learn of the death of Dr. William Samuel Long, Jr. Dr. Long, as will be recalled, was the son of the late Dr. William S. Long, founder and first president of Elon College. Dr. Will, as he was known throughout this section of the country, was a student at Graham Normal College but he was not a student at Elon College. He was graduated from the University of North Carolina and for a long term of years was a leading dentist in Graham, North Carolina.

While Dr. Long was not a student at Elon College, he was actively associated with his father in the landscaping and erection of the first buildings on the college campus. He was placed in charge of the workmen removing undergrowth, brush, and clearing the campus in preparation for the beginning of building operations. During his absence, the part of the campus in front of West Dormitory was cleared not only of underbrush but of all trees. Dr. Long arrived in time to stop the cutting of trees. He is credited with sparing what is now Senior Oak. It was a comparatively small sapling and had been bent to the ground but he forbid the laborers to cut this particular sapling. It has grown to be quite a tree and is a historic landmark on the campus.

Dr. Long was greatly interested in the progress of the college. He was much disturbed about the condition of the college in 1930-31, expressed grave doubts of its continuance but later expressed himself as being greatly gratified with the progress and hopeful outlook of the college. He made it a point to attend all public occasions on the campus, including commencement exercises. Dr. Long was always a welcome visitor and will be greatly missed.

Dr. Long was a public spirited citizen, interested in historical data that had to do with Alamance County, its growth and development. He was chief of the Fire Department of Graham for a number of years and at his death was the oldest living member of a fire department in North Carolina. He was for many years chairman of the Alamance County Democratic Party. He represented his county in the State Legislature for a number of years.

Dr. Long died Monday, July 26, at his home in Graham. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor of Graham Presbyterian Church, William R. Hoyt, where he was a member of the church, and burial was in Linwood Cemetery.

* * * * *

Toward Individual Independence

In the summer of 1932 I, personally, did some field work interviewing prospective college students and presenting to them the opportunities and advantages offered at Elon College. A bright youngster said, "I would like to go to college; I would like to go to Elon College but I will have to discuss it with my father and mother. I don't know what they want me to do."

Yesterday, Thursday, I was talking with a father about his son entering college. He said, "Well, I would like for my son to enter college but I don't know what he would like to do. It will depend entirely on what he says." Does this mean that twenty years ago parents were taking some responsibility in the selection of a school for their children, but today the prospective college student has attained his majority and is asserting his independence, not only in the matter of selecting a college but in determining his entire course in life. Could it be possible that years of development and days of experience have warped judgement so that even though experienced, it's not safe for the present day generation to follow.

This growing attitude toward independence is not confined entirely to youth, but at the moment it is rooted and grounded in parents. The bride at the marriage altar used to take the vows to love, trust and obey. Now they take the vows to love, trust, and do as they please. Why not, she earns her own living, drives her own car and goes where and when she pleases. If her husband agrees, all right; if not, it is still all right. This type of independence has made the model American home well nigh obsolete.

It has given to us a community of apartment dwellers. The home, as Henry W. Grady declared, "is the foundation of society," and the foundation of American democracy is fast fading out of the picture. Instead of the family as a unit with prayers at the beginning of the day and devotions at the close, a new profession in America has developed. This is the profession of baby sitting. Practical nursing has been transformed into baby sitting. Youngsters and older women seek to make a living or earn a livelihood as baby sitters. Parents no longer want to be tied down at home with children. They prefer their personal independence and are glad to work for it.

This trend in society is explainable in part by the standard of living maintained in America and the high cost of the same. Every family wants an automobile, a radio, television set, and modern appliances for the home. It is practically impossible for the husband, at the beginning of wedded life, starting from scratch, to provide the necessities and wants of his household. While husband and wife earn fairly decent salaries, they may be able to live comfortably and enjoy what their neighbors enjoy. It is a question as to how far in the right direction present day society has moved. There may be pitfalls ahead whose treachery overbalances pleasure and the comfort that we enjoy. After all, no individual is independent. We are all dependent; dependent upon each other, dependent upon God. If we could only realize that we are not compelled to comply with existing affairs and expensive customs. If we could ascertain our proper role in society, our evident responsibilities to our families, to our church, and to God, it would be a wholesome situation for us mortals who make up present day society.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Every individual is confronted with a sea of questions. It matters not where he lives, where he goes, what he does, or what his desires may be. One of these questions is, "What am I to do with my earnings, how much am I to spend for my home, for my total living expenses, and how much am I to contribute out of my earnings? How much of what I contribute should go to my church? How much should go to the institutions of my church? Should I support all

(Continued on page 15.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

An Outdoor Worship Service

By MRS. L. J. BROWN,
Newport News, Va.

THEME: "God in Nature."

CALL TO WORSHIP: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." Psalm 24:1.

POEM:

God of the glorious sunshine,
God of refreshing rain,
Whose voice bids earth awaken
And clothe itself again
With life of richest beauty
In plant, in flower, and tree;
Thou God of light and splendor,
We rise and worship thee.

God of hill and mountain,
Of valley and of dale,
Whose finger paints the rainbows;
Thy beauties never fail
To raise our souls in wonder,
And turn our thoughts to thee;
Thou God of living nature,
We stand and worship thee.

—Thomas Paxton.

HYMN: "The Spacious Firmament on High."

SCRIPTURE: Psalms 19:1-6; 104:1-5, 24, 31.

PRAYER: Our Father, May each one of us hear thy still small voice as it speaks during these moments of meditation. Give us thy divine guidance in the specific problems that confront us, and grant us the courage to follow thy will as it is made plain to us. Help us to love thee more devotedly and to serve thee more courageously. In the name of Christ, our Lord. Amen.

HYMN: "For the Beauty of the Earth."

MEDITATION ON THE THEME:

Suppose that, by a sort of universal amnesia, the Bible disappeared from human memory, and, with it, all trace of consciousness of past creeds, traditions and religious history. And suppose we stood face to face with all the contemporary facts of life, unconditioned and uninfluenced by the past. What should we do? Unquestionably we should set about creating religion anew. The eternal questions would arise again: What is the meaning of life? Whence came we? Whither are we going? Is the universe friendly? How shall a man come into right relation with it? What is the meaning of suffering? Is there help in the face of defeat, tragedy and death? And out of these questions and the facts of life and of the living universe of which we are a part, we should inevitably frame religion anew.

What do we find when we turn to Nature? First of all tremendous energy, vitality and growth—the motion of the heavenly bodies, the tides of the sea, the recurrent seasons, the pageantry of spring, the glory and free movement of animal life.

And beyond these, and through them, an almost universal harmony and beauty. How rarely anything in nature is ugly, except when man has interfered and scarred the landscape with his arbitrary patterns, his straight lines, his coal smoke, his ungainly buildings and his billboards. But the bird's nest, the flowing lines on an elm tree, the snow crystal, the sapphire green of a mountain lake, are always marvelous in their harmonious beauty of line and color.

Closely akin to this beauty in nature is the widespread happiness and joy which characterize all living things. No wonder the poet's heart dances with the daffodils, for how joyously radiant the flowers are! Watch a wild animal out in the open, a deer alert with curiosity, a chipmunk leaping from log to log, a hummingbird poised above a flower—what eager grace, what exquisite delicacy and balance, what joyous fulfillment of function! And the joyous, exuberant vitality on the one hand and quiet poise and tranquillity of nature on the other, are communicable to man, as all nature mystics have borne witness and as many of the rest of us just ordinary people have come to know. Communion with nature quiets, soothes and comforts us. Aye, and sometimes it rebukes and humbles us. But in the end it stabilizes and tranquilizes our emotional life.

Surely nature has much to teach us about God's power, beauty and joy and points the way toward higher revelations in human personality.

—From "Paths to the Presence of God," by Albert W. Palmer.

HYMN: "Now the Day Is Over."

CLOSING PRAYERS We thank thee, O God, for the beauty and quietness of this evening hour. May our lives be filled with thy peace and with a part of the loveliness of this quiet spot. As the day fades into night, may we be aware of thy nearness and of thy love. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

* * * * *

I Have Attended My Second School of Missions

After waiting seven years for this, I feel a deep sense of gratitude to the School of Missions Committee and to every other person who contributed towards making possible for me this experience so full of inspiration, information, fellowship and fun. More than once, I have remarked that my job as Seed Analyst in the Department of Agriculture interfered with my other activities, but I did not fully realize until now how true that statement was. One year has passed since I retired from my State job, and it seems that I have been busier the past year than ever before. However, I do find time to attend Conferences, Conventions, Councils, Missions Schools (as long as the money lasts!) without a feeling of guilt over work which I should be doing in the Seed Laboratory.

Seriously now, I want to express, though inadequately, my grateful appreciation to Dr. Hardeastle, the Rev. Wm. J. Andes, and Miss Miriam Brown, for the excellent way in which they presented our three Study Courses. Better teachers could not have been found! Each session of each class was an inspiration. In this expression of appreciation, I am sure that I voice the sentiment of every woman in attendance.

I am grateful also for the various courtesies extended us on the campus of Elon College. Throughout the sessions, the fellowship was heartwarming, the food was good, and so was the service in the dining hall.

All in all, my opinion is that the Ninth Annual School of Missions was a great success!

SUSIE D. ALLEN.

Raleigh, N. C.

* * *

Possibly there are yet others who would like to express their reaction to the School of Missions. It is still not too late to do so.

General Council "Novice" Makes "Hit"

One of the delegates to the General Council, who was attending for the first time, was Mrs. Carl Monroe of our First Church in Greensboro. She was "on her own," not staying with any friends or in the area of others whom she knew. Each time one met Graham Wisseman during the first days of the council, she would ask, "Have you seen Marge Monroe? I am worried about her—afraid she might be lonely—and I have Home Board meetings to go to and can't look out for her."

Well, Graham needn't have worried about Marge! Everytime we did see her between sessions she was busily engaged in conversation with whoever happened to be nearby. And when the sessions were going on, there she was, up toward the front, taking notes for all she was worth. One day she walked into the council session and a man sitting by your editor (from far away Washington State, he was), said "Have you noticed that girl? Everyone sees her when she comes in, as she is so attractive and always so striking looking and so well dressed!" I was glad to tell him that I knew her, and she was as fine as she was fine-looking.

Mrs. Monroe was chosen as the secretary of the afternoon discussion group in which she participated, and gave the report for the "Inter-Group Relations" seminar before the entire General Council. And again we from the Southern Convention were proud of one of our women—she stood so straight, and spoke so clearly, and looked so attractive.

We thought you would like to read the report, and so asked her to send it for publication on this page.

CURRENT ISSUES IN INTER-GROUP RELATIONS.

Summary Report of the First Session at the General Council.

By MRS. CARL MONROE.

We recognized that there are things that are everlastingly right and there are things that are everlastingly wrong. We must take our stand as Christians on the truth that we must transcend racial differences because we are all children of God and have similar needs and capacities.

But segregation has so long isolated us from one another that we have developed separate ways of doing things, become strangers to each other and too often are mistrustful of one another. In our own denomination we have some segregated conferences and associations and many segregated local churches. Consequently most of us are unacquainted with churches made up of people of the other race. Similarly we do not know each other as persons because of our segregated condition. This situation ought not to continue.

Some indicated that it is important to spread widely among our church members of all races reliable information about ethnic groups in our segregated society so as to help overcome ignorance and misconceptions.

We felt that people need help in their attempts to bring the ideal and the practical together. This is true for members of our local churches who are convinced that the church itself must be an integrated fellowship and should be an integrating force in its community. Even where no minority groups are actually present in the community, the local church should perform its function of helping to create an inclusive neighborhood. This includes developing a climate of opinion favorable to inter-group living and cooperation.

Because of the existence of underprivileged areas in our country, the educational equipment of some of our ministers is inadequate to meet problems of a changing society. "In-service training" becomes highly important for such persons, therefore, and we strongly recommend to the appropriate divisions of the Board of Home Missions that such training be accelerated.

In the close fellowship of a local congregation, deep-rooted conviction on the rightness of recognizing others as children of the same God should be expressed in such a way as not to put those who disagree on the defensive. People do not readily change their attitudes or behavior when they are attacked. We must show ourselves to be humbly aware of our own limitations and we must be completely sincere. When we accept the other person and show him that we understand his fears and timidities, we will have our best chance to be effective. Principles must not be sacrificed but love and patience must be exercised.

In the community, it sometimes becomes necessary to use group action to bring about legislation or to carry forward court action that will insure a certain minimum standard of justice for minority group members.

Support of such group action is one way to meet our obligation as Christians.

* * * * *

Treasurer's Report

The following is the Quarterly Report of the Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

RECEIPTS.

Eastern Ca. Conference:
Women	$1,445.53
Young People	179.63
Juniors	81.85
Cradle Roll	28.90
	<hr/>
	$1,735.91
Valley Conference:
Women	$ 136.81
Young People	42.50
	<hr/>
	$ 179.31
N. C. Conference:
Women	$1,522.65
Juniors	101.87
Cradle Roll	36.44
	<hr/>
	$1,660.96

DISBURSEMENTS.

Home Missions General Fund		$1,240.56
Young People's Home Missions Fund	111.06
Puerto Rican Goat Fund	223.63
	<hr/>	$1,575.25
Foreign Missions, General Fund		$1,240.55
Young People's Foreign Fund	111.07
Scholarship to India ..	50.00
Christian World Mission	12.04
Rachanyapuram School, A. Papas	9.00
Thank Offering, Mindanao	58.27
	<hr/>	$1,480.93
Check to Walter A. Cooper, Treas., S. C. C.		$3,056.18
Check to Mrs. Leathers, Treas., Life Memberships and Memorials		270.00
	<hr/>	$3,326.18
Cash in bank		250.00
	<hr/>	$3,576.18

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. W. V. LEATHERS,
Treasurer.

In a personal note to the managing editor, Emily Lester tells us of "three wonderful weeks in cool Vermont, at a cabin on a lake in the area where my parents were born—had a wonderful rest." They say it's wrong to envy, Emily, but we wonder if it would be wrong if we just wished we could have been there too, when the weather man was posting his upper nineties and hundreds here in Richmond? Anyway, you and F. C. deserved a good rest, and we are happy that you got it.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Visiting churches is a very good pastime. One is not likely to get in trouble that way.

We like to look at Sunday school rooms and take a peek in the back of the pulpit which is a fairly good guide to the way a church is kept. For some time we have looked whenever possible and have seen all sorts of interesting things: dust rags, dirty hankies, lost gloves, lost purses, fans, electric fans, old sermons, old pulpit Bibles, eyeglasses, bottles of ink, insect repellent, old letters (some from the convention office, some from the orphanage), and once a pair of shoes! These things have been seen from Maine to Florida, from Virginia to California.

It is interesting to visit old cemeteries too. Long ago people did that much more than today. Tombstones can be very revealing. You will find husbands buried between two wives, interesting things may be written on the stones, poetry, Scripture, quotations from hymns or a description of the person.

The other day we chanced to visit the graveyard at Shallow Ford. Then we decided to see if the church was locked, much to our surprise, it was not! It seems a pity to keep church doors barred and locked tight. We have seen churches that had iron grille doors in front and had hung a small sign on saying "Welcome." How can welcome be given if it is locked and double locked?

Shallow Ford is an old church and a very lovely one. We had never been in it before, but we had known some of the men who served there in the past, and recalled a few visiting ministers who had been there.

We sat in one of the pews, very quietly, and thought of the men, women and children who had come and gone from that holy place. (We found the building was well kept.) A classroom had a lovely painting of the head of Jesus which must have been done by one of the members. We looked at it reverently and found it gave us a sense of peace. Another classroom had a photograph of the late Dr. W. W. Staley who served our church so well in so many ways. That too, was an inspiration, to find a great man being remembered until the present time.

The Rev. Richard M. Peterson is minister of Shallow Ford now. We don't know him, but we wish him and the congregation at Shallow Ford well in their work.

God dwells in churches big and small: We may find him in the woods, or at the shore.

We may find him at home, or at school, but we must seek him.

Seven Bible verses for the week: Genesis 1:1, Psalm 119:66, Psalm 104:16-18, Hebrews 10:23, Romans 12:17, Job 37:14, and I John 4:7.

* * * * *

A Little Luck

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"What are you doing?" the little girl asked.

Mommie looked at her and smiled. It was a quiet smile, the kind that she gave you when she was ironing and you asked her to play with you. "I don't really know, dear," she said slowly. "This looks like a very small piece of material, doesn't it? But with just a little luck I was hoping I might make you—"

"With a little luck!" Why she could get that for Mommie! As she went down the stairs, she heard something about "more money." The little girl knew that money was important, but Mommie wanted luck.

She smiled all over. She knew where to go. If you didn't find it in the back yard, there was the side yard and the front yard. You just had to be patient. It wasn't something you found easily or quickly. She hummed a tune as she skipped out into the back yard to begin her search.

After a while a small boy came to join her. "I'll find one first," he boasted. Several times he said, "Here's one," bringing his find to her, only to add mournfully, "I thought it had four leaves!"

Sometimes the little girl thought she had one, but she didn't pick it because she had counted "one, two three" leaves first.

Then she was alone again. The boy had gone home. His mother would probably like some luck, too, he had told the little girl, but today he had many things he wanted to do. When he couldn't persuade the girl to give up her search, he strode off.

The little girl continued her search; she was happy just thinking about her present to Mommie. She looked carefully everywhere. She didn't want to miss finding a four-leaf-clover. At last she found one, nestled in deep grass. She picked it carefully, flattening the grass before she picked it, so that none of the tiny leaves would come off.

The little girl went back into the house; Mommie was in the kitchen. "There you are!" said Mommie. "I was about to call you."

The little girl stood there, hands behind her back, holding the four-leaf clover. This was a gift for her Mommie. She must choose the right time to present it.

"You're so young and so very happy," the mother said, wiping her hands and looking down at the little girl. "What have you there? something for me?"

The little girl could only nod her head, her eyes wide open with the importance of this gift. Speechless, she thrust the clover into her mother's hand.

"A lucky clover?" her mother questioned, and then thought to herself, "She must have heard me say I needed some luck. I must be more careful." She looked at the little girl—her mussed dress, her grass-stained knees and shoes, the little drops of perspiration at the roots of the little girl's hair. Then she said, "This is good, dear. Thank you. I can use it. It was hard work, wasn't it? But that is all that is ever sure about luck—hard work." Mommie had a strange smile when she bent down to kiss the little girl.

The little girl smiled back. She loved Mommie. And she had been able to give her just what she had wanted—a little luck!

Six Guiding Principles

The District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers held a three-day session last spring and listened (Continued from page 10.)

to several excellent addresses and discussions on the convention theme, "The Home, Cornerstone of Happy Living."

Dr. Hugh R. Anderson, the president of American University, emphasized that the most important period in a child's life is from birth to the age of eight. Of this period,

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Cupid's Dart Backfires—Hits the Editor of the Youth Page

A cordial invitation is extended to the friends of Rev. Thomas W. Madren and Miss Patty Jones Fuller to attend their wedding at the Liberty Vance Church on Sunday afternoon, August 22, at 5 o'clock. The invitation comes from Patsy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher B. Fuller. The wedding will be performed by Rev. S. E. Madren, father of the groom, assisted by Rev. W. A. Grissom, the pastor of Liberty Church.

Patty Jones, better known as Patsy, is a sophomore at Elon College and is a music major. She has been active in the work of her church for a long time, serving as pianist and soloist of the choir, teaching in the Sunday school, and working with the Junior Department. She has also been active in the young people's society. She has helped with Vacation Bible Schools in her local church for the month of June this year, and served as a Summer Student Worker for the Southern Convention.

Thomas, who serves as the editor of our Youth Page, has been active in church work all of his young life, having attended the Valley of Virginia Young People's Camp at Powell's Fort, where his father was the dean, for several years, and the Young People's Rallies of the Valley Conference. He was graduated from Elon College this spring and will do seminary work at Duke University. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Silas E. Madren of Albemarle, N. C.

They will live at Elon College, where Patsy will continue her education.

It would be a really nice surprise if a number of their friends could be present for the wedding on Sunday afternoon, August 22.

Our best wishes for a long and happy life together go with Thomas and Patsy, and we know that where ever they are, they will be living worthwhile lives, lives of usefulness to other people.

PATTY LEE COGHILL.

Tips From Tom

Many of the youth group would benefit in the line of program material if they would try the filmstrip programs. These are available for only the postage return. Inquire at the Southern Convention Office at once. Groups who are using them say they are very effective.

* * *

It seems that one of Cupid's arrows has backfired, and Cupid has been struck himself. For a short while, the assistant Cupid, Pattie Lee Coghill, will take care of material for "Cupid's Column."

* * * * *

Welcome Home Party

During the month of June the Pilgrim Youth Fellowship of the Elm Avenue Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, held a surprise "Welcome Home Party" for their former president, P. F. C. Robert B. Deans who is now serving in the United States Army.

Choruses were song followed by a chain of prayers.

Several games were enjoyed and group pictures were made.

The colors for the party were red and white. A beautiful cake with "Welcome Home Robert" was the center piece, with a lovely arrangement of summer flowers.

P. F. C. Deans was home on a fifteen day leave at this time and now is an instructor at Camp Gordon, Georgia, where he expects to be stationed for the remainder of his enlistment period with the army.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Deans, and a member of Elm Avenue Christian Church.

JANET RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Ruth Dunn Speaks for Eastern Virginia Youth

Dear Pattie Lee:

The young people of the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship would like to express to you through THE CHRISTIAN SUN their thanks for all the things you have done for them.

If it had not been for you our work here would be nil. You have stood behind us in our projects, given us suggestions, encouraged us and given us inspiration to go on. In your five years as Educational Secretary we feel that much has been done to make Youth Work vital in Eastern Virginia and the Southern Convention.

Some of our young people have left Eastern Virginia and gone to greater fields of service due to your faith in them and your encouragement.

I am sure that many of the young people would like to express to you personally their appreciation and thanks for your many services to them so I would like to ask that each of the young people who would like to do so, write you at RFD No. 4, Henderson, North Carolina.

Thanks again, Pattie Lee, for all your help to us individually and as a group.

Sincerely yours,

RUTH H. DUNN,
Corresponding Secretary.

* * * * *

SIX GUIDING PRINCIPLES.

(Continued on page 11.)

six years are spent entirely in the home. He then pointed out that, in his opinion, home life should do six things:

1. Develop in the child a feeling of security.
2. Present a balance between concern for self and concern for others. This cannot be pushed off on the schools or courts.
3. Develop the ability to work co-operatively with others.
4. Teach self-control and self-discipline. Lack of these is causing Washington's juvenile delinquency problem.
5. Inculcate a set of values, morals and ethics.
6. Develop a devotion to truth. All truths are not relative; there are certain absolutes.

These admirable objectives should be emphasized at every possible opportunity. Doctor Anderson has performed a public service by stating them again in this brief and lucid manner.—Scottish Rite Bulletin.

We are living at a time when creeds and ideologies vary and clash. But the gospel of human sympathy is universal and eternal.—Samuel Hopkins Adams.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Self-Discipline for Growth (Temperance)

LESSON VII—AUGUST 15, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Mathew 16: 24.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Matthew 16: 24-25; I Corinthians 9: 24-27; II Timothy 2: 3-5; Hebrews 12: 1-4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Exodus 20: 1-17.

The Struggle for the Hearts of Men.

There are two rival claimants for the hearts of men—Self and Jesus. One or the other sits upon the throne. One obeys the voice of Jesus, or the voice of self. Jesus says that if any man is really to be his disciple he must say "No" to himself, and establish Jesus as sovereign of his life. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."—there it is in black and white. Discipleship demands discipline. Narrow is the gate and narrow is the road that leads to life in its highest and best sense. Only those who discipline and deny themselves, for Christ's sake, find life, and strength enough, find true freedom. Strangely enough true liberty is to be found in submission to Christ. But this word, discipline and this word self-denial, are not popular words in modern life. We are impatient of restrictions, restive under them, rebellious against them. But like them or not, Jesus says that they are basic in discipleship to him. He who never denies the hungers of his body in order to feed the hungers of his soul, can never know Christ in his fullness and his power.

But more. This discipline is the secret of a larger, fuller life. "He who would save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." Let a man hoard his life as a miser hoards money, let him live only for self, let him try to save his life, and by that attitude and that act, he loses life—he never discovers the meaning of the joys of life. But let him "lose his life" in the sense that he gives it freely, that he gets outside of himself, and lo, he finds life, he really begins to live. In the very act of losing or giving his life, he saves or finds it. And he will grow increasingly unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

There are those who think that the ideal life would be a life without discipline and self-denial. They think of life in terms of license—doing what they please when they please. The hard fact is that those who start out to do what they please find out that what they do, does not please them.

Self-Discipline for Success.

Tradition has it that Paul was not a robust, rugged type of man, even though he did have resiliency and resistance—no man could have undergone what he did if he had not been sinewy and tough. But Paul admired physical fitness and athletic ability. He may have been a lover of sports. In any event, he often goes to the world of sports for his figures of speech concerning the Christian life. Consider today's lesson. "Every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things." He knew that back of splendid performance on the field was Spartan discipline—carefulness in food, persistence in exercise, self-denial in practices, strict discipline over long periods of time. Yet men would accept this discipline when they knew that only one man would receive a prize, and that a garland of leaves or flowers that would soon wither and die! But in the Christian race of life there was a crown or prize for every one, and that an incorruptible and imperishable crown of life. How much more ought we to exercise self-control, practice self-denial, exercise ourselves unto godliness in the light of this fact. This matter of keeping fit is not a fad; it is a Christian duty. To become flabby, to follow the line of least resistance, to take things easy, to allow the appetites to have control, to "get out of training" takes on moral and spiritual significance. We are to keep our bodies under the control of our spirits, to exercise ourselves unto godliness to keep fit in body, mind and spirit. This is not only good economics, it is good religion.

The Race of Life.

Life can be, and has been, likened to many things. Paul likens it to a race. In the setting of a huge Greek stadium, in the presence of a great crowd, the runners, lined up at the starting point, are off with the signal, and run down the marked-out course to the finish line. For the great apostle it is a picture of life—the crowds, the contestants, the contest, the conquest. "Wherefore seeing we are compassed about with so great a crowd of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith." And Paul would have us understand that the same factors enter into life looked on as a race, as enter into a race in the stadium. First of all, he would emphasize conditioning. Those runners, had trained for months, and at the end had been required to take special exercises for a month in the local gymnasium. They just had to keep fit. When they stepped out on that track, they were ready to go, they were in good condition. Even so, should a Christian "keep in condition." Self-denial, discipline, hard work, spiritual gymnastics, proper food—Bible reading, worship, prayer, meditation, spiritual exercise and service for Christ help to get us, and keep us, in good condition. Secondly, equipment "let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Those runners were stripped to the barest essentials. They would make some folks, even in a modern bathing suit, look overdressed. No excess weight of any kind. What would the people have thought if one of those runners had come out on the track carrying a bag of sand on his back, or with hip-boots on his feet! Don't laugh, or look now! There are thousands of us who are doing just that thing. Running this race of life as we all must do, we are carrying excess baggage and weight—bad habits, grudges, fears, worries, sins, indifference, and many other weights which greatly handicap us as we try to run. Thirdly, patience or persistence. "Let us run with patience, the race that is set before us." Life, for most of us is not a sprint, it is a Marathon, a long run, a life-long run. It takes courage and patience and persistence to keep on keeping on. Sometimes the race is uphill and over rough ground. Sometimes it is through dark places, sometimes it has

(Continued on page 15.)

Dr. Jones Issues Letter Upon Return From India

As from 150 Fifth Ave.
New York 11, N. Y.
June 26, 1954

My dear Friends:

Day before yesterday I landed back on American soil after six months in India. I came by "Tourist" plane and saved $400 on the return trip. I am sold on Tourist, just as fast and sufficiently comfortable for "a ransomed sinner."

This six months in India included a two weeks' trip to Ceylon. I suppose those who read my letters may be getting a little tired of my saying, "This was the best six months yet," but really it was so. And yet the setting was not an easy one. I had to work against the background of U. S. military aid to Pakistan, a grave mistake. Two armies are drawn up in Kashmir awaiting a settlement of the Kashmir question and to give military aid to Pakistan meant giving arms to a belligerent and was an unfriendly act to India. So India interpreted it. We have lost a great fund of good will India had for us. The American missionaries in India, being at hand, were made the whipping boys. An anti-missionary agitation has been carried on in the newspapers and in some government circles. It was amid this atmosphere I carried on my work among the educated classes. However, I have never had more courteous and friendly treatment and my hearing for the Gospel was excellent. For one thing they knew I had spoken out against the grant of military aid and had pleaded that only economic aid should be given to both India and Pakistan.

There was one exception regarding friendly treatment. In one place on the second night of a series I was met at the gate of the Town Hall with a black flag procession chanting "Jones go back." I didn't go back, after my address took an hour to answer their questions. A member of the Legislative Assembly got up and though he was not a Christian, defended me for half an hour. The Mayor of the city also apologized to me before the audience for this treatment. By this time the black-flag procession group had wilted and the crowd had swung to our side. The procession was led by a communist. I obtained one of the black flags as a souvenir!

Speaking of communism two years ago I spoke to 30,000 Christians in Travancore on "Christianity and Communism." The atmosphere was tense for many Christians thought they could take both Christianity and Communism. This year I spoke to the same size audience, 30,000, in the place, on the same topic, but this time the tension was gone. The Christians had swung away from communism, disillusioned, and had gone over to the Congress Party or the Socialists. Communism, I am persuaded, is not growing in India. We had a number of ex-communists in our Ashram at Sat Tal this summer.

The Ashram at Sat Tal was the best we've ever had since it was started in 1930. More people were thoroughly changed and released. There was really great power. This transforming power was also felt by some members of the Nurmanzil Psychiatric Center at Lucknow and thus opens a new vista of usefulness. The need for the center is very, very great so we have started something. It will set a pattern for the future. We are very grateful for the possibilities. It is meeting a need.

I started the year working on my autobiography, but on January 8 as I sat in my Quiet Time I found the Inner Voice telling me to lay this aside and work on "Mastery," an interpretation of the Acts of the Apostles. So I have been working on that since then. It will be another devotional, a page a day.

At this writing we are having a family reunion at Clayton, Iowa—Mrs. Jones, Eunice and Jim and the children, the first time for several years. The occasion was celebrated by one of the children breaking out in measles! Speaking of celebrations at Sat Tal this summer they celebrated my 70th birthday, six months after the event, by a five-hour program of events. It was all very heartwarming and it sent me to my knees in gratitude for all this poured-out affection of high and low.

We were supposed to be retired on June 30, but as I wrote the board, "You may retire me as an active missionary of the Board of Missions, but you cannot retire me as a missionary. That goes on—I trust till my last gasp." As far as I can see it will make no difference whatever, for I shall continue my evangelistic work at home and abroad without abatement, perhaps stronger than ever.

And now thanks, dear friend, for your support of that work. Please continue that support through prayer and gifts. I have never undertaken more projects, nor assumed more responsibilities than now. I have done it by faith in God and you. Thanks, dear friend, for your prayers and your contributions.

Greatfully and prayerfully yours,
E. STANLEY JONES.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY. (Continued from page 3.)

questions is long overdue. The time is at hand.

This is a time for world decision.—

"We are living in a grand and awful time"—so says the old hymn. Who can deny the truth of that today? The decisions to be made in our day on the international front may affect not only future generations for the next thousand years, but perhaps the very survival of our planet.

Because of the zeal of Christian laymen there is now a meditation room at the United Nations for prayer and reflection, and sessions of the General Assembly are now appropriately opened by a period of silent prayer.

We men of the church should be much in prayer for our leaders, that they may find God's will as they make the great decisions on the world scene today. We should each of us within our sphere of influence—whether in a pullman train powwow or in a lunch time discussion at our factory bench—endeavor to set up a "climate" for thinking in this land of ours that will reflect the Christian's point of view—the reign of Christ in the hearts of men as the mightiest force in the universe.

Starting with ourselves—

So in the last analysis, it comes down to a personal issue with each of us—what decision is made in these days of crisis. Here are some hints as to how to proceed,

Take your personal problems for decision to God—each one of them—with implicit trust.

Talk to God at frequent intervals through the day in short sentences.

Take any point of tension in your life to your Heavenly Father and let him handle it for you.

Adopt a positive attitude toward life, remembering that the Lord God Omnipotent is on our side—if we are on his side. It was a Korean Christian who, out of his unspeakable suffering, said, "We Korean Christians are the happiest people in earth, for now we know that God cares for us."

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for your help this week and every week. It is very good of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools to give the children a chance to help boys and girls who have no lovely home and kind fathers and mothers to take care of them. Generosity and kindness are traits that make life sweeter. Little children love to help others, and their parents and teachers do well to teach them to do so. The best things in life come "without money and without price." There is no price tag on virtue or honesty. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

A good name... If you could have seen the multitudes that gathered around the home of Mary Foster Warren at Prospect Hill, N. C., as the people throughout her community came to honor her at her funeral you would know something of what I mean. She was the wife of Dr. R. F. Warren. From her childhood in Burlington she walked the ways that were beautiful, and kind and generous. No where did she fail her friends, home, church or community. People love folks that are good deep inside and put their goodness to the quiet, powerful ways real goodness can travel.

"Without money, without price" ... It is that "spirit within" that comes with no price tag. To know the Lord Jesus, to have the Spirit of God is a price-less possession. A dog knows the difference between kindness and meanness. There are some things above money. Some things come without price.

We try to teach our large family that here. And we know a good way to teach it is to be it, that is, to set the example of kindness and honesty and truthfulness, yes, and joy and happiness. If a fellow cannot be happy he is in a bad fix. He needs repair. We try to teach our children here that cultivating our faith in God and seeking his will and way to know will help to keep us happy. It is real interesting to notice how quiet and appreciative children are when they are being told such things.

Mr. and Mrs. Wagoner are away this week on a few days of rest. Mr. Perkins, the dairyman is carrying on, and canning is in full swing. Peaches from Carolina sandhills and tomatoes from orphanage redhills are keeping a large portion of our orphanage family very busy.

First, Greensboro, women sponsored a picnic Saturday afternoon for the girls and matrons of the Main Building. They had fun, the ladies who drove their cars onto our campus and loaded the girls in, and the Carl Monroes on whose farm the lovely outing was given. Gibsonville Young People along with their pastor and his wife brought to us Sunday night a lovely worship program with a timely and interesting talk by their pastor. Burlington folks came to the Baby Home and took a large group of the four-to-tens to the City Park. So many people show kindness and friendship toward us here, and we are just as appreciative as we can be.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR JULY 29, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Mrs. M. W. Blakey, Greensboro, N. C.
High Point Church.
Missionary Society, Bethel Christian Church.
Rev. Bill Simmons, Benett, N. C.
Miss Louise Patton, High Point, N. C.
A Friend, Portsmouth, Va.
Clothing:
Pope's Chapel Missionary Society.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 7,936.29
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Bethel	$ 41.04
Wake Chapel	49.26
	90.30
Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem (Nans)	$ 5.00
Mt. Zion	6.00
Portsmouth, Shelton Memorial	2.00
	13.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Berea	$ 25.00
Durham	21.91
Hines Chapel	6.00
Mebane	5.00
	57.91

Western N. C. Conference:

Brown's Chapel	$ 15.00
Pleasant Union	13.72
	28.72

Virginia Valley Conference:

Timber Ridge	$ 66.00
	66.00

Total	$ 255.93
-------------	-----------

Grand Total	$ 8,192.22
-------------------	-------------

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$20,365.80
Union (Va.) Daily Vacation Bible School, Special offering	$ 11.64
Cypress Chapel Vacation Bible School, Special ..	6.85
Woman's Fellowship, Bay View Church, Special ..	12.85
Special Gifts	20.50
	51.67

Grand total	$20,417.47
-------------------	-------------

Total for the week	$ 307.60
--------------------------	-----------

Total for the year	$28,609.69
--------------------------	-------------

We need two kinds of freedom—freedom to and freedom from. We need "freedom from" such things as ignorance and false beliefs, from bitter prejudice and hates and greeds, from fears and false goals. We need "freedom to" seek the truth, both old and new, and freedom to follow it. Then we need freedom to work for equal justice; freedom to seek the good, the true and the beautiful with minds unimpaired by narrowing dogmas and inaccurate knowledge.

—Cavalier.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

CONVENTION LEADERSHIP IN NATIONAL COUNCIL.

(Continued from page 1.)

erintendent Member of the Executive Committee of the General Council representing the entire South, and he is also a member of the Marginal Church Committee of the Board of Home Missions. Mrs. W. B. Williams is vice-president of the National Congregational Christian Woman's Fellowship.

Former pastors in the convention now serving as superintendents are: Dr. James H. Lightbourne, Rhode Island; Dr. Archie H. Hook, Washington; Dr. Simon Bennett, Indiana.

At the recent session of the General Council Dr. John G. Truitt served on the Credentials Committee, and Dr. Roy C. Relfenstein served on the Resolutions Committee. President Leon Edgar Smith has long been a respected leader, especially in the field of Christian Higher Education.

At the recent session of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, held at New Haven at the same time the General Council met, Miss Lois Scott, president of the Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, was elected to the National Board as the southeastern representative, and others of our youth have served in many official relationships (Lanson Granger, we believe, was the first president of the National P. F.). Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has long been recognized as a leader in our youth and Christian education work.

Doubtless others should have been mentioned here, for the convention has since the merger with the Congregationalists played an important part in the leadership of our united fellowship.

W. T. S.

RESOLUTIONS RECOGNIZING
REV. H. P. BOZARTH.

(Continued from page 1.)

on the planning boards of a new sanctuary for the church he serves and has, with the help of his congregation, gone far in underwriting its cost,

And because his pen has been stirred to produce numerous articles, sermons, lessons and comments, especially in the field of Church School materials,

And because Howard has shared his personality in the realm of recreation, and golf in particular, with others who have sought release from cares and renewal of body and mind,

And because at all times he has been cooperative with all groups in church, college and community in an effort to promote the things of Christ,

Be it resolved: That we, his brethren in the ministry of the North Carolina Conference, do hereby express to him our regret upon his and his family's departure from North Carolina, but that we also rejoice with him in the new field of endeavor in which he will be engaged, trusting that his memories and experiences in our midst will prove a fruitful reservoir of rejoicing in years to come and that as he serves his Lord and our Lord in another place, he may do so with great commendation, partly because he will be aware of a host of good friends in this corner of the vineyard, who pray for him and his and wish them the abundant fruits of faith and love all their remaining days and even unto the life everlasting.

* * *

The above resolution was adopted and presented last Monday evening at our Ministers' Picnic. Rev. Howard Bozath is leaving Elon College to go to Yanktown, S. D., where he will serve as Professor of Religion.

HENRY E. ROBINSON.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

(Continued from page 7.)

the causes of my church or should I select the causes and institutions to which I contribute. Seeking an answer for these questions, those of personal needs must be determined by the urgency of such needs. Those questions that have to do with benevolent giving must be determined by careful consideration of the value of the cause or institution that needs support. The value of such an institution is determined not simply by sentiment but by careful calculations and sound reasoning. I presume that if we are members of the church, at some time or other we think about our college, its needs and the justification of its appeals to us for support. Could you sit down and calculate the worth of your college? Its worth may be determined in part by its contributions to the church and what these contributions have meant to the foresight, the planning and the leadership of our church through the years to this present day. If you think about the contributions of the college and its needs, glance at this week's report which follows, turn back through the issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the last three months and take a look at what the church has contributed to its great institution in comparison to the contributions that it has made to other causes. At the same time, compare the contributions of these causes to the intelligent leadership of the church that is yours.

Previously reported $ 5,052.72
Less error reported last week ... 23.00

$ 5,029.72

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Antioch$ 17.00

Eastern Va. Conference:

Rosemont$ 50.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Happy Home S. S.$ 13.16

Western N. C. Conference:

Albemarle$ 15.00

Asheboro 50.00

Flint Hill (M) 4.55

149.71

Total to date $ 5,179.43

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

to be run when there are no spectators looking on and cheering us on, sometimes it seems as if we are running backwards—it is often dull and drab and discouraging business. But we have to keep on running the race that is set before us. We have need of patience and persistence. Finally, incentive. "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher or perfecter of our faith." Let us keep our eyes on him, let us not wander from the course, let us take him for our example, "who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God." By his grace we can finish our course, and receive a crown of righteousness, every one of us.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

I speak every language and enter every corner of the earth.

I bring information, inspiration, and recreation to all who heed my words.

I treat all persons alike, regardless of race, color, creed or condition.

I have power to stretch man's vision, to deepen his feeling and to enrich his life.

I am a true friend, a wise counselor and a faithful guide.

I am the Bread of Life with the message of salvation for every lost soul.

I am THE BIBLE.—Anon.

"People Who Sit by the Window"

There are people who sit by the window. From the bed to the window and return is the extent of their daily journey. Looking out the window furnishes the chief course of recreation and inspiration for them. Sickness lays its blighting hand upon many people and leaves them weakened and helpless by the window. They know that there is no reasonable hope of recovery. But they hope against hope that the sweet breath of air will bring them a return of health tomorrow. Other people come and go—but they remain shut in by the window. That is the best out-look that comes to them as the days drag wearily by.

Many disappointed people sit by the window. The east window is their choice for the day. Looking out through this window, they see the way over which they have passed in their effort to achieve success. They worked hard, made an honest effort to lay treasures on earth for the evening time of life, and find themselves poor and needy. They think now of their failures. The pantry is empty, the bank account has been closed, and they are no longer able to work for the actual necessities of life as in other days. They once had plenty, but now they must carefully save and use their small resources to make ends meet. They have tried to do right. Others have prospered, where they have failed. Happy are they who, in such an hour, can measure life and success in terms of character. Money is not the only reward for faithful service.

When old people sit by the window, towards the west is their choice. The day for them is dying in the west. The winds of mid-day have passed. For many the storms are over. For some the grim spectre of doubt lingers to haunt them. The evening time of life is not all calm for the saints who are seeking rest. The choicest saints may be disturbed by a passing cloud. But the look out will help them to look up for help and assurance. Youth and strong manhood cannot appreciate the out-look of old age. But it is soothing and comforting for them. The quiet of the twilight, the golden hue of the sunset, the falling of the evening shadows, all inspire hope of sweet peace in that realm beyond the setting sun. Sweet memories fill the mind and enrich the hearts of earth's saints who sit and dream of the past—yes, and of the future—by the window.

Many of us know what it means to lie in bed and sit by the window for months and look out into the narrow spaces of life. The vision is limited, and the scenes are not changed like the images on a movie screen. It is so easy to be blue and discouraged by such an experience. Reading is more difficult because of weariness. One is inclined to become self-centered in thought. The afflictions and frailties may be magnified by vivid imagination. Memories, if they are pleasant and refreshing, help to while the hours away. What a calamity if memories are bitter and full of remorse! Faith, yes, living faith, gives direction to trustful hearts sitting by the window. Maybe this age needs more of the help that comes to those who are shut in from the busy throng, but who find time to sit and think of life in its relation to God and eternity!

It is possible to grow rich sitting by the window. Everything depends upon the inner life and the attitude one takes toward the finer things of the kingdom of God. The soul may be made better. The heart may become more tender. The will may more readily yield to the wishes of the Father who gave us life.

Use the hours by the window for soul culture and sweet meditation.

I. W. JOHNSON.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 12, 1954

NUMBER 31

The Heart of the Matter

By WARREN H. DENISON

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP is intended to reveal God to us in our possessions. When a person sees and accepts the fact that God is in what he has, a deep and rich experience comes to him, and to his life is given added power. Stewardship expresses what happens when the Eternal energizes the economic area of his life.

Horace Bushnell was far-visioned and had caught the heart of a great truth when he said, "One more revival—only one more—is needed, the revival of Christian Stewardship, the dedication of the money power to God. When that revival comes, the Kingdom of God will come in a day."

Bushnell struck deep into the heart of a basic truth. Not merely or only will the church and philanthropies have ample funds, but deeper still, there will be a dynamic of spiritual power released that will challenge the most difficult situations. Here and there some individuals and some churches are demonstrating that truth, and they are finding new power, and both more and new funds.

Wherever you find a person who accepts and practices Christian Stewardship, one who sets aside a first definite proportionate share of his income, a tenth or more, you invariably find such a person experiencing a richer life, and you will find him dedicating his talents and time, according to his ability, in service of the Kingdom as never before.

All too long we have talked all around this subject, skimmed around its edges. The time is here when we need lay aside all trumped-up excuses and get directly at the heart of this vital spiritual matter.

News Flashes

Mt. Olivet (Green) and Bethel Churches of the Valley Conference held a joint fellowship meeting and picnic on Sunday, August 1. Rev. Henry V. Harman is their pastor.

The Leaksville, Virginia, Church of the Valley Conference, recently received seven new members, five on confession of faith and by baptism, and two by letter. Rev. R. E. Newton is the pastor.

Newport Church, in the Virginia Valley, recently organized a laymen's society. This group has already been reported as of great assistance to their pastor. We hope that they will be reporting their work through the Laymen's Page.

An interesting letter from Quentin Leisher will be found on page eight of this issue. Mr. Leisher was asked by the American Board to make this trip to India this summer in order to bring fresh news from the work there when he speaks in the churches this fall.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, in submitting "Some Important Observations on Free Church Polity and Unity," from the pen of Dr. Louis Schulz, says, "It occurs to me that here are some very important observations that ought to be shared with the church at large."

Rev. Clyde O. Koon of Elm Street Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, was the guest minister during revival meetings held at Dry Run Church, Seven Fountains, Virginia, July 5 to 11, and at Joppa, RFD, Edinburg, Virginia, the week following. Interest was good, and the attendance was a record for recent years.

The pastor of Mount Lebanon, in the Valley Conference, Rev. R. E. Newton, reports that four persons—one by transfer—were recently received into that church. Nine others were received during the week of revival services, July 19-25. A total of fourteen was baptized on Sunday afternoon, August 1. Rev. Ralph Galt was the guest minister during the revival.

Kagawa at Elon College

Toyohiko Kagawa, the great Japanese Christian leader, was in Burlington last week under the auspices of the Ministerial Association of that city. Elon College was fortunate in securing Dr. Kagawa for an address at the college on the morning of Thursday, August 5, at ten o'clock.

Dr. Kagawa spoke for fifty minutes on "Christian Living in the Atomic Age." In this address, he traced man's conception of creation all down through the years to the present day. In the creative acts of God, man realized a clear revelation of God as creator and preserver of the world and of mankind. From the standpoint of creation, God and the Christian religion differ from all other gods and their religion. Dr. Kagawa stated that unless you discover the creative power of the love of Christ, you miss the whole point of the Christian religion.

It was a scholarly address, with an inspirational impact upon the minds of those who listened carefully. On a hot summer's day at ten o'clock in the morning, with no publicity other than newspaper announcements, the first floor of the auditorium was filled, with some in the balcony. This was a tribute to the man of God who had come to our campus.

It was difficult to understand his speech or to comprehend the full meaning of what he was saying, but to be in the presence of one whose Christian faith has been extolled to the ends of the earth was indeed a privilege and a blessing.

Dr. Kagawa spoke at a luncheon meeting at the Alamance Hotel at twelve-thirty o'clock, and his major appearance was at Walter Williams High School in Burlington in the evening at eight o'clock. Unfortunately, the program at the college prevented my attending this meeting.

Dr. Kagawa attracted attention in the Christian world thirty years ago by the publication of the fact that he had a long list of men in key positions all over the world on his prayer list, for whom he prayed personally by name every day. The late Dr. J. O. Atkinson, an admirer of Dr. Kagawa, stated on different occasions that he would count it the greatest honor possible to know that his name was on Kagawa's prayer list.

The amazing thing about Christianity and the Living God is that no age has yet been left without great

(Continued on page 7.)

Some Important Observations on Free Church Polity and Unity

By DR. LOUIS SCHULZ, Winterpark, Florida.

If there is any organic relationship in our denomination as it now exists, further growth need not be impeded. The plan of union in the early nineteenth century was a cooperative effort. The independent churches evidently were not consulted. It lasted thirty-odd years. The rise of the American Missionary Association as a protest against the refusal of our missionary movement to evangelize slaves was a growth or organization that came into being without necessarily consulting all the churches. In fact, the churches of the Boston area, whose members profited by slavery, appear to have been heartily opposed to the work of the AMA.

I should imagine the churches that take adverse action to association or conference mergers may proceed as they have in the past—either withdraw, or ignore the action of the association or conference or National Council. That is what they do now on any matter approved by the association, etc., in which they do not wish to participate. In each association of which I have been a part, there

(Continued on page 15.)

S. M. Smith Dies in Florida

S. M. Smith, widely known in Virginia and North Carolina, died on Thursday of last week at Bay Pines, Florida, of a heart attack, at the age of 84. The funeral was held on Wednesday of this week at 3 p. m., in the Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. Smith served in the Navy during the Spanish-American War, and later was the director of religious work on the staff of the Norfolk, Va., Y. M. C. A. He was at one time on the faculty at Elon College, and was also for a time headmaster of the Berkley Military Institute. In recent years he had been active in forming old folks' organizations known as "Three Score and Ten Clubs." He was physically active till the very last.

A native of North Carolina, he had spent his winters in St. Petersburg, Florida, for a number of years, coming to Virginia for the summers.

Mr. Smith was a facile writer and often made contributions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. His wife, one son, two daughters and five grand-children survive. We extend them our deepest sympathy.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Finding God

PROGRAM FOR AUGUST.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Jesus Calls us."

"A Charge to Keep I Have."

SUGGESTED SCRIPTURE: Proverbs 2: 1-9.

PRAYER: "Eternal God, we beseech Thee to make Thyself known to us in such a way that we may never again leave Thy blessed presence. Amen.

MEDITATION: Finding God.

I believe there is a living God, who created all things and retains power of control over all; that we are a part of his creation and his great plan; that Jesus came to help us find the Father. This is not a mere intellectual assent, but a certainty born of my personal experience of the very presence of God. Surely not one of us can doubt the actuality of God after once knowing his all-pervading love and felling the burning joy of his presence. How could one be the same man again?

Being a common man myself, I believe that any man can prove the living existence of God, for himself, if there is sufficient desire and persistence; and it is worth any man's lifetime, "The pearl of great price." Although I was raised in a Christian home, attended church regularly and always considered myself a Christian, I came, in middle life, to realize that I had somehow missed the abundant life. I had all the things men need in earthly surroundings—a loving wife, three stalwart sons, work that I liked with adequate income, a comfortable home, friends, respect, recognition and trust—just about everything. Still I was desperately unhappy and found myself wondering when it would all end.

I sought God in the solitudes and to my great joy, found him waiting there. It is wonderful to remember the Glory of the Lord shining around and how I saw beauty and brightness everywhere. All the earth seemed changed, God's creation is good, there is good in each man, "All things are made new." Since then life is a great adventure and has real purpose.

I believe that God called Moses, Paul and others for special tasks in the Kingdom; surely he is still calling, as the need seems as great now, for good leaders—and good followers. As for me, I dare not wait for a burning bush. I must listen with my whole heart and mind, I must be constantly alert and sensitive, to know God's presence and hear the still voice.

I believe that Christianity is, first of all, an individual matter. We love to worship with others, to talk over the things of the Kingdom, to unite in serving the great cause. But it does not mean much to us until our own contact with God thrills us, changes our lives, makes all things new. As George Buttrick says, "If the gospel does not begin with the individual, it does not begin; but if it ends with the individual, it ends."

There was the Maine backwoods character who, being asked about the death rate in that section, replied "Wal I reckon it's about one to a person." Likewise, lifetimes are dealt out only one to a customer, so we want this one to be productive of the deepest happiness and at least a little real value. It is worth a lot of time and study to determine the way we shall go. And, as our own Walter Graham says, "As far as time goes, all of us have all the time there is."

I believe that God has placed us in this wonderful world of multiple choices—beauty and ugliness, truth and falsehood, love and hate, good and evil. He made us free to choose, to make right or wrong choices every

(Continued on page 11.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The World Council of Churches

The Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches will be held in Evanston, Illinois, August 15-31, 1954. It will be the most momentous gathering of Christian people ever held in the Western Hemisphere. It is devoutly to be hoped that Evanston will be another significant milestone on the road to Christian unity. The World Council of Churches was organized at Amsterdam in 1948.

The Evanston Assembly will be made up of 600 official delegates, representing 161 separate church bodies, which are located in 48 countries of the world. In addition to the 600 voting delegates, there will be 150 consultants who because of their special competency in certain fields, will participate in the discussions. There will be 120 youth consultants, and 600 "accredited visitors." The meetings of the Assembly will be held on the campus of Northwestern University.

The long history of the Christian Church is marked by divisions, separations, and the multiplication of divergent sects. Ever since the days of the Apostles, zealous missionaries have been carrying the Gospel of Christ to distant lands. Christian groups were organized, which developed their own individual characteristics and became identified with national cultures. There were sharp divisions between Christians even before the Protestant Reformation. Since the Reformation, the dividing of the Body of Christ has continued at an ever increasing rate.

It was not until the beginning of the Twentieth Century that the entire Church of Christ began to be deeply concerned about the divisions which separated the various branches of the church. The Nineteenth Century was the period of the church's greatest missionary activity and expansion. As the number of churches in mission fields increased, the disadvantages and dangers of denominational divisions became more apparent. Great souls who were leaders of the church resolved that the issues of denominationalism must be faced.

The World Council of Churches is the fruit of certain notable conferences to which the various denominational groups were invited and in which most of them participated. The Edinburgh Conference, held in 1910, faced up to the issue of a divided church. World War I came soon after the Edinburgh Conference and halted temporarily the efforts to achieve Christian unity. It served, however, to emphasize the need for a Church of Christ that was truly The Church. The Stockholm Conference in 1925, the Lausanne in 1927, and the Oxford and Edinburgh Conferences in 1937, were successive steps which led to the World Council in 1948.

In preparation for the Evanston Assembly, the Central Committee of the World Council met at Toronto in 1950, and agreed that the theme should deal with Christian Hope. The theme was later formulated as "Christ—the Hope of the World." The task of formulating the "Message" of the Assembly was committed to a Commission of twenty-five. The Commission prepared a preliminary report which has been re-drafted twice. This report will serve as the basis of discussion at Evanston. Out of the discussion there, will come the message of the World Council of Churches, on the subject of Christian Hope.

The World Council of Churches will not be considering Christian Hope in the abstract. It will be dealing with Hope as a basis of Faith and Life of the Churches. It will also be seeking to relate Christian Hope to the situation confronted by the various peoples of the world.

There will be six Assembly topics of discussion, which will seek to implement Christian Hope in the life of the church and of the churches. These topics are: (a) Our One-ness in Christ and Our Disunity as Churches; (b) Evangelism: the Church's Neglected vocation; (c) The Responsible Society in a World Perspective; (d) International Affairs: Christians in the Struggle for World Community; (e) Inter-Group Relations: The Church Amid Racial and Ethnic Tensions; (f) The Laity—The Christian in His Vocation.

Membership in the World Council of Churches is open to all churches which acknowledge Jesus Christ as God and Saviour. The purpose of the council is to foster acquaintance and understanding between the member churches, that as they become aware of that which they have in common, they may discover the One-ness which they have in Christ.

They Put Christianity to Work

By HARTZELL SPENCE

Reprinted by Special Permission of "The Saturday Evening Post"

(Copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company)

A Report on the wonderful works of mercy of the World Council of Churches, which meets August 15 to 31, at Evanston, Illinois. A heartening example of what good Christians can do, when they set aside their differences and pitch in to carry out the practical precepts of their faith

Adolph Hitler boasted in 1933 that he could destroy the Christian church easily, because it was "hollow and false and rotten." Behind the Iron Curtain, the obliteration of religion is an item of state policy. Yet, next (this) month in Evanston, Illinois, the delegates of 170,000,000 Christians from forty-eight countries will demonstrate that the impact of totalitarianism has drawn them militantly together into what their leaders describe as "an invulnerable, indestructible world community."

The occasion for this rally is the convocation, on the campus of Northwestern University, of 1660 official—and upwards of 100,000 unofficial—representatives of the World Council of Churches. This is the first global meeting of Protestant and Orthodox Christians ever held in the United States, and the only one likely in this country during our generation. It is something new under the sun. The 161 denominations in the council are in violent disagreement among themselves on 100 controversies. Nonetheless, they are solidly united on two fundamentals, that Christ is the hope of the world, and that every living mortal deserves freedom and opportunity. They also are determined to study the causes of their separation and to resolve them—a project they expect to continue for 100 years.

The two-week assembly beginning on August fifteenth will be primarily a demonstration of solidarity. It will open with a giant pageant at Soldier Field in downtown Chicago, performed by 400 actors accompanied by a 2000-voice choir and a 200-piece band. But more impressive theologically than this rich spectacle will be the procession into the stadium, that night, of delegates, official observers and consultants, many of whom twenty-five years ago were scarcely on speaking terms.

Included will be patriarchs of the Orthodox Church from the Middle East, mindful of the schism exactly 900 years ago—in 1054 A. D.—which broke eastern and western Christianity into two noncooperating segments. One of the vice-chairmen of the World Council, Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, will remember that his immediate predecessor as president of the United Lutheran Church opposed the creation of the world body. Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church will recall that until 1938 they were not permitted to join even a national council of churches. A delegate from the Reformed Church of South Africa, whose government upholds racial discrimination, will be only a few steps removed from the leader of the Dyak Church of Borneo, whose aboriginal ancestors were headhunters. And in the procession will be a Scottish cleric who just six years ago emphatically resisted the idea of a world council, but who finally swallowed his denominational pride and said, "Tis nae kirk, but 'tis the will o' God, and I'll gang along."

For 70 per cent of the Protestant-Orthodox world to sit down and discuss differences at all is so radical that, after the World Council was formally organized at Amsterdam in 1948, Methodist Bishop, Francis J. McConnell commented, "A century hence, church historians will look back on the organization of the World Council as the most significant event of the twentieth century. It marks the beginning of the end of denominational animosities."

The council was conceived by its founders as a forum for high-level debate of theological problems, and a series of study commissions to reconcile doctrines which keep the denominations apart. But while this was in process of formation, nazism and then communism projected the council into a dynamic championship of oppressed mankind. Immediately on the outbreak of war in 1939, the energy of all the present World Council members was concentrated on the human emergency.

Ignoring denominational credit for their efforts, they pooled resources at Geneva, Switzerland. A provisional committee established to formalize the council became the executive agency through which the churches funneled their money, their collections of food and clothing and their global personnel. The International Missionary Council alone threw $5,000,000 into this work. Whether the refugees were Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Moslem or Buddhist, white, black or bronze, enemy or friend, made no difference.

Throughout the world, missionaries remained at their posts despite invasion, kept alive through Geneva. Churches in neutral lands supplied chaplains for prisoner-of-war camps, Sweden bearing most of this load. Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary, thus describes this period, "As one after another of the institutions to which men had confidently looked as defenders of liberty, justice and humanity crumbled or capitulated, the church held firm." The story was the same in China, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Greece.

By war's end, the refugee problem eclipsed all others. Twenty agencies, including the United Nations, relieved this distress; to date, however, the World Council and its co-operating churches have rescued and resettled more refugees than all other private agencies together. Since 1948 the rehabilitation and permanent placing of Protestant and Orthodox refugees has primarily been the concern of two groups, the World Council and the Lutheran World Federation. In the past five years, the council alone has distributed $34,000,000 worth of food and clothing, and $15,000,000 in cash, in Europe and Asia.

Dr. Edgar H. S. Chandler, director of field operations for the World Council, is called "The Flea" by his associates because he continually hops about the world, directing relief. In Sydney, Australia, last summer, he lunched in a hotel in which all the waiters, kitchen help, including chefs, and the orchestra were Iron Curtain refugees whom Chandler's agency had transported. The city of Sydney has an Orthodox Church with 10,000 constituents, all former displaced persons. In Australia are 1,000,000 homeless Europeans, who now number one ninth of the total population.

Currently swamping the World Council's relief facilities are many of the 1500 East Germans who reach West Berlin daily, 15,000 Europeans stranded in communist China, 4000 Iron Curtain DP's in Trieste, 880,000 Arabs routed from their homes by upheavals in the Middle East, the countless victims of drought in India and Pakistan, and the widows and orphans of Korea.

In refugee work, every case is a special problem. A victim of communism who fled Poland rather than put his three sons in Red schools, arrived at Trieste penniless, with his family. His wife was sent to a tuberculosis sanitarium in Switzerland and was cured. His baby was placed in a nursery school in Italy. His two sons were sent to a vocational school operated by the World Council. The father himself found work with the Allied Military Government. Eighteen months later the family was reunited and sent to Canada, where the husband is employed as a forester. In many instances, the paperwork alone is formidable. Over an eighteen-month period, 123 separate documents were required before an eighty-five-year-old Polish farmer, his two middle-aged daughters and seven-year-old grandson were resettled in Iraq.

Every story reveals interchurch cooperation. Four boys who arrived at a World Council relief station in West Berlin were taken to a Lutheran center, found farm jobs by the German Evangelical Church, and were clothed by Church World Service. In the town of Tongnae, in Korea, relief supplies are channeled through the council from all its members, turned over to a local committee composed of four pastors—two Presbyterians, one Methodist and one Holiness Church—who in turn distribute the aid among twenty churches, three orphanages, two refugee camps and two old people's homes, all operated by different denominations.

Thirteen separate churches are working through the World Council on the problem of the 300,000 Korean war widows and their 1,500,000 children, in a land which discourages remarriage. Also in Korea are eight church stations where artificial limbs are made and fitted to civilian war victims. An eighteen-year-old boy hobbled 300 miles on a crutch to get a wooden leg at the Taejon camp. In gratitude for this help, he adopted a five-year-old boy who had lost both arms. Three hundred of the 409 Korean orphanages currently in existence are sponsored by World Council members.

The most difficult refugee cases are the hard-core individuals whom nobody wants. They may be senile, tubercular, epileptic, alcoholic, even former prostitutes. Somehow, homes have been found for many thousands of them. One group of 130 stateless Russians, all hard cores, have become the lifetime burden of Protestant churches in Europe, which were grateful for aid they received from the World Council during the war. The tiny Belgian Protestant Church took in thirty-one of the diseased and crippled. The aged went to Holland, the mental defectives to France. The final sixteen, all hopeless epileptics or dangerously deranged, found heaven in West Germany. "We who have received so much," wrote the Evangelicals who took them in, "can do no less."

An important contribution to the relief work has been made by the 10,000 young people who, since 1948, have participated in international work camps under World Council auspices. In recognition of their efforts, 120 college-age young people will be official consultants to the delegates at Evanston. They will contribute a heretofore-unheard voice in high-level Protestant discussion. Having made their witness to Christianity in action, they refuse any longer to be silent.

The work camp, introduced into America by the Quakers, is a rapidly expanding summer activity. This year these youths are flung about the world in unprecedented numbers. Enrolled principally through the United Christian Youth Movement, 1100 young people are working in thirty-two camps in nineteen countries. They are paying their own expenses, ranging from thirty-five dollars to $1150, for the privilege of joining Christian youth from many lands in hard manual labor.

In Thailand they are building a granary and a church; in Paris, a refugee-student center; in Germany, a trade school; in atom-bombed Nagasaki, a playground. Last year thirty Christian Japanese students helped to transform a former U. S. Air Force base in Assam into a college. In the Philippines, where bitterness against the Japanese remains acute, two Japanese girls attended a camp to rebuild Laguna College. At summer's end, a former Filipino Army officer and his wife invited the girls into their home, so that they might attend the college during the winter.

A continuing project of three summers was the restoration of a farming community at Pontikates, Greece, near the Albanian border. There, a 1000-acre valley which supported 400 persons in three villages had been inundated by a swamp, due to the collapse of an ancient drain tunnel, leaving the populace destitute. The campers, numbering twenty-five from nine nations, helped the local people drain their land, restore its fertility and plant the first crop. They then taught the villagers how to use donated tractors and other modern equipment.

In all these enterprises, the young people enter into the life of the native villages, sometimes with unanticipated results. In Thailand, forty campers, including two from the United States, were called on for volunteers to help deliver a baby. A Filipino medical student and an American girl who held the camp record for mixing twenty-one boxes of cement in a day, teamed with a local interpreter to do the job. The baby was promptly named Ecumena, from the Greek oikoumene, meaning "universal," or "the entire inhabited world," which is the key noun in the World Council movement, its cable address and its motto.

After the Dutch floods, several youth teams helped to save crumbling churches and scrubbed and redecorated others. The oblique importance of this work underscored by a Dutch pastor, Dr. E. Emmen, who wrote the World Council's executive committee: "You have no idea what a difference it made to people in the flooded areas to hear these foreign languages and see these strangers laboring at the dirtiest work. The flood brought disaster and death, but it also brought a totally new appreciation of ecumenical Christianity."

This new concept of Protestant-Orthodox Christians everywhere helping one another without regard to denomination, ethnic origin or politics, is the climax of long gestation begun in the missionary field. From the Reformation until about 1900, Protestant emphasis was on disunity, with a steady succession of divisions and schisms from established groups, until today in the United States there are 250 separate denominations.

Even so, there was an undercurrent (Continued on page 9.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Not Which, But How and When

Three score years and ten and more ago the Christian Church in the South came to grips with the question of its future. Under the power of its evangelistic spirit and led on by the passion of its ministers, many had been won to Christ and rejoiced in a living faith. It had "lengthened its cords," but it had not "strengthened its stakes." Those who had been won to Christ must be established, rooted, and grounded in the faith, must be consolidated and organized into a working body. Such achievements, so necessary, could be realized only with a trained leadership, a leadership not only with a religious experience, but schooled in the arts and sciences, a systematic theological conception of Biblical truth and a keen passion for denominational churchmanship. The church came to realize that such ends could be achieved only on a college campus of its own, under its own leadership and direction.

Inspired by the gleam of such a vision and encouraged by the impact of divine conviction, Elon College, our college, was conceived, founded and built. The church came to the place in its thinking and planning for the future that it was not a question of what it should do or which should be done first, but how could it be done and when should the step be taken? The one challenging need for the church then was a good Christian college for the training of the youth of their church, out of which was to come the leadership for the future. There were many things that the church needed then and needed badly, but the leaders had reached the place, the time had come, when it was not a question of which should be done first, but that the college must be built and how is it to be built, and when do we begin.

Our church in the South has come a long way since that far away day. The college has grown to be a good institution. The church has increased in keeping with its leadership. The church never grows beyond the vision and ability of its leaders. As back toward the founding of Elon College, our church in the South comes again to grips with the question of its future. Judging from past experiences and the progress of our church, we should realize that the future depends upon the ones who lead, ministers and laymen, that no one individual or group of individuals can lead beyond their vision, ability and faith. The qualities of leadership are imbedded in the individual, but those qualities must be schooled and trained in order to bear their best fruits. Now, as then, the churches in the Southern Convention are dependent to a large extent upon Elon College for their leaders. There are many things that the church needs today, granted: church buildings, educational buildings, parsonages, benevolences, missions, and the whole category of present-day requirements, but these all depend upon leadership, and so far as the church in the South is concerned, it must continue to look to Elon College, its own college, for its leaders in pulpit and pew. The needs of Elon College are too well known to our constituency to even venture to enumerate them. But this much should be said, however, that we have come to the place in our church program that it is not a question of which; we know the greatest need that confronts us today as a church, and that is to complete the campaign that we launched years ago to secure funds to provide Elon College with its necessary equipment, that we need not hang our heads in shame or apologize to the people when we solicit students for the college, and when we employ faculty members to instruct in our college. The campaign has been interrupted enough, as we all realize. We have come to the place when it is not a question of which, but how and when do we begin.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Time marches on. The days come and go; the weeks pass and the months are gone before you realize it. It seems but a short time ago when we started out on a new conference year with all bills paid, a clean sheet, and the future ahead of us, but now the months have slipped away and before we realize it, October and November will be here again.

A number of our churches will be wondering how they are going to meet their apportionment obligations.

Doubtless a year ago, they declared that the end of another conference year would never find them in arrears with their church obligations, but pledges made do not achieve unless we keep them. There is yet plenty of time for every church to meet its obligations to all interests of the denomination, including Elon College. It certainly is not necessary to say that the college needs money with which to meet its obligations. This fact is too well known by every one of us.

The point is that much good would be accomplished if we would do something about apportionment obligations.

The fifth Sunday will be here pretty soon. It would be wonderful if every church and Sunday school would receive an offering on the fifth Sunday and sent it in. What do you suppose would happen if the convention office should receive 200 contributions for the college the week following the fifth Sunday? Won't you and your good people plan to do just that thing? This will go to pay your apportionment anyway. Why not join in this united effort and see what would happen? Such an effort would be a blessing both to the churches and to the college. It is a pleasure to depend upon Christian people.

Previously reported $ 5,179.43

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Hayes Chapel$ 9.00

Shallow Well 54.00

Turner's Chapel 42.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Pleasant Grove$ 29.00

Western N. C. Conference:

Bailey's Grove$ 5.00

Big Oak 5.00

Pleasant Cross S. S. 10.89

Virginia Valley Conference:

Linville S. S.$ 7.50

Winchester S. S. 8.34

170.73

Total to date $ 5,350.16

* * * * *

KAGAWA AT ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 2.)

Christian leaders; those whom succeeding generations considered as prophets, priests and saints. God has assured his people that the earth will not be left without a witness, and witnesses the world does have. They bear testimony of the love and the power of God bestowed upon all who believe.

It was an honor, a privilege and a blessing to have Dr. Kagawa of Japan as our guest and speaker at the college.

Missions at Home and Abroad

Quentin Leisher Reports from India

I stood in the operating room of the Wai Hospital at midnight the other evening. An expectant mother lay on the table, knowing that an operation was necessary. The hospital light plant had been shut down for a number of days because of mechanical difficulties. To have run the plant may have meant the ruining of a whole new plant. In a few minutes Dr. George and Dr. Rose Smith were scrubbed and were dressed in their white gowns ready for the operation. Dr. Gaikwad without hesitation spoke out strongly, "Start the generators." Everyone waited to see if the lights would come on. In a moment the light flickered and then steadied a bit and the room flooded with light. This drama started at 10:30 p. m. In about an hour the operation was successfully completed. A mother's life was saved and a child was born.

Here at Wai Hospital where Dr. Hale Cook has been our American Board Doctor, Dr. Rose Smith and Dr. Gaikwad work for about $50.00 a month. (Each one could make five times that amount in private practice.) These doctors meet for prayer each morning, and it is their devotion and consecration that keep them working way into the night at the Wai Hospital.

There is not enough room in the hospital for the patients treated by these Indian Christian Doctors. As I talked long hours into the night to the nurses and the doctors of Wai, I realized that their dream and vision looked to the day when their people will have healthy bodies—to the day when malaria, cholera, smallpox, typhoid and other contagious diseases shall be no more—to the day when mothers shall receive the care and treatment that they all need. But it is discouraging and disheartening to go on understaffed, in quarters that must be enlarged. All over India there is a wistful longing for a new day—for a way up and out of their disease, their poverty, their ignorance. Never have I seen such determination on the part of the people themselves for a better way of life.

They are not asking for charity—just for a chance. Let's give them that chance by helping with our leadership and our funds, educating these nationals to the day when they shall take their places as the great leaders of India. If we do this, I am not worried about Communism or any other ism coming into this great land of India.

* * *

Mr. Leisher has sent other reports telling of his visits to the other stations in the Western India area. They testify to the same sort of sacrificial service being rendered by the Indian Christians in church, school and medical work.

REV. QUINTEN LEISHER

A New Type of Missionary Service

The American Missionary Association of the Congregational Christian Churches recently announced a new program which grants scholarships for college education to eighteen young people of India, Eskimo, Aleut and Latin America ancestry, coming from ten states and two territories. The awards, which are renewable, will total around $25,000.

"This is a new program to meet urgent financial needs of young Americans of certain economically disadvantaged groups that lack their normal quota of trained leaders," says Dr. Galen R. Weaver of New York City, Secretary on Religion and Race in the American Missionary Association, with headquarters at 287 Fourth Ave., New York City.

"It is hoped that a high percentage of those chosen will go on beyond their college degree to study medicine, teaching, engineering, ministerial and other post-graduate courses leading to the professions. The American Missionary Association expects to assist throughout the college course in the case of those who do creditable work."

Although the American Missionary Association is a division of the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions, the eighteen young men and women selected for scholarships are affiliated with several denominations including Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational Christian, Methodist United Presbyterian, Society of Friends, Nazarine, Russian Orthodox and Roman Catholic.

This program is in line with the type of Christian aid given since 1865 by the American Missionary Association through some 500 schools and colleges for Negro Americans, founded or fostered by this Congregational society.

The list of young people who are recipients of the scholarships are as follows: Wilfred Antell, Bagley, Minnesota; Aurora Aveilla, Philippine Islands and Honolulu; Millie Anne Beecher, Route 1, Shawnee, Oklahoma; Curtis Lee Canard, Box 35, Wetumka, Oklahoma; Mathilda M. Fehak, Mt. Edgecumbe, Alaska; Kathryn D. Fisher, Rt. 2, Seneca, Missouri; Connell R. Ghormley, Jr., Tahlequah, Oklahoma; Calvin Isaac, Route 7, Philadelphia, Mississippi; Clifford Johnson, Niobrara, Nebraska; Melvin LeRoy Mason, Oklahoma Presbyterian College, Durant, Oklahoma; Barbara Ann Nevitt, Waubun, Minnesota; Natalie Simeonoff, 903 Ninth Street, Juneau, Alaska; Ardis W. Tuttle, Fort Thompson, South Dakota; Luella Vann, Stillwell, Oklahoma; Chloe Ann Davenport, Tema, Iowa; Roselyne E. Decker, Box 837, Bridgeport, California; Sylvia Jean Nelson, Box 572, Winslow, Arizona; Ernest Chaney, Jr., Route 3, Mountain View, Oklahoma.

Lincoln Academy, Kings Mountain, N. C. is more than a high school with teen-agers enrolled. It reaches out to the farmers in the area to help them where they live and work. Sponsored by the American Missionary Association of our Board of Home Missions, the academy aims to help its students adjust themselves to their local rural environment with courses in vocational agriculture and by emphasizing the religious and social phases of living as well as the academic.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheville, N. C.

New North Carolina Society

Mrs. W. T. Scott, president of the North Carolina Women's Conference, sends word that another new society has been organized in that area. This is the way she puts it:

"Congratulations are in order! Our North Carolina Conference is happy to announce the birth of another new society! The women of our new church at Hendersonville, met on July 15 and organized a 'Woman's Christian Fellowship.' Present were fourteen women, who voted on the following officers: Mrs. Charles Stube, president, R. 4, Ransier Drive; Mrs. O. B. Witt, vice-president, 655 Blythe Street; Mrs. Hilary Neighbors, secretary, 317 West Fifth Avenue, and Mrs. Ralph Wanlass, treasurer, Brevard Road.

"It was agreed to meet on the first Monday of every month at 2.30 p. m., in the church building.

"Our North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference extends a cordial and sincere welcome into our fellowship. I am sure that our work will be strengthened and together we may accomplish greater things 'In His Name and for His Sake.'"

We shall be watching with interest for further news from this new society. Mrs. Scott was unable to be with them for this organizational meeting, but expects to visit the society later.

* * * * *

Year Drawing to a Close

The article from Bethlehem, Nansemond County, Virginia, society on this page reminds us that it is getting near time to end our year's work. Reports are to be in early in September, which may necessitate moving up our September meetings to an earlier date than usual in order to complete the year's work.

And, as we draw near to the end of the year, we ought to evaluate the work done by our women's society. Are we meeting the need of the greatest possible number of our women? Could we make a shift in organization so that we included more of them in our work? Could our program be made more attractive to a larger number? Are we having the proper balance between programs and projects, between money raising and giving?

Perhaps we are in a rut and need to get out of it. That rut may be having the same women in the same circles for a number of years until they get to be little "closed corporations," who are not overly anxious for new members. That rut may be having only Bible study as our program for a missionary society, when we do get Bible study in the Sunday school and church, and do not get many of the other good program materials supplied in our packets. That rut may be having one or two people do all the programs, because they are willing, rather than trying some new faces and voices for leaders. Let's be wide awake to possibilities for change. Someone has said, "When we are through changing, we are through!"

And we would appreciate having for this page any of those ideas which you think you are going to try—or which you have tried the past year and like. By sharing them with others, you will be improving not only your own society but providing a stimulus for other groups.

* * * * *

North Carolina Woman's Board

A meeting is called of the North Carolina Woman's Board at Moon-elon on August 25, by the president, Mrs. W. T. Scott. At this meeting final plans will be made for the Fall Conference, at which Mrs. Jennie M. Doidge will be the guest speaker. If anyone has suggestions to be considered by the North Carolina Board, please send them to Mrs. Scott at Elon College before the meeting.

* * * * *

Bethlehem (Nansemond) Finishes Year's Work

The church women of Bethlehem Church (Nansemond) have enjoyed a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. Dudley Moyner, president. The women met quarterly and the three circles have had their regular monthly meetings.

The year book Where'er the Sun was taught at a night meeting by the Rev. Quentin Leisher. Within These Borders was reviewed by members of each circle.

We were happy to have with us for World Community Day Dr. Murray Kantor of the Jewish Synagogue in Suffolk, who spoke on "One World."

Mrs. T. H. Dilday, friendly service chairman, led a short devotional dedicating our money for our goat "Lou," named for our president, at the quarterly meeting in December.

We enjoyed entertaining our young people in February by showing the film "The Hidden Heart," followed by a reception in the fellowship hall.

Liberty Springs met with us to observe the World Day of Prayer. The young people of our church gave an inspiring pantomime, "These Others."

At our quarterly meeting in June we had a covered dish luncheon, after which Mrs. I. W. Johnson gave a summary of the Psalms.

We are grateful for the good year that we had together and look forward to another year's work with a determination to do a better work for our Lord and Master.

MRS. OCIE BRADSHAW,
Reporter.

THEY PUT CHRISTIANITY TO WORK.

(Continued from page 6.)

of co-operation. In 1795, without church sponsorship, a large body of members of the Church of England, Church of Scotland, the British Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists, formed the London Missionary Society. In 1810, lay workers of the Congregational, Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed churches organized a similar cooperative effort in the United States. The American Bible Society dates from 1816. Then came the international groups, none church-sponsored, such as the Y. M. C. A. (1844), Y. W. C. A. (1855), and finally the World's Student Christian Federation under John R. Mott in 1895. Many of today's ecumenical leaders emerged from Dr. Mott's organization.

In 1910, some of the more global-minded churches threw off their timidity, held a world conference in Edinburgh, Scotland, and organized what in time became the International Missionary Council. This was the grandparent of the World Council of Churches; its successive meetings, in

(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Toyohiko Kagawa, a world famous Christian and a Japanese, came to the Elon campus last week. He, Dr. Albert Sweitzer of Africa, and Dr. Frank Laubach of the United States, are three of the living saints of the church.

Dr. Kagawa is a little man. In fact he must be about five feet tall, for when we met him he was about our size. His face is kindly, his expression gentle, and his manner humble. It was hard to believe that this frail little man had achieved so much in our time.

Since his youth, he has been a very intelligent person, and very learned. He studied in Japan and then came to study in New Jersey at Princeton University, where he was a classmate of our Dr. Smith.

When he went home, Dr. Kagawa decided not to live pleasantly as his family did, but to share the miseries of the slums (old, dirty, broken down houses). Here he met people he wanted to help. By being one with the poor and unfortunate, he found himself better able to help them and to tell them of Jesus. Today he wears eyeglasses because his eyesight is very poor. Someone who was dirty and didn't know how to care for their sick eyes, caused Kagawa to catch a bad eye disease.

This noble man stood in Whitley Auditorium, lecturing in a half-English half-Japanese voice. He used the blackboard. He was telling the grown up students about the things men who have studied science have learned. He went on to say that science had made our bond with God greater and closer.

We know Dr. Laubach, and we never dreamed that we would be privileged to meet another of the great world Christians. Although we could not understand everything he said, we sat mindful of his goodness and greatness.

If you would like to know more about him, read some of his poems in a little book called "Songs from the Slums."

* * * * *

Knowledge is the beginning of practice; doing is the completion of knowledge.—Anonymous,

"This Matter of Influencing"

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Each day, each hour, we are influencing somebody. We do not always realize it, do we? And each day, each hour, others are influencing us. We do not always realize that either, do we?

A certain mother is constantly screaming at her children; at times she slaps them. She is by no means an uneducated person, but she thinks she gets quicker results this way, and, moreover, she has used this method so long that it has become second nature to scream and slap. Other mothers look on. Some follow her example, but—thanks be!—many refuse the challenge. I once heard a young woman say, "When I have children I shall never do that!" And she never did. She had observed acutely some of the things this mother had done and she did not approve.

We are all influenced in many ways, unconsciously, and so are our children. They are great "listeners-in." They hear our opinions expressed, often with emphasis, and naturally think as we do—because we are their mothers. Then they are good "lookers-on," too. They watch our expressions. They watch our gesticulations. They notice when we do not speak, and often silence speaks very, very loudly.

Childhood influences usually last long after we are adults. I lived with my aunt for ten years. She was a woman of strong prejudices. I found myself, even after I had become a teacher, very much influenced toward or against certain people according to her likes and dislikes. I failed to keep in touch with a number of relatives because of having been unconsciously influenced to avoid them. I did not recognize this influence until after I was married. Sometimes it takes years to understand. Then we wake up and are amazed.

Let us suppose our little children have been carefully and tenderly brought up. We have done our best. Then they start school and meet children from all kinds of homes. They hear new words, new approaches to ward life. New habits are formed. My helper in the home said, "My three boys are grown. They are all over twelve years now. I shall not need to worry about them any more. My hard time is over." Should I have told her that she would need to keep close to her boys for many years to come? We cannot stop living with our children when they are twelve years of age. The question is: what has she taught them? Have they been given definite rules by which to measure the values of different ways of life? Have they fixed principles which decide their own acts? Long before schooldays children should be taught how to judge what is desirable. And with regard to the boys of whom we are speaking, in any case, they will still need sympathetic help.

Deborah goes visiting with her mother. Her mother and the friend upon whom she is calling have much to talk over, many mutual friends to recall, all sorts of situations to discuss. Deborah's eyes grow big as she listens. And when she meets this one and that one who have been discussed, she remembers, and she acts toward them in the light that she has heard them discussed. Mother, however, has forgotten all about it long ago, for it was just a temporary attitude arising from her friend's and her gossip. She is greatly disturbed to have her little daughter act the way she does. She has been obliged to send her out of the room in disgrace several times. When Mother talks with her later on, Deborah has no idea why she acts the way she does. If her mother were to think back she might realize that the child's conduct was the result of overheard conversations.

We do not often appreciate, do we, that small children absorb from every environment of which they become a part? It behoves all mothers to think before they express themselves when little ones are present and to pause before they act. There is no limit to the power of influence. Let us not forget!

There is hardly ever a complete silence in the soul. God is whispering to us well-nigh incessantly. Whenever the sounds of the world die out in the soul, or sink low, then we hear the whisperings of God. He is always whispering to us, only we do not hear, because of the noise, hurry, and distraction which life causes as it rushes on.—F. W. Faber.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

"Cupid's Column"

Cupid is back on his feet, skooting around and gathering news for his column.

The plans for the wedding of Miss Hogan and Mr. John Truitt, Jr., have been made and announced. Mr. John Truitt, Jr., graduate of Elon, is now enrolled in Princeton Theological School in New Jersey. He was very active in youth work of the church and continuing as he answers the call to the ministry.

The couple are to be united in marriage in the First Baptist Church of Burlington, N. C., sometime this fall.

* * * * *

Valley Conference Summer Camp

Although as last year the Valley summer camp came the week following public school closing, the temperature was quite different. Instead of kicking ourselves for leaving that extra blanket at home, we found that by Saturday afternoon we were too hot for anything but a swim. However, it was not too hot for a full schedule of classes, activities, and worship periods.

The Valley camp is three camps within a camp beginning with the Juniors under Mrs. Galt and Mrs. Whitten, the Junior Highs led by—or sometimes leading—Hank Harman, and the Seniors with Ralph Galt as their dean. The total enrollment was about twenty less than last year although the Senior group was larger. An innovation was the use of eight junior counselors; part counselor and part senior camper.

Since camp usually remains in our minds as a series of impressions; here are some from this year's camp: Martin Eichrodt with his long legs in scout shorts singing Swiss folk songs; James Smith, cook, hitting home run with two on for counselors vs campers; C. D. Hayes sitting amid his senior worship group at one of the vespers, Paul Rohart still eating after everyone else was finished, Junior Highs with greased watermelon in pool, Junior boys picking up treasure hunt markers as soon as laid so the following group never found treasure, Hank Harman half asleep at Saturday evening service, Ralph Galt wondering where the senior boys went, Quiet Time that was just what the booklet said, going out to a "Lonely Place" to talk with God, classes with Juniors on Jesus, Junior Highs on the Bible, Seniors under Martin, Mr. Whitten, and Charlotte Rothgeb; cabin clean-up and inspection, stunt night, picnics at Elizabeth Furnace and Little Fort, singing, chapel talks, store is open, quiet hour, time to go swimming, I'm roasted, time to go to sleep, I'm tired. . . .

HANK HARMAN, Dean.

* * * * *

Special Youth Service at South Norfolk

The young people of the Southside District—First Church, South Norfolk, Rosemont—met together for an unique service, Sunday night, July 11, at the South Norfolk Church. They had as their guests five young people from Hawaii, who were visiting the Rev. and Mrs. Olin Pendleton. Four of the ladies are from the Church of the Crossroads, Honolulu, where Mr. Pendleton spent three years as their pastor. Miss Elsie Imanura is a member of the Church of the Holy Cross (also Congregational Christian). Corporal Peggy Chun is stationed at Fort Mead, Maryland, and will leave for Europe in September with the Army. The other three young ladies were Misses Martha Murakami, Tomie Sato, and Harriet Kawano. The service opened with a worship service led by Miss Ruth Dunn, after which Mrs. Pendleton introduced their friends. Interesting discussions were held for Juniors, Intermediates and Young People about the islands, the customs and the church there, by these very charming young ladies.

The evening church service was held by the young people. Sammy Nelson, assistant pastor of the South Norfolk Church, led the service assisted by Glenn Garrett and Earl Hollowell. Three young people gave inspiring talks on "Dynamic Discipleship." The speakers and their subjects were as follows: "A Disciple Cares," Brenda Harris; "A Disciple Dares," Diane Tarkington; and "A Disciple Shares," Jimmy Rowan. The main talk of the evening was given by Miss Martha Murakami, who told of her experiences at the atomic bombing of Hiroshima. Approximately two hundred young people and adults listened spell-bound as she told of the devastation left by this one bomb. She, a nurse, told how she felt completely useless as she helped a few people with her meager supplies and watched thousands die on the streets. Her grandmother and cousin also died due to this great injustice. She says that she was bitter but through the help and devotion of a Christian friend, she regained her belief in good people and so left her Buddhist background and became a Christian. All of the young people of the three churches were greatly inspired by this evening of worship and fellowship together.

* * * * *

"Father's Day Program"

The Pilgrim Youth Fellowship of the Elm Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., had the Father's Day program during the morning worship hour, like they did for Mother's Day.

Everyone in the fellowship had an opportunity to take a part in the program.

It was a great success and we plan to do the same next year.

JANET RICHARDSON,

Secretary.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

day, that we may grow strong, useful, understanding, happy and loving, serving the purposes of God, helping our brothers to find the way. Jesus makes it pretty plain: "Seek first the Kingdom." The Christian life is our vocation. This I Believe.—Charley Hayden.

Questions for Discussion.

1. How can men find God?
2. When does God reveal himself to man?
3. Why do some church people fail to discover God?
4. What are the real choices in life?
5. Where and what is the Kingdom of God?

Special Note.

Charley Hayden, of Creston, Iowa was the author of this meditation. Mr. Hayden has long been active in church work and especially the Laymen's Fellowship in his local church at Creston, his association and the Iowa State Conference; he is a musician by profession, teaching piano and directing the Creston, Iowa, band.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Christian Giving"

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 22, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Acts 20:35.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Acts 20:35; I Corinthians 16:1-2; II Corinthians 8:1-9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Philippians 4:15-20.

Churches cannot get along without money. As an elderly Negro minister once said to his congregation, "Bredren and sistern, de water of life is free, but it costs money to pump it and pipe it. We will now lift de collection." Even Paul had to raise money. And in today's lesson, he states some principles and programs for raising money for the church and its causes. Before we look in detail at his program, let us look at his philosophy and his principles. He says some interesting things about this matter of Christian giving which, it should be said, is "a means of growth in Christian living."

The Philosophy of Christian Giving.

Giving is a grace—"beseeching us with much entreaty in regard to this grace." It is an evidence of the grace of God in the heart of the believer. It is just as much an element in the Christian life as praying, or going to church, or serving Christ in various ways. He who lacks the impulse to share with others, lacks an elemental Christian grace.

Giving is an expression of a sense of concern for others. This offering which Paul was soliciting was to be from Gentiles for Jews. For one reason or another, the "saints" at Jerusalem, the church at Jerusalem, were poor. There is a law in life that the strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak. The principle laid down here is that the condition of any church is the concern of every church, and all churches. One for all, and all for one!

Giving is a form of ministering. "And the fellowship in the ministering to the saints." Some years ago, I took a basket of groceries and some money to a woman, a member of my church, who was having a hard time.

She was embarrassed and reluctant to receive these gifts—she felt as if it was charity. I told her that the church was a family, that as a member of the church she was a member of that family. The other members of the family wanted her, as a member of the church family, to allow them to help her in this way. She had never seen it in that light before. With tears in her eyes, she received the gifts which meant all the more to her.

Giving is a means of proving one's sincerity. "I speak not by way of commandment, but as proving the sincerity also of your love." Money is not the only test of a man's religion, but it is a good test, and an acid test. Folks who say they love Christ and his church, and then give nothing or next to nothing to the church and the cause of Christ, may be fooling others, even themselves, but they are not fooling Christ. A man's giving reflects a man's love for Christ as much as his praying and his talking.

Giving should be voluntary. "For according to their power, I bear witness, yea, beyond their power, they gave of their own accord." Some folks give grudgingly and of necessity, and give only when they are asked. What a refreshing thing it is to have someone give when they are not asked to give.

Great giving can come out of limited resources. "How that in much proof of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For according to their power, I bear witness, yea, and beyond their power they gave. . . ." These folks knew poverty, but they gave more liberally than many other Christians in good circumstances. It was so then, is now, and one suspects always will be. The Church of Christ goes forward not on the gifts of millionaires, but on the gifts of folks in moderate circumstances, and even of poor people!

Giving of substance is greatest when one first of all gives himself. "But first, they gave their own selves to the Lord, and to us through the will of God." The real reason why most folks do not give money is because they have not first given themselves. If one lays his heart on the altar, it is not so hard to lay one's pocketbook there too.

Giving should be an expression of gratitude. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich." Because we have so freely received, we ought as freely to give. Because of what Christ has done for us, we ought to give as unto him.

Some Principles of Christian Giving.

Paul had just finished his monumental and immortal chapter on immortality—I Corinthians 15. He reaches great heights in that chapter and brings it to a lofty conclusion. But without any apology, or any indication that he is coming down from the heights, he writes, "Now concerning the collection for the saints." The preacher has not come down from the spiritual to the secular when he begins to talk about money. The gospel has a great deal to say about that. And Paul announces some principles concerning this Christian grace and this means of growth.

Giving has spiritual and worshipful aspects. "Upon the first day of the week"—that is our Sunday, or the Lord's Day. Giving can be, and should be, an act of worship, a spiritual enterprise. It can take on sacramental and spiritual dimensions. There is a value in bringing our offerings to the service of worship and making them an act of sacrifice and an act of worship.

Giving should be personal. "Let every one of you . . ." Any money that anybody has for his own use constitutes a stewardship. Although the church would get as much money if the "man of the house" gave for the whole family, the members of the family would not get as much. Even children should be taught to give out of their allowances or their meagre earnings, to the church and its enterprises. "Every one of you"—giving should be personal.

Giving should be purposeful. "Let every one of you lay by him in store." It should not be spasmodic, subject to the mood of the moment or the state of the purse on that particular Sunday. One should face the matter of his stewardship honestly, and make provision in his budget or his plans, for regular, systematic, purposeful giving. There should be "the separated portion."

Giving should be proportionate.
(Continued on page 15.)

THEY PUT CHRISTIANITY TO WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

Jerusalem in 1928, and at Madras, India, in 1938, provided the first ground on which the interdenominationalists could meet.

All these movements inspired closer associations of churches. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America—now the National Council—emerged in 1908. Each of the fourteen largest denominations cemented a world alliance of its own members. On a local level, city and county ministerial associations grew up, until now there are 975 in the United States alone.

Church unity has been greatly spurred recently by amalgamations of denominations. In 1925 the Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists and some other smaller communions of Canada formed the United Church of Canada. The Northern and Southern United States Methodists united in 1939. Between 1926 and 1947 there were seventeen important mergers of Protestant groups. In the past decade, several hundred "community" churches have been founded without denominational ties.

The late William Temple, then the Archbishop of Canterbury, took the first positive ecumenical initiative. At a meeting in Princeton, New Jersey, in 1935, he proposed "to organize a world body without dogma, a real world community." By 1938, sufficient support had been generated for this idea to hold a constitutional conference at Utrecht, Holland. Most Protestant churches sent representatives. Much to the surprise of everyone present, eighty-five churches endorsed the Utrecht covenant and recommended affiliation to their memberships.

A provisional committee was appointed at Utrecht to create the formal organization. Before it became operative, the war broke the contact. But the committee proved much bolder than its parent. By 1948, when finally spokesmen for 108 churches in thirty-eight countries met at Amsterdam to formalize a World Council, its purposes were undebatable; it was already dynamic throughout the world. . . .

Not all of the world's Christian churches subscribe either to the council or its program. The Roman Catholic Church is not connected with it; and in the United States, 14,000,000 of the known 52,890,000 Protestants are unaffiliated with it. Some of the latter vociferously oppose it, notably the American Council of Christian Churches, which counts perhaps 200,000 fundamentalists in fourteen communions. The Southern Baptist Convention, with 7,634,000 members, and the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church, with 1,936,000 are both on the outside, as are the Latter-Day Saints, the Society of Friends (Quakers), Jehovah's Witnesses, and the Church of Christ, Scientist.

But with a strong majority voice among Protestant and Orthodox Christians, the World Council, in conjunction with the International Missionary Council, supports an accredited observer at the United Nations. This activity, except for the wartime solidarity, would still be impossible due to denominational differences. The spokesman is Dr. O. Fredrick Nolde, a Philadelphia-born Lutheran. . . .

On an international level, the World Council has firmly resisted communism. Currently, it is insisting that 15,000 anti-Red stateless persons originally of Russian origin, be released from communist China. These unfortunates fled Red terror after the 1917 revolution, settled in Manchuria, and now again have been uprooted. The World Council, working with the Lutheran World Federation in Hong Kong, has secured visas for all but the aged and infirm to migrate to Brazil. . . . Now they are told they may not leave without a stamp from a Russian consul. . . . Despite this pressure, they are being evacuated at the rate of 300 a month, by methods so far unrevealed.

With such experiences as this in mind, the delegates to Evanston are expected to take a firm stand on the political issue of communism. Before one commission is a resolution which likely will receive almost unanimous support. It reads, in part: "We stand opposed to every form of oppression and aggression. We condemn any extension of oppression carried on behind a facade of peace. . . . We detest war and shall do everything in our power to prevent present tensions and limited conflicts from leading to a third world war. Yet we must not purchase peace at the price of tyranny."

The assembly will also streamline its organization at Evanston. At present the council has six presidents, a central committee of ninety members who meet once a year, an executive committee of twelve which convenes every six months, and a permanent secretariat in Geneva which directs 400 field workers. Additionally, many committees and commissions continuously study such major concerns as Christian ethics, the role of laymen and women and youth, evangelism, the church and society, and unity. Two score conferences of small groups on these themes are held each year, some of them at the Ecumenical Institute, a chateau owned by the council near Geneva. These activities cost $355,000 in 1953, a budget subscribed by the member churches based on their ability to pay.

The relief program is financed separately by donations from churches, individuals, foundations, and in some cases from governments. No budget is possible, but collected and spent in 1953 was $1,050,000, not counting contributions of food and clothing.

The budget for the Evanston assembly is $267,500, raised by ticket sales, registration fees and grants by denominations, foundations and individuals. This does not include the Soldier Field spectacle, a $40,000 effort by the Church Federation of Greater Chicago, nor $40,000 for hospitality raised by Evanston laymen, nor $40,000 for publicity, contributed in small amounts by lay workers. Travel expenses of the delegates are borne by their own denominations.

While relief work is the council's most spectacular accomplishment, its continuous studies of theological problems and the causes of disunity are its major concern. This work necessarily is slow. Little of a conclusive nature is expected at the Evanston assembly. . . .

On a more topical level, one commission will ponder how lay members of churches may better utilize their Christianity in day to day business and social relations. . . .

The entire assembly will be built on the theme, "Christ, the hope of the world." What this means to present-day society was clearly defined, in anticipation of Evanston, by the World Council's general secretary, Dr. Willem A. Visser 't Hooft, a Netherlander whose name, signifying "The Head Fisherman," has great symbolical meaning for Christians.

"The church," said he, "is expected to stand for man, for his dignity, for human solidarity, for a decent human life on this planet. . . . What the churches do may well help to spell the difference between anarchy and redemption all over the world."

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Twenty-three Sunday schools have generously contributed to the orphanage this report. That is good. We are grateful. Look at the report. See the conferences and Sunday schools in each conference. We are encouraged when a goodly number of our folks remember the work we are doing here for these boys and girls.

We have the largest number of children we have had since the present superintendent began August 1, 1949. There are 84 here at present. Three children, Louise 7, Elizabeth 6, and Eugene 5, have just been admitted. Their last name is Ray. They are from Fayetteville, N. C., and were members of the Eutaw Community Church, one of our newest churches. They are pretty children and were in need of our help.

Next week we shall mail to each of our pastors a letter asking them to let us know how many Thanksgiving envelopes they will be able to use in their churches in November. In the letter will be a self-addressed postal card on which they may reply. We want to get our envelopes ready to mail to all the churches which desire them (We hope all will want them) in order that we may mail them promptly the last week in October. We have a big job to do this coming Thanksgiving season because of the indebtedness imposed upon us by the drought last year. In other words we shall have to carry this year's load and part of last year's. Everyone has been very generous to us this year which makes us hope for a clean slate at the end of the year.

Have you ever seen a bevy of birds in a butterbean field? Well, our boys and girls look something like that as they pick butterbeans. A good part of the work is done when the butterbean is planted, tended, grown and gathered. But one of the big items of work yet remains that is getting them shelled! A quart of butterbeans for dinner is one thing. Several gallons for canning is quite another. Our matrons and bigger boys and girls are faithful in the work of canning them. It would be easier if we could put them in a freezerlocker and not run the risk of losing them after they have been picked and processed.

We have plenty of butterbeans, green beans, corn, squash, peppers, potatoes, blackeyed peas, and onions. The rains have come and taken over the watering of our fields and gardens for the time being. We are so grateful. Our major crop of corn was ahead of the rains and suffered greatly. The fall crop looks prosperous.

All this is merely incidental to the training and rearing for the 84 children who are here. They are the real task, and since they are needy and homeless they are the church's wards. We must do a good job for them, and train them to live good lives of usefulness and helpfulness to their own loved ones and for others. What do you consider your life worth? How would you like to be stranded at childhood? How have you enjoyed your years with all their blessings? We can all share in rearing for these children, and it will be a blessing to us as well as to them.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR AUGUST 5, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Woman's Auxiliary, First Cong. Christian Church, Newport News, Va.
Holy Neck Church.
Ladies Missionary Society, Rosemont Ch.
Mrs. H. G. Hilliard, Elon College, N. C.
Mrs. B. G. Snow, Dyke, Va.
Rev. Ralph M. Galt, New Market, Va.
Kellam's Grove Christian Church Missionary Society, ..
Holy Neck Church, Holland, Va.
Pleasant Ridge Business Girls' Circle, Guilford College, N. C.
Mrs. Ethel Burgess, Leaksville, N. C.
Juniors, Belew Creek Sunday School.
Buttons:
Mount Olivet (R) Church, Valley of Va. Conference.
Mrs. G. Schreiner, Norfolk, Va.
Shoes:
Mrs. Minnie Tune, Vernon Hill, Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 7,936.29

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Antioch $ 17.00
Bethel 37.33
Morrisville 15.83
Mt. Auburn S. S. 7.95
Mt. Gilead 34.00
Wake Chapel S S. 49.26

161.37

Eastern Va. Conference:
Liberty Spring S. S. $ 20.00
Mt. Zion 6.00
Rosemont 50.00
Shelton Memorial 14.00

90.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Berea $ 25.00
Bethel 3.71
Durham S. S. 21.91
Happy Home S. S. 45.47
Hines Chapel S. S. 6.00
Mebane 5.00
Union (N. C.) 82.00
Union (Va.) S. S. 5.00

194.09

Western N. C. Conference:
Albemarle $ 10.00
Brown's Chapel S. S. 15.00
Blunt Hill (M) 7.26
Pleasant Union 13.72

45.98

Virginia Valley Conference:
Timber Ridge $ 66.00

66.00

Total $ 557.44

Grand total $ 8,493.73

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $20,417.47
New Hope Christian Ch.,
Roanoke, Alabama $ 2.88
Mrs. Florence L. Rogers,
Fayetteville, N. C. ... 100.00
Philathea Class, Suffolk
Christian Church 5.00
In Memory of Mrs. R. F.
Warren 6.00
In Memory of Mrs. Mary
Foster Warren 10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Mary
Foster Warren 50.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

SOME IMPORTANT OBSERVATIONS ON FREE CHURCH POLITY AND UNION.

(Continued from page 2.)

have always been ten to twenty percent of the churches whose pastors and congregations have sat idly by when called upon to display any vigor in evangelism, finances or other promotions.

A merger wholly on the National level has effective value on that level. It is unthinkable that merger on the National level would not open the way and enable various other levels to make adjustments in union.

Our history and polity have never been crystal clear or completely logical and consistent in all parts of the country. In New York State in 1927, the Superintendent announced to the Bi-State Association in Chenango, N. Y., that "he was the bishop even though he did not wear the three-cornered hat" and the ministers in the association accepted his authority. I have been a pastor in another State where fifty to sixty percent church representation at an association was considered very good, and where the superintendent appeared to be the clerk. Dr. Fred Fagley tells of the call to the Cambridge platform discussions in which one prominent pastor prevented his church from sending delegates, but came himself with all the authority of a priest to speak for his congregation. In the past our conferences, associations, churches and boards have met situations head-on and made adjustments to them without at any time having serious schisms.

A different form of union other than organic union would, of course, be as effective as the desire of its participants to cooperate. If local churches wish to withdraw from organic union that promises autonomy, they will just as quickly withdraw from cooperation with churches if a form of cooperative fellowship should be conceived. Where there is a will and a desire to work with other groups and cooperate with them, the methods will be found. Mankind has never been stumped in finding a way to do what he wants to do.

Spiritual cohesion can be achieved on any level, under any conditions, and it is achieved here and there in any community, even between Roman Catholic priests and Protestant ministers. The whole thing resolves itself into the question, "How much do I want to cooperate in the advancement of the Kingdom with people who use different words, wear different cloths and use different genuflections?"

What difference is there between the covenant relationship and the organic relationship between denominations? It appears at the present that we have only a covenant relation with each other, as the members have only a covenant relationship in the local church. To my mind, nice distinctions between organic and covenant relationships come pretty close to hair-splitting. If people will work together and pray together and build together, they are together.

My only experience with organic union was when the Evangelical Protestants of Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio merged with or were absorbed by the Congregational Associations. There was much discussion, even to the point of controversy. The merger eventually took place, and after twenty years appears to be functioning as well as I understand the churches of old line Congregationalists in their associations. Congregational history is full of controversy caused by progressive efforts: for instance, the rise of the AMA; the bitter struggle of abolition; the rise of peace societies sponsored largely by the Congregational Churches in the early nineteenth century; the rise of the "social gospel" with the tainted money question; the question of the formation of a National Council. And there undoubtedly have been many other points of friction.

* * *

Congregational Christian Churches do not have a set or credal form, for instance like the Missouri Synod, that is to be defended at all costs and becomes the cement to hold the churches together against all comers. Our denomination and our churches are held together or have reason for existence because of a liberal point of view and a daring faith to meet the issues at hand and to step forward into the future. If our denomination, not having a strong dogma to defend, is not permitted daringly to move out into the persistent calling of the Holy Spirit, then I fail to see what reason Congregational Christian Churches have for existence as a group of churches or a denomination. They instead become little islands of withdrawn people who love the Lord and who connote freedom and liberty with isolated independence.

Shallow men believe in luck, believe in circumstances. Strong men believe in cause and effect—Emerson.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

As he may prosper, or "as God prospers him." He who has much should give much; he who has but little can give but little—he often gives more than he who has much. But a man should give a fair share to the Lord. It just is not fair, and it is not Christian to give God only the leftovers. A man should give liberally and live on the left-over. If he does this, God will make all grace abound in that man's life.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

(Continued from page 14.)

THE ORPHANAGE.

In Memory of Mrs. Mary Bidgood	5.00
In Memory of Mrs. Mary Bidgood	3.00
Special Gifts	343.31
		525.19
Grand total		$20,942.66
Total for the week	$	826.70
Total for the year		$29,436.39

We are so much the victims of shallow moods, easy glum, easy glow. We are so given to a brand of discouragement that forgets God, or a brand of hope that ignores God. And neither of those moods is worth the effort. Neither is Christian. Neither is creative. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, we munch over the headlines and feel our own pulse, and scan our own diggings, and grant all a pessimistic shudder. It is a barbarous jungle, it is a miserable outlook, it is a hopeless prospect. Surely, in these Monday moods of easy pessimism, Christ longs to step up to us right there and fairly shout at us: "Man, is your memory that short? Of course, it's a struggle. I always told you it would be. But there are right now great, good forces at work around you. There are redemptive facts and powers at work within you. And what is really right is going to prosper, because it happens to be sponsored by Almighty God!"—From "The Salty Tang" by F. B. Speakman (The Fleming H. Revell Company).

The highest achievement that can come to mortal man is not to win the honors of the world, but the approbation of God.—Ledford.

Centenial Celebration at Salem Chapel

Recently Remodeled Sanctuary of Salem Chapel Church

Sunday, August 1, was a significant day in the life of Salem Chapel Church, located near Walnut Cove, North Carolina. It observed the one hundredth year of existence as a church by dedicating a beautifully remodeled sanctuary. Months of labor and liberal giving by the members and friends of the church were rewarded. The beautiful new sanctuary, with new pews and furnishings, made the place one of beauty and inspiration. The members and friends rededicated the building and themselves to the Lord. A congregation totaling between 300 and 400 joined in the celebration which was in charge of the interim pastor, Dr. William V. Roosa, and Supt. Wm. T. Scott delivered the dedicatory sermon. Following a bountiful luncheon on the church grounds, the celebration of the centenial was conducted by Wade L. Marshall and several other members of the church. The historian's report was presented by Mrs. James Rayburn, which was most interesting. Special music was rendered by the Salem Chapel senior and youth choirs, Mrs. William T. Scott, Abraham J. Gerry, and several visiting choruses. Beautiful chimes were dedicated in memory of "Grandmother" Sallie Matt Marshall by her grandchildren, and a bronze plaque was presented honoring early Trustees and deacons. Congratulations to Salem Chapel Church.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1954

NUMBER 32

Make of My Heart a Garden!

*Make of my heart a garden, Lord,
A Sanctuary fair;
Thy love to water each struggling root
Waiting to shine for Thee there.*

*Make of each root, a flower, Lord,
On a true and verdant vine;
A blossom showing Thy love for man,
Thy heritage—and mine.*

*Make of my heart a garden, Lord.
Let all who enter in
Find a Gardener ready to share their load
And send them forth to win.*

*Then, make of my heart a garden, Lord.
And give me a garden seat,
Where travelers may rest and arise refreshed
To follow Thy marching feet!*

—Glenn L. Fickel.

News Flashes

Dr. John G. Truitt preached at Greensboro Church Sunday in the absence of Dr. W. E. Wisseman who flew to Texas to visit his parents.

The sermon in this issue, "A Memorable Hour," was recently delivered on the occasion of the observance of Holy Communion at Central Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., by its minister, the Rev. J. Evrette Neese.

On July 27, a daughter, Cynthia Lynne, was born to the Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Smith of First Church, Portsmouth, Va. Congratulations to Rev. and Mrs. Smith and wishes for a long, happy and useful life to Cynthia Lynne.

Dr. H. H. Cunningham, head of Elon's History and Social Science Department, has an article on Confederate Hospitals in the current North Carolina Historical Review. Dr. Cunningham has specialized in Southern history and is a member of our Elon Church.

The Elon Community Church held an open house in the Parish House last Sunday afternoon as a farewell gesture to the Rev. and Mrs. Bozarth. Professor A. L. Hook, representing the church, made a few remarks and Dean Earl Danieleley presented the Bozarth's with a set of matched luggage.

The Greensboro Daily News carried a feature article recently about Mrs. Samuel M. Watson of Sanford. Mrs. Watson is 80 some years young and a busy housekeeper and artist. Mrs. Watson's brother was the late Dr. W. C. Wicker. Orchids were given to this great-grandmother artist who is an active and interested Christian Church member.

The Dome of Berlin, largest church in the former capital of Germany, situated in the Soviet Zone of the city and still in ruins since World War II, will be reconstructed, according to a bulletin of the Evangelical Church in Germany. The Senate of West Berlin has granted 83,100 West German marks (about $20,000) for the purchase of building material in West Berlin that cannot be obtained in East Berlin.

World Council Sponsors Religious Art Exhibit

The World Council of Churches is sponsoring an exhibit of religious art at the Chicago Art Institute in connection with its Second Assembly. Through this exhibit it is attempting to indicate through the artistic media that the Christian faith and the Christian church are universal. The ecumenical movement has previously relied almost entirely on the printed and spoken word to convey this fact.

In an introduction to the catalogue issued in connection with the religious art exhibit, Daniel Catton Rich, director of the Art Institute, states: "In a sense, these paintings, too, are delegates; they come from distant lands and distant times to represent a few of the great tendencies in art associated with worship and religious contemplation."

The exhibit is composed of thirty paintings from museums and private collections in Europe and America. It spans the centuries from the 13th century to the present day. Included are examples of both explicit and implicit religious art.

Prof. Paul Tillich of Union Theological Seminary and Prof. Theodore Green of Yale University, in a preface to the catalogue, explain that art is implicitly religious "if it expresses, in whatever fashion, the artist's sensitive and honest search for ultimate meaning in terms of his own contemporary culture. . . .

"Authentic art is explicitly religious if it expresses the artist's sensitive and honest search for ultimate meaning and significance with the aid of a recognizable religious subject-matter or religious symbols. . . . In the tradition, all Biblical material and such symbols as the Cross are religious in this sense."

Liquor Transactions in 1953

The production of distilled spirits decreased 39.4 per cent in 1953, as compared with 1952, and that of still wines by 21.8 per cent. All other divisions of the alcohol beverage industry showed increases in production. Tax-paid withdrawals increased in every class except alcohol, which decreased by 14.9 per cent. Imports were higher except in the case of sparkling wines. Stocks on hand decreased except in the case of beer. Federal tax collections increased all down the line, as compared with 1952, though only slightly.

"Is That the Holy Bible?"

Quite a number of my friends have asked me during the past few months as to my opinion of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible. My answer has uniformly been one of approval of this new version. A simple personal experience a few days ago made me form the purpose to give to my friends generally my thought of this remarkable production.

It is my custom to try to spend a little while each morning in what some people call the quiet time. This means, of course, that I try to concentrate my thought on God in a special way at that time.

The use of the Bible is a part of this exercise, and since my oldest daughter's gift of a copy of this R. S. V. soon after it came from the presses, I have generally used it. On the morning in question, my eight-year-old grandson passed through my room during my quiet hour. "Grand Daddy, is that the Holy Bible that you are reading?" he asked. I turned the book over and let him see the back on which was printed the two meaningful words, Holy Bible. He went on to his room, apparently perfectly satisfied, but I saw at once what was going through that child's mind. He has been accustomed to seeing Bibles bound in black, either with or without the divinity circuit. The one I was reading was bound in a lovely dark red. His feeling evidently was that Bibles should be bound in black.

Is not this experience a sort of parable of much that is going on in the minds of people today with reference to this R. S. V.? Does it not also suggest much as to the attitude of many people—perhaps most people—toward religion and matters in the field of religion?

There are four things that I wish to say about this whole matter:

1. If there is anyone who can understand and sympathize with these people, it is I. When the English revision of the Bible came out—the New Testament in 1881 and the whole Bible in 1885—I was thoroughly shocked at the thought of making changes in the Bible! I was much like the old woman who said the King James Version was good enough for the Apostle Paul and it was good enough for her! It was quite a while before I could adjust myself to the fact that there is not on the earth, that anyone knows of, a copy of the Bible that our Lord and the Apostle

(Continued on page 11.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Southern Convention Represented On the National Committee

Each two years the Board of Home Missions elects 16 men who serve on the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship. Nine men and seven who have formerly served were elected to the Class of 1960. These include Earl Danieley of Elon College, who is vice chairman of the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship. The other representative from the Southern Convention on the National Committee is George Colclough, who is a member of the Class of 1958. It is good to see our Southern Convention men represented on the National Committee.

* * * * *

A Rewarding Experience

I have just had a share in a rewarding experience; I hope it makes an interesting story. As you know, the Reverend Howard Bozarth has been the minister for the Elon College Community Church for the past four years. During this time he and his family have won many friends in this community and have made a real contribution to its life.

Beginning in September, Reverend Bozarth will be on the faculty of Yankton College. They will be moving from this community on August 20.

The Board of Deacons named a committee to arrange for a going away present as means of showing the appreciation of the church membership for the service which has been performed. The committee met and decided on a suitable gift. The committee was composed of Mrs. Hilda Oxford, Miss Caroline Powell, Mrs. Howard Edgerton, and the writer. It was suggested by a member of the committee that it would be nice for a larger committee to set aside a particular time for receiving contributions toward the gift; and accordingly, Tuesday evening, August 10, was selected. Approximately 25 members of the church met in the Parish House and received assignments of homes to be visited in order to give people an opportunity to have a part in this gift of gratitude. When the committee members returned from the visits, refreshments were served. Miss Powell had made a delicious cake and Mrs. Oxford had prepared some very tasty coffee. An hour of fellowship and conversation was a pleasant experience for all of us.

Sunday afternoon, August 15, at 3:30 a tea arranged by a committee of ladies of the church was held in honor of the Bozarth's. Many friends and co-workers called to express their gratitude for services rendered and their best wishes for continued success. At 4:30 Professor A. L. Hook, Chairman of the Board of Deacons, presented a handsome gift of luggage to the Bozarth's. He expressed the appreciation of the membership for the contribution which the Bozarth's have made to the life of the church and expressed the hope that the Bozarth's will continue to be successful in their labors in their new ministry.

Many stories are told because they have morals. This one, I think, has news value and a moral. The moral is a lesson that we all need to learn, there is much work to be done but there is a great deal of joy and happiness awaiting those who undertake to do that work cooperatively. The big job that we have to do is to get more people in the church to participate in the activities of the church in the faith that those who participate find it a rewarding experience and are anxious to continue to work.

Cheese from whole milk is a concentrated form of protein and milk fat, containing some vitamins.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Childrean, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Submitting Ourselves

It was characteristic of St. Paul to cram his sentences with distinct ideas as fast as they rushed into his mind. Consequently we find much to think on in almost any separate phrase. In his letter of advice to the Ephesians, for example, he begins one sentence with "And be not drunk with wine," and ends it with "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." Let us consider the idea with which he closes this sentence.

Clearly Paul was thinking of the entire Christian brotherhood when he wrote this, for it concerns the duty of Christians in their dealings among themselves. Every member of the church is a child of God--and therefore must honor his brothers as himself. He has a right to be heard--and therefore has a duty to listen. He must never forget that "in the fear of God" he must submit himself unto his brethren, for he has given up something of his personal liberty in order to share the larger fellowship of Christ.

We should make this phase of Christian living very clear to ourselves and to all those who are now entering church membership. Unless we realize that church membership means submitting ourselves one to another in the fear of God, we create trouble and confusion for ourselves, not Christian order for the world.

A church is composed of human beings; but it belongs to God. If it is to be a true church of Christ, its members must be human beings reborn into a new life. The new life begins with the knowledge of the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ, and with the willingness to do the will of God, whatever may be the personal cost.

The duty of the church is to bring the world to obey the sovereign will of God. Therefore each individual Christian must first accept the absolute will of God as prior to his own. This is the most Christlike attitude that one can ever attain. The explanation of the power and beauty of Christ's life is to be found in his saying: "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." Thus God's will determines the purpose of the church.

Most churches under the congregational system of government proceed on the assumption that the will of the majority must be followed. Often we fail to remember that the will of the majority should determine for us methods of church action, not its final purpose and not its spirit. God's will sets that purpose. Paul's phrase, "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God," explains what that spirit should be: through which each church member comes in humility in teachableness, and in love, to know and to do the will of God.

National Righteousness

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people"—so spoke the writer of Proverbs. The nations of the world, and especially the United States of America, need to pay special attention to that ancient wisdom, because it is a condition of national existence. The Psalmist amplified it thus: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

There are three main ideas inherent in national righteousness. A preponderance of the people within the nation must commit their personal lives to the ways of righteousness. The civil laws and the administration of government must provide for and enforce just dealings in business and personal relations. International relations also must be on the highest plane of justice and equity if the nation is to be classed as righteous.

What is the correlation between national righteousness and national security? Many nations in the past have based their policies upon the thesis that might makes right, and (presumably) that such right makes security. But such policy has never led to peace and security. It has so often led to war and ruin that they seem its logical and inevitable result.

It has also led the nations of the world to seek two immediate goals: power and wealth. In the past fifty years, the United States has become the richest and most powerful nation on the face of the earth. Have our wealth and power made us secure? On the contrary, for the first time in our national history, the United States has become a nation afraid.

Now, sensible people may well be afraid of the world of today: too often it seems like an organized outrage to common sense. And if we fear God instead of ourselves and our neighbors, our fears would be the beginning of wisdom. But our fears are formless, the beginnings of panic and bluster. Security is the one ideal which is foremost in the minds of the people of the United States. There is nothing wrong, but much inadequate, in the desire of a nation to be secure: cowards seek security always and find it never. To seek security through the wrong means is foolish and sinful—and useless. Security must be mutual. There are those in this country who would not hesitate for a moment to say that the security of the United States is the most important issue in the world, and that it can be resolved by force. There are only two troubles with this assumption: the rest of the peoples of the world do not subscribe to it, and we should not.

The wisest and best Man who has ever lived said when his own life was the quarrel: "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Today as never before, this is a literal statement of fact. Total war will mean total destruction.

The wisdom of Proverbs suggests an entirely different course for the nations to follow. Every Christian in the United States should be saying that the way to national security is the way of national righteousness, and that righteousness and self-righteousness are as distinct as all good and all evil. Self-righteousness is the most un-Christian sin, and sin is a reproach to any people.

The Wisdom of the Impractical

By THE REV. FRANK E. RATZELL

Pastor of First Church, Asheville, North Carolina

Much has been written and said in praise of practicality. It is considered an important virtue, especially among Americans. One of the surest ways to lose the esteem of your fellows is to have it said of you, "He is an impracticable person."

But while life requires a good measure of common sense and sober judgment if certain worthwhile goals are to be won, I should like to suggest that there may be something to be said in defense of impracticality, that it may not be as bad as painted.

First of all, nearly everyone is impractical some of the time. It makes us fit to live with and interesting to know. Playing cards, for example, is hardly a practical way to spend time, but there are those who enjoy it. Baseball and other sports aren't really necessary to life, but who hasn't felt his heart leap when someone hit a home run with the bases loaded?

Why go to all the trouble to pack a picnic dinner, drive off into the hills and share it with the ants and flies when you can eat in comfort at home? And how impractical to raise roses in your little plot of ground, when corn and beans to feed yourself will grow there? We don't need liquor, tobacco, cosmetics, ice cream sodas or Librace. Many a time I've spent too much money to go catch a trout I could have bought at the corner market for a few cents.

Let's be practical? Well, we can get along nicely without curtains at the windows, paint on the walls, or rugs on the floors. A Chevrolet will get you there as well as will a Buick, though you may not be in as good condition when you arrive. Most hats I have seen on the ladies in recent years, while usually very becoming, serve no utilitarian purpose whatever. Purely an aesthetic experience! If we were utterly practical, we wouldn't spend money on movie shows, television or golf. If you have been secretly priding yourself on being thoroughly practical, perhaps you should revise your opinion a bit.

The Chinese have a proverb: "If you have two loaves of bread, sell one and buy a lily." Since the Communist revolution in China, that saying has probably been revised to read: "If you have two loaves of bread, give one to your neighbor and the other to the government." The latter is practical, the former impractical. But we all prefer the former. There is a higher wisdom in it. Somehow you can love a man who would rather have one loaf of bread and a lily than two loaves of bread and no flowers in his life.

Any social worker, accustomed to struggling with problems of the poor, will tell you that it is not so much the want of necessities that shrivels their souls, but the want of play, of leisure time to spend as they please, of beauty in their lives, a few luxuries, the freedom to do something frivolous when the impulse strikes them. Nobody needs a Christmas tree, but I have gone into the homes of the poor at Christmas time and found them bare of that precious symbol. I have known the pain of somber-eyed children to whom that impractical decoration was denied.

These thoughts may lead us to see that God has made his world and this human life to work in ways somewhat less rigorous than we have imagined. He is no Shylock, demanding his pound of flesh. Nor is he a Scrooge who will tolerate no puppy spirits among his children and co-workers. If God has no sense of humor I cannot account for the fact that his children do, since we are made in his image. If you have not thought of God as having a sense of humor, perhaps you haven't looked at a giraffe lately or watched a fluffy kitten at play or observed the antics of some human beings. For the same reason we put escape valves on steam boilers the Lord bestowed on us a feeling for the comic, and that is surely a blessing worth a high place on any list of the Father's benevolences.

And while we are talking of impractical things, I may as well include the clergy. It is no secret that in the minds of many men the clergy are parasites, that they do no practical work. I used to think so, myself. It can be argued that they are unnecessary; our friends the Quakers seem to get along without them, and there are no finer Christians. St. Paul wrote long ago of "the foolishness of preaching," an opinion many of us are ready to endorse when we try to sum up the practical attainments of a lifetime at it. There is nothing we can say about God, about life, about this Christian Faith which is not better said and more authoritatively said in the New Testament, and you can read that yourselves. Yet, like many another thing called impractical, men seem to want us around, we who follow "the poorest of trades and the noblest of callings."

From all this we might gather that much of what we have called impractical could not be taken from our lives without making them difficult and drab. When we understand how much good can come from the things we could do without, we begin to see the wisdom in the impractical. By this reasoning, the impractical becomes practical and the lily is as important to a man's total well-being as is the loaf of bread. Jesus never said anything truer to the facts than this: "Life is more than meat and the body than raiment." For it is the more-than-meat and the more-than-clothes, the plus qualities, that make it livable and give it zest. Don't be ashamed of your impulses, for they too may lead you into the Kingdom of God. It is not always wrong to follow the inspiration of the heart when the head shouts an emphatic "No!" The money you give to your church could buy you shoes or help paint your house, but the church does more for your eternal soul than either the shoes or the house. And nothing so good was ever given us for so little.

I have always been suspicious of that word "practical," for it is more often than not wrongly applied to cover someone's penurious inclinations, or to stifle the warm impulse of the heart to give lovingly when a rose or a song or something of beauty is desired above all else. Of course, we must be practical! We must not do anything which will endanger our future security. We must never rely wholly on the faith that the morrow will take care of the things of itself. And yet, this is the Christian Gospel and if you do not believe it, your argument is with Jesus, not with me. It isn't sensible, by worldly standards, for a man to get married. He would have fewer worries and be much more comfortable and have a great deal more wealth if he remained a bachelor. It isn't practical, by the same standards, for a woman to run the risks of motherhood, or spend her life for her children, when she could be safe and untroubled in single bliss. It was certainly impractical for a man to give up a profitable trade to follow a dream, to have nowhere to lay his head, to be despised and rejected of men and nailed to a cross. He might have stayed at his carpenter's bench, grown rich, and lived to a contented and anonymous old age.

How poor would this life be without the foolishness of love! What we have called practicality often is absurd, in God's scheme of things, and what we have called impracticality is seen to be the highest wisdom. If when we say, "Let's be practical," we really mean, "Let's be selfish, let's look after our own interests first," then we have ruled out love; we have cut the golden cord, close-binding all mankind. But if by practicality we mean, "Let's have all the facts concerning our situation, about life, so that we can know them and use them to the fullest advantage," then we will see how a game of baseball is no frivolity, that a new hat, as Emerson said, might do more for a woman's soul than some sermons, that there is for many greater nourishment in a Brahms symphony than in a T-bone steak. "For the life is more than meat . . ."

Verily, joy lies in the so-called unnecessary. In the play, "Pink String and Sealing Wax," the father of a sizeable family is depicted as a crusty old character who rules the roost with an iron hand. He pinches pennies, lays down the law with fearsome finality, never smiles, upholds all virtues with loveless and unbending severity. But from the beginning, you can see that underneath, he is just an old softie, and the proper feminine approach reveals beneath his scaly armor the heart of a good man whose love is tender and loyal. When trouble comes, he is like a rock; everyone leans on him, runs to him for shelter. And by the end of the play, he has softened up to the point where he is handing out money to his astonished children as if it did readily grow on trees. The story of his transformation makes you feel warm inside and you come away with the lesson firmly in mind that the most precious things in this life are the things that have been called non-sensical and impractical, that when you have love, other things are not of such world-shaking importance, the heart is relaxed and you begin to taste the real flavor of living.

Perhaps I shouldn't tell this, but since I was very, very young when I committed the foul deed perhaps you will be charitable. One summer I watched for weeks as a watermelon in Grandpop's garden kept getting bigger and bigger. He liked to grow melons in his asparagus bed, and when the asparagus had grown tall and gone to seed, nobody could see small boys crawling around the watermelons. The day finally came when I thought my favorite melon was ready for market—the market being me. The thing proved to be unaccountably heavy; in fact, I could not lift it at all. But I had waited too long to give up easily, so I began turning it end-over-end. I was too busy to see a couple of big feet moving along just behind. Suddenly the silence was rent by loud guffaws; Grandpop couldn't hold in any longer. He laughed till the tears ran down his cheeks. I was his favorite grandson and he knew about my amorous intentions toward his biggest watermelon and had me under surveillance for a long time. He took the melon under one arm and me under the other and off we went to his house. After he had cooled it in a tub of water, he split the melon open and we had a perfectly marvelous afternoon. I didn't recall his exact words, but after I had stuffed in all I could hold, he said something like this, "Son, most of the things we scheme and struggle to get can be had for free if we had the sense to know it. You could have all the watermelon you wanted just by asking me."

Perhaps my theology is somewhat on the anthropomorphic side, but I can't help feeling that Grandpop was very like God. Possibly I should have been punished. It was his duty, no doubt, to tell my mother about my crime. But it was a secret between us; Mother doesn't know of my perfidy to this day. But though he might have been a kindly, over-indulgent old man who let his love for boys overrule his practical judgment, the fact is I never swiped another melon, or anything else for that matter. My career in crime ended right there. You can imagine what my memories of him are like. He could have made it so different!

How true it is: "We love God because he first loved us." In his great love, as a father for his children, we think often we detect a hint of unwisdom. He loves sinners and enemies, and by our standards that is impractical. His love is indiscriminating, lavish, wasteful at times, you might think. But see how it takes all human selfishness masquerading under the idea of the practical, the utilitarian, and transmutes it by the divine alchemy into that higher life which is more than meat.

This is not meant to be counsel against good judgment in the guidance of our affairs. Nor do I suggest that profligacy or prodigality will yield the greater satisfactions. But surely, our dearest joys come in those impulsive moments when a hard and unwise practicality is overborne by a higher wisdom which forgets not that life is play as well as work, roses as well as bread, poetry as well as prose, and a song in the heart caught up in the music of the spheres.

Army and Navy Chaplains

The Commission of Army and Navy Chaplains has recently set up, on a denominational basis, a program whereby each denomination, when sufficiently large, acts on its own quota given by the Chief of Chaplains. The smaller denominations work on a miscellaneous quota, until they become large enough to have a quota of their own. Applicants approved by their own denominational commission on chaplains may then be recommended to the office of the Chief of Chaplains. The NAE Commission answers hundreds of inquiries each year and endeavors to see that evangelical bodies receive due recognition in all matters pertaining to government chaplaincies.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Elon Summer Session, 1954

For a number of years it has been the policy for Elon College to operate a summer school for the convenience of "in service" public school teachers and students who wish to complete requirements for graduation in less than the regular four years. The summer term runs for eleven full weeks and makes it possible for a person to earn 18 quarter hours credit toward graduation or for renewal of teaching certificates. The summer quarter is divided into two terms. During the first term of the current summer session, 260 students were enrolled in day classes and 90 students were enrolled in evening classes, making a total of 350 students. During the second term 188 students enrolled for day classes and 72 enrolled in the evening, making a total of 260.

During the past several summers it has been the custom to have Commencement exercises in August at the end of the second summer term. Commencement exercises have been planned this year for Friday, August 20, at 8:00 p. m. with the Reverend Dr. Henry Robertson, minister of the First Christian Church in Burlington, as the speaker. Reverend Dwight Jackson, pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Haw River, will offer the invocation; and Dr. John G. Truitt will present the Bibles to the members of the graduating classes on behalf of the college. President L. E. Smith will confer the degrees on those who graduate, deliver his message to them, and offer the benediction. The public is invited to attend the exercises.

Summer school is always an interesting experience. Although we do not have many of the activities which are normal for the regular year, there still seems to be a very full program for students and faculty alike. In addition to the regular program this summer the college is offering a special course beginning August 16 for veterans whose eligibility under the Korean Bill is about to expire. Those who were separated from the service prior to August 20, 1952, must be in school before August 20, 1954, if they are to receive any training under the VA setup. Some of these disregarded this deadline and failed to register for either of the regular terms. As a convenience to them the college has arranged to offer this short course in Orientation which is required of all degree candidates. These students will then register for the regular program beginning in September.

Preparations are underway for the regular fall term which begins with Freshman Orientation week, September 7. If there are young people in your community who should be com-

=====

Fifth Sunday

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS ARE PRIVILEGED TO MAKE
AN OFFERING FOR OUR COLLEGE

* * *

Elon College

* * *

Let every Sunday school in the Southern Convention take advantage of this opportunity!

=====

ing and who have not made the necessary arrangements, you have a splendid opportunity to be of service to them and to the college

J. E. DANIELEY, Dean.

Gives FTS Full Time

Los Angeles, California—(E. P.)—An announcement by Dr. Harold J. Oekenga, pastor of the historic Park Street Congregational Church in Boston, that he is resigning to devote full time to the presidency of the Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena was received with "gratification" by other administrators of the seminary.

Dr. Oekenga, one of this country's leading advocates of missionary work, made his announcement from his Boston pulpit. He has been pastor of the Boston church since 1932. And he has simultaneously served as president in absentia of the Fuller Seminary in Pasadena since it was organized seven years ago.

According to Dr. Harold Lindsell, dean of administration at the Pasadena institution, the point had been reached where Dr. Oekenga had to give up one position or the other. "We are gratified," said Dr. Lindsell, "that he has decided to devote his energies to the seminary." In announcing his resignation from the Boston pastorate, however, Dr. Oekenga said he will return to the church in September after a vacation and remain there until the first of the year.

Summer Doctrine

Heaven is not closed in the summer time, and God never goes on a vacation. The Bible does not say:

The Lord is in his holy temple, except in July and August.

Knock and it shall be opened unto you, seek and ye shall find, except in July and August.

Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be in the midst, except in July and August.

The devil is not on a vacation either. Possibly because the earth's temperature in summer time is more like that to which he is accustomed, the devil is busier than ever.

Then—

Why in the name of common sense, should our churches and our Sunday schools close up in summer or curb their activities to a point where the community is not sure whether they are alive or dead?

We need to keep as cool as we can, work as hard as we can, pray as earnestly as we can, and go to church as often as we can. The hot season is upon us, but so are the "latter days." The time is short. "Work for the night is coming, when no man can work."—Evangelical Action.

Fear is like fire: If controlled it will help you; if uncontrolled, it will rise up and destroy you. Men's actions depend to a great extent upon fear. We do things either because we enjoy doing them or because we are afraid not to do them. This sort of fear has no relation to physical or moral courage. It is inspired by the knowledge that we are not adequately prepared to face the future and the events it may bring—Poverty, perhaps, or injury, or death.—John F. Milburn.

Missions at Home and Abroad

A Chapter is Written in the Story of a New Church

An exciting first chapter in the story of a new church was written on Sunday, August 1, 1954, when thirty-eight members were received into the newly organized Congregational Christian Church in Warwick, Virginia. These were the first charter members; it has been agreed that the charter membership will remain open until some time early next year. The story of the service and the events leading to it are worth telling.

Twenty-six of these persons, formerly members of the First Church in Newport News, were formally dismissed and commissioned to become members of the new church at the morning service on Sunday, July 25. The names of those who had indicated their desire and intention to be part of the church were read by the church secretary, Mrs. James Duling, and as they stood at the front of the church, the pastor spoke these words:

"Dear Friends, today the members of this church salute you, as you have expressed your faith to help bring into being a new church. We say 'good-bye' to you, not with the sadness of farewell, for we shall continue to be near you and give you every support and encouragement we can. But we say 'goodbye' to you in the literal meaning of that greeting. That word 'goodbye,' as you know, is a contraction of the words, 'God be with you.' And that is our prayer and our hope as you depart from us to become a part of the Congregational Christian Church in Warwick.

"Do you now each wish to be dismissed from membership in this church that under God you may go forth to help establish and be a part of the Congregational Christian Church in Warwick? If so, will you answer, 'I do.'"

Then the pastor spoke these words to the congregation: "Do you, the members of this church, sincerely commend these members who leave us to the love and care of God, to walk in his ways, made known or to be made known to them? If such is your desire, will you indicate by rising in your place?" It was a solemn and joyous moment as the congregation lifted their hearts in prayer, asking God's consecration of these persons and his guidance and mercies in their undertaking.

Two Sundays later at a service at the Deer Park School Auditorium in Warwick, where weekly services of worship have been held since May 30, these commissioned members, together with two others from the Newport News Church who in the meantime had expressed their wish to be members of the new church, and ten others who united either by profession or reaffirmation of faith or by transfer were received as the first new members of the Warwick Church. One member was overheard to say that whatever doubt he had about the church's future was quickly dismissed as he looked into the faces of those who took the vows of membership.

An impressive part of the service of reception was the signing of the charter membership scroll by each new member. A beautiful scroll, three feet in width, made of sail cloth, had been prepared by Mr. Thomas E. Colvin, one of the members of the church. Inscribed on it were the words which the new congregation had agreed to be the covenant of the church. It read: "We, whose names appear below, do joyously covenant together as charter members of the Congregational Christian Church in Warwick, Virginia, to walk in the ways of the Lord; made known, or to be made known to us. While we do not insist upon the acceptance of any creed as a basis for membership in this church, the following is expressive of our faith and purpose:

"We believe in the One God, Maker and Ruler of all things, Father of all men; the Source of all goodness and beauty, all truth and love.

"We believe in Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh, our Teacher, Example, and Redeemer, the Saviour of the world.

"We believe in the Holy Spirit, God present with us for guidance, for comfort and strength.

"We believe in the forgiveness of sins, in the life of love and prayer, and grace equal to every need.

"We believe in the Church as the universal fellowship of all who, in every age and nation, profess this faith in Jesus Christ, and follow him as Lord and Saviour.

"Depending upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth, we work and pray for the consummation of the Kingdom of God; and we look with faith for the triumph of righteousness and the life everlasting."

Following the signing of the scroll, the first communion service was participated in by members of the new church.

It has been a deeply heartening experience to see this new church of our fellowship come into being. Much credit belongs to the members of the First Church in Newport News who undertook the survey of about three hundred homes in the Deer Park community, and who have given generous allowances of their pastor's time to assist this new church and to conduct the services of worship each Sunday previous to their own morning worship. Although the new church has been financially self-sustaining from the start, the First Church agreed to underwrite their budget for the first three months, and the Woman's Auxiliary made a gift of one hundred dollars to the work. With this gift the Warwick group established their Building Fund. A second gift was made to the fund by the 42 children who attended the Vacation School.

What else has been accomplished by the new church? A Sunday school has been started, bi-monthly meetings for business and fellowship have been held, a Vacation School has been conducted, and a Site Committee has been busy considering possible locations for the church. The attendance for services has averaged around 60.

Invaluable assistance has been given during the summer by Miss Betty Vann Sharpe, an Elon graduate and teacher in the Graham, North Carolina schools, who came to us through the Student Summer Service program. She has worked in Sunday school and Vacation school, conducted a Craft and Choral Group for children and young people two mornings a week, given leadership in a survey of homes, visited members and prospective people, done necessary secretarial work, and aided the pastor in countless ways. She has worked so faithfully and well that we should vote her an honorary member!

The new Congregational Christian Church in Warwick looks toward a future of growth and a happy relationship among the churches of the Southern Convention.

A. LANSON GRANGER, JR.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

My First School of Missions

By MARY ELLEN COX.

This being my first time to attend the School of Missions, I was very much on the alert. I did not miss a thing! I had already been given glowing accounts of the happenings at previous schools by our minister's wife, Raehael Wallace, with whom I attended. But even that did not prepare me for the wonderful experience which I have had, and I would like very much to share it with others who were unable to attend.

On the last day of the school, I was jotting down my experiences—things I had seen, heard and learned—and I realized what a lot of hard work had gone on "behind the scenes" to make the school function so smoothly.

I was also conscious that harmony had prevailed throughout the entire time, that there had been genuine fellowship and friendliness, that everyone felt very happy.

I had heard no criticism concerning anyone, no gossip, and no "eat-ty" remarks—which I have learned is very rare in a group of people, particularly women.

I felt their sincerity and their earnestness while listening to them express themselves concerning their work.

There was always a friendly exchange of greetings and chatter in passing, and there was also a lot of fun. In fact, I have never seen a more wonderful spirit than the one which was shown at the School of Missions, and I felt very grateful and fortunate that I had been privileged to attend.

I observed faces (which is a habit of mine) at the different sessions, and I saw that they were attentive and receptive, as I was myself. After listening to Dr. Hardeastle, Miss Miriam Brown, Rev. W. J. Andes and others, I left each session more enlightened and with a feeling of inspiration. I believe that every other one felt the same way.

On the last day, there was a feeling of sadness at parting, because some of us had made real friends. I was not fortunate enough to get to know everyone there, that was impossible in such a large group, but I was able to exchange friendly "hello" with everyone.

Finally there came the goodbyes, with an exchange of addresses and promises to write; and hopes expressed that we would be seeing each other again next year.

And so I realized that love had predominated throughout, because if it had not, all the other things that I had seen and experienced could not have been true. Therefore, I know that God had indeed been present at the School of Missions.

Entaw Community Church,
Fayetteville, N. C.

* * * * *

Directions for Ordering Materials

1. The Women's Packet for 1954-55. Complete with all study books, $3.50 plus postage (31c for churches in the North Carolina Conference; 34c for churches in the Eastern Virginia and Valley Conferences). Packet without the home mission study book, $2.50 plus postage (27c and 29c respectively). Order from Miss Doris Boswell, Box 336, Elon College, N. C.

2. Bible Study Books—

"Acts—Words about Deeds" $.40

Order from Board of Women's Work, Presbyterian Church, U. S., 341-A Ponce de Leon Avenue, N. E., Atlanta 5, Georgia.

3. National Program Booklet—

"Out of the Heart of the Gospel" .. $.50

May be ordered from the Missions Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

4. Foreign Mission Study Book for Adults—

"Under Three Flags" $ 1.25

Guide on "India, Pakistan & Ceylon," for use with the above book is 50c. Guide for use with "Man, Woman and God in the City" (book in packet), by Ione Catton, 50c.

5. Missionary Materials for Young People—

Foreign Missions Theme, "India, Pakistan and Ceylon."

Senior High—

"Change of Heart" $ 1.25
"Change of Heart" Guide ,50

Junior High—

"The Hidden Treasure" $ 1.25
"The Hidden Treasure" Guide ,50

Home Mission Theme, "The City."

Senior High—

"When," Lucy Eldredge $.50
Youth Guide on "The City" ,50

Junior High—

"They Live in the City" $ 1.25
"They Live in the City" Guide ,50

6. Mission Study Books for Children—

Beginners—

"A Sari for Sita" $.25

Primary—

"Fig Tree Village" $ 1.25
"The Boy with the Busy Walk" 1.25
"The Boy with the Busy Walk" Guide ,50

Juniors—

"Chad of India" $ 1.25
"Chad of India" Guide ,50
"Sidewalk Kids" 1.25
"Sidewalk Kids" Guide ,50

7. All Missionary Materials for adults, young people and children should be ordered from The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass. Sending check with your order will save you postage.

8. Reserve the movie, "The Beginning," (16mm) and all filmstrips with Miss Doris Boswell, Box 336, Elon College, N. C.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL,
Chairman.

* * * * *

Liberty Spring Emphasizes Daily Devotions

Since Daily Devotions is one of our Convention Goals for the year, our Woman's Auxiliary of the Liberty Spring Christian Church has emphasized this phase of our work in particular, and it has been very effectively practiced by each of our members. The results have been rewarding; not only has our Prayer Life been deepened and strengthened, but our desire to read and appreciate the Scriptures has been revived and encouraged.

The highlight of our year is possibly the Mission Sunday Service which was conducted by our ladies on June 27, at the morning worship, at the request of our pastor, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar. The order of service was as follows:

Prelude, "Trust in Thee."

Call to Worship—Mrs. James C. Lynch.

Doxology.

Morning Hymn, "O God, Thy World is Sweet With Prayer."

(Continued on page 11.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Two families went on a wonderful picnic. There were the parents and five children, one of whom was a boy. First they sat on benches and talked, while the children ran and played. They explored the little paths, they found a swift running brook covered by tiny little rustic bridges. The little boy skipped stones in the water.

Next they went to the far end of the park where a gaily colored merry-go-round was traveling on its endless round-about journey. There were cats with fishes in their mouths, and bears, tigers, a fierce lion, and a gentle rabbit with enormous ears. Each child picked his special animal and away they rode to the enchanted tunes of the carousel. Around and around in five different trips. One was in far off places, another felt at home, and one was hurrying toward Rabbitland, but the bell rang, and the magic travelers became earthlings again.

Near by was a miniature train that crossed the brook and ran through a tunnel. It had a bell and a whistle. It would carry many children. The children climbed aboard and waved and called as they began an imaginary trip. One child was holding a big pink balloon which was snatched from her hand by the wind and went flying into the sky. It was watched until it had become a mere speck. "All aboard" turned to "All Out" and the children ran up a hill until they found a special place.

It was a tall, strong cage holding a family of monkeys. There was the father, in a section by himself, and the mother who was carrying a very small baby monkey on her back. The little monkey was about the size of a rat, with little hair on him, and a very long tail. He clung tightly to his mother's back and let her feed him grains of fresh corn. The children stood for a long while looking at and talking to the little baby monkey. He never looked at them, but they didn't mind.

The mothers said it was time to eat. Two of the girls begged not to "Sit at the bee table" for once they had been troubled by yellow jackets. A "none bee" table was found, not far from a little log bridge, and the table was spread. The son said the grace and then the children drank their orange juice, ate their devilled eggs and sandwiches. Soon it was time for big, thick, good pieces of chocolate cake.

While the mothers cleared the table the children ran to explore some more. When they came back, the families sat around the table, viewed the fading daylight and the coming stars. They each told how they believed in God and how they wanted to help people. Then they drove home and five little folk were soon fast asleep.

This is a true story.

* * * * *

Getting Ready for School

By FLORENCE JANE OVENS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A group of happy little children, resting from active play, were enjoying the carpet of grass in the shade of a large maple tree.

"Mary, your mother is on the piazza; ask her to come and tell us a story, will you?" someone suggested. "Oh, yes, do," echoed other voices.

Mary responded willingly, and Mrs. Stowel, without hesitation, accompanied her daughter to the maple tree. When comfortably seated the lady said, "Instead of listening to a story, how would you like to talk about school? It will soon be time to go, you know."

"Yes," "Yes," "I'd like that," came eager responses.

"What do you suppose it is really like?" questioned John Holmes. "Sometimes I'm afraid. Harry said school was awful, but Peter said it was fun."

"School is not awful, nor is it exactly fun," answered Mrs. Stowel. "You are all very fortunate children. You will begin school in the kindergarten instead of the first grade. In the kindergarten the boys and girls have a chance to get acquainted—to learn to know each other. They work together, play together, and help each other. There are things to use that many of the children have not seen before—some to work with and some to use when playing. The children find out what can be done with each of them. Then they may choose the ones with which they want to work. They take turns when there is not enough of anything to go around, and they are kind to each other. Some pleasant days the teacher takes them for a walk. At such times they learn about the work done in their town. But some of the walks take them into the park, and they see birds and flowers and trees that are new to them. When they return to the kindergarten they find out that there are certain books that will answer their questions about some of the things they have seen. They become, oh, so interested!"

"I think that would be fun, like Peter said," remarked John.

"I just hope it won't rain," spoke up a dark-eyed girl. "You see I haven't yet learned to take my rubbers on and off."

There was an exchange of experiences. Some said rubbers were "too hard." But Mrs. Stowel made them see that it would be a sorry day for those children who could not yet manage their rubbers when they saw the other boys and girls starting off to kindergarten, while they themselves must remain at home because they had not yet conquered their rubbers.

Privately, however, the good lady determined to ask all the mothers to see that the children's rubbers went on and off with ease. She did this, and at the same time she suggested marking them plainly. Caps and other garments were also to be marked. And it was agreed among the mothers that they would all place the marks in a similar location when possible, so that they could easily be found.

But a whistle and two bells were sounding. "We have to go, Mrs. Stowel," said the dark-eyed girl, "but I will learn to manage my rubbers."

They were exchanging smiles when John came up. "That was a lot nicer than a story," he said. "Now I'm not afraid to go to kindergarten."

Such a little group, and yet one can easily see there are still First Day problems to be solved, considered Mrs. Stowel. The Parent-Teacher-Association meeting will assist their mothers to take the proper steps, but what about the thirty or more entrants, many of whose mothers work away from home all day? How can one expect those weary women to attend a P. T. A. meeting on Beginning

(Continued on page 11.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Western Carolina Youth Rally

The fifth Sunday of this month, or August 29, is the regular time for the Youth Rally of the Western North Carolina Conference.

The vice-president of the Pilgrim Fellowship, Sylvia Coggins, is to be in charge of the meeting, which will be held at the Randleman Christian Church, of which Rev. Winfred Bray is pastor.

The rally is to begin at 2:30 with registration. The topic for the session is "What is a P. F.'er." There will be a highlight address by Rev. Tucker Humphries.

All of the youth of the Western Conference are urged to come and represent their churches. They are asked to bring a picnic basket. The church will furnish the drink.

Come and enjoy the fellowship with the youth of the W. N. C. Conference.

THOMAS MADREN,
President.

* * * * *

Chicken Dinner for Portsmouth Fellowship

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Elm Avenue Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, recently held a delightful chicken dinner at the home of their pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. C. O. Koon.

The dinner ended a contest held to get more members in the Fellowship. It was very successful and was enjoyed by all.

After the dinner, the monthly business meeting was held.

JANET RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Youth Supply Pastorate

The Liberty Vance Church annually gives the month of August as a vacation to its pastor.

It had the pleasure of having Rev. Rueben Askew, student at Elon College, to be the supply speaker on Sunday, August 8. He chose as his topic, "Look to the Prophets," using the words of Jeremiah, and stressing the importance of repentance. His message was greatly enjoyed.

Another youth of our Convention, Rev. Thomas Madren, who is now the pastor of our Amelia and Plymouth churches, brought a wonderful message to Liberty on Sunday, August 15. He used as his topic "The Sins of the Tongue." The scripture lesson was taken from Matthew 12.

Both of these young men, who are young in the ministry, brought us messages that will be long remembered.

F. B. FULLER,

S. S. Superintendent.

* * * * *

Turner's Chapel Young People

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Turner's Chapel Congregational Christian Church is planning a trip to Aberdeen Lake on the second Sunday in August. We are going to carry a picnic lunch. We are going to get back to the church in time for the evening service.

Our attendance has dropped off due to the summer vacation, but we are hoping that it picks up in the fall.

JESSAMINE LASSITER,
Secretary.

"IS THAT THE HOLY BIBLE?"

(Continued from page 2.)

Paul used. The question of manuscripts and translations is a very difficult question, but no more so than many other historical matters. Nor is there a single doctrine of our faith upset by any or all of these matters. It would take us too far afield to try to go into any detailed discussion here.

2. The King James Version is a most precious legacy that has come down to us since 1611, and no other version can ever take its place with me—it was my Mother's Bible and the Bible of my first Sunday school teacher. Nothing, I insist, can ever take its place with me!

3. But I have long ago learned to think of all versions very much as Paul taught his people to think of men—"Peter," "Paul," "Apollos" and all the rest—"they are all yours," and yours to enjoy and use.

4. The R. S. V. takes its place along with the others. The men who made it are honest, loyal, faithful men. They know many, many times more about these matters than I do, and I am very grateful to them for what they have done. Early in the prosecution of this task, I wrote the chairman of the committee expressing the hope that the word "Blessed" instead of "Happy" should be retained in the "Beatitudes." (Matthew 5) And I insisted on this for two reasons: (1) Many people think they are "happy" when they are not really "Blessed." (2) The word "happy" has the same basic root as "happen," and there is no question mark in any of the assurances of God.

W. R. CULLOM.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

Responsive Reading.

Scripture Lesson of Missionary Selections—Mrs. J. C. Lyneh.

Morning Prayer—R. E. Rogers.

Worship through Tithes and Offerings.

Offertory, "The Lower Lights."

Offertory Response.

Solo, "Others"—Mrs. Joseph Savage.

"Our Task as Congregational Christian Women"—Mrs. W. T. Harrell.

"Letters from Our Missionaries"—Mrs. N. H. Bradshaw.

"I Speak Fifteen Languages"—Mrs. J. Samuel Turner.

Closing Meditation—Mrs. James C. Lyneh.

Hymn, "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

Postlude, "Marche."

We feel that our work has progressed well this year under the able guidance of our president, Mrs. James C. Lyneh. Our four circle leaders have served diligently and cooperatively, and all requirements have been met. Our Auxiliary has fostered a plan whereby flowers for the church altar are furnished each Sunday by individual members of the Auxiliary. Truly we have been "Rejoicing In Our Task," and face the year ahead with faith and courage for our tasks in his church.

MRS. J. EDWARD HARRELL, JR.,
Secretary.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 10.)

School? And yet—perhaps—if each received a special written invitation urging her to come and telling her it would help her child, some of them might make the effort. Mothers love their children.

The P. T. A. tried the plan—and it worked!

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Growth Through Christian Service"

LESSON IX—AUGUST 29, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Gal. 6:2.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Gal. 6:1-2; James 1:22, 26, 27; 2:14-17; 1 John 3:16-18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 10:40-42.

An elderly Negro preacher, when asked what system he used in preaching, replied, "First I tells them what I'm going to tell them; then I tells them; and then I tells them what I has told them." It was sound pedagogy, line upon line and precept upon precept, the principle of repetition in teaching and learning. All of which is intended to remind the readers of this page that the theme of the lessons for this quarter is "Growth in Christian Living." The Lesson Committee, therefore, could not very well have left out a lesson on "Growth Through Christian Service."

A fellow can grow without taking any exercise, but he will grow flabby. Exercise, or service, is just as necessary to growth in spiritual stature, as exercise is necessary to growth in physical stature. Christians grow through Christian Service. This service takes many forms, and there are countless ways to serve Christ and our fellowmen.

Helping the Folks Who Have Made Mistakes.

"Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." What attitude shall we take toward those who have made mistakes, who have failed, who have sinned? So often we are critical, censorious, cruel, condemnatory. Consider these words of Paul. Let us bring to such a one a spirit of sympathy, of tolerance, of compassion, of forgiveness, gentleness and kindness. We do well to remind ourselves that we are just as likely to fall and to fail. "Ye who are spiritual . . . in the spirit of gentleness (or meekness) . . . lest thou also be tempted," What a difference it would make if we took that attitude toward those who have made moral and spiritual mistakes. This does not mean that we are to condone sin. "Restoring such a one" may involve criticism and reprimand, but it must be done in the spirit of Christ and in the light of our own weaknesses and mistakes.

Bearing One Another's Burdens.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." These burdens may be of two kinds, temporal needs, moral faults. We are to bear one another's burdens. And sharing one another's burdens is not just a soft, nice, sentimental idea; it is hard, practical common-sense. One of the surest ways to ease our own burden is to take upon ourselves the burdens of others. That sounds crazy to the cynic, but it is the fact. Furthermore, America can best win friends and stem the tide of Communism by helping to bear the burdens of other nations. All around us are folks who are carrying burdens heavy and grievous to be borne. One of the surest ways to grow in grace and in strength of spirit is to share these burdens.

Saying and Hearing, and Doing Not.

"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." The man who wrote these words was the brother of Jesus. They sound like the Master's words. He was always emphasizing the relation between hearing, and saying, and doing. This was because he knew the place of doing in the learning process, because he knew the barrenness of faith without works. "No impression without expression" is the way educators put it. It is so nice to go to church, hear fine music, listen to a good sermon, enjoy the singing and the praying. And it is helpful, make no mistake about that. But it is not enough! One should do as well as hear. Truth received, should be acted upon. Those who head only, "deceive themselves," says the brother of our Lord. As has been said so many times in these pages, one should enter the church to worship; he should depart to serve.

Defining Religion.

James suggests three tests of true religion. They are not only tests, but they are good tests. First, self-control. "If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." Jesus said that money caused a lot of trouble. James says that the tongue causes a lot of trouble. Both were right. Second, good works or charity. Luther said that the Epistle of James was "an epistle of straw" because he thought that James put too much emphasis on works instead of faith. But James was not minimizing faith. That was basic with him as with Paul. But James was saying that a man's faith was not a good grade of faith, unless it issued in good works. A man is not saved by his good works, but his good works are a sign that he has been saved. Our Lord Jesus Christ went about doing good. Sharing with the needy, lifting the fallen, comforting the sorrowing, seeking the lost, as well as everyday acts of kindness and little deeds of helpfulness are expressions of faith and true religion. And thirdly, purity or good character. "And to keep one's self unspotted from the world." James' Brother, our Lord Jesus Christ, prayed his Father that he "would not take his followers out of the world, but that he would keep them from the evil." They were to be in the world, but not of the world. Just going about doing good is not enough. Before a man does good works, he ought to be a good man. There is no substitute for character. This does not mean that a man has to be perfect before he does good works. It does mean that no amount of good works is a substitute for being a good man.

Faith and Works.

"Even so, faith, if it have not works, is dead." "Let us not love in word, neither with the tongue, but in deed and truth." James and John say the same thing. They are saying that saying is no substitute for doing. Faith, true faith, finds expression in works. "Come up, or shut up," says James. Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." A man is saved by faith—by grace are we saved through faith, and that not of ourselves, lest any man should boast; it is the gift of God, not of works. But being saved by faith, we are to be fruitful in every good work, showing our faith by our works.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

A Memorable Hour

By REV. J. EVERETTE NEASE,
Norfolk Virginia.

TEXT: "And Jesus . . . touched Him." Mark 1:41.

The opening chapter of the Gospel of Mark contains an enumeration of events that transpire in rapid succession. If we had been there it might have been difficult for us to have grasped the basic significance of each event. However, let us in imagination, follow some of these events from the shores of Gennesaret with its quiet, appealing invitation; to the ruggedness of the wilderness, with its uninviting sounds of animal and fowl; and then through the streets of bartering and exploitation, where we are apt, if we are not careful, to pass by an event of transcending importance in the life of a man. For, to him, it was A Memorable Hour.

It is to be regretted that, in the pressure of our days, few indeed, are the memorable hours we experience. When they do come we, so often, are engrossed in this business we call living that only a thunder-clap of monstrous proportion awakens us to what is transpiring. Even then we are so dazed and dizzy that we fail to grasp the real significance of that which has come our way. Furthermore, although we have asked that a "sign" be shown us, we are so poorly prepared, spiritually, when it comes that we are unable to read the meaning of God in what has happened.

But such was not true with an unnamed and obscure leper who approached Jesus one day and announced that healing could be administered to him if the Master would only say the word. Here in the course of events, we have in the record a sentence which unless we are careful we may overlook. We are prone in our exasperated living to overlook and pass without thought many significant statements and events. When this is permitted it results in a loss to our own spiritual well-being.

The sentence of significance, embodying an action of Jesus which changed the course of a man's life and created a memorable hour for him, is "And Jesus . . . touched him."

Never again was this man the same. No more a leper. No more an outcast who must, upon the approach of the movement of humanity, cry in despair, "unclean." No more was he one whose habitation was among the caves with their stench of imminent death. He was free. He was well. He had been redeemed by the touch of Jesus.

This is the conclusion of a story whose moral for you and me is evident. Evident as it may be, however, we are prone to quander our approach in becoming the recipient of such a blessing as this man experienced. Herein, to be sure, is where man's soul cries for an answer. And, an answer there must be and an answer there is.

May I take you back for a moment into the first century when the clear ringing words of Jesus declared the purpose of his existence. He had become God incarnate in man. He had become immortality embodied in mortality. He had become the purity of eternity in an impure and external world. And he had come for a purpose.

"I am come," he said, "that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." But only those who sought it found it, and only those who asked for it received it, and only to those who knocked was the door to moral and spiritual healing opened. To those who met the requirements, and to those alone, came the experience of a memorable hour.

However, that to which the records bear truth as to the result of the touch of Jesus in the first century; and that to which has been added the testimony of countless souls in the passing centuries; is that which, today, can be experienced by all men and women who put themselves within the touch-range of Jesus.

We are a part of a problematical age. We seem to be caught within the "maddening maze" of things. Futile, indeed, is it for us to try to lift ourselves out of it by our own boot-straps. Therefore, the soul of man reaches out beyond and above himself in anticipation of receiving help from a source unseen and eternal.

It is then that man puts himself within the range of the touch of Christ. It is by this act that we indicate the longing that is deep-seated and ever present in our being. We were made to dwell with God. The eternal purpose behind our creation was for us to live in a spiritual atmosphere far more pure than that which bids for our attentions and aspirations on the secular level.

If we have experienced the "touch of his hand" on ours we are changed men and women; and the change should be evident by the way we conduct ourselves among our fellow men. Unworthy we are to bear the name of Christian if it cannot be honestly said of us, "And Jesus . . . touched him."

Look back with me for a moment upon your life. Was there a time when in despair and confusion your soul cried out in the words of the publican: "God be merciful to me a sinner?" If there was, then, you were sincere. You meant what you said. You wanted above all things else to have soul-peace.

You had known what it was to be groping in spiritual darkness. You had known what it meant not to have a central pivot around which life could revolve with a purpose. You had experienced the futility of your search for inner joy and satisfaction.

Then one day through the words of the wise counsel of your minister or from your reading of the records of God's search for man, it dawned upon you that in Christ, and in Christ alone, lay your answer. You wasted no time in grappling unto yourself with proverbial hooks of steel this one hope of peace and serenity. In humbleness you bent your will to the spiritual pattern of the will of God. And from the inmost recesses of your being you petitioned:

"Consecrate me now to thy service, Lord,

By the power of grace divine;

Let my soul look up with a steadfast hope,

And my will be lost in Thine."

And peace—soul-peace became your possession. Joy and hope became the tools by which each day's labor took on more significant meaning. And time passed. Then in the movement of events, through the providence of God, here we have come in the worship of God on this Holy day. And here we wait to eat and drink in commemoration of the death and resurrection of our Lord.

But, how is it with your soul now? Is that inner peace and serenity still your possession? Do you still feel the

(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I have learned that there are always people who get a lot of joy out of sharing with others. They know God has been good to them and they have seen his blessings come to them in so many ways. They like to make others happy by passing on blessings in turn to others. I know I get a pleasure out of helping others. If I told about it, I would sort of spoil the joy of it. I cannot do much. But I can do some, and I find it such a pleasure.

The morning mail is a joy to me. I go down to the post office every morning with expectancy. It is the surprises I get that make it thrilling. I must not expect enough, because almost whatever I get seems to have the effect of a joyous surprise. Today a lady sent the orphanage $50.00. On the same mail a Missionary Fellowship of Women sent a check for $20.00. And on the same mail a poor grandmother sent a check for $30.00. When I opened these letters I was so glad and joyous. In some ways I should have expected each of them, but nevertheless I was thrilled and appreciative.

I am glad when we have $500.00 or $600.00 in a week's report. I am very glad. Even though I know that less than $1,000.00 is running up unpaid bills, or not making us able to pay past due ones.

What I wish is this: that enough people who have something for which to be especially grateful knew about the orphanage to make it possible for us to run this home without undue pinching.

There are always a few people that remember the orphanage on the festive occasion of its annual homecoming. It comes this time at the end of my first five years. Wouldn't it be wonderful if many people could read this little open-faced letter and sort of feel how good it would be to help the orphanage at this time? Not enough people read this letter. So comparatively few people subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to start with, and I seriously doubt that nearly all them read this page.

Yes, it would be so good if enough people knew about these 84 little children. Because you who know about them treat us mighty well. You are good to the orphanage. What we need is a larger number of people who know about us. Is there anything you can help us do in this? Telling people about the orphanage, getting new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and send us the names of some friend who would like to receive our little monthly calendar or news-sheet which we mimeograph and mail to quite a number of friends beyond the normal reach of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Come to see us on Homecoming Sunday, September 5, and feel free to share the fellowship and food of the noonday meal if you let us know beforehand that you are coming. We want to have enough food for the returning "boys and girls" of former days. Everyone is welcome, and we can have enough for all if you let us know a week beforehand that you will be here. I hope you do write and say you are coming.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR AUGUST 12, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:

J. R. Crutchfield, Burlington, N. C.

Maude Hedley Bible Class, Rosemont Church.

Clothing and toys:

Mrs. Clyde Brooks.

Cookies:

Girl Scouts, Burlington, N. C.

Coupons:

Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Va.

Mrs. J. K. Moore, Halifax, Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 8,493.73

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Ebenezer $21.58

Hayes Chapel 18.00

39.58

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Durham S. S. $22.96

Pleasant Grove 21.00

46.96

Western N. C. Conference:

Bailey's Grove $15.00

Big Oak 5.00

20.00

Eastern Va. Conference:

Bethlehem (Nans) S. S. $39.24

Newport News S. S. 11.45

Christian Temple 20.00

70.69

Virginia Valley Conference:

Bethel S. S. $ 2.00

Linville S. S. 5.84

Newport S. S. 29.96

Winchester S. S. 8.34

46.14

Total $ 220.37

Grand total $ 8,714.10

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $20,942.66

United Cong. Christian S.

S., Columbus, Ga. $ 6.50

Mary Sue Brittle S. S.

Class, Bethlehem, Nans.

Church 5.00

Rev R. L. Henderson, Lincoln, Kansas 50.00

Wake Chapel Missionary

Fellowship 20.00

Philathea Class, Reidsville

Church 20.00

Special Gifts 190.00

291.50

Grand total $21,234.16

Total for the week $ 511.87

Total for the year $29,948.26

For the money spent, fluid milk offers the most healthful and nutritious returns in protein of high quality, calcium, riboflavin, and other minerals and vitamins. This is why the U. S. Department of Agriculture includes liberal quantities of fluid milk in low-cost as well as moderate-cost food plans.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

.....
(Name of Deceased)

.....
(City)

.....
(Date of Death)

.....
(Survivor to be Written)

.....
(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

VESTAL.

We, the members of the High Point, N. C. Congregational Christian Church, wish, in this manner to express our love and respect for the devoted life of Mrs. Mattie Vestal who passed away July 21, 1954.

She was the faithful teacher of the Beginners class in our Sunday school for many years. She was faithful and loyal to all enterprises of her church as long as her health would permit.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we consider her death a great loss to our church. That God's way is always best, and that we bow in humble submission to our Father's will.

2. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's Holy Spirit may give them comfort and consolation in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to be recorded in the minutes of the church record, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Miss LOUISE PATTON,

Mrs. O. L. BRADY,

Mrs. G. H. VEAZEY,

Committee.

NELSON.

Mrs. Almira Cordelia (Dunlap) Nelson, daughter of the late Archibald and Mary Griffith Dunlap was born in Hampshire County West Va., September 5, 1866. She was translated into the "Life abundant" August 2, 1954, at her home in Winchester, Va. On Easter Sunday, 1953 she was injured in an auto accident, suffering a broken hip and other injuries from which she never recovered. At the time of her death she was 87 years, ten months and 28 days of age.

The deceased was married to the late George Nelson of Hampshire County W. Va. There were five sons born to this union, three of which previously preceeded the mother in death and two survive; Edgar C. and Harry F. Nelson both of Winchester. One sister, seven grand children, eleven great grand children and other relatives.

Mrs. Nelson was a life long member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church and faithful unto death in her obligations to her church. The funeral services for the deceased were conducted in the Timber Ridge Church by her pastor, Rev. Cameron D. Hayes and the writer, Wednesday afternoon, August 4, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends.

Her body was tenderly laid to rest in the large and beautiful Timber Ridge cemetery. The Timber Ridge Church was built in 1875 of bricks burned near the church site and the deceased remembered that she and her brother helped carry bricks from the kiln to the church while under construction. Her grandfather fought in the war of 1812 and was given the six hundred acre tract for his services during the war. Her father was born in 1804, just twelve years before the launching of "Old Ironsides," the most famous ship in the American Navy to our

Least Excusable of All Automobile Accidents

By H. H. SMITH.

Of all accidents involving automobiles, railroad crossing accidents are the least excusable. Warning signs: "Stop-Look-Listen" are plainly displayed at every crossing, and in addition, there are often gates, lights and bells. But see what happens. The 1953 statistics for railroad crossing accidents in Virginia are as follows: total accidents, 113; persons killed, 15; persons injured, 51.

The national figures for highway-railroad intersection crashes for 1953 are as follows: total accidents, 3,402; persons killed, 1,592; persons injured, 3,717. This represents an increase of six per cent over 1952 in deaths, and a decrease of two percent in injuries. And note this: "Nine out of ten crashes occurred at grade crossings protected by gates, lights, bells, watchmen, or a combination of these. During the daylight, in 78 percent of the cases, the locomotive hit the automobile; in 18 percent the automobile hit the locomotive, and in four percent the automobile hit another part of the train. In darkness, these percentages shift to 51 percent, 23 percent, and 26 percent, respectively."

A quotation from an editorial in The Locomotive Engineers' Journal for January, 1954, should help to bring home to us the horror of these preventable railroad crossing crashes. "Crashes" is the right word, for they can hardly be called "accidents."

The editorial, urging careful driving, says in part: "When a car suddenly looms in front of his locomotive, the engineer is just as shocked and horrified as are the occupants of the car. After the crash, when he goes back and views the mangled bodies of the victims, he has a feeling of utter helplessness as he realizes that there was nothing he could have done to prevent the accident—as he could not steer his train around the impending danger nor could he stop in time to avoid the crash. Some engineers have been so unfortunate as to experience this ordeal many times. Naturally, these highly-skilled and responsible workers do not want to 'take' this kind of shock time day: and only 28 years after the signing of the "Declaration of Independence." Her sons, Harry and Edgar and their families are well known members of our Winchester Church.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

and time again! One engineer came in off his run looking haggard. An automobile had collided with his train at a grade crossing. The crash resulted in the death of a mother, father and several children; an entire family had been wiped out! He was visibly upset over the accident and wanted to lay off. He wanted to get away from the only type of work for which he was trained. His co-workers urged him not to do so. They advised him that this was the worst possible thing he could do. They reminded him that he was not responsible in any way for the accident nor was there anything he could have done to prevent it. They told him he was indeed fortunate that part of the wrecked auto had not gone under the wheels of his engine, upsetting it and endangering his own life. This occurs frequently, and has resulted in the death or injury of many engineers.

"This engineer decided to stay on the job. On his next trip, he again had the horrifying experience of another family-laden automobile colliding with his train, and with the same fatal results. This is an ordeal that locomotive engineers should not be subjected to, and especially at such frequent intervals as of late."

Ashland, Va.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

(Continued from page 13.)

exhilaration of the touch of Jesus upon your life? Let us, with all the earnestness born of God and man, examine ourselves today.

Perhaps, we need again to come to the Master in humility of spirit that it may be said of us again, "And Jesus . . . touched him." For it is only through the touch of Jesus that healing is administered in your life and mine.

Today as we come to Holy Communion and as you approach this sacred altar, may I suggest that as you kneel to receive these Holy elements of bread and wine, you confess to Christ your need. Ask him to touch your life again so that it may have renewed purpose and renewed meaning. That you may know the truth—the truth that sets the souls of men free. In this spirit I urge you to approach the chancel.

For this can be a memorable hour for you; when, without reservation, it can be said, "And Jesus . . . touched him."

The Inoffensiveness of Our Discipleship

By REV. RICHARD K. MORTON, Ed. D., Jacksonville, Florida

Christian faith and life appear at times to many as rather mild and ineffective. So often a situation arises in which mildness, compromise and timidity seem to clothe the individual representing the Christian view.

This is no argument for belligerence, discourtesy or wilful offensiveness. My plea simply seeks to remind us that under certain circumstances, the inoffensiveness of our preaching, our ministry, our daily testimony and work as laymen or clergy is a serious rebuke.

Most of us are familiar with the Christian's reluctance to cause offense within a church, or to create disturbance in civic affairs. Few enjoy being a cause of controversy, disturbance and division. Carrying this policy of mildness too far, however, has sometimes brought the Christian scorn and rejection—and has enabled many an evil cause to continue to operate.

Because of the very tentativeness and timidity of our entire Christian witness, we have made Christianity an offense to many. We are reluctant to mix in a fight for righteousness. It is so annoying and inconvenient to have to take the offensive. Why can't all people desire peace and quiet and conformity, and worship and think and act the way we do?

Our discipleship for Christ requires courageous action, firm conviction, solid character, willingness to pay the price of Christian testimony and service.

Both preaching and laymen's service have to have body and character to them if they are to impress the modern world. It is definitely going to be painful, exacting and difficult for a layman to be a real Christian under many of today's circumstances. He will find many ready to ridicule and others to oppose. It will get him into many an argument. It will mean that he will offend some friends and many others.

The inoffensiveness of our discipleship is ever a rebuke, because we know that if we arouse no opposition, no cry of offense, we are probably accomplishing nothing. All around us are evils and evil-doers—and if we demonstrate real Christianity, we must necessarily offend them.

Let's put some real power and courage and character into our witnessing and into our service. Let's avoid contention and mere disputation, but be ever mindful of presenting the message God has given to us in Christ without fear or favor.

I pay my sincere tribute to the great and daily contribution of Christian laymen in myriad fields. The work laymen do is vital today. The religion of Jesus must not become clericalized nor institutionalized. The layman's influence on many occasions is greater than that of the minister.

It is the layman who must take the principles of faith into the office and the marketplace, to which the clergyman has only infrequent access. He must also believe enough in the work of Christ to provide the necessary funds to organize discipleship in such a way that man-power will be available.

People require more than theory and religious argument, if they are to accept our faith. The clergy cannot do it all. The influence of faith must go into every aspect of faith. Our laymen and laywomen must attest it in their lives.

Is our own faith and contribution unwholesomely inoffensive? Are we making timid and weak gestures where we ought to make bold moves? Is our life contribution so inoffensive that no one can tell whom we serve?

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1954

NUMBER 33

"Let There Be Light"

By F. C. LESTER

LET there be light." That is what God is reported to have said when he flung the sun, moon and stars, and the earth into their places. He was not in favor of darkness. Neither was Jesus of Nazareth. He opened up channels of truth through which light could shine. His own life was so radiant that he could say: "I am the light of the world." To the disciples who sat on the mountain-side with him, he said: "Ye are the light of the world." Christians are to be so radiant that others may see their beauty and glorify God.

Those who are the friends of God and the followers of Jesus need not fear the light of truth—any truth. In fact, they should seek for truth. They need to know when the Bible was written, by whom and why. They should welcome what those discover who delve into the ancient records and bring back to light the facts concerning the sacred writings. They need not fear to know that the Bible was written by hand in parchment in language far different from ours, centuries before the art of modern printing was known. If some mistakes were made by some ancient copyist, what matters? Perhaps the man who wrote originally did not know all the mind of God, and certainly those who read today do not get the full meaning of all that is said in the Good Book. When the light of centuries is turned onto the Scriptures, they glisten all the brighter, with a divine radiance that is a light unto the pathway of those who would follow God.

In every field of thought and endeavor light is invaluable. Without it we stumble and fall. With it we see the way that leads to successful living. In the darkness of ignorance and the shadows of half-truth we cannot do our best. We need the light of complete revelation in order to be at our best. Those who would insist that training for the ministry and for teaching in the church is dangerous are simply "whispering in the dark" with the hope of keeping you in their company. Believe it or not. Just as God said in the beginning: "Let there be light"; so he is saying to his Church in this tragic day. It is not God who wants us to be ignorant or blind. He wants us to walk in the light with a steady assurance that our light comes from him and leads to him. Turn on the light in your home, in your church, in your business, in your play, in your politics, and in the deep recesses of your own heart, and God will love you.

News Flashes

Dr. Henry E. Robinson of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., is attending the World Council of Churches in Evanston, Illinois.

Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, the new president of Franklinton Center, located at Bricks, North Carolina, began his work at this new institution on August 1. Dr. and Mrs. Sanderson's address is now Bricks, N. C.

Mrs. F. C. Lester, the editor of the Woman's Page is in Winter Park, Florida on business and pleasure. The managing editor still remembers with pleasure the wonderful oranges that Emily Carleton gave him on that first trip to Winter Park.

Rev. Howard P. Bozarth and his family left Elon College on August 20 for Yanktown, South Dakota, where Mr. Bozarth will be Professor of Religion at Yankton College. Mr. Bozarth has been pastor of the Elon College Community Church for the past four years, where he has had a successful ministry and where he has made many friends. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Bozarth and their family godspeed.

Supt. Wm. T. Scott and Dr. Henry E. Robinson conducted a preaching mission at the First Congregational Church, Hendersonville, N. C., the week of August 8. They report excellent attendance and growing interest in this new work. The church has recently bought a beautiful new site and expects to move their building to it in the near future and make an addition to the church. Dr. C. M. Heymann, pastor, and his people are doing good work.

Wednesday, August 18, was "Congregational Christian Church Day" at the Bible Conference now in session at Massanetta Springs. Dr. I. W. Johnson, who has attended 25 sessions of this Bible Conference, presided over the day's activities. Ministers present for the day besides Dr. Johnson, were Dr. John G. Truitt, Supt. Wm. T. Scott, Rev. Henry V. Harman, Rev. Guy Veazey, Rev. R. E. Newton and Rev. E. J. Rohart, besides a large group of lay people from our churches. Dr. Harold J. Ockenega of Park Street Congregational Church, Boston, was one of the principal speakers.

Supt. Wm. T. Scott, who as in charge of THE SUN's subscription list, reports: "We have been gratified at the increasing number of churches subscribing to THE CHRISTIAN SUN on the group subscription plan. This plan, as you know, provides for a church to get a special $2 per year rate per subscription, provided the church secures subscriptions from at least onehalf of its families. It is important that churches observe this rule of 50 per cent of their families. Church families include any who are on the active role of the church. This bargain rate is made possible only because a larger number of papers may be printed at a more reasonable rate. The Board of Publications will not be able to grant a group subscription rate to churches that do not send in at least 50 per cent of their families as presented on their church role.

Sophia Laymen at Work on Lord's Acre Project

Sophia Laymen Observe Workday on Lord's Acre Project

Back in early May, the Laymen of the Sophia Church decided to carry on the Lord's Acre Project this year to raise money for the building fund. One of our laymen offered to donate the use of eleven acres of ground that he had already broken for planting, and it was decided to plant it in corn.

On Saturday, May 8, a group of laymen met at the field to prepare the land for planting. There were four tractors with tillers and barrows, and one tractor with a two row corn planter. A light shower the night before made the ground work nicely. Several laymen were present to help grub sprouts and remove loose rock from the field.

The fertilizer and seed corn were purchased from an FCX store at a good discount.

(Continued on page 15.)

Mount Olivet (Greene) Reports on Summer's Activities

A number of events have occurred at our Mount Olivet Church, Greene County, Virginia, that we feel are of interest to SUN readers. Back in April our church was host for the first time to the community Good Friday service, celebrating the "Seven Last Words of the Cross" in three hours. Of the six pastors taking part, one was Episcopal, one Methodist, two Church of the Brethren, together with Rev. Ralph Galt of New Market, and our own pastor. We were pleased with the good turn out and particularly by the large proportion who stayed for most of the service.

At this service and others, visitors have commented on the simple beauty of our new church arrangement with its divided chancel and picture window of Christ in Gethsemane. This

(Continued on page 15.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

New National Chairman

At the meeting of the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship in connection with the General Council Meeting in New Haven, Har- old E. Wahlberg, of Santa Ana, California, was elected national chairman for 1954-56. He sends the following greetings:

"Inspired by the thousands of Congregational Christian laymen through out this land who are recognizing more and more their place of devotion and active stewardship in the total program of the church, I have accepted your invitation and call to head the Laymen's Fellowship for the next biennium.

"Your representatives assembled here in General Council at Yale University have pledged anew their commitment to consecrated Christian stewardship in terms of talents, time and all things that God has endowed us with.

"With faith in the power of prayer and confidence in ourselves as co-workers with Christ, Christian laymen can set into motion tremendous latent powers that can transform a state of confusion to a world of peace, and order and benevolence. Shoulder to shoulder with our pastors, let's go —'Onward, Christian Soldiers'."

HAROLD E. WAHLBERG,
National Chairman.

Other officers elected for this biennium include Vice Chairman Lynn Sheldon, of Spring Valley, Minnesota, and Secretary Herman Cook, of Lanett, Alabama. Fred Richards, the retiring national chairman, was elected to the Executive Committee.

Rhee Sees Faith More Powerful Than H-Bomb

Faith in God is a more powerful weapon than the H-bomb, President Sygman Rhee of South Korea said in a talk delivered from the pulpit of Foundry Methodist Church in Washington, D. C.

The 79-year-old Korean leader joined the Foundry Methodist congregation nearly half a century ago during the early years of his exile from Korea—which ended with its liberation in 1945. As he spoke, Dr. Frederiek Brown Harris, chaplain of the USA Senate and Dr. Rhee's friend and spiritual advisor, was at his side.

"Many people say that if we try to drive the communist force of 1,000,000 men from North Korea it will mean World War III," Dr. Rhee said. "They speak of the terrible atomic and hydrogen bombs which will destroy civilization itself in a few moments. Yes, it is terrible. But to them I say that we have something more powerful than the H-bomb—we have God with us leading us by the hand through crisis. I know God will not tell us what we are doing is wrong. He is the God not only of love but of righteousness. I know we are right."

Senate Majority Leader William F. Knowland (R-Calif.) sat in a pew with President and Mrs. Rhee during the service which also was attended by General James A. Van Fleet, former Eighth Army commander in Korea.—Action.

Notice of Meeting

The Committee of the Ministry of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches is called to meet at Elon College, N. C., in the Library Building, Monday, September 13, 1954, at 1:30 p. m. Those who have business with the committee are requested to be present during the afternoon.

STANLEY C. HARRELL,
Chairman.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Specialists in Church Work

The specialist that we are considering is the average lay member of the local church, and not the highly trained specialist who is working as a field secretary or as an employed member of the local church staff. It is the ordinary garden variety of church member that should have a specific task in the church program.

Church membership should mean infinitely more than attending the stated services of worship and supporting the financial program of the church. Too many church members are suffering from an inferiority complex. They do not consider themselves equipped to do important work in the church, and as they look back over years of church membership, their contribution seems so pitifully small.

Every church member has some special gift or ability that can be used to excellent advantage in the work of the church. Not to use for God, a gift which he has given and which is needed in his church, is a sin. Spiritual growth generally is the result of faithful consecration of time and talent to the advancement of the Kingdom.

The person who is blessed with ability in music can use that talent for the inspiration and edification of the entire church. The deepest experiences of the Christian life and the highest aspirations of the soul can best be expressed in music. A worshipping church is always a singing church. There ought to be in every church an individual, or a group of individuals, who study, plan and work to develop good church music. Such specialists can render significant spiritual service.

Every church is faced with a difficult problem to secure effective teachers for the church school. Much has been said about the importance of trained teachers, so much in fact, that most church members feel that if they are not college graduates they should not consider accepting a position as teacher in the church school. We would not disparage the importance of academic training, but that is not the most important qualification for a teacher in a church school.

If a person knows Jesus Christ as his Saviour and as the Lord of his life, he has the first qualification for a church school teacher. If to that is added a genuine love for people and a desire to help them in a vital way, there is no reason why he cannot learn to be an effective teacher. A lot of hard study and work will be required, but it will be richly rewarding. The best way to learn is to try to teach. It is a challenging opportunity to the individual who would be a real servant of Christ.

Another phase of church work which sorely needs attention is that of church finance. More is involved in church finance than the raising of money. The first question that needs to be faced is how much money a local church needs to underwrite the program which it should be conducting, what is the financial ability of the church, and how should the money which the church receives be spent and accounted for. These are important questions.

Money is an important issue in the life of every person. It is necessary in the work of the church. There are people in every church who have ability in the realm of finance. They know how to acquire money and they know how to use it wisely. Every church needs consecrated financial ability. The person who has such ability should consider the opportunity to become a specialist in church finance. He can render valuable service to the church. He may also find an effective antidote against the danger of "the love of money."

Every Christian ought to become a specialist in the use of Christian love. By that is meant putting into daily contacts a spirit of friendliness and sympathy which will help the person who is walking a difficult path. A certain woman accepted a responsibility which involved going into certain homes of the church. It might have been accepted as a routine task and have been done in a perfunctory way; but the way in which she did it, her visits became spiritual ministrations.

It is to be added that the works of the specialist must always be kept in the proper relationship to the entire program of the church. If the specialist gets the idea that he is the only one in the church whose work is worthwhile, his usefulness is minimized. To appraise any task correctly, it must be seen as a part of the total program.

One in Christ, Yet Divided

By RALPH DOUGLAS HYSLOP

There are 161 Churches which proclaim, through their membership in the World Council of Churches, that they desire to work together at tasks which are theirs by virtue of their common loyalty to Christ. A resolution on "the Authority of the Council," adopted at the first Assembly in Amsterdam, expresses the desire of the council "to serve the churches, which are its constituent members, as an instrument whereby they may bear witness together to their common allegiance to Jesus Christ and cooperate in matters requiring united action." The unity of the churches, then, consists in a common allegiance to Christ giving rise to a common witness and duties which can better be discharged by being shared. Is this all? Is the unity felt and expressed by our churches something which we conceive to be a fact, its manifestation a work of our resolve, a product of our planning? The answer is unequivocal, as stated in the same resolution: "The World Council of Churches is composed of churches that acknowledge Jesus Christ as God and Saviour. They find their unity in him. They have not to create their unity; it is the gift of God."

The Gift and the Quest.

A unity which is the gift of God in Christ to churches that acknowledge him as God and Saviour, a unity which is indestructible because God is one and Christ is not divided—this is our precious possession by the Grace of God. Yet we speak of another unity, a kind of cooperation in good works, a recognition of identity of interest and of effort. Surely there is contradiction here. If we are one in Christ, why must we take thought together to unite our witness and our work? If we possess a unity that has not to be created, why are we putting forth energy in varied enterprises to "further our unity." It would appear that the World Council of Churches is itself such an enterprise, and the Evanston Assembly in all its aspects a massive effort in the realm of creating Christian unity.

Further contradictions appear when we consider the careful limitation of the authority of the World Council of Churches. Its Central Committee in 1950, in Toronto, sent to the churches a statement dealing with its character and the relationship of the churches to it. These are a few of the important sentences:

"The World Council of Churches is not and must never become a Super Church."

"The purpose of the World Council of Churches is not to negotiate unions between churches."

"Membership in the World Council of Churches does not imply that a church treats its own conception of the Church as merely relative."

"... membership does not imply that each church must regard the other member churches as Churches in the true and full sense of the word."

Perhaps we begin now to understand the complexity of our situation in regard to unity. We are all one in Christ and need not create that unity which is a gift of God. We must, however, seek to manifest our unity in common witness. As we join for this purpose in a World Council of Churches, we are careful to point out that we surrender none of our autonomy as churches. We voice a strong desire for more visible unity, but give up none of our sovereign right to remain separate churches. While preserving from all moderation our own claim to be the true Church, we give no promise to accord recognition to the claim made by other churches.

We should all feel that such a description of our state, if given by an unsympathetic observer, approached caricature. We could not, on the basis of the evidence, deny any specific statement made, but we would insist that the whole picture is out of focus. How can we bring it into focus? How can we understand rightly the God-given unity which is ours in spite of our divisions? How may we at one and the same time confess our sins in this matter and cause our repentance to bear worthy fruit in a new resolve to manifest in the life of our churches the oneness in Christ that is the sure mark of the Christian Church?

Oneness in Christ.

Our first resolve must be to apprehend fully the meaning of the statement just made, that oneness in Christ is the sure mark of the Christian Church. Do we believe this? Are we ready to consider the consequences of such a belief? Let us understand at once that this means that there is no Church at all apart from Christ. Our membership is not only in organized churches whose life and character depend upon human decisions taken in response to certain events in history. We are members of Christ's Body, and the events in history which are decisive for us are his Incarnation, Crucifixion, Resurrection and Return in glory. In the Incarnation, Christ the eternal Son of God assumed a body through which he is one with man, and through which he is given to be the Head over all men and things. Through this Body, he gathers all who believe in him into one Body with him. In his Crucifixion, this oneness of Christ with us is consummated, for he became bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh that through the sacrifice of himself for us he might destroy our body of sin and death. Through his Resurrection in body from the dead, and by the gift of the quickening Spirit, the Church is made to be One Body and One Spirit with him. Because the oneness of the Church is grounded in Christ who ascended to the right hand of God the Father, its full manifestation awaits the day of Christ's Return to meet his Church and complete his work of redemption and judgment.

Yet it is forever true that Christ and his Church are one and indivisible. There can no more be a number of churches than there can be a number of Christs, of incarnations, crucifixions or Holy Spirits. The Church is one as Christ is one.

Division Is Denial.

One in Christ, yet divided as churches: this is the distressing fact. It is impossible in the eyes of faith for the Body of Christ to suffer divisions. Yet the impossible has happened. The separated denominations are called "Churches," and disputes arise as to which have the right so to be called. Worse, these divisions estrange Christians from one another, hinder the practice of love, weaken the preaching of the gospel to the world.

Diversity of Christian thought and practice is not our problem, but the scandal of sinful division is. Here we are faced with the two deep mysteries: of freedom and of sin. By freely chosen actions, taken in faith and with good intentions, men have tried to edify the Church. But because of their involvement along with all persons in the terrible enigma of sin, they have inadvertently caused and perpetuated divisions among Christians.

Probably there were no alternatives possible for divisive actions which were taken. It does no good to deprecate our predecessors in the faith. What is important is that we see our divisions under the judgment of the Cross of Christ. We may live with Christ as One Body only as we deny ourselves and take up his Cross as our own. We must begin to look at divisions as denials of that unity in Christ which is the mark of the Church's reality.

A number of consequences follow. We begin to think of these divisions with a repentance which demands costly action by ourselves rather than by others. We renounce our own claims and ask Christ to take control of the church which is his, healing our divisions as he alone can. We begin to discern in others the One Body of Christ of which we are all members, and to bear witness together with them to him who has already overcome our divisions.

Action in Obedience.

Acknowledging Christ as our One Lord and our divisions as a denial of his Lordship, we are impelled to act in obedience to our faith. This means re-examination of the position taken by our own church. How do we understand ourselves to be the Church of Jesus Christ? By what criteria do we measure the claims of other bodies? Are these claims for our own church and tests of the claims of others immutable, or are they subject to change, or at least new interpretation? It is often claimed that these are matters for the clergy alone to consider, but can it be said that the unity of the Church of Christ is no concern of the members?

There is more to action than a careful study of the position of one's own church, important as this is. Perhaps the time has come, as the Conference on Faith and Order at Lund, in 1942, suggested, when the churches must ask themselves "whether they should not act together in all matters except those in which deep differences compel them to act separately." The consequences of this decision, if it were taken by all churches, might well be further discovery of the extent of the realm in which practical unity already exists. It would surely result in sobering realism of the depth citing week-end since the Japanese came through Malaya and conquered Singapore.

(Continued on page 8)

Mrs. Sloan and I once slept in our car with a military guard marching past all night. I once gave a Memorial Day address surrounded by a guard of former service men, because a fanatic had threatened to "get" me while I spoke, but this is the first time I ever preached a sermon with fully-armed soldiers surrounding the church.

The church I helped dedicate was a beautiful little building presented to a group of Tamil Indian laborers by the Dunlop Rubber Company. The songs and scripture were in Tamil, and my sermon was translated into Tamil. A number of the women wore beautiful, delicate saris. The clergy, including the American preacher, sweltered in coats and clerical collars. The babies were the most comfortably dressed of all, for they did not wear clothes.

Then came an invitation to drive forty miles further, to the city of Malacca to preach to an English-speaking Chinese church that night. The building is one of the most beautiful ones I have ever seen.

Monday morning, I was the chapel speaker at a Chinese school of more than a thousand students. The element of suspense was not absent at Malacca either, for a student who had sung in the church choir the night before and whose father was a teacher in the school, had been a passenger in the Singapore-Hongkong plane shot down the day before by Chinese Communists. The prayers for the boy, whether dead or alive, were impressive. He proved to be one of those lost.

Still another privilege came to me on Monday afternoon. An elderly Christian woman had died on Friday night. She was buried Saturday. On Sunday morning, her Buddhist son and daughter and their families came to church and asked that a Christian prayer-meeting be held in the daughter's home Monday afternoon. I went with a number of native Christians and took part in the service, which was Christian missions at the grass roots.

Monday night we flew back to Singapore, and the next morning flew eighteen hundred miles to Colombo, Ceylon, and to more adventures. Our week-end at Singapore, scheduled to be a rest period, had proved to be extremely interesting.

W. W. SLOAN.

The Sloanas Stop Over in Singapore

Shooting affairs do not promote the quiet we expected to find in Singapore. Singapore is a great commercial city. Mrs. Sloan and I had visited it in 1938. After Portland, Oregon, it is the first place we have touched on this trip that we had ever seen before. We had no particular interest in it except that our plane connections called for a stop-over there from Saturday afternoon till early Tuesday morning. We planned to get some rest there between two strenuous parts of our journey.

However, Singapore proved much more interesting than we had expected. After we left home, we received a letter asking us to look up the Methodist district superintendent there, so we sent him a note from Australia. In Djakarta, Indonesia, we received a note from him asking me to deliver the dedication sermon for a new church building one hundred and sixty miles north of Singapore.

When we arrived at Singapore, we were warned that from time to time, ninety foreigners had been killed by Communists in the Malay region we should have to pass through, and were given an opportunity to decline the invitation. This was a challenge which we could not turn down. We learned later that a government officer was killed along our route on Saturday. We left the city before daylight. Less than an hour after we drove through one palm oil estate, the manager and a British officer were killed by twenty Communist guerillas. A bit later in the day four Communist terrorists were killed by the army in territory we had just passed through. It was the most ex-

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Elon College Summer Commencement

"You must be prepared to walk the path of courage," said Dr. Henry E. Ribinson, the pastor of Burlington's First Congregational Christian Church, as he addressed members of the graduating class at Elon College's annual summer commencement, held in Whitley Auditorium on the college campus on last Friday evening, August 20.

Holding up Jesus as the model whom the graduates should follow, Dr. Robinson pointed to the momentous decisions that Christ had to make during his life upon the earth, and he assured the graduates that they would also find many moments of decision in their own lives after leaving the Elon campus and entering upon their life work.

He pointed to the courage shown by Jesus in his decisions, and he urged Elon's summer seniors to cultivate the courage necessary to make the right decisions. He also held up Jesus as a man of compassion and named that quality as one the graduating seniors will need in their contacts with their fellow men.

One of the largest crowds ever to attend a summer commencement on the Elon campus braved showers to attend the program, which was opened with the invocation by the Rev. Dwight O. Jackson, pastor of the Haw River Congregational Christian Church.

Dr. Leon E. Smith, Elon's president, conferred the degrees upon the seniors and presented them with their diplomas. Bibles were presented to the graduates by Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Elon Christian Orphanage.

In closing the program President Smith, in delivering the charge to the graduating class, congratulated the seniors upon attaining a goal and passing a milestone in preparation for life, but he warned them that they were going out into a world torn by strife and conflicting ideologies, and he urged them to go out into that world with a sustaining faith in God, faith in their fellow men, faith in themselves and faith in the world itself.

The twenty-six seniors who received degrees and diplomas at the concluding exercises of Elon's 1954 summer session included the following:

Richard Bailey, Fred Darlington, Robert Hayes, James Hines, William Layton, Sara Murr, Donald Pennington, Elwood Ray, Fred Rice, Edward Robertson and Bowman Small, all of Burlington, N. C.; Allen Crawford and Edwin Hayes, of Graham, N. C.; Octavia Rumley and Thomas Wright, of Elon College. Peggy Blakeley, Cornelius, N. C.; Winfred Bray, Randleman, N. C.; Nat Burwell, Oxford, N. C.; Morisa Caussade, Arroyo, Puerto Rico; Jack Holt, Draper, N. C.; Ethel Knight, Roxboro, N. C.; Gene Laughlin, Greensboro, N. C.; Grace Matthews, Meredithville, Va.; Lawrence Nightlinger, Wildwood, N. J.; Michael Rauseo, East Boston, Mass.; and William Thompson, Raleigh, N. C.

L. N. BYRD.

* * * * *

Did You Know?

Did you know that Tuesday, September 7, Elon College, our college, will begin its sixty-fourth annual session? For sixty-four consecutive years Elon College has opened its doors to ambitious young people who are seeking a college education.

Did you know that the first year of operation in 1890-91, there were sixty-eight students enrolled, and there were the president, Dr. W. S. Long, and six members of the faculty; that for this first session of the college, there were only two buildings on the campus—the administration building that housed all the college facilities and East Dormitory for girls. The administration building was destroyed by fire, January 17, 1923. Old East is still standing, and is the only original building on the campus.

Did you know that on the opening day of school in September, 1932, there were only eighty-six students who matriculated? Others came in later. In January, 1933, Atlantic University at Virginia Beach closed, and thirty-six of the students enrolled there transferred to Elon College. Dr. William Moseley Brown was the president of Atlantic University. Dr. Brown is now teaching at Elon College. With these Atlantic University students and others, the total enrollment for the year 1932-33 was approximately two hundred twenty-five. A very large percentage of these students were given some financial assistance in the form of scholarship aid to induce them to enroll in Elon College. Student charges then ran from $350 to $475 for the entire college year.

Did you know that the records of the Admission Office reveal that at this writing, August 18, there are 311 first-year students applying for admission in advance of the opening on September 7. Normally this would mean that unless some unfortunate happening occurs, that Elon College will begin this, the 64th year of operation, with between seven and eight hundred students. These students come from good homes, from good high schools, and bring with them good scholastic records.

This fine student body will be instructed by a faculty of 44 men and women who are specialists in their respective fields. Indeed, the outlook for the ensuing year at our college is most encouraging. Now is the time, however, for all of our ministers, Sunday school workers, church members and friends to speak to our own church young people and urge them to attend our college. Your help is solicited and will be appreciated.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

There is a magazine that comes to my desk monthly titled Think. It is an attractive magazine and usually is filled with interesting articles on timely topics. The other day, I walked into an important office, and there hung on the wall a neatly framed card in a conspicuous place with a single word in bold type, "Think." Thinking means to consider, to believe, to conceive as possible, to purpose.

As we face the problems and causes of our church, it probably would be helpful if we would stop and think of the relative value of the various interests and causes of our church; not that which is most emotional or most appealing, but that which is the most necessary to the total program of the church; that which is most constructive and capable of making the most valuable contributions to the ongoing of the church.

If, when we turn to the serious business, and I should say spiritual (Continued on page 11.)

Missions at Home and Abroad

Freedom and Democracy in Africa Through the Church

By JOHN REULING,
Secretary for Africa.

African students frequently demonstrate a real sense of responsibility for their fellow Africans. When two successive tornadoes destroyed large slum areas near Johannesburg recently, 50 students and 6 faculty members of Adams College (American Board), 400 miles away, volunteered to give their entire Christmas vacation to assist in erecting new and better homes for some of the displaced victims of the tornadoes.

* * *

In many parts of Africa the Africans have very few political rights—in some parts none at all. In certain areas such rights are being gradually whittled away. The outstanding progress that is being made in self government in certain African countries, such as the Gold Coast, makes it certain that in time to come Africans in other parts of Africa will win their freedom, whether by force and revolution or by peaceful constitutional means yet remains to be seen. The best, and in some cases almost the only training for future participation in a democratic state is in the Christian Church. To an increasing degree the Protestant churches of Africa are self governing, on democratic principles. Hundreds of thousands of Africans are acquiring a knowledge of democratic procedure through their churches.

* * *

Kenneth Brooks Dube, son of a Rhodesian pastor and the first student from the area of our Rhodesia Mission to study overseas, writes from London where he is taking university work: "Here in London focus is on the trouble in Africa. We are all concerned over what is happening in that part of the world. Though this world grows smaller and distances melt down, it appears that the distances from man to man and nation to nation grow to a terrible length. There are units of an ideological and political character which want to excluded millions of men and women who cannot conform to a particular line. The Christian Church, which is a fellowship not confined nor bound to any unit of this earth is facing a great challenge. Christ is our Saviour and Lord of us all. He alone can save us from the spiky iron and chain of man's ideologies." From many other sources there comes positive confirmation that Africans of education, ability and responsibility recognize the potentialities of the Christian Church, not only for helping them in their own particular difficulties, but for the world as a whole.

* * *

The American Board Missions have pioneered in giving African leaders responsibility, sometimes very difficult to do in a color conscious land where those in authority are unable to credit non-whites with having ordinary human ability. In a number of instances successful carrying of the responsibility has been a lesson to doubters and has opened doors of opportunity to many other Africans. An outstanding example is the case of Z. K. Mathews, a full-blooded African. In 1927, the American Board Mission in South Africa appointed him as principal of the Adams High School, over the objections of many who said the position was beyond the abilities of any African. Mathews made an outstanding success of the job, went on from there to become professor and later department head at the South African College (of university grade), and during the 1952-53 school year was Henry Luce visiting professor at Union Theological Seminary in New York. Encouraged by the American Board success, other missions and then the government itself began to appoint Africans to important educational administrative positions, and today African principals and headmasters are not at all unusual. — American Board News Bulletin.

* * * * *

The non-whites outnumber whites 4 to 1 in South Africa. Though in the majority, these non-whites are almost without voice in the government. They are free to establish homes on reservations which occupy one-seventh of the land. Such reserves are so over-crowded that it is impossible for the black African to get an adequate living from the poor eroded soil. Many are forced to seek a livelihood as laborers on the six-sevenths of the land owned and controlled by the white man. To a large extent the black African is uneducated, undernourished, housed in shanty ghettos outside the white man's cities, deprived of the right to freely choose his occupation and very frequently coerced to work on the white man's farms and in his mines at less than one-sixth of the wages paid to white workers.—Ray Phillips, American Board Missionary.

ONE IN CHRIST, YET DIVIDED.

(Continued from page 6.)

and seriousness of the differences which remain. Would not both discoveries have great significance? Because we have not acted where we are one, we have not known our unity. Until we face honestly the fact that there are those things which prevent common action, we are not likely to submit them to the judgment of the Christ who gave his life that his Church might be One and the world might believe.

In the fifteen years from 1937 to 1952, there were 13 achievements of complete organic union of denominations and sixteen progressing negotiations with a view to organic union. In this period, the relationship of churches, which had been informal ones in the ecumenical movement, issued in the mutual covenant of the World Council of Churches adopted at Amsterdam. Councils of churches, both local and national, have greatly increased in number. Perhaps most important of all, both the discussion of our differences and the affirmations of our unity have found their place in a new context. Looking to the Lord of the Church, we know that it is only in obedience to him in our mission, ministry and worship that we shall, in all our congregations, manifest the power and unity of the Church of Jesus Christ.—A Study Guide to Evanston.

Chaplain in Japan

The many friends of Chaplain Johnson L. Griffin will be interested to know that he is now on duty in Japan. He is located at Hokkiado. His address is: Chaplain (Capt.) Johnson L. Griffin, Hdq. 8th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division, APO 201, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, Calif.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Meet Miss Foltz

A Virginia girl who is making good in Florida is Dorothy Foltz from Luray, for the past year the director of Religious Education at our church in Winter Park.

Originally a member of the Leaks-ville Church, Dorothy went to Elon College, where she graduated in 1946.

Following three years of science teaching in the Valley, she became associate in Religious Education at the Elon College Church during the tenure of Dr. Jesse H. Dollar as pastor. She held a similar position in the First Christian Church of Burlington for one year.

Realizing the need of further training if she made religious education her career, Dorothy went to Hartford Seminary in the fall of '51, getting her Master of Arts degree in Religious Education in 1953.

That spring the Winter Park Church was looking for a director of Religious Education. Pattie Lee Coghill suggested Dorothy Foltz. They contacted her, and flew her down from Hartford for an interview. They liked her, she liked the situation, and last September she began work in Florida.

The year has been a very profitable one for the church, and fine experience for Dorothy. This fall a week-day kindergarten is being planned as a new phase of the church's service to the community. The pastor of the church is Dr. Louis Schultz, who is teaching at Piedmont College in Georgia during his summer vacation.

Miss Foltz has prepared the following article especially for use on this page.

* * * * *

Parents Are Valuable in a Religious Education Program

By DOROTHY FOLTZ.

The engagement of parents in the program of Religious Education is of utmost importance in planning a successful program in a local church. The parents that are asked to work on a committee with the teachers of their children immediately become part of the Church School program and learn to interpret the program to themselves and to other parents.

Often parents will respond to a request for their help with a specific piece of work, while they will ignore a general request for assistance.

Listed below are suggestions of ways in which parents may help:

1. Teaching in the church school, helping with nursery groups during church, acting as sponsors of youth groups.
2. Helping children at home: by work on specific assignments such as reading, memorizing, rehearsing part in worship services or drama, collecting or making something for service project.
3. Helping in activity program of church school: using parents with special skills or interests.
4. Drama: taking responsibilities for directing, scenery, lighting, costumes, make-up.
5. Cooking: suppers for teachers, parents, family night; helping children make cookies as gifts.
6. Equipment: painting walls or furniture; mending toys, chairs, tables; making equipment.
7. Church school library: keeping records of books, study of new books to be added, contributing new books.
8. Office: keeping records, mimeographing, folding and mailing.
9. Telephoning: helping teachers to call other parents.
10. Transportation: driving young people or children on trips, to conferences, to church.
11. Writing and editing: monthly bulletin to parents, prepared by a group of parents.
12. Service activities in cooperation with youth: sorting, packing, mailing, of used clothing or of other gifts brought by children.

* * * * *

Women of Henderson Church Report Successful Year

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Henderson Congregational Christian Church has had another very successful year in missionary work under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Edwin W. Langston.

All of our programs have been interesting and inspiring, and have meant a great deal to all of us.

This year we organized a new circle of young married women. They have done a wonderful year's work, and have inspired all of us to be more willing to put forth that extra effort for the Lord's work.

One of the highlights of the year's work was the presentation of our home mission book, "Within These Borders." We invited the members of all societies in our district to come and meet with us, and were happy and proud to have one of our own members, Mrs. Julian Pernell, present the book in the most interesting and inspiring manner. Following the meeting, the group adjourned to the Ladies' Parlor of the church, where a delightful social hour was enjoyed.

This year, our main community project has been to work with the young people of our church. In order to encourage them and to uphold them in the fine work they are doing in our church, the missionary circles prepare supper for the groups from our church and from Liberty Vance Christian Church every other month. Liberty Vance, in turn, invites our young people to supper at their church.

As we come to the close of another year's work, we are already looking forward to next year, and are hoping and praying that, under God's leadership, we may go forward in the work of bringing God's Kingdom here on earth.

MRS. VICTOR L. LANGSTON,
Secretary.

Out of Great Tribulation

No words can express how much the world owes to sorrow. Most of the Psalms were born in a wilderness. Most of Epistles were written in a prison. The greatest thoughts of the greatest thinkers have all passed through fire. The greatest poets have "learned in suffering what they taught in song." In bonds Bunyan lived the allegory that he afterwards indited, and we may thank Bedford Jail for the "Pilgrim's Progress." Take comfort, afflicted Christian! When God is about to make preeminent use of a man, he puts him in the fire.—Macdonald.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

As summer draws to a close we prepare to go home. We like Elon very much and enjoy our time here.

There are many interesting people here and many people about whom we could write, but there is one, who has done much for us, and we want to tell you about her.

Every school and college must have a library. Elon is no exception. The Carlton family gave the money for the one on the Elon campus and it is a very good one.

Libraries are wonderful places, they have thousands of books, many magazines, papers, index books, reference books, dictionaries, and records. They have a smell unlike any other place too—leather, past, paper and just a “book smell.”

Mrs. Oma Johnson is Elon's librarian. She is an active gardener, and probably has the most worked over lawn in town, is active in the church, and is the keeper of much of our church history. The other day we were in her office and saw some of the things she is preserving. The object that claimed the most attention was the bell lying on the floor of Mrs. Johnson's office. She said it was the one on the original college at Graham, it was at Elon, then at Franklinton at our church, next at a negro church, and not too long ago the Rev. Emory Carter had claimed it and returned it to the college. There it was, small but sturdy, an object of much interest.

Mrs. Johnson lets us in the stacks. The stacks are the rows of shelves on which the books are stored. When one wants a book, he goes to the file to see which books are in and which may be had, then a librarian or helper goes into the stacks and finds the book that is wanted. But going in the stacks alone is fascinating. There are books in foreign languages, books about religion (some of my husband's are here), books about marriage, music, art, and every kind of subject. Some must be very good, and some must be bad, but there they are—row on row.

Little steps lean against the shelves so that one may reach the highest shelf. Plants grow in the windows, adding beauty to the room. They belong to Mrs. Johnson. She has charge of a vast and important domain. Without her, the student would suffer, because he must read to learn and often needs help in finding the books he needs.

In the summer Mrs. Johnson has one helper, but in the winter she has several. We appreciate the fine work she is doing in Elon's library and the fine work she is doing for our convention in taking and caring for papers, letters, articles and items of historical value. Here's a tribute and salute to Librarian Johnson—long may she reign over the stacks and the books!

* * * * *

Teaching Telephone Courtesy

By IDA M. HALIBURTON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I could hear the receiver being removed, and the short breath of a child indicated that I had an audience at the number I had called, so, after waiting a moment, I asked, “Is this Mrs. T. A. Brown's residence?”

“Uh, uh.”

The response might have meant “yes” or “no,” but it had an affirmative sound, so I asked, “Is she at home?”

“Uh, uh.”

The versatile expression seemed to mean “no” this time, but I wasn't sure, so I asked, “May I speak to her, please?”

“She is not home,” was the reply.

“When will she be at home?” I pushed the question firmly.

“I don't know,” was the unconcerned answer.

“May I speak to your daddy? You are Tommy, aren't you?”

“Yah.”

Evidently he was thinking seriously on the matter of being Tommy, for he made no move to tell me that Daddy was not at home. I tried again. “Is Daddy at home?”

“No,” he answered.

“I'll call later,” I said. “Good-bye,” and, “Good-bye,” he replied.

“Is this 4-3044?” asked Central of my nine-year-old grandson, who had answered the phone.

“Yes,” he replied.

“Will you accept a call from—?” naming his mother, who was visiting almost across the continent.

He readily consented, for he had been waiting for that call for an hour, but his response would have been the same had anyone else called.

The best time to teach children telephone deportment is while they are very young—still young enough to have respect for the instrument and to understand that they need to be taught how to carry on a telephone conversation intelligently. We must make them realize that it is important that they know how to do this. It is wise to make a point of teaching them to enunciate properly, especially the stock phrases, which will help them to feel at home in this method of communication.

Children should not be expected to follow a procedure of any sort satisfactorily if they have never been taught how to do it. With regard to the telephone, suppose a boy's name is John Snow. The child should be taught that when answering the telephone from home, having removed the receiver, he should say, “Mrs. Snow's residence.” After that, an appropriate stock phrase can be used, such as: “Just a moment, please,” or “I'll call her,” or “Mother is out; would you like to speak to Daddy?” or “If you will leave your number I'll ask Mother to call you.”

Before leaving the house, one should be sure to tell the child where he is going, and if he can be called there by phone. If he can, he should write down the number. There should be a pad for this purpose. We must be sure the child knows where and how to record messages. We should stress the importance of being accurate with regard to day and hour. Of course, he must be familiar with the expression, “Pardon me, will you please repeat that?” and “Thank you.”

If there are several children in a family, each should be taught telephone courtesy as soon as natural ability and education make it feasible, and no child should be allowed to use the phone alone until the lessons have been well learned. We should strive particularly hard to teach the child who is a little slower than the others to become proficient in the art. It will raise his confidence in himself, which he may sadly need, and it will create the respect of the more agile-minded members of the family, which, it often happens, he needs even more.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

"Welcome Book" Presented by American Youth

Presentation of a "Welcome Book" containing 3,600 signatures of American youth, was made to the 150 world youth representatives who met on the campus of Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Illinois, in advance of the Assembly of the World Council in nearby Evanston.

Each signature in the "Welcome Book" represented one dollar which young people of the United States and Canada contributed toward a travel fund to bring foreign youth to Evanston for the Assembly.

In behalf of the American signers of the book, Roderick French, chairman of the United Christian Youth Movement, presented the book to Philip Potter, West Indian from Haiti, chairman of the youth department of the World Council of Churches. The "Welcome Book" was a project of the United Christian Youth Movement, a youth agency of the National Council of Churches.

The presentation was made at an afternoon tea sponsored for the world youth representatives by the United Christian Youth Fellowship of Greater Chicago, a group representing 1200 Protestant churches in the Chicago area. John Noer, Jr., president of the Chicago fellowship, gave a word of welcome and introduced members of the staffs of the National Council and World Council of Churches. About 125 youth attended the tea held on the college commons.

In addition to the tea, the world youth representatives to the Assembly were guests at a lake side picnic supper August 14, and a boat ride on Lake Michigan is promised them for August 28.

The young people are attending the Assembly in two capacities—as youth consultants and as youth stewards.

The youth consultants were appointed by the World Council upon the recommendation of their churches and youth bodies from their countries. Representing 39 countries, they enjoyed, except for voting, the same privileges at the Assembly as adult delegates. The youth stewards, representing 14 countries, have acted as guides, ushers and aides during the Assembly.

In preparing for the Assembly, the young people were led by Mr. Potter and Miss Jean Fraser of England, the director of the youth department of the World Council.

"Demetrius and the Gladiators"

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

Because this film may be considered as a sequel to "The Robe," it may also be subjected to many comparisons, in plot and treatment. This is neither fair nor necessary. "The Robe" is the initial Cinema Scope production and is the screen version of the best-seller novel by Lloyd Douglas. In this presentation which is set in possible historical sequence to its predecessor, we find a story built on some of the characters met before: Demetrius, the freed Greek slave who had become a Christian after witnessing Christ's crucifixion and being entrusted with The Robe, Peter, the "Big Fisherman" and Caligula, the Roman emperor whose thirst for power made him mad.

A prologue consisting of the last scene from "The Robe" provides the necessary connection and we embark on a new plot with different implications. Caligula has heard that magical powers have been attributed to the Robe and wants to secure it for himself, hoping that its possession will assure him authority and longevity. Since he does not tolerate disobedience, he plans to force the Christians to give it up. They are a small, peaceful group, living by their crafts, under the leadership of a blind potter, with an occasional visit from Peter. Demetrius is among them. When the Roman guards come searching for the Robe, he offers resistance, is arrested and taken to be condemned to fight in the arena. His refusal to fight, his splendid physique and athletic skill bring him to the attention of the profligate Messalina, wife of Claudius who manages to get him enrolled in the Gladiators' School sponsored by her husband. From then, a wind of pagan madness rushes through the story and engulfs Demetrius who falls victim to the wiles of Messalina,

All the recadence of the period, the lust of animal passions displayed in the gladiatorial games, the immorality of court life, the amoral factors of the idolatrous cult of Isis served by Messalina, political intrigue and the insanity of Caligula are depicted without reservations. In contrast, the simple faith and consistent decent living of the Christians are portrayed so effectively that Demetrius is brought to repentance and to a determined return to his Christian position. This is shown simply, touchingly and convincingly, as many a backslider has been led to do under strong conviction of his sins.

There are many good points to notice about this production: dramatically and artistically, it is superior, many of the settings of "The Robe" being used to good advantage. The characterizations, whether of good or of evil people are excellent. One is ever conscious of a spiritual thread running throughout the story. The Robe is shorn of miraculous properties but remains a symbol of Christian testimony, a valuable factor.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

(Continued from page 7.)

business, of dividing our money for the support of the various causes of the church, we should spend some time in thinking where our money should be given, where it will accomplish the most for the progress of the church and the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth. Perhaps, then, our contributions would accomplish a great deal more than they do. At any rate, it is a good plan to think—to think seriously, to think hard, and then be governed by our best judgment.

Previously reported $ 5,179.43

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Hayes Chapel$ 9.00

Eastern Va. Conference:
Little Creek$ 5.00
Johnson's Grove 10.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Howard's Chapel S. S. ...$ 2.00
Monticello 30.00
Pleasant Grove 29.00
Shallow Ford 20.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Bailey's Grove$ 5.00
Big Oak 5.00
Brown's Chapel 5.00
Pleasant Cross S. S. 10.89

Virginia Valley Conference:
Linville S. S. $15.00
Winchester S. S. 9.00
Wood's Chapel S. S. 9.00

259.23

Total to date $ 5,438.66

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Growth Through Useful Work"

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 3, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Whatever your task, work heartily, as serving the Lord, and not men." Colossians 3: 23.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Colossians 3: 23-24; I Thessalonians 4: 10-11; II Thessalonians 3: 6-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 19: 14-17.

Last week we were studying about "Growth Through Christian Service." This week we study about "Growth Through Useful Work." There is not much difference between the two topics. Indeed, essentially, there is no difference between them. To be sure, in the first instance we are thinking about the things we do in Christ's name, so called religious activities, such as visiting the widows and orphans in their affliction and need, in sharing with those who are in need, in rehabilitating our brother who has been overtaken in a trespass, in bearing one another's burdens, in controlling our tongues, and so forth.

In the latter instance, we are considering what seems to be more secular activities, our everyday work, the things that we do for a living, the routine and commonplace round of daily work and labor. But in the eyes of God, there is no hard and fast distinction between the two. The so-called spiritual and the so-called secular are one and the same. Any work, and all work, done in Christ's name and in Christ's spirit, is Christian service. And daily work is just as much a means of growth in the Christian life, as is so-called religious work. The fact is that for most people, one of the finest opportunities for growth comes from their daily work. If they do not grow there, they are not likely to grow anywhere. There are tremendous spiritual possibilities and values in useful work, even in humble, unsung, unknown work.

A Good Starting Point.

The Garden of Eden is looked upon as the ideal condition of man. It is sometimes called Paradise. Folks might think that Adam and Eve were "sitting pretty" in that little bit of heaven on earth, nothing on earth to do but take a perpetual vacation. But that was not the case. The Garden of Eden was Paradise because there was work to do—that is what made it ideal. The Lord God put Adam and Even in the Garden and told them to dress it and keep it. They had to prune the fruit trees, cut the grass, tie up the blackberry bushes, clean out the ditches, cut the underbrush, and so on. The point is that work is divinely given and divinely ordered, and divinely sanctioned and blessed and rewarded. The fellow who says, "I've got to work," may miss the point. Work is a duty, but it is also a privilege. It is a blessing, not a bane. It is not only a means of making a living, it can be a means of making a life, and a great life. A man can grow in grace by doing his work in the right way and in the right spirit.

Doing Work Well.

"Whatever your task, work heartily, as serving the Lord, and not men." There is an old saying to the effect that whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well. That is what Paul is saying. Bring to your work, no matter how humble it may seem, the desire and the determination to do it well. Do it in such a way that it will receive the commendation of the Big Boss, the Lord Jesus Christ himself. Even the lowliest jobs take on new dignity if this is done.

Some years ago, at the close of a great revival service, the folks were giving their testimony as to what the meetings had done for them. One young man said that as a result of the meeting, he had given himself to the ministry, a young woman said that she was going to be a missionary, and so it went. Finally, an elderly woman with wrinkled face, snagged teeth and gnarled hands got up and said, "Mr. Preacher, of course I can't go to the mission field, and I can't be a preacher, and I can't do any of these things that these young people are talking about. I am the woman who scrubs the floors in the big Bank Building downtown. But I have re-consecrated my life to Christ in this meeting, and I am going to be the best scrub-woman in this city." That woman's work had a sacramental significance. She was going to perform her work heartily, and as unto Christ her Lord.

Working With Your Hands.

"But we exhort you, brethren . . . to work with your hands." So many folks think that manual labor is common and even degrading. They want "white collar" jobs. In God's sight, work with the hands is just as important and just as honorable as is work with the head. The mother who spends most of her time cooking, washing dishes, making beds, washing and ironing clothes, and doing the many things which caused the poet to say, "But woman's work is never done," is doing something just as important as the man who sits behind the big mahogany desk and runs a big business. Fact is, she is running a big business, especially if there are children in the home. And the fellow who fastens the nuts on the automobile as it moves along the assembly line, is just as important as the big shot engineer who designs the automobile. In God's sight, manual work is meaningful work.

"Work with your hands" . . . that is sound advice. Modern psychology and psychiatry confirm the wisdom of this preacher of the long ago. Go to a hospital for wounded or shell-shocked veterans and see how important is this matter of giving folks something to do with their hands! These men with shell-shocked minds and nervously fatigued systems, in a state of collapse, are taught to work with their hands, weaving baskets, making toys, moulding pottery, knitting, anything and everything that can be done with their hands. Working with one's hands is good therapy for the well as well as for the sick. The writer has a little workshop where he makes things with his hands. It is recreation, and also re-creation. People ought to do things with their hands.

Riding the Gravy Train.

"For we hear that some of you are living in idleness, mere busybodies, not doing any work." These people got Paul's goat. You see the people at Thessalonica, as was the case with so many Christians in other places of that day, thought Jesus was coming in the near future. So they stopped work. "Why work?" these loafers asked. "Jesus is coming, and that will be the end of the world; and we will be rewarded or punished, whatever we do now." They were riding

(Continued on page 14.)

"It Really Happened"

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"And it shall come to pass . . ."—Joel 2:28.

God said it would happen. What? That he would pour out his Spirit, and people would speak his message—prophecy—and both young and old would dream dreams and see visions. And all along there were those who envisioned a better world, and dreamed of its coming to pass; but there had not been any special outpouring of God's Spirit upon common multitudes; and, so far that they still waited. A generation passed, a century, several centuries, and yet it had not come to pass. Perhaps the prophecy was practically forgotten. A few persons still hoped it would come true, perhaps others said that it had already come to pass and we did not recognize it. Still others said it would never happen. Other prophets came and went. Other books of the Old Testament were written, and finally the Old Testament was closed, and yet it had not come to pass. One read on through Matthew, the whole of the life of Christ, and Mark, and Luke, and finally John and not yet does he find it. Then one day the apostle Peter in a magnificent sermon announces that it has really happened! "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel," says Peter. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. . . . And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

And now it had really happened. God's Spirit was freely given, men were hearing the Gospel in their own tongues, and they were being convinced, were turning away from their evil ways of unbelief, and by the tens, and hundreds, yea, thousands, were turning to this new Way of the lowly Nazarene. They saw visions of a finer civilization, and dreamed dreams of a land of love, and peace, and sweet fellowship. And God's Spirit was with them without measure. They had boldness, and courage, and preached a Gospel which convicted those who heard it, and layed their lives upon the altar of living service.

Let us thank God for that day. It was the birth of the Church. It was the day of beginnings, and beginnings so great that our minds yet are unable to take in all that it means—a world whose kingdoms are the kingdoms of the Christ.

How did it come to pass. Jesus came, for one thing. It did not come to pass without Jesus. Let us put that down as a primary fact. Jesus came and led the way, by living it, teaching, preaching, practicing it; and then finishing the plan for it upon Calvary with his very life; and then arising to proclaim eternal life and victory, and to promise power to his followers, upon the consideration of their going regardless of all handicaps unto the uttermost part of the earth and preaching it to everybody. It really happened, but it followed Jesus.

But even then it did not happen exactly when Jesus had finished and ascended even unto the right hand of the Father. It still had not yet happened. Do not overlook something. And that something is that men and women took Jesus absolutely seriously as far as they understood him, and hazarded their lives on carrying out his requests. Not in any wild excitement, but quietly right down the line exactly as though he himself were in their midst, leading them into the upper room, restraining their ardor for ten long days and nights in quiet, earnest prayer. I like to think of those days! Simon Peter learning composure, quiet, obedience, and waiting! See him, loving Jesus as he did, enthusiastic as he was, frightened though as long as he might have been, and thus in such a case ready to blunder ahead in some wrong way, but waiting, praying and keeping as cool as John, the beloved. One of the highest spots in the New Testament is the waiting in prayer those days, unnumbered for them, just waiting, and waiting, and waiting. It takes a lot to teach us to be patient. There is a power in patience which God needs now to build a better world. We have talked about building a new world, but what we should do is to give God a chance at it through us! That was what Jesus had told his disciples to do. To possess themselves until they were transformed from "learners" to "teachers," from disciples to apostles! When they obeyed, and with the right spirit of obedience which offered life and all, the Holy Spirit came, and the prophecy of Joel, now centuries old, had really come to pass. It came, but it followed Jesus and men with the willingness to give their lives in complete surrender to Jesus—Jesus and men, and women, yes, and young people, for even little Rhoda is not left out of the picture.

I am afraid we are trying in these fast days to motorize God's plans. We would harness our new speed, and efficiency to his throne, and in mass production make a new world. His thoughts are not our thoughts, and the same quiet manner must move our world as moved the Master, tempted to "speed up" in the forty days wilderness experience. Not by the speed of the age, but by the Spirit of God, will the new world be made.

I would like to have a hundred church members to worship every Sunday morning, and move us all like a moving hive of bees into the mouth of the kingdom of God; but what I would like even better would be that five hundred church members worship God for five minutes every morning of their week-a-day lives, and again at noon every noon, and again at night every night! The quiet bringing of our families to God every day would beget a power that would bring a new day for us all. We have come too much to expect the beauty of our mass worship, our big ways, our splendid choirs, our minister-prayers, and our preacher-sermons in lump sums in a single hour to do our worship for us, but what we need is a sense of meeting ourselves, for ourselves, and by ourselves in order that we may learn hourly, daily, to live a Christian life with and for others, and to take our orders from Jesus as our Lord and Master.

You can do a great thing by beginning, if you are not already doing so, to be in that much needed fellowship of those who worship God privately and definitely every day. Do you covet the outpouring of God's Spirit upon your life and upon your family, and upon your day and age? Let Jesus prepare you, lead, and command you. It really happened for them. It will happen for you.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Little Dottie had a birthday, her fifth, this past Monday. She has heard her mother and daddy talk about the orphanage and the little children there. She has been taught to save some of her own spending money for them. She has been taught to pray for them. She likes to hear about them in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. She is told how thankful she should be for her father and mother and how much they love her. I have seen Dottie and she is a gay little girl and sweet.

When it came time to celebrate her birthday, and plans for it were being discussed she wanted to do something for the children who lived at the orphanage and had no daddy or mother to help make a happy birthday for them. Would they have icecream and cake? Would there be candles, like mine, Daddy? Yes, she was told. They would have icecream and cake. They would have candles, and for them there would be a celebration and the singing of "Happy Birthday." Dr. Truitt would see to that, and so would Mrs. Nell Smith, their kind and loving kitchen matron.

I want to send something, she told her daddy. I will be five years old. I want to send $10.00 for every year. Did she mean $50.00? Yes, $50.00, Daddy.

To be sure she is the only child. She has a share in what is being earned. She was in a position to give the $50.00 if she wanted to. Her parents felt that other parents believe in letting their children have a say-so in so many things, that they would let Dottie have her wish in this. That is the reason you see the $50.00 in this report.

I have every reason to believe Dottie's birthday was happy. And I think it is nice for her to let her own happiness "spill over" onto less fortunate children.

Teaching is a wonderful thing. It is a grave responsibility. People may grow up generous, kind and wise, if generous, kind and wise teachers teach them from the beginning of their lives. To be sure they may be exceptions.

A boy who went away from home to school when he had completed the seventh grade had a very few clothes, almost no money. His mother slipped away to an attic and in a special hiding place she had a few coins in an old white handkerchief. She handed it all to him. She did not keep back one nickel. "Here is all the money I have, son, when I get some more I will give you more." That boy grew to be generous. He has given much money generously. But more still he has gladly given a life in service to others.

Teaching is a great thing, and a mother is a wonderful teacher. Here is a host of little folks without mothers who are being taught by people who had mothers.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR AUGUST 19, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Socks:

Cradle Roll Dept., Holy Neck Christian Ch.

Clothing:

Miss Patricia Gordan, Burlington, N. C.

Mrs. B. D. Silver, Asheville, N. C.

Mrs. Raleigh F. Whitley, Isle of Wight, Va.

Mrs. H. E. Ollerhead, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Buttons:

Missionary Society, Isle of Wight Christian Church.

Socks and wash cloths:

Women's Missionary Society, Liberty Cong. Christian Church.

Coupons:

Mrs. John Miller, Elkton, Va.

A Friend, Liberty Spring Christian Church.

Clothing, shoes and curtains:

John M. Jones, Reidsville, N. C.

Bananas:

Pate-Dawson Co., Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $8,714.10

(No report this week.)

Grand total $ 8,714.10

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $21,234.16

Miss Dottie Branch, Garner, N. C. $ 50.00

Women's Missionary Society, Auburn Christian Church	25.00
John Chamberlin, Gibsonville, N. C.	1.50
Gasoline Refund	92.50
United Cong. Christian S. S., Columbus, Ga. ..	4.12
In Memory of Mrs. Mary Foster Warren	7.50
Special Gifts	14.25

194.87

Grand total $21,429.03

Total for the week $ 194.87

Total for the year $30,143.13

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

the gravy train. They expected that somebody else would take care of them, even if they did not work. Paul had the answer for them: "If any man will not work, let him not eat." It was as simple and as radical as that. It was such a sound idea that the Pilgrim Fathers, sixteen hundred years later, copied it, and used it. Folks who cannot work ought to be helped. Unfortunately, the man who will not work often has a family, and the church folks and the community have to help him to help his family.

Reaping the Reward.

"Knowing that from the Lord you will receive the inheritance as your reward." God is no respecter of persons or of work. He rewards those who are faithful alike.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

SOPHIA LAYMEN OBSERVE WORKDAY.

(Continued from page 2.)

As the operation moved smoothly along, the ladies of the Sophia Church appeared at lunch time with well filled baskets. Their contents were placed on a table at the hut, near the edge of the field and by a beautiful pond. After this picnic style lunch, the laymen returned to their work and had their project planted by four o'clock. It was truly a day for the Lord, and the fellowship together was wonderful.

Those participating in the project were Ray Hollingsworth, Troy Hall, Richard Farlow, Marvin Staley, Leonard Staley, Stacey Hayes, Bobby LaMarr, Ralph Wilson, Wade Rich, Earl Bulla, Harold Brown, and the pastor, Rev. Avery Brown.

The corn was cultivated only twice due to the dry weather, but the crop looks very promising. Many of the dairy farmers have been hit by the drought, and they are eager to buy our corn for ensilage. We feel sure of a strong market when we decide to sell the crop.

We think that our laymen will be willing to try other projects to help on the building program. The Woman's Missionary Society has also been faithful in their work, having purchased the lot for the new church site and raised money in many ways.

The work at Sophia is progressing.

MABEL STALEY,
Reporter.

MOUNT OLIVET REPORTS ON SUMMER ACTIVITIES.

(Continued from page 2.)

addition has also given us two new Sunday school rooms, where the beginners and young adults now meet. The Sunday school is under the leadership of John Marshall and has had a good year.

As sort of a climax to the Sunday school year was our annual Vacation Bible School. Winona Morris was the director again this year. She made good use of the cooperation of mothers and friends who brought children and helped in other ways. Miss Shirley Ann Snow taught the beginners; Mrs. Elphis Morris, the primary; Mrs. Harrold Herring, the juniors, and the pastor taught the intermediates. The three younger classes used the Judson Press material based on worship recommended by the conference office. The intermediates finished up our mission study, based on the Friendship Press book, "Many Hands in Many Lands," which we had been studying once a month. The closing program, on Sunday, June 27, featured singing, Bible verses, exhibits and a short play.

On the first Sunday in May, some of us journeyed to Bethel Church, where Mrs. B. G. Snow represented us in the Women's Day program and where we heard Dr. Ruth Seabury and enjoyed a covered dish dinner. We returned the hospitality on the first Sunday in August, when the Bethel people, together with our pastor, his family and parents, visited Mt. Olivet and joined with us to say "goodbye" to Pattie Lee Coghill, who had come for the christening of her Harman namesake.

Next month we hope to again act as hosts to our friends and members at our homecoming services, Sunday, September 26. Dr. David McKeith, Jr., has been invited to speak and we are hopeful that he will accept.

H. V. HARMAN,
Pastor.

Ford Foundation Aids World Buddhist Center

Construction of a great world Buddhist center and university is well under way in Rangoon, Burma, with half a dozen buildings completed and work started on the main building which, in addition to class rooms, will house an auditorium, museum, library and a sanctuary for the revised Buddhist Tipitaka.

To be known as the International Institute for Advanced Buddhist Studies, it is expected the twenty-five modern buildings of the center will be completed before the close, in May, 1956, of the two-year Sixth Buddhist Great Council now in progress.

Several of the completed buildings, now being used as hostels for thousands of monks gathered from all over Burma as well as Ceylon, Cambodia, Laos and Thailand, will become university dormitories after the end of the congress.

A special session of the congress next November is expected to bring members of the World Buddhist Fellowship from the U. S. A., Canada, Britain, Australia, Belgium, France, Germany and Scandinavia.

The Ford Foundation, American philanthropic organization, is helping to provide several years of advanced training in the U. S. A. of two Burmese scholars who will head the Buddhist center's library.—Action.

We Teach

The program of alcohol education is not something apart from the school curriculum. Those engaged in teaching the scientific facts relative to the use of alcohol are not "temperance workers on the loose." A sure way to stall all progress along the whole temperance front is to enter the schools with a pseudo-educational approach and label it "alcohol education." Alcohol education is, in every sense of the word, a teaching approach.

Any state department of education or public instruction appreciates the thoroughness with which the temperance organization maps its educational program. Organization and presentation of materials, class discussion testing, effective follow-up methods and close contacts with the school administrators and faculty members place the whole alcohol education squarely in the center of accepted pedagogical concepts and routines. Better yet, the pupils receive solid instruction in a pattern geared to the classroom.

Scores of testimonials bear out the fact that the teaching approach makes an impact in the classroom, the home and the community. Not only in expressions of appreciation relative to the techniques of the temperance instructor, but in the expressions of convictions as to the moral implications of the alcohol problem as well, are these testimonials significant. It is when boys and girls make high resolve to abstain from that which is harmful that the fruitage of alcohol education becomes priceless.—A. R. M. Lauritzen, in Illinois Temperance League News.

A Request

It will be greatly appreciated by the editor if all items intended for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN be typewritten, double spaced. Articles in long hand will be accepted if the writer is unable to have them typed, provided they can be read! Events which occurred more than a month before the time they are reported are no longer "news."

STANLEY C. HARRELL,
Editor.

It is a universal law that men who break God's commandments most are the men who hate their fellows worst; those who keep God's commandments love with sincerest affection.—Anon.

The Supreme Question in Religion

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

The conversion of Saul of Tarsus was one of the most mysterious of which we have any record. People have tried to explain it. Some have even discounted the narrative as well as the experience itself. But explain it any way you wish, you cannot explain it away. Something happened in the life of that little Jew called Saul. Enough happened that it changed his way of living in the days that followed. Enough happened that it changed the history of the world. The proof that something happened is the changed attitude and changed life of the man himself. Paul's life after that experience is convincing evidence that something happened.

Christianity found its greatest exponent in the man who was once its greatest opponent. The antecedent of Paul's conversion, that which without question led up to the final climax and his complete surrender, was the martyrdom of Stephen, and the genuineness of the lives of those known as Christians. Paul realized when he was converted to the Christian faith that the supreme question in religion is not what one should believe about certain doctrines, but what one should do for God—"What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" That was his question. The inspiration of his new faith in the Leadership of Christ inspired him with a desire to do something for his Lord. True conversion always inspires men and women to service.

Religion is not a theology to be argued about, but an experience to be expressed and verified in terms of life. Religion must touch the whole of a man's life in order for it to touch any of his life. Instead of being a department of one's life, religion, if it is to have meaning and value, must be a part of all one's life. Religion does more than to influence a man in his praying. It is possible for an irreligious man to pray. But only "the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much."

Religion determines how a person lives. The genuineness of one's religion is expressed in what one desires to do, and what one refuses to do. Religion determines one's conduct in business, in politics, and in social life, and in the home as well as in the church. Religion determines how a person works, because it puts conscience into one's work. The sincere Christian desires to have his daily life and work bear constant testimony of Christ's redeeming power. Too many people try to convince themselves that they are Christians because of certain things they will not do. Christianity is not evidenced by negatives. Paul's inquiry was not "What do you want me not to do?" but "What wilt thou have me to do?" The Christian lives in affirmatives and not in negatives. The supreme question in religion since the days of Jesus has been, "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" Not until Christian people of every church and creed realize that Christian service should receive the major emphasis in all preaching and teaching will they be able to convince the world of the importance of Christian faith, for "Faith without works is dead"—not only dead, but useless.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1954

NUMBER 34

My Master Was a Worker

*My Master was a worker, with daily work to do;
And he who would be like him must be a worker, too!
Then welcome honest labor, and honest labor's fare,
For where there is a worker, the Master's man is there.*

*My Master was a comrade, a trusty friend and true,
And he who would be like him must be a comrade, too!
In happy hours of singing, in silent hours of care,
Where goes a loyal comrade, the Master's man is there.*

*My Master was a helper, the woes of life he knew,
And he who would be like him must be a helper, too!
The burden will grow lighter, if each will take a share,
And where there is a helper the Master's man is there.*

*Then, brothers brave and manly together let us be,
For he, who is our Master, the Man of men is he;
And men who would be like him are wanted everywhere,
For where they love each other, the Master's men are there.*

—William G. Tarrant.

News Flashes

Elon College opens its sixty-fifth year on Friday of this week.

Rev. Lacy M. Presnell, pastor of Liberty Church in the Western North Carolina Conference, is a patient at the Moore County Hospital, Pinehurst, N. C.

The Rev. John Lackey, pastor of Apple's Chapel, is assisting Dr. W. E. Wiseman in a series of services this week at Pleasant Ridge Church, Guilford County, N. C.

At their conference grounds at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, the Methodists have recently dedicated a chapel in memory of members of their churches in the Southeastern Jurisdiction who lost their lives in World War II.

The Rev. Perfecto Yasay, a native of the Philippine Islands and a student at Andover-Newton Seminary, will arrive in Greensboro, N. C., on September 6 for a visit of two weeks, before going to the seminary. Mr. Yasay is receiving scholarship aid from the Cora L. Anthony Trust Fund.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN carries in this issue a guest editorial by Dr. H. Shelton Smith of the Duke Divinity School Faculty. Dr. Smith attended the first week sessions of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Illinois. He is writing a series of articles on the World Council which will appear in subsequent issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The National United Student Fellowship Conference of Congregational Christian and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches is meeting at Elmhurst, Illinois, August 28 to September 4. Attending from the Southern Convention area are Miss Frances Pickard of Liberty, N. C., a student at Meredith College, Miss Sallie Winn, Chapel Hill, N. C., a student at the University of North Carolina, Miss Jo Anne Smith, Greensboro, N. C., Mr. Robert McCann, Akron, Ohio, and Mr. Randall Mason, Patterson, N. J. Miss Smith, Mr. McCann and Mr. Mason are students at Duke University.

The Massanetta Springs Bible Conference

Mrs. Johnson and I have been attending the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference for the past two weeks.

When the Conference closes tomorrow night (August 29), we will have made a record of fifty weeks in attendance, covering a period of twenty-five seasons, two weeks each. During these years we have heard more than 1,800 sermons or addresses, delivered by ministers of a half-dozen or more denominations. What this has meant to us in the way of information, stimulation, inspiration and enlarged vision is difficult to evaluate. We have spent more than $3,000 for expenses and contributions for this purpose, and it has been more than worth the time, labor and cost.

The Conference this year was pronounced the best yet in program and attendance. Congregational Christian Churches had only eight ministers present on the day given to our churches. Rev. R. A. Whitten was the only minister except the writer who attended as much as one week. We do not have the names of the other ministers who were present for one or two days.

We shall return to our supply work in Holy Neek Church with thanks for the privilege of these great spiritual blessings. Unless the ministers in our churches will more largely attend this Conference, we think we should request the management to drop our churches from the list of special days. We are honored by the opportunity freely given to our churches, and a large number of our ministers should attend the Conference.

Methodists, Baptists, Moravians, Episcopalians, United Brethren, as well as Presbyterians and others, both ministers and laymen, attend and appreciate the program presented. The laymen of our churches should advocate and support the plan of having their pastor attend this great Bible Conference next year.

I. W. JOHNSON.

When the state supreme court declared parimutuel betting at dog tracks in Currituck County, North Carolina, illegal, the ministerial association of Carteret County appealed for an injunction against a similar track at Morehead City. The injunction was granted. Meanwhile, an appeal from the Currituck decision has been denied by the federal circuit court.

Build New Churches

Thank God we have emerged from the era of defeatism in which Protestant church leaders everywhere were calling for "fewer and better" churches. Now they are saying with one accord, "We need 100,000 new churches within the next twenty-one years."

The situation which has caused the change in the thinking of many is the tremendous increase in our population. Experts in the census bureau anticipate a forty million increase by 1975. This means that another person is born every twelve seconds and that enough people are added to our population each month to build a city the size of Dayton, Ohio. It is estimated that this increase alone will, in the normal development of our society, bring an increase of 28,000,000 in church membership.

Our churches must provide for this normal growth in the construction of larger buildings and the establishment of many new congregations. But we must not forget that some forty percent of our present population have no affiliation with any church. Our Lord's commission and our evangelistic passion should drive us to seek and to save these lost millions. Furthermore, there are other millions who are enmeshed in the toils of false faiths and need to be liberated by the Gospel. We believe that 200,000 new churches are needed now!

Every evangelical Christian church in America should feel an obligation to organize at least one new church in the next five years and should undertake that obligation immediately. We are certain God would bless every such project undertaken in his name and according to his will.

—James DeF. Murch, in Action

Additional Building Loan Fund Declarations of Purpose

The Southern Convention Office has received the following Declarations of Purpose since their last report.

Church and Pastor	Amount
Oak Level—E. N. Powell.....	$ 279.00
New Hope—R. Eugene Tally ...	477.44
Pope's Chapel—E. M. Powell ...	233.00

It is greatly desired that those churches that have not yet sent in their Declarations should do so at the earliest possible moment.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

"A Living Creed"

PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," "Living for Jesus."

SUGGESTED SCRIPTURE: Ephesians 6: 1-20.

PRAYER: Give us O God wisdom sufficient to know how to build a creed and then help us to have courage and determination to live by it. Amen.

MEDITATION: "A Living Creed."

Like others in our Fellowship, I did not begin my life in the church as a member of the Congregational Christian denomination. My Welsh ancestors were for generations adherents of Protestant churches with strong creedal foundations.

Like others I have recited these historic creeds from my early youth, impressed with their dignity and rhetorical excellence, but not truly understanding their theological arguments. Nor do I understand these to this day.

I would not question the purpose of creeds but in the Congregational Church a layman must have a creed which challenges his intellect, his heart and his imagination—a creed which gives some freedom in which his own individual character and spirit can have room to move.

In 1913 our Fellowship adopted "The Kansas City Statement." I repeated it week after week in the church of my high school and college days. Its beauty and dignity and challenge burned themselves into my consciousness. I could wish that today I might repeat it in the company of my fellow-worshippers in the Congregational Church for "This I Believe."

"We believe in God the Father, infinite in wisdom, goodness and love—"

Don Marquis once wrote that "As the skill of a man grows broader, so do his creeds." Whatever may be man's ignorance or prejudice, he has beekoned to his innate best self when he has caught a vision of a Father of these characteristics. Whatever others the sects may add, there can be no question of our unity in claiming these as the qualities of our common God.

"—and in Jesus Christ, his Son, our Lord and Saviour, who for us and our salvation lived and died and rose again and liveth evermore,"

Men may seek their salvation in systems of jurisprudence, in codes of social ethics, in institutions of community and nations, but ultimately these will have no strength or persistence unless they are built upon the precept and example of Jesus Christ. In this conviction the earnest Christian fundamentalist and the honest humanist who reveres the Christ, can find companionship.

"—and in the Holy Spirit who taketh of the things of Christ and revealeth them to us, renewing, comforting, and inspiring the souls of men."

The absolute prerequisite for Christian spiritual stature is a seeking and a receptive attitude. From those who have earnestly sought the Will of God there has come the assurance of the revelation of "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure—" to those who honestly yearn for them and quickly receive them.

"We are united in striving to know the will of God as taught in the Holy Scriptures, and to our purpose to walk in the ways of the lord made known or to be made known to us."

(Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Opening Day of the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches

A GUEST EDITORIAL BY DR. H. SHELTON SMITH

On Sunday, August 15, an epochal event in the history of American Christianity took place: the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches opened its two-week session at Evanston, Illinois. The Assembly included representatives from 161 church bodies, constituting a membership of 168,000,000. Delegates and accredited visitors were on hand from 48 nations, representing some of the youngest as well as some of the most ancient religious communions. Despite our deeply divided world, Evanston was the meeting place of Christians from East and West, North and South. From behind the Iron Curtain came such influential churchmen as Dr. Josef L. Hromadka of Czechoslovakia and Bishop John Peter of Hungary.

The opening service of worship was held at the host church, the First Methodist, of which Dr. Harold Bosley is the minister. Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, one of the five presidents of the Council, delivered the sermon, using as his theme the historic affirmation that was coined when the World Council was organized at Amsterdam in 1948: "We Intend to Stay Together." In the temper of Amos, he called for a revitalized personal religion that is brave enough to challenge all forms of political tyranny and social injustice. His message came to a close with these confident words: "Nothing can separate us from the love of God. Let the Redeemed of the Lord say so. Jesus Christ is to become the Ruler of the kings of the earth, the King of kings and Lord of lords. In this faith, we intend to stay together."

The Second Assembly used as its central theme, "Christ—the Hope of the World." In view of world-wide unrest, anxiety, and suspicion, it proved most timely. Disagree as delegates might on particular points in theology and in political doctrine, they were unanimous in affirming that Jesus Christ alone is the ultimate hope of mankind.

The first day's program came to a dramatic climax with a mammoth service of worship held in Chicago's Soldier Field. After more than 100,000 people had jammed the stadium to maximum capacity, 30,000 more thronged the gates in vain. This mass gathering left Chicagoans aghast. Old-timers confessed that they had never witnessed anything so stupendous. Long before the hour arrived for the service, 500 chartered busses, coming from many states of the middle west, huddled about the stadium.

The service of worship, entitled "Festival of Faith," had been in the making for at least a year, and into its preparation had gone the best religious and artistic talent in New York and Chicago. The churches of Chicago and near-by communities gave to it their ablest specialists. Directly participating in the Festival was a cast of some 4,000, including the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, pantomimists, a brass choir, a speaking chorus, soloists and trumpeters. Every member of the cast exemplified the utmost in skill and discipline. Furthermore, each member participated in a rare mood of reverence and worship. For all of them, this was no mere spectacle.

The Festival was organized around three biblical themes: Creation, Redemption, Consummation. The series was introduced by an "Interrogation," led by one of the World Council presidents, Dr. Marc Boegner, top official of the Reformed Church in France.

President: Who are you to have come here?

Congregation: We are Christians. We have come from many different traditions.

President: What is it to be Christian?

Congregation: It is to believe in God the Father; in his only Son our Lord; who is the Hope of the World . . . and in the Holy Spirit.

President: From where have you come?

Congregation: From 161 member churches, from 48 countries on five continents.

President: Why have you come?

Congregation: We have come to worship God.

Then followed the smooth and subtle unfolding of each theme, in the development of which the spoken word, music, and pantomime were combined with deeply moving effect. The bracing hymn, "Our God, Our Help in Ages Past," brought the evening to a close in a pitch of inspiration that is rarely experienced in group worship.

Those of us who shared in this Festival of Faith could not doubt that the churches of the World Council truly intend to stay together.

A Statistical Report on the Nation's Religious Climate

The nation's religious climate—as judged by statistics alone—has never been better than it is now.

The United States has more church members, more Sunday school members, more churches, and more ministers than at any other time in its history. Church giving is also at an all-time high, and church building has expanded eight-fold since 1940.

Hearken to other statistics form the Yearbook of American Churches, which put on the books for 1953 new, all-time records for religious life in America, under the impetus of a mid-century religious revival that has been sustained since 1940:

Never before has such a large percentage of the nation's population been enrolled in the churches.

Six out of every ten persons are on church rolls—Protestant, Roman Catholic, Jewish, and others. Percentage-wise it is 59.5, as against 49 percent in 1940.

Approximately thirty million persons have joined churches since 1940, to bring the total number of members of all religious bodies in the continental United States to 94,842,845. The net gain between 1952 and 1953 was 2,565,716—a 2.8 percent rise.

The enrollment in Sunday or Sabbath schools skyrocketed three times faster than church membership. An 8.1 percent gain brought the total to 35,389,466—mostly young people in Protestant Sunday schools. This all-time high, including 2,741,929 teachers and officers, represents 22 percent of the nation's population.

Places of worship—churches and synagogues—increased 1.5 percent, in an effort to keep pace with expanded membership. The 1953 additions were 9,082, and the grand total 294,359.

Clergymen in charge of local churches increased from 183,899 to 207,618, and the total ordained—including those retired and engaged in non-pastoral work—is 338,250. The record of clergymen with charges is incomplete—from 200 of 268 religious bodies.

Church building approaches the half-billion mark. The 1953 figure of $474,000,000 for new construction compares with $59,000,000 in 1940.

Statistics gathered in 1953 show that people gave 8.9 percent more to Protestant and Orthodox groups than in the previous year. The total—a per member average of $41.94—was $1,401,114,217. The figures are not made available by other religious bodies, but independent estimates indicate that the grand total exceeds two billion dollars a year.

"A vigorous, sustained movement of Americans into the churches is reflected in every facet of the nation's religious life," said Dr. Benson Y. Landis, editor of the Yearbook of American Churches.

"Statistics measure the growth, but throw little light upon the reason for this mid-century renaissance. I believe, however, the growth reflects shifting opinion in favor of a life that includes the spiritual and, in fact, is not complete without it. The unrelieved world crisis may contribute to the accelerated pace of the turn to the churches, but it must be remembered that there has been one crisis after another that has brought no sustained gains to the churches."

Dr. Landis said that there were many other contributing factors to the growth of church and Sunday school memberships—a phenomenal increase in the birth rate; effective evangelistic efforts in the churches; and population moving from city to suburbs, with an accompanying increase in new churches to serve them.

The Yearbook, published by the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., is the only source of statistical data for all religious bodies in the continental United States. The new figures, mostly for 1953, and collected from official statisticians of all faiths, will appear in the Yearbook for 1955, which is scheduled for publication the middle of this month.

The 2.8 percent gain in church membership in 1953 compares with a population gain of 1.7.

The nation's religiously-affiliated population of almost 95,000,000, when broken down into six major faith groups, shows the Protestants first, Roman Catholics second, and Jewish third. Eastern Orthodox groups are fourth, Old Catholic and Polish National Catholics fifth, and Buddhists sixth. The relative strength of Protestant and Roman Catholic groups has remained virtually constant for more than fifty years.

From 1940 to 1953, Protestants increased from 37,814,606 to 55,837,325; Roman Catholics from 21,284,455 to 31,476,261. On a basis of ratio of membership to population for the same period, Protestants showed, 1940—28.7 percent, 1953—35.1 percent; Roman Catholics showed, 1940—16.1 percent, 1953—19.8 percent.

Comparative figures for the six major religious groups in continental United States, for 1952 and 1953 are as follows, the 1952 figure being given first:

Protestant . . .	54,229,963	55,837,325
Roman Cath. .	30,253,427	31,476,261
Jewish	5,000,000	5,000,000
E. Orthodox .	2,353,783	2,100,171
Old Catholic .	366,956	366,088
Buddhist . . .	73,000	63,000
	92,277,129	94,842,845

There are also Muslims in the United States, but the number is not reported.

The unofficial census of religious bodies, embracing 235 groups, shows that 98.2 percent are concentrated in 77 groups. These groups, each with 50,000 or more members, include 18 that have more than 1,000,000 on their membership rolls.

Furthermore, Dr. Landis points out, the division numerically in the ranks of Protestantism is not as wide as indicated by the number of denominations reporting—255. Out of 55,000,000 Protestants, about 85 percent are embraced within nine general denominational families.

The Baptists are the largest Protestant groups. Divided among 25 bodies, there are 17,990,613. Methodists of 21 bodies are second, with 11,641,891. Lutherans rank third, there being 20 bodies, with a membership of 6,608,951; while 10 Presbyterian bodies account for 3,635,077 members. Congregational Christian Churches have a membership of 1,283,754.

The numerical increase in church membership was three times as fast (Continued on page 13.)

The Rev. Fred Page Register Becomes Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary

The Rev. Fred Page Register, pastor of Wake Chapel Congregational Christian Church, Fuquay - Varina, North Carolina, for the past eight years, has been elected Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, according to an announcement issued by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, president of the Convention. Mr. Register will begin his work December 1.

The position of Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary is a new service of the Convention created by action of the Convention in session at Durham, N. C., in 1952. Following the action of the Convention, the Executive Board was instructed to define the job and select the person to fill it. The Board appointed a special committee to outline the work to be done. This committee reported, and its recommendations were adopted. The new job was defined by the committee as follows:

1. To promote Christian Stewardship and Evangelism in the Southern Convention—in its Conferences and its churches.
2. To share with pastors and with churches in the study of the basic principles of Christian Stewardship and Evangelism, and to find ways of applying the best principles and methods of both to the local churches.
3. The Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism shall be employed by the Executive Board of the Southern Convention, and be responsible to the Board; he shall be a member of the Convention Office staff and work cooperatively with them, but with his own special responsibilities in Stewardship and Evangelism.
4. He shall have no administrative responsibilities, except in his own field, and shall not serve as financial agent for any department of the Convention.

In his work, he will serve as resource leader in the promotion of "Our Christian World Mission," the denomination benevolent program at home and abroad, as related to the principles of Christian Stewardship. The field of Christian Stewardship will reach and serve all the interests of the Convention, the Conferences, and churches of the denomination in this area.

In this new service to Congregational Christians in the Southern Convention many new avenues and procedures must be developed. It is the plan that this new worker will spend most of his time working with the pastors and in the local churches. He will be essentially a "field worker" and not an administrator or "office" person.

REV. FRED PAGE REGISTER

He will lead Stewardship Institutes culminating in many instances in the Every Member Canvass. But money will not be the primary emphasis. Stewardship is a philosophy of life, not a method of raising money. It has to do with all our relationships of life: the acquisition of things, property, possessions, talents, and way and motive of using our talents, spending, saving, hoarding, giving, sharing, and disbursing any residue at life's end. This will be essentially a spiritual ministry. Since material possessions, time, and talents are our greatest evangelists, the Stewardship emphasis may easily be yoked with our program of Evangelism. Mr. Register will spend a lot of his time in evangelistic programs, through lay and personal visitation evangelism and in preaching in the traditional revival services. He will seek, with our pastors, to discover and develop other men who can and will give a portion of their time to stewardship and evangelism.

Though young in years, Mr. Register has had unusual success both in stewardship and evangelism. During the past eight years at Wake Chapel Church he has received 200 new members, 94 of whom came on profession of faith. During his ministry there the average attendance at both Sunday school and church worship services has almost tripled. He served Plymouth Church six years and Amelia Church five years respectively, where the work increased substantially. He has introduced a fully organized lay visitation evangelism program at his churches, with marked success. He has been the evangelist for special revival services in 34 of our churches during his short ministry, and has also assisted in special services outside the Southern Convention.

His work in stewardship has been no less colorful than in evangelism. While the amount a church contributes in dollars and cents is not the whole story of Christian Stewardship, it is often the acid test and it does reflect a wholesome concern. In 1944 when Mr. Register became supply pastor at Wake Chapel, the church gave for all purposes $1,600.48. In 1946 when he became their regular pastor the church gave a total of $3,477.00. In 1953 Wake Chapel contributed for all purposes $26,834.00, averaging $21,954.00 for 1951, 1952, 1953. Needless to say, the spiritual life of the members has become enriched, with dozens of tithers. Plymouth and Amelia churches likewise increased their giving record during his ministry.

Mr. Register served Lee's Chapel for a brief period, but there he led them in a building program, and their stewardship and evangelism grew substantially.

In each of the churches served by him the physical properties have been greatly improved: A new educational building and a parsonage at Wake Chapel; a Sunday school addition at Amelia; plans for improvements at Plymouth; and a new church building at Lee's Chapel.

Mr. Register is popular with all ages, and has had equal success in working with farm and non-farm people. He is a good pastor and an effective preacher. He is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Register, long time members and leaders at Grace's Chapel Church, near San-

(Continued on page 15.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Charge Given to Summer School Graduates

The following is the charge given to the Class of 1954 Summer School Graduates by President Leon Edgar Smith at the close of Commencement exercises on Friday evening, August 20, at eight o'clock:

"Since the days of childhood, you have been dreaming about your future, what you would do when you were a man or a woman. In more mature years you have been planning as to how to make your dreams of youth come true. In a moment of reality you knew that your real ability must be discovered, and that your talents must be developed and directed; that these ends could be achieved only on a college campus in a scholastic atmosphere, where your mind would meet with other minds and your ability matched with the ability of the great personalities of the past and present; that these achievements are necessary in preparation for the opportunities and responsibilities of life.

"Through public school, and now these four years in college, you have been making ready for life's great adventure. In all your dreaming, planning and preparing you have never envisioned a future such as now opens up before you."

"A world torn by strife, disturbed by political ideologies; its people part rich and part poor, some with plenty, some faced with actual starvation, some denying the existence of God, and others clinging to him as their only hope and the only hope of the world.

"This world, the world that is yours, needs a leader, a leader with conviction, with courage, with righteous daring, one who forgets self, who loves only God and people, and who fears only God, who believes that God and God alone can save the world, and that he will save the world through people who believe him without wavering, who trust him without question, and who follow him without faltering. Will you be that leader? Have faith; have faith in God, have faith in your fellowman, have faith in yourself. 'Who knows but that you have come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?'"

Nineteen-Fifty-Four and Fifty-Five

Prospects for the ensuing college year are very encouraging. We have had less trouble in completing our faculty. We have been fortunate in securing men and women who are well trained and experienced in their respective fields.

Miss Mary Zink of New Haven, Connecticut, will serve as Dean of Women. Miss Louise Moseley, of Gaffney, South Carolina, will serve as Physical Education instructor for Women. Dr. Alex Corriere of Pennsylvania and a recent Ph. D. graduate of the University of North Carolina, will be serving as Associate Professor of Modern Languages. Mr. John Bass of Alabama, at present studying abroad, will substitute for Professor J. H. Brasher in Business Administration. Mr. Brasher is away on leave studying for an advanced degree. Mr. Laurence Hedgepeth of Florida and a recent Master of Arts graduate of Columbia University, will instruct in the Music Department, taking the place of Professor John Westmoreland, who is on leave of absence for the year studying in Austria. Mr. Guy Owen, Jr., of North Carolina, a Master of Arts graduate from the University of North Carolina will be a member of our English Department staff, taking the place of Dr. James M. Hess. Miss Hazel Walker has been transferred from the Business Office to the Registrar's Office. She will serve as Registrar, replacing Professor A. L. Hook, for full time teaching in the Department of Physics. Miss Wanda Dofflemeyer from the Valley of Virginia, has been asked to take the position in the Business Office held by Miss Walker. These additions and changes in the administration give the college a very efficient faculty.

From present records in the Field Secretary's and Admissions' Offices, it is revealed that we may reasonably expect a very fine student body, not only from the standpoint of numbers, but from the standpoint of training and ability. Advanced enrollment indicates that Elon College shall open in September with between 700 and 800, and perhaps nearer 800 than 700, students. It looks as if we shall have the largest enrollment of students that we have had in the past three years. It is impossible to say definitely what the enrollment will be, but present figures are certainly encouraging.

At this writing, the school is taking a rest. These few days between the close of the summer school and the beginning of the regular fall session in September provides the members of the faculty with a respite that is much needed. The faculty will return to the campus on Friday, September 3, for a period of orientation, beginning at 2:00 Friday afternoon and closing with faculty dinner on Monday evening, September 6. During this program of orientation the President will present a program for the faculty that is designed to integrate the entire college curriculum for the year 1954-55 and acquaint each individual faculty member with his particular field of service and personal obligation to the college, the student body and the administration. By experience, these orientation periods for professors have proven of great worth to the faculty and to the school as a whole.

September 7, Tuesday following Labor Day, all freshmen will arrive. Where absolutely necessary a student will be permitted to register on Tuesday, but Wednesday, the 8th, is the regular day for freshman registration. Thursday, upperclassmen arrive and are registered. Regular classes begin on Friday morning, September 10, at 8:00. The first church service will be on Sunday morning, September 12, at 11:00. Reverend William J. Andes, formerly of Winston-Salem, North Carolina, the newly elected pastor of Elon College Community Church, will have charge of the service and deliver his first message to faculty and students. He will preach on September 5 to the church and community. Faculty and students will not be in the service until September 12. The church is enthusiastic about Mr. Andes' coming, and it is the hope and prayer of all that his ministry with us may be greatly blessed.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Summer is about over. Fall weather is already in the air. This means that three fourths of the church year is gone. Three more months—September, October and November—and we will find all the conference sessions' reports for the year will be in. Practically all payments that are to

(Continued on page 15.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

What About Pattie Lee?

So many of the women in our churches are asking what Pattie Lee Coghill is going to do—since it has been reported that she is to teach school in North Carolina, and do religious work in Ceylon—that I wrote her to find out.

She writes that she was thrilled with the possibilities of the field work in Ceylon, offered to her by our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. It is quite an honor for her to have been sought after by them for this position, and shows that she has proved her worth to our denominational leaders, as well as endearing herself to the "home folks" in this area.

After careful consideration of all the factors involved, however, she has decided to go ahead with the teaching position in the school in her home community near Henderson, North Carolina. This will give her a chance to live at the old home place, which she loves; to be near her brothers and sisters and their families, whom she adores; and to be relieved of the traveling around which has been increasingly difficult for her, and which would have been a part of her job in Ceylon.

So, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill will remain at Route 4, Henderson, for the time being, a loyal member of her Fuller's Chapel Church.

It is not easy to say all the thanks from all the women of the Southern Convention for all the things she has done for and with us. However, we are glad she is remaining nearby, still a member of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, and of the Southern Convention Woman's Mission Board. Come to see us, Pattie Lee!

* * * * *

Woman's Board to Meet

The Southern Convention Woman's Board will meet at the Hotel Warren, Warrenton, North Carolina, on Tuesday, September 14, beginning at 10:30 o'clock, according to the notice received from the secretary, Mrs. Edna Bresco, and from the president, Mrs. W. B. Williams.

If there are matters which anyone wishes to present to the Board, he or she will be welcome. If there are suggestions of things you think the Board should consider, you may write to Mrs. Williams at 1253 24th Street, Newport News, Virginia.

This Woman's Board is composed of the officers of the Woman's Missionary Convention and the departmental superintendents. Its job is to plan the work for our women. Any suggestions from any individual or society are always gladly received.

* * * * *

A Letter from Pakistan

This week a letter was received from Mrs. Bessie Sloan, written in Lahore, Pakistan, on August 20. I am sure you will be interested in parts of it:

"Since the middle of the summer, when we left Australia, we have stayed at eighteen different places and, without counting them up, I would say that we have visited at least three times that many mission projects. We have seen churches, training schools for pastors and for their wives (or the girls they are engaged to marry), medical colleges and hospitals, agricultural extension work, and adult literacy classes. Of this work, some has been in our own church, some Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Evangelical and Reformed, Angelican, United Church of South India, and other union projects.

"At Madura, we met two little girls whose school expenses are being shared by the church at Asheboro and the one at Chapel Hill. We also stayed overnight with the parents of Bot and Roger Phelps, students at Elon College.

"We should be very happy to share these experiences with as many of our churches as may ask us, as we did following our trip to Africa two years ago. It seems to work especially well when two sessions are planned, one in the afternoon and another in the evening, with a covered dish supper in between, as so many of the churches have used. This makes it possible to present the study book at one session, and slides and personal experiences at the other."

And now, in planning our year's program, let us remember to include the Sloans as they return from their wonderful trip. First-hand reporting is always so much better than reading a book! We are sure that many of our societies will want to take advantage of this wonderful opportunity for hearing about the church around the world.

* * * * *

Mt. Carmel Missionary Society Reports Accomplishments

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, near Windsor, Virginia, we feel, has accomplished something for missions during the past year.

Our Friendly Service project was to help secure goats for Puerto Rico. We observed World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship, and had a public program, and Thank Offering.

We were invited to Antioch for the review of our home mission book, "Within These Borders," by Mrs. Frank Morgan. A large number of our members took advantage of this opportunity and thoroughly enjoyed the review as well as the warm hospitality given them.

Open house for our new parsonage and a lawn party are some of the things having been sponsored by the society.

Our pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Ellis Clark, gave the foreign book review at Mt. Carmel. Groups from Windsor and Antioch were in attendance.

As the year draws to a close, we are striving to reach our goals in all departments, and we feel that we will.

Having done this, we shall know that our time, talents and gifts, and our love for our fellowmen, has in a small way helped to make our world a better place in which to live.

MRS. B. H. CARR,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Hunterdale News

The September issue of the Hunterdale Union Christian Church News came to my husband. Always curious, I looked it over—and found what I was looking for, news of the women. Gentle hint—if it came every month there could be some news from that church about their women's activities.

(Continued on page 9.)

Missions at Home and Abroad

Seeing Something Extra!

Bombs in Indonesia; terrorists in Malaya; and now an uprising in Pondicherry! This phase of our trip was planned to observe Christian missions in action. The plan is working successfully, but seeing Communism grab every bit of dissatisfaction and use it to its own ends has been thrown in as an extra.

After a most interesting visit in Ceylon and Southern India, we went to the little French territory of Pondicherry on the east coast of India. We were warned time and again that we would not be allowed into Pondicherry, and if we got in, we would not be allowed back into India. We had secured our Pondicherry visa in New York and felt sure that it would be honored, but we also knew that going into Pondicherry cancelled our India visa and we had no assurance that we could get another.

The great majority of the people in Pondicherry are Indian. They naturally feel that since the English gave up control of their part of the Indian peninsula the French should do the same. The French governments have changed so often that no government got around to paying attention to Pondicherry. However, Mendes-France's action in Indo China is leading him to deal with other foreign possession problems, and evidently to an agreement, as yet unannounced, to withdraw from Pondicherry.

But the Communists are not allowing this to take place without claiming credit for it. Although the French government has called in all police armaments and has destroyed very great quantities of papers and stamps, and the French people are being inoculated, preparatory for travel and are offering their ears and furniture for sale, the Communists are putting on parades and demonstrations to try to prove that it is they who are driving the French out. We found ourselves in the midst of all this, but extensive conferences with both Pondicherry and Indian police got our exit permits and a new Indian visa, and we are once more in India. What next?

It is good to see India again after sixteen years. Rapid progress has been made since we were here in 1938. With twice as many people as the United States and only half the size, India is full of problems. It is an Oriental country becoming one of the world's great nations.

It is hard for the Western mind to understand the Oriental. We expect the Oriental to want the things we want, but often he does not. We expect him to try to get in on the winning side in power politics, while all he wants is to steer clear of both sides and be let alone.

Indians don't like Communism, but they feel very sympathetic to China as a fellow Oriental nation and are convinced that the present government should have a place in the United Nations. When I suggested that both China and Formosa be recognized as governments and given seats in the United Nations, but that China's place in the "Big Five" be given to India, I got a cold reception. India does not want to get involved in problems apart from the Orient.

People of this part of the world have been shoved around so long by the English, French, Portuguese and Dutch, that they are united in a determination to throw off Western domination. This explains Goa and Pondicherry. Five of the seven largest nations in the world are here in the Orient. Their culture is far older than that of Europe, so why, they question, should they let Europe be boss?

The interesting angle is that this attitude also applies to America. The Orientals are desperately afraid of America, fear that we are trying to dominate them economically. Indians have not forgot two years ago, when they were starving and wanted to buy some of our excess wheat, our Congress haggled about what we should require of India to do in order to be allowed to buy wheat.

(The fact is that the United States has been very liberal in supplying help to India. It is been demonstrated more than once that the Indian government has a good "forget-ry."—Ed.)

Indians point out that our military aid to Pakistan can have no possible effect on Communism, but is a means whereby we are coming to dominate Pakistan economically.

Indians, as a class, are strongly anti-Communist, but they do not fear Communism and are sure they can handle it in their own way. However, they are desperately afraid that they are slipping into American economic domination, which they feel is much worse than European political domination. "Ownership of another country's land is now old fashioned," one Indian told me. "Today's style is to control the economy of other people. That way it can be all profit without obvious responsibility."

We are beginning to understand something of the political and economic position of the Orient, but it is extremely complicated. We are grateful for the opportunity that is ours to study it.

W. W. SLOAN.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 8.)

ties printed on this page, without necessitating a special write-up from someone there!

This is what I gleaned:

"New aluminum screens for the Fellowship Hall have been provided by the three circles. The cost was $160.00. Go 'way, flies.

"The women are busy at work to pay for some $500.00 worth of tables and chairs for the Fellowship Hall bought in the spring. We now are fairly well equipped to feed about 200 persons at one time.

"The Hunterdale women are good cooks. Their culinary fame is spreading. They have just recently entertained the Philemont Scout reunion. They will entertain the Ruritans and the Eastern Star in the fall.

"The Circles and the Fellowship will complete the election of officers at the September meetings. Officers take office in October.

"India is the country for Missionary Study this year. It is one of the Strategic lands for the Christian Witness. Communism and Christianity are competing there. The Bible Study is the Book of Acts."

A person is not mature until he has both an ability and a willingness to see himself as one among others and to do unto those others as he would have them do to him.

—H. A. Overstreet.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

We took a Rocket Trip to the Planet Mars the other night. It was exciting, filled with adventure and very real.

Let me tell you about it. Some of us had been to the Morehead Planetarium in Chapel Hill to see the Easter and Christmas shows but none of us had ever seen (or been on) a rocket trip.

The Planetarium houses a wonderful instrument that tells the story of the stars and the universe in which our world spins. The instrument makes possible many unbelievable views and scenes which help people like us, who don't know much about space and stars, to learn more.

Our tickets purchased we gave them to a young space man dressed in space clothing. However we knew he was an earthling because he took tickets with one hand and held a copy of Shakespeare with the other. We peeped and saw that he was reading Hamlet. Once seated, by another spaceman, we waited for our trip to begin. We were told to put on (imaginary) magnetic shoes to keep us from floating into space and to fasten our seatbelts. The captain of our rocket ship spoke to us, pointed out the instruments, and with a great flash and swoosh we were off, seeing earth beneath us, passing closely over the moon, dodging planets and asteroids until we approached Mars.

This summer our earth is closer to Mars than it will be for some time. That is why Mars was chosen for a show. By music, description, scenes, movies, slides and props we were taken on a makebelieve journey that felt very real. Hope you can try the flight someday.

* * * * *

Worth-While Activity

By M. LOUISE HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Sally went up and down the street ringing doorbells. The neighbors were exasperated. Why didn't her mother provide play equipment in her own yard so that Sally would be contented to stay there? Perhaps Sally wouldn't be contented anywhere, but her mother should try to have her play at home and give her materials for creative work. Sally needs to learn to make things—to occupy her hands, and to have her mind taken up with busyness of various kinds, such as knitting or sewing for her dolls.

Then there is Jimmy. Mother says Jimmy is an impudent boy. She is constantly trying to help him in different ways, but it does not always work. She invites him to speak to her guests. "Hello, Mrs. Moose!" he calls to one of them. "Hello, Mrs. Skunk!" is the greeting to another. Mother, of course, is embarrassed, and when Father hears about it, he reasons with Jimmy. The boy is provided with all sorts of "busy" work, both for inside the house and outside, yet his inexhaustible pep gets the better of him. What is to be done, and why does he behave in this manner?

It may be just exuberant spirits controlling the child. It may be that Jimmy is longing for more attention. It may be "just boy!" But the matter should be handled with a great deal of thought. Every night, after he has had his shower and hops into his bed his father should talk the day's activities over with him. This is a reasonable manner of assisting him; so is praise, but there must be something worthy of praise before that can be given.

There should be guidance when children are small—unconscious guidance as far as the children are concerned, but day-by-day guidance, nevertheless. This will include giving them the opportunity to play by themselves and teaching them how to do it constructively.

Very early in life there should be periods of quiet with plenty of occupation. In fact, children should learn to play alone and to find pleasure in it. There will be many occasions in later life when this background of quietness and busyness will prove itself of real value.

There are parts of each day, also, when the children need their parents' cooperation in play and work. There are times to play alone, but there are, just as truly, times of family togetherness. I remember a father who played table games with his young daughter every evening after supper, and that happy memory did much to hold them close together through some very difficult periods that followed. Many families very often have a story hour before bedtime. If the selections are well chosen this can prove a lasting blessing. In one home of which I know there is a picture hour, when reproductions of pictures by great artists are looked at and talked about. Parents gain a close relationship with their boys and girls when they play with them, read with them, and work with them.

A certain father enjoys wood carving. He has a gift for fashioning, from small pieces of wood, birds of great beauty. Every summer he teaches woodcraft in a boys' camp. His young son has always been encouraged to watch his father and to question him. He tries to carve as his father does. Who knows? He, too, may sometime become a craftsman whose hobby will provide him with a comfortable remuneration. Already he seems to be showing some skill in handling the small knife that his father has given him. But this activity has had a far more important influence than the craftsmanship reveals. Father and son have both been benefited. The father has learned much about the present-day's active and social life of a boy. And the boy? His whole character has been strengthened by his father's high principles. Never were they preached to him, but they were lived in such a way that it was impossible not to assimilate them.

Is it any affair of yours that many hundreds of communities here in America have no churches? Is it your concern that in many places—especially in rural areas where population is decreasing—churches that for generations were the center of community life and permeated all its interests are being closed because the people are no longer able to maintain them? Is it in any way your business when a downtown church in the city sees its members moving to the suburbs, watches the nearby residences becoming rooming-houses, and then, at just the moment when its services are most critically needed, is compelled to limit its ministry for want of support? If the Christian mission in the world is inconceivable without the church, then what happens to the church is your business and mine—if we are Christians.—Truman B. Douglas in "Mission to America."

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Tips From Tom

Please send news of your youth organization direct to me at Box 103, Elon College, N. C. Material should reach me not later than Thursday before the week of publication. This is particularly necessary when the material calls for editing or if it has to be typewritten. Type it if possible, otherwise see that it is legibly written. Thanks.

* * *

Elon College is opening soon for its fall semester. Youth of our own church who are interested in higher education should look into the advantages of our own school. Study at Elon College.

* * * * *

Elm Avenue Fellowship Plans Trip

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Elm Avenue Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, is planning a trip to Washington, D. C., the week-end of the 20th of August.

We plan to visit Washington, and then come back to visit the Luray Caverns and go across the Skyline Drive.

JANET RICHARDSON.

* * *

NOTE.—The above item was not received at the office of publication till Monday of this week. We hope that Elm Avenue young folks took the trip as planned and had a wonderful time. Why not write Mr. Madren and tell him what happened?

* * * * *

Greensboro Youth at Work

For approximately two years our Pilgrim Highs and Pilgrim Stewards have been raising money to purchase lighting equipment and curtains for the stage in the fellowship hall of our church.

We have undertaken various projects such as rummage sales, serving at church suppers and other group activities to swell this fund, which to date totals $500.00. It was our intention to spend this entire sum for the much needed equipment, but we were fortunate enough to have this donated by Mr. Phil Wicker, to whom we are greatly indebted.

Now that our anticipated need has been met, we have decided to use the $500.00 for the furnishing of two Sunday school classrooms used by our young people. This fall we are planning to present a play which will give our congregation and friends a chance to see our beautiful stage equipment in use for the first time.

JANE TATE,
President, P. H. F.

The White Ribbon Suggested It

The following is a true incident that took place in the dining car of a Pennsylvania Railroad train:

A young woman wearing her White Ribbon pin entered the diner and was placed at a table directly across from where three young women were seated. The three girls had given their orders and were waiting to be served. Suddenly one of the girls beckoned the waiter and in a low tone spoke hurriedly to him. When the girls were served, the White Ribbon young women observed that while cocktails were placed before two of the girls, the girl who had spoken to the waiter was served milk.

When the girls were about to retire from the dining car, the one who had been served milk lingered at the table where our White Ribbon young woman was dining. "This evening," she said, "you have saved me from taking my first drink. I am a reporter—have been away from home seven years—my mother is an active White Ribboner, my father an honorary member.

"When I left home to engage in this work, I promised my mother I would not touch intoxicating liquor. I have kept my promise, but this evening after seven difficult days covering important news I yielded to the persuasion of my companions and ordered a cocktail. Then you came into the dining car, and I saw your white ribbon. I saw more than that. I saw my mother and father on their knees praying that God would keep watch over their daughter and keep her safe.

"Their prayers were answered, and tonight I will write my mother telling her always to wear her white ribbon lest some other girl or boy yield to the temptation to take their first drink, as I almost did tonight."

—E. O. Leonhard.

Rum on the Radio

This is the age of the radio and television! People remain in the warmth and comfort of their homes, or their rooms in the hotel and tune in from coast to coast and around the world! That is why the wet cause is triumphant today with its mounting gross and per capita consumption of alcoholic liquors and for which its victims will go through hell and high water to get.

Do you want the news of the day? Beer will follow it without time to reach the radio. Are you interested in music? The sound of the Symphony has not died down, and beer of every known brand, locally and nationally, floods the room and places a mortgage on the children who learn to repeat the wet jingles. Are you interested in the great American game of baseball? Anheuser-Busch, makers of Budweiser, have purchased the St. Louis "Cards," and booze is soon to control the popular sport by subsidy or purchase.

Turn the dial, and you are charmed with a chorus of children's voices. It is the prelude to the beer that made Milwaukee famous, which, the beer broadcasts say, belongs in the home. "What a beer!" Yes, what a BIER! It is a broadcast of the "largest selling brand" that floats like soap into the home on the wings of a woman's captivating voice. Every device of the devil is employed to catch the unwary multitude, including the entire family, to soak America with suds!

No place, no hour, no occasion and no event is immune from this insulting invasion to extend the consumption of the world's greatest curse.

Radio and television have become the curse of mankind, and will sell their monopoly of the greatest discovery and invention of the ages to the devil to intoxicate the nation. Some way and soon, must be found to silence the rum radio, or we will become a nation of drunkards.

—Progress.

The function of religion is not to monopolize life, but to provide balance and control and sanity. This makes worship very important.

—Stanley North.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Christian Citizenship and Cooperation"

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 12, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Romans 13:10.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Romans 13:1-10; I Corinthians 3:4-9; Galatians 5:13-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 41:6-10.

A Christian is a citizen of two worlds. His true, and his ultimate citizenship is in heaven. But he also has to live in this world. And there is an intimate relationship between the two citizenships. His citizenship in the hereafter should make for a better citizenship here. And his citizenship here offers an opportunity for preparing for his citizenship in the hereafter. Love of God ought to make a man love his country; and love of country should foster love of God. God would have the citizens of his Kingdom to show themselves good citizens of their country.

Power As a Trust.

Years ago a great American said, "Public office is a public trust." Paul was saying the same thing when in today's lesson he said, "For there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been instituted by God." Men do not create power, they simply channel it. Power comes from God. Whatever power any man has, has been given him by God. And it constitutes a sacred and solemn trust. Public office is a public trust. Possessors of power are stewards of power.

Governments and God.

According to Paul, governments have been appointed by God. They are God's means of providing for law and order, for doing for individuals and groups what individuals and groups are not able to do for themselves. Governments, local, state and national, give guarantees to individuals, provide benefits and privileges, preserve law and order, promote personal and social welfare, and give solidarity and strength to communities. They provide and preserve physical, educational, moral and even spiritual blessings for the citizens of the units involved. Governments—no certain kind of government—are ordained by God for the good of God's children.

Obedience to Government.

"Let every person be subject unto the governing authorities. . . . He who resists the authorities resists what God has appointed. . . ." A prime duty of the citizens of a state or nation is obedience to government, obedience to law. If laws are bad, they ought to be changed, but as long as they are laws they ought to be obeyed. There were many people who thought that the Eighteenth Amendment was wrong and was bad, and they had a right to work for its repeal. But while it was the law of the land it should have been obeyed. Christians face an acid test in our day in regard to the Supreme Court decision in regard to segregation. There are many difficult problems involved in that decision, and many distasteful features about it to many good people. But the citizens of our country should seek solutions to the problem within the law.

Citizens and Governments.

"For rulers are not a terror to good conduct, but to bad. Would you have no fear of him who is in authority? Then do what is good, and you will receive his approval, for he is God's servant for your good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear the sword in vain; he is the servant of God to execute his wrath on the wrong-doer." The man who observes traffic laws need have no fear of the State Police Patrol Car. The man who behaves himself need not fear the policeman in his town or city. Law enforcement agencies are not designed against good people, but against bad people. Criminals and crooked citizens fear the law, but not law-abiding citizens. Governments are instituted for the good of the people. The good citizen sees in the officer and the court protection; the criminal sees the judgment of his wrong-doing. The average citizen is not afraid of the FBI. Why should he be?

"Therefore one must be subject, not only to avoid God's wrath, but also for the sake of conscience," True obedience to law, and respect for government is more than a matter of fear of punishment; it is a matter of Christian conscience. A citizen ought to be good not because he is afraid, but because he loves his country and seeks its highest welfare and interest.

"For the same reason you also pay taxes, for the authorities are ministers (servants—that is what the word actually means) of God, attending to this very thing. Pay all of them their dues, taxes to whom taxes are due. . . ." The government guarantees protection, provides schools and streets and sewers, police protection, roads, etc., local, community, national. Those who enjoy these privileges ought to pay their proportionate share of the cost of providing them. Taxes are more than a necessary evil; they are a means of providing and protecting some of life's finest privileges and possessions.

Citizens and Bad Governments.

"Honor to whom honor is due, respect to whom respect is due." What about bad rulers? What about bad government? The citizen is under obligation to honor the authorities; but the authorities are under obligation to conduct themselves in such a way that they deserve honor and respect. And citizens have a right, a divine right to rebel against evil government. The framers of the Declaration of Independence were on safe ground when they asserted their right to renounce their allegiance to the king who was denying their elemental rights and privileges. There is a divine right to revolt. And a Christian citizen has a higher allegiance than to the state; his highest allegiance is to Christ and God. Paul did not approve of Nero; but he asked for respect to government as an institution, and for obedience to established law.

Beyond Law to Love.

"For he who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law." Paul here puts citizenship on the highest grounds—the ground of love. He has been saying that we must pay every lawful obligation to government; now he says we must go further and pay every just debt to our neighbors. Beyond the law of the land is the law of God. It is not enough to keep out of jail; he is to help others keep out of jail. It is not enough just to obey the laws of the state; he must obey the laws of love. He must not only re-

(Continued on page 15.)

When Vision Is Dim

A Sermon

By REV. RICHARD K. MORTON.

"Come and see the works of God." Psalm 66 5.

"Blessed are your eyes, for they see." Matthew 13:16.

The dimness of our souls is an experience that comes to all of us at times. Physical, mental or spiritual powers are low, and life tumbles in upon us.

We can see the Saviour, however, if we will, when we cannot see anyone else. Spiritual forces are the most available of all to any who call upon them in sincerity and humbleness of spirit.

Now, today, you and I, facing problems and opportunities and situations of varying importance, must find some way of handling these moments when vision is dim.

First of all, let us look at the Master, and take our strained glance away from the glitter and blurred hurry of the world. Maybe we cannot see much because it is all a jumble to us, and we haven't taken the trouble to note the presence of the Lord. One concern, then, is surely to come and see the works of our God, to remove anything which may handicap our vision of heavenly things. It may be that hates, prejudice, anger, evil—or much more—are what is really dimming our vision. We must not obstruct our eyes if we want to see.

A second concern is to get closer to those who can see right now. We need their help, their stimulus, their guidance. We may simply need to get closer to what we want to see and closer to other people. We may be standing afar off. As we stand alone, our vision is dimmer than when we have the inspiration of the vision of others.

Another interest lies in opening up life more, and looking through a larger aperture, as it were, out upon life. Perhaps we have been trying to get a clear vision of great and lofty experiences from a keyhole vantage point. Vision sometimes is dim simply because we have put various types of blinders around our eyes.

For another matter, we may find our vision too dim because we have not looked long enough or carefully enough at what we want to see. Our gaze has been too fleeting, too careless. How many there are of us who never take a really good look at God or ourselves and who never get our fellow men into correct focus. Many, too, fail to take a look within themselves. Sometimes the dimness of our view of outward things lies in the prior failure of the inward look.

If our vision is not to be dim, then we must learn to love as Jesus loved. We must find in life much to love, to exult in, to rejoice over, and to be happy about. Happiness is connected with truth. If we know God and if we know his truth, we have something to be happy about. If we are not happy, we do not see.

More intensive study and prayer and serving others will also do much to remove the dimness of our souls. The world is bright and full of goodness and power and all the manifold gifts of God; but if we do not look, and if we have not the spiritual culture required, we may be unaware of all this. Prayer and study of the Word opens up the mind and heart so that they can see these wonders of his Law and his Spirit.

Rejoice and joy in what you can now see—that is likewise an important injunction. Some of us may develop unnecessary dimness because we will not make use of what we can already see and use. We strain for something else. Our vision is always for something far off, perhaps unreal, but now unattainable. While this is good to a point, it may take us too much from the full utilization of what we have. Jesus counselled no one to be a brooding do-nothing and to sit down and contemplate mildly what might come to pass in the distant future.

To see, a life has to be stirred up, aroused, concentrated. If the mind is to be challenged to see and to enter into the great blessings of the Kingdom, then the values and powers of our lives must swing into action and become articulate and start operating. "Come and see," said the Psalmist. Blessed are your eyes, for they see," said Jesus to those who were able to glimpse truth and reality hidden from the understanding of others.

When vision is dim, we need to stir up the spiritual gifts within us. We need to look more earnestly at our supreme Guide.

Likewise we need to come closer to those whose present vision is much less than our own. There is where we are needed, and there we can find a challenge to see more clearly for ourselves into the heart of life. We get into active participation in some stirring enterprise, and our vision becomes at once greater.

If our daily walk is in the light, as should be that of the children of light, sooner or later that light will infiltrate into the soul, and we shall see. If our hands are busy with ministries for others, our eyes can see better. If our feet are constantly on some path of service or love, our eyes can see better. If we have put on the whole armor of God and are fortified against those agencies which would take from us the vision and appreciation of spiritual values, then we can see better.

When our vision is dim, let us see with the eyes of Jesus, and draw close to him, that we may be guided where we cannot ourselves see. If our vision is dim, then let us get into the light, and draw more closely into focus some opportunity near at hand. If our vision is dim, let us look more intently, let us love more, let us pray more, let us work more. For it is thus that the Kingdom of God unfolds before us and around us, and then we begin to realize that it is also within us!

A STATISTICAL REPORT ON THE NATIONAL RELIGIOUS CLIMATE.

(Continued from page 5.)

in the period since 1940, as in the comparable period of 1926 to 1940. Ten million were added in the former period, compared to 30 million since 1940.

And to explode a widely-held notion that there were more religiously-minded Americans a hundred years ago than now, the Yearbook shows that less than 20 percent of the population held church membership in 1850. More than three times this percentage now are members.

I would have you wise unto that which is good and simple unto that which is evil.—St. Paul.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Three men sat in the superintendent's home and talked about the orphanage. They were reared here. They were faithful to the place that gave them a home in needy childhood, and reared them to places of honor and trust in manhood. They were a committee appointed by their Homecoming Society to further the project being done by the society in memory of their former superintendent, Charles D. Johnston. As I listened at their talk and plans I was genuinely proud of them. In my life I have sat in on many committees. These fellows are real thinkers and planners. They had made good in their own avocations. They had good businesses or jobs and they were highly honored in their walk in life. I thought as they worked together how proud you, who have done things for this home, would be of them.

They will propose at their forthcoming meeting that the Homecoming Society contact their members to complete a fund of $5,000.00 with which to install a coldstorage unit to be located in the large fruit and canned goods rooms of the Baby Home. They have on hand a little more than $2,400.00, and they hope before next spring to have the remainder. They will ask only former "children" of the orphanage for contributions and they have good faith to believe that the required funds will be gladly contributed by them.

More than 7,000 quarts of vegetables have been canned here this summer, and today a full crew of boys and girls are collecting and preparing tomatoes with the aid of the adult helpers. The hay crop is good. The early corn is not much, but late corn and other late crops are doing fine.

School begins here on the first day of September. It means something to fit out 80 children for school. We already owe the people who sell us clothes, shoes, school supplies, etc. Therefore I earnestly hope any Sunday school or other organization that can spare a part of their funds to the orphanage will remember us at this time. And I also hope people reading this letter will make a little sacrificial donation to help us right at this time. Just breathe a prayer of gratitude to God for his goodness to you and come to the help of some needy children at your orphanage.

September fifth is homecoming day at the orphanage. We shall serve dinner at 12:30 to all who let us know they will be here. From the return cards mailed in a letter to the "children" it looks now like we shall have the biggest attendance ever. At 3:00 in the afternoon the general public is invited to attend a simple service of worship in the Holt Memorial Chapel. The formal dedication service will be held a little later when church officials will be asked to join with orphanage folks and the Holt Family in a service appropriate for the occasion.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR AUGUST 26, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Two beds:
Rev. & Mrs. H. P. Bozarth, Elon College, N. C.
Croquet set:
Mrs. J. L. Foster, Elon College, N. C.
Clothing:
Mrs. J. R. Simms, Wakefield, Va.
Coupons:
Mrs. W. J. Andes, Winston-Salem, N. C.
Mrs. R. L. Gilliam, Sr., Burlington, N. C.
Coupons and buttons:
Mrs. R. L. Williamson, Charlottesville, Va.
Coat:
King's Dress Shop, Burlington, N. C.
Tooth brushes, tooth paste and socks:
Mrs. O. R. Vaughan's Circle, Greensboro, First Church.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 8,714.10
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Wake Chapel $ 65.60
Eastern Va. Conference:
Windsor S. S. $ 10.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Bethel S. S. $ 4.86
Howard's Chapel S. S. ... 2.00
Mt. Zion 5.53
Reidsville S. S. 60.00
Union (Va.) S. S. 5.00
77.39
Western N. C. Conference:
Antioch (C) $ 20.00
Zion 30.00
50.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Linville S. S. $ 5.84
Newport S. S. 23.94
Wood's Chapel S. S. 4.00
33.78
Total $ 236.77
Grand total $ 8,950.87

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $21,429.03
Vacation Bible School,
Plymouth Christian Ch.,
Special offering $ 7.65
Cradle Roll Dept., Suffolk
Christian Ch., Special offering. 43.00
In Memory of Mrs. Altheous L. Beale 20.00
In Memory of Dr. Will S.
Long 3.00
Special Gifts 10.00
83.65
Grand total $21,512.68
Total for the week $ 320.42
Total for the year $30,463.55

The fundamental principle of stewardship is that God, by creation and redemption, is the real owner of all material and spiritual resources. What has man to give God? Nothing but a surrendered will and the living obedience of a good steward. Is it not apparent that there can be no "service" pleasing to God which is not the expression or confession of stewardship?—Selected.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

BEALE.

Mrs. Beale, the wife of Mr. Altheons L. Beale passed away on August 11, 1954, at her home near Chuckatuck. Although she had been in failing health for several years, her death came unexpectedly. Her resiliency was remarkable, for on several occasions during the past few years she had been critically ill, and yet she always rallied and recovered, and resumed in large measure her activities and her visits with members of the family and friends.

Mrs. Beale lived not only a long life—she was seventy-nine when she died; she lived a good life. She was a good woman, a faithful wife—she and Mr. Beale had been married for nearly fifty seven years—a devoted and wise mother, a dependable home-maker, a true friend, a good neighbor, a faithful member of the church, and a consistent Christian. Next to her home, she loved her church—she had been a member of Oakland for fifty-six years—and she attended it regularly through the years, and came even during her days of declining health and weakness. She reared a family of six daughters and one son, and had nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. They rise up and call her blessed. She knew whom she believed, and she was fully persuaded that he was able to keep that which she had committed unto him against that day. Her good works do follow her.

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

This is enlightened Christian nurture. It recognizes that man's spiritual nature will reflect the seed from which it grows. The Holy Scriptures are the record of man's increasing and deepening awareness of God. This awareness has nothing to fear from the findings of modern science for such merely magnify the reality of God and the timelessness of the Way of Life as revealed in Jesus.

"We hold it to be the mission of the Church of God to proclaim the gospel to all mankind, exalting the worship of the one true God and laboring for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace, and the realization of human brotherhood."

The Eternal Quest for the Christian Way inexorably leads to a dedication in service—to bring the word to those who have not heard it, to lift the incubus of ignorance, superstition and prejudice from the backs of all men everywhere, to assess all men as children of a universal Father, to solve human difficulties, individual and corporate, as brothers in a common Christian adventure.

"Depending, as did our fathers, upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth, we work and pray for the transformation of the world into the kingdom of God, and we look with faith for the triumph of righteousness and the life everlasting."

This is the conclusive conviction of one who dares to call himself "Christian"—that, if he serves as a worthy steward of time and talents and means, he can have an influence for Christian good upon his civilization and that, regardless of the discouragements and antagonisms and disillusionments which all too often rise to sustain doubt, nothing which is good and true and just can be lost in the economy of God. This I Believe.

Questions for Discussion.

1. Why should everyone have some sort of creed to live by?
2. How does the 1913 Statement meet today's needs?
3. What are the most important parts of a creed?
4. When should a creed be changed?
5. What does your creed consist of?

THE REV. FRED P. REGISTER BECOMES SECRETARY

(Continued from page 6.)

ford, N. C. He is the brother of Rev. Kenneth D. Register, pastor of Union Ridge Church. He graduated from Elon College in the class of 1947 and received his B.D. degree from the Divinity School of Duke University in 1950. He married the former Miss Elizabeth Jernigan, of Godwin, N. C., (Elon '47). They have three children: Fred Page, Jr., age four; Katherine Elizabeth, age two, and David Lee, age one month.

Mr. Register, though only 29 years of age, has been a leader in our Eastern North Carolina Conference, where he has served as president and in other capacities. He is at present chairman of the Stewardship Commission of the Southern Convention, and is a member of the Executive Board.

We anticipate for Mr. Register a successful ministry amongst us in the field of Christian stewardship and evangelism. We earnestly beseech our people to support him with their prayers and hearty co-operation. No other work is more important to the discharging of our responsibilities as Christian than are Christian stewardship and evangelism. We believe that in the services of this full time leader in these important fields our churches will grow in grace and in good works.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 7.)

be made on conference apportionments will be in. To date, Elon College has received from the Sunday schools and churches of the Convention only a few dollars more than one third of its annual apportionment. Many churches wait until the fall months to pay the major portion of their apportionments.

In mid-summer the crop conditions in North Carolina were terribly discouraging. The rains came, however, late for the early corn, but in time for the money crop in North Carolina. It is amazing how tobacco will improve under sufficient rain. Prospects for this crop, which at this time is being harvested, are very encouraging. This will mean that our rural churches will be in a position to meet their church obligations which will be encouraging to all. The college has a very small amount to report this week, but there are other weeks ahead. We will hope that sizeable payments will be made in the near future.

Previously reported	$ 5,350.16
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Lee's Chapel S. S.	$ 19.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Shady Grove	$ 20.00
	39.00
Total to date	$ 5,389.16

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

spect those who are in high seats of government; he must respect the personality of even the lowest citizen.

What a community and what a country we would have if men were governed in their relationships with one another by Christ's law of love.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

The spiritual life is best exemplified in good health, a joyful heart, kindness, consideration for others, good habits, and gratitude to God for life and its wonderful gifts and possibilities.—H. S. Hardman.

Our Churches, the Conscience of Economic Life

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE FROM THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST

On Labor Day America pays respect to the progress and achievements of its workers, extols the dignity and importance of work, and revitalizes the tradition and ideal of people working together for the common good.

Over the years the Labor Sunday Message has been primarily concerned with workers and their representative organizations. Therefore it is to them that this message is primarily directed. We wish all workers well, extend to them our greetings, and point out what the Christian effort toward the ideal relationship among human beings will mean for all persons.

This relationship is described by the word "community" in the sense of the responsible society. In "community" people live and work together for the betterment of all. They do not contend to get the better of one another. Striving for material goals alone, to the exclusion of spiritual and moral values, leads to family discord and industrial bitterness. However to struggle for such elementary needs as food, clothing and shelter, for a recognized status in society, and for justice, is the right and duty of all men. The best hope that material requirements will be met is steady advancement toward the Christian ideal of brotherhood under God in relations between person and person and between groups, including labor and management.

Members of Christian churches are bound by their commitment to Jesus Christ. The obligation to strive under God for good human relationships rests alike upon everyone who works, whether with mind or muscle, whether in the home, in the shop, in the office, or on the farm. While having different functions, labor, management and owners are nevertheless under the moral imperative to seek the goal of Christian community. In such a climate Christian principles can effectively influence the relations of management and labor.

The ideal of "community" in daily work requires full acceptance of the worth of the where should give way to consideration for them as persons. Only where respect for personality . . . Injustice toward workers everysonality . . . prevails do individuals have full opportunity to grow.

Security has similar significance. Our economic system should afford for all the opportunity to work so as to remove the fear of unemployment and poverty. Labor unions today represent security to their members. . . . This desire for security leads unions to take up such issues as regular employment, the buying power of workers, and the effect of the automatic factory upon employment.

Freedom from want, whether want is caused by sickness, old age or unemployment, is important both for the well-being of its members and the stability of society. Wide contrast in the security of different groups of people blocks the path of those who seek Christian human relationships.

Power, responsibly used, has a proper place in "community." This holds equally for management and labor. Power can destroy or power can create. Christian teaching does not countenance the use of power for selfish interest, but it does encourage the use of united strength for the common good as an expression of Christian love. The use of power to win in industrial conflicts must be disciplined by the desire for what is best for all concerned. The fruits of victory and defeat are often pride and resentment that lead to further strife. Yet management and workers need each other and no enterprise can exist without their co-operation. Not total victory but mutual adjustment should be sought by each.

Consequently, good faith is always essential. Mutual respect for rights, mutual acceptance of obligation, mutual trustworthiness and goodwill are qualities which Christians should infuse into all situations where labor and management meet.

Christian churches can be the conscience of our economic life. . . .

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1954

NUMBER 35

Scouting for a Better America

Troop No. 50, Boy Scouts of America, sponsored by the Rosemont Christian Church, South Norfolk, Virginia, attended camp at Camp Darden, near Franklin, Virginia, July 18-24, 1954. The above picture was made of the boys and their scoutmaster, assistants and sponsors before they left for camp.

(See article on page 2)

News Flashes

THE CHRISTIAN SUN expresses its sympathy to the L. L. Bond family of our Richmond, Va., Church in the death of Mrs. Bond's mother, Mrs. Mae MacNeil.

The Rev. L. M. Presnell, who has been undergoing treatment in Moore County Hospital, was discharged last week, and expected to be able to fill his appointment for the first Sunday in September.

Mrs. Kenneth M. Lindner of our Eutaw Community Church in Fayetteville, N. C., sailed from Seattle, Washington on September 7, to join her husband, Chaplain (Capt.) K. M. Lindner, who is stationed with Army Headquarters in Tokyo, Japan. Chaplain Lindner was the first pastor of the Eutaw Church, and we wish this couple much happiness and god-speed in their new work. We hope that they will be willing to share with us their impressions of our Christian mission in Japan from their vantage point.

A Preview of Sunday School Lesson Materials

A preview of Sunday school lesson material for the fall quarter will be held at Ingram Congregational Christian Church, Ingram, Virginia, on Sunday, September 26.

There will be a study group for teachers, assistants, and prospective teachers for each class of the Sunday school, and also a study group for Sunday school superintendents and assistants. Well-trained and experienced teachers will preview next quarter's lessons, demonstrate methods of teaching, and handwork. The teachers are:

Nursery (Age 3) — Mrs. Martin Garren, Greensboro, N. C.

Kindergarten (Ages 4, 5) — Mrs. J. C. Cordle, Greensboro, N. C.

Primary (Ages 6, 7, 8) — Misses Margaret Rowland and Evelyn Stewart, Greensboro, N. C.

Junior (Ages 9, 10, 11) — Mrs. David W. Shepherd, Virgilina, Va.

Intermediate or Junior High (Ages 12, 13, 14) — Miss Ruth Dunn, South Norfolk, Va.

Older Young People and Adults —
(Continued on page 11.)

Boy Scouting at Rosemont Church, South Norfolk

(See cut on front page.)

To the young boy, Scouting serves as a guide along the trail of self-reliance, citizenship and physical fitness.

The community of Portlock has been fortunate in having had a good, active Scout Troup in operation since about 1925. The success of these troops have been due to the great leadership of the various scoutmasters and their assistants. The fact that the scout program stirs up a little fun with a wholesome, instructive course has always kept a full attendance of boys.

One of the most prominent personalities during the early days of scouting in Portlock was Scoutmaster J. H. McCloud, better known then, as today, as "Captain Pete." He held his meeting at the little school building, with occasional hikes and overnight campouts at Steel Bridge. Back in those days when local waters were less polluted than now and Portlock sported its own swimming hole, all the mothers in Portlock would let their sons swimmer or not, go in the water if "Captian Pete" was there to watch and supervise.

Following Scoutmaster McCloud was Scoutmaster D. Bonner who conducted a busy troop under the sponsorship of the Portlock Methodist Church. Mr. Bonner was assisted by William Edwards, the late W. H. Capehart and others. This troop was a victim of "the depression" when Scoutmaster Bonner had to resign after two years. Lacking a leader and a sponsor the local troop floundered for a year until a newcomer to our town, and incidently an experienced scout, took over with Rosemont Church as the sponsor. This man was Mr. Donald Griswold.

This new troop got off to a flying start with the church outfitting all the boys with new uniforms. Scoutmaster Griswold was assisted by Rosser Gwynn and Mr. David Dennis, Sr. These leaders had a knack for getting things done. One of their projects was to construct a lodge house at Cape Henry. This building would sleep fifty boys and their leaders and is remembered mainly because of the huge fireplace that spread across one end of the main hall. After a full year of use this facility was damaged by a hurricane and after a siege of vandalism the building was removed. The troop was struck

(Continued on page 13.)

Midwest Regional Meeting to be Held in October

The social concern of the churches will be the special emphasis of the Midwest Regional Meeting of the Congregational Christian Churches which is being held on October 19, 20 and 21 in the Second Congregational Church of Rockford, Illinois. The Rev. Joseph C. Cleveland is the minister of the host church.

The Council for Social Action will have a special place in the program in accordance with the usual custom of underlining our various boards in rotation. The work of our churches abroad will be presented at a luncheon of the American Board at which Dr. Alford Carleton, executive vice-president, will speak on "Our Expanding Mission in a Contracting World."

The chaplain of the meeting will be the Rev. William J. Faulkner, minister of Park Manor Church in Chicago, and Dr. Nels F. S. Ferre of Vanderbilt University, will give the keynote address on "The Nature of the Church."

The roster of speakers reads like a Congregational Christian "Who's Who." It includes Dr. Albert Buckner Coe, president of the Massachusetts Congregational Christian Conference and the new moderator of the General Council, who will preach the Regional Meeting sermon an "Acknowledging the Kingship of Christ," and Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, minister of the Missions Council.

Each afternoon, seminars will be held on the general theme of the meeting, "For Whom Christ Died." These will be led by William E. Scholes, the Rev. Niel E. Hansen of Chicago, Granger Westberg, the Rev. Galen R. Weaver, director of race relations in the Council for Social Action, Dr. Arthur C. McGiffert, Jr., president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, Dr. Herman F. Reissig, director of international relations in the Council for Social Action, Prof. Samuel C. Kincheloe, the Rev. Paul S. Kerslner, minister of our First Church in Akron, Ohio, Dr. Ray Gibbons, director of the Council for Social Action, the Rev. T. F. Rutledge Beale, minister of the First Congregational Church, Billings, Montana, and Miss Ione Catton, program secretary for missionary education of the Missions Council.

The ministers' and laymen's dinner meeting will hear two prominent speakers—Dr. Effan Rees, advisor on
(Continued on page 13.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

This Will
Space You
Is Help
Reserved Keep
For It
News Filled?
From
The Laymen Of YOUR Church

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell

Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year	$3.00
Two Years	5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Leisurely Religion: A Prejudice

At least one professed Christian, a regular church-goer, has declared that religion is a "thoroughly important part of existence, perhaps it should occupy 2 to 5 per cent of leisure time." Most of us are doubtless soothed with agreement on reading the first phrase, and shocked into giggles at the second. We would probably say, if called to discuss this statement, that our faith must rule every aspect of our existence all the time, that the religion which occupies 2 to 5 per cent of our leisure time is a harmless hobby, not the redemption of the world. Our declarations if not our actions are sounder than the statement quoted above.

This statement is taken from a questionnaire prepared by the Department of Scientific Research of the American Jewish Committee for its "Studies in Prejudice" series; it appears in "The Authoritarian Personality," published by Harper & Brothers in 1950—a book packed with food for thought. The book makes it perfectly clear that such a conception of religion is typical of the conventional, intolerant, highly prejudiced person, the person who is blind to his own spiritual weakness, and who frequently uses religion for his own social advantages. Such a religion, in fact, is simply a form of prejudice: a form, that is, of spiritual sickness. Its social consequences can be as deadly as that other form of prejudiced religion which would rob everyone of decent leisure and heretics of their existence, for both these forms of prejudice are devoid of Christian love and compassion.

As summer, our season of rest and recreation, comes to an end, we would do well to stop and rethink our concepts of leisure and religion, and then to pray that our faith may rule our work in the world and for the Kingdom.

What About a New Name

How about a new name for the Southern Convention's conference and training center? The work of building the necessary facilities is now in progress. Its completion, which certainly is the most important issue, should not be unduly delayed.

The question of name has been raised before, but the project is still known as Moonelon. This name is a compound of two perfectly good words. Some have suspected that the person who was responsible for the unusual combination might have been "tetched" in the peculiar manner which the ancients believed some people were affected by too much exposure to moonbeams. The explanation may be in the fact that the property was first developed as a commercial amusement park, and the owner wanted a name that would carry a suggestion of romance.

A group of laymen recently were discussing what they might do to aid the building project. One man said, "It is certainly an enterprise which can be of great help to the people of the Southern Convention, but why in the world does it have to be called Moonelon?" When asked what name he would suggest, he said, "I have never specialized in naming things, but if I had to make a suggestion on the spur of the moment, I would suggest, Christian Youth Center." This, we submit, is a very good starting point. A name which would indicate the locale of the conference center would be very desirable; but we can see no good reason for hitching either Elon or the conference center to the moon.

When Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sellers decided to donate the property to be used to promote the interests of the Southern Convention, they not only did a most generous thing, but also showed an understanding of the needs of our people which is closely akin to the prophetic. The youth of our churches need especially what a conference center can provide.

All of the larger denominations have splendid facilities for assemblies and summer conferences. But we of the Congregational Christian churches need especially the contribution which is made by such meetings. Our churches are too few and too widely separated to know at first hand what other of our churches are thinking and doing. Our people need to have an awareness of the real spirit of our fellowship as expressed in all of our churches.

The most important issue which we need to keep in mind is to expedite the work of construction as rapidly as possible. By the time the buildings now under way are completed, the money should be available to pay for other buildings which will be necessary to take care of the groups eager to meet there. In the meantime, there is no good reason why we should not have a name which will say to the public exactly what the institution is and what it is undertaking to do.

The Christian Hope . . .

By DR. H. SHELTON SMITH

Professor in the Divinity School of Duke University
Durham, North Carolina

"God summons the Church of Jesus Christ today to speak plainly about hope." That sentence opens the historic fifty-one page report that was brought before the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches, exploring its main theme: "Christ—the Hope of the World."

Back of this report lay three years' of diligent labor by more than a score of the world's leading theologians, including Karl Barth, Emil Brunner, John Baillie, Kathleen Bliss, Robert L. Calhoun, C. H. Dodd, G. Florovsky, John A. Mackay, H. Kraemer, and Reinhold Niebuhr.

Fifteen sub-sections of the Assembly dissected it page by page. In the earnest interchange divergent views were freely expressed, recorded, and reported to the Assembly. Finally, the Assembly devoted two whole plenary sessions to an unhurried consideration of the original report and the supplementary findings of the sub-sections. All this indicates how seriously the delegates concerned themselves with this Assembly's main theme.

Now, what of the result? Through the general discussions did not resolve all differences at important points, a greater unanimity was achieved than originally seemed possible. The Assembly agreed that the report represented "a substantial consensus," and therefore commended it to the member churches of the Council "for their study, prayer and obedience." Note, please, that word obedience!

The report is both too rich and too complex to be adequately analyzed in a single short article, but I can at least sketch some of its major emphases.

1. CHRIST OUR HOPE.

The most distinct accent of the whole report is the cardinal affirmation, "Jesus Christ is our hope." Jesus Christ is our only sure hope, not because he exhibited to mankind a heroic ideal, but because in him God entered decisively into the tangled web of human history, encountering and conquering evil in every form. "By his life, death, and resurrection he became for us both sin's Victim and at the same time sin's Victor."

Thus this decisive event, the Word made flesh, unveiled the new age. "The powers of the coming Kingdom are already at work in Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Spirit poured out upon his people."

But although even now we live in the New Age, its reality and power are not yet fully revealed. The Kingdom of God is redemptively active in our midst, but the powers of evil are also busily at work in the world, seeking to block the progress of that Kingdom. Now are we the sons of God, but the meaning of that sonship is only partially manifest. Thus the church, though already enjoying the firstfruits of the Kingdom, is destined to be best by evil both within and without as long as the world lasts.

But despite the most demonic grip of sin and evil, Jesus Christ will complete his Kingdom. "For God has promised the reconciliation of the whole creation, therefore we hope for nothing less than the renewal of all things."

Precisely how or when Jesus Christ will complete his Kingdom, the report does not presume to determine. It says quite frankly that "God has not disclosed to us just when his Kingdom will come in glory." The Christian, it believes, should not indulge in idle speculation at this point; he should, however, observe Jesus' injunction to "watch."

2. CHRIST AND HIS PEOPLE.

As a result of God's mighty acts in the Incarnation, Ministry, Death, and Resurrection, the Church of God came into being. It exists to bear witness to the Gospel, and it continually renews itself by feeding on the Word and the sacrament of the Lord's Broken Body.

In its essential nature the church is one. "Where the one Christ is at work, where the apostolic witness to him is truly set forth in word and sacrament, there is the one church." Sad to confess, however, this essential oneness is obscured, indeed contradicted by our numerous man-made ecclesiastical divisions. As a result, the evangelical witness of the church is crippled. "The mission of the church aims at gathering all men into unity. The disunity of the church contradicts that purpose."

Yet even in the present state of divided churches, there is a fellowship within the ecumenical movement that constitutes a foretaste of a larger unity already in the making. Through this emerging fellowship we recognize the limitations of our various confessional traditions, and therefore we cannot be content with a visibly ruptured church. In so far as the Holy Spirit renews us, we necessarily hunger and thirst for the realization of that oneness for which Jesus prayer (John 17).

3. CHRIST AND THE WORLD.

The Christian hope must today encounter competing hopes. The report devotes careful attention to certain rival hopes, including Democratic Humanism, Scientific Humanism, and Marxism.

It is undeniable that many people in the western nations have believed that the remedy of the world's ills could be found in a socialized and scientific democratic community. Though they have assimilated to their views of human dignity, human equality, and cooperative fellowship certain insights of Christianity, they have commonly ignored or denied the basic structure of the Christian hope. Sometimes they have even confused the Christian hope with a democratic, earth-bound social hope.

Marxism is a virulent form of secular hope. It fiercely repudiates the Christian hope, believing that man alone is the instrument of his social and economic salvation. For it, capitalism is the root of human conflict, and conflict is only overcome when the proletariat becomes victorious. The messianic promises of Communism deeply move those peoples who are enmeshed in economic slavery and who despair of the peaceful improvement of their lot.

These secular hopes must be accepted as a stern judgment upon the church. For admittedly it has often ignored the cry of a depressed humanity, either because of its false otherworldly piety or because of its bias in favor of the privileged. The very fact of the Incarnation impels the church to view history as the scene in which God's will is to be done. "We cannot pray, 'Thy will be done,' unless we are at the same

(Continued on page 8.)

Rev. John S. Graves to Become Director Of Christian Education and Young People's Work

Rev. John S. Graves, Minister of Christian Education of the First Congregational Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina, has been elected Director of Christian Education and Young Peoples' Work of the Southern Convention, according to an announcement made by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, president of the convention. He will succeed Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who recently resigned. Mr. Graves will assume his new work with the convention December 1. His resignation at the Burlington Church will become effective October 15, but he will then go to Hartford Seminary, Hartford, Conn., to take some refresher work.

The work among the Sunday schools and Young People of the convention has grown so much in recent years that the full time service of a leader in this field has become evident. Mr. Graves' field of labor will be primarily with our Sunday schools, Young People and in Seminars giving in-service training for ministerial students and pastors. In the Sunday school work he will seek to strengthen our leadership through Leadership Training Schools, Superintendents' Conferences, Adult and Young Adult Education. He will be in charge of the work of the Student Summer Service Workers and Vacation Bible Schools. He will seek to acquaint our leaders with better literature and the use of visual aids. In the Young People's Work he will promote and develop Pilgrim Fellowship and related youth groups, rallies, conferences, summer conferences and camps, vocational retreats, etc. He will be advisor and guide in the field of in-service training for pastors and ministerial students through seminars and field service. He will seek to develop the maximum use of "Moon-elon"—our convention Assembly Grounds. It is expected that his "Station Wagon" will be equipped to carry Sunday school and other Christian Education materials, including visual aids with him to the field. His time will be allocated to the different areas of our conferences, where he will spend blocks of his time in service and in counselling in the field of Christian Education and Youth Work. He will serve as the Executive Secretary of the Board of Christian Education.

A native of Atlanta, Georgia, Mr. Graves served in the Armed Forces for four years during World War II. He served in the Field Artillery Branch of the service and was in the European theater of operations.

Upon separation from the service, Mr. Graves entered Elon College, from which institution he was graduated in 1950. He received his Master's Degree in Religious Education from Hartford Seminary Foundation School of Religious Education, Hartford, Connecticut. During his final year at Hartford, he was president of the Foundation's student body.

Mr. Graves served the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington as Director of Christian Education for two years and as minister of Christian Education for two years. He served as director of the Recreation Center for the City of Burlington for 14 months, working primarily with the teen-age young people of that city. He has served in the convention as a Student Summer Service Worker, Dean and Teacher in Summer Conferences and Camps, Chairman of the Committee on Christian Education of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

He is at the present time a member of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention, and has been a resource leader for Leadership Training Schools. For the past two summers, Mr. Graves directed teachers in the Practice School at Bricks Rural Life School for the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian denomination. He was ordained to the Gospel Ministry by the N. C. and Va. Conference at Burlington in May, 1952.

Mr. Graves is a natural leader and is well trained for his new responsibilities. His coming to the staff of the Southern Convention will be an added strength to our work. Popular with all ages, but particularly the youth, he will be a great spirit and leader amongst us. We anticipate for him a fruitful ministry and a good response from our lay leaders, parents, youth, and ministry. We welcome Mr. Graves to his new position in the Southern Convention.

Shallow Well Church to Have Full-Time Pastor

At a recent congregational meeting, the members of Shallow Well Congregational Christian Church voted to have a full-time pastorate, beginning with the next conference year, November 1.

The church has been sharing a pastor with Turner's Chapel Congregational Christian Church at Colon. Because of growth and progress of the church, the decision was made to obtain a pastor to serve full time.

The Rev. Julius Rice, who has been pastor of both churches for the past year, was named as the full-time pastor at Shallow Well, and has accepted the call.

Shallow Well was organized in 1831 and is one of the oldest Christian churches in this section. It has a church membership of 300 and a Sunday school enrollment of 350.

The present building, which was constructed in 1882, has been remodeled and renovated several times. A few years ago the main church was brick veneered and an educational building was added.

During the pastorate of the Rev. Mr. Rice, 30 new members, many of them young people, have been added to the church. The youth and other programs of the church have also been greatly expanded.

* * *

The above article is taken from the August 25, 1954 issue of the Sanford Herald. Commenting on the church editorially, the same issue of the Herald says, in part:

"Shallow Well Congregational Christian Church is one of the older of Lee County. Situated on the highway between Sanford and Broadway, its handsome brick building presents impressive evidence of the stability and devotion of rural congregations. This edifice had its beginnings in a brush arbor erected in a clearing 30 years before the outbreak of the Civil War. The pulpit of a wooden structure built during the war, was filled by a pastor who rode horseback from Pittsboro, 20 miles away.

"... Shallow well became the mother of three Christian churches: Poplar Branch, Grace's Chapel and Sanford. And the parent is still going strong. As proof of this, Shallow Well recently voted itself a full-time pastorate, and the Rev. Julius Rice

(Continued on page 7.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Faculty Orientation

As one of the last steps in preparation for the opening of the college, the faculty meets for a two day orientation period. The meeting this year was called to order by the president at two o'clock in the afternoon on Friday, September 3. The meeting was convened by prayer offered by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds. New members of the faculty consisting of Miss Mary Zink, Mrs. William Evans, Miss Hazel Walker, Miss Louise Moseley, Dr. Alex Corriere, Mr. John Bass, Mr. Guy Owen, and Mr. Laurence Hedgpeth were introduced and there was an acquaintance period for all members present. Then followed a statement by the president acquainting the faculty with the historical background of the college, originating in the heart of the church and designed to train leaders for the church, the pulpit and pew; the financial backing given the college by the church, and its partial support during the years, and also the present plans for the continued support of the college by the church.

The head of each department was asked to make a brief statement setting forth the importance and purpose of his department and its responsibilities in training the young people who come to our campus. These statements will be discussed in faculty meetings during the year. By this method, the several departments of training on the Elon College Campus will be integrated into a complete program that instructs and guides the individual student to the day of graduation.

In order that the reader may have an adequate conception of what this plan means and of what we are trying to do on the campus at Elon, the statement made by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, head of the Department of Philosophy and Religion is presented. It is the feeling of the faculty that this plan will be helpful to faculty and students as the current college year passes.

The statement by Dr. Reynolds on "Philosophy and Religion follows:

"From the earliest days of the church-related liberal arts college in this country, philosophy and religion have held key positions in the overall educational program of these institutions. That fact is quite understandable. Philosophy and religion are concerned with the relationships between various realms of truth and the Ground of all Being. Their function is therefore unifying and integrating. Such ultimate values as personal character, freedom and fellowship with God are prized supremely. It has been felt that standards of what ought to be must be related to descriptions of things as they are. The overall objective of the department of Philosophy and Religion, therefore, is that each student arrive at a sound and workable Christian philosophy of life; disciplined by a reliable sense of values, and balanced by a considered perspective—that he achieve some understanding of the various areas of learning in relation to man's total experience. Philosophy and religion are concerned that the student come into his own as a person and a citizen in the fullest sense of those terms. Competence in the arts of critical thinking and appreciation is a specific goal. The department recognizes the need for ample exercise of these faculties in all the sundry areas of study and research. Channels of activity need to be provided through which adventures in thinking and believing may be expressed normally.

"Here at Elon College, the work of the department of Philosophy and Religion falls into four general classifications: (1) that with pre-ministerial students; (2) academic studies slanted toward religious and philosophical orientation of all students in the college; (3) advanced courses for students intending to do graduate school work in the field; (4) and the extra-academic program such as chapel and campus religious activities."

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Vacations are becoming more general than in the past years. There are certain advantages in getting away from exacting positions; what we term as a grind. We do need relaxation. We need to get away from the day by day responsibilities and requirements. Fifty years ago it was the occasional executive or laborer that took a vacation. Today the practice is reversed. Everybody is demanding some freedom from daily routine. It's good to have vacations but most of us are beginning to realize that vacations are expensive. They cost money. As a rule, the accommodations at resorts and beaches are not nearly so adequate or comfortable as our living conditions in our own homes. We put up with these inadequacies, pay a high price for them and feel that we are fortunate. If we only realized it, we could sleep and eat at home much more cheaply than abroad. We used to buy umbrellas, big hats, anything to keep from being sunburned. Now at the end of summer we feel a little "chinchy" and disgraced if we aren't brown by exposure on the mountains or on the beaches. We only have so much money to spend. The average individual is broke at the end of the summer. When money is scarce, contributions for the church and church causes as a rule have to wait, either voluntarily or involuntarily. In fact, we don't expect very much on conference apportionment during the summer months. We would like for the contributions to be generous because college expenses are the same and student tuition and fees are reduced to a negligible amount. We have gotten through the summer very well and are anticipating increased contributions from our friends—the Sunday schools and churches of the convention.

Previously reported $ 5,389.16

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Liberty (Vance)$ 24.00
Pope's Chapel S S 5.00

Eastern Va. Conference:
Norfolk, First$ 30.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Greensboro, First$ 30.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester S. S.$ 8.34

133.13

Total to date $ 5,522.29

SHALLOW WELL TO HAVE FULL-TIME PASTOR.

(Continued from page 6.)

has accepted the call to be full-time pastor.

"The Herald joins Shallow Well and Mr. Rice in the happiness occasioned by the decision of each. It recognizes in the new arrangement an opportunity for a great old institution to render still a greater service to Christianity."

Missions at Home and Abroad

Is Christianity Succeeding in India?

Is Christianity succeeding in India? Not more than three per cent of the people of India are Christians. But let me tell you an experience Mrs. Sloan and I had:

It was a red letter day at Madurai in South India. One of the members of the national cabinet, the Minister of Health, was in the city to open a new government-sponsored medical training school. Numerous functions were held in honor of the cabinet minister. We were invited to one of these, a dinner given by the local Rotary Club and their wives. Professor James Hess used to be a member of this club. Today it has but one non-Indian member. Indians in formal dress and their wives in beautiful saris, gathered to honor one of the nation's foremost people, Amrit Kaur, a Christian woman. We have found more articles in Indian papers about her than about any other person except Prime Minister Neru himself.

But that is not all. The person installed that day as the president or principal of the new medical school, is also a Christian woman. Christians have positions of leadership far above their numerical proportion. Women, also, have secured a surprising amount of leadership. The Christian attitude toward women has pushed them ahead. There are many women physicians. In the new Madurai medical school the beginning class has fifty men and nine women.

Some people are discouraged about the success of Christianity in India. They point out that with 150 years of Protestant missions, there are only 13,000,000 Christians in Ceylon, India and Pakistan, with a population of 450,000,000. There have been certain definitive handicaps to the acceptance of Christianity in this part of the world. The greatest of these is the division among Christians themselves—denominational, church organization, theology. The Indian says, "If you cannot agree among yourselves what Christianity is, how can you expect us to understand it?"

Indian Christians themselves are overcoming these differences. The churches in Southern India established by English and American Congregationalists, a wide variety of Presbyterians, English Methodists and the Church of England (Episcopalian), have united into the great Church of South India. In Northern India and Western Pakistan, the various Congregationalists and Presbyterians are already united in one church, and prospects are good for the union to be expanded to include both English and American Methodists, Baptists and the Church of England.

Other people prefer to emphasize the influence of Christianity upon the Hindus and other religious groups in India. Let us go back to Madurai. When Mrs. Sloan and I were there sixteen years ago, we attended the opening of the first Hindu hospital. There were then very few Moslem hospitals. Today, there are quite a number of each, although quality is not too good, and many, many more are needed. Much the same can be said of schools. Many of the nation's leaders are graduates of Christian schools. The standards set by the Christian hospitals and schools are to some extent being copied by non-Christian groups.

We have seen all kinds of Christian work here. Let us tell very briefly of five that appeal to us as of great importance:

The first is the great medical school at Vellore. At one time there were no women physicians. Hindu and Moslem husbands would not allow men to treat their wives. To save the lives of women, Ida Scudder became a physician herself, and eventually developed a school to train women physicians. Now eighty-three years old and a very charming woman, Dr. Scudder has seen her school develop into one of the world's great medical training schools, training hundreds of physicians, both men and women, and thousands of nurses. Ninety per cent of these students are Christians. Forty Protestant denominations are associated with this enterprise.

The second, also at Vellore, is the development of Christian correspondence courses. Many volunteer inquiries come every day from Indians wanting to learn about Christianity.

To each inquirer is sent reading material, biblical references and questions. Five Indian men are kept busy six days a week correcting these lessons and returning more advanced lessons with them. As a result of this, hundreds of Indians are forming themselves into Christian churches.

The third is the great Allahabad Agricultural Institute. This school has grown tremendously since we visited it sixteen years ago. It is the greatest attack upon India's age-old problem of finding enough food to keep from dying of starvation. The Indian government, with U. S. technical aid, is establishing somewhat similar institutions, but the leaders still come from this Christian enterprise.

The fourth is a training school for village pastor-teachers and their wives, located at Medak, a village in the state of Hyderabad. Each young man must bring his wife or fiancée to be trained with him. A man who has neither cannot enter the school. American churches could profit very greatly from this Indian example. I have seen many ministers succeed or fail because of their wives.

The fifth of these important Christian enterprises we have seen is a miniature Allahabad Agricultural Institute near Delhi for villagers. It trains, not leaders, but village young people, to make a decent living in agriculture, mechanical skills, carpentry or tailoring. This enterprise, sponsored by American Methodists, needs to be duplicated many times.

W. W. SLOAN.

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE.

(Continued from page 5.)

time willing to go to the help of those who are denied the necessities for human life. The cry of half the world's people for bread enough to sustain life in their bodies must be heard by the Christian as the cry of Christ. . . . It is God's will that 'justice roll down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.'

It should be evident from this sketch that the World Council has developed a document on Christian hope that is both theologically solid and socially challenging. On a first reading it may seem elusively vague, but a more careful inspection will open one's eyes to the fact that it is a remarkably penetrating work. Every minister, in particular, should examine his ministry in the light of its probing sentences.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheville, N. C.

Report All Films

Mrs. Kenneth Register, chairman of Visual Aids, asks that you remember two important things when making our your yearly society reports:

1. Include all films, filmstrips, and slides used in your church during the year, whether sponsored by your women's society or by some other group. This is the only place such a report is made, and it is the only way of getting any kind of an accurate picture of how many churches are using visual aids in their program.

2. Report the number of people who saw the feature film "The Hidden Heart" in your community. If you do not have an accurate count recorded, please make an estimate. This is important information which our denomination needs.

You will soon be hearing more about the feature film for this year "In the Beginning." Plan to include it in your program for the year for your church.

* * * * *

Have You Mailed Your Report Blank?

Every society is supposed to make a yearly report to the district superintendent by September 10. This paper is supposed to reach you on the ninth. If you have not mailed your report yet, please do so at once. If you cannot mail it before the eleventh, try to do it then, so the district superintendents can have every report in to them by Monday. This is one of the most important jobs a local society performs in relation to the conference group. Sometimes a superintendent has to write or telephone or go to get a report, in order to have her records complete. Let's all send in our reports now, and have 100 per cent of the societies reporting by the time of the annual fall women's conference. Thanks a lot!

* * * * *

Happy New Year!

That may seem an odd title for an article in September. The truth of the matter is, however, that most of our women's societies begin their new year on October 1. That means that the year's work is now over, or nearly so.

Honduras

*If you had been to foreign lands,
Where weary souls stretch out their hands*

*To plead, yet no one understands;
Would you go back? Would you?*

*If you had seen the women bear
Their heavy loads none to share;
Had heard them weep, with none to care;*

Would you go back? Would you?

*If you had seen them in despair,
Beat their breasts, and pull their hair,
While demon powers filled the air;
Would you go back? Would you?*

*If you had walked through Honduras sand,
Your hand within the Saviour's hand
And knew He'd called you to that land;*

Would you go back? Would you?

*If you had seen the glorious sight,
When Honduran people, in their night*

Were brought from darkness into light,

Would you go back? Would you?

*If you had seen the Christian die,
With ne'er a fear tho' death was nigh,
Had seen them smile and say goodbye,
Would you go back? Would you?*

*Yet still they wait, a weary throng,
They've waited, some so very long,
When shall despair be turned to song?
I'm going back! Would you?*

—Louise Auler in August, 1954 "Radiograms" from the Board of International Missions Evangelical and Reformed Church.

And what will mean a happy new year for your society? You will think of many things—here are a few:

1. Interesting every woman connected in any way with your church family in your women's society. Some of our churches assign every woman church member to a circle. Some have active membership committees which see to it that every new woman is invited to join the women's society—and old ones who are not members are occasionally re-invited to do so. One suspects that the best way to interest all the women in a church would be to have a variety of activities: rather than several circles doing substantially the same thing, have them covering a variety of interests—one for young mothers, one for bookworms, one for seamstresses, and so on. I would like to see some mission emphasis and some Bible study in each group, but the majority of the program suited to their especial needs. Anyone in our area tried this yet?

2. Planning the program for the year in advance, and having a year-book so that every member knows when they are responsible for what. The program, it is probable, will be based on the packet. This does not mean that you will use every bit of material in there, nor that you will use it in the order suggested. What is important is that the program fits your group.

3. Have participation in the programs by as many members as possible. Do not use the same people over and over, even if they can do it easier than some others. At least give the "timid souls" or those for whom it is more difficult to read a small part from time to time, and both those handicaps can gradually be overcome.

4. Start out with some enthusiasm for the year's work. Let's say what a fine program we are going to have, or have had, rather than what a dull one—you can always find something good to report on to the women who were unable to attend, but one usually picks out the other features! A spirit of optimism, and joy, and hope will do a great deal toward getting those new members.

For Husband and Wife!

Sam: "My wife talks to herself a lot."

Joe: "Mine does, too, but doesn't know it. She thinks I'm listening."

* * *

Husband: "Here we are without a dollar in the house; the light bill isn't paid; the grocer and butcher are threatening us; yet you buy a new fur coat in summer, because it happens to be cheap."

Wife: "You're wrong as usual. It wasn't cheap."

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Katie's Saturday

"Dear me!" sighed Katie when she got up Saturday morning.

"What can be the matter?" said Mother, laughing at the doleful face.

"O, there's thousands and millions of things the matter!" said Katie crossly. She was a little girl who did not like to be laughed at.

"Now Katie," said Mother, this time seriously, "as soon as you are dressed, I have something I want you to do for me down in the library."

"Before breakfast?" asked Katie.

"No, you can have your breakfast first," Mother answered, laughing again at the cloudy little face.

Katie was very curious to know what this was, and as, perhaps you are, too, we will skip the breakfast and go right into the library.

Mother was sitting at the desk, with a big piece of paper and a pencil in front of her.

"Now, Katie," she said, taking her on her lap, "I want you to write down a few of those things that are troubling you. One thousand will do!"

"O, Mother, you're laughing at me now," said Katie, "but I can think of at least ten right this minute."

"Very well," said Mother, "put down ten." So Katie wrote:

"1. It's raining, so we can't play croquet.

"2. Minnie is going away, so I will have to sit with that horrid little Jean Bascomb on Monday.

"3."

Here Katie bit her pencil, and then couldn't help laughing. "That's all I can think of just this minute," she said.

"Well," said her Mother, "I'll just keep this paper for a day or two."

That afternoon the rain had cleared, and her Mother sitting at the window, saw Uncle Jack coming to take Katie riding, and, oh, what a jolly afternoon they had of it!

Monday, when Katie came home from school, she said: "O, Mother, I didn't like Jean at all at first, but she is a lovely seatmate. I am so glad, aren't you?"

"O!" was all Mother said, but it made her think of Saturday trouble and the paper.

"I guess you better tear up that paper now, Mother, dear," she said, laughing rather shyly.

"And next time," said Mother, "why not let the troubles come before you cry about them? There are so many of them that turn out very pleasantly if you will only wait to see."—Selected.

* * * * *

The Dancing Lesson

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

In the small dressing room several mothers were preparing their four-or five-year-old daughters for the dancing lesson, when screams came from the adjacent washroom. A young child was crying out, "I won't go to my lesson! I won't! I won't!"

"Indeed you will," came the answer, "or be punished!"

"No! No! I feel sick! I don't want to dance! Please, please don't make me!" More loud crying was heard.

The noise could not but horrify those of us who were in the dressing room. One woman leaned toward me and said, "They are neighbors of mine. The mother's determined to make a ballet dancer of her child—says she always wanted to be one herself."

Another spoke up. "Can't see the use of it all. Seems to me if a youngster doesn't want to dance it would be best to let her go without lessons."

Some minutes later a small woman with a miserable-looking wee girl, face swollen and tear-stained, came from the washroom, passed through the dressing room and into the hall.

"Huh! The youngster won out!" laughed one of the women. "Well, if she'd been my girl she'd have danced. I don't believe in letting them have their own way with things like that."

This true story happened the other day, and most of us could tell similar ones. A six-year-old child took such a violent dislike to music lessons, which deprived her of almost an hour of her cherished playtime after school, that she devised ways of escaping them, even to running away.

Two parents, when their son and daughter were still infants, decided these precious, wonderful babies should one day have university educations. So, with loving sacrifice through the years, money was set aside for this purpose, and they looked forward to their offspring receiving degrees and filling important posts. But they were doomed to disappointment. The children were not students and had never managed to be graduated from high school. There was the money and there was the opportunity, but the youngsters were unwilling, or unable, to take advantage of them.

Why should this be? Parenthood usually means self-sacrifice. Most fathers and mothers are willing to do anything to provide the best opportunity for their loved ones. Then very often comes disappointment. The fault lies chiefly in not knowing their child. It is as natural for a little one to dance as for the sun to shine; a healthy, happy child wants to dance. A child forced to dance is a pitiable sight. Again, if lessons are not a delight something is wrong. Either the teaching is poor or there is something the matter with the child. One should find out.

Music lessons which encroach on treasured playtime are enough to stifle musical talent. Education is a gradual, lifelong business. If we wish our children to become university graduates we must foster the desire to learn—by encouragement, by reading and talking with them about events happening daily. The parents mentioned did not do this. They did not read nor talk to their youngsters. There were few books in the house, and they themselves had always loved to be busy with their hands. It was natural that their son and daughter also found pleasure in handwork. One became a clever mechanic, the other a smart dress-maker.

To do our best for our children we must live close to them. We must try to find out what goes on in their minds and hearts—when they are unable to tell us. Childhood should be filled with delightful growth. Parents can often develop in the children a love for music by singing to them when they are babies. Later, they can teach them to hear music in the trees, the street, everywhere. It is well, also, to teach them to use those busy hands of theirs to make

(Continued on page 15.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Representatives of the Nation's Christian Youth Condemn "Climate of Fear"

Representatives of the nation's Christian youth condemned the "climate of fear" which, they said, has produced many of the problems faced by America today. The general council of the United Christian Youth Movement, in concluding its annual meeting at Williams Bay, Wisconsin, on Thursday of last week took action on a wide range of social and political issues and made plans for the guidance of state Christian youth councils throughout the country.

Fears affecting the nation in 1954 were listed as communism and its threats, atomic warfare, individual insecurities, ideological warfare, and fear itself as an obsession which, "causes us to fear the issues in social problems with which we should be concerned."

Meeting at the site of its founding in 1934, 20 years before, a council statement repeated the 1934 statement as valid today: "We will be guided by our faith and not our fears."

In the sessions were 150 delegates from 31 out of 37 state youth councils and representing more than a score of protestant denominations. Also attending were delegates from Hawaii and fraternal delegates from four continents.

Welcomed to fellowship in UCYM was the Luther League of America of the United Lutheran Church, a new major denominational member.

"God, not Moscow or Washington, is the Lord of the world. God is at work everywhere," said Ernst Lange of West Berlin, representing German protestant youth, in discussing the Evanston Assembly and its theme of "Christ the Hope of the World." He declared that "God's word is relevant to every human problem, including social and political action."

In summary, the council condemned the proposed military training being proposed to the 84th session of the congress; Condemned the McCarron Act as "not in keeping with Christian principles and democratic standards"; urged that education about the United Nations be intensified in citizenship educational programs in public schools; supported unanimously the Supreme Court decision on segregation and approved a schedual of 18 inter-racial conferences in 1955 designed to provide the specific steps toward elimination of segregation throughout the nations.

The council approved 1955 and 1956 Youth Week programs; laid plans for a citizenship seminar in 1955; approved plans for participation in a Pan-American Youth Consultation for Christian youth to be held in 1956, probably in Colombia; urged the Girl Scouts of America, a related agency of UCYM, to continue their educational program in world citizenship and United Nations; approved 35 world youth projects for 1955 and urged the World Council of Churches to include in its program a project for teen-age migrants in the United States with the hope that a Christian youth council in another country would adopt this project.

Roderick S. French, LaGrande, Oregon, UCYM Chairman, presided. George Williams, Cleveland, Ohio, President of the Richard Allen Youth Council of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, was named vice-chairman to fill the unexpired term of Kenneth Henry of Palestine, Texas.

Elected chairman of the commissions through which UCYM carries on much of its work, were Frank White, Spartanburg, S. C., Christian Faith; Margaret Platt, Fargo, N. D., Christian Witness; Charles Boyles, Jackson, Miss., Christian Outreach; Barbara Hofmeister, Ackley, Iowa, Christian Fellowship; Jerry Schleicher, Hanford, Calif., Christian Citizenship.

Hundred Million Church Members By 1956, Says Christian Herald

Christian Herald Magazine, for September, in its annual analysis of church membership statistics, predicts that American church membership will leap over the 100-million mark in 1956. This is based upon the premise of continued annual growth at the average rate of the last five years (3.09 per cent annually).

The analysis also predicts that by 1959, the Southern Baptist Convention will be the largest denomination in the United States. "A projection of the average annual percentage gain of The Methodist Church (now the largest denomination) during the last five years (1.15 per cent) and of the Southern Baptist Convention (4.2 per cent) indicates that if both bodies continue to grow at this rate, the Southern Baptists will overtake The Methodist Church in 1959." The projection suggests a 1959 Southern Baptist membership of 9,801,411."

America is more church conscious than ever before, the Christian Herald analysis reveals. Referring to figures reported by official church statisticians to the National Council of Churches, Christian Herald notes that the percentage of increase in church membership is substantially greater than the percentage of population increase. Church membership in 1953 totalled nearly 95-million, with more than 2½-million net increase over the previous year.

Christian Herald's analysis of "The State of the Church" is an annual service and covers details of the membership, number of congregations and number of clergymen in the three major faiths as well as the details of growth or decline within the larger Protestant denominations.

PREVIEW OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON MATERIAL

(Continued from page 2.)

Mrs. Russell Powell, Greensboro, N. C.

Superintendents—Mr. Martin Garren, Greensboro, N. C.

The session will begin at 4:30 and adjourn at 8:30. Supper will be served by the ladies of the Ingram Church. During the supper hour beautiful colored slides will be shown telling of plans suggested for the Sunday school at Christmas (taken at the Christmas Festival of the First Church, Greensboro).

The preview is being sponsored jointly by Pleasant Grove, Ingram, Liberty, and Center Churches. A $1.00 registration fee will be necessary to cover the traveling expense of teachers, etc.

Anyone who wishes to attend should send his registration to M. W. Andes, 708 Marshall Ave., South Boston, Va., by September 19.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Growing in Christian Love

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 19, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Above all these things, put love, which binds everything together in perfect harmony."—Colossians 3:14.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Matthew 5:43-48; Ephesians 4:25-5:2; I John 4:7-21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 3:18-24.

A Badge of Discipleship.

Members of organizations often wear a badge or pin which is a token or evidence of their membership in that organization. Rotarians, Kiwanians, Ruritanes, Masons, Odd Fellows, Pythians and other civic or fraternal organizations have pins and rings and other emblems which they proudly wear, and which are means of identification and fellowship. In like manner, Christians have a "badge of discipleship." To be sure members of the church as a rule do not wear a pin or a badge, although some of them do carry a Cross on a necklace or on a watch-fob or on a tie clasp. But Jesus plainly stated that there was a "badge of discipleship" by which his disciples should be known. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." That is the distinguishing mark of a follower of Christ, the spirit of love. Sad to say, there are many members of the church who do not display this badge of discipleship in their everyday life. There is so little of the love of Christ in the lives of so many of us, that a stranger, or for that matter, a friend, would have difficulty in identifying us as followers of Christ, if he were not told of our professed discipleship.

More Than Others.

"What do ye more than others?" Jesus on one occasion spoke of "going the second mile." He was constantly stressing the fact that Christians should do more than others. What grounds were there for boasting, or even for self-satisfaction if his followers saluted those who saluted them? Why even the publicans did that! And why should they feel smug and satisfied of the love their family and friends and those who loved them? Why even the publicans did that! No special merit in that. Good gracious, the Gentiles did these things! His followers were to "do more than these." They were to love their enemies! They were to pray for those who persecuted them! That is a hard saying. It seems like an impossible saying. Love your enemies, pray for those who persecute us? Yes that is exactly what Jesus said. And he meant it. To be sure Jesus did not use the word "phileo," which is the warm, affectionate sentiment or feeling which one has for his wife or child or friend; he used the word "agapao" which means good will, the desire to do him good, the absence of bitterness or hate, the positive desire for the welfare of the other man. But that is a high and hard saying, and men say it is impossible and impractical. Maybe so. But one thing is sure; to hate one's enemy is not the solution to the problem. Hate begets hate. One never wins his enemy by hate. But there are instances without number where enemies have been won by love and good will and loving service. The story is told of two boys in France who used to go out every morning before going to work, who with their father would shake their clenched fists in the direction of Germany and pronounce a curse, a fierce curse on all Germans, living and dead. Look at the soil of France and Germany, run red by the blood of the sons of both nations. And the end is not yet.

It is this willingness to do more than others, that is the distinguishing mark of the Christian and the sons of God. "That ye may be sons of your Father who is in heaven." This spirit of love and forgiveness is the essential nature of our heavenly Father, and the distinguishing characteristic of God's true children.

Be Ye Perfect.

"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect." Now we know this young Rabbi is giving us a lot of eye-wash. The idea of anybody being perfect! Look out for these folks who claim to be perfect! there just isn't any such animal. What Jesus is saying, however, is that our goal is to be like God himself. God in Christ is our example. We are to take our ideals from him. The best, and not simply the good, is the goal. Children of the Father ought to desire to be like the Father. One thing is sure—the man who accepts this high ideal and strives always for it, will come nearer to it than the man who drifts along, without any ideal or any goal, or any lower goal or ideal. We are to press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Love.

In fifteen verses of the fourth chapter of his letter to his fellow-Christians, John uses the word "love" twenty-five times. It is the central theme around which the whole letter revolves. For him it is the crowning attribute and grace of the Christian life. And like his Master, he uses the word "agapao," the strong word for love. It is a positive, intelligent, spirit that meets hate with good will, which desires the highest welfare of the other person, that forgives all wrong, indurageable good will and love. John says many things about love in his letter and in this chapter. He says that 1. God is Love. Here is one of the few, very few definitions of God in the whole Bible. The essential nature of God is love. God is love. 2. God loves us. He has manifested that love because he has sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world "And we know and have believed the love which God hath in us." Love expresses itself, gives itself. And in Christ God expressed and gave himself. 3. Love is of God. It is God who puts the spirit of love in our hearts. His love shed abroad in our hearts gives us the capacity to love. We love because he first loved us. 4. Because he loves us, we ought to love one another. "Beloved if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another." Because he loves us, we ought not only to love him, but we ought to love his children, all his children. 5. The presence of love in our hearts is evidence of the presence of God in our lives. "He that abideth in love, abideth in God, and God abideth in him." 6. Love casts out fear. "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear." If we have the love of God in our hearts, we need not fear. That does not mean that life will always be a bed of roses, or that trouble will not come. But he who has the love of God in his heart, and who has God in his heart, need not be fearful or afraid.

(Continued on page 14.)

Audio-Vision and the Church

More than 52,000 churches in the United States are now equipped for the showing of 16 mm motion pictures, according to Rev. S. Franklin Maek, Executive Director of the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the National Council of Churches of Christ. Mr. Maek was the featured speaker at the opening evening session of the 11th Annual International Workshop in Audio-Visual Education, which opened at the American Baptist Assembly, Green Lake, Wisconsin, on Monday, August 30, under the sponsorship of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council. Speaking on "Audio-visual Communication at the Half-Century and the Role of the Church" Mr. Maek pointed out that while this field had "come a long way" during the decade during which the Workshop had functioned, it had a still longer way to go in meeting the ever-expanding needs of the church. During the next decade, he predicted, the problems to be faced would be less those of physical production of material than of using existing facilities effectively and meaningfully. More than 80 new motion pictures, produced during the last year, had already been received in the library of films, filmstrips, recordings and other audio-visual materials in use during the workshop.

One of the latest of these new productions was the color feature film "John Wesley," which was shown on the opening day. Produced in England with the cooperation of J. Arthur Rank, the film pictures a number of important episodes in the life of the founder of Methodism in a most impressive manner.

The Workshop under the direction of Rev. George B. Rev. Ammon, of Philadelphia, will continue a full week, each day's program beginning with devotions in charge of Rev. J. E. Hoffman, followed by a general session on "The Functional Use of Audio-Visuals," directed by Professor John Baehman of Union Theological Seminary and Dr. Abraham VanderMeer, professor of education at Pennsylvania State College.

The 300 registrants then divided into seventeen special subject groups for the balance of the morning session. These range all the way from teachers of audio-visual skills and local church leaders to professional producers of films and television programs. The afternoon is given over to a similar gamut of special interest groups, except for Tuesday afternoon, which was reserved for denominational conferences.

A general reception was held on Tuesday evening at the Roger Williams Inn, following an exciting "Equipment Fair" hosted by twenty-three leading manufacturers who have exhibits at the Workshop for the purpose of training church workers in the use of projectors, recorders and other audio-visual equipment.

The evening program on Wednesday featured Paul Wagner, president of the Film Council of America. Dr. Wagner led a discussion on educational television. The Thursday evening program featured William F. Kruse, archivist for the Department of Audio-Visual Instruction of the National Education Association, in the presentation of some historical highlights in the use of visual materials in church work, and Rev. W. Burton Martin, who presented the work of the Religious Audio-Visual Education and Mass Communications Committee. The Friday evening session was marked by a program on Mental Health by Rev. Harold Wilke, of Crystal Lake, Illinois, and Mrs. Franklin Sheeder, of Collegeville, Pennsylvania. There was also a presentation by Dr. Wagner of a Film Council of America's "Golden Reel" award won by the National Council film, "For Every Child" at Film Council of America's recent American Film Festival. The Saturday evening program was addressed by Rev. S. Franklin Maek.

BOY SCOUTING AT ROSEMONT.

(Continued from page 2.)

another blow the following year when Scoutmaster Griswold was transferred by his employer, the Texas Co., back to the New England District.

During the years, 1937, '38, '39 the boys of Portlock received their scouting by joining the troops in South Norfolk and Berkley. At the end of World War II, Rosemont came to the boys rescue again and through the efforts of Dr. Hardeastle, Scout Commissioner, Joseph Baker and Scoutmaster Nothnagel, scouting was in full swing again at Portlock. Under the direction of Scoutmaster Nothnagel, Troop 50 developed into one of the best troops in the whole council. Many boys have advanced to the higher ranks of scouting and are still doing so in the present group. Nothnagel is being assisted by Mr. Dave Comfort and Mr. Al Weaver, with the Troop Committee headed by Mr. William Phillips. The present leaders have been awarded the honor of the Order of the Arrow. This award was in recognition of outstanding participation in Scoutcrafts after council-wide judging.

Scouting at Rosemont is looked upon as an official function of the church but with open invitation to any boy regardless of church affiliations. The church and its scout leaders derive a certain satisfaction after observing the product of their efforts of scouting in some of the present and past troop members. And why shouldn't we take pride in our scouts, because the boy, in the fulfillment of the Scout Oath and Law, promises to do his duty to God, his country, to other people, and to himself in the themes of physical fitness and moral conduct. These principles are the foundation of good citizenship and to conduct such an activity in the environment of the church—what more can we offer our youth of today.

ROBERT I. EVANS, JR.

* * *

Those included in the picture on the front page are as follows:

First row: Billy Barnett, Bert Hewitt, Charles Mann, Michael Warrell, Hersey Trafton; second row: W. P. Nothnagel, Scout Master, W. J. Phillips, Troop Com., Rev. Melvin Dollar, Pastor, W. C. Morrison, T. C., T. D. Comfort, Assistant Scout Master; Third row: William Sawyer, Tommy Sawyer, John Flemming, Billy Morrison, Richard Dobson, Philip Hicks; Fourth row: Frank David, Stanley Stinnett, William Jackson, James Stringfield, Beamon Turner, Douglas Weaver; Fifth row: Kerry Nothnagel, Billy Gibson, Billy Phillips, Bobby Freeman, Wilbur Fedrell. Bozo is the minister's dog.

MIDWEST REGIONAL MEETING.

(Continued from page 2.)

refugee affairs of the World Council of Churches, who will talk on "The Century of the Homeless Man," and Dr. Bhaskar Hivale of Ahmednagar, India.

Special music has been planned for these three days—the Rockford College choir, the Second Church choir, and the Svea Söner, the Swedish singers, will be heard.

At the closing meeting, the address will be given by Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice-president of the Board of Home Missions.

DAVID H. SANDSTROM.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our good friend H. Garner Hilliard has just died after a long and most patient illness. A rare and great spirit has gone to reap his reward for a life of unstinted consecration and devotion to the Christian Orphanage. No one in this community, especially on the orphanage campus, was more dearly loved and more greatly respected than Garner Hilliard. He was the very essence of kindness and devotion to his work, his family, the orphanage and a host of friends. What others of us might have taken out in talking he took on in hard work, and friendly encouragement. Never was he unkind, ugly spoken, or too tired to keep going for the folks he loved and who loved him.

Mr. Hilliard had been sick for nearly two years. His successor was employed this past January and he and his family remained here in our extra dwelling. Mrs. Hillard has shown extraordinary courage and devotion, getting a position several months ago at the Western Electric company in Burlington. She saw to it that her husband had every comfort and care and she has looked well after her two sons. Mr. Hilliard was a faithful Christian with a simple and beautiful faith. He will be greatly missed and long remembered here.

His two young sons, H. G. Jr., 13, and Richard, 8, are two well-trained, mannerly, boys. They reflect the gentleness of their parents. They are favorites among our children. It was touching to see the children in all the buildings gathering up their spending money with which to share in a wreath of flowers.

The funeral services will be held in Holt Memorial Chapel just two days before its official opening. Through his window Mr. Hilliard had watched the building go up brick by brick and had often expressed a desire to be taken there for his funeral. The Holt family graciously consented to this request which will greatly endear the chapel to many of us.

We are getting so badly behind this summer it was a real thrill to have the Young Citizen's Achievement Club of Burlington send us a contribution in the amount of $61.91. The convention check this week is only $30.94. One week within the month we missed entirely. And several weeks it has been much less than it usually is. But now that September is here and our friends are back in their posts of duty I am hoping that Sunday schools, organizations and friends will help me meet some of the pressing bills. Like this club in Burlington there must be others that could come to the rescue of the homeless child being provided a home by our charitable gifts.

Thank you for your help. Come to see us.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 2, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:
W. K. Holt, Jr., Burlington, N. C.
Coupons:
Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Wilkins, Haw River, N. C.
Woman's Aux., Greensboro, First Church.
Croquet Set:
Class 13, Reidsville Cong. Christian Church.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 8,950.87
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Lee's Chapel S. S.	$ 19.00
Mt. Auburn S. S.	11.54
	30.54
Total	$ 30.54
Grand total	$ 8,981.41

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$21,512.68
Mr. & Mrs. C. V. Hooper, Morehead City, N. C. ..	$ 25.00
Woman's Fellowship, Bay View Cong. Christian Church, Special offering	8.15
New Hope Christian Ch., Roanoke, Alabama	2.58
Colgate-Palmolive Co., for coupons	54.04
Young People's Class,

First Christian Church, Reidsville, N. C.	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. D. M. McLeland, Elon College, N. C.	10.00
Chester H. Roth Co., Inc., interest	30.00
H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. .	10.00
In Memory of Charles A. Goode and Leate J. Hammer	10.00
In Memory of Rev. J. L. Foster	10.00
In Memory of Fred Sellars	5.00
Special Gifts	85.96
	260.73

Grand total $21,773.41

Total for the week $ 291.27

Total for the year $30,754.82

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear.

Growing in Love.

Love does not come all at once. We must learn to love just as we have to learn to do other things. Love comes by practice. We learn to love by loving, if one may use that paradoxical statement. One can grow in the grace of loving. One can "will to love" as one can "will to believe." Let a man determine in his heart that he is going to live by the rule of love, let him ask Christ for grace, let him persevere against and amidst all obstacles, and he will grow in Christian love and in this grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. If we keep our hearts open to his love they will overflow in love to his children.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $..... as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

CARR.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, record the passing of our loved sister, Mrs. Virgie Williams Carr, on the 13th. day of June, 1954.

We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship and her loyalty to her church.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That God's way is always best.
2. That we express our sympathy to her loved ones and we commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and comfort.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our church records, a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. OTIS JOYNER,
Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Committee.

BROWN.

Funeral services for Benjamin Franklin Brown were held in Antioch Congregational Christia Church, Randolph County, N. C., Sunday afternoon, August 8, 1954. The Rev. Winfred Bray Conducted the last rites, and the burial was in the Brown family cemetery, on the farm where Mr. Brown was born and lived the entire 82 years of his life.

He was one of the oldest members of Antioch Church. By his long life and good works he had won the confidence and esteem of the entire community. He was respected as a churchman and an outstanding citizen. It was established that more than six hundred called to pay their respects at the Pugh Funeral Home in Asheboro, where Mr. Brown's body lay prior to the funeral.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Nettie Monroe Brown; four sons, the Rev. Avery Brown, pastor of Sophia, Flint Hill and Bailey's Grove Congregational Christian Churches, G. C. Brown, H. G. Brown and B. W. Brown; eight daughters, Mrs. J. W. Monroe, Mrs. C. F. Sugg, Mrs. C. H. Steele, Mrs. D. A. Williamson, Mrs. Ray Owen, Mrs. P. N. Simmons, Mrs. G. E. Cain, and Mrs. Clyde Brewer; two sisters, Mrs. Ellen Carriek and Mrs. Jennie Yow; 26 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 11.)

things, and, meanwhile, to talk to them. How they will love it! Then will come lessons, and tuition should be good. Sometimes it is not; and then rebellion on the part of the child is natural and right.

Inclination, desire and ability, aided by various chances to contact and to understand to some degree the various steps in the world's work, tell a boy or girl what to do for a living. Parents cannot wisely make such decisions for them. It is theirs only to enrich their children's lives and to open opportunities.

Jesus and Organized Religion

It is a comon observation today that organized religion—which we generally think of as a church—is not finding it easy to carry on. But has the church of God ever found itself comfortable in the world? When was there a time when Isaac Watts' question was not a pertinent one—"Is this vile world a friend to grace to help me on to God?" But we are speaking here of organized religion and not of "this vile world." But what shall we do when organized religion comes to hate, to persecute, and to crucify the real article when it appears? And is not this exactly what Jesus and his faithful followers found? What was the organized religion that Jesus found about him? Like such religion in our day, it was divided into several parties—"Phari-sees," "Sadducees," "Essenes," "Herodians," etc. Nor were these parties one bit less sectarian and bitter towards one another than are such parties today. Nor was it any easier for one to introduce an innovation at that time than it is today. The man who tried to introduce something new was sure to meet just such opposition as would such a one today. The Pharisees constituted the "orthodox" party of the day, and these were the most sensitive to detect and oppose anything that was new and the least out of line with the grooves of orthodoxy. They were the ones that opposed Jesus and came to hate the shadow that he cast in the sunshine. And, from this point of view, they were thoroughly justified in this attitude, for the spirit that he incarnated and exercised could not live side by side with the spirit that was theirs. Nor did he condone and tolerate this spirit in the least as seen in his denunciation of them (Matt. 23). It was they, moreover, who egged the Romans on to his crucifixion. So that it was organized religion that effected his death. When they saw him placed into Joseph's new tomb, and had seen the seal of the Great Empire placed on that tomb, they thought that they had seen the last of him. But there is a proverb to the effect that "he laughs best who laughs last." The story of his resurrection, of his ascension, of the coming of the Holy Spirit, of the marvelous transformation brought to pass through the testimony of the early church is a story unparalleled in all the history of time. Nor can organized religion in itself ever hope to accomplish any such. Only the immediate presence and power of God in individual men and women can bring to pass such "mighty works."

Four closing comments: (1) I often ask myself whether organized religion in today's world is more like that of the time of Jesus or like that that was produced by Jesus and his immediate followers? (2) Has not every revival that has really changed the character and the current of the world's life been a return to the New Testament spirit and method? (3) To what extent and in what measure are we today embodying that spirit and following that method? (4) Every one sees and recognizes the world's need of a revival that will change its spirit, its life, its fundamental purposes and all the rest. Can we hope for such a revival as the result of what we are doing, and the way we are doing it? These are serious questions, they call for serious thinking, earnest praying, and honest, faithful adjustment to God and his ways. Who and how many will give heed and follow God's way in Christ?

W. R. CULLOM.

Reformation and Regeneration

I heard of an old negro who had what he thought to be a very valuable clock. There came a time when it refused to run for its proud owner, so he removed the hands from the face of the clock and took them to a jeweler, requesting him to fix them so they would tell the time. The astonished jeweler said, "Mose, you will have to bring the entire clock to the shop before I can fix it." The negro replied, "Look heah, Boss, you's jist tryin' to get my clock. I won't trns' dat clock wit' no stranger." There are many who are ready to offer the outward pretenses at religion by improving their morals, but refuse to submit the chromometer of a carnal heart to God the Maker and Jesus the Divine Jeweler. The time-piece of life does not need a new dial as much as it needs a new mainspring. God's call to each one is, "My son, give me thine heart." To refuse to obey that command of God, regardless of one's moral standing, is to miss heaven in the end.—O. A. Newlin, D. D.

Pauline: "Do you know, Dot, I just shudder when I think of my 30th birthday."

Dorothy: "Why, my dear, what happened?"

"Gold and . . ."

By WARREN H. DENISON

Christian Stewardship is one thing, and "Raising Money" is quite another. We should keep the distinction clear. A church may raise its budgets, quotas, apportionments, and remain spiritually poverty stricken. It is not enough to say, "We have no money problem in our church." When we teach and accept Christian Stewardship, a thrill and a lasting joy comes to persons and churches, and we will not have to "raise money." We hear much about giving time, talents "and resources." Of course, we should give all of these to the Kingdom, but why should "and resources" be placed last in all our statements, and diluted down to a weak word, rather than those words used by the Wise Men who sought Jesus, "Gold and . . ."?

It has been my experience and observation, and I have sought far and wide for years, that when a person becomes a steward and acknowledges his Christian Stewardship by the actual setting aside, first, of a decent, definite, honorable share of his income, say a tithe, that without exception that person follows with his time and talent according to his opportunity, but I find any number of persons who give time and talent, but never think of Christian Stewardship as applying to their purses. We need to watch our emphasis.

Christian Stewardship, money-giving, leaves something permanent and soul-satisfying and a "good taste" in the mouth of the giver, for he gives out of gratitude to God, while money-raising does not always do so. It is usually a duty, the paying of bills, etc. Christian Stewardship changes attitudes.

Money is one of the great evangels, a largely unused evangel. We have lost greatly by overlooking this fact. Jesus said, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." One of the very best known ways to win a person to Christ is to persuade him to make a worthwhile investment in Christ's cause. You will then lead him much more easily to Christ and the church. Christian Stewardship is a great unused evangel and is more naturally associated with evangelism by nature than to any other one phase of Christian effort.

For some reason we have seemed afraid, have been hesitant to teach Christian Stewardship, and to preach it and to talk with people about their relationship to material possessions. We do it largely only when we have to raise some money. We must not forget that the great periods in the history of churches have been their periods of benevolent giving. We need to be eager for people's money if we are eager for their hearts. We need get down to motives. May I illustrate:

A person confesses Christ and unites with your church, say at Easter time. Immediately, the Finance and Stewardship officers should go to that person, explain the church's financial plan and secure his commitment. We make a serious error and do a disservice to the new member if we wait till the canvass time in the fall. We must seek to dispell our "sub rosa" attitude in our approach to money and material possessions. Christian Stewardship is a school for raising men rather than for raising money. Stewardship must begin with me. More sermons on real Christian Stewardship, more Schools of Stewardship, more Stewardship Retreats and Institutes, will mean more Christians, better Christians, and happier, more generous givers.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1954

NUMBER 36

Four Baby Churches Born--Congratulations!

The Year 1954 has been the most fruitful for new churches of any in the span of my recollection. In January a new church came into being at South Boston, Virginia—a result of the vision of the Rev. W. T. Madren, pastor of Ingram and Pleasant Grove. Its membership is composed largely of those who came out of those churches to form the new one. In the spring, the Rev. A. Lanson Granger, of our Newport News Church, after surveys to determine the proper location for a new church on the Peninsula, began a Sunday school in the Deer Park area of the City of Warwick. That effort resulted in a very promising young church. It was formed with 28 members of our Newport News Church constituting the major portion of the charter membership. Like South Boston, our Deer Park Church is growing. In the meantime, a new church is coming into being in Lynchburg. Dr. Scott will no doubt give a full report of that new and fascinating project soon!

Sunday, September 12, witnessed the birth of the fourth new church of the year at Bayside, Norfolk. It will be known as the Bayside Community Church, Congregational Christian. Here, the pastor of The Congregational Christian Temple, Dr. W. Millard Stevens, has been the guiding spirit. The Rev. Ernest Brickhouse has worked under his supervision the past summer. When the moment came to set the organization on foot, the members of The Temple who lived near the new project were challenged to go out and become the heart of a new church. They responded, and last Sunday that new church was born with 27 members being received, two on profession of faith, at the constituting service. Dr. Stevens was in charge, and five other ministers took part in the service. Superintendent Scott preached the sermon.

Congratulations are in order.

First, I think we want to congratulate the pastors, Messrs. Madren, Granger and Stevens, for their unselfish spirit. Some of us pastors do not want to give up a member by letter of transfer, much less to ask them to take membership in another church! For the Convention, and personally, we want publicly to commend them as pastors of vision and unselfish service.

Then, the people, in each case, who were willing to leave well-organized and "debt-free" churches and become the foundations of new organizations, have our gratitude and felicitations! These churches will succeed, for they were born as children of vision and a willingness to sacrifice.

The "mother" churches, in each case, have our profound gratitude for their willingness to give up good, loyal members, that new communities might have the Gospel preached to them. We are assured that these churches will not be poorer, but be enriched by the experience.

The South Boston baby church has far exceeded its own expectation. Rev. and Mrs. Mark Andes are there to lead them, and in these short months they have erected their beautiful house of worship. So it goes when pastors and established churches have the vision and are willing to divide that we may multiply! That is the soundest principle of church extension we know. May God richly bless all who have had a part in the birth of these four new churches, and bring forth others who will "go and do likewise"!

JESSE H. DOLLAR, President,
The Southern Convention.

News Flashes

Congratulations to Elon College upon the large group of students who have enrolled for the fall session.

Dr. and Mrs. Jesse H. Dollar were visitors at the office of publication in Richmond, for a short while the past week. We enjoyed having them.

Dr. John G. Truitt is sending out the envelopes for the Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage. He is optimistic that he will get a good response, and we do not believe the churches will let him down.

Dr. Glenway W. Nethercut of Oak Park, Ill., a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board, was present for the worship service of the Eutaw Community Church Sunday morning, September 5, 1954.

Nine members of the Temple will receive letters of dismissal from our church this morning (Sept. 12) and a public commission to establish the new church in Bayside. These are: Mr. and Mrs. Claude S. Nock, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Twiford, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Jr., and Mrs. W. D. Brooks. This will be an unusual, but important, part of our service this morning. You will be asked to join with the minister in asking God's blessing on these, our fellow members as they go forth to establish this new church.—Temple Tidings.

Sunday, August 29, was a great day for our Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, where Rev. Wm. A. Rich is the pastor. The church rededicated their church and improvements made for the Sunday school purposes. Services were held in the morning and afternoon, with several former pastors present. Superintendant Scott delivered the dedication sermon at the morning service. Mr. Rich and his people of Bethlehem Church are to be commended on the splendid work being done at Bethlehem. We have three churches in Warren County, North Carolina—Mt. Auburn, Antioch and Bethlehem—and it is hoped Mr. Rich may be able to give his full time, or the major part of it, to what is to be called "The Warren County Parish."

Cornerstone of Center Church Laid at South Boston

A service for the laying of the cornerstone of the first unit of Center Congregational Christian Church, South Boston, Virginia, was held on Sunday, August 22, at 3:30 p. m.

Mrs. Irvine Anderson, organist, played, "Bless This House," by Brahe. Rev. Mark Andes, pastor, led the invocation and gave the words of welcome. Greetings were brought from the National Board of Home Missions by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman; the North Carolina and Virginia Conference by Rev. W. W. Snyder; the local Congregational Christian Churches by Rev. W. T. Madren; the Halifax County Ministerial Association, representing the other denominations of the area, by Rev. W. T. Smith; the town of Halifax, Virginia, by Mr. W. W. Shapard, Mayor; the town of South Boston, Virginia, by Mr. Frank Sizemore, vice-mayor. Dr. David Shepherd gave the prayer of consecration, and Supt. Wm. T. Scott delivered the address, "Ye Are Standing on Holy Ground."

A sealed copper box containing relics was placed in the wall. Mr. T. S. Earp, deacon and trustee of Center Church, read the list of contents.

After an appropriate Litany for the laying of the cornerstone, led by Rev. M. W. Andes, pastor, Mr. Andes and Mr. J. E. Burton, contractor and builder, laid the cornerstone in its place.

The Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. W. W. Hall, pastor of Third Avenue Church in Danville, Virginia.

Approximately two hundred people assembled for the service.

There is a familiar picture by Holman Hunt. There is shown a cottage neglected, falling into ruin. In front of the window tall thistles spring up, and long grass waves on the pathway, leading to the door overgrown with moss and rank, poisonous weeds. In front of the fast-closed door with rusted hinges a tall and stately figure stands amid the night dews and the darkness, with a face that tells of toil and long, weary waiting, and one hand uplifted to knock and the other bearing a light that may perhaps flash through some of the chinks of the door. It is Christ, the Son of God, seeking lovingly, patiently to get into our sinful hearts.

—W. G. Elmslie,

Moonelon Concludes Successful Summer

Moonelon, our Congregational Christian Conference Center at Elon College, North Carolina, has had a very successful summer. The center has been used a great deal more by our church groups than in previous years.

The properties Committee and I am sure all who have used Moonelon are deeply grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Howard Gerringer for the great services they have rendered in operating the center for us. "Sallie Kate" as she is known to so many met all groups who came, made reservations for groups, cared for maintenance of the center, and did much toward making us all feel most welcome and at home. Her outgoing personality was most contagious to all who came to know her. Howard was the one who came to the front whenever there were odd jobs to be done. Most of us were not very aware of the many, many jobs he did to make Moonelon run smoothly for us all. I wish to express my personal appreciation for the hours of labor and devotion to the task which I came to realize in him. Too, Kay and Howard Wayne, the Gerringer children were most helpful in assisting in the many routine duties involved.

There were over 2,800 people of our convention who used Moonelon during the period of June 15th through August 25th. Only one day during this period that the Gerringers did not have reservations for group use of the center, and often two or three groups per day. Among groups from our convention which used the center were: Laymen, Pilgrim Fellowship, the School of Missions, Vacation Bible Schools, Church Schools, Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, the Southern Convention, Young People's Conferences, and ministers and their families.

We are all grateful to Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sellers for the generous gift of this property for the churches use. Also, a big note of thanks to the Southern Convention Laymen for the great amount of work they have done in developing the property.

It is with great anticipation that we look forward to full operation of the center that it may prove to be an effective tool in guiding us Godward.

JOHN S. GRAVES.

If it weren't for the optimist, the pessimist would never know how happy he wasn't.

Moonelon—Summer 1954

By MRS. SALLIE KATE GERRINGER

As a work of art I know few things more pleasing to the eye or more capable of affording gratification to a taste for the beautiful than our church camp. There hearts feel free to be themselves. Souls are lifted high above the material, yes, near to the very heart of God.

The reflection of the sky and trees in the water make you realize that God is painting a masterpiece especially for you, giving you a glimps of Heaven as it will be. The Birds seem to be singing the accompainment for the great angelic choir in praise to God, for the gift of life itself. Here he speaks through the wind in the pines, the wild flowers that adorn the lake shore, while the rising sun dispels the mist.

A passing plane brought me a thrill of childhood memory. Once a lost plane circled over our farm home. I was sure it was Lindberg who would come swooping down out of the sky and carry me away as Prince Charming of the fairy tales. I would have glass slippers, a long white dress with a jeweled train of emeralds and pearls. We would take our babies to a majestie cathedral to be christened.

That plane did not come down, but Lady Luek gave me a prince of a fellow for my life partner. My babies were not of royal lineage but very special to us. They were christened in our church with the light of all colors shining through the windows. The same light coming through a cathedral window could not have been more blessed, nor the presence of God more real.

The sun is now high in the sky which reminds me that I must leave this dream of mine and get to work.

We have spent the summer at Moonelon, the church camp. My children who are now thirteen and seven have enjoyed it immensely. We have met many fine people who come for picnics and swimming from various churches of our convention.

The Elon College students enjoyed many hours of recreation here. The Boy Scouts enjoyed overnight camping in the woods. In June our Youth Conference which was held at Elon College enjoyed daily hikes to Moonelon for swimming. Fishing has been very popular all summer.

Rev. John Graves who is chairman of the properties committee, stood ready at all times to help and guide the work. He was an inspiration to us all.

As I thought of the things Moonelon had ment to me, I listed first a closer relation to God, second, it was like having a ource in psychology, and I learned to be a better outdoor cook, a secretary, and had some praetice in life saving. I especially enjoyed pienicing and swimming with the various groups but most of all my home church, Berea.

Dr. Henry E. Robinson Reports on World Council of Churches

Dr. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina, attended the recent Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill. The Burlington Daily Times-News carried Dr. Robinson's report on the council from which is taken his aecount of the meetings of the first day.

"Perhaps the most spectacular mass meeting of Protestant people of all time was held the first evening when 125,000 gathered in Soldiers Field, Chicago, for a dramatic service of worship. A supporting choir of 2,500 voices gave a choral background to three themes enacted by some 300 participants in costume depicting the Creation, the Redemption and the Promise of God.

"A lasting impression was made on this writer in the fact that such a tremendous gathering could lend itself so completely to an aet of worship. Prayers, responses, hymns and other parts of the service in which the great congregation participated were exeected in the same precision of the average sized service of worship.

"I stood in front of the First Methodist Church of Evanston on the first Sunday morning of the council (Continued on page 11.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year	$3.00
Two Years	5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Hope of the Local Churches

The Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches, held at Evanston, Illinois, is now history—that is, it is now a permanent aspect of the present. This assembly is remarkable in many ways, but according to all reports the most impressive thing about it was the cooperative spirit in which the delegates worked. They did not reach complete agreement on everything. No one expected that they would. But now the world knows how Christians, gathered in the name and in the spirit of Christ, faced honestly the differences that divided them, and sought earnestly to find a way whereby we may fulfill the purpose of God for his Church. Now, while the immediate vision of Evanston is fresh in the minds of church people, is the time to decide what we must do about it.

The theme of the session was "Christ, the Hope of the World." Soon all the local churches of the denominations represented there will be receiving the reports of the Assembly, its message to them. Every church which takes the name of Christ is under a solemn obligation to examine its spirit and program in the light of this message. Christ said: "When the Spirit of truth comes, he will guide you into all the truth; . . . and he will declare to you the things that are to come. He will glorify me, for he will take what is mine and declare it to you."

To ignore the message of the Church is to slight the Holy Spirit.

How then shall we receive this message? The churches must meet on the local level as their delegates and leaders met at Evanston: we must face our differences honestly and seek earnestly to surmount them, in the name and in the spirit of Christ. It is on the local level that disunity in the body of Christ is working its most hurtful results, shameless competition or shameful apathy. It is, finally, on the local level that this must be overcome, or the world will continue to be the anarchy of man and not the Kingdom of God.

The spirit of Christ is love. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. . . . If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" The ancient world was stirred to a strange new hope when its disillusioned citizens could say, "See how these Christians love one another!" It entered the age of faith when they could say, "See how their Master must love us!" Not the great councils of the church, but the local Christian communities inspired these words, this hope. Even so the local churches must inspire the modern world, or all the work of Evanston is vain.

A New Fellow Worker

The Rev. Fred Page Register has accepted the position of Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary of the Southern Convention, as The Christian Sun announced September 2. Every member of the Convention who knows Mr. Register and the zeal and efficiency of his work, will be glad that he has accepted this position. He is exceedingly well-fitted for the task.

The Convention created this position, for a full-time worker in the field of stewardship and evangelism, because every church in its constituency needs specialized guidance in this service. Its action relieves no one of personal responsibility for stewardship and evangelism. All the contrary: it increases everyone's responsibility.

It increases the responsibility and opportunity of the individual church member. Sometimes church members assume that they don't have much responsibility for what they don't now much about. Ignorance is the poorest excuse in the world for a Christian. Jesus said, "Ask—seek—knock." Every individual, especially every Christian, has the personal responsibility for learning that which pertains to spiritual life.

It increases the responsibility and opportunity of every pastor serving in the Convention. Now he has trained assistance in the two most important and most difficult phases of his work. He has a new fellow worker who can give him material help in fulfilling his mission. He has no excuse for neglecting this opportunity.

It increases the responsibility and opportunity of the local church as a body. Every church should seek the advice which Mr. Register can give and co-operate with him in the program which he will initiate.

Mr. Register will soon be at the service of all of us. He will bring us the enthusiasm and insight of a new fellow worker, but the effectiveness of his work will depend upon the cooperation of the church members, the pastors, and the churches as a whole—upon the effectiveness of our work.

PILOT PROJECT FOR PROTESTANTS

By MARY ANN GEHRES and MURIEL K. STUFFEY

The Church of the Saviour in Washington is based on the premise that groups which require little of their members count for little.

On heavily traveled Massachusetts Avenue in downtown Washington, D. C., there is a Victorian brownstone house with a sedate exterior that belies the lively doings taking place within. The house is the Church of the Saviour, whose members are striving to establish a first-century Christian community in the midst of twentieth-century secularism. They are attempting, as a church booklet states, "a demonstration of the kind of fellowship which Christ required of his followers, a fellowship so intensely alive that it will catch the imagination of puzzled men and women everywhere."

Terming itself "an ecumenical church," the congregation has never become part of a denomination. But members point out that the church stresses the essentials common to all communions and that it is well within the mainstream of historic evangelical Christianity. It cooperates with other congregations, is associated with the National and World Councils of Churches, and is the largest per-capita contributor to the Washington Federation of Churches. "Such an approach," the Reverend Newton Gordon Cosby, minister of the Church of the Saviour, has said, "Allows us more leeway for experimentation in a shorter time than would be possible within the bounds of a denomination."

When organized in 1947, the Church of the Saviour had nine charter members; today there are only fifty members. But the congregation would consider this a sign of strength, for membership requirements are stiff. "We are seeking depth, not members," Gordon Cosby has observed. "I would rather see us get 100 per cent of one man than 10 per cent of ten men." Statistically, there can be no question that the church has taken hold of a goodly percentage of its members. With its small membership and a contributing congregation of perhaps 125, the church has a yearly budget of $50,-

000; since 1950, $90,000 has been put into the purchase and repair of 2025 Massachusetts Avenue. During the past year it has raised about $30,000 over and above the budget for the purchase and development of Day-spring, its retreat farm twenty-five miles from Washington. Some mem-

The Christian Sun is featuring a new departure in this issue. Reprinted by permission from Presbyterian Life, a Journal of Protestant Christianity, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa., is an article from the issue of August 7, 1954, by Mary Ann Gehres and Muriel K. Stuffey, entitled "Pilot Project for Protestants."

It has been repeatedly said that nobody reads long articles any more. If that is true, it is just too bad for the "nobodies." The inordinately lazy will probably take one look at this article and lay it aside. If that lets you out, then, Good-bye. Those who read it in its entirety will find it rich in food for thought.

This reprint will be followed by two articles dealing with a church now being organized in Lynchburg, Virginia, along the same general principles of the Church of the Saviour. The subsequent articles will also afford interesting reading for members of the Southern Convention.

EDITOR.

bers tithe their time; practically all spend hours each week in work parties, study and prayer, fellowship groups, and the various projects. "Every time we have taken a step which was God's, materials, personnel, and funds have come forward," Cosby says.

However, members say, these impressive stewardship statistics are but tangible indications of the church's accent on the spiritual. In the Early Church the central experience was not purely individual. "In a very real sense, the church is nothing but a community of love, a community that is bound by love to its Master, Jesus Christ, and a community that is bound to one another by unbreakable bonds of devotion," Gordon Cosby stated recently in a sermon. The actuality of this spiritual force in the Washington congregation is frequently felt even by casual visitors, who comment on the genuine friendliness of the members.

"To the newcomer the most wonderful thing about the church is the people," a visitor remarked a short while ago. "The thing that made me return was that I felt I had an investment there. They had pulled so much out of me that I felt I had to go back because I had unconsciously made myself a part of them. I could not put my finger on what it was about them that was so different, but there was something."

From surface appearances, it would be difficult to detect this "difference." During coffee-hours and other conclaves, the membership looks much like any assemblage of attractively dressed, well-groomed individuals who are having an uncommonly good time—members don't believe in setting themselves off from the world by drab dress and long faces. Nor would a survey of occupations shed much light on what makes them different, for their work represents a fair cross-section of urban jobs. The congregation includes secretaries, engineers, office workers, nurses, a bricklayer, a butcher, housewives, salesmen, an oceanographer, lawyers and teachers.

Probably the difference is the complete right-about-face that has taken place in many members' lives. The church's emphasis is on introducing Christianity to individuals without religious affiliations or training. The earlier lives of many members and would-be members read almost like a catalog of despair. There are a dozen or so former alcoholics, several of whom were nearing a skid-row existence. An active member of the fellowship was on the brink of suicide when she stumbled into the church, for she had lost husband, health, and a large fortune, as well as many fairweather friends. Another woman had been a prostitute. Several couples were considering divorce. There are intellectuals who found that a vague, humanistic belief was not enough to bring them through personal trials. Three Buddhists and a Jew have been converted.

There are several out-of-towners who visited the church or read about it and moved to Washington to join the fellowship, sometimes at an occupational or financial sacrifice. "When newcomers are from other churches, however, it is difficult for us to know how to handle the situation. We discourage immigration from other churches, for we aren't in competition with the denominations," Gordon Cosby told us. He prefers to see what has happened in several instances when members of other congregations have attended services and classes at the Church of the Saviour, then taken back what they have absorbed of its philosophy to their own churches.

Perhaps the working of the Church of the Saviour's corporate spirit in altering lives can best be described through the experiences of two members who were brought from the slough of despondency.

"Five years ago I was a rugged individualist with a vengeance," a journalist told me, "and I worked in an office where a sort of highbrow version of the law of the jungle prevailed. When I went to church, it was with the idea of having a word with God, but I didn't want anyone butting in on my privacy, nor did I want to get involved in any demanding friendships. I needed to love and be loved, but all I did was make enemies and stick out like a sore thumb in groups.

"When I finally came to the Church of the Saviour," she went on, "I needed some time before I could even speak to people. After several Sundays of sitting on the back row and lighting out the minute the benediction was pronounced, I broke down and started coming to classes. But the people made me feel very uncomfortable, for they kept putting up with me no matter how mean I was. When I threw insults the way I did at the office, they didn't fight back. Their attitude was one of absorbing the darts and loving me still more.

"After the second year of this, my old defenses began to break down, my old shell gradually peeled off, and I became overly sensitive. I was desperately miserable, because I still couldn't feel a part of the fellowship. I prayed off and on for several months until one day an incident revealed to me that I was constantly reliving a painful adolescent experience. Gradually a plan of healing took form. I asked one of the women to pray for me twenty minutes a day, every day for two weeks (but not until I had dug up the situation from my adolescence and reviewed it thoroughly with her). During this period I put all thoughts of my problem out of my mind, but continually felt buoyed up.

"When the two weeks were over, I felt completely cleansed. Never since have I felt alien in a group; if anyone expresses love, I have no difficulty accepting it, and never do I feel resentment the way I used to. I would say that in other churches I had known, I heard about Christ, but here I met him."

A masculine case in point is that of a former GI (now a butcher). He had spent some time in a psychiatric ward after World War II combat had left him with an unstable personality. But one Sunday he decided to look in on the Church of the Saviour.

"When I first went there," he said, "and I started talking to Gordon and the others, they made me feel ugly inside myself. Not that they said anything. It was just the opposite. They were so kind—they knocked themselves out for me, and I just couldn't take it. So I tried to find things wrong with them. Finally I gave up, told Gordon where he could go, and walked out.

"Then one day," he continued, "months later, when I was so fouled up that I didn't know what to do—I was getting in trouble with the police and everything else—I went back to the church. I asked Gordon if I could use the chapel. He said, 'Why sure, fellow, help yourself, and if you want us, we'll be right here.'

"So I went in and prayed. Then when I came out of the chapel, there were Gordon and a few of the people, smiling at me and wanting to talk to me. So I gave up my pride, told them how mixed up I was, and I've been getting straightened out ever since. But it wasn't easy. They made me look at myself as I really was. And that's the hardest thing, believe me."

Question practically any member of the Church of the Saviour, and you will hear a similar detailed charting of his or her spiritual progress. This frankness may at first embarrass visitors who are not accustomed to candid discussions of innermost religious beliefs. But it reflects the centrality of religion in the member's life. A few members told us that personal evangelism was the most difficult part of their commitment. However, others, particularly the salesmen, have managed to blend the missionary calling with their workaday lives.

The church's membership, though predominately white, represents all races. One Negro woman, now working toward membership, observed: "Race was not my family's prime consideration in choosing this church. Of course, these people's attitude toward race was part of it, for they didn't even seem to consider color. They were concerned with more important things."

Joining the Church of the Saviour is possible only after a minimum of one year of study and participation in a small fellowship group. The courses preparatory to membership include Christian doctrine, Christian growth, Christian ethics, and study of several books of the Bible, with the Revised Standard Version as the usual text. Homework assignments usually consist of reading, prayer, or written work—such as an essay on the student's conception of God's nature. Often a newcomer's intellectual—as well as spiritual—capacities are deepened through the classes, taught by Gordon Cosby, his comely wife Mary, and several members, and through exposure to current religious books such as those of Elton Trueblood, George A. Buttrick, and Leslie Weatherhead. An example often cited by Gordon Cosby is that of a young girl who never read anything more strenuous than comic books, but now pores over theological tomes.

After attending the church for about a year and a half and taking several preparatory courses, a beginner may ask to participate in one of the twelve fellowship groups. Numbering not less than three and not more than twelve men and women, each group meets at least once a week for prayer and study. Personal problems are discussed if an individual has a particular concern, but basically the groups are not problem-centered. Their primary function is to teach individuals to love one another by drawing close together and to seek God's will for their lives. "If Christian loving and growth won't work in a group like that, it can't work on a larger scale," observed a burly construction engineer who gave up a lucrative position to stay in Washington with the church. He and others told us that occasionally a group won't jell, and sometimes members realize that their spiritual progress is retarded by a group's deficiencies in certain areas. Each

(Continued on page 8.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Keys to the Campus

The following address was delivered to the Freshman Class on Tuesday night, September 7, as the official welcome from the president of the college.

You are in college. You have been thinking of coming to college for a long, long time. You have been planning to come to college perhaps not quite so long. At any rate, you are here. We are delighted that you are and since you are here you want to make the best of it. We want you to get everything that you possibly can out of college life. Consequently, I am placing in your hands the keys of the campus. I am turning everything over to you. Do as you please, say what you please. You have absolute liberty so long as you do and say only those things that a lady or a gentleman would do or say. So long as you stay in the bounds of a lady or a gentleman, you are safe, but if in your actions, associations, or deeds, you go beyond the bounds of a lady or a gentleman, you will be called and called hard.

So with these understandings I, as president of the college, turn over to you the keys of the campus.

I. First of all, you have been given a key to your room. This room is to be your home, your living quarters while you are here. It may not be as fine as you would like but, nevertheless, it is yours. Keep it as nice as you find it. Take care of the furniture. If you must smoke, for decency's sake and for good training, don't put lighted cigarets on your furniture, on your table, and don't throw them on the floor. Fire burns at Elon College just like it does anywhere else.

II. Next I turn over to you the key of acquaintance. You are meeting a lot of people in college. You have already met a lot. You will meet more. Professors who will be your counselors, instructors and guides. These are a group of fine men and women who have been selected from the best colleges and universities in this country, and from the field of service and brought here to our campus to be your instructors, your helpers in your determination to get an education. You are meeting a lot of young people—young men and young women about your ages who are here for the same purpose; a fine group to be thrown with and to be a part of. They are to be your college-mates and your classmates. I introduce you to them.

III. The next key that I turn over to you is the key of friendship. In college you are always making new acquaintances or are forming new friendships. In college you make friends, close friends, dear friends, lasting friends—friends that will mean much to you in life and in some instances as much as life itself. For instance, Dean Danieley found a friend on the campus here. She is now Mrs. Danieley. The first time that I saw Mrs. Smith was on this campus. If you are so fortunate as to find such a friendship, you are lucky.

IV. The next key that I turn over is the key of information. I place this key in your hands. It is an important key. To possess it imposes great responsibilities. To keep it, you must use it. Not to use it is to lose it. This key is a key to the past. It unlocks the vaults to yesterday and yester-years. As you turn this key and open this door to the past you are getting a glimpse of the creative genius of God. You will get an idea of how the worlds are made, how man came to be and how he has behaved himself, in this, God's world. You must use this key and take a look into the past. Then this key of information is a key to the present. If you will use it, you can get an idea of what is going on in the world around you, now, today. It will present to you the news in newspapers, magazines, periodicals. They are all on the library shelves. Don't neglect. You can take this key of information and unlock the minds of your professors. You may turn the key and find out exactly what they are thinking about, what they are going to teach. You can find out exactly what your professors are going to ask on your test and examination papers. Don't fail to use this key. Use it often and earnestly.

This key of information will not only unlock the past and present but will in a certain sense unlock for you the future. It will give you an idea of what is going to happen tomorrow or in the years to come. This key in reality will unlock for you the library where you will find books—books that have been selected with great care, piled high on shelf after shelf. On the pages of these books, you will find the best products of the best minds that the world has produced. Take your key, go into the library and study. Live with the great minds of the past and present. They will inspire you, they will enlighten you, they will bequeath to you the power that you desire.

I warn you to use the key and use it successfully, there are certain things that are necessary:

First, character—reputation is what people think of you. Character is what you know you are. It is basic to all human values and essential to all human progress. Without character, you are worthless, regardless of what you know or what you think or what you are able to do.

Second, diligence—you must apply yourself earnestly, honestly, and continuously. You cannot fret your time away and at the same time keep the keys of information in your hands.

Third, you must be honest. You cannot falsify about your whereabouts or what you have been doing. You cannot cheat in the classroom or on examinations.

Don't forget this one thing. God is over and above all. He is with you all through the day and all through the night. You cannot evade him. You must give an account of all things that you say or do. If you are wise, you will seek him, love him, know him, serve him.

L. E. SMITH,
President.

* * * * *

Elon College Opens

Elon College is opening this week. Freshman orientation began on Tuesday, September 7. Freshman began registering on Wednesday and upper-classmen on Thursday. Regular classes were to have begun on Friday. They are in a way, but numbers of the students are still in the hallways endeavoring to complete their registration. Students may enroll for complete credit through next week. There will be no accurate accounting as to members enrolled before that date. However, at the close of the day yesterday, Thursday, there were 125 more students enrolled than for

(Continued on page 13.)

Missions at Home and Abroad

In Another Hot Spot

We have been in another of today's hot spots. Pakistan, the world's sixth largest nation, is one of the youngest. Like its competitor in size and youth, Indonesia, Pakistan is a Moslem state. However, Pakistan is the most Moslem of all nations, for it alone has in its constitution a definite statement that it is Moslem and governed in accordance with the Moslem Bible, the Koran. Even marriage and divorce are all in accord with Moslem traditions.

Pakistan is composed of two parts, with a thousand miles of India between. In 1938 we crossed a part of what is now eastern Pakistan, but this is the first time Mrs. Sloan and I have visited the ruling section, western Pakistan, and its leading cities, Lahore with two million people and Karachi with more than a million.

In Lahore we were entirely with Pakistanis. We saw two foreigners, both Americans at the great mission hospital, and saw them for less than an hour.

Our program in Lahore was arranged by a Pakistani, Prof. Biswas, whose daughter visited Elon College last March. He saw to it that we were well entertained in the homes of Pakistani people, although he could do nothing about the 107 degree temperature. We were guests in the home of a supreme court judge, that of a woman president of a government college of 700 Moslem young women, that of the youth director of the national council of churches, and Prof. Biswas' own home. These leaders are all Christians and are holding the banner of Christianity high in a nation that is 98 per cent Moslem.

When India and Pakistan were divided seven years ago the Hindus were driven out of western Pakistan and a large part of the Moslems in India escaped to Pakistan. This has resulted in millions of refugees living in squalor. India seems to have been more successful with its share of displaced persons. However, the situation has brought suffering to the majority of Christians there. Most of them were employees of wealthy Hindu land-owners. These large holdings have been broken up and given to the Moslem immigrants, with the result that the Christians are unemployed. Although the government says that it does not discriminate against Christians, it is natural that with as much unemployment as exists, the Christian seldom gets the job that opens up.

America is giving Pakistan a lot of financial aid. Several leading Christians asked me to urge the U. S. government to have some of this earmarked for jobs for Christians. They were unable to understand my explanation of American separation of church and state.

Pakistanis are very grateful to America for the financial aid that is being received, but many of them express a wish that less of it were military aid. They feel that such aid will not affect Russia or China, but is making plenty of trouble with India, for India fears the armament may be used against her.

After five days of Pakistani food it was good to fly Saturday evening to the port city of Karachi and get some American food at the home of a mission family. I had been assigned to preach to the English speaking congregation Sunday morning and to speak through an interpreter Sunday afternoon, and Mrs. Sloan to talk to a woman's group Monday afternoon. Quite a group of Americans are in Karachi in connection with American aid programs. Several of them were at church Sunday morning, including a young couple from Raleigh, another couple who are good friends of my sister in Ohio, and a third who lived at the Grand Coulee Dam in Washington shortly after we left there.

After two busy days in Karachi we got the night train for Cairo, Egypt, 2250 miles to the west. At Cairo we got a plane for Jerusalem, Jordan.

W. W. SLOAN.

PILOT PROJECT FOR PROTESTANTS.

(Continued from page 6.)

group sponsors projects—for example, members of one work in Washington's Junior Village every Saturday afternoon. These groups, custom-made for any job that needs doing, do away with a need for committees and men's or women's organizations.

Actual membership comes when an individual is ready "to give (God) practical priority in all the affairs of life." But growth does not taper off with membership. "Becoming a member is like courtship and marriage," a personable young dental hygienist told us; "before joining, you find out about God's nature; afterwards you work out your relationship with him." The congregation is all crew; it carries no passengers. Once a year each member reviews his commitment and decides whether to renew it.

Several members have felt unable to continue and have withdrawn from active membership, just as numerous visitors and newcomers have found that membership was too difficult a goal. As Gordon Cosby puts it, "Many persons, especially those who think of the church as a social club, are not ready to pay the price involved in a vital faith."

"Our disciplines keep our channels to God open; they're means, never ends," the construction engineer observed. The minimum discipline accepted by the Church of the Saviour members calls for: at least fifteen minutes of prayer each day, weekly worship, daily study of the Scriptures, membership in a fellowship group or participation in the educational program, tithing (some members give up to 30 per cent of their incomes), expression of Christian love in every possible contact, and performance each week of some Christian service.

The raison d'être for the disciplines is compactly stated in the church's booklet: "Groups that require little of their membership count for little outside their membership. Real spiritual capacity requires at least as much concentration and training as learning to play a musical instrument, or to paint, or to play a good game of golf. Nobody ever drifted into a genuine Christian experience."

The Church of the Saviour fulfills the long-term dream of three young persons still in their thirties—Gordon Cosby, Mary Cosby, and her sister Elizabeth-Ann (now Mrs. Gene Compagna). Before the war all three were active in church work in Lynchburg, Virginia, the young women being daughters of a Baptist minister. Gordon graduated from Southern

(Continued on page 13.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

In the Doghouse

The editor of this page is in the "doghouse" because of two jokes which appeared on it last week under the heading "For Husband and Wife." Of course, her husband should not think that she put them in, for both reflected on the wife—her intelligence and her spending.

However, I do not want to be blamed by the other wives for these jokes—if I send in any, they will probably be on the poor husband! For these we must give credit to Stanley Harrell or John T. Kernodle—and heaven defend them from their wives!

Incidentally, they did liven up the page, and so are really appreciated by the editor of it.

* * *

Dear Emily: Don't take it too seriously. We'll take full blame, for after all, they were only jokes.

J. T. K.

P. S.—We've got some more good ones.

* * * * *

Friendly Service—1954-1955

The Friendly Service materials for 1954-55 are in the packet. This year the committee is suggesting layettes, to be sent to seven places at home and abroad. A worship service to use in dedicating the gifts is included in the packet, as well as games to use at a party, and information about the places where layettes are needed. This Friendly Service party may be held at Christmas, at Easter, or anytime during the year.

The committee believes that there may be societies in our convention who would like to give gifts in addition to the layettes, or societies who would rather substitute other gifts for the layettes. So each conference Friendly Service chairman has a quota of gifts for her conference. At the fall conferences attention will be called to these quotas. Societies who would like to accept a specific quota for a specific place or places will notify their conference Friendly Service chairman. It is hoped that in this way each conference will be able to fill its quota.

It has been called to our attention that most women's state groups in our denomination accept specific quotas for Friendly Service gifts each year. It is the felling of our committee that perhaps this is the goal toward which we should strive. This method enables all of our missions to receive aid, without one place getting too much and another place getting nothing at all.

MRS. W. E. WISSEMAN,
Convention Chairman.

MRS. R. L. JACKSON,
North Carolina.

MRS. RAY GORDON,
Eastern Virginia.

MRS. R. A. WHITTEN, Valley of Virginia.

* * * * *

Plans Completed for North Carolina Conference

The North Carolina Executive Board met at Moonelon on August 25, to plan for the fall conference, and enjoyed a fine day together (including a covered dish luncheon which was a "sumptuous banquet," according to the president, Mrs. W. T. Scott).

All officers and departments gave splendid reports of work accomplished. Of especial interest was the report of Mrs. R. V. Powell, chairman of the program for the fall conference.

Mrs. Scott has recently sent a letter to all societies, reminding them of the conference to be held at the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines on October 5, for which the Eutaw Church is responsible. Registration will begin at 9:30 and there will be hymn singing for those who arrive early.

Miss Jennie M. Doidge of Boston, Massachusetts, will be the featured speaker. This will give a background for the study for the coming year, for her topic is "Face to Face with India." It is planned that the offering at Conference will go for work in India and Ceylon.

Each district group will sit in a body, and will be recognized as such. It is hoped that every district in North Carolina will be represented with a large group.

* * * * *

New Filmstrip Available

The Literature Committee purchased for the use of the women of the Convention this year a new filmstrip called "Dick's Discovery." It is to be used in connection with the Home Mission study theme, "The City."

This filmstrip consists of about fifty pictures presenting life in the city, including problems which confront young people in the city church.

It, along with the feature film, "The Beginning," the Family Life films, and any other films the women want to use may be booked by writing Miss Doris Boswell, Convention Office, Box 336, Elon College, N. C.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL,
Literature Chairman.

* * * * *

Plans for Valley Women

Mrs. C. L. Whitlock of Winchester, Va., president of the Woman's Fellowship of the Virginia Valley Conference, reports a splendid meeting of their executive board in the town hall at New Market, Va., on August 11. The group were guests of the Woods Chapel women at this planning session, preparing for the twenty-seventh annual session of the Woman's Conference, which will be held on Friday, October 8, in the Newport Church.

Much interest was shown at this meeting and many fine suggestions were offered. Mrs. Ralph Galt set the mood for the discussion with a meaningful service of meditation.

The theme for the conference will be "Out of the Heart of the Gospel." Mrs. R. E. Newton, Spiritual Life superintendent, will have the morning devotions, using the suggested Bible study for material. The guest speaker of the morning, Miss Jennie Doidge of New York, will give a preview of the study on Ceylon and India. The afternoon session will open with a presentation of "The City" by the Winchester Church. The message of the afternoon will be given by Mrs. W. B. Williams, speaking on the International Seminar, which she attended last summer. Mrs. Galt will prepare a table of literature available for women's work and will assist in ordering it. An-

(Continued on page 10.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

From time to time we have given our readers recipes. Much to our surprise they have been quite popular and friends write to say, "We tried the cookies and they were good," or "Please give us some more." Not so long ago we saw a very interesting recipe for boys and girls to make a successful life. We were telling some other children about it and they thought it would be nice to make a recipe of their own. It isn't hard to do.

Put on your thinking cap and think of the things you need for a happy life. You will need balance too, for in making a recipe everything must be level and balanced, if not the cooked object will be too thick or thin.

For a happy, well rounded boy or girl take:

- 2 parents who are loving and kind.
- 1 cup humor.
- 1 cup common sense.
- ½ cup patience.
- 1 tablespoonful of honesty and truth.
- 1 teaspoonful of music.
- A dash of fun-loving mischief.

Blend well, add ingredients from time to time as needed (may be found at home, in church, in school). Served in generous amounts, this recipe will last a lifetime.

You think of yours, it will be better than ours, we may have left out a main ingredient. But it is true that these things are essential to a happy life.

* * * * *

The "Awful" Truth

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"That is not the truth, Junior! You know you never saw a lion in your bedroom. It's awful the way you tell what isn't the truth!"

How many mothers there must be who often say something like that to young offspring! But how does Junior feel?

What was truth, Junior wondered. He knew he had seen a lion. It was the awful truth that he had; yet Mommie never believed him. He went to his sister. "I saw a lion, a real lion," he said.

"Why, I guess you did, Junior, but we haven't been to the zoo in months!"

"Zoo!" he snorted. "I saw it right in my bedroom!"

Big Sister looked very angry. She shook her finger at him. "Oh, Junior!" she said. "That is not true; it's a fib—an awful one. You mustn't tell such stories!"

But, why? He had seen the lion. It was the truth!

Junior decided to ask his friend, Mrs. Patterson. He looked at the big oak tree, and all of a sudden he saw a bear peeping from behind it. He was frightened. When he finally dared, he ran up the steps to Mrs. Patterson's porch.

"Hello, Junior!" he heard her call. "I'm out here in the garden."

The child looked silently at her, and then at the big oak tree.

"Come and talk to me out here, dear," she invited.

"H'lo, Mrs. Patterson."

"H'lo, honey," she answered. "What have you been doing today?"

"Playing!" he said briefly.

"Good!" she said. "You looked so angry when you were up on the porch. What was the matter?"

"I saw a bear behind the oak tree!" Junior said gruffly.

To his surprise his friend responded. "No wonder you waited for a few minutes before coming over!"

"But—!"

"Oh, I don't think he'll bother us any more," Mrs. Patterson said.

"I understand what is troubling you junior. However, I don't call that an untruth. That's imagination," Mrs. Patterson explained. "Imagination is good."

The little boy heaved a deep sigh. Things were getting better. He heard his mother calling him and he left for home with the hope that once Daddy and he got together after dinner he could find out more.

"Well, Son," Daddy began as usual. "how was your day?"

"I have to know about the awful truth and 'magination,'" the little boy said abruptly.

"Well," his father answered, "I think maybe I can help you, but truth isn't 'awful,' junior. It's better when you tell the truth, and not what you imagine is the truth." He paused a minute, and the little boy listened intently. "Truth? Why, that's saying what you know is right, telling what actually happened. If you do something wrong and know it and then say you didn't do it, or you blame someone else, that would really be an untruth, or lie, or fib, or story. I like the word 'story' for imagination, however."

"'magination!'" Junior repeated. Then in a rush, "But-I did-see-a-lion-in-my-bed-room! And I saw a bear behind Mrs. Patterson's tree! She believed me."

"I know," Daddy said quietly. "I saw lions in my bedroom and bears behind trees, too when I was a little boy." Then, to the surprise of Junior, he added, "And my mother didn't believe me!"

The little boy could hardly believe his own ears.

"That's imagination. We've been reading and talking so much about circus animals that you thought you saw them."

Junior nodded his head up and down several times.

"Keep your imagination, Son," Daddy continued, "but, before you tell Mother or your sister, rub your eyes a couple of times and then see if you still see the lion or the bear. I think you'll find they will have disappeared. That's the best way. To you, seeing them in imagination is the truth, but Mother and Sister don't understand. You can say, 'Here's a joke, Mommie,' and tell her about it; but perhaps it would be wiser to save it for Mrs. Patterson or for me."

"So we can enjoy it together, like books," the little boy said happily. He felt a lot better now.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

other feature of the conference will be a new method of reports from the departmental superintendents. Three minutes will be allowed to each superintendent for her report and question period.

The treasurer, Mrs. J. E. Bryant, reported having sent in $802.17 on our apportionment and $150.00 for the goat fund. We are hopeful that in the last quarter we will reach the remainder of the $1,250.00 apportionment assigned to the Valley Women.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Western Carolina Youth Meet at Randleman Church

Youth from many churches of the Western North Carolina Conference gathered in the Randleman Christian Church August 29, for their regular youth rally.

The program was opened with devotions led by the Hank's Chapel youth, after which the vice-president, Sylvia Coggins led in roll call and introductions of visitors and ministers.

Special music for the rally was beautifully presented by soloist, Judy Yates and also by the Pleasant Ridge Choir.

The theme of this rally was "A Pilgrim Fellowship." The highlight of the program was an address by Rev. Tucker Humpheries of Reidsville in which he pointed out the quality of a good P. F. er and challenged all youth to be Christian.

A delightful picnic lunch was spread for the evening meal, with the host church serving the drinks. Everyone enjoyed the fellowship together as they ate.

The evening program consisted of a movie, "More for Peace." Afterwards the group joined hands for the Friendship Circle and benediction.

These rallies provide fellowship and useful information to the church youth, and it encouraging that more youth from more churches are attending.

* * * * *

A Letter to Eastern Virginia Young People

Dear Young People:

School has begun for most of you and for others it will begin by the time you receive this letter. So—it is time for us to really get down to business and start our fall program with a "bang." Also, it is time to have our Annual Fall Missionary Rally. This year we have been invited to the Rosemont Christian Church, Bainbridge Blvd., South Norfolk, on Sunday, October 3, at 3:00 p. m. We hope that you will have a good group from your church for the Rally.

Miss Jennie Doidge, our representative for the American Board and world traveler, will be the main speaker. We are sure you will receive a great blessing in hearing Miss Doidge. She is considered one of the best speakers on the American Board. You do not want to miss her message!

You are asked to bring sandwiches for supper and the Rosemont Young People will serve the drink and dessert. After supper we will enjoy recreation in the Social Hall of the Church. This feature is new for our rallies but we felt the young people wanted a chance to have more fellowship with young people of other churches. Please do not leave early because you will miss one of the best parts of our program with an outsider as the leader.

Mrs. Clyde Fields, our Woman's Advisor, will have materials and study books on sale at the end of the afternoon session. Come prepared to buy your materials for next year.

If you have not paid your apportionment in full for this year, we hope that you will send it to Mrs. George Cornell, RFD No. 2, Box 376, Suffolk, Va., immediately.

Looking forward to seeing a group from your church at Rosemont on October 3.

Sincerely yours,
REBECCA MAIN, President,
RUTH DUNN, Corr. Secretary.

"Brigadon"

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

If ever a production may be called literally "out of this world" it is "Brigadoon." This delightful musical play which has enjoyed great favor on the stage comes as a welcome escape from reality on a screen enlarged by CinemaScope and made vividly alive by Anseo Color.

When people meet beyond time and space it is always told as a strange experience but, in the case of Tommy and Jeff, two young Americans, grouse-hunting in the Scottish Highlands, this occurrence has the reality of possibility in one way and is a dream-like fantasy in another. They find themselves in Brigadoon, a village where festivities are in progress and the joy of living is most manifest. All share in preparations for a wedding set for that day and the boys join in singing and dancing. Fiona, the sister of the bride and Tommy feel attracted to one another but a mystery must be explained, so the "Dominie" tells the strange story of Brigadoon. The minister who loved his people so much two hundred years ago and wanted them to be spared the vicissitudes of a wicked world cast a spell upon them which permitted the village and its folk to disappear completely, but to reawaken for a day once every hundred years. This is their day. It turns out to be an eventful one, culminating in the beautiful wedding ceremony with the gathering of the clans among the rocky crags, by the light of torches, with the stirring music of the bagpipes and the rolling of drums. By then, Fiona and Tommy are in love and he must either go away and forget Brigadoon or stay and forsake a very real world. His down-to-earth friend causes him to decide for the former but, when he finds himself back in the hubbub of New York, among those who seek escape in feverish activity or in the vapors of alcohol, he knows he must return to Brigadoon for ever. The story ends, as it began, in the hazy mist of the Scottish Highlands, with the twinkling lights of the village welcoming him because, as says the Dominie, "When ye love someone deeply, anything is possible!"

There are some memorable episodes in this charming and entertaining play. The atmosphere of unreality is well achieved. The sociability of the market-place, the joyful exuberance of the folk dancing and singing, the colorful wedding celebration, the tender love story are pretexts for a succession of varied presentations well integrated in a beautiful told tale. The musical score is delightful. Dancing and singing are exquisitely performed and in harmony with the locale and the mood of fantasy.

DR. ROBINSON REPORTS ON WORLD COUNCIL.

(Continued from page 3.)

and witnessed the procession of the 600 stated delegates as they filed into the sanctuary. Representatives from 48 countries of the world were in the line of march. Probably this was the most representative body as had ever before entered a single church. Each was wearing his or her native ecclesiastical dress. It was most colorful and dignified."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Living Witnesses

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 26, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works and give glory of your Father who is in heaven." Matthew 5:16.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Matthew 5:13-16; Acts 4:13-16, 8:4-8, 26-40; II Corinthians 5:11-20; I Peter 3:13-19.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 10:4-15.

The word "witness" has as its root an old word "wit" which means "to know." A witness is one who tells what he knows, who bears testimony to the truth, who attests to a fact or event, who furnishes evidence or proof. When Jesus met with his disciples after the Resurrection, he told them that they were to be his witnesses, in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria and to the end of the earth. They were to attest to the fact of what they had seen and heard and felt and knew. They were to bear this witness by their words and their works. The command to witness is at the heart of Christ's commands to his disciples.

And yet how few of us do much effective witnessing. Very infrequently do you hear anybody bearing witness to his experience of Christ, or in behalf of Christ. And so often the witness of the words of so many of us is depreciated because of the witness of our works. Our profession does not find expression in practice. These things ought not so to be. This does not mean that we have to be blabbing all the time about our religion. It does mean that there are times when we ought to "speak a good word for Jesus Christ." It does mean that there ought to be about our lives, even with all their limitations, some evidence that Christ is our Lord and Saviour, some evidence that we are truly his disciples.

Constructive Witnessing.

"Ye are the salt of the earth . . . ye are the light of the world." Salt is good and light is good. But they are both positive in their nature and their function. Jesus wants his followers not only to be good, but to be good for something. Salt not only seasons and preserves, but it gives tang and zest. Just so ought a Christian to give zest and tang to life, spice and season all of life's contacts and experiences. And those who have the light should let it shine. And let it shine in the dark places. The world ought to be a brighter, cheerier place because Christians live in it. Their lives ought to brighten the dark places in which they live and work, and lighten the lives of those with whom they come in contact. It was said of Philipps Brooks, the great American preacher of a generation ago, that it might be dark and gloomy on the streets of Boston, but when he walked down the street, there was light and cheer and sunshine. Our light may be but a tiny candle, but we are to let it shine. Even a candle can lighten and brighten things up.

Motives for Great Living.

"For the love of Christ constrains us." There are many motives for living. Love of money, pleasure, power, prestige, revenge and many other motives drive men in, and through life. But the love of Christ is the greatest motive power in life, at least for the Christian. It was the love of Christ made known to him, and the answering love for Christ in his heart that constrained, compelled, controlled Paul. He felt he should no longer live unto himself, but unto Christ who for his sake and our sakes, died and rose again. There my friends is an adequate and satisfying motive for living. Let the love of Christ fill a man's mind and heart, and no task is too hard, no hardship too great, no persecution too severe, no sacrifice too great, no service too menial. People have borne all things, endured all things, suffered all things for Christ's dear sake. Let a man live for self and life becomes dull and unsatisfying. Let him live for Christ and it becomes zestful and meaningful.

Reconciliation Between God and Men.

"But all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself through Christ. . . . God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Get this straight—God did not need to be reconciled. He continued to love men no matter what they did. (He did not approve of what they did and he had to execute judgment upon them, but he loved them and he held no grudge against them.) But man needed to be reconciled unto God. And man found reconciliation with God in Christ Jesus. He was the Mediator between God and men. His life and death brought men to God, and through him they were restored to fellowship with God and reconciled to God. The real meaning of The Atonement is "at-one-ment" or "at one with." There's a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea, there's a kindness in his justice that is more than liberty. And if our lives were but more simple, we would take him at his word. Peace of mind comes through reconciliation with God. Men need to be reconciled to God.

The Ministry of Reconciliation.

"And has committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation. . . . we beseech you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God." How pleased some folks would be if they were appointed by President Eisenhower as ambassador to some foreign country, say England, Holland, Sweden. To represent our great nation, to speak for it, to interpret it to other nations, to act for it—these are great privileges that are accorded to ambassadors! Well, says Paul, we are ambassadors on behalf of Christ. Not just a few big-shots, just a few folks high up on the totem pole, but ordinary folks, humble folks, everyday, garden-variety folks. Every follower of Christ potentially and practically is an ambassador for Christ. Where ever he goes he is to speak and to act in behalf of Christ, to represent Christ.

How this ministry of reconciliation is needed in our modern world! Think of the differences and divisions between individuals, some of them members of the same family, some of them neighbors. Think of the differences between classes and colors and creeds and cultures, between races and religions. Think of the differences between nations and the peoples of the world. More than anything else, people need to be reconciled to each other. This difficult and dangerous matter of desegregating the school system of our country calls for folks with cool heads and sympathetic hearts, who will be ministers of reconciliation between the races involved. This but dramatizes

(Continued on page 15.)

PILOT PROJECT FOR PROTESTANTS.

(Continued from page 8.)

Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1942, then had a short stint as pastor of the Ballston Baptist Church in Arlington, Virginia, before entering the Army as a chaplain.

His battlefield experiences with the 327th Glider Regiment of the renowned 101st Airborne Division brought him two Bronze Stars. The response of his men to small fellowship groups persuaded him to include the corporate approach in the plans for his experimental church. In a similar way were developed the specifics of the rudimentary plans he had so often discussed with Mary and Elizabeth-Ann.

After the war the three planners along with a handful of sympathizers set out to establish their church. The Washington area, with which most of them were familiar, was selected because statistics indicated that it had half a million unchurched individuals and because of its symbolic status as the nation's capital. After the group had purchased and refurbished an old residence, the church was formally organized on October 19, 1947, with nine members (including the Cosbys). In two years the presence of nineteen members and many more enthusiasts necessitated a move to larger quarters—2025 Massachusetts Avenue. Thousands of man- and woman-hours went into remodeling the building dedicated on October 22, 1950.

Plans for the future included a psychiatric clinic, a school for the training of lay leaders, and a children's home at Dayspring.

The church government is congregational in form. At least four times a year all members assemble for a business session that reviews the actions of the council, composed of six elected members and the staff: Gordon Cosby; Carolyn Johnson; and Sallie Jumper, who supervise community relations. At the present time members allocate 20 per cent of the budget to outreach projects, but hope to increase it by 5 per cent each year until 50 per cent is reached. A sampling of projects would include the Christian Children's Fund, the Burma National Christian Council, the International Christian University in Japan, and work with the blind and children from broken homes.

Like many early Christian communities, it is a church in a home. Focal point of the twenty-five-room mansion is the simple chapel, where two services, at which any member of a Reformed church would feel quite at home, are held every Sunday. It is also frequently used for private meditation. A residential atmosphere is evident in the reception hall, dining room, kitchen, library, and the guest-room. In the basement are classrooms; eight young persons, known as "church mice," live on the third floor. The well-appointed nursery and playroom facilitate family participation, stressed in the church-school program centered on parental responsibility.

After seven years, Gordon Cosby is still the leaven of the church. Always called "Gordon" by his flock, he has a refreshingly informal, almost breezy manner, except in the pulpit. A large portion of his sixteen-hour days is consumed in counseling sessions. He has helped many an individual over a personal hurdle through selfless listening and outlining what he considers the Christian answer to a problem.

His vigorous sermons, tempered by his understanding of the foibles of mankind, alert his congregation to social injustice and the inadequacy of a less-than total faith. He often expresses ideas in paradoxes: "You can't start living," he says, "until your life begins to die."

A frequent visitor told us, "Gordon's sermons hit where it hurts, but they also hit where it soothes, for he concentrates on God's love for the hundredth sheep."

Would the Church of the Saviour continue without Gordon Cosby? A few members expressed their doubts to us. Others felt that they lean on him so often that they might be stronger in his absence. Still others were confident that the church would go on, because "we have become shepherds instead of sheep." This view was seconded by Gordon Cosby: "The Church of the Saviour really has fifty ministers. With his training each member is capable of doing practically all the things a minister does in the way of counseling, visiting, and teaching. As more responsibility is put on the layman, the professional ministry becomes less necessary."

The Church of the Saviour is a striking example of the return to early Christian principles that is of increasing concern to many church groups. It seems to reflect the nationwide resurgence to Christianity, which, Gordon Cosby recently told his congregation, "is nothing new, but the stakes are higher today. Man is caught up in a race with time to see if spiritual power will conquer the other forces abroad in the world. God is calling us to be a spearhead of releasing this power."

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 7.)

the same period one year ago. Enrollment for the evening school will be held this evening, Friday, September 10.

It is interesting how ministers and members of other denominations are turning toward Elon College for the training of their young people. The following letter was received from Reverend Calvin Leonard of Charlotte, North Carolina. Mr. Leonard has been an enthusiastic supporter of Elon College for several years.

Dear Dr. Smith:

I deeply enjoyed talking with you over the telephone. As the days and years pass I know that Roger Sullivan will be a credit to your college and a boost to good morale.

I sincerely thank you for accepting him to Elon—this is the sixth student I have sent to you and they have all turned out good.

Frank Tingley (a football star) is now working in Charlotte and you remember I sent him to you from Thomasville. I saw Frank today, and he is doing a splendid work.

Roger is recommended to you as highly as any preacher could possibly recommend a young man. I sincerely hope that you have a great school year.

Very sincerely yours,
CALVIN LEONARD.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Recently I attended the Pilgrim Fellowship Rally held at the Christian Church in Randleman, North Carolina. Reverend Winfred Bray, a recent graduate of Elon College, is the pastor. The congregation has recently constructed a very beautiful building, brick construction, and attractive inside and out. This church seems to be moving forward at reasonable strides. The pastor and people are to be congratulated.

I arrived a few minutes before the exercises began. The bulletin boards in the front of the church displayed some very interesting figures. On the fourth Sunday in August, there were 89 present for Sunday school. The offering amounted to $76.28. The record for fifth Sunday, the day we

(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The "children" who returned for their annual meeting the first Sunday in September put an additional sum of $347.00 into their treasury bringing their ballance up to $2,760.55. They voted to empower their committee to go ahead with their memorial to the beloved former superintendent, Charles D. Johnson, as soon as sufficient funds were in hand. They are to have a large coldstorage unit installed at a cost of about $5,000.00. They plan to contact former children of the Orphanage before the first of next year in the hope that sufficient funds will come in to pay for this memorial. Enthusiasm ran high for this project and the prospects are good that they will soon reach their goal.

Calvin Clayton sent a contribution to the memorial project and an additional $500.00 to the general fund. Now there is a boy who believes in the orphanage and greatly appreciates what it did for him. The response of many of the former boys and girls was inspiring, and they will see this project through now in record time. Not only are there many who will contribute to it, but they will also remember the needs of the general operating fund. No special effort is made to secure funds at this homecoming meeting as we are all anxious for everyone to return to their old home for the joy of it and "without money and without price" just as you would wish your son or daughter to come home without thinking it would cost him something.

They held their meeting in the new Holt Memorial Chapel and all expressed their pride and joy at having it on their old campus. In the afternoon a service was held in the chapel which attracted many visitors besides those who were here for homecoming. Words of gratitude were spoken on every hand to the Holt family for such a magnificent gift to the orphanage in Memory of Mr. and Mrs. W. Kirk Holt.

It so happened that the first service held in the Holt Chapel, September 3, was the funeral service of H. Garner Hilliard, who was reared at the orphanage and retained here for many years as a dairyman. Having seen the chapel erected he often expressed the desire that when he passed away his funeral might be held in it. And while it had not yet been opened the Holt family most graciously granted his request. As most of you know his sister, Eugenia, is Mrs. L. W. Wagoner, wife of our assistant superintendent. No boy reared at the orphanage ever cooperated more fully, nor loved it more devotedly than Garner Hilliard. His friends were numbered by those who knew him both inside and out of the orphanage. I felt honored that it was his request that I conduct his funeral.

The orphanage greatly appreciates the presence and kind words of Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College; George D. Colelough, vice-president of the Southern Convention; and Vitus R. Holt, president of the Board of Trustees of the orphanage and representative of the W. Kirk Holt family. It was good, too, to have the Rev. W. J. Andes, new pastor of the Elon College Community Church make the main prayer.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 9, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:
Cong. Christian Church, Durham, N. C.
Mrs. Elmer F. Wilcox, Braintree, Mass.
Missionary Soc., Wake Chapel Christian Ch.

Clothing:
Joe Morris, Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. Rountree, Newport News, Va.

Bananas:
Pate-Dawson Co., Burlington, N. C.

Clothing and buttons:
Mrs. J. S. Burnham, Asheville, N. C.

24 jars of honey:
John Craddock, Gibsonville, N. C.

Coupons and clothing:
Mrs. James Osborn, Norwalk, California.
Coupons, clothing and quilt.
Lebanon Woman's Fellowship, Semora, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 8,981.41
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Morrisville	$ 9.24
	9.24
Eastern Va. Conference:
Liberty Spring S. S.	$ 20.00
Mt. Carmel S. S.	21.45
Norfolk, First	$ 20.08
	61.53
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Durham S. S.	$ 23.00
Greensboro, Calvary S. S.	14.00
Greensboro, First	53.73
Reidsville	50.00
	141.31
Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester S. S.	$ 8.34
	8.34
Total	$ 220.42
Grandtotal	$ 9,201.83

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$21,773.41
Young Christians Achievement Club, Burlington, N. C.
Miss Vera E. Gilliam, Greensboro, N. C.	$ 61.91
John Chamberlin, Gibsonville, N. C.	10.00
G. S. Huber, Spring Grove, Va.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. C. S. Clayton, Charlotte, N. C.	75.00
Eugene Neu, Charlotte, N. C.	500.00
Mrs. H. C. Simpson, Greensboro, N. C.	5.00
Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., interest	5.00
In Memory of H. Garner Hilliard	36.00
In Memory of W. T. Pace, Sr.	5.00
In Memory of Hazel Gray Chaney	5.00
	25.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS "Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

.....
(Name of Deceased)

.....
(City)

.....
(Date of Death)

.....
(Survivor to be Written)

.....
(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

SMITH.

Whereas God has called to her final reward our beloved friend, Mrs. Bessie Faucett Smith, who for many years has been a member of Monticello Congregational Christian Church.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we as members of the church deeply feel the loss of our beloved member.
2. That we shall cherish the memory of her unflinching cheerfulness though her body bore the burden of intense pain, and suffering for months.
3. She will be remembered by her faithfulness to duty, devotion to her family, and kindness to all.
4. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family, and commend them to the Great Comforter who said, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Mrs. J. E. CUMBIE,
RUSSELL McKINNEY.

PARKER.

Mrs. Maggie Hinton Parker, wife of Mr. W. H. Parker of Driver, Virginia, passed away on Sunday evening, September 5 at 8:00 o'clock. Stricken about a year ago with an admittedly incurable disease, she showed remarkable vitality through months of her suffering, and maintained a spirit of patience, and courage, and cheer that was an inspiration to all those who came in contact with her. She was sustained and comforted by a simple and sturdy faith in God made known in Jesus Christ.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker had been married for fifty-seven years, and they had honored and dignified their marriage vows and family life. They can well be classified among those people whom Jesus would call "the salt of the earth." They have three sons and three daughters living and there are also eleven grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Parker was a good woman. She lived a simple, sincere life. She was of the quiet and modest type. She loved her home, and thought of her career as a home-maker. She was a faithful wife, a wise and devoted mother, a good neighbor, a true friend, a consistent Christian, one of God's true gentlewomen. She had been a member for many years of Berea Christian Church. She attended regularly the Sunday school, the services of worship, and the Woman's Missionary Society, and could be counted on to do her part. She will be greatly missed, not only in the home, but in the church and in the community.

The writer of Proverbs described her: "The heart of her husband trusteth in her, and he shall have no lack of gain. She doeth him good and not evil all the days of her life. She spreadeth out her hands to the poor; yea she reacheth forth her hands to the needy. Strength and dignity are her clothing. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and the law of kindness is on her tongue. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also praiseth her, saying, 'Many daughters have done virtuously; but thou excellest them all.'"

Mrs. Parker has moved her earthly home in Driver into the Father's house of many mansions, eternal in the heavens. And her works do follow her.

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

TROLLINGER.

The Carolina Christian Church suffered a great loss on May 4, 1954, as Mr. John W. Trollinger was called to be at rest. Mr. Trollinger died at the Alamance General Hospital after several years of failing health and critical illness for one week.

Mr. Trollinger was a charter member of the Carolina Church and served as a deacon from the time it was organized. He was superintendent for approximately 35 years. He also served as a teacher and as president of the Carolina Memorial Association since the organization of that association.

Mr. John was loved by young and old alike. He was a man in whom all had confidence. He was a friend to all and a special friend to the pastors who have served the church. He loved people, but above all, he loved his Master. He was a man whose life was truly his testimony. Mr. John was always willing to give his time, talent, and his means to see that the work of the church was carried on.

For many years he was a merchant in the community. His store served the people well. A person was never turned from his store because he could not pay his bill.

He was the son of the late Milton G. and Julia Rice Trollinger. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Helen Reynolds Trollinger; one daughter; Mrs. Ernestine Caviness; one son, J. W. Jr.; two sisters, Miss Ida Trollinger and Mrs. Cora Dickey, all of Rt. 3, Burlington, North Carolina.

Funeral services were conducted at the Carolina Church, with Rev. R. Councilman, Rev. K. D. Register, Rev. R. D. Coulter, and the pastor, Rev. B. A. Leebrick, officiating. Many relatives and friends were present, and tokens of love and appreciation were shown by the beautiful flowers brought to the rites. The church and community suffered a great loss in the passing of this dear loved one, but the community is a better place because Mr. John lived here.

BLAND A. LEEBRICK,
Pastor.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

the need for this ministry of reconciliation all through life.

And then of course there is the matter of reconciling men to God. There are thousands in our country, some of them in your community, who are estranged from God. Christians ought to have the compassion and the courage to urge these people on behalf of Christ, to be reconciled to God.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 13.)

were meeting, the attendance was 101 with an offering of $57.08. As I read these figures, I felt that something must be wrong. I asked a member of that church. He said, "No, these are correct." I spoke to Winfred, and he said, "These folks of mine are very generous" and believe me, they are.

I began to feel that since this church is a loyal congregation that maybe this fifth Sunday offering would be coming to Elon College, but I learned that this church has a single budget. The members of the Sunday school and church understand that the offerings from all services on Sunday go into the general budget and out of this budget the expenses of the church are paid. I am sure that when the end of the year comes that Randleman Church will have paid its college apportionment in full.

It was a joy to meet with the young people of the Western Conference and to share their enthusiasm as they face the work of their churches. Reverend Tucker Humphries was the speaker for the afternoon. There was a very good attendance and a good program.

After all, this does have something to do with apportionment giving. As the time for the end of the present conference year approaches, I am sure that our churches will busy themselves about meeting their apportionment in full.

Previously reported	$ 5,522.29
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Mt. Auburn S. S.	$ 10.82
Wake Chapel	27.29
Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem Nans. S. S. ..	$ 30.75
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Greensboro, First	$314.08
Western N. C. Conference:
Seagrove	$ 40.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.	$ 28.59

451.51

Total to date $ 5,973.80

ORPHANAGE REPORT

(Continued from page 14.)

In Memory of Hazel Gray Chaney	25.00
In Memory of Hazel Gray Chaney	25.00
Special gifts	240.00
	993.91
Grand total	$22,767.32
Total for the week	$ 1,214.33
Total for the year	$31,969.15

THE EVANGELIZING CHURCH

By DR. H. SHELTON SMITH

It is a hopeful fact that the present movement toward Christian unity within the World Council of Churches is also a movement toward the evangelical awakening of the church. Indeed, it is the deepening of the evangelistic task of the church that underlies the desire to manifest the oneness of the church.

This vital connection between evangelism and unity revealed itself forcefully in the Evanston Assembly of the World Council. First of all, some of the moving addresses at the great plenary sessions of the assembly were devoted to evangelistic themes. Notably impressive were the messages of D. T. Niles of Ceylon, India, and Charles C. Ranson, secretary of the International Missionary Council. Second, one of the six major subsections of the assembly concerned itself with evangelism. Third, when the World Council was first organized at Amsterdam in 1948, it created a "Secretariat for Evangelism" and appointed as executive secretary Dr. Johannes C. Hoekendijk of the Dutch Reformed Church. It also created a standing Commission on Evangelism. This commission submitted one of the more important reports to the Evanston Assembly.

Considering the report of the commission, what were the major trends of thought on evangelism at Evanston?

First of all, Evanston made one fact perfectly clear: that the non-evangelizing church is not the church. To be the church at all is to be an evangelizing mission, to be witnessing the Good Tidings of the Gospel.

From this it necessarily follows that evangelism is not a matter of a special week in the year, nor is it a question of a particular sort of activity or program. On this point the report says: "Evangelism is no specialized or separable or periodic activity, it is rather a dimension of the total activity of the church. Everything the church does is of evangelistic significance. Through all the aspects of its life, the church participates in Christ's mission to the world, both partaking of the gospel and seeking to communicate it. Evangelism is the place where the church discovers itself in its true depth and outreach."

Second, Evanston emphasized the necessity of perceiving the true motive under which the church evangelizes. True evangelical witness springs out of the awareness that the Gospel is God's gift, not man's creation. When we were without hope, it was God who gave us a living hope through the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Hence "the gospel is preached because the Lord is risen and the age of the Messiah begun." "As the Father sent him, so he sends us. He calls and we must obey. He sends us and we must go."

Third, the report on evangelism urges the church to "break out of its isolation and introversion" and enter into more vigorous encounter especially with "workers and intellectuals." "In addressing the worker, the word must be related to his social condition and aspirations; and the word cannot be spoken to the intellectual unless we make it clear that in the church's message there is a cogent and coherent view of life." If we Christians are to be truly evangelizing in our work with these and other groups, continued the report, "we must live in such identification with man, with his sin, his hopes and fears, his misery and needs, that we become his brother and can witness from his place and condition to God's love for him."

Fourth, it was pointed out that the resurgent non-Christian faiths now confront evangelism with a new and serious challenge. In alliance with vigorous nationalistic movements, they are becoming militant on behalf of their own faiths and are mustering their resources against Christian evangelism. "The renaissance of non-Christian religions and the spread of new ideologies necessitate a new approach in our evangelistic task."

Fifth, the evangelical witness of the church is definitely obstructed by the disunity of the churches, especially on the mission fields. Therefore will the church deal with these divisions with holy impatience, and passionately strive for unity."

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1954

NUMBER 37

A Prayer of Re-Enlistment

By RICHARD K. MORTON

Breathe on me, Breath of God, as renewing as breezes of ocean vastness have cooled me from summer's heat in vacation hours!

Move, O God, amid the stillness of my heart as Thou didst seem to brood over mountain lake as a rich-golden sun dived below mountain's walls that brought early nightfall!

Guide me, O God, as Thou hast been my Guide over many a weary and hot road that stretched out to pull me toward some favored spot.

Reveal unto me, O God, something that I did not see, even upon scenic road or in comfortable lodging place. Refresh my soul even as Thou hast permitted me to find refreshment of body and of mind.

As I have found fellowship with many I met for the first time, grant that I may find real communion with Thee, whom I should have truly met a long time ago.

Now that the blessings of summer and vacation leisure have been mine, fit me to accept the frets and crosses of daily service and re-enlist me in the ranks of Thy humblest disciples. Grant me the things possessed only by those who give, the faith possessed only by those who love, the kind of life known only to those willing to die, in Jesus' name.
Amen.

News Flashes

Congratulations to Dr. Smith and the Field Staff of Elon College upon the record opening of the fall term last week

Supt. W. T. Scott, has been sick the past week with flu. He is convalescing at last report, and we hope for him a speedy return to his usual good health.

The annual revival at New Hope Christian Church will begin on Sunday, September 19, at 7:45 p. m. The pastor, Rev. R. Eugene Tally, will be assisted by Rev. W. Clay Farrell.

The Christian Sun office of publication learns with deep regret of the death, this past week, of Mr. Walter R. Sellars of Burlington, N. C. Mr. Sellars was a loyal member of our Burlington Church and the denomination. He lived to a ripe age and left many friends to regret his going. We extend our deepest sympathy to the survivors of his family.

In this issue, we reprint by permission, an article from the October-November issue of Life Today, by Carl Bixby. We do not know anything about Mr. Bixby except that he is a layman—not even the denomination to which he gives allegiance; but we do believe that he has given other laymen something to ponder in this unusual article. Mg. E.

Dr. Warren H. Denison, much revered and loved stewardship specialist of our denomination, was with the Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Virginia for consultation the first week in this month. The Every-Member Canvass staged by the church was a tremendous success. The budget of the church for this next year is $28,495.00. The canvass went over the budget in subscriptions by approximately $6,350.00.

Center Church Lays Cornerstone

Center Congregational Christian Church at South Boston, Virginia, celebrated the Laying of the Cornerstone in the first unit of the church building, Sunday, August 22, 1954. Center Church was organized only a few months ago, and launched a building program immediately. It is located on Highway No. 501, between South Boston and Halifax, in Centerville, a suburban development of South Boston.

Greetings were extended the young church by local and denominational representatives: Mrs. W. E. Wiseman for the National Board of Home Missions; Rev. W. W. Snyder for the North Carolina and Virginia Conference; Rev. W. T. Madren for the local Congregational Christian Churches; Rev. W. T. Smith for the Halifax County Ministerial Association; Mr. W. W. Shapard, Mayor, for the Town of Halifax; and Mr. Frank Sizemore, Vice Mayor for the Town of South Boston.

Rev. David Shepherd, pastor of Union and Hebron Churches, led the

(Continued on page 15.)

PLEASE NOTE!

The Christian Sun does not print unsigned articles or communications. The name of the writer may not be given if request is made to withhold the name; but the author must be known. The editor does not necessarily agree with all that is printed in The Christian Sun, but its columns are open to those who would use them for religious purposes.

S. C. H.

Laymen Carry On During Their Pastor's Illness

The Rev. Mr. George M. Tally, Sanford, N. C., has been ill for the past two weeks. He received treatment in the Lee County Hospital, but is now sufficiently improved to be back at home. He is confined to his home and unable to meet his appointments. We wish him a speedy recovery that he may be able to resume his regular duties.

During the illness of Mr. Tally, the deacons and laymen are doing good work in carrying on church activities.

The building program at Piney Plains Church, of which Mr. Tally is pastor, is progressing satisfactorily. The work is expected to be completed within a month. The Piney Plains Church will be host to the Eastern North Carolina Conference which convenes Tuesday, October 19, 1954.

S. C. H.

Everything Up—But the Minister's Salary

In a day when people are going back to the churches in droves, piling high the Sunday collection plates, and have embarked on an unprecedented church building campaign, the average clergyman is still the "forgotten man"—as far as his pocketbook is concerned. While the purchasing power of every other major job category has kept pace with the cost of living it has actually decreased for the average among America's 187,000 Protestant clergymen serving churches. This despite the fact that in terms of actual dollars and cents annual clerical salaries—traditionally low to begin with—are about twice what they were in 1939.

This is the story told in figures compiled by the Research and Survey Department of the National Council of Churches, published this month in the 1955 Yearbook of American Churches.

According to a table of comparative incomes based on latest government findings, the clergyman earns roughly the same as artists, barbers, sailors and longshoremen. Only farmers and restaurant waiters are shown to earn significantly less. Other professional persons, however, are anywhere up to three times better off, the Yearbook chart shows. Architects, dentist and lawyers do twice as well, or better, and physicians and surgeons average out better than three to one in earnings.

This trend in clerical incomes runs counter to all other important trends in religious life, the survey shows. In the last 15 years church membership has risen to equal 59.5 per cent of the total population—an increase of more than 10 per cent over the 1939 figure. In Protestant and Eastern Orthodox churches alone, members are giving cash support to the extent of $1,401,000,000 a year—a per member rate of $42 as compared to $13 in 1939. Church building is at an all-time high of $500,000,000—ten times as much as in 1939. But the glaring exception to this picture remains—the progressively shrinking buying power of the clergyman himself.

"No one would ever enter the ministry because of the material rewards," says Dr. Benson Landis, associate director of the Council's Research and Survey Department

(Continued on page 13.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

"My Cup's Full . . ."

I remember very pleasantly Bible school days when we sang "My Cup's full and running over . . .". Somehow that is the feeling that has come to me during the past few days of vacation which it has been my privilege to enjoy. I hope that I may be pardoned for sharing some of it with you.

I have never been much of a fisherman but the blue fish here have a particular attraction for me. Luck was nothing to brag about with the exception of one morning at 5:15; the catch was appealing and satisfying when fried to a golden brown in deep fat. Although I have never had training in the finer aspects of swimming I find the ocean fascinating; this is particularly true of the beach at the Fort Macon State Park. I suppose that I am old-fashioned but I dislike the noise and "gip-joints" to be found at most commercialized beach areas. The State of North Carolina keeps the beach in the State Park free of these unsavory, and in many cases unwholesome, influences. For this I am deeply thankful. Here one finds many families coming for wholesome, quiet recreation. There is no drinking or other disturbing action; it is a place which can be enjoyed by people who have the highest morals and principles.

My interest in the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Church made me even more anxious as I went with my father-in-law to the educational building of the Ann Street Methodist Church on Friday evening for a meeting of the Methodist Men of that church. Approximately 60 men were in attendance; they were friendly and seemed to enjoy each other's presence. A very fine meal was served by a committee of men in the church. They did the cooking and serving and it was very well done. After the dinner, and these men do serve generous portions, the program was presented. President John Butler presented Mr. Muse of the club who introduced the speaker for the evening. The speaker was Mr. James Butler, Alumni Secretary and Director of Sports Publicity at East Carolina College. Mr. Butler spoke encouragingly about current events indicating that quite a few of them on the domestic scene at least are a part of a "revival of religion" which he believes is now taking place in the United States. He stressed the Christian's need of courage; and the importance of being able to "do good in bad places." He told the men that if men were to ask him can this club be important, can it accomplish?, his answer would be "as you will." His was a good address which was very capably delivered. The men were all keenly interested in his remarks and gave every indication of being deeply interested in the work of the church.

Sunday morning I went to this same church for Sunday school. Judge Jule Duncan taught the class. His manner is entirely his own; he is a learned man who teaches the lesson very largely by the use of illustrations. He has a vast store of human interest-type stories which serve to make his presentation more interesting and helpful. He made a plea for Christians to be "doers" instead of "hearers" or "speakers" of the Word. It is an important challenge which none of us can afford to overlook. Following the Sunday school hour the Rev. J. D. Young presented his sermon entitled, "Was Jesus a Failure?" In the evening a program of special music was presented with Dowd Davis at the organ.

(Continued on page 13.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
 Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
 Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardcastle.
 Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
 Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
 Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date, 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
 Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $, for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

What Should the Churches Do About Alcohol?

Alcoholism is such an urgent problem in this country today that everyone who holds Christian convictions should be concerned about it and ready to help solve it. This is probably an obvious fact to most of us. The difficult question is "How?" Two current examples of Christian action suggest that the answer will be found in state-wide interdenominational action: The New Hampshire Seminar and the report of the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina.

"What Should the Churches Do about Alcoholism?" is the theme of the Fourth Annual Seminar on Alcoholism, sponsored by the Most Reverend Matthew F. Brady, Bishop of Manchester (Roman Catholic), the New Hampshire Council of Churches and Religious Education, and the New Hampshire State Department of Health Division on Alcoholism. The Seminar will be held at the Eastern Slope Inn, North Conway, N. H., September 27 and 28.

Speakers for the session and the subjects of their addresses indicate the scope and authority of the Seminar: "Basic Concepts," Dr. Selden D. Bacon, Director of the Yale Center of Alcoholic Studies; "New Hampshire's Approach to Alcoholism," Mr. Harold W. Demone, Jr., Director of the N. W. Division on Alcoholism; "The Roman Catholic Approach to Alcoholism," the Rev. Thomas M. Foley; "Teaching of the Churches in Respect to Alcoholism," the Right Rev. Charles F. Hall, Episcopal Bishop of New Hampshire; "The Presbyterian Approach to Alcoholism," Mr. John Park Lee, Director of Welfare Agencies of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.; "The Churches' Participation in the Mobilization of Community Resources," Mrs. Mary Mann, Director of the National Committee on Alcoholism; "The Churches and Alcoholism," Mr. Ernest A. Shepherd, Administrator of the Florida Program of Alcoholic Rehabilitation.

The Rev. Mr. David Works, founder of the Seminar, summarizes its purpose: "Our concern is with the clergy and other church leaders. Naturally we must learn all we can about alcoholism if we are to give counsel and spiritual comfort to afflicted families. Finally there is the job of reclaiming the individual alcoholic and restoring him to the tenets of his faith. Most of all, our task is to prevent alcoholism through education."

One of the most interesting and encouraging facts about the Seminar is that it is sponsored by all the Christian forces of the state. Every denomination suffers from the community evils of alcoholism, and none can cope with them alone. The

New Hampshire program shows that the churches can cooperate effectively to study the nature of their collective responsibility.

Another heartening fact about the Seminar is that the churches taking part see the problem as their responsibility. Traditionally, a typical American solution to social evils has been "Let's pass a law." In practice, this often boils down to passing the buck. All too often, church leaders have tried to solve the problem of alcoholism simply in terms of legal prohibition. They have frequently been able to get the laws passed (one legislator stated, "Certainly I was for it, as soon as I saw it was inevitable.") but it is doubtful if passing the laws ever helped confirmed alcoholics. Hag-ridden by their private devils, these miserable drinkers might well have quoted the old political adage, "You can't beat something with nothing." Mr. Work's statement shows that the Seminar's leaders knowing the truth of this, are assuming the duty it implies.

The Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina also recognizes the positive nature of the church's responsibility, and has already taken action. At its 1953 meeting, the Synod charged a committee "to make a thorough study of the problem of alcohol with a view to setting up a Christian and intelligent program to deal with this problem and . . . to bring to the 1954 meeting of the Synod a summary report of its study and findings, and a recommended program of action." This report, adopted by the Synod, is excellent; it should be studied by everyone concerned with the liquor problem. (It is printed in full in the August issue of "Tomorrow," available at Box 2, Shelby, N. C.). It stresses the spiritual nature of the problem, and urges united church action in fact finding, law enforcement, alcohol education, rehabilitation, and public relations.

State Councils of Churches are perhaps the most appropriate religious agencies to initiate study of ways and means to attack the problem of alcoholism: their lines of contact and communication are already established. On the local level, the local churches must assume their specific responsibilities for co-operative action, which must be organized and directed by denominational organizations. The Inter-Board Committee on Alcohol Education and Christian Action, authorized at the latest session of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church, suggests organizational methods for activity within a given denomination. (It is described in the same issue of "Tomorrow.")

The Socially Responsible Church

By DR. H. SHELTON SMITH

A truly Christian church is necessarily a socially concerned church. No one who sat in the Evanston Assembly of the World Council of Churches could miss the profound consciousness of that fact. For three of the six main sections of the Assembly devoted many hours to a searching analysis of those social questions which today echo around the world. It clearly was the fundamental premise of all three that it is the task of the churches "to challenge the conscience of society."

As one observed the sections in action, it often seemed that they were conscience-stricken over almost every major social question in existence. The following would, however, be among those of most agonizing concern.

War Anxiety

To begin with, the growing threat of suicidal war was a major root of gnawing anxiety in every section. Those delegates representing the smaller nations were especially fearful that their people would be pounded to dust in a gigantic conflict between East and West. Though man is desperately sick of war and universally longs for peace, every delegate knew that rival power blocs are engaged in an unprecedented arms race that casts its ominous shadow over the face of the earth.

It is in vain, said Section IV (International Affairs), to suppose that the mere frightfulness of nuclear weapons will prevent the out break of war. Besides, "True peace cannot rest on fear."

Fully recognizing the horrifying prospect of an all-out nuclear war, the Assembly approved a long resolution that contained the following important excerpt:

"We believe that there are two conditions of crucial importance which must be met, if catastrophe is to be avoided: (1) The prohibition of all weapons of mass destruction; including atomic and hydrogen bombs, with provision for international inspection and control, together with the drastic reduction of all other armaments; (2) The certain assurance that no country will engage in or support aggressive or subversive acts in other countries."

Communism Considered

A second point at which a sensitive social conscience revealed itself at Evanston, came to focus in problems connected with Communist-non-Communist tension. As Section III (The Responsible Society) observed, "The conflict between communists and non-communists affects the political and economic life of nearly every nation in the world, and creates divisions even within the church regarding the right attitude toward communism."

Section III affirmed explicitly that Marxism and Christianity are sharply conflicting ideologies, and saw no easy or speedy way out of this conflict.

Since Communism is now rooted in the economic structures of major political societies, as in Russia and China, tensions between Communists and non-communists are destined to exist for many years to come. Meanwhile, Christians on both sides of the Iron Curtain have the important obligation "to hold each other in special brotherly concern and prayer across all barriers." To suffer the fellowship of Christians to be shattered by divergent political and economic systems would reflect the tragic subservience of the church to the powers of this world.

In this dark and foreboding time, Christians on each side of the so-called Iron Curtain have special concerns of conscience. Within non-Communist nations, Christians must be concerned, lest while rooting out Communism, they sacrifice their own hard-won liberties. They must also be vigilant against those who, though coming in the guise of social and economic "redeemers," actually are tools of economic and social reaction.

On the other hand, Christians within Communist nations must watch and pray, lest they fall a victim of Communism's utopian promises and sell the church into secular bondage. Being under constant observation and pressure, and sometimes subjected to harsh persecution, they will need to guard themselves against the natural and understandable temptation to denature the Gospel in its personal and social imperatives.

Racial Relations

At no point did the membership of the Assembly reveal its social concern more emphatically than with respect to racial relations. This would naturally be expected, since the Assembly itself was composed of churches and peoples of most of the races of mankind. Whatever else may have been lacking at Evanston, racial tolerance certainly was abundantly evident. It is doubtful whether any other world-wide gathering in our time has exhibited a deeper or more sincere sense of brotherly love transcending all racial boundaries than was constantly manifested at the Second Assembly.

It was out of the depths of this marvelous experience of oneness in Christ that the delegates registered their profound protest against racial segregation. The pattern of racial discrimination, said Section V (Intergroup Relations), is "an unutterable offense against God, to be endured no longer."

One of the major resolutions approved by the Assembly contained the following razor-sharp declaration:

"The Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches declares its conviction that segregation in all its forms is contrary to the Gos-

(Continued on page 13)

IF YOU BELIEVE IN GOD NOW IS THE TIME TO STAND UP AND BE COUNTED

In Defense of God

By CARL BIXBY

We hear it said that the storm and stress of modern living have brought us to our knees. The reported increases in church membership seem to bear this out. However, church membership is not consistently being reflected in church attendance, nor is the physical act of kneeling or sitting in a church for an hour at all conclusive regarding one's spiritual whereabouts.

People in recent times have, indeed, felt an increasing sense of inadequacy—even of frustration. Many in private and public life have questioned or openly scorned the accepted standards of ethics, honesty, morality, chastity—and, whether it be cause or effect, faith in God.

It is not a modern idea for those of little faith to say, "There is no God." When their demanding and too often unimplemented prayers are not immediately answered, but the modern, militant, version of atheism is alarming. Instead of nearly tabulating church membership, we should become sternly aware of the philosophies (miscalled "religions") which not only deny God, but campaign openly for converts to atheism.

This appeal is not to the slightest degree critical of any philosophy, sect, cult, faith or denomination that is based on belief in God. It is (let there be no mistake about it) a determined protest of the spread of anti-God propaganda and is a forthright call to God-believers to combat evangelistic atheism.

I shall not here attempt to prove that there is God. I am neither a theologian to dwell on the spiritual affirmations, nor one of the many scientists who have rationalized his existence. I am merely a layman who believes in God, believes that Godism is the root of all goodism, believes man has a soul, believes that the immortal soul lives after physical death. I believe, and know, that the most destructive philosophies ever let loose in the world tried to destroy God in the hearts and minds of their victims.

The history of mankind has proved many times that when one god is destroyed another must take its place.

What man will next try to take the place of the one God?

Is all this an abstract question of theology that does not affect you, personally? Let's think about that. Do you believe in God? Yes or no. No pussyfooting. If you do, regardless of how Godly you are, suppose your child, of whatever age, your wife or your husband, your sister or brother, or a parent, were to say to you, "I have decided that there is no God, that I have no soul, that there is no hereafter, and that all spiritual values are false, and that I shall enlist in the campaign to destroy others' belief."

Aside from your natural grief for the loss of your loved one's salvation (of whatever form is your faith), you would cringe at the prospect of a life without religion, without faith—without God.

Did you know that there are active atheistic cults striving to win converts, and that there is a self-styled "religion" which claims to be the most rapid growing religious movement in America today, which, its promoters say, is "a religion without God, divine revelation, or sacred scriptures?"*

One need not be a theologian to combat this Humanist "religion." The issue is clear. It is anti-God.

What, then, should God-believers do about it? Remain passive to the threat of this "most rapidly growing movement" or actively resist the spread of a cult which, if its predictions come true, ultimately would destroy our faith, our churches, our spirituality, and us.

What exactly is Humanism? Its promoters describe it as containing an "ethical core similar to that of many religions and philosophies," but "free from divisive doctrines about the unknown, deity, revelation, sacred scriptures, rituals, sacraments, formal theology, and such befuddling ideas as the radical separation of either the world or the individual into matter and spirit." They call it a "philosophy of men's relations to one another and to nature, rather than of men's relations to deity." Man, they say is the only god.

The intensive promotion of Humanism is insidious. Its proponents call it "a religion" and refer to it as "a faith." The unwary might carelessly accept those terms at face value and endorse the "ethical core" only to discover that they have joined in a denial of God.

The commonly accepted meaning of the word religion is Godliness. Its primary dictionary definition is "... the service and adoration of God or a god expressed in worship and in obedience to divine commands." Humanists strain the word to its remotest use in order to mislabel atheism. The word faith has many meanings, only one of which can be inferred when Humanism is termed "a faith." Atheism is most dangerous when it wears a mask.

Humanists find it necessary to attempt to destroy the idea that faith in God had anything to do with the founding of our country. They teach that Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, George Washington and Benjamin Franklin were infidels.

It is common knowledge that Thomas Paine claimed to be a free-thinker, and on this flimsy premise Humanists malign Godly men who have passed on, by linking their names with a philosophy that would have been abhorrent to them.

If Thomas Jefferson had been an infidel he would not have written in his critical Notes on Virginia, "Indeed I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just." On another occasion, referring to the founding of this nation, he said, "The God who gave us life, gave us liberty at the same time."

Are these the words of an infidel? "God governs in the affairs of men; and if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, neither can a kingdom rise without his aid." Benjamin Franklin wrote that profession of faith.

What of Washington? Was it an infidel who stood in St. Paul's Chapel in New York after his inauguration as President of the United States and prayed? His plea was, "Almighty God, we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection." In his famous farewell address, he said, "Of all dispositions and habits which lead to political

(Continued on page 15.)

*Quotations and references to Humanism are from the book Humanism as the Next Step, by Lloyd and Mary Morain, published by Beacon Press, Boston.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

1954-55 Student Enrollment

A lot has been written and much more has been said about the number of students enrolled or would be enrolled in Elon College for the current year. Perhaps in the words of the old hymn "the half has not been told." The pre-opening figure submitted to the administration and faculty of the college by the Admissions and Registrar's offices indicated that there would probably be 820 college students enrolled. What they meant by college students was all students, including full-time students, part-time students, and special students. Today, Friday, is the last day for students to enroll in college this year for full credit. I have just checked with the Registrar's office and the Field Secretary's office. From the records, even 900 students have enrolled in Elon College. There are 218 enrolled in the Evening School and 682 in Day School. There are 12 students enrolled in the Music Department who are not college students and are not college age. There are 63 enrolled in the Evening School who are taking only one or two subjects. They are classed as specials. Likewise, there are 10 in the Day School who are classed as specials. This makes a total of 85 specials and 815 regular college students. This is the largest enrollment in the history of the institution at the beginning of any college year. It is 215 more than we opened with in 1953. This is an unusually large student body for Elon College. It seems almost unthinkable by the officials, but the offices tell me that they have the names and addresses. We are delighted to have them.

As we reckon with the present student body, there are three different classes of students. First, there are 218 evening students. These all commute. There are 682 who attend day classes. Of this 682, there are approximately 65 who are married students and live in the veteran's apartments. Of the remaining 617 students in college, approximately 320 live on the campus and board in the dining room.

This sounds like a greatly divided student body. It may be so far as living conditions are concerned but it is a completely unified student body when it comes to the curriculum. The curriculum is executed with reference to the individual student and for the advancement of the entire student body.

Here on the campus it is the feeling of all that this is the most satisfactory and most inspiring opening in the history of the college. Everybody seems to be happy with the exception of a few who would press their own opinions to the front without regard to the interest and concern of the whole student body. This is usual and to be expected but the school as a whole is moving forward with effectiveness, universal understanding and determination to make Elon College the kind of school that we will want it to be.

We are delighted with this magnificent student body and fine faculty. We covet the prayers of the church, the patrons and the friends of the College.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

"I am a dollar. I have a twin brother. We were born in a place called Washington, D. C. You may know our father. I am sure you have heard of him. His name is Uncle Sam. We were all tucked away for safe keeping and I was happy. My brother was a little restless. Along came a man who wanted us. I didn't want to go. My brother didn't care much about it. At any rate, our father farmed us out to somebody. I think he lived in Virginia or North Carolina. We have different dispositions. I guess I could be called eccentric. I don't like to move around. I like to get a good home and stay there. I like to stay put. I have a good home. My father says he is saving me for a rainy day.

"My brother is eccentric too, but he likes to move around. He doesn't want to stay put. He despises a musty box or a vault in a bank. He likes to be on the go. He likes to move around.

"We have heard of a place called Elon College. I don't want to go there. As soon as you reach the place, they tell me they start pushing you around and they trade you off. They even break you in two, four, twenty and sometimes one hundred pieces. I don't like this sort of business. My brother does. He says, 'Please send me to Elon College—I want to be kept busy and I don't care if they break me into pieces. I want to be of service; I want to help somebody. They tell me at Elon College that the need is so great that I will be worth more there than anywhere else my master could send me; that I may even be translated into human minds and human spirits where I will meet a different need and really be worth something to the world. For goodness sake, don't tuck me away. I am not interested in a rainy day. I am interested in being of service. Won't you please send me to Elon College and send a lot of my brothers along with me? The need is very great there and we can render good service. And besides, it's getting late. If we don't get away pretty soon, we won't be worth one-half as much to them.' "

"So get ready, Elon College, we are coming."

Previously Reported $ 5,973.80

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Liberty (Vance) S. S. $ 50.00

Eastern Va. Conference:

Newport News S. S. $ 22.85

Portsmouth, First 175.57

Wakefield 60.00

Windsor S. S. 27.19

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Bethel S. S. $ 5.00

Mt. Zion S. S. 3.69

Western N. C. Conference:

Pleasant Cross S. S. $ 11.44

Pleasant Union 10.00

Virginia Valley Conference:

Linville S. S. $ 7.50

Palmyra S. S. 3.00

376.24

Total to date $ 6,350.04

Of Probable Interest to Ministers

The new Social Security law which has now been signed by President Eisenhower, includes ministers of the gospel in the program on a voluntary self-employment basis. Full information may be obtained by those who are interested from their local Social Security office. Missionaries working outside the United States are also included.

A tax bill which has long been under consideration by Congress has also been signed by the President. It includes provisions that rent allowances and the rental values of parsonages are not to be included in the gross income of ministers for income tax purposes.

Missions at Home and Abroad

Ed and Frances Riggs Visit Briefly in the Convention Area

Dr. and Mrs. Ed Riggs are visitors in the Southern Convention for a brief time in September prior to their sailing for India in October. Dr. Riggs has spent his furlough here in study and completed late in June his academic work for his Master of Public Health Degree at the University of California, School of Public Health, with a performance as a student which included straight A's, and his election to the Public Health Honor Society, Delta Omega. He also helped foreign students and took part in a five-day institute on Community Mental Health, where he did a superb job. Dr. Charles E. Smith, M. C., Dean of the School of Public Health at the University of California, said a work of congratulation to the American Board on having such an "outstanding medical missionary."

Because of an extended period of Public Health service in Georgia, Dr. Riggs' visit to the Southern Convention was cut short. We shall hope Dr. and Mrs. Riggs will be able to return to the Southern Convention for an extended visit upon their return from India.

* * * * *

Bouneva Farlow Sails for Ceylon

Miss Bouneva Farlow, one of our own Southern Convention young women, sailed for Ceylon from New York on Thursday, September 16, as a missionary teacher under appointment of our ABCFM. Bouneva is a member of the Sophia Church of the Western North Carolina Conference, where her family lives. She graduated this June from Woman's College, Greensboro, North Carolina. She has been active in Pilgrim Fellowship and Congregational Christian College Student work. In previous summers she has done Student Summer Service work in the Southern Convention, and has worked in our various Young People's Summer Conferences. It was at Camp Crabtree a year ago that she met Grace Raju, vice-principal of the Uduvil Girls School at Chunnakam, Ceylon. Bouneva learned of Ceylon's desperate need for teachers, and she volunteered to go. She will teach English there for the next three years.

To a newspaper reporter who interviewed Bouneva at her train in Greensboro, she said, "I am not going for adventure. I wouldn't go to Ceylon for that. It's because I want to help other people that I am going."

We have preached and prayed that laborers would come forth to serve the Lord of the harvest. Let us rejoice in this response of one of our own youth. Let us pray for her, write to her, and support our ABCFM by our gifts to Foreign Missions that this young woman and others like her may go as ambassadors for Christ.

MISS BOUNEVA FARLOW

At an impressive service held during the School of Missions in July, Bouneva was consecrated to her new adventure in Christ.

* * * * *

Return to Palestine

Back in Palestine again! These two countries of Jordan and Israel are the only places Mrs. Sloan and I are visiting that we visited two years ago. Much that we wrote about the place in 1952 could be written again today.

But this time we had friends in Jordan although we had never met them, the families of the two Jordan young women who are students at Elon College and have done such a good job telling North Carolina people about the plight of their nation.

Leila Khoury's sister and brother and his wife met us at the airport and took us to the Khoury home where we stayed three nights before moving to the home of the mother of Violet Zarou. Each family tried to give us better Jordan food than the other. A few more days of that would have given us back the excess weight we sweat off in India and Pakistan.

The refugee camps still exist in Jordan filled by people driven out of their homes by the Israeli in 1948. Many of the abler, more ambitious refugees have made themselves work and have left the camps, but they are jealous of those left in the camps who are getting better food and health services from the United Nations than are most of them.

The wealthy Arabs who left homes, places of business, factories, citrus orchards, olive groves and bank accounts feel they have suffered most. But one sympathizes more with the middle class who have had their ambitions crushed. The bottom class seems to be physically better off than before they were driven from the more prosperous farm lands of Palestine, but psychologically they suffer much, for they see no hope.

There are still hot-headed Arabs who insist that they are going to drive the Israeli into the sea, but the noise they make suggests that they realize how impossible their aims are.

However, the Arabs in general blame Great Britain and the United States for their unhappy lot and remain quite anti-western. They do not like Communism, but often use the quotation, "The enemies of my enemies are my friends." Britain has trained the Jordan army, but many Jordan people believe it is being trained to be used against Russia. Some say that they will never fight Russia; others say that they will fight behind the British and Americans, not in front of them.

We have blundered badly in our relations with Arab countries. At one time they greatly admired us, but our support of Israel and of the French in north Africa turned them against us. However, there are rays of hope. The chief of these is the accord worked out, with American help, between Great Britain and Egypt regarding the Suez. Egypt

(Continued on page 13.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Poor Publicity

The editor of this page is thoroughly humiliated about the publicity, or lack of it, being given to the visit of Dr. and Mrs. Edward C. Riggs to the Southern Convention this week. The women were disappointed last summer that the Riggs family could not attend the School of Missions, and they would have been delighted to have them attend the October conferences. But only one member of the Woman's Board meeting last week knew that these friends from China and India were to be in this area this week. Just who slipped up on this matter, it is not for me to say, but it is certainly a disappointing and discouraging slip, and one for which all of us should apologize.

* * * * *

Welcome Guests From India

In 1936 Miss Francis Whitaker was commissioned, along with Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Jackson, at Waverly, Virginia, to go to China as a missionary nurse. This was the first such service rendered to the American Board by the Southern Convention.

In due time she went to China and worked in the Shaowu Mission, supported by the gifts of the people in the Southern Convention. She was back in the land of her birth, for she was a child of missionary parentage.

After the war with Japan ended, Dr. Edward C. Riggs, a third generation missionary, joined the medical staff of our Shaowu Mission. Before too long the doctor and the nurse decided that life would be happier as man and wife, and were married.

When the Communists took over in China, the missionaries were forced to leave. The Riggs went to India, where they have worked in the villages, trying to cure sick people and to develop better health habits.

We are delighted to welcome them and their three children to churches and homes in the Southern Convention. They have given us much inspiration by their fine work and their careful reporting to us through this paper. If you have a chance, be sure to see and hear them while they are our guests.

* * * * *

Eastern Virginia Women to Meet

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missiary Conference will meet at Oakland Church, Chuckatuck, Va., Thursday, October 7, beginning at ten o'clock. Mrs. Garland Spratley, president of the conference states the theme of the meeting will be "Out of the Heart of the Gospel." Mrs. B. V. Hargrave of Franklin will lead the service of devotion with Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, serving as organist.

Miss Jennie Doidge of Boston, Mass., will speak of "The Pictures on My Heart" as seen in her travels around the world. Mrs. George Alley of Suffolk, Mrs. L. W. Vaughan of Newport News, and Mrs. A. B. Jarvis of Norfolk will render special music. The literature will be demonstrated "Between the Book Ends" by Mrs. L. J. Brown of Newport News. Mrs. E. G. Middleton of Norfolk will lead the Memoirs, followed with the noon day prayer by Dr. I. W. Johnson.

The afternoon session will consist of the reports of the various departments. Mrs. Ray Gordon and Mrs. R. E. Brittle of Suffolk were appointed to prepare report booklets for distribution. Mrs. J. F. Morgan and Mrs. Olin Pendleton will assist on the program.

Mrs. L. W. Stagg, chairman of the Thank Offering project for the Southern Convention women, will present the program and project for our 1954 Thank Offering.

The nominating committee, Mrs. W. T. Harrell, chairman; Mrs. Walter Seeley and Mrs. C. N. Harris, will present the slate of officers for the coming year, and Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Women's Convention of the Southern Convention will install the officers.

Mrs. Spratley extends to the ministers of the conference a special invitation to attend the meeting.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the local church will serve the lunch to all who attend.

* * * * *

Miss Doidge to Speak at All of the Women's Conferences

"The Christian Church is amazingly alert to human needs and often pioneers along trails which governments later follow," says Jennie M. Doidge of Boston, Massachusetts, Associate Executive Secretary of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches, who will speak at the three Women's Conferences:

Oct. 5—North Carolina at Southern Pines.

Oct. 7—Eastern Virginia at Oakland.

Oct. 8—Virginia Valley at Newport.

An extensive world tour, lasting a year, was made by Miss Doidge in 1953. She traveled over 60,000 miles and visited churches and missionary work in all the major accessible countries of Asia, the Near East, Europe, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, Indonesia, and the Hawaiian Islands. She also has seen first hand representative activities of The Board of Home Missions on the mainland of the U. S. A.

In her world journeyings, Miss Doidge saw in action 286 missions of 41 communions and denominations in 26 countries. Her trip was rich in highlights, including Holy Week in Jerusalem and Palestine and attendance upon the International Congregational Council which met in historic St. Andrews, Scotland.

Born in President Eisenhower's home town of Abilene, Kansas, Miss Doidge began her professional career as a grade school teacher in the Sunflower State and then went up into Minnesota as Director of Youth and Adult Education in the Council of Churches of St. Paul. The next call came from the far Pacific Coast where she worked in Seattle, Washington, with the Methodists for a time.

The East Coast claimed her in 1942 when she came to New York as Associate Secretary of the World Council of Christian Education until 1945 when she accepted the post of Executive Director of the Council of Interchurch Cooperation in Bridgeport, Connecticut. In 1952 Miss Doidge was elected Associate Executive Secretary of the Missions

(Continued on page 15.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

One of the earliest memories of my grandfather was seeing him in his chair after supper, reading the newspaper, smoking his pipe and wearing a little black skull cap. The cap was fascinating and I begged him to tell me about it. It was the kind of cap that Jewish men wear to services and had been given to him by a Jewish merchant in our city, a man who became famous and very wealthy. Once he had been in financial trouble, and my grandfather had loaned the man $50. This helped him recover and in appreciation he gave the cap when he repaid the loan. It must have been the first time the word "Jewish" had any real meaning, though there had been Jewish classmates in my school.

Since then many opportunities to know and love Jewish families have come my way. Happy visits to Beth Ahabah Synagogue when Dr. Edward Calisch was rabbi; a friendship with the family of a Polish-refugee rabbi, who was a graduate of a great European University, but a classmate of mine studying for a degree in America; and then meeting the world-renown Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, who prayed at our President's Inauguration—these things and many more have given me a firm bond of friendship with Jewish people.

This year, right now, the Jews of America are celebrating the 300 years they have lived in this nation. The men and women who have done good, the scholarship and devotion, the love and blood they have given to America is beyond reckoning. There aren't too many Jewish people in the South, and especially in North Carolina. Dr. Ernest Halliday of New York once remarked (while visiting us in Richmond) that "It's queer to hear Jews speaking with a Southern accent." The Valentine Museum in Richmond has collected objects, books and paintings that tell something of the work and life of Richmond's Jewish community during the past 300 years. A great sense of pride should come to us, that although our religions differ, we have dwelt on America's free soil in harmony. May there be many more years of history to observe,

Please and Thank You

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Thank you, Jimmy; that was a big help to me," Mother says when Jimmy brings her the sewing basket that she has requested. "Please go and get my sewing basket," she had said, and Jimmy had gone happily.

"Thank you dear," Mother says when Daddy closes the window for her.

"You're welcome," Daddy answers. Then, "Please close that door, Jimmy," he says.

It is like this all the time in the Smith household. Jimmy hears "Please" and "Thank you" constantly, and it is often that to him these words are said. He hears "Please" and "Thank you" in soft, gentle tones, and he connects them with pleasurable incidents.

Jimmy is starting to use the words "Please" and "Thank you" himself now, in happy imitation of his parents. When he forgets, his lapses are not mentioned.

Barbara is the same age as Jimmy. She is having different experiences in this lesson. Barbara's mother says, "Come, Barbara. It's time to pick up your toys. Hurry now."

"Hurry" is a familiar word, but Barbara does not see much sense in it. She is likely to reply, "I have to put my dolls to bed." She starts to take the dolls' clothes off—slowly, carefully. When she can delay no longer she picks up her toys. Mother says, "Now wash your hands and come to the table." Then, in a pleading voice, "Be a good girl Barbara." Being a good girl does not pay heavy dividends, Barbara feels, but eventually she gets her hands washed.

At the table Mother says to Daddy, "Henry, Please go tonight. We haven't gone out for so long."

"No thank you," says Daddy. "I'm much too tired."

At this point Barbara reaches toward the middle of the table. She bends over so far that she almost loses her balance trying, unsuccessfully, to get the jam. Both parents jump. "Barbara! Don't you know how to ask for the jam?" questions her father. Barbara says nothing. "What do you say?" Mother demands.

Barbara wants the jam. She almost had it in her hands when her parents stopped her. She doesn't know why she should say anything.

Mother holds the jam high in the air. "Say 'Please, may I have the jam,'" she instructs.

"Please jam," Barbara manages, hands reaching, mouth watering, only to find that there is still more to be said before she may partake of the jam.

"Thank you," Mother says. "When someone gives you something you should say 'Thank you.' You know that. I've told you enough times."

It all seems like a lot of unnecessary talk and trouble to Barbara. To her, the expressions Please and Thank you are in no way connected with either gratitude or pleasure.

Now, Jimmy's "Thank you" is genuine—from the heart. He has learned that Please and Thank you are not only correct, they are happy words—synonymous with smiles. For, you know, almost any guest will be both pleased and satisfied, without hearing any words, if a little child's beaming face and joyful manner express thanks for the present he has brought to him.

Moslems Construct Center in Washington

A minaret of architectural magnificence towers 160 feet above the mosque of the Islamic Center now under construction in Washington, D. C. The building will be the cultural and religious center of the Islamic people of the Western Hemisphere.

The mosque will face directly toward Mecca, bearing 56 degrees, 33 minutes, 15 seconds east of true north. It is located in the heart of the "embassy section" of the capital.

The Islamic Center is a joint financial project of the different Moslem nations having representatives in Washington, and has as its purpose "the promotion of understanding of Islamic religion and culture in the United States."

Five times each day the Moslem prayer will be broadcast over the rooftops of the nearby embassies, "There is no God but Allah! And Mohammed is his prophet!"

—Action.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Tips from Tom

In a recent letter received from Pattie Lee Coghill who has resigned as Educational Secretary, we hear that she has her position teaching school and enjoying it very much. Even though she has given up her position, she is still one of "us" and we send the best of love to the "school marm."

* * *

It has been reported officially that Rev. John Graves, now assistant Pastor of First Church in Burlington, is to fill the vacancy of Educational Secretary. We hope the youth of the church will get to know him, giving him their support as we work together.

* * *

Several young people from your group probably left for school recently. Their names and the school attending would be fitting recognition of them. Why not write?

* * *

Attention: Conference presidents and secretaries, October is the month of youth rallies. This page will be used for the publicity of these events in the issue of September 30. Let us have the write-up of your youth rally at once to go on this page for the Month of Rallies.

* * *

In this issue the actual letter is being printed as received, reporting news activities of New Hope Youth Group. This is an example of what we want from your group. The need for you to write is more urgent now than ever before.

* * * * *

Sept. 15, 1954.

Rev. Thomas W. Madren,
Box 103,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Rev. Madren:

We just wish to let you know that the Young People of New Hope Christian Church are still "on the ball." In addition to being active in Y. P. F. this summer, they have taken over much of the special singing for the regular worship services,

Their program for last Sunday evening included an inspiring program in the home of a shut-in friend. Also last Friday the youth of New Hope enjoyed a social at the parson-

"The Price of Liquor"

*The price you pay for liquor, friend,
Is not so much the cash you spend,
While this indeed is quite a price
That men ought not to sacrifice;
But if you'll only stop and think
Just what it costs a man to drink,
You'll turn away in deep disgust,
And liquor, never, never trust.*

*You pay for liquor with your tears,
With guilt and shame and awful fears;
With service in some prison camp,
Or as a lone forsaken tramp.
With wasted years and talents lost.
That tell you of the mighty cost:
With aims and plans once great and high,
But in defeat you see them lie.*

*The price is that of wretched health,
Of wasted means and squandered wealth,
Of honor, righteousness and fame,
Of manhood and a noble name,
Of peace of conscience, heart and soul,
Of Jesus and the heav'nly goal,
Of life eternal and a place
Where saints behold the Savior's face.*

*It costs a man the best in life—
Perhaps his children and his wife,
His home and ev'rything that's dear
To drink his liquor and his beer—
And, if persisted in, my friend,
It costs him heaven in the end;
Then in return for what you pay,
You'll get damnation some sad day.*

—W. E. Isenhour.

age during which time games, music and refreshments were enjoyed.

We are proud to say that our Y. P. F. has now purchased a mimeograph machine to be used in the various church programs etc., thanks to each member and to the leaders, James Chamblee, president, Mrs. Joe Hoyle and R. Eugene Tally, adult counselors. Thank you very much for having this published.

Sincerely,
MRS. R. EUGENE TALLY.

* * * * *

Vice-President Fills Vacancy

Upon the resignation of Thomas Madren as president of the Western North Carolina Youth, due to other convention activities, Miss Sylvia Coggins, vice-president from Sanford, has temporarily succeeded to this position. This is reported so that Western North Carolina young people will eagerly support her in her conference activities and that other convention youth leaders will know of this change for co-operative reasons.

* * * * *

New System Effective Now

Beginning this week, the first post-cards for the new system of requesting youth groups to make activity reports for this page will be mailed out to various groups. In a nutshell, here is how the system will work. A printed card will be put in the mail which will request that groups receiving such cards send in news for the coming week. It will be sent to the group through the minister of that church. We hope the ministers will cooperate and pass the card to the leaders of the group. Then we hope the group or the secretary will take action and write immediately of the news of the group, probably giving the activities of the youth.

We hope no one will fall down on the job by which this plan will fail. News is slow and by this personal request we wish you would respond promptly. If on other occasions you have news to send, do not wait for a request card. Write as often as possible. These cards are only to get more groups to write. Please co-operate with us in this new method. (Again appreciation is expressed to Reuben Askew for the proposal of this system.)

Important Notice

Harvest Festival programs for 1954 are available from the Town and Country Department of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., at 75c per hundred. The order should be made directly to the Town and Country Department.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Job's Struggle to Understand Life

LESSON I—OCTOBER 3, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye search for me with your whole heart."
Jeremiah 29:13.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Job 1-2; 19-23.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 8:33: 39.

By Way of Introduction.

We begin in today's Lesson a series of lessons on Wisdom and Worship in Old Testament Literature. It might be well to call attention to the fact that, for the Jews, there were three divisions in the Old Testament: The Law, The Prophets, and The Writings. These lessons are taken from the third division, The Writings. These Writings are in poetry, not prose. Prominent among them is what is known as "Wisdom Literature." But more about this when we come to the lessons from Proverbs, which are essentially "Wisdom Literature."

The Book.

The book of Job is one of the Writings, and is written in poetic form. It is perhaps the world's finest drama—the finest bit of dramatic literature ever written. Its author is unnamed and unknown. But there is no doubt but what he wrote as he was inspired by the Holy Spirit. The book deals with one of the oldest questions of man, The problem of evil and of suffering. Rather long, it consists of two introductory chapters, then three sets of three speeches by each of Job's friends or "comforters" and Job's replies, and an epilogue. It can best be understood, and only understood, by reading the book as a whole. It is not easy reading, but it is rewarding reading. Why not try it?

The Man.

The central character in the drama is Job. He lives in the land of Uz, wherever that is, or was. He is prosperous—he has a great house, large flocks and herds, great wealth, and a fine family. He is a good man, a man of unquestioned integrity of character, and a man of pious spirit and religious practice. "So was this man the greatest of all the men of the east." And one of the best. We shall see, in today's lesson and in next Sunday's lesson, that he was a great man, a true hero, who in all his adversity kept his faith in God and glorified God.

The Problem.

As has been stated above, the book of Job deals with the problem of evil and suffering. Why do good men suffer? Why does evil come to those who try to do good? How explain evil and suffering in a world which is supposed to be created and governed by a good and powerful God? How can you make sense out of life, in which there are so many seemingly undeserved punishments, so much trouble, so many sorrows, so many calamities, so many injustices, so much suffering, and often on the part of the innocent? The book of Job deals with this problem, or these questions.

All this is dramatized in the life of Job. He is the "guinea pig" on whom the calamities of life descend with sudden and devastating consequences, testing the sincerity of his faith. The opening chapters, chapters one and two, furnish the setting or the background.

"Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them." Satan usually does that—when folks come to worship, he is there. The Lord asked Satan if he had considered his servant Job, a man perfect and upright, one who feared God and avoided evil. Cynically Satan said, "Oh yeah, this guy Job is good because it pays. He is only in this thing for what he can get out of it. Touch all that he hath and he will curse thee to thy face." "So that is what you think" said the Lord. "I'll give you a chance to prove it. Do anything you please to him, and everything you can to him, except upon his person. We'll see about this matter."

Satan thereupon "shot the works." In succession Job's oxen and asses were stolen by the Sabeans, and their keepers were slain by the sword; lightning struck his flock of sheep and killed them and their keepers; the Chaldeans carried off his camels and their keepers; and worst of all a tornado struck the house in which his seven sons and three lovely daughters were having a family reunion, and every one of them was killed. But Job rose above disaster and turned tragedy into triumph. "Naked came I out of the womb, and naked shall I return thither; the Lord gave and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord." And that was that.

But Satan is a persistent fellow. With cynicism he said "Well after all it is not so bad for a fellow to lose his property and even if he loses his family, he can make out somehow. But you do something to him personally, put forth thine hand and touch his bone and his flesh, and see what he will do. He will curse you to your face." "O. K." said God, "go ahead, but on one condition—save his life." Then Satan played his trump card. He smote Job with boils, great big sore boils, from the top of his head to the soles of his feet—he covered him with boils.

That was too much for Job's wife. "Dost thou still retain thine integrity?" she asked. "Curse God and die." Her descendants are numerous and vociferous. "Look," they say. "Here you, or I, have been good, we have tried to do what is right, we have tried to serve the Lord, and see what happened to us. This is what, and this is all, that we have got out of it. It doesn't pay to be good. There is no justice in the world. God has let me down. I am through with him. Religion is bunkum and baloney." There are all too many people whose religion will not stand the test of hard times and adversity. There are all too many who do not have a faith for dark days. There are all too many who complain and curse when trials and trouble and disaster strike. If they do not curse, they question, and they complain.

But Job was made of sterner stuff. "What shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Here was a man who could face the loss of property and family and health and still retain his integrity of character and his spirit of faith. To be sure he did not understand it all. He wished that he might be able to find God and to stand before him and to plead his own case. But he was willing to trust where he did not understand. He believed there was some meaning to the ex-

(Continued on page 15.)

In Memoriam

WARREN.

[Note: The editor wishes to thank Mrs. J. L. Foster, Sr., for sending the following information about Mrs. Warren to The Sun, and to extend his sympathy to her family, her church, and her community.]

Mrs. Robert F. Warren (nee Mary Lucinda Foster) of Burlington, a life-long member of the First Christian Church of Burlington, died July 26 in Chapel Hill Hospital. Funeral services were held in her home, conducted by the Rev. P. W. Watkins of Leesburg and Dr. H. E. Robinson. Pallbearers were Messrs. Frank Malone, Joe Warren, R. B. Talley, Robert L. Hester, Ralph Baynes and W. F. Warren. Burial was in the Hester Cemetery in Person County.

Surviving are her husband, two sisters, Mrs. M. W. McPherson of Burlington and Mrs. E. G. Norwood of Beunettsville, S. C., and four children, Robert F. Warren of Hillsboro, Mrs. W. C. Staples, Jr., of Stuart, Va., Sarah Lou Warren, M. D., who will soon be going to Alaska to practice medicine, and Airman First Class John H. Warren, now of Limestone, Maine.

Mrs. Warren, daughter of the late John R. Foster and Sallie Warren Foster of Burlington, was born in the family home at Prospect Hill, Caswell County, N. C., September 17, 1889. She attended the public schools of Burlington and entered Elon College in 1907, winning the Thesis Medal in her senior year. She married Dr. Warren in 1916.

Unassumingly active in community service, Mrs. Warren was a member of the school board and Parent-Teachers Association, and active in the Girl Scouts, and Home Demonstration Club. The latter group unanimously chose her "Woman of the Year" on July 21, but she never learned of this honor: on an extended trip to the west coast with her husband and her daughter, Dr. Sarah Lou Warren, she was suddenly taken ill and flown at once to Chapel Hill.

Although she retained her membership in the First Church of Burlington, which had been her father's church, Mrs. Warren attended Bethel, a Methodist church close to her home, and served both as having two church homes. She was a Sunday school teacher and a Charter member of the Woman's Society of Christian Service.

FAUCETTE.

We, the members of Monticello Congregational Christian Church wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of one of our faithful and beloved members, Mrs. Sydeny Dowdy Faucette, whom God in his infinite wisdom has taken from our midst.

Now therefore be it resolved:

1. By the members of this church that while we mourn the loss of her genial personality, and Christian leadership, we rejoice in the memory of her contribution to the spiritual and social life of the church and community.

2. She manifested her love for her church by being faithful in attendance, generous in its support, and sincere in her daily living. Her interest in the work of the Kingdom beyond her church, and community was often expressed by her gifts to the orphanage at Elon and various missionary projects.

3. She was a woman of fine Christian character, and we shall always cherish the memory of her sweetness of spirit which will always be an inspiration to all who knew her.

4. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her devoted husband, and loved ones who ministered to her so faithfully during her illness, and pray God's blessings upon them.

Mrs. J. E. CUMBIE,
WILLIAM G. SMITH,
RUSSELL MCKINNEY.

THE SOCIALLY RESPONSIBLE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 5.)

pel, and is incompatible with the Christian doctrine of man and with the nature of the church of the Spirit. The Assembly urges the churches within its membership to renounce all forms of segregation or discrimination and to work for their abolition within their own life and within society."

Did space permit, many other facts could be cited to show that the delegates of the Second Assembly were in no mood to counsel the churches to isolate themselves from the troublespots of human society and preach an otherworldly Gospel. For all of them, this is the world for whose salvation Christ entered history and died upon the Cross; therefore, to forsake the world, or to give it up as irretrievably lost, seems to them no less than the sheer denial of Christ. The church's social responsibility, as Section III put it, "is grounded in the mighty acts of God, who is revealed in Jesus Christ our Lord." Hence, when the Assembly earnestly wrestled with the world's most acute social issue, it believed itself to be responding to the call of God.

H. SHELTON SMITH.

RETURN TO PALESTINE.

(Continued from page 8.)

now has respect for Great Britain and the United States and is a leader among the Arab nations. A second ray of hope comes from the fact that we are increasing our help to Arab nations and decreasing the aid we are giving to Israel.

Our Arab friends could not understand why we were willing to cross over to the land of the enemy, Israel. There were tears in their eyes as they stood at the Mendelbaum Gate and watched us carry our baggage across no-man's-land to the country of the people who had driven them from their homes.

In Israel, as in Jordan, we found many new homes and places of business being constructed. There is a forward-looking atmosphere in each country. If one could see Israel without seeing Jordan, if he could listen to the Israeli and not hear the stories of the Arabs, he might become enthusiastic about the Zionist movement. Many Jews suffered tremendously in Europe and are finding a paradise in the comparative freedom of Israel, but two wrongs never make a right. The fact that Jews lost their homes in Europe gives them no right to drive Arabs from their homes. We joined a sight-seeing group at Tel Aviv which took us to Beersheva and across the Negev to Sidon at the Southern tip of the Dead Sea. Water is making some sections of the desert bloom, but as we passed ruins our guide would say with glee, "This was an Arab town but we blew it up."

Both Israel and the Arab nations are obdurate, refusing to work out their differences and exchanging shots almost daily across no-man's-land. However, neither group can live alone and time will force peace. The Israeli pound is now worth only a fifth of its par value. This has greatly increased the cost of living and developed considerable unemployment. Many Israeli are trying desperately to get out of the country. On the other hand, Jordan must have access to the sea, and its refugees must have some compensation for all they have lost. Conditions will force some agreement before long.

W. W. SLOAN.

EVERYTHING UP—BUT THE MINISTER'S SALARY.

(Continued from page 2.)

and editor of the Yearbook. "But today it appears that the purchasing power of the minister's salary has reached a low point—and the only way he can get relief is through action by his own parishioners."—The Religious Newsweekly.

"MY CUP'S FULL . . ."

(Continued from page 3.)

This vacation was truly re-creation at its best.

Vacationers who leave the church and its activities out of their vacation plan miss a splendid opportunity for really re-creating their lives.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Burlington Association of insurance Women are taking the Orphanage as their benevolence project this year. Their representatives, Miss Marjorie Ball and Mrs. Jean Lowe, have called on me to ascertain what they might do to help. After telling what other clubs and groups were doing I laid before them our need for funds with which to pay our current bills. They would report to their club. Results, they are taking one of our children to sponsor and in the meantime they are setting out to see how much they can help us financially. The 30th of September they will hold a canasta party in the armory in Burlington, proceeds to be donated to the orphanage. Friends, they are what we need. Friends will bring us in the funds. I am most grateful for every friend of the orphanage, and I daily pray that they may increase.

Today I carried six of our children to two dentists. They liked the ride and they liked the driver. They hoped they would like the dentists. They will. As we sat in the waiting room one of them came over and climbed up in my lap. Will it hurt? Not much, honey. And she looked up and smiled. There was trust and confidence in that smile. It will not be betrayed by the most cooperative and generous dentist. Dr. J. B. Newman, son of our late beloved 50-year Elon professor, Dr. John U. Newman, wrote me a letter in his own hand and told me that no children ever behaved better. Perhaps Joe was a little prejudiced because he was reared at the corner of the orphanage campus.

John T. Kernodle, benefactor of the Southern Convention through his work with and on THE CHRISTIAN SUN, has just sent us a large supply of Thanksgiving envelopes freight prepaid. He writes: "Hope they will bring you an hundred fold, also hope that all goes well with you and yours." What two finer wishes could John T wish! May God bless him and may the Thanksgiving offering be made as generously and willingly as his generous gift has been made.

There are fifteen members of the Board of Trustees of the orphanage: V. R. Holt, president; Dr. Harold

B. Kernodle, vice-president; Clyde W. Gordan, secretary; Mrs. Mark W. Andes; W. J. Ballentine; D. L. Boone, Sr.; Luther E. Carlton; Dr. J. P. Cross; L. R. Jones; Mrs. J. H. McEwen; N. Carl Monroe; I. H. Vickery; Loren P. Waldo, Jr.; Thomas W. Walton; and Caleb D. West. They are choice men and women well chosen. They are ambassadors for the orphanage. They back up their words with their works, their interest with their efforts. They are your representatives, elected by you and by you encouraged to do for you a good job in running the orphanage. It is a pleasure to work with them because our hopes, our aims are one, namely, to be of priceless benefit to poor little homeless children.

One of our best friends died a week ago, Mr. Walter R. Sellars. He was a great friend of the orphanage, and Mrs. Sellars served on the orphanage Board for many years. She was and is comforted by countless friends, and the evidence of her faith and trust in God is very inspiring. May God continue his grace upon her and her family.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 16, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:

First Christian Church, Newton, Illinois.
Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Logan, Elberon, Va.
Mrs. Dan Leath, Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. Marsh McLelland, Elon College, N. C.
Mrs. Burton Daniels, Beaufort, N. C.

Coupons:

Woman's Fellowship, Pfafftown Church.

Thanksgiving envelopes:

John T. Kernodle, Richmond, Va.
Fifty copies of "The Upper Room."

J. H. Johnson, Norfolk, Va.

Coupons and buttons:

Hines Chapel Church women.

Shoes:

T. W. Walton, Greensboro, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 9,201.83
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Bethlehem (Naus.) S. S. .	$ 31.80
	31.80
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Mebane	$ 10.00
	10.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.	$ 2.00
	2.00
Total	$ 43.80
Grand total	$ 9,245.63

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$22,767.32
Circle No. 4, The Woman's Fellowship, Suffolk Ch. $ 5.00
W. J. Ballentine, Fuquay Springs, N. C.	100.00
Miss L. Kennedy, Worthville, N. C.	25.00
Mrs. Dora Steele, Durham, N. C.	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Newman, Henderson, N. C. .	10.00
J. H. Johnson, Norfolk, Virginia	10.00
Mary Sue Brittle S. S. Class, Bethlehem (N.) .	5.00
Mrs. Eugene Neu, Charlotte, N. C.	5.00
Circle No. 1, Suffolk Christian Church	25.00
In Memory of Mrs. Celo Faucette	5.00
In Memory of Shirley Lee Logan	1.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	25.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $..... as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

IN DEFENCE OF GOD.

(Continued from page 6.)

prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." Those who would destroy God would do well to think deeply about Washington's next words in that address, "In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness."

In their search for testimony for atheism, why have not the promoters of Humanism used the recorded words of other men?

Benito Mussolini, for one. In a speech at Lausanne in 1904, he said, "Religion is a species of mental disease. It has always had a pathological reaction on mankind."

Joseph Stalin was another. In an interview with an American labor delegation in 1927, he said, "We guarantee the right of every citizen to combat by argument, propaganda and agitation, any and all religion."

Adolph Hitler's rise and fall were based on his dietum that there was no God but man—namely, Hitler.

I have no knowledge, nor do I imply, that the organizers, instigators and promoters of any anti-God campaign are of the Mussolini-Stalin-Hitler ilk, but the philosophies are similar.

You and I must decide for ourselves if this movement is to be ignored or feared. It is not a passive philosophy. It has a central organization in this country which claims to have doubled its number of local chapters in each of the past several years. It claims that young people, "let down by religious orthodoxies," are flocking to it. It publishes books and periodicals. It boasts that it has made inroads into the very churches to the extent that "liberal" Protestant, Catholic and Jewish church leaders are embracing Humanism.

What to do? Clergymen are denouncing this galloping atheism, and more power to them. But is that enough? There is only one clergyman in a pulpit for hundreds of lay men and women in the congregations. These hundreds of laymen, totalling millions, are in daily contact with other millions, some of them perhaps having already been inoculated with the virus of atheism. The responsibility for evangelism for God, to combat the active campaign against God, rests squarely on all men and women who are not against God.

I make these suggestions.

1. Live so that your actions will show that the fatherhood of God is the reason for the brotherhood of man.

2. Stand up and be counted. Whenever it is possible (and it will be possible more often than you have realized) make a public, oral profession of your faith in God.

3. Be willing to talk about your faith. Although there is a growing tendency among laymen to discuss spiritual matters, we are still too reticent, too inclined to think that our faith is strictly a personal matter. It is strictly a personal matter. It is, but it is no more privately personal than our political affiliation. We have no hesitancy or embarrassment in affirming that we believe in Republican or Democratic principles. Why should we be coy about the fact that we believe in God, and God's principles? There is a shop-worn old adage against arguing about politics or religion. I believe the time has come when religion should be freely discussed. Not divisive doctrines, not denominational differences, but simply God versus atheism.

No power on earth can accomplish widespread destruction of man's faith in God if all God-believers will rally to God's defense.—From the October-November, issue of Life Today.

CENTER CHURCH.

(Continued from page 2.)

Prayer of Consecration; Supt. William T. Scott delivered the Address; Mr. T. S. Earp, deacon and trustee of Center Church, placed the box of Relies; and Mr. J. Edward Burton, the contractor, and Rev. Mark W. Andes, pastor of Center Church, laid the Cornerstone.

The members of Center Church are to be commended and congratulated for the zeal and enthusiasm with which they are working. They hope to begin holding services in this first unit within a few weeks.

S. C. H.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

Council with headquarters in Boston, Massachusetts.

Author of "A Church For World Christians," a youth study book, and a "Study Guide on Africa," Miss Doidge also has written many magazine articles on Christian Education as well as on the work of the church around the world as observed during her 1953 trip.

The Missions Council, which has national and international outreach, is the joint arm of the Congregational Christian Churches and is responsible for the interpretation and financial support of both home and foreign missions. It is made up of three big boards including the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, The Board of Home Missions, and the Council for Social Action.

Miss Doidge attended Washburn College and holds a B. R. E. from Boston University. She was a student at the Institute of International Relations, Geneva Switzerland and at Union Theological Seminary.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

perience through which he was passing. "When he trieth me, I shall come forth as gold." Job did not get an answer to his questions, but he did trust in God. And to walk with God in the darkness is better than to walk alone in the light.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

THE ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	25.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	25.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	25.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellers	10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Cleo Faucette	5.00
Special Gifts	180.00
	$ 581.00
Grand total	$23,348.32
Total for the week	$ 624.80
Total for the year	$32,593.95

THE BASIS OF SECTARINAIISM

By W. R. CULLOM

Not all the life that we see about us is motivated by a sectarian spirit by any means. The grading system is most useful in all education. Many divisions are based on culture, on background, on temperament, on race, on class, on geographical division, etc. Such groupings may, and often do, serve worthy and constructive ends. But there is much of segregation in life, alas, that is based purely on a desire to dominate, to rule, to carry things one's way, regardless of the consequence to others. Such motivation, such an attitude, such a spirit, is entirely unworthy of the children of a common Father. It is the exact opposite of the golden rule—"do to others as you would have them do to you." It is also the exact opposite of the essential Christian spirit—"losing life to save it." And this spirit, alas, is to be seen in every sphere of life—economic, political, religious, and all the rest. What is to be done with it? What can we do about it?

Two methods are open to us:

1. Fight it out—go to war. This method, alas, is all too much in evidence about us today. When will human beings learn that in war—physical or moral—all parties lose? Why then persist in perpetuating it? Thank God, there is clearly and unmistakably a better way. The Lord help us to learn it, accept it, and adjust ourselves to it!

2. Incarnate and live out the principle of love and brotherhood. The two basic laws of life are these—"Love God"; "Love your fellow man." Nor are we left to our own devices as to how these two laws are to be put into operation. The Apostle John says: "We love because he first loved us." The King James text says, "We love him because he first loved us," but the best text leaves out the "him," and simply reads, "We love because he first loved us." So that our love is begotten of his love. And who can contemplate his love to us, "... God so loved the world that he gave his . . . son," without answering with a love that is as nearly like it as his capacity will permit?

With such a spirit in our souls, we will go forth to persuade men, until sectarianism, with all its ugly attributes, has been completely overcome by a love that "never fails."

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1954

NUMBER 38

Cypress Chapel Parsonage Dedicated

Cypress Chapel Christian Church, Nansemond County, Virginia, recently dedicated the new parsonage shown above. The service of dedication was conducted by the pastor, the Rev. Earl T. Farrell, assisted by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, president of the Southern Convention, and the officers of the church. The cancelled notes for all indebtedness on the building were burned before the dedication. Materials which went into the building represent a cash outlay of about $10,000.00. Members of the church donated most of the labor.

News Flashes

Congratulations to the Rev. and Mrs. Carl Wallace. They announce the birth of a daughter, Rosemary, on September 18, 1954. Our best wishes to Miss Rosemary Wallace.

The executive committee of the Virginia Council of Churches will meet in Richmond, on Thursday of this week. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, president of the Southern Convention, will be among those in attendance.

On October 3, World-wide Communion Sunday will be observed for the fifteenth year. On this Sunday the Lord's table circles the globe; and gathered around it are people of many races and nations.

The Message of the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches appears on the back page of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Every one who is really interested in the Church of Jesus Christ should study this message carefully. We thank Dr. H. Shelton Smith of the Duke School of Religion faculty for his excellent reports on the World Council.

The Committee on Memoirs of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference is anxious to know whether there have been any men or women within the churches of the conference, who have held prominent places in our churches, who have died during the 1953-54 conference year. If so, please notify the chairman of this committee, Rev. G. C. Crutehfield, Box 337, Elon College, N. C.

Notice of Meeting

The Home Mission Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference will meet at 1:00 p. m. on Thursday, October 7, 1954, at Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia. At this time the committee will be glad to receive any requests and hear from any persons desiring to appear before said committee in connection with any matter claiming the attention of said committee. The time, place and hour of the meeting has been chosen to coincide with the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Conference on the same date, and it is thought that this will be more convenient to everyone concerned.

MILLS E. GODWIN, Jr.

Commissioning Service at Christian Temple for Charter Members of the Bayside Church

Dear Friends:

As your minister and as the minister of this church, I have called you to stand at this altar with me, so that I might publicly commend you for the adventurous faith which has prompted you to accept the responsibilities in going forth to establish a new church in the community in which you now live. This is an act of devotion which does honor to our Blessed Lord and to this church in which you have shared with us in Christian fellowship.

Some of you have been members of this Temple for many years, some of you since childhood. It is not easy for us to see you go—and I know it requires great courage and faith for you to go. But we know that it is within the Will of God that the Kingdom thus be spread. As you take this step, and as we join with you in it, we are in reality not severing our bond of fellowship, we are rather enlarging it and making it stronger and deeper. Our concerns are increased in Christ and our devotion increased by this act.

I pledge to you the prayers and interest of this congregation as you go forth to establish the new church in the Bayside area.

As minister of this congregation, I hereby grant to each of you Letters of Dismissal from this church for the purpose of becoming charter members of the new church in Bayside, in the process of formation. And I commission you as agents and ambassadors of Christ, of the Congregational Christian Churches, and of the Congregational Christian Temple, to establish and make strong a church in the Bayside area of Princess Anne County, Virginia. I commission you to join with all persons in this area who love our Lord and desire to serve him in establishing and maintaining a free fellowship of Christian people in that place.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

In our congregation this morning are some others, from other churches, who will join with you in this great undertaking. We welcome them and request that they stand, so that we may give them recognition at this time.

(Continued on page 13.)

National Council of Churches Sets Social Code

The National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.—the nation's largest religious organization—is today on record for the first time with a declaration of Christian principles for economic life. Through action last week by its policy-making General Board, the council declared that from the Christian standpoint "free democratic institutions are clearly superior to any form of totalitarianism." It branded as a "misconception" the idea that socialization is an easy road to economic justice. It warned against collectivism and asserted that "uncritical recourse to the state to remedy every evil creates its own evils." But it also condemned as false the idea that "a maximum of individual economic freedom" will by itself create a good society.

Given overwhelming approval by a vote of 77 to 4, the 4,000-word pronouncement was two years in preparation. Applying Christian ethical beliefs to the harsh realities of the workaday world, it listed 13 norms to guide Christians in their daily life. Among them were these: "Christians should work for a situation wherein all have access at least to a minimum standard of living." . . . "It is a clear Christian responsibility to work against those special forms of economic injustice that are expressed through racial and other group discrimination" . . . "Large-scale unemployment for any considerable number of persons able and willing to work is intolerable." . . . "Such motives as the desire for economic security (for self and family), the desire for wider scope for one's capacities, the desire for social approval, (should) under Christian influence be kept in harmony with concern for the welfare of the community."

Rejecting the path of socialism, the declaration said that "in some situations Christians have had the misconception that one sure road to economic justice is the socialization of all major means of production." This was understandable especially "during periods of exploitation of large classes of the population, and also in times of depression and unemployment." But today we know enough about "thorough-going collectivism to realize that uncritical recourse to the state to remedy every evil creates its own evils. . . . The

(Continued on page 6.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

How to Get the Most out of Laymen's Sunday

1.—What is Laymen's Sunday?

Once each year, on the third Sunday in October, churches by the tens of thousands hold a service led by laymen. It has a deep significance. It is a special time for laymen to acknowledge their direct responsibility for the spiritual growth of the church by changing places with their pastors and chaplains.

2.—How widely is it observed?

In 1942 about thirty churches participated. By 1950, some 15,000 churches had enlisted, and in 1953, Laymen's Sunday was observed by no less than 50,000 churches in the United States and Canada. In 1954 (for the first time promoted throughout all of the branches of the Armed Forces) it is expected that there will be upward of 100,000 Laymen's Sunday services, attended by over 10 million men and women. Inaugurated by the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, it is now a co-operative endeavor with United Church Men, representing many leading denominations.

3.—What can Laymen's Sunday do for a Church?

In countless cases, Laymen's Sunday has been the beginning of a new relationship between pulpit and pew. Active laymen find a deeper dedication; and many passive, perfunctory Christians gain a new sense of responsibility.

The greatest untapped resource of Christianity is surely the power of the laity. Laymen's Sunday is a special time when laymen themselves accept this challenge for themselves, and help present it to others.

4.—How should Laymen's Sunday be organized?

Most churches have success with the following plan:

First, one layman of the church should be the chairman responsible for the observance. He should be chosen by a group of men of the church, with the advice of the minister, and should work closely with the minister in all plans.

Next, the chairman's task is to select and enlist others to take part in the service, and to meet with them and the minister as they plan the service. Ideally, these men should be of various ages and backgrounds, not just familiar pillars of the church. Include some fine Christian men who should be more active.

Besides the participants in the service, you will need a publicity chairman. Laymen in pulpits are news. Other men may head special groups with special functions, such as increasing attendance, or planning for special decorations. Perhaps one group will arrange for the recognition of loyal devoted groups such as Sunday school teachers, church officers, leaders of various organizations, perhaps even the ten oldest members.

5.—How do Laymen prepare themselves?

The group should meet and discuss the theme, to decide on each man's part and to pray for guidance.

You may wish to have one main address or as many as three short talks by laymen. If you have observed Laymen's Sunday for many years, it may be better to exchange speakers with a nearby church than to repeat the same speakers.

Be sure to have at least one "rehearsal" in the sanctuary, so that each man will know where he enters, sits and stands, and when he appears during the service.

In general, the minister takes no part in the service, or at most he pronounces the benediction.

(Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Appointing of Committees

Some wag has said, "If the Children of Israel had depended upon a committee to lead them out of the wilderness, they would be wandering around down there now." All of us probably have had experience with committees similar to the one that called forth that remark. As of this date, however, a workable substitute for committees has not been invented.

If, as our churches are now organized, committees are a necessary evil, by whom should they be appointed? The usual procedure is for some one to make a motion that the pastor appoint a committee of five, and that the said committee be charged with the doing of whatever is under consideration at the moment. If the committee does a poor job or does nothing at all, it is easy to say that the wrong people were appointed.

There is another phase of having the pastor appoint all committees which merits consideration. Suppose that the issue which is before the church is a pet project of the pastor and one about which there is a sharp difference of opinion among the members of the church. In that case the pastor is faced with the subtle temptation to appoint on the committee those who are known to be favorable to the matter under consideration.

On church has placed the responsibility for appointing all standing committees and important special committees on a Committee to Appoint Committees. Go ahead and laugh, and then let us tell you how to set up the Committee to Appoint Committees. In the church which uses this plan the Board of Deacons elects two members, the Junior Board two, the Sunday school two, the Woman's Auxiliary two, and the church elects two who are not connected with the aforementioned groups.

Ten people thus selected will be about as good a cross-section of the membership as can possibly be determined. When such a group sits down to select a committee, the members will know the abilities and qualifications of any person who may be under consideration. They, or some one of them, will know the pet prejudices and peeves which might prevent an individual from doing the best possible work in a special field. In some instances, the result has been to discover splendid committee workers who probably would never have been thought of if one individual had been making the selection.

The above is submitted for your consideration. We suggest that you try it if you are favorably impressed. We are sure we can guarantee that it will not always work to the complete satisfaction of everyone concerned.

An Editorial Esophagus

In Mark Twain's day, popular fiction was often padded with lush descriptions of landscape. Legend has it that Twain once fell to wondering how readers could stomach the stuff, and concluded that they simply skipped over it. To test his theory, the story goes, he inserted such a description into a story of his own, including the remark that a solitary esophagus was seen winging its way across the sunset. Now, possibly none of his readers knew that the esophagus connects the mouth with the stomach, possibly some of them knew that the rare bird in question was Twain himself; but, according to legend, nobody ever made any comment whatever on his statement.

This strikes us as rather pathetic. It is easy to imagine Twain smiling slyly as he penned that sentence, looking forward with glee to publication day, waiting hopefully for letters from his readers—"Dear Sir, Now I am sure that you are a great satirist . . ." or, "Dear Sir, You must be remarkably ignorant of natural science . . ."—and never getting any comment of any kind from anyone at all. He was probably pleased that his theory seemed correct, but it must have been a lonely satisfaction; and it is a matter of history that Mark Twain was a lonely man and finally grew very cynical in his solitude.

Editorial writers sometimes suspect that they spend much of their time describing solitary esophagi.

If you don't skip their descriptions and comments and analyses, if you decide that they are very knowing or remarkably ignorant, let them hear about it sometimes.

St. John the Baptist was a voice crying in the wilderness, and he ate locusts and wild honey; but we suspect that he would have preferred sometimes to be a voice crying in the market-place, with answering voices in his ears—even if it meant that sometimes he had to eat his words.

"A Mission to Fulfill"

A Sermon

By REV. W. MILLARD STEVENS.*

"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me . . . unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Acts 1:8.

I suppose that most of us are fascinated by things of mystery about us more than we are by the things which we can fully understand. It is always true that things which are veiled in mystery attract more attention than the same things would were they displayed in the open with all their parts unveiled. Christianity offers us one of the greatest mysteries of all, one which never ceases to fascinate me and one which should thrill and fascinate us all. This is the mystery: we cannot keep our faith without sharing it with others. This is one of the paradoxes of Christianity. If we try to hoard our faith, we lose it; but if we give it to others, we can keep it ourselves.

Christianity is not something which can be locked in the human heart to be used only in time of special need. It is rather a mission, which impels and guides people in a significant way of life. It is a mission of sharing. It is an inner force which indeed supports us in all the needs of our life, but it is also an inner force which compels us to share our strength with others. Thus Christianity for every person is in a real sense "a mission to fulfill."

Here are two people. They have had similar experiences that brought them to confess their faith in Christ and accept the Christian way as their way of life. One seeks to get all he can out of the Christian gospel and the church for himself, and he is soon disappointed and becomes apathetic about the church and the gospel. The other seeks to put all of himself into the church and eagerly shares his new found faith with others, and his faith becomes deeper and richer each day.

Remembering these two individuals, add to the picture two local churches. These churches were organized under similar circumstances, in similar communities, and with similar resources. One set about to secure for itself all that it could and under the argument that they could not share in the mission outreach of the denomination because they needed so much for themselves they refused to give either of their human or material resources outside their own parish. They had everything they needed, yet this church did not grow—and soon found it difficult to maintain themselves. While the second church from the beginning prospered and grew. This church gave of its resources to the mission of the World-Wide Church and shared itself and grew while the other kept for itself and died.

DR. W. MILLARD STEVENS

I could give names to the two people, so could you. I could give names to the two churches also. We have all witnessed such scenes. Now why is it that the first man and the first church had a decreasing spiritual strength while the second man and the second church had an increasing spiritual strength? Here is the answer—the first looked upon Christianity as something to keep and use for oneself alone—while the second looked upon the Christian faith and way as something to share. Behold, I show you a mystery wherein lies the secret of a growing Christian life, "If any man—or church—will have his life he will lose it; but any man —or church—that loses himself for Christ's sake shall save it."

How God can take us and what we are and have and use us for the increase of his kingdom and of our own souls is demonstrated in the life and mission of Robert Morrison, the missionary to China. When Morrison was nearing the scene of his work on the ship on which he was a passenger, the American captain of that ship said to Morrison; "And so, Mr. Morrison, you really expect to make an impression upon the Chinese Empire?" And Morrison replied; "No sir, but I expect God will." You will remember that the records show that when Morrison died 27 years later, he left behind not more than 12 Protestant Christians and now, even though China has been overcome by Communism, there are still millions of Christians in China. This is but one example of what the early missionaries sowed in blood and tears and of the fruits that have been reaped. This is a demonstration of what happens when a man, or a church, accepts their faith and their life "as a mission to fulfill."

No person, or church, can grow in faith and Christian experience without sharing that faith and experience with others. Emil Brunner has truthfully pointed out that "the church can no more survive without missions than can a fire survive without burning."

The fundamental basis of what I am saying, the true Commission which we have as Christians, indeed the secret of a growing Christian life or church, is recorded in Acts 1:8, "you shall receive power after the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witness both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Now that is one sentence, one idea, one command, one directive. It does have two ideas but each depends on the other. One is dedication—acceptance—receiving the spirit and the other is witnessing—sharing—the giving of the life created by the spirit. Indeed we must accept Christ to find redemption but we must give him to others to keep him. It is not enough to receive the Holy Spirit, we must share that spirit with others. It is always true of life—"that which we keep we lose, but that which we give away we have." A mystery indeed, but the bedrock truth of life. A truth borne out in the everyday ex-

(Continued on page 8.)

*Delivered on the occasion of the commissioning of the charter members of Bayview Church.

Our Churches Report . . .

A Significant Day for the Eastern Virginia Conference

Sunday, September 12, was a significant day for the Eastern Virginia Conference. At 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon a new church was organized at Bayside with 27 charter members being received into the new church. This new church is a result of a cooperative effort led by Dr. W. Millard Stevens of the Christian Temple and our other Norfolk pastors. It was our pleasure to attend the morning service at the Temple when nine members of that church were commissioned by the pastor to be charter members of this new church. It was an impressive sight and confirmed our conviction that the most wholesome way to start a church is to have it be an "overflow" from some established church. The entire service of the Temple was built around this new venture. Dr. Stevens presented an impressive sermon on "A Mission to Fulfill" (which appears in this issue), and at the conclusion of the service an impressive commission was given by Dr. Stevens (found in this issue). Included in the charter members were some very fine members of the Temple, among them Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Jr., the son and daughter-in-law of the late, beloved Dr. J. O. Atkinson, whose heart beat eagerly during his long service to the Mission Board for our churches to extend their frontiers.

Participating in the service at Bayside were Dr. W. M. Stevens, Supt. W. T. Scott, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, Rev. J. E. Neese, Rev. Olin B. Pendleton, Rev. M. E. Taylor, and Rev. Ernest Brickhouse who served as summer pastor of the new work.

The writer is confident that at least twenty other new churches could be begun in the Southern Convention immediately if that many churches would become concerned and committed to church extension and be willing to devote some of their members to these new enterprises.

W. T. S.

Christians all over the world are realizing that love is stronger than the forces that keep them apart.

Center Church will Have Service of Consecration

Center Congregational Christian Church, South Boston, Virginia, will have its service of consecration and formal opening of the new building on Sunday, October 2, at 11:10 a. m. Dr. Douglas Horton, minister and executive secretary to the General Council, New York City, will deliver the sermon, "Christ the Hope of the World." Other visitors sharing in the service are Dr. Wesley Hotchkiss, Associate Director of the Town and Country Department, Board of Home Missions, New York City, and Dr. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention. The service will be conducted by the pastor, Rev. Mark W. Andes.

DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

A graduate of Princeton University, Phi Beta Kappa, Dr. Horton continued his education at New College, Edinburgh, Scotland; Mansfield College, Oxford University, England, and the University of Tubingen, in Germany. He trained for the Christian ministry at Hartford Theological Seminary and holds honorary degrees (D.D.) from Lawrence College, Chicago Theological Seminary, and Princeton University with a Litt. D. from Marietta College.

Before coming to his present national post with the General Council Dr. Horton served Congregational pastorates in Connecticut, Illinois, and Massachusetts. During World War I Dr. Horton served as a Chaplain in the U. S. Navy.

A member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches; vice-chairman of the Friends of the World Council, Inc., and vice-chairman of the World Conference on Faith and Order, Dr. Horton plays a prominent part in the world Christian movement. He was a leader in the First Assembly of the World Council at Amsterdam and in 1952 met with the Central Committee in Lucknow, India, as it prepared for the great assembly of the World Council in Evanston, Illinois, August, 1955.

A world traveler, Dr. Horton commutes across the Atlantic visiting frequently in Europe and Great Britain and on his latest globe circling journey he visited New Zealand, Australia, India, Egypt, and parts of the Near East.

An untiring advocate of better churchmanship, Dr. Horton believes that a "church of the common people is the most powerful thing in the world" and that the church truly "is the soul of the community" standing for all that is best.

Center Church welcomes visitors for this great day in its history.

COUNCIL SETS SOCIAL CODE.

(Continued from page 3.)

union of political and economic power is a dangerous road," it warned. On the other hand, it said a completely "hands-off" approach to economic problems was equally false. "The weight of evidence shows that some use of government in relation to economic activities is essential," it said.

Upholding the Christian belief that free democratic institutions are clearly better than any form of totalitarianism, the statement said that "our way of life has been challenged by totalitarian philosophies and practices, especially communism, which are competing . . . for the loyalty of men around the world." In this situation, it went on, we cannot neglect self-criticism, which is a "normal aspect of health and strength and a means of growth in a democracy."

The document was presented to the board, at its most heavily attended meeting on record, by Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, Ohio, chairman of the Department of the Church and Economic Life of the National Council of Churches. — Religious News-weekly.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Mr. Walter C. Rawls Addresses Elon College Student Body

Dr. Smith, Members of the Faculty and Student Body, and Friends:

This is a rare privilege afforded me to appear here today. More could be gained by us if one of you from this audience took my place and I took yours as a listener and profit more from your instructions.

Now let me say—I am not here today because your learned and well-loved president sent me a request to speak, but I am here because I wrote Dr. Smith I would be in the east this month and would like to have the privilege of saying a word or two with you. So if nothing is gained by you from my presence, do not blame it on Dr. Smith or the faculty, for I assure you I will be at fault.

Coming from a large family of 13 children, and being the ninth child, and having lived three score years, there are some observations I have noted in my experiences up to now. In my large family kinship and business associations, I have immensely enjoyed both of these associations during my life time. While some have been on the side of the hard way, most of the times they have been exceedingly pleasant and profitable. But the hard experiences in my life, socially and business-wise have, in the long run, been the experiences that have always left with me a fighting spirit to improve upon my own place in life; and if I had a set back, something seemed to say to my inner conscience and heart to press on Walter—to find some good in my mistakes.

Vengeance is something I have never known, because I believe my father and mother instilled in me in youth that vengeance belongs to our Creator—only to the living God—and it lays in his power when it should be inflicted, if ever used at all. If I ever have an asset to value, I would say one of my greatest would be not to use or imply vengeance of any kind or sort—to any one at any time. It's an asset I value at the top of anything I possess—the only exception being my firm belief in a living God—the Creator of all things—a living, loving God—supreme. My uncompromising belief in God has always been my first overall asset, and I shall always be firm in this belief. . . .

One thing I have learned through experience, that is, when you start out as a student or on any venture in life, do not begin by resolving to accomplish your task by setting a goal based on the record of someone else. If you will put all you have in the effort, you will have a better chance of doing more than the next best; for if you put your best effort and all you have in the plan or objective, you are then at your best. When you do your best, you are at your best, and you can do nothing more. Edison never tried to improve the record of anyone else, he put all he had into what he was doing. Thus he became great and left a lasting memory and accomplishments of untold good for mankind. Edison never worried about what other people were doing nor their records. He gave us his best, and made his own record.

When you give your best, you will always be ahead and on top. You will, in years to come, have to answer to yourself for what you are and your responsibilities and status in life. Think that over. No one else can be you or yourself. You and I will be only what we make out of our environments and opportunities, and we will be judged upon our records only—not those of other people. So if I do not leave any other thought with this student body, I would say without reservation: put all you have in your task here at Elon and don't let anyone tell you or say education is not worth the sacrifice. A person without an education will have a hard time meeting his future social contacts, and the business world will take the educated person before the uneducated. I see every day corporations looking for young people properly trained. Don't put off, but make a plan to prepare yourself thoroughly, and the world will have a place for you. Elon will help you. It is the kind of college not only America needs, but the world needs.

Another experience I am resolved to: you don't have to have money to get ahead. Now I am not here to tell you that money is the main objective

Apportionment Giving

The weather and things in general indicate that the summer has passed. The fall is here and winter is approaching. All of this means that we are fast approaching the end of the present conference year. As our conferences come to the close of the year, all of our churches are reminded of their final obligations to the Convention boards and institutions. Happy is that church that has met its convention and conference obligations all through the year. They are not facing a hard task to close their books and begin a new year. Those churches that have not kept their payments up to date are doubtless facing some rather difficult undertakings. All of our churches are conscientious about meeting their conference apportionments, and I am confident that a determined and sacrificial effort, if needs be, will be made to meet their obligations in full.

Elon College is encouraged to feel that all conference apportionments will be met by the close of the last conference. By glancing at the figures indicating the total received, it will be evident that our churches in the convention are quite a bit behind in their payment on apportionments. When the apportionment is paid in full, we shall have sufficient funds to assist in the situation that confronts us as a college, our college.

Previously reported	$ 6,350.04
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Liberty (Vance)	$ 66.00
New Elam	21.00
Eastern Va. Conference:
Antioch	$ 22.00
Eure	54.00
Oakland S. S.	26.24
Waverly S. S.	12.35
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Durham S. S.	$ 25.21
Long's Chapel	21.14
Union (Va.) S. S.	25.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Bailey's Grove	$ 10.00
Brown's Chapel	10.00
High Point	30.00
Union Grove	20.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
New Hope S. S.	$ 23.00
Newport	26.59
Winchester S. S.	8.26
	400.79
Total to date	$ 6,750.83

in life; but I do believe that our leadership in the last 25 years has not stressed the importance of properly handling money; for money is our medium of exchange—to be used for good or bad. You need money to pay for books, tuition, board. If you don't have it, your parents or
(Continued on page 11.)

Missions at Home and Abroad

We Visit a Different Turkey

Is Turkey the same country I visited twenty-eight years ago? It certainly does not look like it. The most obvious change is in the alphabet. The Turkish language used to use the the Arabic alphabet, which never did fit Turkish words and was very difficult for Turks to learn. Shortly after I was last in Turkey, an adaptation of our Latin alphabet was worked out. It is completely phonetic; that is, each letter has but one sound. One who knows the system can correctly pronounce any Turkish word he sees. To make this possible, there are two c's, two g's, two i's, two o's and two u's. The second letter of each pair is distinguished by an extra mark over it. Our unneeded letters, q, x, and w, are not used. Some English words have been adopted into Turkish, but look odd, for example, "ekspres," "otomobil," and "otel."

The Turks look more like Americans than do any other Oriental people. They wear western clothes almost entirely. The Turks are Asiatics, although the largest city, Istanbul, is on the European side of the Bosphorus. The only ships we have been on on this trip around the world were here. We went up the Bosphorus almost to the Black Sea. The boat crossed back and forth stopping at towns on both the European and Asiatic sides. We have lost count of how many times we have actually been in Europe and Asia.

Turkey made its great decision at the end of the first World War, when as an ally of Germany she was badly defeated and lost all her extensive neighboring possessions. She gave up being the leader of the Moslem world of now some 300,000,000 people, and faced toward Europe. She has become definitely Europeanized and is one of the staunchest of Western nations.

Islam insists upon keeping women "in their place," veiled and confined to the home. Although most Turks give some lip service to Islam, the emancipation of women is even ahead of America. Turkey has a larger percentage of women lawyers and judges, physicians and dentists, college professors and business people than has the United States. When Turkey decided to become Westernized, it took women's being on a basis of equality with men as an essential part of modern Western life. Women did not, as in our country, struggle for their "rights" bit by bit.

Labor also came into its own unexpectedly. The government brought in organizers to help form labor unions. However, labor has not become vocal, and strikes are almost unknown. To counteract Communist propaganda, the government has from time to time given industrial labor unasked rights, higher wages, shorter hours, arbitration boards, accident insurance, old age pensions, etc. However, a great many people are covered by these benefits. On the other hand, although Turkey is a physical neighbor of Russia, Communism is practically unknown in Turkey.

Mustapha Kemal Ataturk, the father of modern Turkey, was somewhat of a benevolent dictator. He talked of a two-party system, but observers were sure that such would never come. However, today there are not only two parties, but the "opposition" party is in power.

How can we account for this transformation in a third of a century? A major factor is the existence of outstanding Christian schools: American University at Beirut, across the border in Lebanon, which was formerly a Turkish possession, Robert College, Constantinople Woman's College the former International College at Smyrna (Ismet), and four high schools supported by the Congregational denomination. The high requirements and standards of these schools have produced unusually strong leadership in the past and are still doing so. While the actual number of converts from Islam is nothing to brag about, the major achievement of Christianity here, as in many other parts of the world, has been to bring the spirit and aim of the Christ to many people who still give allegiance to non-Christian religions.

W. W. SLOAN.

A MISSION TO FULFILL.

(Continued from page 5.)

periences of great Christians and great churches.

It is the fundamental responsibility of every Christian to win others to Christ. If we don't do this we soon lose him ourselves. It is the fundamental responsibility of every church to help establish other churches. This is essential for a growing church. When you begin to see this you can begin to grasp the meaning of the establishment of the New Bayside Church to us and you can share the thrill of this event with me. These nine people who are going from our church to help establish the new church are truly a part of the very fiber of life of the Temple which we are joyfully pooling with the other good people in the Bayside area to bring into life a new unit of the church. If we share this living fiber in the true Christian spirit it will indeed bring new life to us.

Apply this lesson not only to your church but apply it to yourself. If you have lost your enthusiasm for the church and for Christianity—go out this week and win one person to Christ and the church and you will find your faith burning with a new glow. Are you troubled beyond your power to endure, then go out and help another who is troubled and you will find strength for your own troubles. Comfort one in sorrow and you find comfort for your own sorrow. Forgive those who have wronged you and you will find release and healing for your own sins.

Both personal and social Christianity is "A mission to fulfill"—A mission of sharing, both for the individual Christian and for the church. Dr. Berry tells this little story which is filled with a compelling challenge—Dr. Berry writes:

"It is said that a young clergyman in the company of the Duke of Wellington was arguing foreign missions. What was the good of taking Christianity to the heathens and unsettling their views. They were comfortable and content without. The Duke rejoined: 'Young man, what are your marching orders?'"

That is the question which we all need to ask ourselves over and over. Here are our marching orders: "Tarry at the place of consecration until you are filled with power, then be a witness for Christ to your family and community and unto the world." This makes like a mission for all, a mission worthy of the best that we have and are.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions
 MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor
 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Reports from the Conferences on World Community Day

Eastern Virginia.

The following message comes from Mrs. W. H. Johnson, superintendent of Interdenominational Cooperation for Eastern Virginia:

World Community Day will be November 5, this year. The project, "Parcels for Peace"; the worship service, "Let the Children Come"; and a pageant, "Light From the Lamp"; will feature the program.

Mrs. Johnson also sends an announcement concerning institutes for church women in Virginia, sponsored by the Council of Church Women. The schedule is as follows: October 1, Norfolk; October 15, Charlottesville; October 26, Richmond; October 27, Staunton; October 28, Roanoke; October 29, Marion. The program will begin at 9:30 and continue until 3:15, with panels, workshops, open discussions, visual aids, worship and fellowship.

North Carolina.

Mrs. Russell V. Powell, North Carolina superintendent, has recently sent a letter to each society, enclosing leaflets about World Community Day. The deadline for ordering material is October 22, but she emphasizes the importance of getting your material early so that you can make plans for publicity and program. She urges that the day be observed in cooperation with other denominations if possible, even if you do not live in a community where there is a Council of Church Women.

The entire World Community Day packet costs 40c and may be ordered from the Central Department of Publication and Distribution, National Council of Churches, 130 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N. Y. Enclose 15c for postage and handling.

* * * * *

Good Advice from a Man

We greatly appreciate the help which our ministers give the women's societies. Below is some extra-good advice which comes from the Rev. Fred Register—and so far as we women are concerned, it is a fine

"first step" in the help we expect to get from him as he assumes his new job with the Convention!

Circles and Their Values!

The average circle across the country has 14 members.

1. The circle, by virtue of its very smallness, helps to develop leaders.

MISS JENNIE M. DOIDGE

Miss Jennie Doidge, representing the Missions Council, will be the featured speaker at the three Women's Fall Conferences: October 5—North Carolina, at the Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines; October 7—Eastern Virginia, at Oakland, Chuekatuck; October 8—Valley of Virginia, at Newport Church.

Ladies will participate in small circles who would never speak in a larger group.

2. In a circle, your attendance is better. One person is missed more, and a greater effort is put forth.

3. A circle can usually care more thoroughly for all needs which would be grouped under the area of personal service (sick, shut-ins, bereaved, etc.).

4. A circle better provides for the sharing of both responsibility and work.

5. A circle gives a personal touch, a closeness of fellowship not available in large groups,

Value of Regrouping Circles Annually or Biannually.

1. This prevents the forming of strong little cliques, which tend to become extremely loyal to their own group and often cause sore spots in the church. After all, we are to teach brotherly love among Christians and not loyalty to a small group.

2. This provides for the enrichment of lives. Working and worshipping closely with new people in your church not only enlarges your circle of good friends, but it makes you a bigger and better Christian.

3. It enables us to see the needs and assets of a larger number of women and their families. This always makes for a strong fellowship and a working, growing church.

4. It makes the addition of more circles very simple and thus provides for continuous enlistment of new members. Across our nation, in many denominations, those churches which have used the "circle plan" with regular regrouping, have been far more successful in reaching a greater portion of all their women than those churches using any other plan. It has been tested and tried and has proven helpful.

* * * * *

Cradle Roll of Elon College Church Sponsors Korean Orphan

The Cradle Roll department of the Elon College Woman's Society recently sponsored a variety sale. The proceeds realized from this sale are enough to take care of a Korean orphan for one year. This usually takes about $120.

The sale created a wide interest, as many people were glad to clean out attics and closets, and others were happy to get such wonderful bargains. Many people laughed about buying each other's clothes, but a good time was had by all, and all were glad to feel that they could take a child off the streets and give it a home for a year.

There are about 100 children on the Cradle Roll at Elon College, and the chairman of this department is Mrs. L. E. Smith, who has visited all of these homes during the year. Besides the visits, she has sent out a quarterly bulletin entitled "Wee One's News" and held a Cradle Roll party at the end of the year. Other contacts are made during the year, and when the children reach promotion age, they graduate into the

(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Christian Education Week began last Sunday and continues through Saturday. Churches big and small, all over our land, will be thinking about, planning for, and doing things for the children of their parishes. Ministers, teachers, church workers and parents think about children just like you. They tell each other and God, how important they think you are, and how they want to give you the best Christian Education.

What is Christian Education? We go to school weekdays to receive a working education—that is, one that helps us read signs, and the news. It helps us to count and figure so we can carry on our lives. We learn history which tells us of the past and how people met troubles and solved problems. No one can be really educated until he knows what happened in the past. We learn where people live, and how they are different from us: in color, clothing, food likes, and living customs. All of these things are important, but more important is the finishing touch—the knowledge of God and his son Jesus. Boys and girls who are taught this education—Christian education—are better prepared to meet life and its problems.

Some of the things we put in our recipe for life a few weeks ago are the things Christian Education helps us to have: truth, patience, love for other people. In your church you will find the minister, teachers and workers, waiting to help you. They want to see you study, learn and grow, and then some day you will take their places.

Two of the greatest needs in our nation now are more ministers (and church workers) and teachers for public schools. They are two of the highest callings man can receive. Both are dedicated jobs, for in neither, does the worker become rich. A man who works with his hands may receive $20 a day, but a man working with the souls of men, may receive a mere $10 a day. It is the same with teachers. But we do need these people. It would be good if some of you talked with your minister or teacher about such jobs. Boys are needed to teach. Men make good teachers for middle-age boys and girls. If you haven't planned what you want to do and be—think about it this week.

Would you like to help people? Do you feel happy when you share with others? Do you like younger boys and girls? This would be a great time to decide to do a great job! While the pay is not the best, there comes love, gratitude, more rewarding than any money to these people. When a minister has helped a family in sorrow and they come to him and say: "Without your help, without your pointing God's way to us, we would have fallen."—these words repay the minister in a double measure for his work. Or when a mother comes to the teacher and says: "Thank you. My son was in deeper and deeper trouble, but your patience, interest and care helped him to learn his lessons and be a better boy"—these too are "extra pay."

* * * * *

Learning Together

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A bright-eyed boy in his teens was riding with his mother on a city bus.

"Mom, the teacher showed us how to introduce people today. If you would like me to tell you what she said, I will."

The mother expressed her desire to hear and the lad explained the procedure.

"I'm glad you're learning those things, Tom," The mother's voice was gentle, and she added, "I never had the chance after we lost my dad."

"But you're still young, Mom, and pretty, too! we can learn together." The boy's eyes said more than his words.

Parents who "never had the chance" are not the only ones who can learn from their youngsters. You see, our children are instructed in school by teachers who have spent much time studying, thinking and applying themselves to ways and means of helping their pupils to grow into mature men and women who can face up to life and its complexities.

While it is nature for the youngest generation to be a bit on the know-it-all side, we should remember there are many ways they can help Mom and Dad—even though they may be college trained and leaders in their communities—to acquire worthwhile new interests and hobbies. Grandparents, too, can gain enjoyment from new lines of study.

Ted's grandmother walked with a graceful carriage and had a talent for becoming colors, which she displayed in her dress. "You look lovely," Ted said to her one day, "and young! But, oh, Gram darling, your vocabulary! You still use those old-fashioned words like 'skidoo' and 'dearie'!"

The grandmother, I am told, laughed and tweaked Ted's ear. "That's the last of those words, Ted," she said. "I shall bring my vocabulary forward to 1954!"

Then there was Myra, who had been a schoolteacher before marriage, but she had let home responsibilities take all her time and thought. No longer was Myra interesting and well-informed. One day her alert Joan surprised her with, "Mom, you should read our current events paper. When I mention some of the places and occurrences about which we learn at school you act as if you've never heard of them!"

After that Joan brought the paper home from school and the family discussed its contents. Myra acquired a public-library card and brought home worthwhile books for the family to read. Later, she gave book reviews at her club.

Then there was Kathy Stone, who failed to take an interest even in P. T. A. or community affairs. But her up-and-coming sons were interested in everything—especially in Mother Nature. They asked their parents dozens of questions about birds and animals—particularly about birds, which they loved. Finally, the father, a busy executive, suggested to his wife, "Hon, you and I had better brush up on nature study, if we're to have any peace."

Reluctantly, the mother subscribed to the National Geographic Magazine and began spending some time at the museums and public library. It was not long before she was truly nature-loving. She even took to writing nature stories for children. She frequently gives talks on the subject, too, at P. T. A. meetings.

So, we see, that while our boys and girls can, of course, learn from us, we can learn from them.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Youth Can Say "No" Gracefully and Still Keep Phone Ringing

How do you say "No" gracefully when a drink is offered? That's a puzzler for teenagers and adults alike.

Allied Youth members have some answers to that, and advice for the teen-age non-drinker who may feel all alone at a cocktail party:

1. When the drinks are passed, just say no thank you. If asked if you'd like something else, tell them your preference.

2. When orders are taken at a table, say you'd like a coke, a limeade, or ginger ale. If your escort or friend tries to press a mixed drink on you instead, tell him or her you'd prefer the limeade. Make it polite, pleasant, but firm.

3. Don't go into a long speech about why you don't drink. Someone will surely tell you to go rent a hall. The speech-maker is at the top of the "people to avoid" list of

4. Don't put the other person on both drinker and non-drinker. the defensive. He has as much right to order a drink as you have to refuse. It's a matter of opinion, and you should respect his view if you expect him to respect yours.

5. Don't be cutting. Those sly remarks will get you nothing but a silent telephone, and your name may be scratched from a date book.

There are two other points, too, that these AY members want to bring out strongly:

1. No one looks down on you just because you don't drink.

2. If a crowd does not accept you simply because you don't drink, then that crowd isn't worth being in.

—Jean Wordlow, in Miami Herald.

MR. W. C. RAWLS ADDRESSES
ELON STUDENT BODY.

(Continued from page 7.)

someone else does, or you wouldn't be here today.

Elon couldn't do the good work it does or have such a fine faculty without money. So many young people, and older ones too, tell me that if they had money they could make money. That is a rash statement, made without thinking. When you leave college and take your place in the world, your success in business will depend upon how you build and protect your character and credit. You will have to develop your character and credit that you possess with untold confidence in your fellowman. Through character and credit you will grow in stature in your community.

With your honest efforts—bear in mind—if you can't make a success with good character and credit, and borrowed money, you will never be able to handle and keep or preserve your own resources.

When I was a young man, I was besieged with statements that all the opportunities had been taken up—chance of success was not what it once was. Now, after forty years, I hear the same statements. There are more opportunities now for success than there ever was at any other age. All you have to do is get out and start. No one else is going to do your job—you have a job to do for yourself. Your chance of success, no matter what your ambitions or vocation may be, is greater now than at any time in history. People like you will keep it that way.

I am sure that in a few years we will have a guaranteed yearly wage and a four-day working week with the same pay as a five- or six-day week—with modern achievements in management and machinery, a man will produce more in a four-day week in offices, factory or farming than our grandfathers produced in a month. It is not the time you put in, but what you produce in the time you put in that counts.

Another experience I am resolved to—that when you go out into the business world, don't overlook that you are a part of the community in which you reside. You owe it to posterity to take part in the moral development of your community. You may leave that to someone else. If you do, you will regret and be a failure for the simple reason no one does anything by his own efforts—there must be two or more people to accomplish any task we undertake to do. I have business men tell me that they do so and so—I made this,

I did that—no man or person ever did anything in his life by himself. It is through friends and the populace that an individual is successful. Think it over.

You can't make money out of yourself or secure yourself in society or business. We do it with all our contacts with friends and associates. So don't start out in life trying to evade your community responsibility and interest of others. I mention a few, such as your church, schools and charities. There can be no greater achievement than to live and practice the brotherhood of man as taught by Jesus Christ. If you take this association and teaching of Christ out of organized Christian churches, nothing would be left in religion.

Now I come to the over-all experience that I am resolved to. Ever since I was a small boy, I have had a passion to read and study history and to follow art. It appears to me that America, strong as it is, was built on and around the small individual church, regardless of its faith or denomination. They all worked more or less for a good, clean society and for doing business with honor, and all fearing the living God. If my knowledge of world conditions is of any understanding or value, it adds up now that we are faced with the world question: "Are you for Communism or for God?" Some of us call the side of God the free world. I have read about, and know enough from what I have heard and seen of a few communists that you can't be a communist and believe in a just God. So I quickly denounce communism as having nothing good at all. But we are nearing the time when we will have to stand and be counted, whether you are for God or against God.

I believe the findings will eventually resolve themselves into a peaceful and good world. I am not a pessimist; I am a confirmed optimist. And friends of Elon, I want you to know now on which side I am. The Fifth Amendment would never be any good to me; and if I never leave my wife, sons and grandchildren anything but to know that in my sunset years I went down fighting peacefully as a firm believer in the living God on my side, that would suffice. There would be nothing that would be greater for me than to give my life in helping to restore peace on this earth. I am convinced that God will see us through the peril which we now face, as he has done in such times before.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"God's Answer to Job's Perplexity"

LESSON II—OCTOBER 10, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Be still, and know that I am God."—Psalm 46: 10.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Job 38-42.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 14: 1-11.

The Problem.

The problem in the Book of Job is the age-old problem, or question, "Why do the righteous suffer?" Why is there suffering in a world which has been made and is sustained by a wise and good loving God? For many people, it just does not make sense. And in despair, or in defiance, they throw up their hands and often harden their hearts.

Suggested Solutions.

As the Book of Job raises the problem, it attempts also to give the solution. It does this by reporting the discussions between three of Job's friends, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, and later, a young smart-aleck by the name of Elihu, and Job himself. These discussions are lengthy and learned. They do not make easy reading. The writer of these Notes confesses that before he got to the end of this book of forty-two chapters he was weary in mind and somewhat lost in the wilderness of words. He had to turn to a commentary to find out "what it was all about." The underlying argument in what all the men said is that Job is suffering because of his sins, his suffering was a penalty or punishment for his wrong doing. One of the men says it one way, another says it in another way, but they all say it. And men say it today. Is a man suffering? Well, if we could get at the heart of the matter, we would find that he was a sinner. Men say this about others and they say it about themselves. Do you not know people who think that God sends punishment and suffering on them because they have done something bad? And often they are good people.

Now, to be sure, sin always and eventually brings suffering. One may be sure that one's sins will find him out. Be not deceived, God is not mocked; and whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap. But all suffering is not punishment for sin. Our Lord Jesus Christ did no sin, and no sin was found in him, and yet he suffered. There is vicarious suffering, the fact that the innocent often suffer with and for the guilty. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. As Dr. Fosdick once said, "No calamity, no courage; no hardship, no hardihood; no stress, no strength; no suffering, no sympathy; no Cross, no Christ!"

All this is no glib or easy answer to the problem. Suffering still has elements of mystery in it. The answer is to be found, not in the head, but in the heart. It is to be seen against the background of faith in God. We believe and trust where we cannot understand. A vision of God, and faith in him, girds and guards in suffering.

Job's Answer.

The Book of Job comes to a dramatic climax in the closing chapters. After a series of long and, sometimes, dull and pious platitudes on the part of Job's friends and so-called comforters, and after a clever speech by a young whipper-snapper named Elihu, God suddenly breaks into the conversation. He appears to Job and his friends in a whirlwind or great storm, and he speaks to Job out of the whirlwind. He calls attention to his creative power, to the intricacies and the strength and the wonders of the world which he has created, and the animals which inhabit it. He calls attention also to man, the crown of creation. Who is man, that he should find fault with the Almighty? "And the Lord said unto Job: Shall a faultfinder contend with the Almighty? He who argues with God, let him answer it."

Job answers, "Behold, I am of small account, what shall I answer thee?" What could he answer God? But there is more. God proceeds to recount his wonders on land and sea; and Job sees even more clearly the wisdom and power and goodness of God. "I know that thou canst do all things, and that no purpose of thine can be thwarted . . . therefore I uttered what I did not understand, things too wonderful which I did not know."

And then comes the climax: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees thee. Therefore, I despise myself and repent in dust and ashes." He had gone from hearsay to experience. He had now talked to God instead of talking about God. (And there is a world of difference.) Strangely enough, the mystery was not solved. God did not give Job an answer to his question or a solution to his problem, that is not directly. But God did give him something far better. He gave Job a revelation of himself. And in that revelation, the mystery took its rightful place. When men come to know God, the questions that bother and perplex them do not loom so large. When men trust God, they can bear or endure what they cannot explain. A knowledge of God goes far toward solving our problems of knowledge about God and his ways. Let a man come to know and to trust God, and many of the problems of life take on lesser proportions.

Like many a story-book finish, the Book of Job turns out well. The thing ends happily. Job recovers his health, he is healed of his loathsome disease, he acquires very large property interests and wealth, he has sons and daughters who bless him in his old age, and he lived for a long time.

But it is not always thus. Those who love and serve God do not always prosper. Suffering does not always result in material gain. Serving God does not always pay in dollars and cents. But there is a reward not of the world's giving, and not of its knowing. "Out of sufferings have emerged the strongest souls; the greatest characters have been seamed with scars; martyrs have put on their coronation robes glittering with fire, and through tears the sorrowful have seen first the gates of the heavenly City of God."

Some Teaching Points.

Dr. Frank Mead, writing in Tarbell's Guide, suggests some teaching points:

1. Job was rewarded, not just by a return of property and health, but by a profounder knowledge of God.
2. God stands by; in the end he reveals himself to them who seek him in spirit and in truth.
3. God's power and glory are greater than man's.

(Continued on page 15.)

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

Junior Missionary Society, also sponsored by the women. In this way the children are given missionary education and also kept in contact with the church.

MRS. W. J. ANDES.

* * * * *

Palm Street, Greensboro

The Missionary Society of Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., held regular meetings this year, with good attendance. All requirements have been completed. In fact, they have gone beyond the requirements. They report a good year both financially and spiritually.

MRS. LOIS WINSLOW,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Fourth Quarter Financial Report

Following is the Quarterly Report of the treasurer of the Woman's Board of the North Carolina Congregational Christian Conference for the quarter ending September 15, 1954:

RECEIPTS.

Women's Societies.

Albemarle	$ 18.75
Amelia	5.00
Antioch R.	2.50
Apple's Chapel	44.50
Asheboro	55.00
Asheville	10.00
Auburn	3.00
Belews Creek	10.00
Berca	20.00
Bethel	16.00
Bethlehem	45.90
Beulah	20.00
Beverly Hills	7.00
Burlington	282.75
Calvary	27.45
Carolina	8.00
Concord	6.25
Damascus	2.50
Durham	75.64
Elon College	57.80
Eutaw Community	14.16
Flint Hill (R)	3.75
Fuller's Chapel	40.00
Gibsonville	14.00
Greensboro, First	256.00
Greensboro, Palm St.	49.00
Hank's Chapel	9.00
Happy Home	40.00
Haw River	12.50
Hebron, Virginia	10.00
Henderson	35.00
High Point	16.25
Hines' Chapel	45.00
Hopedale	17.85
Ingram, Virginia	35.30
Kallam's Grove	2.50
Lakeview Community	10.00
Liberty, N. C.	34.00
Liberty, Vance	60.00
Long's Chapel	35.00
Monticello	22.00

Morrisville	10.00
Mount Auburn	35.85
Mount Bethel	10.00
Mount Gilead	5.00
Mount Pleasant	10.00
New Lebanon	28.00
Oak Level	7.00
Pleasant Grove, N. C.	15.00
Pleasant Grove, Va.	22.70
Pleasant Hill	17.00
Pleasant Ridge (G)	16.00
Pleasant Ridge (R)	10.00
Plymouth	5.00
Pope's Chapel	15.00
Raleigh	50.00
Ramseur	20.00
Reidsville	50.00
Salem Chapel	15.00
Sanford	65.00
Shallow Well	35.00
Smithwood	5.00
Sophia	10.00
Spoon's Chapel	6.25
Turner's Chapel	25.00
Union Grove	7.50
Union, N. C.	76.50
Union, Va.	35.00
Wake Chapel	60.00
Youngsville	12.50

$ 2,158.65

Young People.

Pleasant Ridge (R)	$ 6.21
Reidsville	15.00

21.21

Junior Societies.

Apple's Chapel	$ 9.28
Burlington	11.28
Durham	17.53
Greensboro, First	12.38
Greensboro, Palm St.	20.00
Henderson	9.00
Ingram	2.00
Reidsville	10.00
Union, N. C.	5.68

97.15

Cradle Roll.

Burlington	$ 13.50
Durham	11.93
Elon College	20.00
Greensboro, First	12.38
Greensboro, Palm St.	13.00
Haw River	12.50
Henderson	5.70
Hines' Chapel	20.20
Ingram	2.14
Monticello	7.50
Pleasant Ridge (R)	4.28
Raleigh	10.00
Ramseur	5.00
Sanford	8.00
Union, N. C.	17.60

163.73

Total Receipts $ 2,440.74

DISBURSEMENTS.

Literature packets for new societies	$ 10.50
Expense of the treasurer for year	33.00
Expense, Executive Board Meetings	51.50
Treasurer, Youth Fellowship	21.21
Expense of Registration, Fall Conference	18.10
United Church Women, May Fellowship	3.00
United Church Women of N. C., Migrant Work	20.00

157.31

Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Tr.,

For:

Our Christian World Mission	$ 39.66
Life Memberships	380.00
Memorials	140.00
Puerto Rican Goat Fund	40.00
Cent-A-Meal Offerings	33.70
Missions in India	5.00
Rachanyapuram School	9.00
Spanish-Speaking Americans	20.20
Christian Orphanage	12.50
Missions, General Fund	1603.37
	2,283.43

Total Disbursements $ 2,440.74

Respectfully submitted,

SUSIE D. ALLEN,
Treasurer.

COMMISSIONING SERVICE FOR MEMBERS OF BAYVIEW.

(Continued from page 3.)

We would also like to recognize Rev. Ernest F. Brickhouse, a member of the Temple and a ministerial member of the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches. Under the sponsorship of the Temple and the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, Mr. Brickhouse has been working with the people of the Bayview area in preparation for the establishing of a church for the past two and one-half months. He has rendered faithful and effective service. We request that Mr. Brickhouse stand.

As a symbol of your pledge to pray for this new church and to maintain an interest in this undertaking, I invite all members of the Temple who are present and all other Christian people in this congregation to stand with those who are already standing.

Let us unite in prayer for God's guidance in this undertaking.

W. MILLARD STEVENS.

(The prayer was led by Supt. Wm. T. Scott.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

4. God does not answer all questions; he leaves a little to be taken by faith.
5. God is a Friend, not a Persecutor.
6. We should have at least as much confidence in God's government of the universe as we have in our own human wisdom and power.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage has many good supporters in Eastern Virginia. Both churches and individuals are cognizant of our needs and rally to our call for help for the big orphanage family. They are prosperous. And they love the church and they gladly support the homeless children gathered together at the orphanage. Most of their churches through their Sunday schools receive a monthly offering for the work. They do not begrudge the nickles, dimes and dollars thus donated. They know a good work is being done. Several of their organizations and many of their individuals take more than a passing interest in the little ones housed, trained and reared by their churches. This is good. They are none the poorer for their generosity.

This week I am renewing many friendships of long standing in Eastern Virginia. I came to this Conference as a young minister fresh out of Princeton thirty-one years ago this month. I served five years in Norfolk, Virginia, did a five years in Dayton, Ohio, and returned to this conference where I served as pastor of the Suffolk Church for sixteen years. Eight of those thrilling years I served the Eastern Virginia Conference as secretary. Through this avenue I became especially well acquainted with the churches, their organizations and the pastors. To say it simply and truthfully they are a great people. I feel I am still serving them. I am trying to to it well, and I am most appreciative of their fine support. This week I am privileged to make additional friends for the orphanage.

In every one of the five conferences and in all our churches the orphanage has many, many friends. In my ministry I have served churches in each of them except one, the Valley of Virginia Conference. More than thirty-five years ago I addressed that conference on behalf of the Men and Millions campaign and have spoken there many times since. Each conference and all the churches rally to the needs of the orphanage and I am grateful. I am praying that we shall have generous support this fall for the cause is worthy and the demands are great.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 23, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Mrs. C. P. Chamberlin, Windsor, Conn., Sweaters, caps, hose and rain wear.

Mrs. G. P. Haskins, Suffolk, Va., Clothing and shoes.

Ladies' Circle, Bethlehem (Disp.) Church, Buttons.

Mrs. A. L. Arnold, Louisburg, N. C., Coupons and buttons.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 9,245.63

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Liberty (Vance) S. S. ..$ 24.68

Pleasant Union 50.00

74.68

Eastern Va. Conference:

Antioch$ 20.69

Newport News 12.15

Windsor S. S. 10.00

42.84

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Bethel S. S.$ 6.64

Mt. Zion S. S. 4.70

Union (Va.) S. S. 5.00

16.34

Western N. C. Conference:

Pleasant Union$ 40.02

40.02

Virginia Valley Conference:

Linville S. S.$ 5.84

Palmyra S. S. 6.00

11.84

Total $ 185.72

Grand total $ 9,431.35

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $23,348.32

A Friend$ 19.86

Lawrence S. Holt Trust

Fund 150.00

Philathea Class, Reidsville

Church 10.00

Dr. Mary Frances Thelen,

Lynchburg, Va. 20.00

Vanceville Sunday School,

Tifton, Georgia 3.00

First Congregational Ch.,

Asheville, N. C., Special

Gift 50.00

John Chamberlin, Gibson-

ville, N. C. 1.00

Class eight, Liberty Vance,

Church, Special Gift .. 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 25.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 15.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 8.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 7.50

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 15.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 7.50

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 25.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 7.50

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 25.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 7.50

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 25.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 5.00

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 13.00

Special Gifts 517.36

Grand total $23,865.68

Total for the week $ 703.08

Total for the year $33,297.03

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

HOW TO GET THE MOST OUT OF LAYMEN'S SUNDAY.

(Continued from page 3.)

6.—What is the Topic for Laymen's Sunday?

For this year, the denominational leaders have agreed that the preferred subject for Laymen's Sunday is "A Time for Decision," based on the poem of James Russell Lowell, "Once to Every Man and Nation."

*"Once to every man and nation
Comes a moment to decide
In the strife of truth with false hood*

For the good or evil side. . ."

7.—How should this Theme be developed?

Ideally, scripture, hymns, prayers and addresses should bear on the need of deciding for Christ. Talks should stress the importance of an initial decision. They should also point to the need for day to day decisions. They should deal with the importance of assuming responsibility and taking action. Perhaps they will mention the use of prayer as a practical force. Surely they will stress the vital need of living our religion—doing something about it—not just letting life carry us along.

Most laymen very rightly feel that they prefer to "witness" rather than to "preach." The talks are most successful when the layman merely expresses his convictions concerning the need for God and Christ in his own life, his willingness to study the laws of God for human conduct, and his determination to make these laws a more effective force in his own life and in his own sphere of influence.

Other suggestions for developing the theme will be given next week.

8.—The Scriptural Background.

The Bible is brimming with stories of men who decided for God—from Noah, Abraham and Job, through all the prophets, apostles and martyrs.

It is full, too, of people who decided against him, from Adam to Judas. Many, like Jonah or Peter, temporarily ran away from responsibility.

Exodus 32:26—"Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come . . ."

Deut. 30:19—"I have set before you life and death . . . choose life . . ."

Joshua 24:15—"Choose you this day whom ye will serve."

Matt. 27:15-26—"Christ or Barabas."

Mark 10:17-22—The decision of the rich young man.

Luke 15:18—"I will arise and go to my father."

Acts 9:16—"It shall be told thee what thou must do."

Ephesians 6:13—"Having done all, to stand."

Philippians 3:13-14—"This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind."

9.—What Hymns should be used?

Certainly, "Once to Every Man and Nation." Also appropriate are such hymns as "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "Rise Up, O Men of God," "Just As I Am," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Who Is On the Lord's Side?" and many others.

10.—Why this date, this theme, this title?

Many denominations rightly use various names for this observance, such as Men's Day or Brotherhood Day. If a name has special value, it should be used. If not, you might as well benefit by the widespread knowledge of the name "Laymen's Sunday."

Obviously, any church can hold Laymen's Sunday on a different date and with a different name. However, as in the case of World Wide Communion there is something thrilling in the thought that your church has a spiritual bond with thousands of other churches elsewhere. You are uniting with Christians from coast to coast at the same time, in the same thoughts.

11.—Are additional helps available?

Yes. Write to The Laymen's Movement, 347 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y. If you wish, include $1.00 as a good will gift to help meet expenses of furthering Laymen's Sunday. Further material may also be obtained by writing to United Church Men, 297 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

12.—Is Laymen's Sunday important?

If you have observed the rising tide of Christian enthusiasm today, you will surely agree that thousands of churches are more dynamic and successful because they command the manpower of really active laymen.

In turn, millions of laymen have found new meaning in their lives because they are active in their church. This is why Laymen's Sunday has come about today. And this observance is perhaps the fastest growing custom in Christendom.

If your church has observed this Sunday in the past, you know its possibilities. If not—decide now to hold it just once—this year. You will never again do without this source of power and blessing for your church.

THE MESSAGE of THE SECOND ASSEMBLY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

(Continued from page 16.)

est political divisions of our time, here at Evanston we are united in Christ. And we rejoice also that, in the bond of prayer and a common hope, we maintain communion with our Christian brethren everywhere.

It is from within this communion that we have to speak about the fear and distrust which at present divide our world. Only at the Cross of Christ, where men know themselves as forgiven sinners can they be made one. It is there that Christians must pray daily for their enemies. It is there that we must seek deliverance from self-righteousness, impatience and fear. And those who know that Christ is risen should have the courage to expect new power to break through every human barrier.

It is not enough that Christians should seek peace for themselves. They must seek justice for others. Great masses of people in many parts of the world are hungry for bread, and are compelled to live in conditions which mock their human worth. Does your church speak and act against such injustice? Millions of men and women are suffering segregation and discrimination on the grounds of race. Is your church willing to declare, as this Assembly has declared, that this is contrary to the will of God?

The Church of Christ is today a world-wide fellowship, yet there are countless people to whom he is unknown. How much do you care about this? Does your congregation live for itself, or for the world around it and beyond it? Does its common life, and does the daily work of its members in the world, affirm the Lordship of Christ or deny it?

God does not leave any of us to stand alone. In every place he has gathered us together to be his family, in which his gifts and his forgiveness are received. Do you forgive one another as Christ forgave you? Is your congregation a true family of God, where every man can find a home and know that God loves him without limit?

We are not sufficient for these things. But Christ is sufficient. We do not know what is coming to us. But we know who is coming. It is he who meets us every day and who will meet us at the end—Jesus Christ our Lord.

Therefore we say to you: Rejoice in hope.

The Message of the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches

To all our fellow Christians, and to our fellowmen everywhere, we send greetings in the name of Jesus Christ. We affirm our faith in Jesus Christ as the hope of the world, and desire to share that faith with all men. May God forgive us that by our sin we have often hidden this hope from the world.

In the ferment of our time there are both hopes and fears. It is indeed good to hope for freedom, justice and peace, and it is God's will that we should have these things. But he has made us for a higher end. He has made us for himself, that we might know and love him, worship and serve him.

Nothing other than God can ever satisfy the heart of man. Forgetting this, man becomes his own enemy. He seeks justice, but creates oppression. He wants peace, but drifts toward war. His very mastery of nature threatens him with ruin. Whether he acknowledges it or not, he stands under the judgment of God and under the shadow of death.

Here where we stand, Jesus Christ stood with us. He stood with us as God made man, come to seek and to save. Though we were the enemies of God, he died for us. We crucified him, but God raised him from the dead. He is risen. He has overcome the powers of sin and death. A new life has begun. And in his risen and ascended power he has sent forth into the world a new community bound together by his Spirit, sharing his divine life, commissioned to make him known throughout the world. He will come again as Judge and King to bring all things to their consummation. Then we shall see him as he is and know as we are known. Together with the whole creation, we wait for this with eager hope, knowing that God is faithful and that even now he holds all things in his hands.

This is the hope of God's people in every age, and we commend it afresh today to all who will listen. To accept it is to turn from our ways to God's way. It is to live as forgiven sinners, as children growing in his love. It is to share with Christ and for his sake the sorrows and perplexities of the world. It is to have our citizenship in that Kingdom which all man's sin is impotent to destroy, that realm of love and joy and peace which lies about all men, though unseen. It is to know that whatever men may do, Jesus reigns and shall reign.

With this assurance, we can face the powers of evil and the threat of death with a good courage. Delivered from fear we are made free to love. For beyond the judgment of men and the judgment of history lies the judgment of the King who died for all men, and who will meet us at the last, saying: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Thus our Christian hope directs us towards our neighbor. It constrains us to pray daily, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and to act as we pray in every area of life. It begets a life of believing prayer and expectant action, looking to Jesus and pressing forward to the day of his return in glory.

Now we would speak through our member churches directly to each congregation. Six years ago our churches entered into a covenant to form this Council, and affirmed their intention to stay together. We thank God for his blessing on our work and fellowship during these six years. We enter now upon a second stage. To stay together is not enough. We must go forward. As we learn more of our unity in Christ, it becomes the more intolerable that we should be divided. We, therefore, ask you: Is your church seriously considering its relation to other churches in the light of our Lord's prayer that we may be sanctified in the truth and that we may all be one? Is your congregation, in fellowship with sister congregations around you, doing all it can to ensure that your neighbors shall hear the voice of the one Shepherd calling all men into the one flock?

The forces that separate men from one another are strong. When we met at Amsterdam, the Chinese churches were with us; we have missed them at Evanston. There are other lands and churches unrepresented in our Council, and we long ardently for their fellowship. But we are thankful that, separated as we are by the deep- (Please turn to page 15.)

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1954

NUMBER 39

A PRAYER

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

Upon the Occasion of the Inaugurating of the 1954 Richmond Area Community Chest Drive

THOU God and Father of all mankind, Thou God of truth, of light, of love and of power, we worship Thee because Thou alone are worthy to be worshipped. We worship Thee because Thou art the Author of Life—the Giver of every blessing which we enjoy. In Thee, we live and move and have our being. Help us always to realize that we most honor Thee and best serve Thee in worthy service to our fellowmen.

We thank Thee for the high privilege of being Thy partners, Thy assistants in the promotion of every worthy cause, every social enterprise which seeks the amelioration of social wrongs, social inequities and social injustices. We are inspired by the fact that whatever we do in Thy name to alleviate the burdens of our fellowmen, whose paths have fallen in hard and unpleasant places, is service to society and to Thee.

We thank Thee for every agency which gives us opportunity to have a part in helping to meet the needs of those less fortunate than we. We thank Thee especially for the Richmond Area Community Chest, for its humanitarian concern, for its commendable record of service, for its comprehensive program, and for its efficiency in administering its funds.

We pray that Thou wilt inspire those who promote the 1954 Campaign, and all those on whom they may call, each to do his or her best, that a glorious victory may be realized. Amen.

News Flashes

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention met on Wednesday of this week in Henderson, N. C.

On Sunday, October 17, at 3:30 p. m., Richmond First Church will dedicate its new Fellowship and Recreation Center. Superintendent W. T. Scott will be the guest speaker. Friends are invited.

The Church of the Covenant

The Church of the Covenant (Congregational Christian), Lynchburg, Virginia, was officially organized on Sunday, October 3, 1954, at 3:00 p. m. Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council delivered the principal address of the occasion. The service was at the Fellowship House, 4415 Boonsboro Road, Lynchburg, located on U. S. Highway 501, about one mile beyond Randolph Macon Woman's College.

The Church of the Covenant grew out of the Lynchburg Christian Fellowship. The story of the Lynchburg Fellowship appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is a reprint of an article by Beverly Cosby from The Princeton Semanarian of November 12, 1952.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in the issue of October 14, will carry a story of the purpose and scheme of organization of the Church of the Covenant by Rev. Irving Stubbs, co-minister.

Revival at Pleasant Hill

The revival at Pleasant Hill Congregational Christian Church, in Alamance County, began the first Sunday in September and closed the following Sunday morning. The Rev. William Simmons preached every evening throughout the week, with our pastor, the Rev. M. A. Pollard, conducting each Sunday morning service. There were 19 professions of faith and rededications, with four new members joining the church. We feel that the church was much revived, and that it is in a growing stage, and we pray that it may continue during the coming years.

Our young people are much interested and are taking an active part in the singing as well as in the devotional for each worship service

(Continued on page 15.)

Dr. Hotchkiss Becomes Director of Town and Country Work

Rev. Dr. Wesley A. Hotchkiss, director of research on the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches has been appointed director of the town and country department of the Board, which is a part of the church extension division of the board, and works with the Congregational Christian Churches located in open country and in towns of 5,000 or less.

"The work of the town and country department of the Board of Home Missions has three main emphases," Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice-president, explained in announcing the Hotchkiss appointment.

"The department conducts a continuous program of inquiry and experimentation into the most pressing problems of the rural church. For example, during the last six years the problem of the marginal church has attracted nation wide attention.

"A second and equally important function of the department is to present the point of view of the rural churches within the total Christian enterprise. This work is carried on in the public press and church publications and through national denominational and inter-denominational meetings. This work is important because of the tendency of

(Continued on page 10.)

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE:

Winchester, Virginia—October 13-14

Rev. R. A. Whitten, President

Mr. Clarence A. Phillips, Secretary

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Rosemont Church, South Norfolk—November 3-4

Rev. J. Everette Neese, President

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., Secretary

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Piney Plains Church, near Raleigh—November 9

Rev. Will B. O'Neill, President

Rev. R. L. Jackson, Secretary

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11

Rev. M. A. Pollard, President

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro

Rev. Mark W. Andes, President

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The guest speaker for the Valley Conference will be Rev. John F. McClelland, Silver Spring, Maryland, where Mr. McClelland has done an outstanding job of church extension.

The guest speaker for the other conferences will be Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of London, England. Dr. Berry is secretary of the International Congregational Council.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Winchester Laymen's Meeting

An enthusiastic meeting of laymen of the Winchester, Virginia, Church was held Friday evening, September 24, at 6:30 o'clock in the social hall of the parsonage. A dinner served by the ladies of the Fidelis Class was a big feature of the evening.

It was a called meeting to organize the Men's Fellowship of the church. Previously more than fifty men had promised to meet on this occasion but because of sickness and other engagements between 20 and 30 men attended.

Rev. Millard Revis, pastor of the Market Street Methodist Church of Winchester spoke to the men following the dinner. He was followed by W. B. Williams, of Newport News, Virginia, chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention. Then followed the organization of the group by Mr. Williams, who did an excellent job of getting men named to man the organization.

The writer was impressed with the response of the laymen to Mr. Williams who challenged the men to a united effort in the work of the church.

I believe this organization of laymen will prove a most helpful arm of the church and become of a power for service yet undreamed of. We are very happy for the outlook and we deeply appreciate the splendid effort of Mr. Williams to get our ship of state sailing.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

* * * * *

Eastern North Carolina Laymen to Meet

Many of the laymen in the Eastern North Carolina Conference have expressed an interest in having a conference organization of the Laymen's Fellowship. You probably know that ours is the only conference in the Southern Convention without such an organization.

On Tuesday, September 28, laymen and ministers from four of our churches who have an active Layman's Fellowship and one church which was interested met here at Wake Chapel. These men made plans for a meeting to be held in the Vance School Cafeteria located just beyond our Wentworth Church on Route No. 3, Raleigh, on Wednesday, October 20, 1954, at 7:00 p. m.

Every church in our conference will be invited to this meeting. Dr. Earl Daniely, vice-president of the Southern Convention Layman's Fellowship, has been asked to be present, to explain the work and opportunities a Layman's Fellowship offers. It is our prayer that at this meeting we will vote to organize a Conference-wide Layman's Fellowship and elect officers.

We would like to have three to five consecrated laymen from each church in our conference as well as the minister present for this meeting.

The Missionary Society of our Wentworth Church is to prepare and serve the dinner at a cost of $1.25 per person. It is asked that some layman in each church be so kind as to collect this reasonable amount from each man who can come and mail a check with reservations to B. C. Brown, Route No. 3, Raleigh, N. C., on or before October 15.

We are depending on you.

RAY POWELL, Chairman,
Publicity Committee.

More than 15,000 missionaries are now sent out from the churches of the United States and Canada; and their support calls for annual giving in excess of $40,000,000.—The Civic Bulletin.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardeastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

World-Wide Communion Sunday

World-Wide Communion Sunday is one special day that should be observed by every local church. The term "local church" is a useful one when used to designate an individual congregation. The tragedy in connection with it is that all too often it is an exact description. There are churches whose concern and whose program of activity are limited to the immediate environs of their membership. Many church members unblushingly say their own church has more needs than its members are able to meet and that until those needs are met, they are not going to respond to outside calls.

The temptation to be selfish is not confined exclusively to persons. Organizations and institutions are constantly beset by the temptation of selfishness. The better the purpose to which they are dedicated, the more likely they are to succumb. It is impossible for either man or God to sanctify selfishness.

Churches need to be constantly reminded that they share the eternal purpose of God to redeem the world from sin. The acceptance of unlimited responsibility is the condition under which God bestows the fulness of his power. Until a church undertakes a program which is so big that only with God's help can it be done, it will find itself unable to meet its own immediate needs.

The glory of a church lies in the fact that it has the nature, purpose and spirit of the Church. That is the spiritual truth upon which congregationalism is founded. Leave out the awareness of a church's relationship to the universal Church of Christ, and congregationalism becomes a delusion and a snare.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper offers to the believer an unusual opportunity for spiritual renewing and spiritual growth. Men, even Christian men, grow weary in their mortal way. They need the bread of life for their souls, as they need physical bread for their bodies. Therefore, they come to the Table of the Lord.

Men need not only the power that comes from God, they need also the strengthening that comes from fellowship with those who are seeking the same blessed experience. They long for that spiritual oneness which every one feels in some measure as he partakes of the emblems signifying the broken body and the spilled blood. When the members of a worshipping congregation are thus one in spirit, the Holy Spirit can do his perfect work, and the Sacrament becomes truly the Holy Communion. Christendom, in the observance of World-Wide Communion, is seeking just that spiritual oneness.

Are You Going to Conference?

The conference season is drawing near for the churches of the Southern Convention. The Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet October 13-14. Then in November the other four conferences of the Convention will follow each other in rapid succession.

The conference session affords the best opportunity available for local churches and their membership to get acquainted with one another and to know the total program of our denomination. If you have never attended a session of the conference in which your church holds membership, you have missed one of the high experiences of being a church member.

Some church members are chronic conference attendants. The conference rolls show certain persons are delegates from their church year after year. Incidentally many of them are the most useful members of their church. You may decide which is cause and which is effect.

It is not easy always to secure delegates from the churches, especially if the distance to be traveled is considerable. Then there are those who think the church has no claim upon their time except on Sundays. Conference time is a good time to let such people know that the Lord sometimes has good work to be done on week days. Draft some of the folks who ought to go to conference, insist that all delegates should attend, and then watch the member who has attended conference for the first time. See if he does not have a new idea concerning the importance of all phases of the church program.

It should be added that attendance at conference is not limited to elected delegates. There is no reason why the people who like to attend should not go. The same program is available for both delegates and visitors, and there is always enough to eat and to spare.

Moral: Go to the annual conference.

The L. C. F.--A New Medium

By BEVERLY COSBY

The Lynchburg Christian Fellowship is a Christian program of education, worship and recreation. As an experiment in Lynchburg, Virginia, this newly organized group indicates a sense of urgency to recover the true relationship between hearing and acting upon the Word of God.

With only fifteen members, and with less than thirty months of organized activity, the L. C. F. promotes a far reaching program for youth and adults directed almost entirely by Christian laymen. Full-time leadership during the summer months provides a ministry to school children and young people overburdened with hours and weeks of unproductive leisure. My field work was to direct this program.

During the school year the program is chiefly educational in nature. A group of high school juniors and seniors meet once each week for prayer and serious study. Meetings are informal; discussion and group participation center around the week's assignment. Members read the prescribed texts and take examinations. The book being used at present is Leslie Weatherhead's The Transforming Friendship. A similar group of adults of various denominations are likewise following a course of rigorous study in James S. Stewart's The Life and Teachings of Jesus Christ. They share new insights in the ways to practice Christianity in their vocations, and in all unalluring details of their daily routines. One example of applied Christianity which has developed from this group is a relatively small business concern which now draws a sizeable check on its account each month to the work of Christ's Kingdom; and in addition offers a small annual scholarship to a promising high school graduate.

Movies Analyzed.

Another activity primarily for adults was a summer film program. We showed a series of carefully selected motion pictures, one each week for a period of five weeks. These movies were intentionally non-religious and secular, yet they were chosen because of their Christian implications. A discussion period followed each showing for the purpose of stimulating Christian insights into the life situations portrayed by each film. For example: Fame Is The Spur depicted a young British lad from a low-income industrial class intent on attaining power and recognition in English politics. After gaining status and influence, his first noble motives to represent the interest of England's working class became conditioned by the subtle temptations of public life. A Christian lawyer of Lynchburg, a representative to the Virginia House of Delegates, led the

BEVERLY R. COSBY

Mr. Cosby is a native of Lynchburg and vice-chairman of the Lynchburg Christian Fellowship. He is a graduate of American University and of Union Theological Seminary in New York. He is co-minister of the new Church of the Covenant (Congregational Christian) in Lynchburg, Virginia.

stimulating discussion following this film. Questions such as these arose: Was the politician conscious of his changing attitude? Were his early motives really sincere? Can a Christian pursue a political life without compromise? Was there a clear cut Christian position for him to take at the meeting with the miners? Such complex questions did not prompt ready-made answers, but stimulated our thinking and led to valuable reflections by the group. Here was a concrete attempt to bridge the gap between the sacred and the secular, and encourage the individual to relate his faith to the so-called secular situations of life. Other films included: Long Voyage Home, by Eugene O'Neill; Crime and Punishment, by Dostoyevsky; Les Misera- bles, by Victor Hugo; and Inter-Racial Unity, three excellent short presentations.

Plans for developing a Christian Youth Center are now underway. Such a center will provide a week-day program adaptable to the seasonal demands of children and young people. This idea took concrete expression when the basement of a home was converted to a recreation center, and in a short time many neighborhood boys and girls enthusiastically employed these facilities. This response led immediately to the grading and preparation of an athletic field on a four acre tract of land which was given for this purpose. Additional land purchases soon increased the area of the Youth Center to approximately twenty-five acres; and plans were made for additional facilities which would provide for other recreational, educational, and worship opportunities. Future plans include provisions for numerous sports, camping and retreat sights, a community house, a small lake, and an amphitheater.

Youth Center Plans.

In July we began a week-day program in supervised handcraft, leathercraft, and recreation with a minimum of facilities and equipment. Children enrolled for one month periods, and these activities were led by a recent high school graduate serving as senior counselor. Classes began with devotions, followed by a period of instruction in the several craft projects. Then class members, together with other children in the community, took part in ball games, varied athletics, and other events including short hikes and overnight camps. The number of boys and girls who participated in the classes was about thirty, but individual classes consisted of five to fifteen. In addition to the regular daily schedules, different churches and community groups used the land and facilities of the Youth Center for picnics and outings.

Volunteer groups composed of youth and adults worked together on several projects to improve the Youth Center property. Some groups stained picnic tables and benches, others cleared undergrowth and timber. With the aid of a jeep, small bulldozer, and other equipment, we partially constructed a one lane road-way, and re-worked, fertilized and seeded the athletic field.

A future program of the fellowship will provide a constructive day camp (Continued on page 9.)

The Lost Art of Winning Souls

A Sermon

By AARON N. MECKEL, D.D.
St. Petersburg, Florida.

John 12: 32.

I want to begin this message by recalling an incident out of the life of a great soul-winner of this generation, Dr. Merton S. Rice of Detroit. It seems that during one of his first pastorates he made the companionship of a man with whom he often went on fishing trips. On many a subject the minister and parishioner held discussion. One subject alone never came up—that of the Christian life, the need of surrender to Christ, and loyalty to the Christian church.

In time the young preacher was succeeded by another who promptly pressed home upon this man the claims of Christ. But when confronted with the imperial demands of the Gospel, he made reply that they couldn't be so important after all. "Why," said he, "if they had been important, Mr. Rice would have mentioned them; during all the years I knew him he never once brought up the subject." It was a chagrined pastor who went back to his former pastorate and friend, to make amends for a tragic oversight. Said the great soul-winner of later years, "We must make our friendships Christian!"

A chief of police in an Indiana city, looking at the wrecks that were brought to his attention, was overheard to say, "The saving of souls is rapidly becoming a lost art in our generation."

Let that accusation sink deeply into our minds! A lost art, is it? When did you for instance last speak to another soul about Christ, or win a recruit for the Christian ranks? Or, how about our churches? The outstanding liberal preacher of our generation, not long before his retirement from the active ministry, stated in a sermon that, were someone to become soundly converted in our average run of church, we would be embarrassed, and not know what to do with him!

In the twelfth chapter of his Gospel, John tells how some of the Greeks came to the disciples saying, "Sirs, we would see Jesus." The coming of the disciples of Plato and Aristotle and Socrates to him, for the gift of life, stirs the great soul of Jesus to the depths. In a vision he sees the death he must die that all may live, and the resurrection from the dead he will undergo that men might live after the power of an endless life. The Great Imperative is flung out to all generations to come, from the lips of the supreme Soul Winner of the ages: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me!" In other words, move the magnet towards the filings, and it will draw them.

Now, place the statement of the police chief and the words of Christ, side by side. "And I if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." Not—"If ideas about me are lifted up—but—"If I—the living Son of God, sent for the redemption of the race—be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." And then the other statement: "The saving of souls is rapidly becoming a lost art in this generation."

Let us be agreed, then, on this: That if this most needful of all arts has been lost, it is high time that we regain it. We can at least begin there.

We want to present two rather obvious propositions and draw some inferences from them.

I.

The first is this: The church grew and became great because believers witnessed to their Lord. These first Christians beheld in their Master a mighty magnet, and so they lifted him up in word and deed that he might draw men unto him.

As you read again the original documents of our faith, you are convinced that the overall object of the first disciples was not to build a pretentious church. It was not to pad membership rolls. Their consuming ambition was to share a life they had found in Christ. It was to bear glad witness to one who had redeemed them from the dregs of sin and unbelief. Thus did the church grow!

And how amazingly simple the method of Jesus! He took twelve men the like of ourselves, lived his way into their lives, filled them to overflowing with his redemptive love and concern for others, and then sent them out to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," saying "Ye are my witnesses." They, in turn passed the torch of witness on to others until a great fire was kindled. We read in Acts that those first twelve disciples went everywhere proclaiming "Jesus and the Resurrection," and that the "Lord added daily to the church such as were saved." Indeed, so the church grew!

How is it then, that the winning of souls has become a lost art? That what John Henry Jowett called "a passion for souls" lost its hold on us?

Is it that we have professionalized our Christian witness to the extent that we forget that Christianity first burst upon the world as a lay apostolate? Can we no longer say with William Carey, "My business is to be a Christian, I cobble shoes for a living?" Has the zeal to win souls to Christ abated in the pulpits of the land? Or perhaps, have we in the modern church become so obsessed with peripheral and incidental matters,—social reform in the large, the raising of large budgets, the forming of committees for political reform, the whirl of social organizations—that we have lost sight of our primary task of witness? Brethren, has the church ceased to be a revolutionary movement of the Spirit and dwindled into a mass of revolving machinery?

I wonder about that when I see certain religious sects capitalizing on our lukewarmness. Just take a look at the Jehovah's Witnesses on the streets of our cities, offering their many pamphlets to the passer by, and with a smile? There comes to mind the Mormon elevator boy in St. Paul, Minnesota, who tried to convert me to his faith. A pastor friend says that whenever a Mormon family moves into his community you can feel their missionary fervor for five miles in every direction. Yes, let it be said, that when the Congregationalists, the Methodists, the Baptists and the Presbyterians no longer ply their evangelistic witness, then the religious sects take it up.

Take a look also at the urgency with which the world of business carries on its trade. A very gifted salesman makes the public want to buy.

A Christian lay worker was driving in the country when he overheard a radio announcer extolling the merits of a certain product. With what

(Continued on page 13.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Parable of the Virgins

I speak to you this morning about the parable of the Virgins. In the days of his flesh on earth our Lord spoke in parables. The parable of the seed and the sower; the parable of the vine and branches; the parable of the lost coin, and of the prodigal son. On one occasion Jesus said, "Then is the Kingdom of Heaven likened unto ten virgins—five were wise and five were foolish." They all had their lamps trimmed and burning, ready to go out and meet the bridegroom. While the bridegroom tarried, they slumbered and slept. At midnight the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh" was heard. The five wise had their lamps trimmed and burning and their vessels full of oil. The five foolish had their lamps trimmed and burning but no oil. Hastily they entreated the wise to share their oil with them. The wise refused less there should not be enough for all, but said to the foolish, "Go to those who sell and buy oil for yourselves." While they were gone, the bridegroom cometh and the five wise go in with the bridegroom for the feast. When the five foolish returned, they had their lamps trimmed and burning and the oil they had purchased, but alas the door was closed. They begged for admission but the master said, "Depart, for I know you not." They turned away into darkness.

Hear the parable of two students. They were born and reared in the same community. They attended the same public school, they graduated from the same high school; they both had ambitions for a college education. They both went to the same college. They took the same course; they had the same professors. They both looked forward to the happy day when they would graduate from college and receive their diplomas. They had been in college together, attended class together, taken tests and examinations together and now they had gone to the last examination together and as they looked at the list of questions, the one rejoiced, he was happy. The questions were familiar; he knew the answers. He wrote the answers hastily, put his paper on the desk and left the room.

The other looked at the list; he looked down the whole list. He knew the answers to three questions. There were others that looked a bit familiar but the majority of the questions on the paper were unfamiliar to him. He became confused, disturbed. He couldn't write down what he knew. He made an effort but when the professor saw his paper, he had failed. What was the trouble? He had no oil.

He had no oil of appreciation. The one student appreciated the fact that he had been given the opportunity and the privilege of attending college. He knew that there were literally thousands of young people of college age all over the world who would give anything for the opportunity and privilege that had been his; that there are hundreds and thousands of young people in this country who would have liked to have been in college these four years, but they had been drafted and were in the armed services of his country. He realized that there were scores and hundreds who for the lack of money for expenses could not go to college. They would give anything if they could have had the opportunity that was his. His appreciation was so keen that he refused to waste his time. The other lacked the oil of appreciation. He was in college. Why not! The world owed him certain opportunities and privileges and he was taking them. Nothing about college life inspired him or gave to him due appreciation of the opportunities and privileges that were his.

He lacked the oil of affection. The greater part of human endeavor is made because of love. A young man pleading for the hand of his lover in marriage as she hesitates vows that he will work his fingers off to see that she has the necessities and comforts of life; that life with him will be a dream and a pleasure. It's his love that drives him both to service and to sacrifice. The love that a mother has for her children will rob her of sleep, of strength, of energy, of time, if only her children may be comfortable and have the necessities of life. It's the love that a son or a daughter has for his or her parents that gives them strength to turn from what is wrong and dedicate themselves to that which is right. When some act grieves the hearts of their parents, they are distressed and when a son or daughter goes astray, it brings great sorrow to the hearts of the parents.

The one lacked the oil of apprehension. The other had the oil of apprehension. He had the ability to concentrate when it was necessary. He could turn away from the things in college that diverted him from his main purpose and take the time that should be given to study and re-

(Continued on page 11.)

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The small church college is facing the test of its existence. Elon College is classified as a small church college. It was founded to meet a critical need within the church. The church members came to realize that its growth and effectiveness were dependent upon an effective leadership; that if the Christian Church in the South were to be blessed with a leadership, the church must do the training. The need was great in the late 80's and early 90's, but the need for trained leaders in our church today is greater than ever before. The members of the church enjoy a higher degree of training than they did fifty or seventy-five years ago. When our church is compelled to look to other denominations and sources of training for our leadership, something is happening with us. Either we as a church are neglecting our duty and denying our people of their rightful opportunities or we have lost contact with God sufficient to be channels through which he extends his call to those who should be his ministers and evangelists. May we search our hearts, count our blessings and acquit ourselves as the followers of Christ and the servants of God.

Previously reported	$ 6,750.83
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Hope Mills	$ 28.00
Morrisville	8.54
Eastern Va. Conference:
Dendron S. S.	$ 3.25
Holland	112.00
Rosemont	128.00
South Norfolk	133.00
Waverly	140.89
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Apple's Chapel	$ 34.00
Elk Spur	4.00
Howard's Chapel S. S. ..	1.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Pleasant Cross	$ 10.04
Pleasant Grove	5.00
Zion	10.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethlehem S. S.	$ 23.00
Timber Ridge	66.00

706.72

Total to date $ 7,457.55

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

"China Reunion"

By Mr. RICHARD L. JACKSON.

"That would stop the crows from flying in and snatching food from the kiddies' hands," Fran Riggs was saying as we discussed life in Kilanjania (kill lahn jew knee—say it rapidly), India. One of the Chapel Hill women had become so enthusiastic after hearing Dr. Ed Riggs tell about their work in the Indian village that she wanted to know immediately, "What can we do to help?" She wondered about giving them plastic screening for their little thatched home. "But installing such a luxury would be very difficult; and we're not sure yet just where we'll be living when we go back," Fran went on.

"Now here's a country woman's sari you might like to show the Southern Convention women." And so Fran gave me another symbol of Indian life. It's been wonderful having them here with us for their short visit to the Southern churches. Ever since saying goodbye that December day in Hong Kong in 1950, we've been looking forward to some kind of reunion. Our six children get along beautifully from eight-month Martha Riggs to six-year Lewis Jackson; and no one even notices the occasional Chinese or Tamil (make is rime with "camel") words that come into our talk.

Martha helps us do dishes by sitting quietly on the drainboard, occasionally dabbling a foot in the dishpan. Susan Jackson loves pushing the baby in her cart when she's not playing with Joy Riggs. David J. and Louis R. enjoy trains together.

A high moment for all came early in their visit when Timothy Chang, his brother and wife and baby were here. Chinese flowed in chatter, song, and prayer; and happy memories were mixed with sad thoughts as we looked at slides together. How deep are the ties that bind in Christian love!

* * * * *

Holy Neck Has Good Report

As we draw near the end of another conference year our thoughts just naturally seem to turn back to the events of the past year. As I think back, it seems to me it has been a good year for us as a group of missionary women. We have reached the goals set before us for the year, but more than that I feel that each one of us has attained a personal goal as we have had fellowship together from time to time, learning about our missionary work, studying our Bibles, and doing the many tasks that needed to be done.

As I think back on some of the highlights of the year, I recall our Thank Offering program, which was presented on the first Sunday in November. It was a nice program, with several of our ladies taking part.

On our regular meeting date in January we had an "all day" meeting with a covered dish luncheon. Mrs. I. W. Johnson was with us and taught our foreign mission study book, Where'er the Sun. We always enjoy having Mrs. Johnson with us and especially enjoy having her teach one of our mission study books.

On the third Sunday night in January we observed Family Night, with a supper served in our Fellowship Hall. All of the families of the church were invited. After supper we enjoyed watching the film "The Hidden Heart."

On March 5 we observed the World Day of Prayer at our church. The members of the other churches in the community were invited to join with us in the service, and some of them had parts in the program.

At our regular meeting in March Mrs. Ryland Darden of the Holland Society came and gave us a most interesting review of our study book, Within These Borders.

In May we entertained the ladies of the Holland Society at a Fellowship Supper. They, in turn, gave us a lovely program. This meeting was well attended by the members of both groups:

We have enjoyed studying the Psalms all during the year. Several of our ladies have led in the study at our regular meetings.

We had a nice representation from our society at the Fall Conference, the Spring Rally, and Women's Fellowship meeting of the Southern Convention at Bethlehem.

Now we are looking forward to a new year. We have our program planned, and we are hoping to accomplish even greater things for Christ and his Kingdom in the year that lies ahead than we have in the past. I feel sure that we will be able to do a fine work under the capable leadership of our new president, Mrs. Jim Wright.

Mrs. ROBERT WARREN,
President.

* * * * *

Christian Temple, Norfolk, Reports

The activities of the Woman's Council of the Christian Temple, under the leadership of Mrs. F. W. Wilson have been many. The interest and enthusiasm shown by each person has been gratifying and encouraging. There is a bond of love, friendship and understanding, one for the other, which permits the women of the Temple working together to accomplish almost anything.

A project which has given the women a great deal of pleasure is sewing for the Conce Clinic. This work was started while Mrs. L. W. Vaughan was president, in cooperation with the Council of Church Women of Norfolk. The women make and sew bandages, also night shirts, for the patients attending the Clinic for treatment. There is a great need for these articles, where often the patients are unable to bear the heavy expenses of their illness. In rendering this service the women not only relieve suffering but enjoy the fellowship of the time spent together. A delightful lunch is prepared in the church kitchen by Mrs. Joe Watson. The money obtained from the sale of the lunch goes to purchase dishes for the recently modernized kitchen.

The Pilgrim Guild, a night circle of the Woman's Council, has done outstanding work under the leadership of Mrs. S. M. Smith, Jr. This group for several years has sponsored the nursery for small children during the morning worship service. A chairman is appointed for the year and different women of the circle take their turn in keeping the nursery. Refreshments are also provided by this group for the children.

This group also for several years sponsored a troupe of Girl Scouts. Also a project not done before, which proved most rewarding, was paying the expenses of a little girl for two weeks to Camp Owaissa.

In giving this brief report I have only listed a few of the accomplishments, which I believe are different from the regular program we all follow. I hope in so doing I might give some other society an idea or suggestion. I hope also that in sending in your report you might list some suggestions for us.

At the September meeting officers are to be installed and plans presented, enthusiasm rekindled for another wonderful year together.

MRS. W. MILLARD STEVENS,
Program Chairman.

* * * * *

Accomplishments of Wakefield Women

The Women's Missionary Society of the Wakefield Congregational Christian Church has had a very successful year. Though small in number, we have accomplished much.

Each member has received a special blessing in working together for the advancement of God's Kingdom.

We observed World Day of Prayer, World Community Day, and May Fellowship Day in cooperation with the other denominations. A Thank Offering program was observed in our church, which was very effective.

Each of our members contributed a gift to the Friendly Service for Puerto Rico. Baskets of fruit were taken to our shut-ins at Christmas and they are remembered with cards.

The highlight of the year was our May Fellowship celebration with a program and social hour following.

We pray that God will be with us in the coming year, and that each member will strive to make our society more successful.

MRS. ALF VICE, JR.,
Treasurer.

* * * * *

From Elm Avenue, Portsmouth

Truly we have been "Rejoicing in Our Task" this year. Although great things have not been accomplished, we are thankful for the things we've been privileged to do.

We had representatives at the spring and fall rally and conference. We cooperated with the city-wide World Day of Prayer, held in the First Presbyterian Church, and in World Community Day and May Fellowship Day.

We accepted an invitation from the First Congregational Christian Church to hear the mission study book review, Where'er the Sun given by Miss Cross, which was thoroughly enjoyed. We had representatives at the Rosemont Church to hear Miss Ione Catton. We used the Thank Offering program in the packet, and showed two films, "The Hidden Heart" and "Second Chance."

We sent clothing to Colony Virginia home for the feeble-minded. Our society has been sending coupons to the orphanage, also helping with two children during the year with small gifts.

Last month we enjoyed a watermelon feast on the church grounds. One of the highlights of our work was the Family Night Fellowship held at Dale Homes Community House. Everyone brought their supper and it was spread out in picnic style. There was entertainment and games for all. We closed with a devotional program, and everyone enjoyed the evening together.

In January we organized a Cradle Roll. We now have seven on the roll. Our society was responsible for the missionary program conducted on the fifth Sunday in August. We used members from the Sunday school classes from the Beginners to the Men's Bible Class.

We are grateful for the promise from God: "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

MRS. CLYDE O. KOON.

* * * * *

Successful Year at First Church of Portsmouth

The Woman's Fellowship of the First Congregational Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, has had a very successful year under the leadership of our president, Mrs. L. V. Gerbie. Our year books were made by the program committee and have proven very helpful.

In October the Woman's Fellowship served a buffet lunch at church honoring all new members. This was well attended and everyone enjoyed it so much that we have to have another this year.

We observed World Community Day, World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day with other churches of the city, sponsored by the United Council of Churches.

We gave one Life Membership, and two Memorial plaques in memory of Rev. W. Stanley Carne and Dr. Robert Lee House. A special dedication service was held in May.

A film, "The Hidden Heart," was shown in our church at the November meeting. The Thank Offering program was held on the first Sunday night in November in the church and was most impressive.

Our Friendly Service chairman, Mrs. B. L. Sawyer, presented the program for December, "Christmas in Puerto Rico." Money was raised to send a goat to Puerto Rico, and three dozen jars of powdered milk and seventy-five bars of soap to Ryder Memorial Hospital. Six other packages were sent to Humacao, Puerto Rico, as recommended by the Council of Church women. We also served sandwiches and cookies to the service men at the U. S. O.

We gave our pastor's wife a surprise shower in May and she received many lovely gifts. A gift of $50.00 was sent to a lady in the hospital.

Miss Marjorie Lou Cross reviewed our foreign mission study book, Where'er the Sun, and Mrs. Herbert J. Martin reviewed the home mission book Within These Borders.

In June the Fellowship entertained at dinner the young people, who graduated from high school and college.

Mrs. Albert Morrison had a vesper service at the city park in August, with special music by Miss Imogene Kitts and Mr. M. K. Moss.

We thank God for a good year and hope to do even more next year.

MRS. F. Q. RICHARDSON,
Acting Secretary.

THE L. C. F.—A NEW MEDIUM.

(Continued from page 5.)

experience for many who are financially or otherwise unable to attend commercial resident camps. The vital core of such a camp will be a challenging program of Christian education and instruction with their practical application in every phase of the total camp life. This program would begin at the very point when vacation Bible school ends.

The Youth Center will not be restricted to summer use, but will be available for week-day and week-end activities the year round. In this we anticipate a growing opportunity for ecumenical cooperation, with tremendous potential for building Christian character in youth, and developing Christian manpower for the future.

The L. C. F. and its outreach is possible because of a small, disciplined group, who pray, who give, and who are diligently appropriating resources from the well-springs of God, that others may share this faith in Jesus Christ.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

It wasn't surprising to see an article in our sister paper, Arvance, about the special station wagon of Miss Lelia Anderson, but we did get a jolt when our Sunday morning daily paper carried a long write-up about her, a pleasant jolt to be sure.

Miss Anderson is known to some of your mothers for she has visited in the convention and spoken to the women, been to Elon and traveled about, and spent a considerable amount of time at Franklinton and Bricks. She is an ordained minister. You may be proud of belonging to one of the few major church groups that allows women the privilege of preaching. We are ardent campaigners for them and predict that in 25 years they will serve in our own churches. Her station wagon has the name "Pilgrim Circuit Rider" on its side and she goes from church to church that is small and without a minister. She goes to some with clerical help too, but really she aims to "pump new life in rural churches." She has visited 14 states and traveled nearly 30,000 miles.

The station wagon is very special. It is equipped so she can sleep, eat and wash in it. There is room to store books and materials. Special equipment includes flower box, cross and candles, and many things to make worship fine. There are crayons, books, movie equipment and the typewriter.

She is blonde, small and has a very friendly smile. The last time she was in North Carolina Miss Anderson was limping because of an injury received when a young lady made a U-turn right into her ear. We hope nothing turns over or into the Circuit Rider station wagon.

Circuit riders of yester-years were men. They rode horses and did many things while in the saddle: wrote letters, made-up sermons, thought out plans, wrote hymns and composed poems. Their spacious saddle bags carried many of the things they needed. What a change from the past—horses, and now, station wagons. Can you close your eyes and forsee a gaily-colored helicopter spinning over the flatlands of our Mid-West? That's probably next on the program,

Learning to be a Good Citizen

By MABLE-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Carol came running into the house, breathless with haste and obviously almost bursting with something she had to impart.

"Mummy," she announced importantly, holding out several slips of cardboard, "our school is going to have an entertainment and here are four tickets. Will you buy them, Mummy?" Then, seeing her father, who had happened to return home earlier than usual, "Will you buy them, Daddy?"

Her father smiled at her. "Not so fast, young lady," he said. "What kind of an entertainment? What is it for?"

"Oh, there's a little play and singing and all kinds of things. We want to make some money to give to the people who help the children who get ill with polio. You know."

"Yes, I know," said her father, looking at the tickets, and her mother added, "We've already given—"

"Carol," interrupted her father quickly, "will you please run out to the yard and see if the paper boy has left the paper? Only don't run—walk. I'll be thinking about this."

When his daughter disappeared, Mr. Davis turned to his wife. "Nan, we can't let her down," he said.

"No, I don't think we can," she answered slowly. "It was just that I was thinking we'd already given quite a bit to the polio fund."

"But this would be Carol's gift, in a way. We want her to feel a civic sense of duty for herself. Even if we told her that we, as a family, had given our share, it wouldn't have the same effect."

"You're right, John," said his wife thoughtfully. "We would be letting her down. We mustn't dampen her enthusiasm in a good cause. I'm glad you pointed it out."

"Here's the paper, Daddy," called Carol, shutting the front door. "Will you buy the tickets, Daddy, will you?"

"Of course, we will honey," her father assured her. "Are you going to take part in the entertainment?"

"Oh, yes," she replied, her blue eyes sparkling. "I'm going to be one of the ushers."

Well, that was all to the good, too, her father thought, repressing a smile. Perhaps being an usher would impress upon her that it wasn't only the performers, the stars, who were important. They wouldn't get far by themselves. The supporters, the tickets sellers, the ushers, she would realize, all had their part in making the success of any entertainment in connection with any drive. The organizers, the chairmen, the leaders got their names in the paper, but the unpublicized workers under them were just as necessary.

Mr. Davis wanted his children to grow up feeling a sense of responsibility toward the community, its life and its problems. From the community, the circle would widen to include the state, the country, the world. If feelings of kinship and good will and concern for others could be engrafted on the minds of all the children of all the countries, there would be no more wars. There would, instead, be friendship, respect, and neighborliness.

HOTCHKISS IS DIRECTOR.

(Continued from page 2.)

our industrialized civilization to undervalue the rural root from which we sprang. Two-thirds of our churches are classified as rural.

"A third job of the department is in-service training and assistance to theological seminaries in training men for the rural ministry."

Dr. Hotchkiss joined the staff of the Board of Home Missions in 1950 after receiving the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Chicago. From 1945 to 1947 Dr. Hotchkiss served as Army Chaplain on troop transport ships in both the Atlantic and Pacific theatres.

Dr. Hotchkiss was born in Spooner, Wisconsin, and spent his boyhood and youth on a Wisconsin farm, attending a one-room school. He graduated from Northland College, Ashland, Wisconsin, and from the Chicago Theological Seminary.

In his new position Dr. Hotchkiss succeeds Dr. Thomas Alfred Tripp, nationally known rural sociologist and churchman, who directed the department until his death in June, 1954.

Dr. Hotchkiss is married to the former Mary Ellen Fink of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. They have one daughter. The Hotchkiss' reside in Huntington, Long Island.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Youth Retreat at Rosemont

The Rosemont Christian Church Young People held their second Youth Retreat at Sylvan Beach, September 18, 19. The general theme for the worship service was "Worshipping God Through Nature."

The Rev. George Alley, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, spoke to the young people on "The problems of 'The City' and the Christian Young Person's Relationship to Them." He gave a very inspiring message in which he told us that the city has all of the same problems that we have in a small community but on a larger scale. In his talk he said that young people often get lost in the large city without the personal touch of the small community and many times do things they would not otherwise do if they had friends and associates who really cared for them. In the city people go about their own business, leaving juveniles to stray into bad company and thus commit crimes.

The evening program was given over to thinking about Pilgrim Fellowship and how we are a part of it. On Sunday morning the young people thought over their problems and what they would like to do for the next year. Some of the projects suggested are: Mission study, sending a Japanese student to college for one year, and observing Youth Week. In Youth Week they will help with the program of the church by being minister, director of Religious Education, deacons, etc., in order to find out more about what the church officers do and share in the work of the church. The business session included the election of officers and the Rev. Melvin Dollar, pastor of the church, installed the officers with a very inspiring challenge to them to take their responsibilities seriously and work out a program in which all the young people of the church would have a part.

About twenty young people and their counselors were present for this Retreat and we feel that it is a very worthwhile project for other groups to have each year before they begin their fall program.

RUTH H. DUNN,
Director of Religious Education.

Valley Conference Youth Meet

A small group of Valley Conference young people and leaders gathered at the Elizabeth Furnace picnic group on Sunday, August 29, for meditation and planning. After a "quiet time" and short general discussion plans were made for the next youth rally which is the annual Youth Conference for the Valley.

That meeting will be at the Newport Church on Sunday, afternoon, October 10. The initial worship will be led by the Newport young people followed by the address of the rally. We are hoping to have Howard Schomer our "Minister of Fellowship" to Europe as the speaker. Following this there will be four discussion groups on four problems of youth groups, such as: "How to Conduct a Meeting," "Planning Programs," "Youth Advisors," and "Projects for Youth Groups."

Supper will be followed by a business meeting where next year's officers will be elected. The closing worship service will be led by the Antioch group (which, by the way, had four of the eleven people present at the planning meeting) aided by special music from other groups.

Sincerely,

HANK HARMAN.

* * * * *

Tips from Tom

By a most unexplainable circumstance, the article appearing on this page from the Rev. Hank Harman of the Valley Conference was received but not recognized until recently. It seems that the letter was overlooked and not found and opened until this week. Our deepest regrets and apologies go to Rev. Harman and the Valley Young People for this. We hope that the writeup will still have its effect, with special emphasis placed upon the October 10th rally.

* * *

Conference presidents and secretaries, we haven't received your news of your rally this month yet. If you want proper publicity, please write today.

* * *

Youth Work Day for Christ is October 23. We hope all local groups will take active part in this program. Watch this page and write the Convention Office for material. Plan ahead, be active, do a good days work for Christ.

* * *

October--Month of Sunday Rallies.

1st Sunday—

2nd Sunday—Valley Conference—Newport Church.

3rd Sunday—

4th Sunday—

5th Sunday—W. N. C. Conference—Asheboro Church.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 7.)

search He could say no to his friends when they invited him to go out to the hamburger and beer joints. He could turn down an invitation to go to movies when he should be preparing his lessons. He could sit in class or read a book and be able to select what the author meant to teach in the writing of that book. He could sit in class, listen to a lecture and put down the nuggets of truth that his instructor was striving to impart. The other lacked the power of concentration. He was unable to seize the truth contained in a book on in a lecture. He listened but did not hear. His mind was somewhere else. He lacked the oil of apprehension and the power of concentration.

Two little boys were pulling their dilapidated wagons along a stony path that was hemmed in by briars and thorns. Their wagons were loaded with bits of wood and coal that they had picked up along the railroad track. The one in front was Puling his wagon briskly with his head thrown back. He was whistling—at times singing a song. The other was coming along behind, grumbling and complaining. The path was full of stones and the thorns were rough and cruel. The one in front said to the one behind, "Of course there are stones in the pathway. There always has been and of course the briars and thorns that hang over the pathway have always been there. We have obstacles a plenty but we must overcome them. It doesn't do any good to yell and tell everybody about them. Just shut your face and push on." Of course there are unpleasant things in college life; things we prefer not to endure. There are plenty of obstacles in the course of education. There always have been and there always will be. It doesn't do any good to yell and complain about it. We need to take the advice of the little boy in front—"Shut your face and push on."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"The Way of Wisdom"

LESSON III—OCTOBER 17, 1954

MEMORY SELECTION: "Trust in the Lord with all thy heart; and lean not upon thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy paths."—Proverbs 3:5-6.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Prov. 3, 4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 4: 10-20.

We sometimes hear the expression, "Buddy, you spoke a proverb that time!" It means that the person, in a few words, has spoken a lot of wisdom or common sense. For that is what a proverb is—"a sentence briefly expressing some practical wisdom." A proverb is a kind of distilled wisdom, common sense boiled down. Proverbs represent wisdom distilled out of long experience, either of an individual or of a race.

We consider in today's lesson some proverbs taken from the Bible. They belong to what is known as the "Wisdom Literature" of the Bible. They are poetic in form. Many of them were written by Solomon. But some others were written by other men. All of them are concerned with ethical conduct. Out of the accumulated wisdom of the ages they represent the contrast between the good and the evil, and enjoin the readers to choose the good. They emphasize, not "book learning," but common sense and wisdom.

A Commandment with Promise.

"But let thy heart keep my commandments, for length of days and years of life, and peace, will they add to thee." So counsels the wise man or the teacher or the parent. It simply echoes the Fifth Commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." There are exceptions, of course. But young people who obey their parents in that which is right, have not only length of days, but a finer quality of life. Young people overlook the fact that parents and teachers have lived longer than they, and have learned much from experience. They want to make their own laws, and they are often hurt by their refusal to benefit by the experience of those who have lived before them. They seem determined to learn the hard way, by breaking the law and then being punished thereby.

Inner Integrity and Kindness

"Let not kindness and truth forsake thee; bind them about thy neck; write them upon the tablet of thy heart; so shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man." Truth and kindness, what a beautiful combination. Let a man be honest, genuine, sincere. Let him determine to live by the law of truth within his heart. And then let him express the spirit of kindness in his relations with his fellowmen. Character and conduct all of one piece. Faithfulness and kindness are greatly to be desired. Think what a difference it would make in the world if we were governed by the law of kindness! The application of the spirit of kindness to the relations between persons in life would solve most of our vital and vicious problems. Why not begin today to live by this law of kindness!

A Wisdom Above and Beyond Our Own.

"Trust in Jehovah with all thy heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding." God gave us minds and he expects us to develop them and to make use of them. There is a wisdom that is desirable and essential to good living. But no man is wise enough to solve his own problems. There is a wisdom that comes from above. And that wisdom is to be had for the asking. The brother of our Lord wrote that if any man lacked wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth liberally, and it would be given him. But he was to ask in faith, nothing doubting. As with persons, there is no use asking for advice if one is not going to take good advice.

Guidance.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy paths." Here again, it does not mean that a good man will never make mistakes. But like Abraham's servant, who went to seek a wife for his master's son, Isaac, and who said, "I being in the way, the Lord led me," the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.

And the man who tries in all his ways to acknowledge God can look back over his life and say that God has led him and guided him. Better to walk in the darkness with God than to walk alone in the light.

The Company a Man Keeps.

"Enter not into the path of the wicked, and walk not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it; turn from it, and pass on." A man is not only known by the company he keeps, he is made in large measure by it. And out of the experience and the wisdom gained by that experience, the wise man warns the young men of his day about the kind of company he keeps. A visitor in a penitentiary asked many of the men why they were there, and in the majority of cases, the reply was, "I got in with the wrong crowd." A young man or a young woman will do well to have as friends and companions those who call out the best in them. There is a way that seemeth good unto people, older people as well as young people; but the end thereof is destruction. Evil companions corrupt good manners. It is hard enough to lead a good life. A fellow needs all the help he can get. And good companionship and wholesome friends are a great help.

The Way of the Righteous and the Way of the Wicked.

"But the path of the righteous is as a dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect way, The way of the wicked is as darkness; they know not at what they stumble." The man who walks in the light will have more light. But the man who walks in the darkness, who is not true to the light which he has, will lose what light he has. There is a striking story in Tarbell's Guide in connection with this lesson. A beloved professor of Ohio Wesleyan tells about it as follows: Some girls, when they came to college, were very pretty, but when they came back to visit the campus thirty years later, their beauty had faded. The moonlight and -roses loveliness of their youth did not last. On the other hand, other girls, when they came to college, were very plain. But when they returned thirty years later, they were beautiful women. What made the difference? The latter had the beauty of a spiritual life written on their faces. And then he adds, "God runs a beauty parlor."

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

THE LOST ART OF WINNING SOULS.

(Continued from page 6.)

urgency and attractiveness the appeal was made! "Your children will not be healthy, nor your home happy, without this article," so it was claimed. My friend said that when his own interest was gradually fanned to high flame, he listened carefully for the name of this product. Just then the announcer blurted it out: "Supersuds!" My friend concluded: "Why is it that the average one of us is more enthused about 'selling' automobiles, radios, articles of all kinds, than he is to communicate his religion unto me?"

Even as the early Christians were driven abroad by persecution, they witnessed to the pagan world of the Lord of life. Persecuted, but witnessing! When the church was great, the winning of souls to the Master was a consummate art!

II.

The second of our propositions seems equally clear: The church will become a stirring moral force in our modern society, again when as individual Christians we retrieve this lost art of winning souls. We must move the magnet in the direction of the filings! "And I, if I be lifted up—will draw all men unto me!"

A live Christian layman was telling how, in the company of another, he visited two churches in a large American city. The first was disappointingly cold and formal in spirit. There was a noticeable lack of contact of God with man, and man with man in that service. "We were glad to get out of there," so he said. On Sunday evening the same two men worshipped in the second church. The atmosphere in that church was warm with Christian love and friendship. Not noise, but spiritual intensity and awareness. The sermon was tucked close around the needs of the people in the congregation. "We wanted to go," said one of these laymen, "and tell the minister that, if ever we moved to that city, we would want to serve in his church." Now, what marked the difference in those two churches? I think the answer could be put thus: In the later, there was a genuine interest in persons as persons. They were not just automatons, so many bodies occupying pews.

I cannot but think of the tremendous spiritual potential there is locked up within an assemblage such as this! If everyone here would take this message sincerely to heart, what a Pentecost there would be! If someone should ask, therefore; What are the necessary qualifications for an effective winner of souls?—here now, are a few:

(1) First of all, you must have a story of your own to tell. Above all else, men must see evidence of the working power of God in your life. Go out and talk about yourself and you become an insufferable bore. Go and tell another what Jesus Christ has meant to you, and you become an irresistible magnet. Yes, have a story to tell, and then tell it in your own idiom.

Tell me the Story simply,
As to a little child;
For I am weak and weary,
And helpless and defiled.

My friend, speak up for your Master! Help to break the false conspiracy of silence that hangs like a fog over the modern church. The Communist and secularist are shrilling out their wares. And should the Christian be silent?

(2) Again, be assured that in the winning of souls to your Master, love counts for much more than argument. Human souls are loved, rather than argued, into the Kingdom of God. Oh, how we need the imaginative insight of the Boy Scout who was administering artificial respiration to a poor drunk who had been fished out of the ocean. "Son, it's not worth your trouble, I'm not deserving of your help," said the human derelict. But the little fellow replied, "But I'm not thinking of the man you are. I'm thinking of the man you're going to be." In the loving words of Fannie Crosby:

Down in the human heart,
Crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried
That grace can restore.
Touched by a loving heart,
Quickened by kindness,
Chords that are broken
Will vibrate once more.

There comes to mind the Prayer List that my pastor-father used to keep close at hand. He would enter the names of any who might be sick, or discouraged, or bereaved, upon that list. And on his knees—often at family prayers—he would mention before God the names on that list. Friends, it is time that we are putting our Prayer Lists to work again! I believe with all my heart in the great enterprise of foreign missions—the saving of souls at a distance. But what of the heathen and the pagan, right here at home, in our American communities? Who will be concerned enough to go after them? According to census figures, there are at least 8,400 families unaffiliated with any church here in our community, alone.

There is a saying of the Master Soul-Winner that needs to be brought into focus again in our church circles: "They that are well do not need a physician. The Son of Man is come to seek and to save the lost."

(3) Finally let me realize that the winning of souls to Christ is my task, and that the way to learn is just to begin. Dwight L. Moody said as much to a hesitant Christian worker, when he said, "You ask the 'how' of soul-winning? Start right where you are. The main thing is to begin."

A parishioner once brought a list of names to his pastor, saying, "I think that if you will call on these people they could be won into the church membership." The wise pastor replied, "I have a suggestion; why don't you undertake to win these families, yourself?" After some hesitation, this man summoned up courage to make the first call, where he met with a heartening welcome, and with favorable results. Not only so, but an entire neighborhood was spiritually rejuvenated, and a whole company of new recruits were won for the army of Christ. "It's the one greatest thrill I have ever experienced," said this man later.

"But," someone says, "I haven't youth, and health and strength. I must leave it to others to win souls to the Redeemer." My friend, are you saying that there is nothing you can do? Let me relate this instance out of the life and ministry of the renowned British preacher, Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

Noting a famous skeptic in his congregation one Sunday, he met him afterwards and suggested that if he would attend services for four consecutive Sundays he would present the main arguments for the Christian Faith. Then, if at the end of that time he desired to unite with the church, he would be glad to welcome him.

Dr. Maclaren was overjoyed to note the eager manner in which the skeptic listened to his presentations, and delighted, when on the fourth Sunday, he presented himself for admission into the church. The preacher even enquired as to which of the four sermons had been most

(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I look on the Christian Orphanage (Congregational Christian) as being an opportunity for service to little children. Every normal child needs love and understanding. Or maybe I could better put it this way: for a child to be normal it must have love and understanding. To be a little child with all the innocence, promise and sweetness which little children have and be not wanted is bad. One of the most tragic things in childhood is to crave love and not get it.

Sometimes I wonder that children who know so much now days, and see so much—children, I mean, who have been left mercilessly alone—I wonder that they are as responsive and docile as they are. They fight a bitter battle of which you and I know little. Sometimes I am floored with their questions. In their keen little minds and broken hearts they build for themselves the sort of "off-yonder" daddy they would like to have. Their "imaginative" mothers are so loving and kind and true.

Some children here have real living fathers who are poor and helpless with several little children left on their hands by the death of their mother. To make a living they must have the help of somebody with their children. Those fathers help with the financing of their children. The help is proportionately small and quite insufficient but they do something. They sometimes visit their children. But those children who know their parents are living but have left them unwanted, unhelped and unheeded—there is the battle within of which I speak.

I look on that child with compassion and love as well as the boy who knows his widowed mother loves him and tries to do for him. Every child needs love and understanding. But the boy who speaks bravely of the dad he has "manufactured" for himself in his little broken heart is capable of going eventually in either one of two directions—up or down.

To me, with what little experience I have had, the orphanage is an opportunity to do an outstanding piece of charitable work.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton J. Averette put it this way: "Inclosed you will find a check for a small amount that we hope will in some small way make one of your children happier. Having only one of our own we realize how very much it takes to care for each. We hear from you regularly through THE CHRISTIAN SUN and follow you with much interest. With kindest regards for you and yours."

Notice: "having . . . one of our own." That "our own" means love and care and understanding; means training and teaching, and the trusting of God for his loving help. Their child is surrounded by something money will not buy. They sent money and rightly. But their child is fortunate in having that which is above money and beyond price.

It is something to have a child-caring home where such love and understanding, such guidance and training, can be approximated when there is no one else to whom the homeless little child may turn.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 30, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Toilet articles and candy:
The Friendship Club, Burlington, N. C.
Coupons:
Women's Fellowship, United Church, Chapel Hill, N. C.
Clothing:
Geraldine McCauley, Weaverly, Va.
George Burwell.
Floyd Holdsworth.
Spring Hill Women's Auxiliary.
Mrs. Roy Clayton, Efland, N. C.
Mrs. C. R. Stanfield, Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. Joy Bell Dixon, Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. Ervin Small, Burlington, N. C.
Clothing and glasses:
Waverly Christian Church.
Socks:
Barrett Circle, Bethlehem Christian Church.
Glasses:
Mr. Robert Howell, Bethlehem Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$ 9,431.35
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Ebenezer	$ 42.17
Liberty (Vance)	25.10
Mt. Auburn S. S.	9.75
Wake Chapel	60.24
	137.26
Eastern Va. Conference:
Eure, Special	$ 10.00
Norfolk, First	18.30
Oakland S. S.	15.00
	43.30
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Durham S. S.	$ 30.97
Haw River, Special	100.00
Haw River	92.00
Long's Chapel	1.47
Reidsville S. S.	57.00
Shallow Ford, Special	25.00
	306.44
Western N. C. Conference:
Zion	$ 30.00
	30.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Newport	$ 30.41
Winchester S. S.	8.26
	38.67
Total	$ 555.67
Grand total	$ 9,987.02

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$23,865.68
Philathea Class, Suffolk
Christian Church	$ 10.00
Friendship Bible Class,
Cong. Christian Temple	25.00
H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. . .	15.00
Mrs. Carro Jones, New
Hill, N. C.	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. Milton J.
Averette, Henderson, N.
C.	20.00
United Cong. Christian S.
S., Columbus Ga.	5.30
New Hope Christian Ch.,
Roanoke, Ala.	3.17
First Cong. Christian S.
S. Roanoke, Ala.	29.49
In Memory of Walter R.
Sellers	10.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

In Memoriam

HARGROVE.

The ways of God shall forever be unfathomable by the minds of men. Therefore, we must have the faith to believe that "God does all things well," and that, whatever may be enjoined upon us to bear he has an eternal purpose behind it. It is difficult, to be sure, for us to understand why his devoted followers must lay down their task at the height of their service, but such has been true throughout the ages and will so remain until the time when all things shall be "revealed as they are." Perhaps, the Psalmist summed up the dictum for our living in the words, "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

God in his wise providence has seen fit to remove from the service of his Kingdom and our Eastern Virginia Woman's Fellowship, the superintendent of the Norfolk District. On August 15, 1954, Mrs. Elizabeth Hargrove laid down her earthly labors to receive the reward awaiting the faithful.

Mrs. Hargrove was a church leader with vision, patience and understanding. As a teacher she was a student of the Bible with a keen perception and persuasive manner. As a Christian woman she possessed those qualities that have characterized the best of womanhood throughout the centuries.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That her diligence in labor, the constancy of her faith, and her devotion to the cause of Christ be recognized as worthy of our emulation.

2. That a copy of this memoriam be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, a copy to her husband, Mr. C. V. Hargrove, and that a copy be attached to the minutes of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference Executive Board Meeting of September 2, 1954.

Mrs. J. EVERETTE NEESE,
Mrs. W. R. SKELLEY, JR.,
Mrs. E. G. MIDDLETON.

EURE.

Eure's Congregational Christian Church suffered a great loss on June 12, 1954, as Mrs. Mae Green Eure passed away. She died suddenly although she has been in failing health for several years.

Mrs. Eure was 64 years old, had been a member of Eure's Christian Church about 50 years. She was a Charter member of the Woman's Missionary Society.

She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother of ten children, five boys, five girls and a number of grandchildren.

Her life was simple and sincere, she was of the quiet, modest type. She loved her home, friends, neighbors and her church. She was a true friend and a consistent Christian. She will be greatly missed in her home, church and community.

We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship and loyalty to the church.

Funeral services were conducted at Eure's Christian Church on Thursday, August 17. Many friends and relatives were present, and tokens of love and appreciation were shown by the beautiful flowers brought to the rites. The church and community will always remember the loyalty and true faith of this dear loved one.

We extend our deepest sympathy to her family and commend them to the Heavenly Father, eternal in the heavens.

Mrs. WILLIAM ALEXANDER,
Mrs. CLEETISE BRISCOE,
Mrs. LUTHER EURE.

FELTON.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of Eure's Congregational Christian Church, record the passing of Mills Armistead Felton on the 19th day of June, 1954.

Only 15 years of age, his life was short and sweet. Born with an incurable disease, he lived a life that was cheerful, courageous, patient and an inspiration to all those who came in contact with him.

Armistead was a good boy. He was quiet, sincere, honest and smart. He lived a life worthwhile for others to follow although he suffered all the years he lived.

He accepted Christ and became a member of Eure's Christian Church in 1949, when he was 11 years old. He loved to attend church and sing hymns of praise.

He will be greatly missed in his home, church, school, and the community. His life will always be remembered as blessed and eternal in the Heavens. We say, "His Life Well Done."

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mills N. Felton, four sisters, one grandmother and one grandfather.

We extend our deepest sympathy to his loved ones and we commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and comfort.

Mrs. WILLIAM ALEXANDER
Mrs. CLEETISE BRISCOE,
Mrs. LUTHER EURE.

THE LOST ART OF WINNING SOULS.

(Continued from page 13.)

instrumental in bringing him to his decision. Imagine his amazement in receiving the reply, "Your sermons, Sir, were helpful, but they were not finally persuasive in my decision." Then he told this story: He was leaving the church on a snowy Sunday, when he noticed an elderly saint with a beaming face, having difficulty on the icy walks. He offered his arms in help. As they walked along together, she looked up into his troubled countenance, and exclaimed, "I wonder if you know my Savior, Jesus Christ? He is everything in the world to me." "That sent me home to my knees," continued the former skeptic, where I found Christ for myself, in the depths of my own heart. There and then I resolved to be his disciple and a member of his believing fellowship. That is why I am here."

My friend, it was not the persuasive eloquence of the great preacher as much, as it was the simple testimony of the little crippled saint that won that man to the Christian cause.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me!" We must, all of us, move the magnet toward the filings that it may draw them.

In the end, it will not be the worldly honors you have won, or the offices you have held in the church, that will bring deepest satisfaction. It will be the souls, who through your loving concern and interest, were led into the joy and glory of the Christian life, that will constitute the jewels and the gems in your crown!

THE ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	7.50
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Chas. McMillan	5.00
In Memory of Fred Sellars	7.50
In Memory of W Hal Farrell	5.00
In Memory of Mrs. R. Ellsworth Jones	5.00
In Memory of Mrs. R. Ellsworth Jones	5.00
In Memory of Mrs. R. Ellsworth Jones	10.00
Special Gifts	29.00
	<hr/>
	226.96
Grand Total	$24,092.64
Total for the week	$ 782.63
Total for the year	$34,079.66

REVIVAL AT PLEASANT HILL.

(Continued from page 2.)

We also have a thriving Junior group, who are given the opportunity to have the opening service for Sunday school each fourth Sunday; and each fourth Sunday evening they have a most inspiring service. They also take an active part in the song service each Sunday.

Our pastor reached his fifty-ninth milestone and was honored on his birthday, the first Sunday in September, with a lovely potted flower. Nevertheless, he is still active in his home and community, and a brave follower of our Lord, ever ready to proclaim the good news of the gospel. We trust that the Lord will give him many more years in his vineyard and that we as a church will heed and follow his teachings and go forward in the work of the Master.

What Are We Insuring?

By REV. RICHARD K. MORTON

My city of Jacksonville is, I think, undoubtedly "the insurance capital of the entire South." We have an uncouth number of home and regional offices and smaller agencies here. The payroll is a tremendous factor in our economy, as employment is given to thousands in this field. Office after office has been established, and great new buildings have been or are being erected to provide space for expanded activities.

Life insurance is one of the world's major enterprises, and it is considered by millions to be one of the vital investments for individual and family. It forms, of course, a stable basis for any local economy.

No one today needs to argue the value of life insurance, and we are all familiar with the general procedures for writing life insurance—physical examination, data about one's life, etc. As soon as the company's physician indicates that we are a proper physical risk, and as soon as we demonstrate present financial ability to handle the premiums, the policy is written and put into effect.

We demonstrate that our life is a good physical risk. We do not have to establish its mental or spiritual values. But should we not do a little more thinking about this phase of the matter? What is this life we are so careful to insure? By what standard do we set value upon it? We are insuring it—but to what end?

Nineteen billions were invested in it last year, making a total of 290 billions in force. This is a tremendous sum.

We estimate our life high when it comes to insurance or in settling claims after an accident. But how high have we placed our standards and our aims? We do more to aid our physical health, but still not enough to protect and advance our mental and spiritual health. We safeguard our physical existence, but too much ignore what good this physical duration of life is going to be if it is insured.

We safeguard ourselves against emergencies and untimely tragedies so far as our physical existence is concerned, yet still seem so unconcerned about mental and spiritual emergencies and tragedies that may occur. Surely this increased concern to have as adequate life insurance as possible is good—but it is good only as far as it goes. By itself, it is not enough.

My main question is simply this: Are we putting enough into life, now that it is more protected physically. Science in many of its branches is helping us to prolong life. Is our religion deep enough to interpret and ennoble life? Science is giving more time for our body to endure. Is our mind more enriched so that it can use this time profitably?

We have more time upon earth. Do we know what to do with it? Do we wish to continue more simply as a healthy higher animal, or as a son of God?

What is it that we are insuring, anyway—and why? May we not indeed be thankful that our examiners do not ask whether our life is really worth all this protection and the expenditure of this money? This is a question we ought to ask ourselves.

In agriculture, our farmers and agronomists are learning more and more how to enrich the soil and thus to put more values into the food we eat. In our field of mental and spiritual activity, we must be likewise busy to enrich the higher resources upon which man's real life depends.

Let us properly insure the body, but also let us cultivate and ennoble the mind. Let us protect ourselves against what may happen to the body, but let us not leave ourselves defenseless against that which assails the soul!

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1954

NUMBER 40

Burlington Laymen Help to "Spiritualize Church Finance"

The group of laymen pictured above did an important task for its church, the First Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina, on September 26. Under the leadership of Dr. Warren H. Denison, teams of two conducted a parish-wide canvass and visitation. Dr. Denison led preparatory stewardship sessions for both men and women during the preceeding week. Much interest in "spiritualized church finance" was generated in the minds and hearts of those who heard Dr. Denison. The results of the canvass exceeded all previous efforts, and the chief benefits were in the attitudes of people toward their church.

News Flashes

Have you sent in your conference apportionments yet? If not, do so at once.

First Church, Greensboro, sent in over two hundred new and renewal subscriptions this week.

Miss Armid Madok of Bombay, India, who is an exchange student in the United States, was the guest speaker at last Sunday's vesper services, at First Church of Newport News, Virginia.

Annual homecoming services were held at Mount Olivet (G) Church of the Valley Conference on Sunday, September 26. A good crowd, numbering around 150, was present at the morning service when a new brass altar set, the gift of the Young Adult Class, was dedicated. Dinner was served on the grounds. At the afternoon service, Dr. David McKeith, Jr., former executive vice-president of the American Board, was the guest speaker. Revival services are planned for the week of October 17 to 22. The speaker will be the Rev. Douglas Ebert of the McGaheysville Methodist Church.

Former Chaplain and Wife Will Teach in Turkey

A former U. S. army chaplain of World War II, his wife, and six-year-old adopted German-born son, sailed on last Friday, October 8, on the SS Independence from New York City en route to service in Turkey as Congregational Christian educators. They are Rev. and Mrs. John A. Kingsbury of Moberly and Shelbina, Missouri and Robert Harrison Kingsbury who, last July 22, in the U. S. District Court of New Haven, Connecticut, became an American citizen. He was adopted by the Kingsburys when Mr. Kingsbury was serving as chaplain with the 175th Military Police Battalion.

The Kingsburys are going out as educational missionaries under the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass., the overseas arm of the Congregational Christian Churches, and will be assigned to the staff of American College in Tarsus, Turkey, where both Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury will teach for the next five years.

Little Robbie Kingsbury, who was born in Stuttgart, Germany, arrived in his adopted homeland in 1952 on the U. S. Troopship General Darby. He has mastered the English language and will soon start in on the Turkish, so that in another year he may be able to attend the Turkish public schools. Right now he is being taught by his mother, who will continue his dual education in two languages, in order that when he comes home on furlough five years from now, he will be able to enter the fifth grade in American schools.

For the past year the Kingsburys have been attending Hartford Theological Seminary studying the history, the traditions and the language of Turkey.

Mr. Kingsbury is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Kingsbury of Moberly, Missouri, which is his birthplace, and was educated at Central College and the University of Chicago. Mrs. Kingsbury is also a native of Missouri, having been born in Shelbina and educated at Central College and Meredith College in North Carolina.

The Kingsburys are the special representatives in the Near East of the First Congregational Church Grinnell, Iowa; the First Congregational Church of Elkhart, Indiana, the Westville Congregational Church of New Haven, Connecticut, and the Federated Church of Bloomfield, Connecticut.

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE:

Winchester, Virginia—October 13-14
Rev. R. A. Whitten, President
Mr. Clarence A. Phillips, Secretary

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Rosemont Church, South Norfolk—November 3-4
Rev. J. Everette Neese, President
Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., Secretary

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Piney Plains Church, near Raleigh—November 9
Rev. Will B. O'Neill, President
Rev. R. L. Jackson, Secretary

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11
Rev. M. A. Pollard, President
Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro
Rev. Mark W. Andes, President
Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The guest speaker for the Valley Conference will be Rev. John F. McClelland, Silver Spring, Maryland, where Mr. McClelland has done an outstanding job of church extension.

The guest speaker for the other conferences will be Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of London, England. Dr. Berry is secretary of the International Congregational Council.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Union, Hunterdale, Laymen Hold Ladies' Night Banquet

Members of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Union Christian Church, Hunterdale, Virginia, held their first Annual Ladies Night banquet on the evening of Tuesday, September 28 at 7:30 o'clock.

Approximately 35 members and guests were present, and a delicious meal was prepared and served by James Campbell and Leroy Allen, assisted by the pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields.

S. M. Joyner and Steve Harnok were in charge of table arrangement and decorations.

Words of welcome were extended by S. M. Joyner, president of the Fellowship, followed by a response from Mrs. Clyde Fields.

"Blest Be the Tie" was sung by the entire group, followed by prayer by Steve Harnok.

After dinner, S. M. Joyner introduced Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor of the Bethlehem Christian Church, who delighted the group as he reminisced on the "Good Ole Days." He spoke with much wit and humor as he related many past experiences.

Rev. Clyde Fields offered the closing prayer.

JAY G. JOYNER, JR.,
Secretary.

* * * * *

The Picture on the Front Page

On page one of this issue is shown a group of laymen from our First Church of Burlington, North Carolina, just before they started out on a parish-wide canvass and visitation. The program was under the leadership of Dr. Warren H. Denison. Dr. Denison is conducting a final week of stewardship work in the Convention in the Union Ridge Church this week. He has served ably and with striking results the churches of Suffolk and Resemont in the Eastern Virginia Conference, and Greensboro and Burlington in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

A cornerstone in the program is the insistence on the use of laymen. A place of real worth is given every man of the church willing to serve. In every case, the man himself was the gainer and, of course, through each man across the years his church will be strengthened.

H. E. R.

* * * * *

This Sunday Is Laymen's Sunday

Two weeks ago, you were given some pointers on "How to Get the Most Out of Laymen's Sunday." We hope that you used them to advantage in preparing for this Sunday's service. Here are a few additional thoughts on the development of the theme, "A Time for Decision":

One very successful method is for the laymen to bring examples from the fields they know. A salesman can tell how little is accomplished in any field without study of the organization you represent—or without enthusiasm for what you have to sell, or without work. A workman can tell of the importance of tools and skill in his craft and then say what Christian tools he hopes to use and what skills he is trying to develop.

There should be examples of decision that the speaker himself has made. Since the credit is due to God, he can tell them with modesty. Stories of other people's decisions and their achievements are interesting. Christians are always interested to know how others have been won to God and the church.

Obviously one's whole life is full of times and places for decision. A man may decide to deepen and enrich his own spiritual life. He may decide to do specific things for his

(Continued on page 11.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardcastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

An Opportunity for Every Church

Half of the people in the world are undernourished. Millions of them are living in semistarvation. Their daily diet is so meager and lacks so many necessary elements of nutrition that they fall an easy prey to the ravages of disease. Men and women are unable to work because they have lived so long without adequate food that their physical strength is gone. The growth of children is being retarded beyond recovery. They will never have normal bodies.

Who are these hungry people? They are the victims of war and disaster. Floods and famines due to drought, leave millions without food and with no possible means of obtaining it. There are so many destitute people in the world that what we call Christian charity is powerless to meet the need.

During the past decade when multitudes are without food, the United States has been producing more food than anyone has known what to do about. The only answer that our government has been able to devise is government support of farm prices. This means that the government pays the farmer or the producer for his products and stores them for some future use. This has gone on until now six and one quarter billion dollars worth of food commodities is stored in warehouses, and the end is not yet in sight.

By action of the 83rd Congress, such part of this surplus as can be transported overseas to the places of acute need has been made available for distribution. The government is asking no compensation for the food, nor has it made any provision for the cost of transportation and distribution. That is left to the charitable and relief organizations of our land. It has been estimated that the cost of transportation and distribution will be 5% of the cash value of the food. Thus $1.00 will deliver to the hungry people food the price of which on the American market would be $20.00.

There are two national relief organizations which are equipped to undertake this task. They are Church World Service and the Christian Rural Overseas Program. Both of these have done remarkable relief work during World War II and in the years since the ending of the war.

The call is going out to the churches of the United States to supply the money to carry and to distribute this food to the people to whom it will mean life. It is a call and an opportunity which must be heeded. Too much is at stake and so much can be accomplished that every local church should do its part. Give through your church, and ask your church treasurer to send it to the Southern Convention Office, designated for CROP or CWS.

Give Us the News

One of the principal reasons for publishing The Christian Sun is to acquaint our constituency with the news of the Southern Convention. We have to know about the representative meetings which are going to be held, the main topics which will be discussed, and who will be the leading speakers. When conferences, conventions and associations have been held, the members who were not in attendance would like to know just what was said and done. Local churches launch unusual projects and programs, or they do the usual things in an unusual way; but keep the news a deep, dark secret, lest other churches should go and do likewise.

Dr. Warren H. Denison has for years been conducting successful stewardship institutes in almost every State in the Union. Not long ago he conducted such an institute at Wake Chapel. As a result of Dr. Denison's labors the church has been going from strength to strength ever since. The pastor of Wake Chapel, the Rev. Fred P. Register, saw the possibilities of stewardship education and practice. Mr. Register became an enthusiastic advocate of stewardship, and is soon to begin his work as Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism for the Southern Convention.

Dr. Denison has recently conducted stewardship institutes in the First Church of Greensboro and the First Church, Burlington. Some of us would like to know in detail the results of those two meetings. The churches in which Dr. Denison was working are two of the leading churches of the Southern Convention. They are served by two of our finest ministers. What was done and will be done in these churches should be indicative of what may be expected throughout the Convention.

Conferences are the order of the day in the Southern Convention from now until the middle of November. The Christian Sun would like very much to print an account of the interesting items that are being planned for the conference sessions. Then when the conference sessions are over, we should like to give our readers some idea of just what was accomplished. It is not enough to say, "We had a good Conference." Tell us what made it a good conference, and every one who reads the story will silently vote an expression of thanks.

The Church of the Covenant

By Rev. J. IRVING STUBBS

The nature and mission of the Lynchburg Christian Fellowship has been stated in the preceding article. Since the first appearance of that article several steps have been taken which we feel will strengthen the mission of this interdenominational project.

An additional purchase brings our property total to about forty-five acres, including a large dwelling which is our principal Fellowship building, a small cottage to be used for guests and retreat housing, a three-car garage and a barn. The living room of the Fellowship House is being fitted out at present for a chapel seating about fifty.

Community Projects.

Our intention is that the Fellowship should continue as the distinctively ecumenical agency of our project as described in the previous article. We hope through it to continue our year round study-recreation sessions for youth, our young adult study-fellowship group and our summer day-camp program. In addition, plans for the future of the Fellowship include provisions for church, laymen and ministerial retreats; Christian conversations on such topics as Christian vocation, Christian race-relations, Christian music, the role of the church in the increasingly industrial South, etc.; sponsorship of Bible studies; community lectures; a Christian kindergarten; worship workshops; youth in industry camps (Lynchburg has about five industries); a program for college students (Lynchburg has three colleges two of which are Christian sponsored); a religious book shop (Lynchburg has none); a radio ministry and other means of communicating the Gospel and its implications to our community and of deepening the Christian's understanding and life. Obviously we must move slowly on these as the time is ready, and as the leadership and funds are available. We hope through the Fellowship to provide a ground on which churches of our community might cooperate more effectively, on which ministers might work together and on which to lay the foundations for a federation of churches in Lynchburg.

The members of the Fellowship have come gradually to feel that they need a church as the worshiping center and responsible parent of this enterprise. We believe that it should be denominationally affiliated though ecumenical in spirit, that it should be one in which Christian commitment is taken seriously, that it should have responsibility for the Fellowship in order that it may not degenerate into a community recreation center, and that it should guarantee the necessary financial as well as spiritual support for the Fellowship. For these reasons we have conceived the Church of the Covenant to be structured somewhat as follows.

REV. J. IRVING STUBBS

Mr. Stubbs is a co-minister of the new Church of the Covenant, Lynchburg, Va. He is a graduate of Davidson College and of Union Theological Seminary, New York.

Organization Planned.

We envisage the existence of three general groups within the church. First, the Board of Deacons, composed of members, who will be responsible for the organizational leadership of the church. The membership of the church we intend to be a small committed group which is willing to assume a practical discipline. This will include a minimum training period prior to membership, a commitment to weekly worship, a minimum daily period of prayer and weekly period of Bible study, a minimum stewardship of time to either the church or the fellowship and the tithe as the minimum stewardship of money. The third group will be a worshipping fellowship which will share in the life of the church and a part of which will be in some stage of training for membership. We intend to make no distinction between members and worshipping fellowship in our worship and the sacrament of Communion will be offered to all Christians.

The responsible operating group for the Fellowship will be a council of which several members will be from the church membership, but which will also include members from other churches and community groups as well. Further membership in the Fellowship will be in particular phases of its program.

This is to sketch the project very briefly. We are aware of numerous problems which this outline will suggest. To some of these we have given considerable thought and prayer, and we are discovering answers. There are many others on which we are open to further light.

Dr. Sloan Reviews Recent Trip Around the World

Mrs. Sloan and I have had an extremely rewarding trip around the world. To be in Asia one morning, Iceland twenty-four hours later and at Elon College by midnight indicates that ours is a small world. We could have gone around the world in much less than 98 days, but it would have been difficult to crowd as varied experiences and as much learning into less time.

We traveled 41,000 miles, using 45 planes, belonging to nineteen different air-lines. We spent nights in 47 different places, including five planes and three trains. It was much more than a trip around the world. It extended from Tasmania south of the mainland of Australia to Iceland. We threw snow-balls at each other in July in Australia and sweat out a temperature of 107 in Pakistan.

We were on the edges of political excitement, bombings in Indonesia, Communist terrorists in Malaya, revolt in Pondicherry, and snipings across no-man's-land in Jordan
(Continued on page 8.)

Our Churches Report . . .

Richmond Church to Celebrate a Truly Great Event

On Sunday afternoon, October 17, at 3:30 o'clock, the First Congregational Christian Church of Richmond will celebrate the completion of a project which marks the realization of the hopes and dreams of members and friends of the church. For some time they had felt the importance of making provision for a Fellowship and Recreation Center which would minister more largely to the various age-groups within the church membership and the community.

The pastor, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, made the comment, "The completed project testifies of the faithful and loyal interest and service of the members of the various committees in charge, several of whom assisted the contractors, in giving many hours of arduous labor in the completion of the center. The achievement moreover bears witness to a progressive, forward-looking membership as evidenced by their sponsoring the project as one of the responsibilities of a modern church."

The project, costing approximately $6,500, all of which has been paid in full, includes the changing of a large and unsightly waste space under the auditorium into a beautiful, commodious, attractive and inviting "Fellowship and Recreation Center"—refinishing, painting, reflooring, placing an acoustical ceiling and speaker's platform, artistic curtaining, equipping the main room with numerous games, which include Shuffleboard, Ping-Pong table, two Skittle Boards, Box Ball, and numerous other games; also folding plastic-top tables for banquet use and eard tables, steel folding chairs, a sound motion picture projector and silver screen.

The four adjoining and previously unused rooms have been converted into a modern kitchenette, equipped with refrigerator, sink, cabinets, electric stove and other accessories; and there is also a Hobby Work Shop room, a Clothes Room, and a Storage Room. These rooms and the adjoining halls have all been refinished and artistically decorated.

The project also included the repainting of the front doors of the sanctuary and the east side doors and all of the exterior wood-work of the Educational Building, and the placing of lights over east entrances, a new concrete walk and steps on the east side of the main building, doing needed repair work and alterations on roof ledges to correct long-standing leaks on the north side of the church. Also, there was provided a separate heating system for the Fellowship Center so that it may be properly heated without heating the remainder of the building.

The tentative program for the Dedication Service is as follows:

Presiding—Mrs. Dennis Coffey, president of the "Tri-M" Club.

Invocation—Russell Selden, representing the Youth Fellowship.

Hymn—"I Love Thy Kingdom"

Scripture Lesson—Clinton Wilkinson, 1st year Junior Department.

Music—Junior Choir, directed by Mrs. A. A. Doffmeyer.

Violin Numbers: "Meditation" from the Opera "Thais," by Massenet; "On Wings of Song," by Felix Mendelssohn; "Schan Rosmaria," by Fritz Kreisler—Henry Liscio, with Jimmy Whitely accompanying.

Offering.

Presentation of Fellowship Recreation Center and Other Improvements—Mr. L. L. Bond, Chairman, Project Committee.

Acceptance—Mr. John T. Kernodle, Chairman, Board of Trustees.

Hymn—"Lead on, O King Eternal."

Dedicatory Address—Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent, The Southern Convention.

Motion Picture—"We Came This Way."

Statement of Dedication—Dr. Helfenstein and Congregation.

Dedication Prayer and Benediction—Mr. A. A. Doffmeyer, Chairman of the Official Board.

Liberty Vance Church Reports Progress

The Liberty Vance Congregational Christian Church has finished the best year in its history. This is the second year the church has had full-time work, and the members of the church and their pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, are proud of the splendid progress that has been made.

Following a fellowship supper, the fourth quarterly conference of the church was held on Friday evening, October 1. Reports showed that the evangelism of the church has had a good year. The attendance at both Sunday school and church services has been excellent. The Woman's Fellowship reported a good year's work, with all of their apportionment of $460.00 raised, and all objectives carried out.

The report of the church treasurer showed the church with all bills paid and a sizeable balance in the treasury to be carried over into the new year's work. The people of Liberty Vance realize that when the spirit of a church is right and the responsibility of Christian stewardship is faced, sufficient funds will always be available to do the work of the kingdom.

A new budget for the coming year, amounting to nearly $7,000.00 was presented by the Finance Committee and accepted by the church. This sum included a 20 per cent raise for the pastor.

Reports from the other departments were also most encouraging.

At this, the last meeting of the church year, new church officers were elected. In a previous meeting of the church, the method of rotation for the deacons was adopted, and at this meeting three new deacons were elected: Tollie Smith, W. D. Foster, and R. T. Renn.

Our pastor, with his very efficient wife, is doing a wonderful work. Every one present at this particular meeting witnessed the many various types of work that these two fine young people are doing. At this time, following the business meeting, our pastor presented color slides of various activities of the church. Included was work from the cradle roll to the adult department. These color pictures were made by the pastor and included the work of the Senior and Junior Pilgrim Fellowships, the Bible School, the Woman's Fellowship, the Board of Deacons, and programs of interest, including four church weddings.

These and our many other activities show that the pastor and people of Liberty Vance are ready to pull or push, which ever they find necessary.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who may find an opportunity to visit with us at Liberty Vance.

MRS. FLETCHER FULLER,
Church Reporter.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Centennial—What?

One hundred years is a long period. Many things have happened during the past one hundred years. Happenings in our own church have been disappointing but more happenings in our church have been encouraging and inspiring. It is good to think about the past. I do not agree with the late Henry Ford that all "history is bunk," nor do I think that St. Paul was speaking literally when he said, "forgetting those things that are behind." There are many things in the past that we need to remember. In fact, as a church we stand on the past—the past declaration of the Holy scripture—if time can be assigned to the scripture). The past achievements of our people dedicated to God and to the coming of his kingdom.

I like also to think of the future. Prospects to me are more inspiring than retrospects. Pantomimes are refreshing but programs for progress are far more challenging. We do need to count our blessings but we also need to count our opportunities and to plan for greater things in the future.

A proposed program for the ensuing biennium of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches was presented to the Executive Board of the Convention at its recent meeting in Henderson. There were differences of opinion as was anticipated and as there should be. To insure progress, however, it is essential that there be unanimity of thought, of planning, and of purpose if we are to accomplish under God that which we as his people should accomplish for his church and the coming of his kingdom through his church.

There may be many items on the church program that should be emphasized and we should have a program for the progress of the whole church along all lines. A lesser program is not likely to challenge our whole constituency. We need to bring into this centennial effort every man, woman, and child in our church. Anything short of that or an effort to do that would be a sad mistake.

There are two items in the suggested program that should be in the program of every church. Other items are necessary but these two are essential. They are Prayer and commitment, without which we shall fall short of the requirements of God and the expectations of the consecrated among us. We need to pray for forgiveness—forgiveness for our neglect, our indifference, our doubts, our sins; that our hearts and the hearts of our people and our church may be cleansed, that we as a church may be purified and willing to lose ourselves for the sake of the gospel and of the kingdom. We need to offer the prayer of confession—confessing our enmity, our strife, our fancied vengeance, and ask God to forgive us and make us what we should be as servants of his. We need to pray for progress, for the coming of his kingdom in the hearts of our people and for the salvation of those who have not yet found forgiveness of their sins and a place in his church where they too may work for the coming of his kingdom.

We need to commit ourselves, to commit ourselves to Christ on the terms of the gospel that we may be used according to the will of God and that in his goodness and grace, we may be entrusted with the power of his eternal spirit; that in him and through him, men may dwell together in unity, they may be able to unite in all the relations of life for the good of humanity and for the reign of righteousness in the hearts of men and the counsels of fraternity and society. If we commit ourselves to Christ on the terms of the gospel, we need to pray that the youth of our church may consider seriously the question of committing themselves to the gospel ministry, to the work of Christ in his church and in his world. It would seem that far too few of our young people are offering themselves to the church and to God hoping to become ministers of the gospel of Christ. Could we as a church "pray the Lord of the Harvest, that he would send forth laborers into the harvest." Surely he would hear the prayers of the whole church offered in sincerity and in faith, void of selfishness and of personal ambition.

As God brought us, our church, to this good day, and as we start at the beginning of another biennium of our Convention, may we give ourselves to prayer and commit ourselves to God in the hope that we may share his grace and be given power to accomplish the will of God in our church and through our church for the coming of his kingdom.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

By the time this article reaches the reading public the first of our annual conferences for 1954 will be history. The Virginia Valley Conference assembles in the First Congregational Christian Church of Winchester, Virginia, on Wednesday, October 13, at 10:00 a. m. The annual sessions of the other conferences of the Convention will follow each week thereafter with the possible exception of the week of October 17. Of course, we are all aware of these conference sessions for we, in our local churches, have been refreshing our minds with the church records of the present year. Also, we have been searching our hearts and our purses to make sure that our obligations to our conferences, the boards, causes and institutions of our church, are met in full. We are aware that these apportionments are necessary for the detailed causes of our church or the Convention would not have apportioned the same.

Ours is a free church, but joyous freedom is found in the completion of an obligation that is placed upon us by those in authority of whom we are a part. I am sure that every local church will do its utmost to meet its obligation in full.

A glance at the figures below will indicate how far the amount received by Elon College is short of the amount apportioned—$15,000.00.

Previously reported $ 7,457.55

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Plymouth	$ 19.50
Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem (Nans)	$ 27.25
Dendron	1.02
Newport News	196.45
Spring Hill S. S.	4.65
Suffolk S. S.	42.22
Union So.	77.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Burlington, Bev. Hills ..	$ 5.00
Carolina	27.00
Graham, Providence Mem.	23.00
New Leonon S. S.	10.70
Western N. C. Conference:
Flint Hill (R)	$ 15.00
Pleasant Ridge	65.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Mt. Olive (R)	$ 24.00

537.79

Total to date $ 7,995.34

Dr. Sidney M. Berry of London To Be Conference Guest Speaker

Dr. Sidney M. Berry of London, England, minister and secretary of the International Congregational Council, will speak at the Eastern Virginia Conference, to be held with the Rosemont Christian Church, on Wednesday and Thursday, November 3 and 4; the Eastern North Carolina Conference at Piney Plain Church (near Raleigh), on Tuesday, November 9; at the Western North Carolina Conference at Grace's Chapel (near Sanford), on Thursday, November 11, and the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, at First Church, Greensboro, on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 16-17.

Dr. Berry is a distinguished British Congregational churchman. He was elected to his present post in 1949, and prior to that time he served for 25 years as the general executive officer of Congregational Churches in England and Wales.

The last few years of that period were during World War II, when the Congregational headquarters in London was surrounded by the ruins of bombed buildings. In that period Congregationalism raised a big reconstruction fund for the rebuilding of the bombed churches.

For twelve years, Dr. Berry was minister of the famous Carrs Lane Church in Birmingham, England, succeeding Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Dr. Berry recently visited the Congregational churches in South India, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. His world tour took nine months and carried him to five different countries. He was warmly received and often given receptions by the government, as in New Zealand, and by numberless civic groups, as well as by churches. He preached in key churches of these countries, including the pulpits of the Cathedrals at Sydney and Perth.

He also made a fellowship trip to the churches in Germany, taking special note of the great refugee camps in Germany and Austria.

The United States is not a new country to Dr. Berry, who has visited here many times, visiting Congregational Christian churches from coast to coast. He says that he very nearly became an American citizen because when he was a small boy his father was invited to the historic pulpit of Henry Ward Beecher in Brooklyn, New York, and had he accepted, Mr. Berry would have become an American.

Born in Southampton, Lancashire, Dr. Berry was educated at Tettenhall College, Staffordshire; Clare College, Cambridge, and Mansfield College, Oxford. He entered the Congregational ministry in 1906, first being a pastor in a little country church, but soon went on to a suburban pulpit in Manchester.

Then, in 1912, he was called to the Carrs Lane Church in Birmingham, where he was minister until 1923. During the period of the First World War, he paid many visits to the men at the front, including those from the United States.

DR. SIDNEY M. BERRY

In 1923, Dr. Berry became secretary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and for a period he was moderator of the Free Church Federal Council and vice-president of the British Council of Churches, an interdenominational organization which includes the Church of England and the Free Churches.

In his work as minister of the International Congregational Council, Dr. Berry often meets with leaders of Congregationalism in Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Finland.

The International Congregational Council was formed in order that Congregationalists in every part of the world might have a permanent organization to keep their churches in close and constant contact with each other and to provide a source of information to study the needs of the churches in the different countries. It promotes exchange visits between ministers, theological teachers and students, representatives of laymen's work, women's work and particularly youth work, so that its world fellowship may be made along every line of the churches' program.

DR. SLOAN REVIEWS TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.

(Continued from page 5.)

Israel. We met top political leaders, saw the squalor of refugees in Pakistan, talked with an assortment of refugees in Jordan, and saw the sheet-iron temporary huts of new settlers in Israel.

We had tea with an Anglican bishop in Australia, dinner with a Ceylonese bishop of the Church of South India, had an English bishop of the Church of South India as our chauffeur in Hyderabad, and killed forty bed-bugs bequeathed to us by an American Methodist bishop.

I preached in clerical collar and gown in numerous churches in New Zealand and Australia and again in Malaya, and preached bare-footed in a beautiful chapel in India. We took off our shoes as we entered numerous places of worship, Christian, Hindu, Moslem and Jain. We had the privilege, enjoyed by very few non-Parsees of the world, of visiting a Parsee fire-temple. We were the guests of people of many religious and nationalities.

We found a new, pulsating world. Colonialism and political imperialism are just about dead. The white man is no longer respected because he is a pale-face. The colored people of the world are a majority, and from now on will play a leading part in the affairs of the world. When our State Department says to the people of Southeast Asia, "Come, now; we have worked out a plan for the defense of your part of the world and we want you to approve it," the self-respecting Oriental is forced to say, "No. We are glad to work with you cooperatively, but not as inferiors."

We have come to see the tremendous blunders the French and Dutch have made in their relations with other people, the cockiness and sometimes meanness but eventual wisdom of the British, and the blundering ineptness and immaturity of our own

(Continued on page 13.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

North Carolina Women Have Fine Missionary Conference

Three hundred and twenty-seven people were registered for the North Carolina Woman's Conference at the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines on Tuesday, October 5. The weather was "seorching," but the people came in large numbers, and no "casualties" were reported. Miss Jennie Doidge "elicked" with her audience by telling them, when first introduced, not to worry, because the dark, heavy-looking dress she was wearing was cotton!

Not being up on fashion terms, I do not know how to describe Mrs. Scott's dress, but the president looked unusually stunning in a shiny beige(?), honey-colored(?), or some such two-piece dress. (Speaking of clothes, apparently no one stayed at home because they did not know the right thing to wear on a hot day in the fall—some came in suits and some in summer dresses, and there were enough of both so everyone felt all right!)

But this was not a fashion show, or a weather-minded crowd, so on with the report of the program—

Miss Jennie Doidge brought us "Face to Face with India," telling about the sense of worship she found there, the new day for women in India, and the great need for our help. The reports were made in a minimum amount of time, and were to the point. The audience seemed to especially like the "visual aids," which helped present "Interdenominational Action" and "Friendly Service." Every district superintendent but one was there to present her group, which sat in a body in assigned places. Each person wore an attractive ribbon with the name of her district written on it; these being prepared by the Eutaw Community Church women. Mrs. Scott's message on "The Mission of the Heart," showed careful study of the function of the heart in the human body and the comparative place of Christ in the life of an individual or a church. It was good.

These are some interesting bits to remember—

The lovely memorial service by Mrs. W. B. O'Neill, which included a special memorial for Mrs. S. E. Albert, given by the North Carolina Woman's Board, of which she was a member, and one for Mrs. W. P. Minton, given by her husband, former superintendent of our churches in Pennsylvania.

"The Lord Is My Shepherd," sung by Roger Gibbs, field secretary for Elon College, as he stood in the chancel before the lovely window picturing "The Good Shepherd."

The fact that three members of the North Carolina Board had babies (all girls) during the year—Mrs. Bill Simmons, Mrs. Carl Wallace and Mrs. Maek Welch.

The total giving for the year was $11,389.17, the largest ever, and $869.92 more than last year.

Eight new societies were organized during the year: Ether and Shady Grove, in the Asheboro District; Bethlehem, in Burlington; Hendersonville, in Greensboro; Center (So. Boston), in Halifax; Pope's Chapel, in Henderson; Zion and Lee's Chapel, in Sanford.

For the first time, every society that reported to the treasurer the preceding year also reported this year, and every single society met their apportionment in full!

Six societies have asked that their monetary goal be increased—Apple's Chapel, Chapel Hill, Palm Street, Pleasant Grove, Pleasant Ridge and Union Ridge.

The offering for India and Ceylon (our foreign mission study this year) was $169.32. Fifty dollars has been sent to Miss Bonneva Farlow, who is waiting in Boston, at last report, for visa so she can sail for Ceylon.

Rachel Wallace made her report for social action, and her daughter, Rosemary, is only two weeks old. We call that quick action!

The closing installation service by the Convention president, Mrs. W. B. Williams, included the congregation as well as the officers, and was most impressive.

The Conference, next year, will meet in Durham. . . . See you there!

September Meeting at Ramseur

The September meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Ramseur Christian Church met with Mrs. Roy Smith. Mrs. C. E. Brown led the devotional, taken from the Book of Psalms.

The society voted to meet with Spoon's Chapel, Asheboro and Pleasant Ridge in March for a combined book review meeting.

Cradle Roll chairmen, Mrs. Ward Trogdon and Mrs. O. Cox, reported a party held with twelve children and several mothers present.

A most impressive installation service for new officers was held following the program. A number of visits, cards, trays and flowers were reported.

DOROTHY CRAVEN,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Birthday Party Benefits Building Fund

On Saturday night, August 28, the Woman's Society of the Reidsville Church sponsored an unusual and delightful birthday party in the dining room of the church. There were 140 reservations of men, women and children. All who came not only enjoyed the unusual and delicious variety of refreshments, but they also laughed and sang and visited. And all left saying it was good to have been in this church for such a party.

There were twelve tables, each being sponsored by one of the circles of the society, and each represented a month of the year. Each guest sat at the table of his or her birthday month.

July was gay with our national colors and the usual firecrackers. December carried out the Christmas motif—gay Christmas tree, presents and snow. Easter featured the April table, and was bright with the colors of that season. A large valentine box, shaped as a well with "pull me" streamers each rewarding each guest with a favor featured the February table. Indeed, each table was beautiful in its own way with a seasonal motif. And each table entertained with a song or two in keeping with the decorations. September sang "School Days"; October, "Shine on Harvest Moon"; May sang "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," and December sang "Silent Night."

In addition to this entertainment, there were several dramatic, humorous readings presented, and a duet
(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Sometimes we hear people say that our world is not as good as it should be, that folks grow meaner and more wicked all the time. They tell of seeing in the paper and hearing the news broadcast of mean things done and people hurt because of lack of kindness. Maybe it is true, but we don't believe it! What happens is this—bad news makes the news, and good news doesn't travel very far.

Last month a man died whose going did not make the front page of our paper, but he was as good a man as ever lived. He was Rufus Moseley, but people called him "Brother Rufus." He was a friend of the great missionary, Dr. E. Stanley Jones, and he traveled about our country telling church folk about God, and believing and praying. He was an every-day Christian. By that, he meant that he practiced his goodness all the time. When he was given some money after a preaching mission, he gave all of it away—just saved enough to ride home on the bus.

He especially believed that the people who follow Christ should yield their lives to him. That to believe was to follow and that it brought life's great joys. He was right, too. Now he has gone to belong to the Church Eternal, but you did not hear about it, did you? The life of a man like this should be written up and carried over the news waves, but it isn't. Remember, when you hear about "the bad" that there is good all around us if we look for it.

* * *

A request came for a table grace. We shall print a series: Dear God, Be our guest. Come to our table and bless our food, home and lives. Amen.

* * * * *

The Value of Reading to Children

By RUTH PECK McLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"How can you remember all of the characters in David Copperfield?" said a high school student to her chum.

"Because when I was a child Father read aloud almost every evening while Mother sewed, and being English he selected many of Dickens' books," the girl replied.

One of the best methods of educating a child in an entertaining fashion is to read aloud to him regularly. Nothing brings out the beauty of literature more than hearing it read by some good reader. A former teacher, now blind, told me the other day that he had never really appreciated certain masterpieces until he had heard them read aloud through the "talking books." He confessed that he had skimmed over a great part of the books when he had his eyesight.

Hearing good literature read makes an indelible impression upon the young child. The parents should begin with simple stories and gradually work up to the more advanced reading. One young mother I know, well-trained in child development methods, was convinced that by reading stories to her three boys every night they would be greatly helped in writing compositions. The boys made scrapbooks with appropriate pictures to illustrate some of the stories she had read.

We adults know that frequently new words come to our minds seemingly by magic, but we can usually trace them to some speaker or some commentator who has used them. Hearing new words pronounced correctly is of far more value to us than merely reading them, for all too often we do not take the time to look up the correct pronunciation.

There is no better way to build a child's vocabulary than by reading aloud to him. He hears a new word, asks the meaning, and soon that word is fixed in his mind. Every parent should be extremely patient about this, answering all inquiries, if the child is to reap the full benefit of the reading.

The child who has been in the habit of hearing stories read aloud at home makes the more attentive, alert listener at school. Without realizing it, children retain certain phrases and eloquent passages from the various gems of literature they have heard. Have not we adults at times been astonished to find that we could quote poetry or prose learned while very young and of which we had not thought since childhood? It is the knowledge acquired at an early age that really remains with us.

Some people at first ridiculed Charles Laughton's assertion that the public would enjoy having books read aloud to them. However, his numerous engagements and the packed houses that followed were proof that people delight in hearing the Bible, Shakespear and other immortal classics read aloud to them, especially by a great artist.

Where there are several children in a family, interesting discussions about various stories arise at the table, or when out riding. At such times parents have the opportunity of telling facts about the authors, relating how many of their books are based on actual happenings.

If a child thinks he would like to pursue some particular profession, he will enjoy hearing articles on related topics, such as astronomy, chemistry, and architecture. Parents will be amazed at the ease with which a youngster will master technical terms when he is intensely interested in a certain subject. There can be no better preparation for a child's success in almost any vocation than by taking the time to read aloud material that appeals to him.

A Pregnant Sentence

When I come across something in my reading that seems to me especially good, I have an ardent desire to pass it on to my friends. In my quiet hour this morning I found such a sentence and am taking the liberty of following my impulse. The sentence is in Dr. E. Stanley Jones' Growing Spiritually, page 270. The author is speaking of how the Apostle used his prison experience to further his life's mission—making Christ known to his fellow men. Note a sentence or two just preceding the special sentence: "The curtailment of his personal liberty was hard, but it was harder still to be shut off from the opportunity of preaching his beloved good news. But as we look back we can see that God was allowing the good to be taken away in order that the better might come. Paul's letters, mostly written from jail, have enriched the world for ages and will do so in the ages to come. But they could never have been written except in jail." Then follows what I am calling A Pregnant Sentence, viz., this: "He

(Continued on page 15.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Teen Age Young Women of Winchester Are Organized

Last fall, at the time the women of the First Congregational Christian Church of Winchester, Virginia, organized into the Woman's Fellowship Society, the teen-age young women, who were not included in this organization, had asked to have their own circle and to be a part of the Woman's Fellowship of the church.

A group of approximately twelve high school girls met, with one young woman from the Fellowship as advisor, to organize their circle. They chose as a motto, "Happy Thoughts and Busy Fingers." The task of choosing a name wasn't so easy, because they wanted a name characteristic of their motto. Finally such a name was presented and unanimously chosen.

"The Pattie Lee Coghill Circle" meets once a month in one of the girl's homes and holds its devotions, a business session and a social hour. One offering is taken and it is divided equally between the General Fund of the Woman's Fellowship and the Mission Fund. "Happy Thoughts and Busy Fingers" has been the silent theme of their year's work. At one meeting they made twelve pairs of terry cloth scuffs and packed a box containing these and four dozen cakes of Ivory soap for the Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico. A needy fatherless family was adopted at Christmas time and was given a very large quantity of food, clothing and games for the children. After learning of the good response to the "Goats for Puerto Rico" project, they decided to keep their goat fund money for another friendly service project.

They were privileged to have Miss Coghill present at their August meeting, and presented her with a small token of their love and appreciation for all the work she has done for them and for all the young people of the Valley Conference. Our thoughts and prayers are with her as she begins her new work, still influencing the lives of many young people.

A new year of work has begun, with new officers elected, and many Friendly Service and Home projects to do. One member is a freshman at college and four are seniors in high school this year. Much of their time is demanded by school and social activities, but they have one evening a month for joining their friends at circle meeting.

It's fun, and we recommend it to other young women who are not a part of the Woman's Fellowship.

WINNIE WHITLOCK.

* * * * *

Young People and Women of Chapel Hill Cooperate

The young people of Chapel Hill Congregational Christian Church met with three members of the Women's Fellowship at the home of Mrs. James Ellis on September 2, for an afternoon of soap-making and stuffing animals, to put into practice the theme of the Bible School Study, "Better Understanding of the Children in Foreign Lands."

The true spirit of Christian fellowship was stirred into the bubbling mass of soap made in an old-fashioned black pot in the open. The boys made the soap; the older girls made rabbits and cuddly dolls; and the juniors made little stuffed clowns.

While all this was going on, Mrs. A. C. Shearer was preparing delicious hamburgers and salad. But before supper a short business session was held. The following officers were elected: Linda Watts, president; Judy Ferguson, vice-president; Robin Fine, secretary, and Jan Pinney, treasurer.

The young people themselves conducted vespers in an inspiring setting in a near-by woods.

To top off the day, a movie on "Youth Fellowship" was shown by Rev. Richard Jackson.

So ended an interesting and inspiring church project.

MABELLE K. ALEXANDER.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

church. He has decisions to make in his home and his community. And the sum of Christian people's viewpoint on world affairs is important in itself and provides a basis for action.

Actually, every day, every moment of our lives is "A Time for Decision."

The Philippine Schools Again Attacked

The Christian Century for August 11, 1954, published a report by George Earl Owen from Manila, stating that the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the Philippines has not abated its continuous attacks on the public schools of that republic. He says that the Archbishop of Jaro (Iloilo) has threatened to excommunicate Catholic students who attend Central Philippine University and also those parents who send their children to the public schools.

The threat mentioned followed close upon an attack by Chancellor Jose Hernandez of San Sebastian College upon the system of free education established in the United States and which has been the pattern for that of the Philippines. The chancellor, who is also president of Catholic Action in the Philippines, charged that the United States Government, public schools and press are "honeycombed with Communism" and said that there is no hope of salvation outside the parochial schools and the censorship of books.

The Christian Century also reports that only a short time ago a Roman Catholic priest attempted to remove books and other publications unfavorable to Romanist teaching from the Philippine Women's University, but was stopped by a Protestant member of the faculty who claimed that the action represented sectarian censorship.

The Central Methodist Church in Manila reported that about ten prominent Roman Catholics who had been excommunicated because they were Freemasons had been received into Methodist membership.

The thoughtful, educated Filipino does not have to be reminded that it was the very predominantly Protestant United States which, about the turn of the century, gave the Islands their freedom from the most reactionary priest-ridden and enslaved country in the world today—Spain. Others not so fortunate who are held in the chains of ignorance and superstition by "the one true church" can, we hope, be guided eventually by their liberty-loving compatriots to an understanding that the next step on the path to national integrity and independence is to make politically impotent the Roman Catholic hierarchy and all its instrumentalities. Until that is accomplished, this sort of vilification and interference can be expected on a continuing basis.

—Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Guidance for Family Living"

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 24, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "My son, keep the commandments of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother."—Proverbs 6: 20.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Proverbs 4: 6-20; 7: 27; 17: 1; 19: 13-14; 31: 10-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Corinthians 13.

Here are a string of pearls, words of wisdom, distilled out of the experiences of a long life, and inspired by the spirit of the Living God, collected in a book for the instruction and inspiration of the children of men in their high enterprise of making a good life. The pearls which make up today's lesson have as their central and unifying theme, "Guidance for Family Living."

Father and Mother Know Best.

Many a youngster is irked as he hears again and again, "Father knows best," or "Mother knows best." And it can become irksome if the refrain is sounded too often. But the fact is, father and mother usually do know best, or what is best. To be sure, they do not always know all the answers to all the sixty-four dollar questions. But the average father's and mother's judgment and instincts on questions of morality, on matters of safe and sane conduct, on the great ethical issues of life, are pretty sound. They have lived longer than their children, they have learned from experience, and they are eager to save their children from some of the mistakes which they have made. Furthermore, in most cases, love as well as experience makes the wisdom all the more acceptable. The wise son or daughter, will try to "keep the commandment of his father, and will not forsake the law of his mother." In any event, where there is disagreement between parents and children, there should be a frank and full discussion of the matter, and not flagrant disobedience on the part of the children. On the other hand, parents should try to get the viewpoint of the children. Many a young person has discovered later in life, sometimes too late in life, that father and mother did know best. Mark Twain once said that the most amazing thing that ever happened to him, was the discovery of how much his father had learned between the time when he (Mark Twain) was sixteen and the time he had become twenty one. It was just Twain's way of saying that he had discovered that his father really did know best.

The writer of these words was speaking out of his own experience. "I was a son unto my father . . . and he taught me, and said unto me, Let thy heart retain my words; keep my commandments and live." He was eager to pass on his accumulated wisdom to, and to share his experience with, his own son.

The Inner Light.

"Bind them continually upon thy heart; tie them about thy neck. When thou walkest it shall lead thee, when thou sleepest it shall watch over thee, and when thou walkest it shall talk with thee. For the commandment is a lamp; and the law light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life." What is this man saying? He is saying that one should have in his heart high standards of conduct, an inner righteousness, a consecration to high ideals, an integrity of character. One is to take his ideals not from the crowd, but from his conscience. Moral precepts are as a lamp unto one's feet, and as a light unto one's pathway. Reproof and even punishment is beneficent—they seek to guide one into the way of life. Happy is the young man or the young woman, who orders his or her life by the moral precepts instilled into their hearts by a wise and loving father and mother. When such a young person comes to the forks in the road, or faces temptation, he will have an inner light which will guide him into the way of life.

A Foolish and Wicked Son.

"A foolish son is the calamity of his father" or as the RSV puts it, "A foolish son is ruin to his father." How many heavy-hearted and broken hearted fathers and mothers there are, because their children have made fools of themselves and have made a mess of life. Money, position, power mean nothing to them because of wayward children. On the other hand there are those who have little of this world's goods, but who are happy and rich because their children honor them and walk in their ways.

A Contentious Wife.

"And the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping." What does that mean? I did not know until I looked at the Revised Standard Version and read as follows: "And a wife's quarreling is a continual dripping of rain." Have you ever sat in a room in which you could hear the drip, drop, drip of a drop of rain on the roof! I heard about a prisoner who was being punished by having drops of water, one after the other to fall on his bare arm. He went crazy, loony, nuts. Well, says this wise man—I wonder if he were speaking out of experience—a woman who is always nagging her husband is enough to drive him nuts. And a nagging husband is, of course, just as bad. Many homes have been broken up by constant nagging on the part of one or the other of the spouses. And many homes, which have not been broken up, have little joy of peace because there is contention and quarreling and nagging.

A Good Wife, God's Best Gift.

"A prudent wife is from Jehovah." God has many good things which he gives to the children of men, but from the human standpoint, there is no gift of his that surpasses the gift of a good woman to a man. "The woman thou gavest me"—do you feel that way about your wife? And do you thank God again and again for that good woman he gave you? What is just as much to the point, do you thank the good woman herself? Brother if you have a good wife, a loyal, faithful, sensible wife you ought to thank God again and again and again. And you ought to thank her too.

"Her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband trusteth in her . . . she doeth him good and not evil all the days of her life." This is a part of the description of a good woman which the writer of Proverbs gives in the language of his day. A wife whom you can trust, depend on, count on, one who seeks the highest welfare of her loved ones, one who looks well to her household, tragedy of tragedies is that so many people follow the example of the dumb animals! Dumb animals are not required to give any account to God; but every person must give to God an account of himself—the use he has made of his life, his time, his talents and his possessions. We may ignore God here; but we cannot ignore him “there.”

(Continued on page 15.)

THE CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION OF PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(Continued from back page.)

The “one-talent” person is just as much under obligation to use his one talent for God, and for good, as is the person having five talents under obligation to use his five talents. All are blessed with talent or talents.

Talent is not always evidenced by production, but may be evidenced by appreciation of what others produce. All cannot paint the master-pieces; but all can develop the talent to appreciate them. All may not have the talent for public-speaking; but all can cultivate the talent of being a good listener. All cannot be great musicians; but all can develop the talent of being able to appreciate good music. All cannot be great writers; but all can develop the talent to appreciate good literature.

The talent of appreciation—the capacity to appreciate what others do—is as important as the talent to produce. Too many people take everything for granted and thus cheat themselves and their fellowmen out of the glorious blessing of appreciation—the elixir of life.

DR. SLOAN REVIEWS TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.

(Continued from page 8.)

government. America has had great good-will and generosity, but is badly lacking in experience. We are so sure that we are right, and we can't understand how any sincere people could differ from us.

Mrs. Sloan and I have learned a lot about the cleverness of Communism. Russia has had extensive experience for centuries with both the West and the Orient. The Communists have made use of this learning of their Czarist predecessors. But the world is not divided between Communists and the West. There is a large Oriental block that holds the balance of power and knows it. It finds some value in each side, but is determined to be dominated by neither. The people sneer at much of Communism, but are determined no longer to be dictated to by the West. They want to compete for world markets upon a basis of equality, no longer to be discriminated against. Freedom for the Philippines, the doing away of racial segregation, the appointing of Negroes to foreign posts, the reduction of our support of European colonialism, are beginning to strengthen the respect in which we are held in Asia, but we have much to learn. Communists still outsmart us in psychological warfare.

Our trip around the world has strengthened our conviction that the greatest hope for the world lies in religion. Wherever we went, we found great interest in the World Council of Churches meeting being held at Evanston, Illinois. A divided, quarrelling Christianity will make little positive impression upon the world. Denominational differences must be forgotten. Theological controversies must be discarded. Jesus' picture of God and his aim of an abundant life for all people must be the purpose of Christianity if it is not to become an unimportant historical memory.

W. W. SLOAN.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

by Mr. and Mrs. J. Oliver Strickland. Mr. Strickland and the pastor donned derby and cane and led in group singing. Before the benediction was pronounced, there was as much laughter as there was song.

Mrs. Humphries and Mrs. George Pruitt were co-chairmen and co-toastmistresses of the party. All who came, went on their way rejoicing, happy over the party, and glad they had helped the building fund of the church.

JERRY HUMPHRIES.
(Mrs. Tucker G.)

* * * * *

Wrong Person Gets Credit

The article entitled “China Reunion” on this page last week was written by Mrs. R. L. Jackson, and not “Mr.” Those who know the two probably recognized the article as being from the pen of Dorothy. Anyhow, we want her to get credit for it, especially since it was on the woman's page!

* * * * *

Need Thank Offering Program?

Mrs. W. B. Williams, 1253 24th Street, Newport News, Virginia, the president of the Southern Convention women, has recently sent a copy of the Thank Offering Service to each woman's society. In case some society failed to get a copy, please write Mrs. Williams, and she will see that you receive one.

* * * * *

North Carolina Woman's Officers For 1954-55

President—Mrs. Mark Andes, So. Boston, Virginia.

Vice-President—Mrs. W. E. Briggs, 1402 Richardson Dr., Reidsville, N. C.

Secretary—Mrs. Walter Hall, 162 Third Avenue, Danville, Va.

Treasurer—Miss Susie D. Allen, 612 Lane St., Raleigh, N. C.

Chairmen.

Spiritual Life—Mrs. H. E. Robinson, 522 Parkview Dr., Burlington, N. C.

Literature—Mrs. Wilson Graham, 409 Chapel Hill Rd., Burlington, N. C.

Family Life—Mrs. Ed. Chilton, 1214 Barnes St., Reidsville, N. C.

Life Memberships & Memorials—Mrs. W. B. O'Neill, Box 232, Sanford, N. C.

Interdenominational Cooperation—Mrs. R. V. Powell, 1813 Villa Dr., Greensboro, N. C.

Young People—Mrs. J. R. Ellis, 36 Davie Circle, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Children—Mrs. Ruth Rogers, Elon College, N. C.

Cradle Roll—Mrs. Mack V. Welch, 1612 Buffalo St., Greensboro, N. C.

Social Action—Mrs. Carl Wallace, 1011 Stamper Rd. Fayetteville, N. C.

Visual Aids—Mrs. K. D. Register, Rt. 2, Burlington, N. C.

Friendly Service—Mrs. W. E. Briggs, 142 Richardson Drive, Reidsville, N. C.

District Superintendents

Asheboro—Mrs. Bill Simmons, Rt. 1, Bennett, N. C.

Burlington—Mrs. T. D. Sutton, Rt. 3, Burlington, N. C.

Greensboro—Mrs. R. W. Isley, MeLeansville, N. C.

Halifax—Mrs. G. W. Pollard, Virgilina, Va.

Henderson—Mrs. E. M. Powell, 427 Andrews Ave., Henderson, N. C.

Raleigh—Mrs. R. L. Jackson, 232 McCauley St., Chapel Hill, N. C.

Sanford—Mrs. R. M. Cline, P. O. Box 133, Sanford, N. C.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

My good friend and former colleague in Suffolk, Dr. I. W. Johnson, had a birthday on October 3. The Holy Neck Church gave him and Mrs. Johnson a buffet supper, and they surprised Dr. Johnson with a gift of one dollar for each year. How do I know about it? Dr. Johnson endorsed the check over to the Christian Orphanage, and handed it back to the treasurer of the church. I dare not tell you how old Dr. Johnson is, but I shall say the check was for $80.00! The exclamation point is supposed to indicate gratitude that my good friend is so active and able to do such a fine piece of work as he has done at the Holy Neck Church. May the happiness which he brings others rebound upon his own pathway in double portion.

Last night I had supper with Coy Franklin, 409 Hyde Park Street, Durham, North Carolina. Coy spent ten years—he says very happy years—at the Christian Orphanage. He did four years in World War II, and had an important share in training dogs for war duty. He has a lovely home, a talented wife and two fine children—a girl and a boy. He is the new president of the Home-Coming Society of the orphanage. Throughout my visit I was thrilled and fascinated with his stories of “the days of yore.” He told how a poor mother was left with five little children. How the neighbors helped her and brought in food and clothing. And he told of the kind minister that spoke to her about the Christian Orphanage. He told of the marvelous home and service rendered those five children and how they had become useful citizens. He talked with me about his plans to get Durham friends interested in the good work being done at the orphanage.

I wish to quote from one of the monthly bulletins of another orphanage: “Our home has received an average of about $100.00 per month through coupons during the past year.” He goes on to tell of still another orphanage that receives around $5,000.00 annually for coupons. We receive around $75.00 per year from coupons. Could be more, could be right much more if our friends would just save them for us. We get around $8.00 per thousand for them, which is much more than is allowed for the regular customer. So save them, and send them to us. Soaps, cereals, flour, coffee, tea, packaged mixes of all kinds, etc. Every household has some of these. We need them all.

Watch out for the Thanksgiving special issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Read it, keep it, and rejoice with us in the response you can help it bring. Thanks for the good offering indicated in report attached. Thanks for all your kindness.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR OCTOBER 7, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:
Mrs. J. Franklin White, Waverly, Va.
Patterns:
The Textile Sales Room, Burlington, N. C.
Coupons:
Mrs. Floyd Turner, Suffolk, Va.
Candy:
Woolworth's, Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $ 9,987.02
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Bethel $ 32.25
Hope Mills 9.16

41.41

Eastern Va. Conference:
Dendron S. S. $ 20.20
Christian Temple 10.00
Rosemont, Special 80.00
Rosemont 110.00
South Norfolk 93.00
Waverly 38.25
Windsor 10.00

361.45

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Apple's Chapel $ 34.00
Elk Spur 5.00
Howard's Chapel S. S. 1.00

40.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Pleasant Grove $ 5.00

5.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethlehem S. S. $16.75
Dry Run S. S. 5.44

22.19

Total $ 470.05

Grand total $10,457.07

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $24,092.64
Chester H. Roth Co., Inc.
(interest) $ 7.50
I. H. Vickery, Henderson,
N. C. 100.00
Bequest of Miss Maggie
R. Byrd 50.00
Woman's Fellowship, Bay
View Cong. Christian
Church 11.99
D. M. McLelland, Elon
College, N. C. 10.00
John Chamblin, Gibson-
ville, N. C. 3.50
Mr. and Mrs. Sam H.
Scott, Winston-Salem,
N. C. 5.00
Arthur H. Rogers, Bur-
lington, N. C. 25.00
In Memory of Mrs. R.
Ellsworth Jones 10.00
In Memory of Mrs. R.
Ellsworth Jones 5.00
In Memory of Walter R.
Sellars 10.00
In Memory of Walter R.
Sellars 50.00
In Memory of I. A. Hogan 5.00
Special Gifts 363.30

656.29

Grand total $24,748.93

Total for the week $ 1,126.34

Total for the year $35,206.00

“What are you doing down there in the orphanage cellar?” asked the puzzled rooster.

“Well, if it's any of your business,” replied the hen, “I'm laying in a supply of coal for those nice little boys and girls!”

MEMORIAL GIFTS

“Instead of Flowers”

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

BRADFORD.

On December 31, 1953, Mrs. Jennie Willis Bradford, wife of Mr. Russell T. Bradford, Town Point, Nansemond County, Virginia, passed away after a brief illness. In her death, every department of the work of our church, in the Southern Convention, suffered a great loss. She was well known throughout the convention, and her interest in every phase of the work of the denomination, gave her a prominent place and much influence in the councils of the various organizations and institutions of the church. She was a woman of pleasing personality, given to genuine hospitality, with a background of deep spirituality and was consecrated to the work of extending the kingdom of God. Her interest in missions was stimulated by the teaching, enthusiasm and example of her distinguished father, the late beloved Dr. J. O. Atkinson. In her home, her beloved church, Berea, Nansemond, her conference and in the convention, she was willing to give her best to the advancement of the cause of Christ.

Many demands were made upon her time and talents for help in fields not directly related to the church, but conducive to the welfare of humanity. But the church was first, always, in her mind and heart. Her wise counsel, her gracious spirit, her progressive outlook and her devoted life brought to her many good and helpful friends. Her life was rich in spiritual qualities and she rejoiced in doing good to others.

She left a great influence upon the missionary work among the women of our church. This Missionary Conference is better because she lived and labored in our midst. We miss her good fellowship and helpful counsel. We cannot put into resolutions our full appreciation of her life and work. We loved her and we would remember her with deep gratitude and affection. We desire to record this simple tribute to her life; and, furthermore, to give this expression to our sorrow because of her home-going, and our resignation to the will of God. We especially wish to extend our sympathy to the bereaved family, and to hope that the work she loved in her local church, and in the missionary organizations of the convention, may prosper as moved by the will of our heavenly Father.

Mrs. HERBERT HARRELL,

Mrs. W. V. LEATHERS,

Mrs. I. W. JOHNSON,

Committee.

Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

as well as having a regard for the poor and needy, one whose finest apparel is the strength and dignity of her own character—such a woman has no price tag. Her price is far above rubies.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

Scripture Translations for South America

A modern Tower of Babel can be found today in neighboring South American countries where several of the Quechua languages are spoken. These dialects vary so greatly that it has been necessary to have Scripture translations in each one. For Peru, three new Quechua versions have been printed this year by the American Bible Society.

The Gospel of John in Ayacucho is the first complete Bible book in the language. Kenneth Case, a missionary, and Florencio Segura, an Indian evangelist and pastor, are working to complete the translation of the entire New Testament. A possible 500,000 use the language, of whom 15 per cent are literate.

Speakers of Huanuco Quechua, used in East Central Peru, now have 1,000 copies of the Gospel of Luke. The translation by Abraham de Ita is a revision of an earlier version. A Quechua Indian, De Ita now in his late thirties, attended the Christian and Missionary Alliance training school. At a time when no missionaries were available to direct the work of Bible translation, Senor de Ita undertook the task. Dr. Eugene Nida, Translation Secretary of the American Bible Society has said, "I was amazed at his remarkable understanding of Scriptures, and his appreciation of how to translate them. He is a very energetic fellow and very devoted to his task."

A near neighbor of Senor de Ita is another Bible translator, Candelaria Camargo, who lives just across a mountain ridge from him. Because of the mountains, however, their Quechua dialects have developed into almost distinct languages. Consequently Senor de Ita and Candelaria find it easier to converse in Spanish.

"Candelaria Camargo is not what one would call a Bible translator," writes Dr. Nida in his book, God's Word in Man's Language, "but she is typical of the scores of native Christian workers who wish to put the Scriptures into written form in their own mother tongue." Candelaria is a Quechua Indian from the valley of Junin. Through her labors, with the help of her brothers and Jamos Lauriault, a missionary, the Gospel of Luke has been translated and printed, the first publication in Junin Quechua.

Have You Read?

AN ADVENTURE WITH PEOPLE. Ferris E. Reynolds. The Christian Press. $1.50.

Dr. Reynolds has given his book the sub-title, "The Reading, Writing and Arithmetic of Teaching Religion." The book is just that. It deals with the practical issues of teaching the Christian religion. It is written for the average lay reader. The technical and the theoretical are studiously avoided.

The titles of the three divisions, "The Adventure," "The Teacher's Workshop" and "In the Classroom" indicate the practical nature of the treatment of the subject matter. Every Sunday school teacher should read this book and check his methods in the light of its message. It is an excellent book to place in the hands of prospective teachers.

S. C. H.

A PREGNANT SENTENCE.

(Continued from page 10.)

dipped his pen into the blood of his suffering and wrote words that are deathless." If I have read a more vital or vitalizing sentence than that I can't recall it at present. Following this sentence, Dr. Jones goes on to say, "Through long days and nights of pondering upon Jesus, his thoughts crystallized into immortal phrases through which men have looked into the heart of the redeeming God. And there the universal Christ grew upon him, and in piercing words he broke the remaining Jewish bonds that fettered the gospel and made it free to roam the earth untrammelled."

I thank God for Stanley Jones, for the little book referred to, and particularly just now for the pregnant sentence that has been named.

W. R. CULLOM.

Wake Forest, N. C.

"Stewardship is the pivot on which life turns."—E. Stanley Jones.

The Christian Conception of Personal Responsibility

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Christians think of life as being a gift from God, and that as such every person is responsible to God for the way one uses and orders one's life. Free Moral Agency being the heritage of every person, each individual is free to exercise this heritage in making one's decisions and commitments—what one will do with his life, his time, his talents, his possessions and all else associated with his life.

Christians believe that personality, the power of influence, intellectual capacity, personal talents, time, opportunity and life's assets in general constitute each individual's personal responsibility. And every individual is responsible to God, the Author of Life, and to society for the use one makes of it all. A person's concept of God, one's attitude toward the Author of Life—determines what the individual will get out of life and what contribution he will make to the world.

The concept of God as being the Designer and Creator of the universe and its laws, the loving Heavenly Father of the Human Family—that concept of God gives mankind its highest inspiration.

A person's attitude toward God and toward spiritual values is a clear index to one's character and culture. "The cattle on a thousand hills" crop the clover, but not one of them gives a thought about God who makes the clover grow. The squirrels gather their winter's supply of nuts; the birds enjoy their daily rations; all animal life partakes of nature's bounties without a thought of God as being the One who so generously provides for their needs. But men and women, created in the image of God, are supposed to live on a higher plane than do the animals of the field and forest or the birds of the air.

As human beings in receiving nature's bounties, we are prompted by gratitude and reason to ponder well the question—"Whence come these blessings?" And the fact that we are human beings imposes upon us the responsibility of using God's blessings in a way that will honor him. A sense of honor impells humans to acknowledge God as the Author of Life and the Giver of all life's blessings. No truly honorable person wilfully dishonors God or resolutely ignores him. Christians believe that the deepest and greatest satisfaction in life is to know in one's own heart that he is truly grateful to God for life and for the privilege of living in God's world, and that one sincerely purposes to honor God by keeping his Holy Commandments and by doing his Holy Will in all the relationships of life. The Christian believes that our lives are a personal gift from God, a trust from God to use and develop to God's glory.

Years ago, a young woman in London was lamenting the fact "that she could never be anybody." Dr. Theodore Parker of City Temple replied to her: "Young woman, God has never had the time nor the disposition to make nobodies; God made every person somebody. We alone are to blame if we are nobodies." The story goes on to relate that that young woman, though indignant at first because of the sharp retort, after reflection accepted the challenge of Dr. Parker's statement and became one of London's outstanding religious and social workers among the poor people of the city.

The world is groaning today beneath the burden of its "nobodies"—its people who have refused to recognize life as a stewardship, and have ignored their talents and capacities for service, using their time, their minds, their strength, their talents and their personalities for self and for self alone.

Only the "genus homo," of all the animal kingdom, is concerned about responsibility and service to others, or about the love of God. They alone erect temples in which to worship their Creator. They alone seek fellowship with the Divine. Dumb animals take their food and ask no questions and give no thought to the Giver of it all. And the (Please turn to page 13.)

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1954

NUMBER 41

Christlikeness Has No Competition

By REV. ROY L. SMITH, D. D.

"I yearn for you all with the affection of Christ Jesus."

--Philippians 1:8, R. S. V.

Jesus was very explicit about the matter. We were to love the brethren as God has loved us.

Something profoundly transforming took place along the Damascus road, when the killer was changed into a lover of the saints. And precisely that transformation is the miracle this old world needs, if its feet are ever to be set upon the way of peace.

"I could find all manner of flaws in his logic, and some of the reasons which seemed to carry so much weight with him appeared little better than ridiculous to me. But I could not resist the Christlikeness of the man. I could find no answer to that argument." So spoke a highly intellectual business man who has given his heart to Christ, and joined the church, and was sitting every sabbath under the ministry of a very ordinary preacher. Ordinary, that is, in matters of scholarship, learning and preaching skills. He was far from ordinary—very extraordinary, in fact—in the quality of the life he lived in Christ Jesus.

This world has never found a satisfactory substitute for simple Christlikeness. The fact is that the pagan world felt, somehow instinctively, that God was expressing his great love through Paul, and this explains the great Apostle's amazing skill in planting the church in scores of the great cities of the ancient world. It was more than a pretty phrase he used when he said, in his famous thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, "Love never fails." He had tried the principle out and had found that it worked. It was his love for the world and the saints which had made him the success he had become. His love was like that of Christ's.

There is a tremendous outreach in the word "yearn." It is as though the heart of the preacher was under a terrible strain, to the point of actual suffering. There is something just a little reminiscent of the sweat that dropped off the Master's brow as though it had been drops of blood. Let any church love its community in that fashion, and something is certain to happen.

News Flashes

The Board of Publications is meeting today, Thursday, October 21, in Henderson, North Carolina.

The Southern Convention Commission on Evangelism met at Elon College, North Carolina, on Thursday of this week.

The Rev. Olin Pendleton of First Church, Norfolk, spoke on "The Church in Hawaii" at Newport News Sunday Vespers.

The October issue of the Elon College Alumni News reached the desk of the managing editor the first of this week. It is filled with matter that should be of interest to alumni. If you by chance did not get your copy, write for it. You might also send your alumni association dues at the same time.

The proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical Reformed Church took a definite step forward at Cleveland, Ohio, October 12-14, when the Executive Committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the General Council of the General Synod of the Evangelical Reformed Church met in joint session. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, attended the meeting as a member of the Executive Committee, as did Supt. Wm. T. Scott, a corresponding member of the Executive Committee representing the Conferences and Conventions of our churches in the Southeast. We give in this issue a press report released by the joint bodies following the Cleveland meeting.

Virginia Valley Church Will Hold Revival

Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church at Tenth Legion, Virginia, has scheduled a "revival" or "preaching mission," beginning on Monday, October 25, at 7:30 p.m., and continuing each night through Friday, October 29, at the same hour.

The guest speaker for the revival will be the Rev. Richard L. Jackson, pastor of the United Congregational Christian Church in the university community of Chapel Hill North Carolina. (Continued on page 11.)

Christmas Fund for the Veterans of the Cross

For more than fifty years the people of our Congregational Christian Churches have contributed each December to a fund which provides special gifts for those of our ministry who are in need. It supplements the regular grants of the Ministerial Relief Division and stands ready to meet special emergencies as they arise in the families of our ministers.

Last year the Christmas Fund reached an all time high. The exact amount was $127,990.37, or $6,935.81 more than the previous year and $17,000 more than the best year before that. There were 6,646 gifts coming from individuals and churches from 41 states in addition to Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia.

At Christmas time 788 checks were sent. Since many of these checks went to married couples and some to widows with children, more than 1,000 persons benefitted from them.

These Christmas checks account for only part of the fund. Part of what we receive goes into an emergency fund for use throughout the year. Thus Christmas comes not once, but nearly every day of the year to some one who through illness or accident suddenly finds himself faced with a crushing burden of expense. An unexpected check at such an hour changes tragedy into hope and newness of life.

FRANK J. SCRIBNER,
General Secretary.

If all our misfortunes were laid in one common heap and each of us invited to take an equal portion, most folks would be contented to take just their own and depart.

—Anon.

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE:

Winchester, Virginia—October 13-14

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Rosemont Church, South Norfolk—November 3-4

Rev. J. Everette Neese, President

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., Secretary

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Piney Plains Church, near Raleigh—November 9

Rev. Will B. O'Neill, President

Rev. R. L. Jackson, Secretary

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11

Rev. M. A. Pollard, President

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro—November 16

Rev. Mark W. Andes, President

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The guest speaker for the other conferences will be Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of London, England. Dr. Berry is secretary of the International Congregational Council.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Southern Presbyterian Laymen Oppose Merger

Some 150 Southern Presbyterian laymen from half a dozen North Carolina counties, following similar action by South Carolina laymen, met in Burlington, North Carolina, recently to declare themselves opposed to the proposed union of their church with the Northern and United Presbyterian bodies.

They adopted a resolution describing the merger plan as one which threatened the absorption of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern) and the loss of its "more conservative theological and social emphasis."

The laymen said they felt that "the present-day ecumenical trend toward bigness and oneness will not necessarily result in more souls being saved for Christ or in a more effective witness to the unity of the church or in the impact of the church on the divided and sinful world."

According to a spokesman, E. W. Thompson, Jr., of Greensboro, the meeting was arranged by eight laymen without the knowledge of any clergymen. Mr. Steve White of Mebane was elected group chairman.

The General Assemblies of the Southern Church, the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. (Northern) and the United Presbyterian Church have voted to merge, but the union must be approved by presbyteries of all three groups.

The presbyteries are to report their decisions before the Assembly meetings next year. Two-thirds of the Northern and United bodies' presbyteries must approve, but the Southern group's rules require approval of three-fourths of its 84 presbyteries.—Exchange.

Resolution

Whereas John S. Graves has labored amongst us for the past two years and three months as Minister of Christian Education,

And has served with efficiency, patience, and devotion all ages of our constituency, especially the children and youth of our families,

And has sought by precept and example to set forth the Gospel of our Lord toward the training of minds and winning of souls,

And has been out-giving of his time, talent, and energies to the broader ministry to the community and the Convention in deeds of love, acts of service, occasions of pastoral ministry, and fellowship in the highest sense,

And because of these acts has now been called to a wider field of service with our Convention in the field of Christian Education,

Be it therefore resolved: that this congregation, the First Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina, express its sincere regrets in his relinquishing his post of service with it, but that it express to him its heartfelt gratitude for the rich contributions which he has made to its life and work, and that it extends every good hope that his new endeavors may be blessed with continued success, and that his return to it in his new capacity may be frequent, toward the end that his ministry may be a blessing to his own life and a joy to all he serves in the many churches and communities into which his duties may direct his path.

So ordered by the Official Board of the First Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina, in stated meeting September 29, 1954, and executed by the following officers of the church.

EUGENE A. GORDAN,
Chairman, Official Board.
HENERY E. ROBINSON,
Pastor.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardcastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Church Needs Spiritual Goals

The Church is both a natural body and a spiritual body. It is the Church visible and the Church invisible. It is the same combination as that about which St. Paul writes in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians. There is the same conflict between flesh and spirit.

Christianity is not the only religion which is conscious of this conflict. It has been a stone of stumbling to all religious thinkers. It centers around the problem of the good and the evil which make up life. Gautama Buddha wrestled with this problem and could find no hope of escape except in the renunciation and extirpation of all desires. To Buddha the goal of life could be attained only by the cutting of the ties which bind man to the natural order.

Christ followed the exact opposite of the course which Buddha advocated. Christ saw the world of nature as the creation of a loving heavenly Father. He believed that men who were completely dedicated to the doing of the Father's will could turn all the material resources of the earth to good and worthy ends. To love the material things of this world for their own sakes was to become a worshipper of Mammon. To dedicate the material to the attaining of spiritual purposes was to become a servant of the living God.

Christ was showing man how to make the self unselfish. He saw that the way to blessedness and peace was to make desires and aspirations conform to the will of God. "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me," said Jesus. He also said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

The Church is the body of Christ, under the same divine commission as was Jesus, to do the will of the Father in heaven. That is why we say that the Church needs spiritual goals. That which is spiritual must ever be kept before the eyes of those who are members of the body of Christ. Everything which enters into the life and program of the Church must be directed toward spiritual ends. "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

The Church faces the task of building a fellowship in which all of its members grow up to maturity in Christlikeness. The Church grows as and when its members grow. A church which is filled with men and women of little faith, can never become a church which is strong in faith. A church in which love is glorified must be made up of people whose hearts are filled with love.

This poses a real problem. Churches are constantly being tempted to think more about what people would like to have than about what God wants them to be. Members of the church frequently talk more about what they like and do not like, than about what God has revealed in Christ to be his will for mankind. Churches can be merely human institutions, but such churches can never constitute the body of Christ.

As the Church looks outward, in the light of the Great Commission, its concern about the people to whom it is sent, should be that they may come to know the Christ, whom to know aright is life everlasting. The members of the church are the true witnesses for Christ. If the Spirit of Christ is in the heart of a believer, then the Spirit of Christ will be revealed in the life of that believer. But it is impossible to impart what one does not have.

The Church can be the Church when it is predominantly spiritual. God is Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. The Church is to reveal Christ, for Christ is the perfect revelation of God. The need of the world is to learn how to use the material things which God has given in such a way as to glorify God. Therefore, the Church must ever be striving for spiritual goals.

WORSHIP

Life, to be wholesome, has to have balance. It needs to be well-rounded, not one-sided. The function of religion is not to monopolize life but to provide balance and control and sanity. This makes worship very important. In worship that is real, a man is brought face to face with God. That means painstaking preparation for worship must be made. The task of the minister is in truth an awesome responsibility. He is a guide who leads people into a discovery of God or who fails his people in life's most important quest.

—Stanley North.

Groups Meeting in Cleveland Vote Plan of Action on Merger

The executive committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the general council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, October 12-14, voted a plan of action to merge the two denominations into a new body, The United Church of Christ, by 1957.

Meeting jointly, the two executive bodies reaffirmed the Basis of Union with Interpretations as the basis for the merger. The Basis of Union had previously been approved by the Congregational Christian General Council and The Evangelical and Reformed General Synod. They set 1957 as the year for the calling of the Convening General Synod of the United Church of Christ.

The joint meeting authorized the appointment of a committee of lawyers to counsel the Congregational Christian executive committee and the Evangelical and Reformed general council on the concrete merger plans. Authorization was also voted for a program of education about the United Church to be carried on in local churches of the two denominations and for joint stewardship and evangelism programs to demonstrate the strength of the new union. Local churches and denominational boards and agencies of the two groups were urged to exchange fraternal delegates to foster fellowship and understanding.

The merger plan was adopted by a vote of thirty to two, with one abstention, in the joint meeting. Previously it had been voted by each denominational body, meeting separately.

Rev. Dr. Raymond B. Walker, the chairman of the Congregational Christian executive committee, and Rev. Dr. James E. Wagner, president of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, acted as chairmen of the joint sessions.

The plan of union of the two denominations was first approved by the Evangelical and Reformed General Synod in 1947 and by the Congregational Christian General Council in 1948. It was then approved by the votes of the regional synods of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the local Congregational Christian churches.

Merger action was halted by a suit brought by Cadman Congregational Church of Brooklyn, against the Congregational Christian General Council. The action was adjudicated in favor of the Council in March, 1954, by the New York Court of Appeals. The present action has resulted from endorsement of further merger negotiations by the Congregational Christian General Council at its biennial session meeting in June, 1954.

Following is the text of the merger document:

"'Christ calls us to mission and unity.' This challenge becomes ever more insistent as we live and labor in these disturbed days. The church must minister more effectively to the needs of our time. To this end, we believe that the Spirit of God is leading us in the direction of re-uniting the divided body of Christ.

"We believe that when the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church voted to enter into a union, this action was taken in response to this imperative. In consummating this union, we believe that we are following the leadership of the Holy Spirit.

"1. In accordance with actions of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, we reassert the validity of the Basis of Union with the Interpretations as the basis for this merger. We feel that the matter of the drafting of a constitution is adequately provided for in this instrument.

"2. We look forward to the holding of the Convening General Synod in 1957.

"3. We authorize the chairmen to appoint a joint committee of lawyers to counsel with the executive committee of the Congregational Christian Churches and the general council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church as may be requested.

"4. We authorize a joint project in some such area as stewardship or evangelism to help demonstrate the added strength which a united church will have. To this end, a joint committee of three from each group shall be appointed.

"5. We authorize that a program shall be launched to acquaint the members of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church with the advantages that will accrue with union. To this end a joint committee of three from each group shall be appointed.

"6. We recommend that local churches, commissions, boards, conferences, synods, associations and similar denominational groups be urged to invite fraternal delegates and observers from the other group to their meetings, to foster fellowship and understanding.

"7. We recommend that the executive committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches provide subscriptions to Advance for the members of the general council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and that the General Council provide subscriptions to The Messenger to the members of the executive committee of the Congregational Christian Churches.

"8. We agree that the executive committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the general council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church meet jointly within approximately six months, to hear reports, to study the Basis of Union and to take whatever further steps may be necessary. The time and place shall be left to the administrative committee of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the advisory committee of the Congregational Christian churches.

"9. We refer the implementation of items 4, 5 and 6 to the commission on interchurch relations and Christian unity of the Congregational Christian Churches and the committee on closer relations with other churches of the Evangelical and Reformed Church in consultation with the executive committee of the Congregational Christian General Council and the general council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church."

"We are encouraged by the spirit of understanding and mutual trust evident in this meeting. With faith in God and confidence in each other, we look forward to the consummation of this union. We are certain that any problems arising out of the union can be solved through God's grace and Christian love."

Human Relations for Churches

By DR. RICHARD K. MORTON

Churchmen are people. Sometimes we forget that—or find it hard to believe.

Churches are fellowships—groups of people, each individual having certain traits, powers, desires, and so on that must be related and adjusted to those of their fellow members.

Sometimes the work of Christ and the Holy Spirit is not done because Christians may not have found themselves, individually, as Christians, or they may never have gotten far in practicing the art of acting in concert as Christians.

I grew up in a minister's family, and for nearly half a century, as child and boy and man, I have had opportunity to note the beliefs and the actions of Christian people, especially as they acted together as churches.

By and large, our church people have faith and character and demonstrate love and true Christian concern for the world around them. They work against great odds, and they deserve much commendation for all that they do for the times in which they live.

No really frank Christian, I am sure, however, would claim that Christians—just by the very fact of their professing Christianity—have mastered the art of constructive human relations. There are many evidences that in some areas and at some times, Christians greatly mishandle their relationships with one another.

First of all, I think we too frequently do not pay enough attention to one another. We do not witness to one another; we do not introduce ourselves to one another freely enough; we do not show enough concern for one another. Sometimes church people do far less for the sick and troubled than the person's office, club, lodge, neighbors, and so on.

Secondly, we do not actively get into the business of working together by the means of seeking to co-operate with others, really getting to know what they can do, and the like. We do not warm up enough, share laughs and good times enough, and do those little things that mean so much.

Thirdly, we are not sufficiently careful in our conversations about others. Nothing harms the Christian cause much more than when we thoughtlessly and irresponsibly pass along comments about others which are mere prejudice, illfounded, and trivial. Outsiders love to get hold of evidences that church people gossip, squabble and haggle over unimportant details. They like to note signs of strife and discontent and personality conflicts between individuals. All this reflects upon the validity and usefulness of the Christian mission in the world today. This idea, of course, is expressed in a well-known passage pointing out that we cannot very well love God and serve him, whom we have not seen, if we cannot love and get along with those right around us, whom we can and do see.

Fourthly, on some occasions it would seem that we are, as individuals or as Christians, harder and harder to please. We utter criticisms that are not necessary, and often they are such that we are not really qualified to make them. We do not use enough tact or kindness. We must have things just right!

Fifthly, we are often careless about handling relationships with people in various church affairs.

Instances of this sort of occurrence might include being dictatorial on committees, forgetful to notify members of meetings, unwillingness to give others a chance to serve in some capacities, and so on. We say the hurtful and thoughtless word so often, or we are lacking in tact or knowledge of what a given person needs most from his church experience.

The Golden Rule is, of course, the ideal governing code for all human relationships, in church or out. If we want a happy and fruitful relationship within the church, we must be willing to do our full part. One of the most important elements in this situation is the contributing of real Christian friendliness and humility. The person who obviously is using the church to satisfy the desire for power or position, or the person who is ill-tempered and irresponsible, can do a great deal of harm.

Human relationships within churches, as elsewhere, require a broad view, so that we do not expect others to believe in all ways just as we do. They require an ability to put the things of Christ ahead of one's own selfish purposes. They require also that one should promote the best associations of the various social and functional groups within the church and between youth and adulthood. They require, furthermore, that all of us should be charitable in the face of circumstances we may not fully understand.

This last point has particular reference to the minister and any other staff member of the church. Before they are excoriated for supposed errors or weaknesses, the member needs to be sure that he knows just what the situation really is. Many, for instance, build up in their own minds an idea of just how many times the minister should visit them during a given year. Then, if he falls below that number, the "anvil chorus" begins.

Human relationships in this field too require that we should not fail to remember what honors, rights, and official duties certain ones have and then act accordingly. It is distressing to find some who go ahead with some idea, one which is often good, but without consulting an officer or committee chairman who has a natural concern for that type of work.

If churches are to be in important ways different from other institutions, they must excel in their human relationships. This must be manifest in bringing cheer, help, and inspiration to people of all ages and classes. They must provide defenses for those attacked, and practical aid for those distressed. They must display a finer type of association among people than other groups do. They must be ready to welcome the stranger and to befriend the lonely. They must make a specialty of the finest type of relationship between people through the instrumentality of stimulating them in the development of their spiritual life. They must work at all possible means of developing in people the basic traits of Christian character. It will help much if they regularly give compliments and cheer to those who officially serve the church and if they themselves eschew all situations which would create a bad situation or impression in the community.

No church fellowship can do very effective spiritual work if the personal relationships of the people are not in good order. A quarrelsome or divided church is a reproach to our faith, and it belies our professions.

As we create an earthly fellowship of love and co-operation, we lay the foundation for the kingdom of God upon earth.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Virginia Valley Central Conference

The annual sessions of the Virginia Valley Central Conference are always interesting occasions. As a rule, the majority of the churches in the Valley are represented by delegates and visitors. There is always in evidence a very fine fellowship. The atmosphere of the conference is pleasing and inspiring. The programs are well planned and, as a rule, executed with precision and effectiveness. For the last twenty-two years it has been the privilege of the writer to attend the annual sessions of the conference. I do not always get to the mid-year meetings but I try always to be present for the annual sessions. This year the conference met at the First Church in Winchester, Reverend R. A. Whitten, pastor. Winchester is rather on one side of the conference; that is, it is rather far removed from many of the churches in the Valley. There are twenty-one churches, nineteen of which were represented by delegates and many visitors. All ministers in the conference were present. The first session was held Wednesday, October 13, at 10:00 a. m. The president called the conference to order. Superintendent Scott was not present for the first time since he has been superintendent. His message arrived later and was read to conference by the secretary, Mr. Clarence Phillips.

Dr. John Francis McClland, pastor of the Congregational Church, Silver Springs, Maryland, was the speaker. He gave a very excellent address on Church Extension. Dr. John G. Truitt was present and presented the claims of the orphanage. The writer spoke with reference to the needs of the college and its program. Reverend Fred Register, the newly elected secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism, gave a very convincing address at the evening service. The address was well received and the conference was delighted to have Fred present.

Communion services were administered by the pastor, Reverend R. A. Whitten. The usual reports were received and passed upon. Of course, the one big item of business was the presentation and disposition of the new schedule of conference apportionments to the local churches. For this particular conference the new apportionments represented practically double what the churches had been contributing for the different causes of the convention. There was considerable discussion, no one seemed to be particularly opposed to the items that were being asked of the churches but the feeling was that they just could not do it. After considerable discussion, however, the following motion was submitted by the apportionment committee and was passed:

"We, your committee on apportionment, recommend that we set as our goal the new apportionment table that has been recommended by the Finance Committee of the Southern Convention."

It seemed that all present felt that this was a big undertaking but since the convention had made the request, they were willing to undertake it and do the best they could. It was really a triumph and a magnificent occasion. The action taken was significant. This was the first conference to meet and consider the new apportionment table. It was passed, thereby setting an example for the remaining conferences of the convention as they meet in annual session.

The following officers were elected by the conference for the ensuing year:

President—Clarence A. Phillips.

Vice-President—Robert A. Whitten.

Secretary—Rev. Henry V. Harman.

Asst. Sec.—Miss Gene Fahnestock.

Treasurer—O. W. Andes.

Delegate to Virginia Council of Churches—Leonard Higgs.

Member Executive Board of Southern Convention—Rev. Cameron D. Hayes.

The conference voted to meet at the Mayland Church, near Broadway, for the 1955 session.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The closing weeks of the local conferences are not always of intense interest to the local church itself. At the Valley of Virginia Conference that was held last week, one man reporting for his church stated that he thought that all apportionments for his church had been raised in full until they checked up and found they lacked $50.00. He said that it required a lot of effort but they got the money. Then, he exhorted all present to try to raise their apportionments week by week and month after month, then when the end of conference came, they would have all funds in hand and be ready to complete their report to conference. This is sound advice and if followed sincerely and earnestly will succeed and everybody will be happy.

Of the twenty one churches in the Valley Conference, twelve had raised their apportionments in full prior to the meeting of conference. I am sure that others reported all items paid in full before the conference session closed.

I presume that every board, institution, and interest supported in part by the churches through conferences is greatly interested and concerned as to what the final results will be. We check and double-check to see how we are progressing in comparison to the previous year, we are about $200 ahead of the amount received as of even date twelve months ago. Whatever the churches contribute is greatly appreciated by the college.

Previously reported $ 7,995.34

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Hope Mills$ 44.00
Mt. Gilead 34.00
New Elam 13.00

Eastern Va. Conference:

Oakland$ 52.38
Christian Temple 670.41
Union (Surry) 13.65

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Howard's Chapel S. S. ...$ 3.00
Burlington, First, S. S. .. 125.81
Mt. Zion 54.76
Rocky Ford 11.00

Western N. C. Conference:

Albemarle$ 10.00

Virginia Valley Conference:

Mt. Olivet (G) S. S. ...$ 3.25

1,035.26

Total to date $ 9,030.60

The safety of our form of government, the safety of democracy, rests upon the orderly progress which comes from the clash of conflicting opinions. Repression is not only the enemy of free government, but it is the breeder of revolutions. It is the enemy of progress and human happiness. And above all, it is neither a test of error nor of truth.

—William E. Borah.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference

It was a beautiful, cool day for the meeting of the Forty-second annual session of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference when it met on October 7, at the Oakland Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia.

Mrs. B. V. Hargrave of Franklin led the service of devotion, using the theme, "Out of the Heart of the Gospel." Mrs. A. L. Wagoner of the local church extended a cordial welcome to the more than three hundred representatives of the thirty-four churches, and their ministers who were present.

Miss Jennie Doidge delighted her audience with stories of her travels.

Mrs. George Cornell, the treasurer, stated the financial report was the best she had ever made, it having exceeded the goal of ten thousand dollars.

Mrs. E. G. Middleton conducted an impressive memorial service, honoring those who had received Life Membership certificates and paying tribute to those who are no longer among us. She lighted three candles in memory of Dr. N. G. Newman, Mrs. Jennie Willis Bradford, and Mrs. Elizabeth Hargrove.

The superintendents and leaders of the various departments told of outstanding achievements during the past year and referred to the reports in the Report Booklets which had been prepared and distributed by Mrs. Ray Gordan and Mrs. R. E. Brittle.

Mrs. L. W. Stagg, chairman of the Southern Convention Thank Offering project, urged the women to make a real Thank Offering for the new church in South Boston.

The conference expressed appreciation to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill for her years of devoted service to the work of the children, young people, and women in the conference. Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Southern Convention Women, installed the officers as follows:

President—Mrs. Garland Spartley, Dendron.

Vice-President—Mrs. Ray Gordan, 218 Grace St., Suffolk.

Rec. Secretary—Mrs. Edward Johnson, Rt. 3, Suffolk.

Corres. Secretary—Mrs. Frank H. Lewis, 1200 Spartley St., Portsmouth.

Treasurer—Mrs. George Cornell, Rt. 2, Box 376, Suffolk.

Departmental Superintendents.

Young People—Mrs. Clyde Fields, Hunterdale, Franklin.

Children—Mrs. Shirley Holland, Windsor.

Cradle Roll—Mrs. Allen Piland, Rt. 2, Holland.

Chairmen.

Christian Family Life—Mrs. W. Millard Stevens, 6049 Newport Ave, Norfolk.

Interdenominational Cooperation—Mrs. Olin Pendleton, 129 Hardy St., Norfolk.

Life Memberships & Memorials—Mrs. E. G. Middleton, 2942 Amherst St., Norfolk.

Literature—Mrs. L. J. Brown, 40 Walnut St., Newport News.

Spiritual Life—Mrs. Raye Knight, Chuckatuck.

Visual Aids—Mrs. Walter Seedley, R. F. D., Waverly.

Superintendent of Norfolk District—Miss Caroline Gort, 1713 Spratley St., Portsmouth.

Superintendent of Suffolk District—Mrs. Ellis Clark, Walters.

Superintendent of Waverly District—Mrs. Frank Sodomka, 106 Third Ave., Hopewell.

MRS. GARLAND SPARTLEY,
President.

* * * * *

Importance of the Thank Offering

Early records show that the Thank Offering has played a very important part in the women's work of the Southern Convention. The Thank Offering meeting usually held in November with a specially prepared program, has with the majority of the societies been the highlight of the eleven meetings. The interest has been enhanced because of its difference; it's a special, a love gift, over and above all requirements.

It has been the ruling to give for the foreign work one year, and to the home the next. Gifts have been sent to China, Japan, India, the Philippines, and to many worthy and needy points at home.

This is the year for the home project. To determine this a committee of three was appointed, one from each of the three Women's Conferences. The decision was a difficult one, as each conference had newly organized work that would welcome the "boost" the Thank Offering could give. Finally the decision rested with the worthy and promising project in South Boston, Virginia. This was accepted by the Women's Mission Board of the Southern Convention, and in turn recommended to the three conferences.

Rev. Mark Andes, and his lovely, capable wife, have taken over this work with belief and enthusiasm. They have been greatly encouraged by the willing sacrifice of the membership to help in every possible way. In speaking of the work someone said, "I'm reminded of the story of Nehemiah, when all had a mind to work."

A full description of the South Boston Church is given in the very splendid Thank Offering Program prepared by Mrs. J. H. Booth, Jr. These programs have been sent to each society for use in November.

In giving this program it is hoped all may catch something of the spirit of Rev. Mark Andes when he said: "I feel there is a great work to do for the Master in this area, and our church named Center Congregational Christian Church feels spirit-impelled to share in that ministry."

MRS. L. W. STAGG, Chairman,
Thank Offering Committee.

* * * * *

Sincere Sympathy

The sympathy of the women of the Southern Convention is extended to Mrs. Robert G. Williams of Lake Worth, Florida, because of the death of her beloved husband on October 6. A memorial service was held on Sunday afternoon, October 10.

Mrs. Williams is the first president of the International Fellowship of Congregational Women. She has been the president of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women. The editor of this page remembers her very well as the president of the Florida Fellowship of our church women. In that capacity she was the speaker at the rallies in the Southern Convention one year.

(Continued on page 9.)

Missions at Home and Abroad

Dr. and Mrs. Edward Clark Riggs Returned to Work in India

A young American doctor, a World War II Army veteran, and his nurse wife, Dr. and Mrs. Edward Clark Riggs, Congregational Christian workers among the Tamil people, sailed Friday, October 15, on the S. S. United States from New York City en route to the village of Kilan-Junai, South India where they are living and working on the village level in a pioneer piece of medical and social work. With them are their three children, Louis Eugene, born in China; Joy Louise, born in India and Martha Jane, born last January in California.

Both Dr. Riggs and his wife are fourth generation missionaries. Both also enlisted for service in China under the American Board of Foreign Missions, which is the overseas service arm of the Congregational Christian Churches. There they met and married. They became "displaced missionaries" in 1950 because of the Communists and transferred to India where they have specialized in preventive health work.

The Riggs were invited to the village of Kilan-Junai by the Indian people and there they conduct a clinic. They live in a house made of local bricks, with a thatched roof, cement floor and rafters of palm slabs.

Dr. Riggs, who was born in Denver, Colorado, spent much of his early boyhood in Turkey where his parents, grandparents and great grandparents were missionaries. He worked his way through the University of Colorado and the University of Colorado, School of Medicine. He served a rotating internship in the New York City Hospital and a straight internship in Boston City Hospital.

His plans for going to China as a medical missionary were delayed by Uncle Sam, and he first spent four years in military service. In 1946, Captain Riggs sailed for China and worked in Shaowu and Foochow until 1950.

In India, the Riggs worked first at Madura in the Pierce Hospital, but later were invited to Kilan-Junai to do the kind of health education on the grass roots level which seems to them of such paramount importance.

On this last furlough, Dr. Riggs completed his academic work for his Master of Public Health degree at the University of California, School of Public Health, earning straight A's and resulting in his election to the Public Health Honor Society, Delta Omega. He also worked with foreign students, spoke widely, and participated in the Institute on Community Mental Health held by the University.

DR. EDWARD C. RIGGS

Mrs. Frances Whitaker Riggs is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Robert B. Whitaker of San Jose, California. She was educated at Willamette University, San Jose State College, the University of Oregon, School of Nursing (RN) and the School of Nurse-Midwifery, Maternity Center Association, New York. She went to China in 1946 under a program sponsored by the Southern Convention.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 8.)

And some people in our churches in the Southern Convention will remember her still further back when she was "Mary Ann Jeffreys," a student summer service worker, who conducted vacation Bible schools in such areas as the Sophia-Flint Hill parish and Providence Chapel.

Robert Williams "redeemed"

Mary Ann from the latter category, but with his loving interest he watched her—and helped her—as she has reached the highest office in Women's work in our denomination. He will be greatly missed by many people in many places.

* * * * *

Burlington Begins New Year's Work

On October 4, the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Congregational Christian Church at Burlington, N. C., met to begin a new year of service. Sixty-two women were present.

Mrs. E. T. Sanders, president, was in the chair and presented an inspiring devotional.

Before entering the business session, Mrs. Sanders recognized Mrs. W. W. Horne, who presented Mrs. Ernest Sellers a lovely orchid on her eightieth birthday and in appreciation of her years of service.

Following the business session, Mrs. Roy Ireland gave the year's history of the Auxiliary. Through its pages the months' activities passed in review. Some interesting facts were brought to light. Not only were all the goals met, which were set by the Woman's Missionary Convention, but as stated in the history, "Many kindnesses have gone through the Auxiliary by individual members as shown by the total of 2,095 visits made, 2,216 cards sent, 636 flowers, and 566 trays given, also 61 books." The Financial Report showed a total of $2,896.40 raised, this being divided into many services of the Auxiliary. Mrs. Ireland closed her history with the beautiful poem:

Christ has no body now on earth but yours,
No hands but yours, no feet but yours,
Yours are the eyes through which is to look out

Christ's compassion to the world,
Yours are the feet on which he is to go about doing good,
And yours are the hands with which he is to bless us now.

During the luncheon served by Circle No. 1, Rev. John Graves was presented a gift of money from the women of the church in appreciation of his services.

The Auxiliary, under the leadership of its new officers, looks forward to a year of greater accomplishments for Christ and his Kingdom.

MRS. M. Z. RHODES,
Publicity Chairman.

* * * * *

Dendron Reports Highlights

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Dendron Church has met all (Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Hurricane Hazel whistled passed us last Friday. She tossed a lot of us about. We knew a little girl who was going to celebrate a birthday and her friends couldn't reach her party. She was sad, her friends were disappointed and her mother and father had baked many cupcakes which looked like a lot to eat in the coming days. Although she felt sad she got along fairly well until bedtime when she asked: "Daddy, why did God keep me from having my birthday party?"

That is a question that folks big and little may ask—"Why this?" "Why that?" As for the hurricane no one knows what really makes them start. Weathermen and scientists have observed them and they know that the storm builds up, it is a heat-driven air mass that needs a lot of water vapor to start updrafts, and it needs to start five degrees or so from the equator. Here the heat, water, drafts and air pressures are right for a mighty blow. The storm has an eye which is the calm center and the excitement is spread out, and hurricanes travel 10 to 20 miles per hour, usually spreading eastward as they travel to the north. (I am indebted to Dean Daniely of Elon for my knowledge of storms.)

Does God send us storms to hurt us? Of course not! God sets forces to work in his universe, some of which have good and bad influences, and once started they cannot be stopped, not even for lovely little girls' parties. While much damage is done we must think about what would happen if we didn't have the water, water vapor and wind. Good and bad may come from the same things. Let us think about the goodness of God's world and how many good days there are as compared with the few bad ones.

God does not want his little ones to be hurt, but if they rush into the path of the storm they will surely have trouble. As we learn more of God's plan and the workings of his world, we can avoid some hurts. We have learned how to avoid smallpox germs and thus not be harmed with the disease. There are men who are studying how hurricanes form and perhaps someday they will tell us they can use the storm's energy or how to avoid it.

Barring accident, it was a great show. The sea was lashing angrily and the clouds were rolling. Trees were bending and those that didn't were uprooted. That made me think of people—those who bend to God's plan work on, and those who stand hard against him, fall in the end.

Here is a grace that is used by our President's grandchildren: "We close our eyes. We bow our heads. We thank Thee for our daily bread." Amen.

* * * * *

Education Through Play

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Although a very busy woman, Mary never seemed rushed or worried. Her family, besides her husband, consisted of the three-year-old twins, Gerry and Peter, her four-year-old daughter, Ruth, and Douglas, who was six.

My back yard was opposite Mary's, and I often made neighborly calls by way of the back door. Her home was a pleasant place to visit, for there was a cheery atmosphere about it. Although the children were much in evidence, they were happily employed and did not try to monopolize their mother's time. Since I was looking forward to motherhood, I was most interested to learn Mary's secret of good management.

One morning I sat chatting with Mary in her kitchen while she put together the ingredients for a cake. The children were playing in the living room, and I could hear their merry chatter, broken at times by a joyous shout or burst of laughter, and I asked the mother how she kept them happy and contented all of the time.

"I keep them busy," she answered. "If you would keep children happy, that is the secret. Physical activity is as necessary to children as is breathing, so I give them something that will occupy their fingers as well as their minds. Such material need not cost much. In fact, a kettle of empty spools, or a box of kindergarten sticks, or a few blocks can give endless pleasure. Dressing and undressing dolls gives girls lasting satisfaction, too. But always there should be something to manipulate that is attractive to each age and disposition. This cake is ready for the oven, so come to the living room and you will see for yourself what I mean."

We found the rugs rolled up, and small Gerry and Peter, evidently potential farmers, busy with a bundle of colored kindergarten sticks, building fences and a corral for their miniature animals. The corral was almost finished, and a cow and horse were safely enclosed within.

"That's Jake and that's Betsy," explained Peter. "It does seem a shame to fasten them up; but, then if they will jump fences, what can they expect?"

One end and one side of the fence the twins had kept straight by laying the sticks along the corner lines of the linoleum, and for the other side and end they were following along a yardrule.

"You see," said their mother, "they are learning to use their fingers, also to make straight lines and to think things out. They are developing their imagination."

Douglas was on his knees on the opposite corner of the rug, building a house with odds and ends from a lumber yard, which had been made attractive with leftover paints. "You see houses made from all colors like this," he informed me. "But they're always getting new ideas, you know."

Ruth had appropriated a packing carton as her playhouse, and dolls of all sizes and in all states of repair were being cared for. Some were tucked snugly in paper-box beds, while others had finished their nap and were being dressed.

"Practically all girls are potential mothers," Mary explained, "but no child wants to sit and cuddle a doll all day. A little girl must be allowed to play the role of an active mother. Children must be allowed to play with things that will require them to use their fingers. In that way they develop their creative powers and their imagination."

"Besides keeping contented and happy, children, through play of this kind, learn many useful lessons, I can see," I answered. "Thank you for showing me this room."

Anyone who thinks he's indispensable should stick his finger in a bowl of water, and then notice the hole it leaves when he takes it out.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

No Tips From Tom

The material from the editor of this page must have gone astray in the mail. At time to go to press, it had not arrived.

* * *

Why has no one sent in a resume of the Youth Fellowship meeting recently held at Rosemont Church, in South Norfolk? Certainly there was enough worthwhile action to merit its publication.

* * *

At the dedication services last Sunday afternoon of the new Fellowship and Recreation Center of our Richmond, Virginia, church, the Youth Fellowship served delightful refreshments to about 150 people who were present.

A Word to Young People

Let us assume that you are in high school and that you are just learning to drive a car and that you came to one of us for straight-forward advice about drinking in general, and about drinking and driving in particular. What would we as a psychiatrist for a hospital or as a chemist for a police department say to you?

First, we would try to make it absolutely clear . . . that alcohol is a habit-forming narcotic, dangerous both to your physiological make-up and your psychological make-up. . . .

Second, we would try to explain the social pressures that are at present inducing far too many young people to take the first drink. We would explain the total inadequacy of leaning on alcohol as a crutch in your social life. We would point out that the liabilities of social drinking far outweigh the so-called "assets" of social drinking.

Third, we would draw upon our experience with hundreds of alcoholics and criminals to point out that alcohol is both directly and indirectly responsible for much of the crime, poverty and sickness in the world, and, in this connection, would try to make clear just how extensively heavy drinking and alcoholism is sapping the vitality of this country.

Fourth, we would remind you that in the United States we have at least three million problem drinkers, and that science cannot predict whether or not you will become an alcoholic if you start drinking. The alcoholic is worthy of our help, but only total abstinence will solve this problem.

—A. T. A. Bulletin.

Earliest Known Christian Hymn

The stanzas given below were written by Clement of Alexandria, about the year A. D. 220. They have been said to be the earliest known Christian hymn:

*Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
Christ, our triumphant King,
We come thy name to sing
And here our children bring
To shout thy praise.*

*Thou art our holy Lord,
O all-subduing Word,
Healer of strife;
Thou didst thyself abase,
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou mightest save our race,
And give us life.*

*Thou art the great High Priest;
Thou hast prepared the feast
Of holy love.
And in our mortal pain,
None call on thee in vain;
Help thou dost not disdain,
Help from above.*

*Ever be near our side,
Our Shepherd and our Guide,
Our staff and Son;
Jesus, thou Christ of God,
By thine enduring Word,
Lead us where thou has trod,
Make our faith strong.*

*So now, until we die,
Sound we thy praises high,
And joyful sing;
Let all the holy throng
Who to thy Church belong,
Unite and swell the song
To Christ, Our King!*

Youth Wants Our Help

Add to youth problems today liquor advertising in its most seductive forms, with motion pictures, TV and radio making it appear that drinking and conviviality are the popular, harmless amusements of the day, and we have social, moral and spiritual delinquency as a natural result.

This matter is of grave concern to the home, to schools to churches and to the nation as a whole. The youth of today are beginning to see the perils they face. The youth of one town in Idaho petitioned the city fathers to do away with the too easy access to beer and the careless sale to minors. Another youth group in Idaho put on a campaign to secure additional subscriptions to the Idaho Challenge.

The surprise of many is the eagerness with which young people in our public schools listen to those trained to present the dangers of alcohol from a scientific view point.

Our need today is for all who are concerned in this problem to speak out and help our young people to realize that liquor too often closes the door to success and opens the way to failure and defeat. . . .

It is time for America to wake up. It may be later than we think. Juvenile delinquency must be faced and conquered. We may not be able to do everything, but we can do something. What we can do, we ought to do, with the help of God.—The Idaho Challenge.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CHURCH WILL HOLD REVIVAL.

(Continued from page 2.)

olina. "Dick," as he is affectionately known to his many friends, is no stranger in Rockingham County. He spoke here in 1945 on the eve of leaving the United States for missionary service at Shaowu and Foochow, Fukien, China, where he was under the American Board. While in China he did general administrative work, served as religious education secretary of the Mid-Fukien Synod, Church of Christ in China, and was teacher of industrial arts in the Union High School of Foochow. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson stayed in China until anti-American pressure made it necessary for them to leave in January, 1951.

Back in the United States, Rev. Mr. Jackson has been very popular and effective with young people. The Bethlehem Church considers itself very fortunate to obtain the services of Mr. Jackson, and is glad to invite the public to attend the revival services.

RALPH GALT,
Pastor.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

The Dignity of Work

LESSON V—OCTOBER 31, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men." Proverbs 22: 29.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Proverbs 6: 6-11; 12, 24, 27; 13, 11; 14, 23; 15, 19; 18, 9; 24, 30-34.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 4: 11-16.

The Duty of Work.

Most of us have to work. We do different kinds of work, we work in different places, we work under different conditions, we work for different people, we work for different financial rewards. But work we do, because for the most part, work we must. For many of us, indeed most of us, if we do not work we will not eat, and our loved ones will not eat. Most of us have to work.

The Dislike of Work.

Most of us, at times, wish we did not have to work. We look upon work as a burden and almost as a curse. This is true, not only of children and young people who have an aversion to work, but it is true of grown folks too. Many people will do almost anything to get out of, or to keep out of work. They will feign illness, steal, lie, cheat, even kill, to keep from working. And many people who work, do it grudgingly, grimly, glumly. They get no joy out of it, and rebel against it.

The Dignity of Work.

These things ought not so to be. Today's lesson says it ought not so to be. And the Scriptures uniformly say that it ought not so to be. For work has an innate dignity. It is divinely ordained, divinely commanded, and divinely rewarded. And this is true whether a man works with his hands at humble tasks, or whether he is a "white collar" fellow, or a "big shot" president of a modern corporation. All honest work has dignity.

1. Work is divinely ordained. God wove it into the very structure of the universe. In the Garden of Eden, a veritable paradise, supposedly the ideal place of ideal circumstances, there was work to do. The Lord God put man in the garden of Eden "to dress it and to till it and to keep it." And God did this for at least two reasons: as a means of disciplining and developing man, and as a means of completing his universe. Man was to be a worker together with God. Furthermore in the Ten Commandments, which are the basic rules of life, man is commanded to work. The command to labor on six days is just as divine and binding as are any of the other commandments. God saw that it was not only not good for man to be alone; he saw that it was not good for him to be idle. There are great moral and spiritual values in work—it occupies time, supplies temporal needs, enriches society, develops character, promotes health, and complements God's activity. God cannot run his universe without the work of man. It will help if a man accepts work as a gift from God, an expression of his wisdom and his love.

2. Work has a divine dignity. All work, honest work, has a simple and elemental dignity. This is evidenced by the fact that our Lord Jesus Christ was a worker. When, in the fulness of time, it pleased God to send forth his son, he did not send him as an other-worldly being seated on a throne, but as a man, and a man who worked. And who worked with his hands. Jesus was a carpenter. And when this carpenter selected his little band of disciples, he selected men who worked. We have a tendency to depreciate manual labor, and to exalt the "white collar" job. In God's sight there is no difference, except a difference in responsibility. Here as elsewhere, to whom much is given of him is much expected. Fact is, there is a great deal to be said about working with one's hands. Go to a Veteran's Hospital where they are trying to heal and to rehabilitate men and see how much emphasis is put upon working with their hands. In any event the important thing is not what you do, but how you do it.

3. Work should have divine approval. This applies to the type of work a man does. There are some types of work that hardly have the approval of God—one who runs a house of prostitution, the rum-seller, gambling joints, numbers racket, robbery, publishing some kinds of literature, are hardly helpful for the Kingdom of God. But emphasis is laid here upon the character of the work done. We should work, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, "but in singleness of heart, fearing God, and whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord, and not unto men . . . for ye serve the Lord Christ." "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." The Christian should do good work, as well as good works.

4. Work well done will receive a divine reward. Work well done usually receives the approbation of men. "seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings." It was the wise man's way of saying that good work is recognized and rewarded. But it does not always work that way with men. Even then the Christian should do good work. But work well done always receives the divine reward. A loving heavenly Father always rewards work well done. He rates and rewards men, not on the type of work they do, or the size of the job they hold, but on the faithful performance of our work, whatever it is. The parable of the men who had been given talents to hold in trust for their master illustrates this. The master's words, "Well done thou good and faithful servant . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," were spoken to the man of two talents just as they were spoken to the man of five talents. And if the man with one talent had done his work well, he would have received the same reward.

Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market-place or tranquil room;
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray,
"This is my work; my blessing, not my doom;

Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way."

Then shall I see it not too great nor small,
To suit my spirit and to prove my powers;
Then shall I cheerful greet the laboring hours,
And cheerful turn, when the long shadows fall

At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me, my work is best.

—HENRY VANDYKE.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

Program of the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches

Following is the tentative program of the one hundred thirty-fourth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, to be held with the Rosemont Church, South Norfolk, Virginia, Wednesday and Thursday, November 3 and 4, 1954:

Wednesday—Afternoon Session

- 2:00 Call to Order by President J. Everette Neese.
Hymn—Rev. Harvey L. Carnes.
Prayer—Rev. J. E. McCauley.
Enrollment of Ministers.
Enrollment of Delegates.
Recognition of Visitors.
Welcome—
Response—Mrs. Roy Brinkley, Cypress Chapel, Va.
2:30 Appointment of Special Committees.
Report of Program Committee—Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr.
Report of Executive Committee—Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr.
Report of Committee on Ministerial Education—Dr. H. S. Hardecastle.
Report of Committee on Stewardship—Dr. W. Millard Stevens.
Report of Committee on Evangelism—Rev. Melvin Dollar.
3:00 Address—Rev. Fred P. Register, Secretary of Evangelism and Stewardship Elect, Southern Convention.
Hymn.
3:30 Report of Elon College—Dr. L. E. Smith, President.
4:00 Report of Committee on Social Action—Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr.
Report of Committee on Home Missions—Hon. Mills E. Godwin, Jr.
Report of the Christian Missionary Association—Rev. H. E. Crutchfield.
Announcements.
The Benediction—Rev. Clyde O. Koon.
4:30 Adjournment.

Wednesday—Evening Session.

- 7:30 The Service of Worship and Lord's Supper, Conducting the Service—Rev. Melvin Dollar, Rev. Olin B. Pendleton and the Deacons and Choir of the Rosemont Church.
The Conference Sermon—Dr. Sidney M. Berry, Secretary of the International Congregational Council, London, England.

Thursday—Morning Session.

- 9:30 Hymn—Rev. O. D. Poythress.
Prayer—Rev. Morris E. Taylor.
Report of Youth Fellowship—Miss Rebecca Mann, President.
Report of Sunday School Convention—J. Letcher Eley, President.
Report of Treasurer—G. Chapman White, Treasurer.
Report of Committee on Apportionments—Hon. Shirley T. Holland.
Report of Committee on Religious Literature—Mrs. A. C. Moore.
Report on "The Christian Sun"—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Editor.

10:30 Address—Dr. Sydney M. Berry, Secretary of the International Congregational Council, London, England.

11:00 Hymn.

Report of the Christian Orphanage—Dr. John G. Truitt, Superintendent.

11:30 Report of the Laymen's Fellowship—P. D. Howell, Jr., President.

Report of Committee on Foreign Missions—Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.

Report of Nominating Committee.

12:15 Worship Service—Rev. George D. Alley.

12:30 Adjournment for Lunch.

Thursday—Afternoon Session.

2:00 Hymn—Rev. Clyde L. Fields.

Prayer—Rev. James W. Madren.

Address—Rev. Wayne W. Womer, Virginia Church Temperance Council, Richmond, Virginia.

2:30 Report of Committee on Christian Education—Rev. Earl T. Farrell.

Report of the Woman's Missionary Conference—Mrs. Garland T. Spratley.

Report of Finance Committee.

3:00 Address—Dr. W. T. Scott, Superintendent, The Southern Convention.

3:30 Report of Committee on Place—Mrs. W. V. Leathers.

Report of Committee on Resolutions. Miscellaneous Business.

4:00 Memorial Service—Dr. I. W. Johnson.

Final Adjournment.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

the requirements for the Standard of Excellence.

Several things stand out in importance. First, we felt honored when we learned that our president, Mrs. Garland Spratley, was selected to carry the flag representing the Church Women of the State of Virginia in the opening March at the National Assembly of United Church Women at Atlantic City.

Second, we had a lovely Christmas Party in the home of Mrs. M. B. Joyner at which time we found out the name of our Blue Bird who had brought cheer to each of us during the past year.

Third, we enjoyed the review of our foreign Mission study book by Miss Ione Catton and the Fellowship Supper with the women of this district at the Waverly Church.

Mrs. L. T. Williams, Mrs. W. E. James and Mrs. Herman T. Burgess were appointed to prepare program booklets for the coming year. These will be ready for distribution at the October meeting.

MRS. HERMAN T. BURGESS,
Secretary.

Our 20,000,000 Veterans

There are nearly 20,000,000 living veterans in civil life today, and their average age is almost 38 years. The extremes range from 111 years for the oldest veteran down to under 18 years for the youngest, based on the estimated age distribution of veterans in civil life, as of December 31, 1952.

The following is a breakdown by war, showing the number of veterans of each war and their average age:

Since Korea, 1,438,000 veterans, average age 26.

World War II, 15,424,000 veterans, average age 34.

World War I, 3,345,000 veterans, average age 59.

Spanish-American War, 95,000 veterans, average age 76.

Indian Wars, 295, veterans, average age 87.

Civil War, 2 Union Army veterans, one 106 and the other 111 years old.

In addition to these veterans of wartime service, there are 61,000 veterans of peacetime service receiving compensation from Veterans Administration for service-connected disabilities. Their average age is 41 years.

The youngest veterans—those under 20—have served only since the Korean hostilities started on June 27, 1950. They number approximately 47,000.

The largest group of veterans is in the age bracket between 30 and 34 years, approximately 4,800,000; the next largest group, age bracket between 25 and 29 years, approximately 4,600,000. These two groups account for nearly one-half of all veterans. The remaining half are in all the other age groups, beginning with the under-20 bracket and ending with the 90-and-over bracket.

Fortitude

To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little and to spend a little less, to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence, to renounce when that shall be necessary and not to be embittered, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation; above all, on the same condition, to keep friends with himself; here is a task for all a man has of fortitude and delicacy.—R. L. Stevenson.

Human felicity is produced not so much by great pieces of good fortune, that seldom happens, as by little advantages that occur every day.—Franklin.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

It is on my heart to alert every church, Sunday school and friend in the Southern Convention for the orphanage during the months of November and December. That is our time, and we are anxious to have your help in a very special way during that time. Say a good word for the work at the orphanage. Utter a prayer that the Lord will bless our constituents and that they will grasp the first opportunity to make a donation for that division of their church's work which helps to care for homeless children.

I cannot come to every church in the convention but you are there and you can be a worker for the orphanage during November and December. I have had the joy of preaching in many churches this year, and wherever I have gone unless I was asked by the pastor to speak concerning the orphanage I have not mentioned it, but tried to do my best with a Gospel message. I take it that people know what is on my heart for the little children here in my care. My experience as a pastor leads me to know something of what I can do to help the minister of the church and his congregation in being a better team for Christ—toward that goal I set my face. So let me put it simply, if any pastor wishes me to preach as a friend and fellow minister I shall be glad to, and if he wishes me to talk to his people about the opportunity to serve the Christ by investing in little children's lives I shall be glad to do so.

Thanks to the pastor and choir of Elon College Community Church for a beautiful, thirty-five minute worship program in the Holt Chapel this past Sunday at 3:30. Forty members of the community joined the orphanage family, and there was still room for others. "And ye came unto me . . . and they answered When . . . In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me." Many people donate many things. Besides funds and encouraging visits our own local church donated this service of worship. We are grateful.

There are many ways to be of help to this home. So many people do help us in different ways. Just this week a friend brought a big box of apples. Another friend sat in my office and asked me if he could come shortly and give the children a "double serving" of icecream. Another friend said I have a hankering to make some pictures of your lovely campus, the Holt Chapel, and some of your children, and he came and did it. And so it goes, from drapes for windows to donations for shoes.

He who gives a child a treat
Makes joy bells ring in heaven's street;
And he who gives a child a home
Builds palaces in Kingdom come.

Our special CHRISTIAN SUN issue will be coming your way soon, and we want you to read it, file it, and tell others the story in it. How good it would be if every family in the Southern Convention—every family in your church—read THE SUN! A subscription to THE SUN would make a fine birthday or Christmas present.

Everybody is well and happy here. See you next week.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR OCTOBER 14, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:
Zion Christian Church, Sanford, N. C.
Clothing and magazines:
Rosemont Miss. Soc., South Norfolk, Va.
Bananas:
Pate-Dawson Co., Burlington, N. C.
Show tickets:
Dr. James W. Lynn, Jr., Burlington, N. C.
Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Coliccho, Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $10,457.07
Eastern Va. Conference:
Liberty Spring S. S. $ 20.00
Spring Hill S. S. 8.13
Suffolk S. S. 150.00
178.13

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Greensboro, First$ 57.55
57.55
Western N. C. Conference:
Flint Hill (R)$ 5.00
Pleasant Cross S. S. 10.47
Pleasant Ridge 65.00
80.47
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.$ 5.00
Mt. Olivet (R) S. S. 3.50
8.50
Total $ 324.65
Grand total $10,781.72

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $24,748.93
John Chamblin, Gibsonville, N. C.$ 2.00
Mary Sue Brittle S. S. Class, Bethlehem (N.) Church 5.00
J. M. Whitley, Suffolk, Va. 5.00
John Craddock, Gibsonville, N. C. 13.89
Progressive Bible Class, Newport News Church . 10.00
Refable Bible Class, Portsmouth, First Church ... 10.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 3.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00
In Memory of Paul S. Everett 10.00
In Memory of G. S. Boren, Jr. 10.00
In Memory of Mrs. S. A. Morton 5.00
Special Gifts 182.50
266.39
Grand total $25,015.32
Total for the week $ 591.04
Total for the year $35,797.04

The chronic knocker gets more discomfort from his continual criticism than do all the people he raves against.—Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

MEMORIAL GIFTS
"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written) (Address)

Name.....
Address.....

In Memoriam

ANDERSON.

We the members of Concord Congregational Christian Church, Caswell Co., N. C., wish to express our love and respect for the devoted life of Miss Ida Rebecca Anderson, who passed away July 16, 1954.

She was a faithful teacher in the public schools and Sunday school for many years.

She was faithful and loyal to all enterprises of her church as long as her health would permit.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we consider her death a great loss to our church, and bow in humble submission to our Father's will.

2. That we extend to her family our sympathy and earnest prayers that the Holy Spirit may give them comfort in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed in the church records and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. W. R. SIMMONS,
Miss FRED A TATE,
Miss MATILDA TATE,
Committee.

SELLARS.

Mr. Walter R. Sellars, was born in 1873 in Alamance County, member of the First Christian Church since 1890, died on September 11, 1954, with funeral services in the sanctuary of the church on Monday, September 13, 1954, at 3:00 p. m.

Walter Sellars was a long time teacher of the Loyal Men's Bible Class, the oldest men's class of Burlington. He exerted the power of a Christian witness and the influence of high example over the lives of hundreds of men in this church and community. He was a life deacon of the church serving with exemplary loyalty in all the activities of the Board over the years.

He was active in the leadership of the civic and mercantile life of the community. His business establishment grew with the city. Mr. Sellars was interested in the educational problems of the county having served on the School Board of his district and had a real part in the strides forward in the educational system of the county. As a legislator at Raleigh he demonstrated the wider interest of citizenship—always with a view to the welfare of his constituency and the promotion of character in government.

As a husband and father he placed Christ first in the home and was an inspiration to every other family which had the privilege of knowing his home life. As a counsellor he will be long cherished by the many who came for his advice and help. His support of his church with his time, energy, and dollars was known to all. He was appreciated as forward-looking in his attitudes, being among the first to encourage all progressive steps of advance.

The influence of Walter R. Sellars in our convention has been felt in many branches of the work and his absence will be a loss to the leaders of the wider fellowship.

Mr. Sellars leaves his wife Mrs. Lila Bailey Sellars, a daughter Elizabeth S.

Farmer, and two sons Bailey and David all of Greensboro, N. C. Our thoughts and prayers closely attend all these and other kindred who have suffered the loss of such a gracious disciple of our Lord.

H. E. ROBINSON.

Recreation for the Aging in North Carolina

The University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, through its Chancellor Robert B. House, has announced a grant of approximately nine thousand dollars to the University, given by most of the insurance companies of the state for a two-year study of Recreation for the Aging in North Carolina. The study will be directed by Dr. Harold D. Meyer through the Institute for Research in Social Science.

The project is timely. It is the first of its kind in the United States—another North Carolina first. The project will be closely related to the activities of the North Carolina Recreation Leadership curriculum of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology of the University of North Carolina.

The study will collect population statistics relating to the aging in the state. It will indicate the place of recreation for the aging and note national and state interest in the field. Surveys will be made of what is being done in many North Carolina communities. The heart of the project will be 300 case studies of aged individuals in an effort to study their recreation needs and the place of recreation in their lives. Special attention will be directed to recreation for the handicapped. The study will relate recreation to physical and mental health, adult education, religious life, home relationship, and neighborhood contacts.

The nation has come to be aware of the growing importance of the aging population. The forces of science and welfare have joined in giving to man greater possibilities of longevity—the average age span is now 68.5 years. In 1940 there were nine million people of 65 years or over. By 1950 this number had reached eleven million. By 1960 there will be more than fifteen million aged persons. Medical science largely has made this possible. Education, recreation, higher standards of living, better working conditions, and many other advances have played their part. With this ability to live longer, however, comes many new responsibilities in the field of human relations and public policy.

Recreation has become one of the most important forces in the later years of people. Only recently has recreation leadership seen the opportunities and organized programs to meet this need. Recreation leaders are setting up programs for the aging, studying procedures, gaining knowledge of the aging, and contributing constructive services and ideas.

Many factors occur in aging to cause the need for recreation. Among these are family decreases in size; retirement from gainful employment and occupations; death depriving one of family and friends. Recreation can be a big help to those people who are newcomers in the community; to those who live in crowded or small quarters; and to those with incomes or pensions too small to permit moderate expenditures for satisfying use of leisure time.

The community will benefit greatly from a program of recreation for the aged. This group can become an active participating force, providing many volunteer leaders, hostesses, chaperones, receptionists, special leaders, and the like. The program might reduce the number of mentally, emotionally, and physically ill, giving the community a healthier citizenship. It should assist in maintaining a high standard of community morale.

Old people need help in doing away with fears of infirmity, isolation, insecurity, and forgottenness. Recreation can assist in this.

According to Stieglitz in The Second Forty Years, "Success or failure in the second forty years, measured in terms of happiness, is determined more by how we use or abuse our leisure time than by any other factor." Dr. William C. Menninger, famous psychiatrist, says "Recreation is an extremely important aid to growing older gracefully. People who stay young despite their years do so because of an active interest that provides satisfaction through participation."

Preacher Jenkins' sermon was full of fire and brimstone; and Mandy punctuated his sermon frequently with "Amen," and "That sure is tellin' 'em." She enthusiastically echoed the preacher's denunciation of lying and gambling and drinking. But when the preacher switched his disapproval to petty gossip, Mandy eased back into the pew and muttered: "Now he's done quit preachin' and gone to meddlin'."

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR MEN'S BROTHERHOOD MEETINGS

By REV. WARREN H. DENISON, D.D.

1. Take a measure of your church's output. Have a committee make a survey and find out the actual facts. Know your church. Have a discussion on causes, needs and cures. Make some graphs. Face the facts as they are. It may be a revelation. It will be interesting to know what your church is really doing and what you can really do about it.

2. Have a church men's fellowship supper and have some of your church officers appear and explain their duties and work; a trustee, a deacon, an usher, finance chairman, benevolence chairman, janitor, etc. Interrogate them, find their needs, problems, vision, spirit, importance.

3. Have a debate for one meeting on "Men's Work vs. Woman's Work in the Church." Choose sides if you wish. Invite the women to present their work. What are the values of each? You will discover new fields, interesting programs, the co-operative needs, and neglected segments of service.

4. A Stewardship-Finance meeting. A study of the salaries of pastor, caretaker, secretary, assistant, director of religious education. Are they fair and Christian? Explain the current budget, the benevolence budget, tithing: why, when, how? Values of the Every-Family-Visitation Canvass. What persons should be paid?

5. Outside civic and welfare workers. A leading pastor, a national leader, a Y. M. C. A. secretary, Salvation Army captain, head of the Community chest, principal of schools, etc. Keep in close touch with your civic and welfare leaders. Avoid partisan political speakers, office seekers, etc.

6. Christian Citizenship Night. Amusements in our city. Social life in our city. Slums. A high school senior speak for youth. Recreation places for our youth.

7. The Church and Labor. A labor representative speaker, an employer of labor, a union representative.

8. Analysis of Our Church's Giving. Have the financial secretary give a break-down of subscriptions; what ranges in various brackets; what percentage actually subscribe to current expenses, to benevolences, directly to the church; the value of subscriptions over cash gifts. Methods of keeping records: all church monies channelled through the financial secretary's and treasurer's books.

9. Outside Relationships and Fellowship. The association or conference, State conference, the General Council, National Council, World Council, the local council of churches. Delegates—the kind of delegates and their reports. Brotherhood relationships. The world is a neighborhood, and our duty is to make it a brotherhood.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1954

NUMBER 42

Presenting the Christian Orphanage in Pictures

THE HOLT MEMORIAL CHAPEL

Pictured above is the new Holt Memorial Chapel, a gift to the Orphanage from the children of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. Kirk Holt, of Burlington, North Carolina. The late Mr. Holt was for many years the president of the Board of Trustees of the Orphanage. His son, V. R. Holt is, and for several years has been, president of the Board. The following children and grandchildren have given this chapel: Vitus R. Holt, Mrs. J. H. McEwen, the late J. H. McEwen, J. H. McEwen, Jr., Mrs. Charles McCrary, P. K. Holt, Miss Wilmer C. Holt, Miss Nellie May Holt, Miss Violet J. Holt, W. K. Holt, Jr., W. K. Holt, III, A. Glenn Holt, C. V. Holt, George A. Holt, H. R. Holt, Mrs. E. T. Sanders and Mary Maud Sanders.

News Flashes

Be sure that your church is well represented at your conference. Go yourself, if you possibly can.

Your attention is called to the excellent report of achievements in the Mt. Bethel, New Lebanon and Kallam Grove pastorate which appears in this issue. The Rev. C. F. Alred is the pastor of this field.

The Rev. Dwight Jackson, pastor of the Haw River Congregational Christian Church, underwent an operation at Duke Hospital on Friday, October 15. He is reported making satisfactory recovery and expects to return home soon.

Dr. Sydney M. Berry of London, England, and secretary of the International Congregational Council, will speak to the students of Elon College in their chapel service on October 29, and he will be the guest speaker on Sunday, October 31, at the morning service of the Elon College Community church. Dr. Berry will be speaking at the various conferences this fall.

The Elon College students sang forth "Happy Birthday" to Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the College, on his birthday, October 25. Led by Jerry Louder, president of the student body, the song brought forth Dr. Smith's response: "I am glad I am as old as I am; otherwise I would be lying out yonder somewhere." From one and all, congratulations and best wishes to you, Dr. Smith!

The Ashville Times of October 14 carried an interesting story of the First Congregational Church and printed the picture of the newly elected moderator, Mr. Frederick R. Staggs. We quote a paragraph of interest to our readers: "During the business meeting, the Rev. Frank E. Ratzell, pastor of the church, noted in his report that during the last three years the church has nearly doubled its membership and its budget. Reports from subsidiary organizations, officers, boards and committees revealed substantial progress, he said, and indicated continued growth for the coming year."

Inter-Church Leadership Training School at New Market, Va.

The inter-church Leadership Training School at New Market, Virginia, has arranged for a number of outstanding teachers for the school. The four full courses are: "Paul, the Missionary Apostle," a Bible course to be taught by Dr. William G. Willoughby, professor of Sociology and Bible at Bridgewater College. "When Children Worship" is the name of the course designed especially for parents and teachers of children. It will be taught by Miss Eileen Grey, a teacher of religion in the Shenandoah County schools. "Understanding Youth" is designed especially for teen-age and older young people, and for adult youth counselors. The teacher for the third course will be Mrs. Howard Gibbons of Harrisonburg, a brilliant leader and counselor of young people. Dr. Paul Peachey, professor of Church History and Sociology at Eastern Mennonite College, will teach the course on "Our World Christian Fellowship." Dr. Peachey attended many sessions of the World Council of Churches Assembly at Evanston, Illinois, in August, and will bring the benefits of that experience.

Besides the four main courses, special worship services and illustrated lectures are being arranged. Leaders and lecturers include Rev. W. G. Bates of New Market, Rev. John Wayne of New Market, Dr. Paul Bowman of Timberville, and Rev. Ralph Galt of New Market.

The dean of the school, Rev. Galen Wine of Forestville, is working hard to perfect the program for the school.

The school will be held in the Manor Memorial Methodist Church of New Market on November 1, 4, 8, 11,

(Continued on page 10.)

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE:

Winchester, Virginia—October 13-14

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Rosemont Church, South Norfolk—November 3-4

Rev. J. Everette Neese, President

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., Secretary

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Piney Plains Church, near Raleigh—November 9

Rev. Will B. O'Neill, President

Rev. R. L. Jackson, Secretary

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11

Rev. M. A. Pollard, President

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro—November 16

Rev. Mark W. Andes, President

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The guest speaker for the other conferences will be Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of London, England. Dr. Berry is secretary of the International Congregational Council.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Western North Carolina Rally Postponed One Week

Ordinarily the laymen of the Western North Carolina Conference meet on the Saturday night before the fifth Sunday. However, that will be the night that Halloween will be celebrated this year, and so the laymen have postponed their meeting a week.

This means that laymen from all the churches in the Western North Carolina Conference will meet at the Pleasant Grove Church (just off of routes 22-902, between Coleridge and Bennett) on Saturday evening, November 6, for supper at 6:30 o'clock. The Pleasant Grove Church is going to present a play following the supper, and this will be the main feature of the program.

I am happy to report that the laymen of our Randleman Church organized a Laymen's Fellowship on Friday evening, October 8, under the leadership of their pastor, Rev. Winfred Bray. It was my privilege to be present to share in the occasion.

I am sure that the Randleman group is planning to be represented at the Rally; and it would be fine if other new groups could be organized and represented there, also. But, whether or not your men have an organization, please plan to attend the meeting on November 6.

HUBERT L. BEANE,
President.

* * * * *

Randleman Laymen Organize and Present Program

The men of the First Congregational Christian Church in Randleman, North Carolina, met on Friday evening, October 8, and organized a Laymen's Fellowship with the following charter members: Vance Dorsett, Jack Brown, Leon Lamb, Hubert Parker, Wade Robbins, Talmage Freeman, Fred Reece, Les Redding, Ed. Jarrett, Bauzie Reece, Gratice Reece, W. G. Lamb, Harold Myers, R. S. Hayes, James Brown, Warren Linthicum, Harold Wall, and Winfred Bray—a total of eighteen.

The organizer was Hubert Beane of Asheboro, who is the Western North Carolina Conference Laymen's president.

The following officers were elected: R. S. (Bob) Hayes, president; Harold Myers, vice president; Gratice Reece, secretary, and Ed Jarrett, treasurer. Program Committee, Hubert Parker and Talmage Freeman; Entertainment Committee, Bauzie Reece and Wade Robbins; Welcome Committee, Vance Dorsett and Jack Brown; Membership Committee, Les Redding and Fred Reece.

The club voted to meet once each month on the first Saturday evening at 7:00 o'clock.

Since October 17 was to be National Laymen's Sunday, the pastor of the church gave the new club its first assignment, that being to have full charge of the Sunday morning worship service.

The program was planned by and given under the direction of President Hayes. Special music was presented by the laymen's choir. About every man had a special part on the program, but the highlight of the hour was the address which was given by one of the club members, Mr. Ed Jarrett, who spoke on the national theme, "A Time for Decision."

Rev. Winfred Bray, the pastor of the Randleman Church, is proud of his group of men and recommends an organized Laymen's Fellowship for every church.

I look to intellectual courage and cooperation among men and women of good will for the ultimate guidance of the world.—Gilbert Murray.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Are All Things Possible with God?

"Ethical Issues at Evanston," by a European Roman Catholic, is a profoundly interesting article appearing in The Christian Century of October 20, 1954. (It is the first of "Two Roman Catholic Views on the World Council Assembly" appearing in the same issue. The other article is entitled, "From Another Sheepfold," by Donald Terry.) If this editor may intrude an opinion, he would say these two articles are worth the price of a year's subscription to The Christian Century. (This is not a commercial.)

We are not attempting to trace the argument of the European Roman Catholic. Obviously he has reasoned out his thesis with careful attention to all its implications, and his readers should ponder it just as carefully. Although we have no way of knowing whether he speaks as a layman or as a member of the hierarchy, his conclusion is arresting and challenging. As we understand it, he declares, that within the scope of Christian truth Catholics and Protestants may meet and come to a more comprehensive grasp of that truth, to the mutual enrichment of both.

This article calls to mind a memorable saying of Jesus, spoken in connection with a different issue: "With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible." It may well be that the situations which men say cannot be overcome, seem impossible only because they are viewed in the light of human wisdom and human resources. All difficult situations and perplexing problems need to be considered in the light of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, remembering the promises of Jesus which assure the powers of heaven to aid in the task. Two such problems are before us now.

Congregational Christians are again directly confronting the question of merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Surely by this time all the arguments for and against the merger have been presented. We hope that no one will feel it imperative that they be repeated. As we see the issue, there are only two pertinent questions which must be faced. The first is, What is the mind of Christ? The second is, Are we willing to approach the issue in the Spirit of Christ and to rely upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit?

Congregational Christians in the South face the question of what to do about the Supreme Court decision on segregation in the public schools. Here again almost everything has been said. Concerning this question there are for Congregational Christians two pertinent questions. The first is, What is the mind of Christ? The second is, Are we willing to approach the issue in the Spirit of Christ and to rely upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit?

The Christian Orphanage Speaks

The Christian Orphanage is telling its story and making its appeal in this issue of The Christian Sun. Dr. Truitt requested that the issue of October 28 be a Christian Orphanage Special Edition. We replied that we would be happy to do as he asked, and that in the name of the Orphanage, he should say whatever he wished and just as much as he wished. You will agree that he spoke with his usual modesty and to exceedingly good effect.

The Orphanage is saying it with pictures, and requesting that you say it with dollars. The task of the Superintendent of the Orphanage is not an easy one. He faces responsibilities that at times must be appalling. When the bills are many and big, and when contributions are few and little, it is not surprising that he can sing a sad snog. He probably longs for the coming of Thanksgiving as a small boy longs for Christmas.

Mankind never saw children with compassionate and loving tenderness until Jesus taught them to look at children through his eyes. The Church has led the way in caring for the needs of children who for one reason or another had no one to supply their needs.

The Holt Chapel is a beautiful addition to the campus. It says to every one who has eyes to see: "Man does not live by bread alone." Every child who grows up in the Orphanage will carry through life something which came into his life because of the Chapel. The Christian Sun thanks the Holt family most gratefully, on behalf of every member of the Southern Convention, for this enduring gift.

Look carefully at each picture of orphanage scenes. Read thoughtfully each written message, and when Thanksgiving Day arrives, make your contribution to the Orphanage liberally, joyfully and thankfully.

Using the Holt Chapel

Interior View of the Holt Chapel

In the Holt Chapel, children will learn quietness and reverence and gratitude in the presence of God. They will learn to pray, to sing, and to express their souls in other forms of worship. They will have lessons in Bible study, instruction in the planning of worship programs, and rehearsals of programs to be given elsewhere. They will learn something of God's goodness, and there will be commitment of young lives to God.

On very stormy Sundays, we shall hold our Sunday school in the Chapel, reporting attendance to our regular Sunday school on the college campus, and sending in our offering. At any time the beautiful, full-sized basement room will provide a place for pictures, plays, movies and games.

Occasional week-night services will be held in the Chapel, conducted by various leaders. Some Sunday afternoons neighboring churches will be asked to contribute a brief service to the Orphanage. Each minister will conduct the service with the aid of his own choir, and will be urged to bring as many of his congregation as possible. The Chapel will accommodate a hundred visitors and still have room for the Orphanage family.

Our children will continue to attend the regular Sunday school and church services of our local church. The pastor of our local church will often meet with our children as their minister and friend.

One of the great values of the Holt Chapel is its constant reminder of the presence and goodness of God. Its effect will be lasting, far-reaching and invaluable.

J. G. T.

Children in the Recreation Room of the Holt Chapel

Our Churches Report . . .

A Fruitful Year for Mount Bethel, New Lebanon and Kallam Grove

Our churches in this part of Rockingham County have been pretty silent about our activities in the past, but we have been working. The year 1954, has been a very fruitful year for us and we just have to let our fellow churchmen know about our progress. There may be some things that we have done that some of the other churches in groups can do. If we have any ideas that will help in any way we are glad to share them with you—for free.

The first, and a very important factor in any group of churches, is the unity of working together. We have our program scheduled so that one church's program will not conflict with either of the others plans. In connection to our program schedule, we meet together on the fifth Sunday in what we call "union services" at which time we give reports of what each church in the group is doing. At these meetings we all bring our baskets of food, spread it out together on a long table, eat and enjoy fellowship together. These meetings have meant much in drawing the people of the three churches close together. We also have a combined Board of Deacons, consisting of the deacons of all three churches, which meets twice a year. This combined board has its own chairman and secretary to preside over and to record the business carried on at these meetings.

These churches have been working together as a group only three years. If one should come on the field now he would think that they have been working together much longer. The sense of neighborliness and brotherly love is felt greatly in our church community.

The second, is the increase in church and Sunday school attendance. The report given at one of our union services will show that interest and attendance are still on the increase. All of the churches have added members to their church rolls both by transfer and on profession of faith. Sunday school attendance is better even this year over the past two years. We have what we call "Loyalty Sundays" when we put on special drives for Sunday school attendance and new members. For these days we have canvass teams to visit the unchurched and bring them in. Believe it or not, some of the "new ones" like it and continue to attend both Sunday school and worship services. And too, the canvassers get a great blessing from being instrumental in winning others to church and for Christ. So far this year 33 have joined these three churches and are proving to be worthy in their church responsibilities.

The third, is material gain. Mount Bethel people have a fellowship "Hut" well on the way toward completion. They have used it several times for church suppers, reunions, community meetings and "Harvest Festivals." The floor is yet to be sanded and finished, the kitchen equipped and the trimming on the doors and windows installed. It is fairly usable even now, and has a very "homey" appearance with its huge fireplace.

New Lebanon people have equipped their sanctuary with new pews, rug, choir chairs (opera style) and pulpit furniture. They are well on the way with a nice brick parsonage. The roof is on now, and they are striving to have it completed by Christmas so that their pastor and wife can spend the Christmas holidays in the parsonage.

Kallam Grove people have taken on the project of new Sunday school rooms and additional space for worship. To finance this project they have adopted the "Lord's Acre Plan." They have planted, tended and harvested five acres of tobacco which will give them a big start on their building fund. Three barns of tobacco have been sold already, and the people are working together splendidly in preparing the rest for market. This project will net them quite a nice profit, but the fellowship of working together has done more to unite the church people together than one can realize without being with them as they work together. The fellowship has been better in church and the folk seem much closer related as a church family. In this case it can be said, "The church that works together grows together."

That is just what is happening at Kallam Grove.

As I write this to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication I have to pause and thank a Gracious God for the privilege of serving people like these as their pastor. Thank God for Mt. Bethel, New Lebanon and Kallam Grove.

Following is a report of one of our fifth Sunday Union Services.

These reports were given as they are at fifth Sunday service at Kallam Grove, August 29, 1954.

New Lebanon.

We have a very good report on our church. We are proud of the fact that we are growing. This year we held a special drive to increase our Sunday school attendance. Our attendance has grown from 100 to 200 with 210 being our largest number so far. This year we have had a stress on giving to the building program. We are proud of the people in the way that they have responded. We also, realize that we have much more yet to be accomplished.

We in the New Lebanon Missionary Society feel that we do not have too much to brag about. We have a few women but our big problem is getting more members. Through the Missionary Society we now have a new rug on our church floor which we are very proud of. At each Missionary Meeting we have a person responsible for getting the scripture. We also attended the World Day of Prayer held at Kallam's Grove. Some of our members attended the Methodist Conference in order to get ideas on how to improve our Missionary Society.

Mt. Bethel.

This year we added eleven new members to our church enrollment. We have been striving to bring our Sunday school attendance up. Our largest number so far this year has been 96. We have agreed to pay the conference portion of our pastor's salary.

The Missionary Society has sponsored the building of our hut. Although it is not finished we have been able to have several social gatherings in it.

Kallam Grove.

Our Missionary Society was organized about two years ago in January. We started with 16 members and now have 20. We shared in putting celotex inside the church. We are now working toward a steeple for our church. We are trying to meet the

(Continued on page 15.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

It's Yours—Come In

Three quarters of a century ago, members of the Christian Church in the South were saying, "We should have a college of our own. We should have a Christian college to which our own sons and daughters—the sons and daughters of our own church—could go. We shall never accomplish what the organizers of our church envisioned until we have an educated ministry. We shall never have an educated ministry that understands the philosophy of our church until we have a college of our own. But there are not enough of us; we are not strong enough financially; we do not have the money."

But others said, "The trouble is not lack of numbers or the lack of money. If we had the faith and the determination, we could build." And they did.

There is no greater story of heroism, personal and collective sacrifice, on the part of our people, than the story of the building of Elon College. It took faith of the undeniable quality to launch a building program under the conditions that the plan to build Elon College was launched. There were fewer than 10,000 members in the Christian Church in the South. Ninety percent of these were farmers. The products of the farm in that far away day sold for pitifully small amounts. Out in the rural districts it was the exception to find a house painted. There was no money for this or for that improvement. Yet, out of such conditions, our people arose and built Elon College, so that today we have a college, a good college.

From the standpoint of instruction, it is equipped as well as any. Living conditions are not up to par, but we intend to bring them up to par in short order. The college itself, that is the faculty and students, equals the average college of the size and potential of Elon College. Students who come like its atmosphere and spirit. The minute they enroll, it becomes their college. They have put the stamp of their approval on it and the stamp of the college is on them. Together they move on in the field of education, culture and refinement.

Elon College doesn't belong to any one. It doesn't belong to the trustees, it doesn't belong to the Convention officials, it doesn't belong to the faculty or to the students; it belongs to the church, to all of us; to every local church in the Convention. It is ours—yours and mine. Come in!

The ones who do the "housekeeping" at Elon College are anxious to have visitors. We want you to come. This is an invitation to every local church in the Convention to come and spend the weekend with us at Elon College as our guests. You may come in groups of twenty-five. We can take care of you—put you up for the night, give you lunch, dinner and breakfast. This is a sincere invitation. Come on in, it is yours. We shall be glad to have you.

* * * * *

Religious Emphasis Period at Elon College

Every year, usually in the fall, the faculty and students plan for a series of special meetings. As a rule, these meetings extend over a five-day period. In recent years, different speakers have been invited to the campus to conduct these services. Public meetings are confined to the chapel periods at ten o'clock in the morning. Speakers and resource leaders are available for classroom periods and individual conferences on any question that is of interest to the inquiring student. At the evening hours, services in the form of a forum are held in West Dormitory, and night sessions are held in student rooms in the different dormitories at ten o'clock.

Serious services of this kind should be of particular benefit to interested students.

For the Religious Emphasis Period this year, Reverends George Alley of Suffolk and Dwight Jackson of Haw River, were invited. Unfortunately, Mr. Jackson was taken ill and was in the hospital at the time of the Religious Emphasis Period. This left the entire program in the hands of Mr. Alley. Rev. Wm. J. Andes, pastor of the local church, and faculty members, cooperated with Mr. Alley and the student committee.

Mr. Alley gave very fine messages that were received enthusiastically by the students and faculty. In addition to the morning addresses, he led the forum in West Dormitory to which all students were invited, and he assisted in directing discussions in other dormitories. Services began on Sunday night at eight o'clock and closed with communion service on Wednesday night at seven o'clock. All felt that these services were worthwhile and made a good contribution to the religious life of the campus.

We were glad to have Mr. Alley on the campus and he is extended a cordial invitation to return at any time that is convenient for him to come.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The financial support of Elon College is a major responsibility for the church that built it. Other things are important and must be financed; but we cannot afford to neglect the college and duly injure it, while other interests thrive enthusiastically.

If the amounts apportioned Elon College—apportionment and Sustaining Fund—were forthcoming, the college could move with more efficiency and the church and alumni would be more interested and more inclined to give additional support as additional support is needed. To meet an obligation gives an individual a feeling of pride and an increased interest in that which he supports. Failure to meet an obligation induces the individual who fails to manufacture excuses for not doing what he should do.

The Southern Convention, by official vote, requested the churches of the Convention to contribute for the support of Elon College a total of $50,000 for this year—$15,000 on conference apportionment and on the Sustaining Fund, $35,000. To date, the college has received from the Convention Office on apportionment a total of $9,380.75, leaving $5,019.25 due, and on the Sustaining Fund, $6,330.65, leaving $28,669.35 due.

When we look at these figures—the total amount received and the amount due—it does not increase our respect for ourselves or our courage for our college and for the future. There are a few more weeks remaining in this conference year. I am sure that many of our fine people and churches will rise to the occasion

(Continued on page 15.)

A Group of Children and the Board President

Mr. V. R. Holt, the president of the Orphanage Board of Trustees, is a favorite with the children on the Orphanage campus.

own family does not narrow his vision: he sees the need of homeless children, in the care of a Christian institution.

Annual contributions are greatly needed at the orphanage, but regular monthly contributions are thrice blessed. They are credited to the "extra contributions" of one's local church. They assure the donor that his gift goes directly to the cause for which it is given. They enable the orphanage to pay current bills promptly.

This young man gives liberally to his church, thus helping it to meet all its apportionments; at the same time he has a special understanding of the value of Christian training for homeless children and wants to know that he has a definite share in that work.

Too often we think that a judge deals only in punitive justice. Too often we forget that we are all responsible for mercy.

J. G. T.

A Juvenile Judge Helps

After hearing the superintendent's story of the work done at the orphanage, a juvenile judge went home, wrote a letter of commendation, sent a check for ten dollars and agreed to send one each month. He is a young man with a wife and two small children. His concern for his

And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.—Mark 10:13-14.

A LITTLE TEASING BOY

He's just a little teasing boy
With snaggle tooth and freckles;
He hates a book, he likes a toy,
And loves his dog named Speckles.
His shirt and trousers are too long,
His hair he combed not lately;
And if he's caught in something wrong
He looks at me sedately.
He lost his shoes the first of May,
To him it did not matter;
He lost his coat down in the hay,
But never lost his chatter.
But oh! he's clean and tucked in bed,
And oh! so sweetly sleeping;
Remembering the prayers he said,
Perhaps he is worth keeping!

—John G. Truitt.

Two High School Seniors

These two girls, Jeanie Cook and Jean Daughtrey, are seniors in high school. Jeanie Cook has been in the orphanage eleven years, and Jean Daughtrey has been here four years. They are members of the Elon College Community Church and teach in the children's division of the Sunday school. We are proud of them. They show good poise and manners and would be a credit to any home.

Lake on the Orphanage Property

This lake covers four acres and is surrounded by a fence. The irrigation system is set up for the garden to the left.

An Open Appeal

To Congregationalists Everywhere:

Greetings from the one and only Orphanage in the Congregational Christian fellowship!

Our Orphanage, Post Office Box 157, Elon College, N. C., is owned and operated by the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, through a fifteen-member board of trustees elected by the Convention. It cares for more than eighty children, giving them a good home, clothing, food, education and Christian training. Children are received at the Orphanage through a committee, after due examination of their needs and with a physician's certificate and a local minister's affidavit. More than seven hundred children have been cared for at the Orphanage, and the record of results is an exceptionally good one.

The Orphanage operates a farm and dairy, raises its own pork, beef and poultry, and most of its vegetables.

The writer, the superintendent of the Orphanage, was reared on a North Carolina farm. He holds the A. B. and M. A. degrees from Elon College, and the Th. B. degree from Princeton Theological Seminary. He served as pastor in Congregational Christian churches before coming to the Orphanage. He desires to rear the homeless children in his keeping according to the high ideals of the Church.

Just as we have appealed to persons throughout this area who belong to other communions or to no church at all, we appeal to Congregationalists beyond the borders of the Southern Convention. Of necessity, the Orphanage cannot be self-supporting. We believe that if members of our church generally knew more of our work, we would not need special appeals. But successive summers of drought have drained our pocketbook as well as our land. We need to repair our buildings, and to put better equipment inside them.

We shall be most grateful for your gifts and support.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Superintendent.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

The Spelling Lesson

It was a private day school for little girls, and Mother had told the teacher that Grace could spell all such words as "eat" and "dog" and "rat."

Soon after Mother had gone, the spelling class was called out.

"Phoebe," said the teacher, "you may spell 'pig,' and then tell us what kind of noise little pigs make."

"P-i-g, pig," spelled Phoebe correctly, "and this is the noise they make—'Que, que, que.'"

"That is excellent," said the teacher. "Now, Rosalin, you may spell 'dog,' and tell me what kind of noise he makes."

"D-o-g, dog," replied Rosalin, "and our doggie says 'Boo-woo-woo,' and sometimes he growls real ugly when the cat comes around."

"Very good, indeed," the teacher said. "Sallie, you may spell 'cat,' and tell what noise she makes."

"C-a-t, cat," responded Sallie. "Sometimes she says 'Meow,' sometimes she purrs and when the dog bothers her, then she hisses at him."

"Splendid!" exclaimed the teacher. "Now, Grace, you spell 'love!'"

"Oh!" laughed Grace, "I can spell love." Then she ran up to the teacher, threw her arms around her neck, and gave her a sweet, resounding kiss on the cheek.

"That is the way I spell 'love' at home," said Grace demurely, while the teacher and all the spelling class girls laughed.

"That is a beautiful way to spell 'love.' Do you know of any other?"

"Why—yes, ma'am," answered Grace, looking around. "I spell 'love' this way, too." Then she picked a raveling from the teacher's dress, brushed a fleck of dust from her sleeve and put in shape the topsy-turvy books on the platform desk.

"I spell 'love' by working for Papa, Mamma, little brother, and everybody when they need me," she said.

The teacher took the little girl on her lap, and said:

"Grace, that is the very best way of all to spell 'love.' But who can spell 'love' the way the book has it?"

"Why, I can!" exclaimed Grace. "L-o-v-e, love."

The teacher then dismissed the class.—Youth's Comrade.

* * *

The grace for this week is: Thank you God for this day, my family and our food. Amen.

The Value of Self-Confidence

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A certain book on child behavior points out that one of the most valuable bank accounts that parents can encourage their children to provide for themselves is the gradual growth of self-confidence. Such encouragement includes teaching children attractive habits in speech and manner, with which may be built confidence and self-assurance, thus leading the way to becoming ready for the acceptance of social and economic relations. This is a big step in the right direction.

I overheard an eight-year-old boy in a restaurant say to his parents, "Hand me the cardboard!" The parents were well-dressed and spoke well. Why had they not taught their son to say menu?

At a summer resort a mother and a well-developed husky daughter of ten arrived carrying three small dolls, which were later taken everywhere the two went. When Daughter sat on the porch she placed the dolls on a chair by her side. When she went into Lake Huron she spent the time "entertaining" her dolls on one of the rubber floats, even though other children, the floats being few, had to swim, or to play on the beach.

The mother hovered near her daughter. It was plain she was keeping Daughter Patty her "baby." When introduced to other guests Patty was at a loss for words. The mother always took the initiative, frequently beginning a conversation with a recital of how much Patty's "family" meant to her. "She has a special suitease for them to ride in," she would add.

In contrast, there are the Kerr children. When you go to their house, whether or not their parents are at home, you are met with hospitable courtesy and ease of manner. The girls are interested in whatever you have to say; it is a pleasure to converse with them.

Eventually, a time comes to every child when he wants to do the courteous and pleasing thing. How disconcerting it must be for him if he has to struggle for the right words and actions! How important to be prepared in advance!

Time and again in restaurants one observes boys and girls clutching their knives and folks in an awkward manner, while their parents sit by using theirs correctly. Tell me, why have not Mother and Dad taught Bobby and Betty the right way? I know a pretty, but unobservant, girl who was not asked to join a sorority because of poor table manners.

An effective plan to help the children practice the gracious amenities of daily living is to teach both boys and girls, when they are very young, to use these courtesies in their play. This, however, does little good unless they are encouraged to apply what they have learned in this way every time that an opportunity presents itself.

Today practically all our teen-age youngsters want to possess know-how and to be able to stand on their own feet as soon as possible. This is a new kind of world, where the helpless, dependent youngtimer is out of step. The knowledge of what to do and what not to do, both in private and public, gives a feeling of assurance and confidence, which is another rung on the ladder of success. The more confidently growing America climbs up those rungs the stronger and happier our country will be. In the final analysis, gracious manners mean thinking of others—they are another way of living the Golden Rule.

TRAINING SCHOOL AT NEW MARKET.

(Continued from page 3.)

18, and 19, from 7:20 to 9:30 p. m. Any individual from any place will be welcome to attend the school; and churches in the north part of Rockingham County and the south part of Shenandoah County are urged to send members to the school. All courses and teachers will be accredited with the National Council of Churches; and all persons who complete their courses will receive due credit.

RALPH N. GALT.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Mission Board Commends Women For Thank Offering Project

On behalf of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, I would like to commend the women of our churches for their choice of the South Boston Church as the Thank Offering project this year.

There are two things about South Boston which are especially noteworthy:

The first is that there are people there in the community who already are sacrificing and working that the church of Jesus Christ may be established there. This is not a case of a denomination pushing in a church where it wasn't needed. Ours will be the only church in the community, and the folks there who initiated the project are grateful beyond words and are expressing that gratitude through sacrificial giving of their own.

Secondly, in addition to people who want a church and who are working for it, there is also one of the finest, most consecrated pastors and his wife that I've ever had the privilege of knowing. They are assuming leadership throughout the community in a commendable way. To my way of thinking, leadership is tremendously important. I am not sympathetic with any program of spending money in starting a church unless there is good leadership to carry through. And I am certain that Mark and Catherine Andes will carry forward this work in a conspicuously fine way.

For that combination—a people who want a church and an able pastor and his charming wife to lead them—I, for one, am grateful. I am sure that the women of our churches, who always can be counted on, will go the second mile this year and give the South Boston Church the support it so greatly needs and so richly deserves.

RICHARD L. JACKSON,
Chairman.

* * * * *

Center Church Has New Society

One of the many fine things about the new Center Church at South Boston, Virginia, where our Thank Offering is to go, is that they have already organized a women's group in that church. Furthermore, representatives from the group attended the Fall Conference at Southern Pines, North Carolina, which is a "far piece" from South Boston.

This group, which named itself the "Women's Christian Fellowship," was organized on September 14, with fifteen present. The officers include: Mrs. L. T. Ferrell, president; Mrs. Irvine Anderson, vice-president; Mrs. E. M. Walton, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. J. J. Franklin, chairman of Friendly Service; Mrs. H. L. Martin, chairman of Family Life; and Mrs. Mark Andes, chairman of Spiritual Life.

Following the candlelight installation service, Mrs. Ferrell directed the discussion of matters that would confront the fellowship during the coming year. Places of meeting in the homes of members were selected for the entire year, and yearbooks were to be made for distribution in October.

The first project of the group was to buy venetian blinds for the church sanctuary, with the sale of Christmas cards being used to finance this work. A stew and pastry sale was also planned for the purpose of buying Sunday school furniture.

We are sure that this new society feels quite "set up" now that one of the members, Mrs. Mark Andes, has been chosen as president of the North Carolina women. Bet that's the first time such a thing ever happened the month after a society was organized!

Best wishes to the women's society at Center Church, as we share with them, through the Thank Offering, in the great work they are doing.

* * * * *

Society Pays Memorial Tribute to Mrs. Cunningham

During the September general meeting, the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Congregational Christian Church of Henderson, N. C., paid tribute to the memory of a former member, Mrs. W. O. Cunningham.

The memorial meditation was led by Miss Josephine Langston, with the following comments: "Tonight we pause to honor one of our former members, Mrs. W. O. Cunningham, who departed this life on July 19. There is so much that could be said for her that one hardly knows where to begin. She played a great part in the building of our church. While it was still very young, she became an active member. Many of us remember her as our Sunday school teacher, or Junior Christian Endeavor leader, or church pianist. Those who were lucky enough to live near her as they were growing up, know that she was never too busy to help with a program; she was never too busy to talk over our problems.

"Mrs. Cunningham was lovingly known to all as 'Cunning' or 'Cousin Enla.'

"Because of poor health, Mrs. Cunningham had to give up her part in active church work. But this didn't stop her interest in its work or the love that was felt for her. During her years as a shut-in, she enjoyed a steady flow of friends, young and old, rich and poor.

"Our society loses one of their past very active members and also a life member. Each of us has lost a dear friend."

An American Beauty rose was then placed on a white cross, and Miss Langston read the poem, "She Wears a Rose." After silent prayer, "Blest Be the Tie" was sung.

A guest at the meeting was Mrs. Cunningham's sister, Mrs. Annie Lashley.

In the business session which preceded the memorial ceremony, the following general officers were reinstated: Mrs. E. W. Langston, president; Mrs. W. H. Masters, vice-president, and Mrs. V. L. Langston, secretary-treasurer. The Cradle Roll Committee was also elected: Mrs. J. B. Bobbitt and Miss Lizzie Roberts.

MRS. J. L. LASSITER, JR.,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Good Fellowship at Hebron

The Woman's Missionary Society of Hebron Church, Nelson, Virginia, has held regular monthly meetings this year, with interesting programs arranged by the program chairman.

We had good representation at the Spring Rally. We sent "Sunshine Baskets" to the shut-ins, also get-well greetings.

We have had several social meetings. In May, when Dr. David Shepherd and his family from Georgia (Continued on page 14.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"The Splendor of Self Control"

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 7, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit better than he that taketh a city."—Proverbs 16:32.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Proverbs 14; 15:1-5; 16:20; 23:29-35; 25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Corinthians 9:23-27.

Going Through Life Without Brakes.

Some years ago, while I was the pastor of Suffolk Christian Church, I started down College Court on my way to my study. There was a slight incline in the cement sidewalk, and a youngster from across the street was using it as a coasting place for a makeshift coaster. He had an old bicycle frame to which he had attached two wheels of ancient vintage and different sizes. He would start running, gain speed, and then straddle the frame and coast down the incline as far as he could. He had just started on such an adventure when I came down from my porch into the cement walk. When he saw me, he frantically yelled at the top of his voice, "Get out of the way, Mr. Hardeastle, I ain't got no brakes." That youngster was like all too many people in our modern world, who are going through life without brakes. They lack the power to stop their mad course, they lack self-control, they lack the ability to discipline themselves. And all too often, they end up in a wreck or run into disaster. The man who wrote the wisdom embodied in the words of today's lesson knew how important and how imperative it was to exercise self-control in life, to be able to put on the brakes, to have the power to say "no" to the wrong things in life, and to say "yes" to the right things. There is a splendor about self-control and self-discipline.

Self Control in Temper.

"He that is slow to anger is of great understanding, but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly; . . . he that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." Folks sometimes think it is too bad that they have a temper. Nonsense. Temper can be a great driving, creative, constructive force. It is like steam in a boiler. It is energy and power. It is not bad to have a temper; it is bad to lose control of a temper. Some wag has said that when a person loses his temper, it is never quite as good when he finds it again! Let us not kid ourselves. It is not easy always to control our temper. There are many things, and many people to arouse temper and to get our dander up. We live in the kind of world, and with the kind of people, that make it difficult at times to exercise self-control in temper. It is not easy to do this. But it is folly and usually fatal to lose one's temper. There are those who have learned to discipline themselves and to control their tempers. An older missionary once mildly rebuked a young candidate about his loss of temper, and the young man flared up and hotly said, "You don't know anything about how hard it is for me to control my temper." The older man quietly said, "My friend, I control more temper in a day than you do in a month." He had learned self-control and self-discipline; he was not going through life without brakes.

Self Control in Tongue.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger. The tongue of the wise uttereth knowledge aright; but the mouth of fools poureth out folly." Control of the tongue is closely related to control of the temper and vice versa. When a fellow loses his temper he is likely to lose control of his tongue. And when he loses control of his tongue, it is likely to add fuel to the fire of his temper. This wise man knew the deadly power of the tongue when it was unleashed and when it got out of control. So did James, the brother of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the third chapter of the letter he wrote to his fellow-Christians, he gives a classic essay on the tongue. What a comparatively small thing a man's tongue is. It is "a little member"; but it has tremendous and terrifying power. It is a fire, a world of iniquity. It can defile the whole body, and start a fire that nothing can put out. It can be set on fire of hell, James says. Men have tamed every kind of beast, but "the tongue no man can tame," he says. "It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." A man can kill with his tongue as well as with a gun. There is only one source of help: God alone can help a man to tame his tongue. The sharp tongue, the lying tongue, the flattering tongue, the insincere tongue, the gossiping tongue, the slandering tongue—they are an unruly evil, full of poison. And, of course, there is the profane tongue, cursing God himself.

But the tongue can be a blessing as well as a bane. The most gracious words ever spoken came from the tongue of our Lord. "A soft answer turneth away wrath." How often have we seen the makings of a quarrel, words that have sting and fire in them, flicker out because the other party answered in a calm and soft and kind spirit. Happy is the man who can keep his voice soft and quiet when others are shouting and ranting and raging.

Self Control in Taste.

The man who wrote these wise sayings which constitute today's lesson had eyes that saw. He could have passed an examination on description with a high mark. Read his description of a drinking or a drunken man. "Who hath woe . . . sorrow, contention, complaining, wounds without cause, redness of eyes . . . ?" he asks. He then answers his own question, "They that tarry long at the wine, they that go to seek out mixed wine." "Thine eyes shall behold strange things, and thy heart shall utter perverse things." He must have seen a fellow with "delirium tremens," he must have heard a drinking man or woman babble and make a fool of themselves. Nothing funny about a drunken man or a drunken woman. They are to be pitied, not ridiculed. There are thousands of alcoholics in America today, men and women, and even some young people, who are going through life without brakes on their taste for alcoholic beverages. Poor, foolish folks, "wine is a mocker, strong drink a brawler (R.S.V.), and at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." To be sure there are people who "can take a drink or leave it alone"; but the fact that they take it indicates that they cannot or will not leave it alone. For many, however, the only safe way is

(Continued on page 15.)

Boys at Work on the Orphanage Farm

Two of our seventeen-year-old boys cutting alfalfa hay. In the background are the Wagoner home and the Hilliard home owned by the Orphanage.

Names of Children and Their Birthdays

Given below our readers will find the name, birthday and year of birth of each boy or girl in the Christian Orphanage. If you will preserve this list it will save your writing in when you wish to know the birthday and age of some child.

Girls.

Barbara Jean Arnold	8-15-44
Clara Lee Arnold	4- 3-46
Jo Ann Arnold	7-30-41
Jo Ann Black	1-18-42
Jeanie Cook	6- 2-36
Brenda Crumpler	8-31-46
Frances Coggins	3-10-44
Joyce Coggins	3- 7-46
Peggy Coggins	6-22-47
Jean Daughtrey	4-28-37
Sandra Ferrell	4- 5-45
Angelee Haith	4-24-42
Ella Jean Haith	11- 1-40
Margie Hayes	5- 2-39
Laverne Mecimore	4-20-43
Phyllis Morningstar	8-28-46
Betty Oakes	7- 4-44
Jeanette Oakes	3- 2-49
Marjorie Oakes	7-18-40
Ruby Oakes	4-23-42
Betty Jean Proctor	4- 7-40
Marie Proctor	12-22-38
Brenda Proffitt	2-25-50
Elizabeth Ann Ray	2- 1-48
Louise Ray	2-23-47
Ann Rich	11- 2-43
Kay Rich	8- 2-40
Wilma Rich	4-19-47
Frances Rowland	10-16-41
Betty Jane Rowland	11- 4-44
Jo Ann Rowland	1-16-40

Peggy Rowland	1-16-40
Clara Spicer	1- 2-48
Dorothy Spicer	9-10-43
Jessie Spicer	6- 7-45
Dorothy Taylor	6-27-40
Helen Watkins	6-27-41
Nancy Watkins	2-18-40
Rachel Wilkins	2-21-42
Betty Lou Wilson	2-17-39
Cecelia Wilson	2-26-41

Boys.

Raymond Arnold	7-14-43
Ben Black	12- 4-39

Roy Black	12-18-37
Billy Burgess	5-22-41
Bobby Burgess	5-22-41
Jimmy Burgess	12-27-36
Woody Byrd	8-17-45
Bobby Byrd	10-21-47
Hubert Cook	11- 7-39
James Crumpler	4-25-44
John Crumpler	10-22-41
Larry Crumpler	4-22-45
Bobby Daughtrey	8-10-40
Kenneth Ferrell	2-23-43
Raymond Harvell	1-31-41
W. C. Harvell	10-16-37
Frankie Hayes	9-29-42
Larry Jones	1- 8-44
Ray Kineh	10-22-37
Billy Lamberson	6- 8-47
Billy Lambert	11-16-46
John Long	6-24-43
Garland Mecimore	1-13-47
Dewey Morningstar	10- 4-44
George Morningstar	11-23-42
Alvis Oakes	2- 7-47
Billy Proctor	10- 7-44
Roger Proffitt	1-24-49
Gerald Rash	5-31-47
Floyd Rich	6-28-48
John Rich	9-23-41
Jerry Rich	10-19-49
Robert Rowland	11-20-37
M. B. Rowland	8-17-43
Eugene Ray	7- 3-49
Donnie Taylor	12-18-47
C. A. Ward	6-13-41
Charles Ward	11- 7-42
Jackie Wilkins	1-26-44

Your gift, whether large or small, is always appreciated.

Making Preparations for Fall and Winter Feeding

Here is a barn of hay and a silo filled with corn. In the foreground lespepeza hay is being stacked near the feeding ground for first fall feeding of forty milk cows, including some young heifers, and there is also a small herd of fifteen beef cattle.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

In order to absorb our last year's drought deficit we shall have to raise through our Thanksgiving Offering enough to reach an over-all goal of $70,000.00. This report brings us up to $37,129.52. That leaves us still $32,870.48 to go.

This goal is not impossible. It is less than one dollar per member in our churches. To be sure there are those who will feel that they are not able to contribute the dollar. And to be sure there are most of our members who will not be made aware of the work being done by their churches at this place. But, even so, it is entirely, easily possible—especially with the contributions interested friends outside our churches give.

Let us put it this way—Thanksgiving, the time when our churches get together to feed, clothe, house and train the homeless assigned to our orphanage.

This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been designated a special orphanage number. Please read it heed it, have it handy throughout the coming year when you wish to know some answer it can give, or when you wish to know the birthday and age of a child in whom you are interested. It will save you writing, "How old is Alvis?" "When is his birthday?"

Last week Dr. Smith and I attended the Valley of Virginia Conference. As you know it met in our church at Winchester. Rev. R. A. Whitten presided with his usual friendly dignity. Clarence Phillips was right on the job as secretary, and others who helped guide the sessions were equally well prepared to do their parts. The conference missed Supt. Scott as he was attending a very important national committee meeting. The conference calmly considered the ways of progress and entered into them.

To many friends who graciously read this orphanage letter each week I wish to express my thanks. As you read it now please breathe a prayer that it may make many friends for the institution which the church has set up for the serving of little, homeless children, with real help and home. Pray that "men and women of means" will consider the Christian Orphanage and help it. Pray that happy boys and girls, and young people, who have their parents and homes remember the children who but for us would be in a miserable plight. Pray the membership of our church far and near may feel a definite responsibility in helping us go beyond our goal in order that there maybe something for next year. Just quietly ask God to help us, and I thank you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR OCTOBER 21, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Books:

Miss Evalin Pribble, LaJolla, California.

Coupons:

Damascus Church, Sunbury, N. C.

The Challengers Circle, Winchester Church.

Antioch Church, Valley Conference:

Clothing:

Clayton Cammack, Burlington, N. C.

Mrs. T. H. Kenimer, Landrum, S. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward$10,781.72

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Auburn S. S.$ 56.96

Pleasant Union 100.00

Pope's Chapel 36.00

192.96

Eastern Va. Conference:

Bethlehem (Nans.) S. S. . $ 37.72

Holy Neck 80.00

Christian Temple 40.98

Portsmouth, First 117.19

275.89

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Carolina$ 18.00

Burlington, First, S. S. . $ 474.95

Howard's Chapel S. S. ... 4.00

Mt. Zion 5.32

Rocky Ford 12.00

Union (Va.) S. S. 5.00

519.27

Western N. C. Conference:

Albemarle$ 15.00

Shiloh 10.86

25.86

Virginia Valley Conference:

Leaksville$ 74.00

74.00

Total $ 1,087.98

Grand total $11,869.70

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $25,015.32

The Woman's Fellowship of Damascus Church,

Sunbury, N. C. $ 25.00

Rev. W. B. Fuller, Harrisonburg, Va. 2.00

Miss Nancy Shankle, Charlotte, N. C. 5.00

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Newman, Henderson, N. C. 10.00

Philathea Class, Suffolk

Christian Church 5.00

In Memory of Mrs. W. R. Goley 10.00

In Memory of J. E. Bryant 10.00

Special Gifts 177.50

244.50

Grand total $25,259.82

Total for the year $37,129.52

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 11.)

visited us, we enjoyed a covered-dish supper in the home of one of our members, Mrs. H. C. Overby. In June and July, after our regular morning worship services, we served lunch at the church, entertaining our supply pastor, Rev. Carl Key. Afterwards we enjoyed a social hour together.

As we go forward into a new year, inspired by the splendid leadership of our new pastor, Dr. David Shepherd, assisted by his very competent wife, we hope to accomplish bigger and better things in Jesus' name.

MRS. R. KENT RICE,

Reporter.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Virginia Valley Youth Hold Their Annual Fellowship Conference

Eighty young people from eleven of our Valley Congregational Christian Churches met for their annual Pilgrim Fellowship Conference, at the Newport Church, Page County, on Sunday afternoon and evening, October 10. The meeting was opened by worship led by the host group, including special music by Misses Judy Louderback and Nancy Higgs. The president, Donnie Litten, of Quicksburg, then called the meeting to order, and the roll was called by Miss Iris Gail Allen, secretary of Winchester.

The main address was a narrative report of the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council held this past June at New Haven, Connecticut. The spirit of this council meeting was evident by the enthusiasm of the two delegates reporting, Misses Iris Gail Allen and Mary Ruth Whitten, both of Winchester. Colored slides taken at the council meeting were also shown. (These slides are available from Henry Rust.)

Discussion groups were then held in three different areas of youth work for the benefit of local groups: "How to Conduct a Meeting," led by Mrs. Kenneth Bishop, Evangelical and Reformed Church, Woodstock; "How to Interest Groups in Community and Missionary Projects," Mrs. Galt of New Market; and "How Youth and Their Advisors Plan Programs," led by the Rev. D. Ebert of McGaheysville.

A panel discussion was held on the subject, "What is Our Christian Responsibility in View of the Supreme Court Decision on Segregation in the Public Schools." The panel members were Dr. Charles Howe, chemist of Elkton; Mr. W. N. P. Harris, former principal of Lucy Simms High of Harrisonburg; Miss Delois Sandridge of McGaheysville, chairman of Conference Fellowship Commission, and Rev. H. V. Harman of Elkton, moderator. Although the group took no official position, the following points made by Dr. Howe seemed to receive general approval: that Christian people would (1) use no violence nor condone use of violence by anyone else, (2) be firm in their witness concerning the inherent equality of all, (3) cultivate individual friendships amongst members of other races, (4) avoid extreme positions, (5) carry on discussions among responsible people, and (6) understand the importance of the time element.

The discussion groups were followed by supper and a fellowship period. The conference then reconvened for a short business meeting at which the officers for the 1954-55 year were elected. The new officers are: Norman Dean, president, Harrisonburg (Antioch Church); Martha Rohart, vice-president, Linville; Kay Kagey, secretary, Broadway (Bethlehem); Betty Showalter, treasurer, Route 4, Harrisonburg (Antioch). Commission chairmen, Faith, Tillie Strickler, Route 2, Elkton (Mt. Olivet R.); Action, Naomi Higgs, Route 1, Shenandoah (Newport), and Fellowship, Iris Gail Allen, 129 E. Monmouth St., Winchester.

The closing worship service was led by Norman Dean and other members of the Antioch group. It was an effective presentation of the theme, "The Church of Jesus Christ." Installation of the new officers was conducted by the Rev. H. V. Harman, chairman of the Youth Committee of the Convention Board of Christian Education.

H. V. HARMON.

OUR CHURCHES REPORT.

(Continued from page 6.)

goals of the Missionary Societies and to go even beyond that.

We feel that we have not grown by leaps and bounds but we have had a steady increase. However, this year we feel that we have grown more rapidly than in the past. Several new members have been added and our attendance is greater. We feel that the interest in our Sunday school is much higher. This is due to some extent to the organizing of our Worker's Council group which meets quarterly. We feel that this is the key organization of our church because through it we can discuss our problems. Two years ago we bought new pulpit furniture. This year we shared in the project of putting celotex inside the church. Through the suggestion of the Worker's Council we observed promotion day this year. We also realize the need of more Sunday school space. We now have the Lord's Acre Project started. We have all but one prunning in the barn and hope to be able to build more Sunday school space with the profit. We feel that we have made much progress but it is our aim to continue growing in the coming year.

C. FREAD ALLRED,
Pastor.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

(Continued from page 7.)

and see that we have a better record in supporting our college.

Previously reported	$ 9,030.60
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Amelia	$ 22.00
Moore Union	12.00
Eastern Va. Conference:
Mt. Carmel	$ 55.50
Richmond, First	135.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Belew Creek	$ 26.00
Belew Creek S. S.	20.00
Bethlehem	28.00
Hines Chapel	8.59
Lynchburg	5.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Providence Chapel	$ 4.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Joppa	$ 9.00
Mayland	4.00
Wissler's Chapel	21.00
	350.15
Total to date	$ 9,380.75

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

completely to leave it alone. One drink calls for another drink and another, and the end is not yet. In America today, there is far too much drinking, and church members are doing too much of it.

But let no one think that men go wrong because of the taste for liquor alone. There are thousands who hold up their hands in holy horror at the man who takes a drink, but who are slaves to their tastes and appetites. Gluttony is sin as well as drunkenness. And, of course, there is the matter of taste in amusements and reading and what one sees. The good life is pretty much a matter of self-control in taste, using that word in its inclusive sense. Many a person comes to middle life or old age, broken in body and in spirit because he did not exercise self-control in the matter of taste.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

SOME OF OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Top Row, left to right are: Betty Lou Wilson, Sandra Ferrell, W. C. Harrell, Nancy Watkins, Laverne Mecimore; Center Row: James Crumpler, Jo Ann Arnold, Roy Black, Betty Jean Proctor, Bobby Daughtrey; and Bottom Row: Betty Oakes, Jimmy Burgess, Ray Kinch, Frances Rowland and Ben Black.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1954

NUMBER 43

"God Is Right Next Door"

By DR. ROY L. SMITH

"The Lord is near to the brokenhearted, and saves the crushed in spirit." Psalms 34:18.

He was a little ten-year-old, and his Sunday school teacher was not quite sure how much of the lesson he had really comprehended. With great seriousness she inquired, "Douglas, where is God?"

Without the slightest hesitation, the little fellow replied, with rare wisdom even for a ten-year-old (and they are sometimes very wise indeed), "As near as your next breath."

All the preachers and the theologians in the world could not have said it better, and even the Psalmist has come no closer to the truth when he says, "The Lord is near to the broken hearted, and saves the crushed in spirit."

This is very near to the heart of the Christian gospel, even though it comes from the Old Testament. We worship a God who is near at hand, who can hear our faintest cry for help!

The crushed in spirit! What a multitude they are! How wistfully they follow anyone who inspires them to hope!

Strange as it may seem, all men want to believe. The late Dr. Will Stidger was accustomed to say to the student preachers who sat in his classes, "Remember, young men. You can always be sure of the wistfulness of the congregation!"

The old janitor stood leaning up against the wall, in the bright warm sun, as the preacher came driving up to the church. He was a discerning old Christian who, in his forty years of janitoring, had seen preachers come and go. And the reasons for some of the goings he had understood but never discussed. As the young clergyman got out of the car, the grizzled veteran asked, with a quizzical light in his eye, "Good morning, doctor. Any late news from God this morning?"

Let any pulpit assure the people, and do it in a way that they are convinced, that "God is right next door, waiting to be called," and the multitudes will fill the pews. There is no better news.

News Flashes

The Rev. Carl R. Key, state CROP director, will serve as supply pastor of the Durham church for the month of November.

Installation services for Rev. William J. Andes, new pastor of the Elon College Community Church, was held at Elon College on Sunday night, October 31.

A Declaration of Purpose for the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign for $388.00 has been received from Little Creek Church, Norfolk, Rev. M. E. Taylor, pastor.

Rev. John R. Lackey, at the present time pastor of Apple's Chapel Church, Gibsonville, N. C., has accepted a call to our church at Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Installation services for Rev. David W. Shepherd, new pastor of Union (Virgilina) and Hebron Churches, was held at Union Church, Virgilina, Sunday, October 24.

Rev. James W. Madren, Wakefield, Virginia, has accepted a call to the First Congregational Christian Church, Hopewell, Virginia. At the present time, Mr. Madren is pastor of the Wakefield, Dendron, Barrett, and Burton's Grove Churches.

Rev. William T. Scott, Jr., Accepts Call to Durham Church

The Rev. William Tate Scott, Jr., has accepted the pastorate of the Durham Congregational Christian Church and will assume his duties there the first of December. Mr. Scott resigned the pastorate of the First Church of Christ (Congregational), Cornwall, Conn., to accept the position in Durham, as the successor of Dr. Stanley C. Harrell who served the Durham church as pastor for 35 years.

The Rev. Mr. Scott is the son of Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. He is a graduate of Elon College, receiving his A.B. degree in 1950. He received his B.D. degree at Yale University Divinity School in 1954 and was ordained to the ministry at Cornwall, Conn., in February of last year. He has served as minister of the Cornwall church since 1952, and has had additional pastoral experience as assistant pastor for one year of the First Congregational Church of Norwich, N. Y.

REV. WILLIAM TATE SCOTT, JR.

The Scott family consists of the minister, his wife and young son, William Tate Scott, III. They will make their home in Durham at 2411 W. Club Boulevard.

Dr. Edward W. Wilder to Visit Eastern Carolina Churches

Dr. Edward W. Wilder (M.D.), a Congregational Christian medical missionary, secretary of the Christian

DR. EDWARD W. WILDER.

Medical Association of India, and an authority on medical work in that land, will speak in the local churches of the Eastern North Carolina Conference during the period of November 4 to 23.

Dr. Wilder, who has lived and worked in India since 1921, was head of Pierce Memorial Hospital in Madurai under the American Board until called to the important post of secretary of the Christian Medical Association of India in 1948.

As secretary of the Christian Medical Association of India, Dr. Wilder is concerned with the work of more than 700 Christian doctors serving in Christian institutions, hospitals, tuberculosis and leprosy sanatoria, and medical schools and health centers, as well as those in government service and private practice.

Dr. Wilder is medical secretary of the National Christian Council of India and is a member of the governing bodies of a number of other institutions, including the Christian Medical College at Vellore, and the Miraj Medical Center.

As an American Board missionary, he did an exceptionally fine piece of medical work among the Tamil people of South India for over 25 years, bringing a small, poorly equipped mission hospital in Madurai up to a fine modern institution with streamlined facilities.

Throughout the entire period of his India career, Dr. Wilder has worked closely with government hospitals and health officers, aiding them especially in checking tuberculosis, one of the outstanding health problems in South India.

The people of our Convention are urged to take advantage of Dr. Wilder's visit. Although he may not visit your church, plan to attend the nearest one where he is visiting.

Important Conference Notice

The 129th Annual Eastern North Carolina Conference will be held at Piney Planes Church, November 9, 1954. Piney Plains Church is located about nine miles southwest of Raleigh, N. C., just off the Apex-Macedonia road approximately seven miles from Apex. If coming through Cary or Holly Springs watch for state road signs at intersection in the Macedonia section for directions.

Important Conference Notice

Those expecting to attend the sessions of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference on November 16, are asked to send advanced registration by November 12, to Dr. W. E. Wissemann, 40 Radiance Dr., Greensboro, N. C. Indicate the number for luncheon and for Fellowship Dinner. Anyone desiring overnight accommodation should so indicate to the above address. Note that the Conference is for only one day.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Laymen of North Carolina and Virginia Conference to Meet

The North Carolina and Virginia Laymen's Fellowship will hold its Fall Rally and supper meeting at the First Congregational Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina, Friday, November 12. The speaker will be Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of London, England. Laymen of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Churches are urged to be present for this meeting at 7 p. m., on the 12th.

* * * * *

Laymen of Oakland at Chuckatuck Sponsor Worship Program

The laymen of the Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Va., sponsored, prepared and presented the morning service of worship on Laymen's Sunday, October 17. Due to the fact that Hurricane Hazel had deprived us of lights and heat in the church, the service was held in front of the church in the bright sunshine. Due to this fact, much of the musical program was deleted, but otherwise the program was carried out as it had been planned. Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., presided. The following men took part in the service: Responsive Reading, T. Philip Dailey; Prayer, W. K. Wagner; Poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," T. A. Saunders; Scripture Lesson, Harvery Saunders, Sr.; Addresses by P. D. Howell, Jr., president of the Eastern Virginia Laymen's Fellowship, and Mills E. Godwin, Jr. The pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, spoke briefly on the theme, "Do We Really Want a Revival?"

REPORTER.

* * * * *

Laymen's Day at Albemarle

Laymen's Sunday was observed October 17, in the Congregational Christian Church in Albemarle. The service was directed and presented by laymen with the exception of the playing of the organ. Iris Hunsucker served capably as organist for the program of worship.

Martin Deese presided over the service. Before the service all of the men met in the church basement. At the beginning of the service the men processed into the church; it was the first time that the men had marched into the church in a body and it was an impressive occasion.

A group of approximately 20 men were in the choir and offered the anthem for the morning, "Rise Up, O Men of God." The singing was good: the choir made a real contribution to the effectiveness of the service.

Mr. A. A. Talbert offered the morning prayer; the benediction was by Mr. Lester Taylor who was a visitor from another church in town for the morning service. Dean J. E. Danieley of Elon College spoke to the group on the national topic for the Laymen's Observance, "A Time for Decision."

Four of the young men of the church served the congregation for the offering. They were Joe Madren, Boyd Simmons, Tony Smith and Skippy Baldwin.

The service was worshipful and helpful; it is the kind of program that should be presented in more of our churches. Mr. Madren and the church there are doing a good job. Congratulations.

* * * * *

Eastern North Carolina Conference Organizes

More than eighty men of the Eastern North Carolina Conference representing sixteen different churches met at the Vance School Cafeteria in McCollers on Wednesday night, October 20, to organize the Conference (Continued on page 11.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardeastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

United Student Fellowship

The United Student Fellowship is composed of college and university students who are members of Congregational Christian churches and Evangelical and Reformed churches. When the merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church was about to be consummated, the young people in the two communions began to cultivate each other's acquaintance. By the time the merger was blocked by legal procedures, the young people of the two groups had found that they were one in spirit and in purpose and that they could work together in mutual pleasure and profit.

The student fellowship movement is the most promising religious development in institutions of higher learning that has occurred within this century. The number of young people who are attending college is astounding. Many of them have grown up within the very heart of a church. Christian fellowship is a vital part of their lives. They have no idea of spending four years in college without such a fellowship to enrich their lives.

In many of the institutions of higher learning these Christian fellowship groups are well organized, as denominational student fellowships. For instance, Duke University has a Methodist Student Fellowship, a Baptist Student Fellowship, and so on down the list. The stronger denominations have directors of Student Work.

Congregational Christian students and Evangelical and Reformed students are working together and bear the name United Student Fellowship. There are also active United Student Fellowships at the University of North Carolina, State College at Raleigh, and Woman's College at Greensboro. There may be others in North Carolina which are not known to this writer.

There is a National Assembly of United Student Fellowship (Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed), which met at Elmhurst, Illinois, August 28 through September 4, 1954. The National Assembly was organized in 1948 and met biennially until 1954. Future meetings will be held annually. The theme of the Elmhurst Assembly was: "The Cost of Discipleship."

Attending the Assembly from North Carolina were Jo Anne Smith, Robert McCann from Duke; Frances Pickard from Meredith College, and Sally Winn from the University of North Carolina. In all, there were 126 delegates in attendance, representing 58 colleges and universities. The Assembly was interracial.

The Assembly defined the purpose of the local group as follows: "(1) Facing the responsibility as a Christian in the college community. (2) The deepening and widening of personal witness and the united witness of the group to Christian faith. (3) To deepen the personal commitment of the individual."

Jeanne Shelley, a delegate from Northern California, stated the purpose in these words: "Seek not to communicate newness of life through fact and description, but rather pour forth freely and abundantly the Holy Spirit, which has filled one's own soul to overflowing, so that it may comfort and refresh all those who are in need."

The National Assembly (C. C. and E. R.) was followed immediately by the eleventh General Assembly of the United Student Christian Council, composed of representatives from fourteen of the nation's major Protestant student organizations. This meeting was held at Western College for Women, Oxford, Ohio, September 5-10, 1954. Of the 117 delegates attending the Oxford meeting, six were from the C. C. and E. R. group, and one of these was Miss Jo Anne Smith from the First Congregational Christian Church of Greensboro. The Assembly had as its purpose, "to produce a series of plans designed to strengthen the basis of existing work and start a number of new cooperative programs among Christian student groups."

Christian students are taking life seriously, meeting the challenge of the times courageously, and accepting their responsibilities in a fine way. We have spoken in detail of the work of the national assemblies of youth in order that our readers may understand just what youth is doing to bear Christian witness among their fellows. It is one of the finest phases of our national life.

It has never been the privilege of your editor to share in the activities of a finer group than the United Student Fellowship at Duke University. Excellent leaders are directing the program. They challenge the churches of the Congregational Christian and Evangelical Reformed communions in North Carolina to lend them encouragement and support in the work which they are doing.

News of Our Churches . . .

Asheboro—a Church with Some History and More Future

For the second time in its fifteen years' history, the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church is sending this paper to all of its members.

The church celebrated its fifteenth anniversary on October 29, with a big Halloween Party, at which time receipts for building improvements amounted to $104, and a goodly number of people had a pleasant evening.

It is commonly reported that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is valuable reading material for church people, and it is hoped that all of the members of the Asheboro Church will read it for a year, because it comes to them as a gift from their church.

We are looking forward to the annual Conference at Grace's Chapel on November 11, and we hope to have a reasonably good report for the year.

The receipt of a church member, the consecration of a baby, and the entertainment of 250 members of the Western North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship Rally on last Sunday, completed the year's work.

F. C. LESTER,
Pastor.

* * * * *

Service of Installation for Halifax County Churches

The Reverend David W. Shepherd was formally installed as pastor of Union and Hebron churches, Halifax County, Virginia, on Sunday, October 24, 1954. The Reverend Mark W. Andes was the officiating minister. Mr. Andes served as pastor of Union and Hebron until he resigned to organize Center Congregational Christian Church at South Boston, Virginia.

Dr. W. T. Scott preached the Installation Sermon, and Dr. L. E. Smith led the Installation Prayer. The Rev. Thomas Moak, pastor of Florence Avenue Baptist Church, brought the greetings of the churches of the county; Mr. Carlton Vaughan welcomed the new pastor to the community; and the Rev. Weldon Madren represented the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

Immediately following the installation service, the Missionary Circles of Union and Hebron churches sponsored an Open House Hour at the parsonage.

The program of the occasion carried this note: "The service of installation for Dr. David W. Shepherd as pastor of Union and Hebron churches is in keeping with a fine tradition of our fellowship and a number of other communions. It is designed not only to encourage a minister and church at the beginning of their ministry together; but also, by its nature and because of those who are graciously participating in it, to recognize the essential unity of the Christian church and the interest and mission of the church in the whole community."

S. C. H.

* * * * *

Church at Sophia Holds Auction

On Saturday, October 9, the Congregational Christian Church of Sophia, North Carolina, held its fall auction sale at New Market school.

The money raised, amounting to $1,180.50, went to the church building fund. The sale started at 11 a. m., with the pastor, Rev. Avery Brown, offering prayer. The members worked for several months getting things together. Nearby towns, farmers and members gave livestock, farm produce, dry goods, and lots of small things. Wonderful service was given us without any charge by Bale Gallimore, the auctioneer, and his helpers.

At the noon hour, the ladies of the church served dinner in the school cafeteria. The day was enjoyed in working for the Lord, and the fellowship was fine.

With the fine help of our pastor, our building program is progressing nicely, and we hope to have a new church in the near future.

MABEL STALEY,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Hazel Delays Work on Building at Berea, Nansemond

The annual business meeting or church conference of Berea Christian Church was held in the Community Hall at Driver, on Tuesday, October 5. A Family Night "Covered Dish Supper" was served at 7 o'clock with the business meeting immediately thereafter. A large number of persons was present, and as usual there was an abundant, delicious meal. Organizations reported, and business was transacted. All apportionments had been paid in full, several substantial "over and above" gifts had been made, and there was a healthy balance in the treasury. There was also a gain in membership during the year.

Work on the new building is progressing satisfactorily, although the hurricane and other factors delayed the work for one week. This addition includes two classrooms, rest room, a large Fellowship hall with knotty pine paneling and a large fireplace, a large kitchen, and a storage room. It is hoped that the building will be completed well before Christmas.

Hurricane Hazel did some damage to the church building and to the grounds. One large tree fell across the corner of the church, breaking off a lot of slate, tearing a hole in the roof, and breaking out one of the art windows. She also made a shambles of the trees on the churchyard, breaking off large limbs and boughs from all the trees. One stately tree will be missed very much. It was a symbol of many a life—outwardly fair and strong, but rotten at the heart, and when the winds blew, it fell, and great was the fall thereof.

The Berea women entertained the Oakland women at a joint meeting on Tuesday, October 12. Mrs. I. W. Johnson taught the home mission study book on "The City," and she did a superb job. The Berea women served lunch at the church, and the two organizations had their separate business meetings at the church after lunch.

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Pastor.

* * * * *

Report from Oakland Shows Much Work Done This Year

The annual church conference or business meeting, was held on Tuesday night, October 12. A Family Night "Covered Dish Supper" was served at 7 o'clock, with a large attendance. Others came in for the business meeting at 8 o'clock. Reports from all organizations were presented in writing. To the surprise of some present, a total of $23,785.65 was reported raised during the year. Several items of business

(Continued on page 7.)

Dr. Howard Bozarth Writes Most Interestingly of New Work at Yankton College

Our readers will be interested in paragraphs of a letter from Dr. Howard P. Bozarth who recently resigned the pastorate of the Elon College Community Church and accepted a professorship in the Yankton College School of Theology in South Dakota.

"I do not know that readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be especially thrilled to discover a communication from me, but if any are interested, I will just give a bit of account of what has happened to us since we took off from Elon College just two months ago.

"Our first stop was Little Rock, Arkansas, where Donald (our elder son) and his family now live. We visited there a few days, our daughter, Grace, staying on there till the opening of Elon's fall term, to which she returned early in September. Jim, our other son, joined Mrs. Bozarth and me, in Kansas, where we stopped for a brief visit with my brothers, and then we all took off for Yankton.

"We started negotiations immediately, for a house here, and while the processing of necessary papers was going on, we paid a hurry-up visit to my wife's mother and sister, in St. Joseph, Michigan, returning to Yankton September third, and getting into our new home the next day. We will own our own place after 106 more payments (save the mark!), our home being four blocks from the campus to which I trudge dutifully each day, to learn what I can from the students assigned to me by the administration of the School of Theology.

"I am supposedly instructing classes in Systematic Theology, Religions of Mankind, Philosophy of Religion, and one in "Christian Faith," the last being an orientation course for freshmen pre-ministerial students in the college. I think I get by more impressively with this freshman class than with others, for obvious reasons. But I am really enjoying the assignments immensely, and hope the administration will let me stay on long enough to really learn what the business is all about in the various fields wherein I am presumed to be an expert. It really is much less difficult, I find, to impress a congregation Sunday by Sunday, than to achieve a like result with a class of theological students.

However they have been charitable toward me, in the main.

"Yankton College has an exceptionally lovely campus, spacious, wooded, and a good well-groomed carpet of grass. It is, of course, a Congregational college, the oldest in this section of the mid-west, with an enviable history, high scholastic reputation, and strong college spirit. We have just called a new president, formerly Dean of Pace College in New York City, and a strong Congregational layman. Prospects for the future look bright, though the college recently went through a period of heavy waters, financially, and there still remains plenty of promotion to meet the problems in finance which all colleges face.

"I recently was given a week off to visit Association meetings over the state, which enabled me to see what South Dakota looks like, and meet many fine people of our churches. They are almost as nice as North Carolina and Virginia Congregational Christians.

"I know the various conference attendants there will enjoy Dr. Sydney Berry. I met him years ago when spending a summer in England. He will possibly remember me as the fellow from Massachusetts who got run down by a London lorry and was hospitalized for a few days before returning home. Dr. Berry was all kindness to me at the time."

HOWARD BOZARTH.

World Community Day Observance—November 5

Ten million Christian women in more than 2,000 cities and towns across the nation will pledge themselves to the cause of building lasting world peace at special services marking the eleventh annual observance of World Community Day on November 5.

The day is set aside each year by United Church Women, the Laywomen's organization of the National Council of Churches, and by its 1,900 affiliated state and local councils, to study methods of promoting world peace and as an expression of their concern for sharing the material blessings of the nation with the needy of the world. The women will back up their pledge for peace by rededicating themselves to the United Church Women's action program for peace, a program founded on the conviction that "peace is possible—war is not inevitable." Highlighting one of the aims of the program—the sharing of material resources with needy people of other nations—they will dedicate special offerings and gifts of clothing, household supplies, blankets and similar gifts to be sent to the homeless and destitute in Palestine, Germany, Greece, Hong Kong, Korea, Italy and France. The financial offerings will be used to underwrite the cost of the peace program and for several other projects to which UCW contributes including aid in financing the overseas shipment of U. S. government surplus foods and the work of the World Council of Churches in processing the papers for refugees coming to the U. S. under the Refugee Relief Act.

In the eleven years since the founding of World Community Day—traditionally observed on the first Friday in each November—American church women have contributed offerings totaling nearly two million dollars. Last year's offering came to nearly $100,000. Mrs. H. H. Kodani, of Pacific Palisades, Cal., chairman of the 1954 observance committee, describes World Community Day as "far more than just a day. It is a year-round striving for justice and freedom for all men, a keeping open the pathway for peace, that Christ may walk therein and the world may follow in his steps."—The Religious Newsweekly.

A Tribute to Rev. Allen L. Hurdle

As the conference year eloses, we, the members of the Holy Neek Congregational Christian Church, Holland, Virginia, wish to pay tribute to Rev. Allen L. Hurdle, who served as pastor of our church for the past three years. In spite of ill health during his pastorate here, he sought by precept and example to set forth the Gospel of our Lord toward the training of minds and the winning of souls.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we express to him our deep and sincere gratitude for his friendship, his counsel, and for his encouragement to us in carrying on our work; and

That we regret his having to give up the ministry on account of his health, but, wish for him and his family joy, success and happiness in their new field of service.

COMMITTEE.

The fact of the religious vision is our one ground for optimism today.
—Whitehead.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Forward Together

There are many classic statements illustrating the effectiveness of unity—"We shall stand together or we shall hang together," "Twelve sticks taken separately may be easily broken but bound together, it is impossible to break them with ordinary effort," "A team of horses pulling together can easily move a heavy load, but pulling in opposite directions can make no progress." On a football team, every player is assigned a task which, if performed and carried through to conclusion, every play would result in a touchdown.

The church faces a definite responsibility for Elon College and its future. The church has a definite stake in its college. The college cannot go forward without the church, nor can the church successfully bear its responsibilities without the college. The college and the church are dependent upon each other.

Time has brought us to a critical point in our history and program. Sister institutions on all sides are moving forward at creditable speeds. The church and the college cannot hope for a status quo in existing surroundings. A do-nothing period for two years obviously would be disastrous to both the college and the church. It is either forward or backward; backward we cannot afford, forward is compelling. The road we face is not easy. The burdens that we are asked to assume humanly speaking are not light. Christianity does not look for an easy period, nor does it covet a light load.

Building today is expensive but build we must. Elon College has the largest student enrollment in its history, yet its dormitories are not full. They are not inviting. Living conditions on the campus are below par, as we all know. We face the necessity of improving these conditions and getting in step with the other institutions that are providing acceptable living conditions for all students who would enter. We need on the Elon College Campus four new dormitories and a new dining room. The Board of Trustees is planning to undertake in the near future the erection of two dormitories—Carolina Hall for boys and Virginia Hall for girls, and a new dining room adequate for the entire campus. This will be an expensive undertaking taken as a whole, but to divide the responsibility among 40,000 people and more, will not be a heavy burden for any one person to assume. If the church and the alumni will unite in this effort and pool their resources, it will not be a difficult matter for any one individual. Isn't the task for our college important enough and big enough to lift us above personal preferences and individual differences? May God help us. Together we shall succeed. We shall accomplish the task that is set before us. The day of consummation will be a day of gratitude and joy.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Including the amount received from the Convention Office this week, the total amount received by the college on apportionment exceeds $10,000 by a very small margin which means that the college has received from the Convention Office two-thirds of the amount apportioned. This would seem rather discouraging were it not for the fact that last year as of this date, the receipts were about the same as now. During the remaining days and weeks in this conference year, approximately $1,000 came in which ran the total amount for apportionments beyond $11,000. If last year's record could be duplicated this year, it would mean much to the college.

It is to be hoped that all churches that have not paid their college apportionment in full will before the conference year ends. Elon College would like to express appreciation of all the support received through the conference year now drawing to a close.

Previously reported	$ 9,380.75
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Christian Chapel	$ 3.75
Martha's Chapel	8.00
Mt. Auburn	20.80
Pope's Chapel	10.00
Eastern Va. Conference:
Spring Hill	$ 19.34
Suffolk	649.90
N. C. and Va. Conference:
New Lebanon	$ 47.15
Western N. C. Conference:
Sophia	$ 20.00
	778.94

Total to date $10,159.69

REPORT FROM OAKLAND SHOWS WORK DONE.

(Continued from page 5.)

were transacted and some plans for the coming year were presented. It was a good meeting.

The laymen of our church presented the morning service of worship on Laymen's Sunday, October 17. It was an informative, interesting and inspiring service, and the men of the church are to be congratulated upon it.

Hazel Hurricane made a shamble of the church yard. Three large trees were blown or broken off, and countless limbs and branches were broken off and blown down. One large tree, in falling, just missed by a hair's breadth, one of our large Art-glass windows. A crop of volunteer workers cleaned up one side of the grounds so that our people could park for the services on Sunday, and through the following week. There will be big open spaces when the debris is all cleared away. Eventually new trees will be set out in orderly fashion to replace the ones blown down.

Our Revival and Evangelistic Services were held the week of October 17-22. By common acclaim they were the best in recent years. The attendance was unusually good every night. The congregational singing under the leadership of "Doc" Savage was inspiring, and the special numbers by members of the choir, and by Jonnie Baker on Friday night, were also inspiring. Informal prayer services were open every night for those who wanted to attend. The guest preacher was Reverend Clyde Fields, pastor of the Hunterdale Congregational Christian Church. He made a deep impression on his hearers. His sermons were simple, clear, convincing, sincere, Scriptural and spiritual. They were enriched with a wealth of simple and timely illustrations, and they always ended in an earnest and honest evangelistic appeal. As a result, about fifty members of the church re-consecrated and recommitted their lives, and nine persons came into the church. The life of our church has been quickened and the lives of our people, and many people from other churches who attended the meetings, have been enriched. We thank God and take courage.

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Pastor.

"Thank God for America!"

—Edgar Dewitt Jones.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Do We Really Study the Bible?

For several years the women of the Southern Convention have been supposed to do Bible study along with the other study in their women's society meetings. This year when the program committee met they decided to suggest a different procedure for this year: That is, to have some special time set aside for study of The Acts of the Apostles (I believe Wednesday evenings during Lent were suggested), rather than doing it just as a part of each monthly meeting.

A little more than a year ago Mrs. Richard L. Jackson sent in an article for this page denouncing the method then used of Bible "study" as part of the circle meetings. With the recommendation of the Southern Convention program committee in our packets, I think the time is right to print Mrs. Jackson's views on the subject.

And many of us are hoping that our women's societies this year are not sandwiching in a brief "Bible study" along with a devotional, mission study or other program, and business in one monthly meeting. Let's try the Bible study as suggested this year, at a separate time set apart for that purpose, with someone who is capable of leading our study (perhaps it might be the minister), and with anyone in the church invited to attend.

* * * * *

Why We Should Not Study the Bible in Our Women's Societies

By Mrs. RICHARD L. JACKSON.

Our women's groups have been studying a set portion of the Bible each year. I have come to believe this practice should be discontinued. Here's why:

1. God speaks to us in the Bible; but his words come indirectly, through the words of men. Therefore we must study to understand his word. A society that invites a speaker to review a book in the Bible is not studying God's word.

2. Too often the aim of a society is to cover the material required so it can attain a standard of excellence or report all requirements met.

3. Bible study requires preparation on the part of each person: many thoughtful readings of a passage, reading the cross references in the Bible, and studying commentaries. It requires discussion and comparing of translations and understandings. Most societies are too busy having bazaars, sales and other money-raising activities to spend time on studying.

Will You Respond?

In the letter which accompanied the article on this page by Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, entitled, "Why We Should Not Study the Bible in Our Women's Societies," she made several statements which will interest you.

She says, "This article may do harm rather than good, being a negative one. But I hope it may shock some of our women into responding. I'd like nothing better than to change my mind on the subject, provided someone can convince me. But, in plain language, here are my three reasons for believing our women should drop the Bible study effort:

"1. The Bible needs study; but that is not what many of our societies are doing.

"2. The motivation for our study (what we do of it) is often wrong and precludes our gaining any spiritual growth.

"3. Bible study requires time and concern. Our women's societies don't have it (or won't take it).

"4. It should be the business of the church to have a real Bible study group of both men and women."

When can a society meeting only once or twice a month do Bible study—with twelve regular programs a year, the study books, and all the extra services to have (not to mention the time they must take for fellowship, socialability, and refreshments)?

To call what many of us do "Bible study" is to fool ourselves. Therefore, I plead, let our women's societies drop their "Bible study." And let our churches set up Bible study groups where a group of women and men genuinely interested can study God's word, coming together often enough and prayerfully enough to allow God to speak to them through his holy word.

Fine Year at Sophia

The Women's Society of the Sophia Congregational Christian Church has had another very successful year under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Leonard Staley.

The society met with Mrs. Claude Routh for our final meeting this year. Our new officers were installed for the coming year. Also we recognized the ones having perfect attendance and voted to purchase pins for them.

All our programs have been real interesting and inspiring. We have studied the Psalms carefully, which has meant a great deal to all of us.

We have sent cards and flowers to the sick in our community. Members of our society visited the Elon Orphanage and carried clothing for the children, also we sent coupons and buttons that we had collected.

Our Christmas party had a special meaning to us as we tried to share a part of our Christmas cheer with less fortunate people of Puerto Rico.

* * * * *

Annual Report of Treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Conference

Below is given the annual report of the Treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Conference for the year ending September 15, 1954:

RECEIPTS.

Women's Societies.

Albemarle	$ 107.00
Amelia	32.88
Antioch (R)	46.00
Apple's Chapel	105.17
Asheboro	229.23
Asheville	116.37
Auburn	54.70
Belews Creek	56.80
Berea	55.75
Bethel	43.42
Bethlehem	45.90
Beulah	55.33
Beverly Hills	48.39
Burlington	1,418.70
Calvary	42.79
Carolina	30.00
Chapel Hill	125.90
Church of Wide Fellowship	150.00
Concord	41.92
Damascus	12.50
Durham	332.06
Elon College	582.78
Eutaw Community	81.16
Flint Hill (R)	35.65
Fuller's Chapel	76.00
Gibsonville	113.16
Greensboro, First Church	843.11
Greensboro, Palm St. ...	188.00
Hank's Chapel	55.00
Happy Home	121.00
Haw River	150.00
Hebron, Virginia	30.00

Henderson	198.00
High Point	62.00
Hines' Chapel	166.60
Hopedale	101.54
Ingram, Virginia	151.50
Kallam's Grove	17.50
Lakeview Community ..	15.33
Lebanon	8.00
Liberty, N. C.	53.00
Liberty Vance	276.00
Liberty, Virginia	20.00
Long's Chapel	65.00
Monticello	150.80
Moore's Union	5.00
Morrisville	24.00
Mount Auburn	78.85
Mount Bethel	52.05
Mount Gilead	30.75
Mount Pleasant	19.00
Mount Zion	13.50
New Hope	57.75
New Lebanon	86.00
Oak Level	50.00
Pfafftown	34.52
Pleasant Grove, N. C. .	67.88
Pleasant Hill	50.00
Pleasant Grove, Va. ...	112.40
Pleasant Ridge (G) ...	144.00
Pleasant Ridge (R) ...	112.26
Plymouth	31.24
Pope's Chapel	20.00
Providence Memorial ..	28.00
Raleigh	229.00
Ramseur	81.80
Reidsville	517.86
Salem Chapel	57.00
Sanford	210.00
Shallow Ford	132.00
Shallow Well	168.87
Smithwood	10.00
Sophia	52.11
Spoon's Chapel	39.87
Tryon Congregational
Church of Christ	230.00
Turner's Chapel	83.33
Union Grove	76.00
Union, N. C.	263.20
Union, Virginia	173.75
Wake Chapel	240.00
Winston-Salem	97.00
Youngsville	50.00
<hr/>
	$10,440.93

Young People.

Pleasant Ridge (R) ...$	6.21
Reidsville	15.00
<hr/>
	21.21

Junior Societies.

Apple's Chapel	$ 34.98
Burlington	11.28
Durham	71.19
Elon College	38.55
Elon College Willing
Workers	23.51
Greensboro, First	44.50
Greensboro, Palm St ...	20.00
Henderson	36.00
Ingram	9.10
Reidsville	10.00
Union, N. C.	5.68
<hr/>

Cradle Roll.

Apple's Chapel	$ 1.73
Asheboro	13.40
Burlington	25.05
Durham	41.00
Elon College	20.00
Greensboro, First	44.50
Greensboro, Palm Street	13.00
Haw River	12.50
Henderson	5.70
Hines' Chapel	20.20

Ingram	2.14
Monticello	7.50
Pleasant Ridge (R) ...	4.28
Raleigh	10.00
Ramseur	5.00
Sanford	8.00
Turner's Chapel	5.00
Union, N. C.	17.60
<hr/>

Miscellaneous.

Conference Offering at
Greensboro, First ..$	188.46
Rally Offerings	167.18
Special Memorial: Mrs.
W. P. Minton	10.00
<hr/>
	365.64
<hr/>
Total receipts	$11,389.17

DISBURSEMENTS.

Expense of Rallies$	90.08
Conference and Rally
Speakers	70.00
Florist	5.33
Literature packets for new societies	22.05
Literature, Mimeograph-
ing, Supplies, printing	101.12
Expense of Board Meetings	126.22
Expense of the President	27.51
Expense of the Treasurer	33.00
Gift to the Auditor ...	25.00
Expense of Fall Conference Registration ...	18.10
Expense of Interdenominational Cooperation	15.63
Youth Fellowship	21.21
United Church Women .	130.26
United Church Women
of N. C.	70.00
<hr/>
	755.51

Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Tr.,
Woman's Missionary
Board of the Southern Convention For:
Home Missions, Special
Fund	$ 20.00
Missions, General Fund	6,276.65
Foreign Missions, Special Fund	60.00
Thank Offering	2,022.41
Life Memberships	450.00
Memorials	240.00
Scholarship for India .	50.00
CARE Package for India	10.00
Missions in India	5.00
Rachanyapuram School	36.00
Our Christian World
Mission	81.30
Puerto Rican Goat Fund	1,283.40
Spanish-Speaking Americans	20.20
Ellis Island	20.50
Christian Orphanage ..	24.50
Cent-A-Meal Offering ..	33.70
<hr/>
	10,633.66

Total disbursements $11,389.17

THANK OFFERING FOR MISSIONS ON MINDANAO.Women's Societies.

Albemarle	$ 12.00
Amelia	6.00
Antioch (R)	6.00
Apple's Chapel	16.17
Asheboro	39.23
Belews Creek	6.80
Berea	10.00
Bethel	11.42

Beulah	6.00
Beverly Hills	12.33
Burlington	211.50
Calvary	5.34
Carolina	10.00
Chapel Hill	48.83
Church of Wide Fellowship	30.00
Concord	11.92
Damascus	2.50
Durham	50.00
Elon College	120.86
Eutaw Community	17.00
Flint Hill (R)	7.00
Fuller's Chapel	10.00
Gibsonville	12.81
Greensboro, First	149.11
Greensboro, Palm St. .	52.00
Hank's Chapel	10.00
Happy Home	28.00
High Point	12.00
Henderson	28.00
Haw River	20.00
Hines' Chapel	62.00
Hopedale	16.29
Ingram	21.25
Lakeview Community ..	5.33
Lebanon	5.00
Liberty, N. C.	19.00
Liberty, Vance	26.00
Long's Chapel	5.00
Monticello	20.50
Moore's Union	5.00
Morrisville	4.00
Mount Auburn	9.75
Mount Bethel	6.00
Mount Gilead	6.25
New Hope	16.50
New Lebanon	18.00
Oak Level	15.00
Pfafftown	9.52
Pleasant Grove, N. C. .	17.80
Pleasant Grove, Va. ...	33.20
Pleasant Ridge (G) ...	36.00
Pleasant Ridge (R) ...	12.26
Plymouth	4.20
Providence Memorial ..	8.00
Raleigh	29.00
Ramseur	29.00
Reidsville	55.00
Salem Chapel	10.00
Sanford	15.00
Shallow Ford	35.00
Shallow Well	45.65
Sophia	12.11
Turner's Chapel	10.00
Spoon's Chapel	7.37
Union Grove	16.00
Union, N. C.	56.70
Union, Va.	26.35
Wake Chapel	50.00
Winston-Salem	25.00
Youngsville	25.00
<hr/>

Balance from Rally $ 1,791.85

Offerings	42.10
Conference Offering	188.46
<hr/>
	230.56

Total $ 2,022.41

LIFE MEMBERSHIPS AND MEMORIALS.Life Memberships.

Albemarle: Mrs. E. W. Freeman, Mrs. Frank Vanhook.
Apple's Chapel, Mrs. Lizzie Apple.
Asheboro, Miss Vella Brown.
Belews Creek, Mrs. Annie Preston.
Beulah, Mrs. A. W. Watkins.
Burlington, Mrs. Jule Terrell.

(Continued on page 15.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

You know that we have just had fun at Halloween. A middle-sized boy was telling in his Sunday school class about the "mean" things he had done: upset garbage pails, pushed chairs off porches and thrown door mats on roof tops. He grinned and said: "Who did like me?" One boy volunteered that "I threw a lot of confetti on porches" but no one said anything else. In a few seconds the teacher said: "Do unto others... have you ever heard this?" Of course all of the boys and girls had. She went on to say: "Before you smash a window, throw dirt around or liek your friends, stop—really stop and say to yourself 'Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.' " Halloween has passed but the teacher's advice is good the year 'round. It is one rule that will make life happier and better for all.

Dr. Russell H. Stafford, who is the president of Hartford Seminary, is an experienced minister and a teacher of ministers. When he spoke at the Southern Convention two years ago he told about the kind of young men that made the best ministers. "Give me young men who want to be good but who have a strong urge to do the bad and who have to struggle to do the right." He went on to tell how this kind of person was really "worth his salt" as the expression goes. It is natural for boys (and girls) to want to play rough and do naughty things. There are people "too good." You may know some folks like that: never fuss, never run, never fight, and tattle on those who aren't like them." That can be bad too.

Junior boys and girls get away from home more than little folks and they are often representatives of their homes, church and school. Older people see their behavior and think they behave as they have been taught. Now, you and I know that isn't so. Haven't you ever known better—because mother did say you shouldn't—but you did it anyway? Of course you have.

It is just as easy to be well behaved as bad and if you haven't tried it, give it a "ten-day trial plan" as the ads. say. Switch from bad to good. It may do things for you!

Blessing for this week: To thank Thee Lord I bow my head for golden butter on my bread. For milk and fruit and all I eat. Amen.

* * * * *

A Matter of Education

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

The children in Rogers' neighborhood apparently eared for little outside of television and gunplay. Dressing up as Indians was seldom thought of any more. Everything was an echo of television. The play was noisy. Neighbors did not say anything, but they were getting tired of hearing it so continuously.

One mother had an idea, which she put to work. She borrowed from the Children's Museum ten bird's nests and some stuffed birds. To these she added a downey woodpecker's nest which she had had many years, a song-sparrow's nest that had been built in the front hedge last summer, and a stuffed oriole that was over one hundred years old! She arranged these on tables for an exhibit. She also fastened up mounted-bird pictures and had open bird-books placed around.

Then she invited the neighborhood boys and girls to see her exhibit. She gave a talk about winter birds, for this was the winter season. She showed the children her feeding station in her small back yard, and they were fortunate enough to see several birds enjoying a meal. She displayed a bag of wild-bird seed and mentioned where it could be purchased, and then she directed attention to the skins of grapefruit halves hanging on the trees. These had been filled with crumbs, melted suet, and peanut butter.

Next they all went into the living room and sat on the floor while records of bird songs were played on the phonograph. After that they viewed the exhibits which had been prepared and which, now, she explained.

Interesting boys and girls in bird study is a most worth-while thing to do. It will by no means stop gunplay, but it will present different viewpoints. One day, in early spring,

I saw some of the children playing "bang-bang-bang." Suddenly Billy, who was on the stone wall, held up his hands. "Wait!" he ealled. "There's a robin!" And there play stopped for a few minutes as they watched the first robin of the spring. The exhibit had paid.

Our bird friend had another idea which she put to work. She suggested to other mothers, whom she knew well, the advisability of taking groups of boys and girls once a month on educational trips of different types. The mothers responded, each according to her own special line of interest. One, took a group to Concord, Massachusetts—certainly a treasury of literary culture. They visited Louisa Aleott's house and other homes of equal interest. Another group who went to Massachusetts chose Boston for the trip. They visited many historic buildings.

Once, after a severe storm, several mothers took some children in their automobiles and drove to a nearby beach. There they all alighted. They walked along the shore collecting driftwood and various sea forms that had been brought in by the waves and tide. This started some of the boys and girls to making collections, an idea quickly followed by another group. The latter were a small group who had been taken into the woods, where they studied leaves and the bark of different trees. Later, some of these children made blueprints of the leaves and started scrapbooks of the blueprints. This activity might well develop into a worthwhile hobby, as might other collections that were a bit out of the ordinary.

Educational good times like these will, without question, create keen antieipation for more of the like kind. Let us raise the thoughts of our boys and girls above the television level gunplay. There is no doubt but that television has its place. However, child-interest is so rich in varied possibilities that a little adult help will usually bring attractive educational activity, in this way leaving less time for television and a better opportunity for choice of program.

Stewardship is the pivot on which life turns, either toward dedication and life, or towards deseeration and death. Thus stewardship must become a part of our inmost thought and aspiration, and then sweep as wide as out outermost relationships.

—E. Stanley Jones.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Rosemont Church Host to Eastern Virginia Youth Conference

The rally of the Eastern Virginia Youth Conference was held at Rosemont Congregational Christian Church on October 3, 1954.

It was a lovely day for the meeting and we had a record attendance of over 400 young people.

Miss Rebeeca Mann presided, and called the meeting to order at 3 o'clock.

The opening session was headed by a prayer for guidance.

The Youth Fellowship of Rosemont then led the worship service which was very interesting.

Miss Jennie Doidge was the guest speaker and she gave a most inspiring talk on her trip around the world.

The business session followed and the things discussed by Rebeeca Mann were:

1. Projects for the coming year.
2. Report from the National Council.
3. Report from the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship Officer's Conference.

We had the election of officers. Miss Carol Overby was elected president. Rebeeca Mann led the installation service which was most impressive.

Then we adjourned for supper. The host church provided the dessert and drinks.

After supper the recreation was led by Mrs. Evelyn "Sugar" Graham and Dr. "Hardy" Hardecastle.

The pastors, youth leaders and all other guests were recognized before our leaving.

We left with a feeling of accomplishment.

We greatly missed Pattie Lee Coghill but we wish her God-speed in her work as teacher.

North Carolina - Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Meets

The North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Conference was held at Palm Street Church in Greensboro, N. C., October 17. Registration began at 2:30, and at 3:00 the opening worship service was given by the Pilgrim Fellowship of the host church.

The report of the Nominating Committee was given by Louis Wilkins and was accepted. In the absence of the conference treasurer, Patricia Gordan, the treasurer's report was given by Billy Oakley, the treasurer-elect. Very interesting reports from the Pilgrim Fellowship National Council were given by Lois Scott, Lois Robinson, and Curtis Young respectively.

Next on the program was the election of officers for the ensuing two years. The newly elected officers are: president, Dorothy Mauldin from Winston-Salem; vice-president, Louis Wilkins from Liberty; secretary, Shelby Jean Cox from Happy Home; treasurer, Billy Oakley from Beverly Hills. Commission chairmen are: Faith Commission, Margaret Walker from Durham; Action Commission, Lois Robinson from Burlington First; Fellowship Commission, Jane Tate from Greensboro First. Advisors are: Reverend John Lackey, Reverend Thomas Sutton, and Reverend Wm. T. Scott, Jr. Immediately following the election the installation service was conducted by Reverend John Graves.

Among those present were four representatives from Center Church at South Boston, Virginia, one of the conference's newest churches. Welcome to the fold!

The closing worship service was given by the Happy Home Pilgrim Fellowship; after which, supper was served in the basement of the host church. Many thanks are extended to Palm Street Church for such a delicious and plentiful meal.

LOUIS WILKINS.

* * * * *

Youth Activities at Christian Temple

There are two fellowships in this church. One, the Intermediate Fellowship, for ages from 13-15; and the other, the Senior Fellowship, for young people over the age of 16.

We have recently organized for the fall and our officers are as follows: Intermediate Fellowship, president, Carolyn Barrett; vice-president, Sandra Allen; secretary, Jerry Cummings; treasurer, Letcher Cummings; program chairman, Herman Nichols, Sandra Cummings; social chairman, Mary Lastinger.

Senior Fellowship, president, Peggy Ann Popejoy; vice-president, Joyce Wilson; secretary, Foretta Salmons; treasurer, Ellen Robinson; program chairman, Barbara Nichols, Sonny Bell, Sonny Clements; social chairman, Joel Tomlinson.

The Intermediate Fellowship has been busy with ways of earning part of their apportionment. For the next few months the members are collecting certain food labels to turn in for .03¢ each. Also, Saturday, October 23, the Intermediate Fellowship had a Pastry Sale for all members in the church. We had a lot of fun selling cakes, cookies, and pies.

The Senior Fellowship is making plans for a supper shortly after Christmas. This will be a big affair for all the church members. Some of the ladies of the Woman's Council are helping by planning, buying, and cooking, along with the young people.

Both fellowships are planning a joint retreat over the weekend of November 5 and 6 at Camp Owissa, the YWCA camp in Norfolk. At this retreat we hope, among other things, to make further plans for our year's program.

JUNE HAGE,
Reporter.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

Laymen's Fellowship. They were served a delicious meal by the Ladies' Missionary Society of the Wentworth Church.

After the dinner the group adjourned to meet after a brief recess in the Wentworth Christian Church. Clayborn Brown, president of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Wentworth Church served as temporary chairman of the group. The laymen and the nine ministers who were present engaged in an enjoyable period of group singing, using many of the time-honored, familiar hymns of the church.

J. E. Daniele addressed the group on the topic, "The Laymen's Fellowship—Why?" He pointed out the needs for the fellowship; stressing the importance to the individual, the church, and the nation. He called on the men to organize for effective witnessing for their God.

At the business session following
(Continued on page 15.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

A Study in Values

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 14, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTIONS "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold." Proverbs 22:1.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Proverbs: 11:24-28; 13:7; 15:13-17; 16:8-20; 22:1-4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 6:24-33.

Life's Price Tags.

Life may be likened to a display window in a store, or a counter in a store. Everything has its price tag on it. This price tag is supposed to reflect its value. To be sure, things are often over-marked by unscrupulous or grasping merchants. And sometimes they are under-marked and put on bargain counters. (Even then, there is usually no loss, for the mark-down is not as great as the mark-up.) And just as the careful and sensible shopper has to have a sense of values if he wants to get his money's worth, just so does a person have to have a sense of values if he is to get out of life, and to put into life, the most.

The fact is, the real difference between men is their sense of values. Some live for one thing, some for another. There are those things for which men will give time and thought and energy and reputation, and life itself to gain. And whether deliberately, or unconsciously, all of us are living for something, we have a set of values which determine what we do and what we become.

What ranks highest in your scale of values? Is it money or material wealth? Is it physical health? Is it position? Is it power? Is it recognition? Is it pleasure? There are those who place these things first, and who are willing to pay any price for them. Or is it integrity of character, a good name, favor with God, inner peace, loving kindness, goodness, or righteousness? What, for you is the supreme value of life, the thing on which you place the highest value, the thing which you really pursue, and not simply profess? It is well for a man once in a while to stop and to think about his scale of values, to see what he is living for, to test his values by the supreme value as established by Jesus—"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose (or forfeit) his soul? or what will a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Finding What We Seek.

"He that diligently seeketh good, seeketh favor; but he that searcheth after evil, it shall come unto him." Generally speaking, men find what they seek after. Take for instance a visitor to a city. If he wants them, he can find great art masterpieces, hear great music, see great plays, worship in great churches, have fellowship with great people. But if he seeks evil, he can find that: houses of prostitution, tawdry shows, night clubs, slums, saloons and cocktail bars and what have you. He that seeketh, findeth applies here as elsewhere.

Righteousness Rather Than Riches.

It is no sin to be rich. There are Christian men of wealth. But this man of old, as well as Jesus himself, saw the danger in riches, and warned against them. Especially did he warn against ill-gotten riches and dishonest gain. Coins are not to be gotten at the price of character. Gold is not to be put above God. Riches must not be preferred to righteousness. Furthermore, there is a danger in trusting in riches. "He that trusteth in riches shall fall." Paul enjoined Timothy to put men on their guard about trusting "in uncertain riches." There are many success stories about men who have gone from rags to riches. There are also some sadder stories about men who have gone from riches to rags.

Rich, But Poor; Poor, But Rich.

"There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great wealth." There is such a thing as a poor rich man, and such a thing as a rich poor man. Money has nothing to do with the real worth of a man. Nor is it the foundation of happiness. "Better is a little with the fear of Jehovah, than great treasure and trouble therewith. Better is a dinner of herbs (vegetables) where love is, than a stalled ox (tenderloin steak) and hatred therewith."

Many a man and his family sit down to a spare meal of beans and bread, or fat-back and pone, who are happier than the rich man who is clothed handsomely and fares sumptuously. What matters it how much a man has if he has not the peace of God in his heart, if he is worried about his possessions, if they have come between him and his God! This does not put a premium on poverty; but it does put limitations on money. Poor but rich—what a paradox! St. Francis of Assisi, General Booth, Kagawa, Father Damien, Paul, our Lord Jesus Christ himself!

A Countenance or a Complexion.

"A glad heart maketh a cheerful countenance . . . he that is of a cheerful heart hath a continual feast." Folks, especially women folks, spend a lot of time and a lot of money on their complexions. They visit beauty parlors, endure mudpacks, spend huge sums on creams and lotions and all kinds of panaceas, in an effort to get, and keep, a good complexion. These things help. But so do simple foods, fresh air, exercise, sleep, regular living. The fact is that the basis of a good complexion is often inside, and not outside. God knows there are some women who need help from the outside. And more men.

But after all, a countenance is far more important than a complexion. And a countenance comes from inside. "A glad heart maketh a cheerful countenance." If there is peace in the heart, it will show in the face. If there is joy inside, it will show outside. If there is light in the heart, it will be reflected in the face. There are folks who do not have good complexions, who are good to look upon because of the beauty of their countenance. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he, and it is reflected in his face.

A Good Name.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold." As I sat talking with my father, nearly eighty years of age one night in a confidential chat, he said that he had one big regret—he was sorry he had not been able to make a lot of money so that he could leave it to his family. I believe he was sincere in his desire to have money, not for himself, but for us. I said, "Dad, you have given us something far more valuable and desirable than money." "What do you mean?" said he, somewhat puzzled. I replied, "A good name." My father (Continued on page 15.)

Program of the Eastern North Carolina Conference

Following is the tentative program of the one hundred twenty-ninth annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, which will meet with Piney Plains Church, Rev. George M. Talley, pastor, on one day only, Tuesday, November 9, 1954:

PROGRAM.

Tuesday—Morning Session.

- 9:30 Call to Order—President, Dr. Will B. O'Neill.
 Devotional Service—Dr. W. C. Timmons.
 Enrollment of Ministers and Delegates.
 Recognition of Visitors.
 Report of Program Committee, Rev. Carl E. Wallace.
 Report of Treasurer, Mr. W. J. Ballentine.
 Appointment of Special Committees.
 10:00 Our New Apportionments—Prof. L. L. Vaughn.
 10:20 Five Minute Summaries:
 Stewardship—Rev. W. Clay Farrell.
 Evangelism—Rev. J. Frank Apple.
 Home Missions—Mr. S. H. Basnight.
 Foreign Missions—Rev. W. A. Rich.
 10:40 "Our Christian World Mission"—Rev. Fred P. Register.
 11:00 Coffee Hour—Fellowship.
 11:30 "Caring for the Children"—Dr. John G. Truitt.
 11:45 Report: Christian Education—Rev. Carl E. Wallace.
 Education and Standing of the Ministry—Rev. Fred P. Register.
 11:55 Hymn: "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord."
 12:00 Address: "Congregationalism Around the World"—Dr. Sidney M. Berry.
 12:30 Adjournment for Lunch.

Afternoon Session.

- 2:00 Call to Order.
 Hymn and Prayer—Rev. Eugene Talley.
 2:05 "Elon, Today and To-Morrow"—Dr. L. E. Smith.
 2:25 Report of the Social Action Committee—Rev. W. A. Grissom.
 Address: Rev. Carl R. Key.
 2:50 Ten Minute Reports:
 "The Christian Sun"—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell.
 The N. C. State Council of Churches and Crop—Rev. Morton Kurtz.
 The Southern Convention—Dr. W. T. Scott.
 The General Council—Rev. Carl E. Wallace.
 The World Council—Dr. W. C. Timmons.
 3:40 Address: "The Healing Ministry"—Dr. Edward W. Wilder.
 4:00 Session of the Conference Missionary Association—Mr. S. H. Basnight, Presiding.
 4:20 Report of the Nominating Committee.
 4:25 Miscellaneous Business.
 5:00 Adjournment.

Evening Session.

7:00 Call to Order.

Service of Worship—Pastor and Choir of Piney Plains Church.

7:10 Address: "The Task of the Church"—Rev. Charles M. Jones.

Holy Communion—Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce and Rev. George M. Talley.

Benediction—Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce.

Program of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference

Following is the tentative program of the one hundred twenty-ninth annual session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, to be held with the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, North Carolina, Dr. W. E. Wisseman, minister, on Tuesday, November 16, 1954:

PROGRAM.

Tuesday—Morning Session.

- 10:00 Conference—Convened by President M. W. Andes.
 Welcome—Dr. W. E. Wisseman.
 Service of Worship—Rev. Dave Shepherd.
 10:15 Roll Call of Ministers and Churches.
 10:25 Presentation of Program—Dr. Henry E. Robinson.
 10:30 Report of Executive Committee—Rev. W. J. Andes.
 10:40 Recognition of New Pastors and Visitors—Dr. W. T. Scott.
 10:45 Report of Treasurer—Mr. Russell V. Powell.
 10:50 Report of the Committee on the Ministry—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell.
 11:05 Report of the Committee on Stewardship and Evangelism—Rev. W. W. Snyder.
 11:20 Address—Dr. Sidney Berry.
 12:00 Conference Missionary Association—Rev. Kenneth D. Register.
 Recess.
 12:30 Luncheon.

Tuesday—Afternoon Session.

- 2:00 Hymn and Prayer.
 2:10 Address—Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.
 2:40 Report of the Committee on Missions, Rev. K. D. Register.
 2:50 Report of Elon College—Dr. L. E. Smith.
 3:10 Report of the Christian Orphanage—Dr. John G. Truitt.
 3:30 Report of the Woman's Fellowship—Mrs. Wm. T. Scott.
 3:45 Report of the Committee on Evangelism—Mr. Earl Danieley.
 4:00 Report of the Committee on Religious Literature and Christian Education—Rev. J. S. Graves.
 4:10 Report of the Committee on Memoirs—Rev. G. C. Crutchfield.
 4:20 Report of the Committee on Social Action—Mr. W. T. Waller, Jr.
 4:30 Report of the Committee on Resolutions—Mrs. C. B. Wilkins.
 4:45 Presentation of the North Carolina Council of Churches—Rev. Morton Kurtz.
 5:00 Report of the Committee on Nominations—Mr. J. C. Wilkins.
 Recess.
 6:00 Fellowship Dinner—Dr. Henry E. Robinson, Presiding.
 Steps Forward in Church Extension.
 Reports from Lynchburg—Rev. Beverly Cosby.
 Reports from South Boston—Rev. M. W. Andes.
 "The Christian Sun"—Dr. S. C. Harrell.
 The Laymen's Fellowship—Mr. T. A. Viuecut.
 The Pilgrim Fellowship—Mr. Curtis Young.

Tuesday—Evening Session.

- 8:00 Worship Service—Rev. Walter Hall.
 8:15 Conference Offering—to be used for Missions—Home and Foreign.
 8:20 Address—Dr. Sidney Berry.
 8:50 Service of Licensure if Necessary.
 Adjournment.

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Piney Plains Church, near Raleigh—November 9

Rev. Will B. O'Neill, President

Rev. R. L. Jackson, Secretary

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11

Rev. M. A. Pollard, President

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro—November 16

Rev. Mark W. Andes, President

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

David Haith is at home on furlough. He is visiting a brother nearby, and comes over to see his sister and friends here at the orphanage. David has been in the Air Force for nearly a year. He has just come from helping guard the Little White House in Denver. In less than a year's absence he could observe several improvements: the completed Holt Chapel, and the new lake and irrigation system, and other lesser improvements. He was so handsome in his spotless uniform. He is a part of a hand-picked group of Air Force Policemen.

David was more anxious to tell me about Banks. He could not say enough for his buddy another boy reared along with him here at the orphanage. He doesn't drink, he doesn't go on rowdy parties. His talk is clean and without any oaths. I tell you that you would be proud of him. Somebody stole his first pay the first night after he received it. I wanted him to report it, went on David, but he said, no, he didn't want to get anybody into trouble. David told me how he divided his pay with him, and when Banks later wanted to pay it back, he said, no, we are buddies. We'll look out for each other. Orphanage boys a long way from home and sticking together. Well, God has been good to them, and they are going right ahead. I wish I could tell you about the good contacts David has made, and the good associates he has found.

These are your boys, too, for you have helped them with the contributions you have made to this institution and in the interest you have taken in it. You just cannot tell how much good this institution has been to hundreds of children. And, besides, my friends, we are only to do our part and leave the results to God.

Our goal for this year is $70,000. Let's reach it.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR OCTOBER 28, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Mrs. Byrd Shepherd, Burlington, N. C.
Haw River Cong. Christian Church.

Clothing:

Miss Ruth Madren, Ossipee, N. C.

Mrs. Bertha Iseley, Burlington, N. C.

Show tickets:

D. R. Fonville, Burlington, N. C.

Coat:

Woman's Fellowship, Lebanon Church.

Cups and Saucers:

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd A. Turner, Suffolk, Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $11,869.70

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Amelia $ 22.00

Wake Chapel 51.55

73.55

Eastern Va. Conference:

Christian Temple $ 10.00

Union (Surry) S. S. 24.00

34.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Bethlehem $ 2.50

Reidsville S. S. 68.00

Lynchburg 3.00

73.50

Western N. C. Conference:

Brown's Chapel S. S. ... $ 15.00

Providence Chapel 2.00

Shiloh S. S. 36.69

Zion 30.00

83.69

Virginia Valley Conference:

Joppa $ 9.00

Mayland 6.00

Newport S. S. 23.27

Wissler's Chapel 21.00

59.27

Total $ 324.01

Grand total $12,193.71

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $25,259.82

Lehigh Valley Railroad

Co. (interest) $ 1.20

Beacon Ave. Cong. Christian S. S., Columbus, Ga. 7.67

Mrs. Essie T. Simpson,

Stokesdale, N. C. 25.00

W. E. Lowe, Elon College,

N. C., Thanksgiving

Offering 5.00

Mrs. R. L. Gilliam, Sr.,

Burlington, N. C. 5.00

Hank's Chapel Christian

Church 9.00

H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. 15.00

Woman's Aux., Holland

Christian Church 5.00

In Memory of Mrs. Isabel

Foster Jordan 10.00

In Memory of Mrs. J. W.

Trollinger 5.00

In Memory of Mrs. W. R.

Goley 5.00

In Memory of Mrs. Cleo

Faucette 10.00

In Memory of Mrs. W. R.

Goley 5.00

In Memory of Ben Elder

In Memory of Mrs. Carrie

G. Bodwell 3.00

In Memory of Clarence

Bunch 10.00

Special Gifts 20.51

146.38

Grand total $25,406.20

Total for the week $ 407.39

Total for the year $37,599.91

Fewer Dusty Bibles

Seeing an unused Bible lying about in his home, a small boy is reported to have asked his mother whose book it was. "It is God's Book," she said. "Well," replied the boy, "don't you think we should return it? Nobody seems to read it."

But stories like the above do not apply to all the homes of America, according to Frederick Cropp, the secretary of the American Bible Society, who has spent a considerable amount of time investigating the situation.

"People are wrong who say that while the Bible may be the world's best seller, it is the least read book," said Dr. Cropp. "Indications are that there is increased Bible reading here in the United States as well as throughout the world."

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

In Memoriam

PARKS.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Ramseur Christian Church, wish to express our sorrow in the passing of a beloved member, Mrs. J. A. Parks.

She was granted a long and useful life. In her going our society has lost a very loyal and true member. Her long life should inspire us and draw us nearer to God.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father.
2. That we extend our deepest love and sympathy to her family.

Mrs. C. E. BROWN,
Mrs. ELVIN COX,
Mrs. JACK WHITE,
Mrs. RUSSELL CRAVEN,
Committee.

BAIN.

Whereas:

God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to take Mr. George W. Bain from our midst on June 10, 1954, we the members of the Centerville Congregational Christian Church, wish to submit the following resolutions of love and respect for one of our most beloved and faithful members. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we consider his death a great loss to our church and community.
2. That we shall miss his sincere friendship, strong Christian character, lovable personality, unfailing generosity, untiring efforts, and the sweet fellowship of our work together.
3. That we accept the challenge of a stronger christian faith and be inspired, by his example, as senior deacon and superintendent of Sunday school for approximately 40 years, to a nobler Christian life.
4. That we extend heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved wife and pray God's blessing on her.
5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be placed on the records of our church.

Respectfully submitted,
BOARD OF DEACONS,
By Mrs. F. W. Barlow,
Secretary.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 11.)

the program it was officially voted to organize the Conference Fellowship. Officers elected were: president, Percy Measamer, Shallow Well Church; vice-president, D. D. Marley, Chapel Hill Church; secretary, Leon Roberts, Wentworth Church; treasurer, Tiny Daughtrey, Amelia Church.

It was voted that the Eastern North Carolina Laymen would meet on Tuesday after the third Sunday in January, April, July and October. The group accepted the invitation tendered by the group from Shallow Well to meet there in January. The dinner will be served at 7 p. m. and the price is $1.25.

Announcements of interest were made; special emphasis was given to the announcement of the National Convention to be held in the Palmer House in Chicago, Illinois, February 25-27, 1955. Some of the men expressed an interest in the meeting and it seems quite certain that the conference will be represented at the National Convention.

Congratulations to the Eastern North Carolina Conference. We welcome the men of the conference as a new organization and hold high hopes for the future of the work in the conference.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NORTH CAROLINA TREASURER.

(Continued from page 9.)

Church of Wide Fellowship, Mrs. Grace C. Abraham.

Elon College: Miss Madge Brannock, Mrs. Kenneth K. Hughes, Miss Lila C. Newman, Mrs. W. M. Sharpe.

Greensboro, First: Mrs. J. A. Armfield, Mrs. Robert Auth, Mrs. M. W. Blakey, Mrs. E. D. Burnside, Mr. Arthur Burton, Mrs. Arthur Burton, Mrs. Lewis Duckworth, Mrs. Ben Foster, Mrs. W. F. Lasater, (In memory of William O. Truitt) Mrs. Paul Robinson, Mrs. Fred Smith, Mrs. Vernon Somers.

Greensboro, Palm Street: Mrs. Wallace Haney, Mrs. A. J. Harris, Mrs. Paul Squires.

Happy Home, Mrs. Henry Robertson.

Haw River, Mrs. J. C. Wilkins.

Hopedale, Mrs. Ida Blanchard.

Ingram, Mrs. Avis Whitlow.

Lakeview Community, Mrs. T. M. Cobb.

Liberty, N. C., Mr. Cyrus Shoffner.

Liberty, Vance, Mrs. W. A. Grissom.

Long's Chapel, Mrs. Cornelia Allen Aldridge.

Mouticello, Mrs. M. C. Faucette.

Pleasant Grove, N. C., Miss Flossie Bray.

Reidsville: The Rev. Robert Fairbank, Mrs.

Robert Fairbank, The Rev. Tucker G.

Humphries, Miss Harriet Summerville,

Mrs. Boyd Waynick.

Turner's Chapel, Mrs. John A. Redding.

Union, N. C.: Mrs. Alma T. Gilliam, Mrs.

Essie O. Graham.

Memorials.

Beulah, Mrs. Ernest Driver.

Durham, Mrs. Ella Sanford Chandler.

Elon College, Mrs. W. E. Lowe.

Fuller's Chapel, Mrs. R. E. Moss.

Greensboro, First: Miss Sarah K. Hunt, Mr.

William O. Truitt.

Haw River, Mrs. Artelia Poole.

High Point, Mrs. Mattie Vestal.

Hines' Chapel, Mrs. Dora S. Anderson.

Liberty, Vance, Mrs. Florence Underhill.

Mount Bethel, Mrs. Irma Moricle Albert.

Pleasant Grove, Va., Mrs. Susan McDowell.

Pleasant Ridge (G), Mrs. Mollie Huffines Nelson.

Pleasant Ridge (R), Mrs. O. C. Brown.
Reidsville: Mrs. Lula Thompson, Mrs. Aileen Wheeler.
Sanford: Mr. Rex Gunter, Miss Sadie Hart, Mr. Charlie V. Matthews.
Shallow Well, Mr. J. Walker Kelly.
Union, N. C., Mrs. Lou A. McCauley.
Union, Va., Miss Alice Wilson.
Specials: Dr. W. P. Minton, Mrs. Bertha Anna Minton Woman's Mission Board, Mrs. S. E. Albert.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

ther lived and worked and made a living for eighty-one years in a little community in Delaware. Everyone knew him, and through the years, thousands of people did business with him. If, during his life-time (or now since his death), you should ask anybody who knew him or did business with him, "Tell me about that fellow, W. S. Hardeastle, what kind of man he is, can he be trusted, is he honest, will he give me a fair deal?" he would have said—he would have to say, if he told the truth, "He is O. K., he can be depended upon, he will treat you right, his word is as good (and better) than his bond."

Well, I could use a little money, a lot of money. Money is good stuff to have around, especially as old age approaches. But I am sincere when I say that if I had to choose between money, seeds and seeds of money, and my father's good name, I would take his good name every time. He left me a priceless heritage. And I want it that way in my life. I shall not leave my family much—Dean Brown used to say, if you ever hear of a preacher who has any money, it is either matrimony or patrimony, he married it or his father gave it to him—but I do want to leave them a good name, which is worth more than great riches, and to be remembered by them with "loving favor, which is rather to be chosen than silver or gold."

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

A Request

The new Deer Park Church is in need of a communion set. If there is any church which has one it has discarded and would like to make this gift to the church, it would be appreciated. It may be sent to the church, care of Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., 2300 Roanoke Ave., Nowport News, Va. The church will gladly pay the expense of shipping.

Brief Excerpts from "A Treasury of the Kingdom"

"The worship of God is not a rule of safety . . . it is an adventure of the spirit, a flight after the unattainable."

—Alfred N. Whitehead, "Science and the Modern World."

"Like a flock of homesick cranes flying night and day back to their mountain nests, let all my life take its voyage to its eternal home in one salutation to thee."

—Rabindranath Tagore, from "Gitanjali."

"So may our hearts share in Thine anguish, Lord, That they may shearers be; Heavy with weeping may the three days pass, To win the laughter of Thine Easter Day."

—Peter Abelard, Helen Waddell's Translation.

"We praise Thee, O God, for Thy glory displayed in all the creatures of the earth, In the snow, in the rain, in the wind, in the storm; in all Thy creatures, both the hunters and the hunted. . . ."

—T. S. Eliot, from "Murder in the Cathedral."

"He that is choice of his time will also be choice of his company and choice of his actions. . . . God hath given to man a short time here upon the earth, and yet upon this short time eternity depends."

—Jeremy Taylor, in "Holy Living."

"It is for the salvation that is open to all men of good will—pagan as well as Christian, primitive as well as civilized—who make the most of their spiritual opportunities on earth, however narrow these opportunities may be, that we pray when we say, 'Thy Kingdom come.'"

—Arnold J. Toynbee, in "Civilization on Trial."

"Great art Thou, O Lord, and greatly to be praised; great is Thy power, and Thy wisdom infinite. . . . Yet would man praise Thee; he, but a particle of Thy creation. . . . Thou awakest us to delight in Thy praise; for Thou madest us for Thyself, and our heart is restless, until it repose in Thee."

—St. Augustine, "Confessions."

"The great secret of morals is love; or a going out of our own nature, and an identification of ourselves with the beautiful which exists in thought, action, or person, not our own. A man, to be greatly good, must imagine intensely and comprehensively; he must put himself in the place of another and of many others; the pains and pleasures of his species must become his own. The great instrument of moral good is the imagination."

—Percy Bysshe Shelley, in "A Defense of Poetry."

"A great curiosity ought to exist concerning divine things. Man was intended to argue with God. . . . The Lord demands that his people shall demand an explanation from him. Whether they understand it or like it when they get it is another matter, but demand it they must and shall. Humility has never consisted in not asking questions; it does not make men less themselves or less intelligent, but more intelligent and more themselves."

—Charles Williams, in "He Came Down from Heaven."

Note—"A Treasury of the Kingdom," compiled by E. A. Blackburn and others, was published September 16, by Oxford University Press.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1954

NUMBER 44

Memories of . . .

The First Armistice Day

*In the still night, rolled tightly in blanket thus shielded
From the quick, keen chill of the moist lake wind,
We awoke to the sound of the gay bells ringing,
Of whistles and guns and steeple bells swinging,
O clatter and din,
And we knew that the City of Steel was singing
The Armistice in.*

*And we knew, drawn nearer and thinking as one,
That at last they were silent, the guns of war,
And before the ringing and pounding was done,
We slept as we never had slept before.*

*"Is it true?" we asked, when morning came,
Of the thick white frost on the window frame,
Of the silver-bowed grass, and the brashy hedge,
Of the star-dusted path to the water's edge,
Of the broken bluff and the glistening wood.
All, in the clear light, peacefully stood!*

"Is it true?" we asked, and the pine by the door, Seemed to answer, "Hush! There never was war!"

—Margery Mansfield.

News Flashes

Mrs. Thomas Britton, wife of the pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, underwent surgery recently at the King Daughters Hospital. As of November third, she was reported making satisfactory recovery.

The article on page five of this issue, is one delivered on Laymen's Sunday at the United Congregational Christian Church at Chapel Hill, N. C., by Mr. Edward Lane-Reticker. Mr. Lane-Reticker is the assistant director of the Institute of Government of the University of North Carolina. The article was submitted by Rev. Richard L. Jackson, the pastor of our Chapel Hill Church.

In recognition of the need for an exchange of ideas on integration, the Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., of our Newport News Church, invited the Rev. T. J. Moore of Wesley Grove Congregational Christian Church, and the Rev. Metz Rawlings of Carver Memorial Presbyterian Church, to join him in a panel discussion on the subject last Sunday at Vesper services. Both panelists and congregations exchanged views, as well as both races.

People of Many Nations Will Read the Bible Together

People in forty countries will be reading the same passage of Scripture on Thursday, November 25, Thanksgiving Day, in following the eleventh annual observance of the Worldwide Bible Reading program, sponsored each year by the American Bible Society.

The theme for the program, which runs from Thanksgiving to Christmas, is "Faith for Our Day." As a part of Worldwide Bible Reading, the American Bible Society publishes and provides, free of charge, a book-mark listing Scripture passages for the daily readings. For the second year, the society has also prepared the passages in Braille, that the blind may join their sighted friends in following the readings.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower, in his endorsement of the program, said:

"Religious faith, in our time, is under massive attack by a strongly
(Continued on page 7.)

Congregationalists of Massachusetts To Honor Albert Buckner Coe At Dual Purpose Dinner

Dr. Albert Buckner Coe of Boston, Massachusetts, recently elected moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in America and president of the 146-year-old Massachusetts Congregational Christian Conference, will be honored on Tuesday night, November 16, at a great Testimonial Dinner in the Worcester Auditorium, Worcester, Mass., with an anticipated attendance of over 2,500 laymen, women and clergy from all over the Bay State.

The dinner has a dual purpose in that not only will it pay honor to

DR. ALBERT BUCKNER COE

Dr. Coe for his leadership and recognize his election to the national office of Moderator of the General Council, but will be a victory celebration on the successful completion of the million dollar Church Building Loan Fund campaign in Massachusetts. This fund includes $750,000.00, the Massachusetts quota for the National Church Building Loan Fund of over four and a half million, and $250,000.00 to be used by the conference within Massachusetts.

The main speaker will be Dr. Albert J. Penner, minister of historic Broadway Tabernacle, Congregational, New York City, and formerly the minister of the Second Congregational Church in Holyoke, Mass.

The elective post of moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches is the highest honor in the power of the fellowship to bestow upon a fellow member. Dr.

(Continued on page 9.)

Barrett Family Holds Reunion

The family of the late John Burwell Barrett met on the grounds of Barrett's Christian Church in Southampton County, on Sunday, October 17, 1954, for a family reunion. The land on which Barrett's Church is built, was given by the father of the late John Burwell Barrett, and a church was constructed on this site in the early 1800's.

Attending this reunion were Mr. Phillip H. Barrett, Sedley, Va., Mrs. P. A. Hines, Sr., Ivor, Va., Mrs. A. W. Barrett, Sedley, the only remaining children of John Burwell Barrett, and approximately 150 grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren, as well as many friends of the families.

A picnic lunch was served on the grounds of the church. This was followed by a devotional service conducted by M. Edwin Barrett of Alexandria, Va.

During the business session which followed, it was decided to have an annual reunion of the Barrett family at Barrett's Church. Officers were elected, as follows: Mrs. Jenie Barrett Spratley of Dendron, president; Bernard Barrett of Sedley, vice-president; Mrs. Winnie Hines Harrison of Ivor, secretary; Edward M. Richardson, Jr., of Wakefield, treasurer, and M. Edwin Barrett of Alexandria, historian.

Let's Share Our Surplus

By ARMSTRONG HUNTER.

November is a traditional time of giving—but should not the harvest festival be more than a time of thanksgiving? Is it not a natural time to share with others the very things for which we now offer our thanks?

We in America have enough food to eat. Indeed, we have more than enough and huge amounts of food—more than six billion dollars' worth—are stored away by our government as "surplus commodities."

These stored surplus goods, if they were to be loaded on 50-ton box cars, would require a train which would stretch west from London across the Atlantic, through the United States and over the Pacific 500 miles west of Tokyo.

People in Asia, Africa and parts of Europe need this food. A mother or father or child in the Far East gets about two-sevenths of an ounce of animal protein a day. A mother
(Continued on page 15.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Colgate W. Darden to Speak Before Eastern Virginia Laymen

The laymen of Eastern Virginia will hold their Annual Rally at the Suffolk Christian Church on Sunday, November 14, 1954. The program will begin at 4 p. m. Dinner will be served at 6 o'clock.

Following the dinner, the Hon. Colgate W. Darden, president of the University of Virginia, will deliver the principal address.

All laymen in the Eastern Virginia Conference are urged to attend.

JIMMY DARDEN.

* * * * *

Durham Church Observes Layman's Sunday

Dr. Vester Mulholland, a Christian educator who has recently returned from a Korean assignment and is now with the North Carolina Board of Education, delivered the message at the morning service, October 18, as Durham's Congregational Christian Church observed Laymen's Sunday. The theme of the service was centered around the importance of actions that follow one's decision to become a Christian. Mr. Kenneth Manning presided over the service and special music was provided by Mr. Bobby Churchill and a chorus of men from the church and from the Duke United Student Fellowship.

CARL H. STOLTENBERG.

* * * * *

Rev. William J. Andes Installed As Minister of Community Church of Elon College

A service of installation of Rev. William J. Andes, as minister of the Elon College Community Church, was held October 31, 1954, at 7:30 p. m., in Whitley Auditorium on the Elon College campus. The installation sermon was preached by Dr. W. T. Scott. Rev. Mark W. Andes of the Center Congregational Christian Church of South Boston, Virginia, and president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, presided over the installation service.

The program included organ music by Miss Shirley Cox; an anthem, "The Twenty-Third Psalm," by the Junior Choir; an anthem, "O God,

Our Help in Ages Past," by the Community Choir; and a solo, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountain," by Miss Elizabeth Nelms, who was accompanied by Mr. Jonathan Sweat at the organ.

Dr. Henry E. Robinson, minister of the First Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., read the scripture lesson, which consisted of selections from Second Timothy. George D. Colelough, vice-president of the Southern Convention and chairman of the Pulpit Committee, presented the Rev. Mr. Andes for installation. Professor A. L. Hook, chairman of the Board of Deacons, brought greetings from the Community Church. Mr. T. H. Mackintosh, representing Elon Mayor J. D. Schmidt, brought greetings from the town of Elon College; and the Rev. Truitt Gannon brought greetings from the First Baptist Church of Elon College.

After the installation sermon by Dr. Scott, using the subject, "The Church and You," the Rev. Wm. J. Andes was installed by the Rev. Mark Andes. The prayer of installation was offered by President Leon Edgar Smith. Benediction was spoken by Rev. Wm. J. Andes.

After the service of installation, guests and friends were greeted at an informal reception at the Parish House. The reception was arranged by members of the Women's Missionary Society. Mrs. W. W. Sloan, president, and Mrs. Ralph Oxford, vice-president of the society, presided at the refreshment table.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
 Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
 Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.
 Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.
 Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year	$3.00
Two Years	5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
 Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
 () 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church
 Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

The Church and Social Issues

The attitude of many church members toward social issue is interesting and sometimes perplexing. The Church is established in the very center of the social order. The chief concern of Christ is for the well-being of people. True, his ideas of what made for human welfare were not always in conformity with those who thought they were the leaders of their day; but Christ never hesitated to speak when vital social issues were confronting him.

There are church members who insist that the churches must maintain an unbroken silence about controversial social issues. They fear that the peace and harmony of the church may be disturbed by discussing issues concerning which there are differences of opinion.

There are other church members who are absolutely convinced that the church ought to speak out in no uncertain terms on social issues, and some church members are sure they are in a position to formulate what the church ought to say. We of the Congregational Christian Churches are well aware of the reactions that can be stirred up when social questions are being considered.

Those of us who are in the Congregational Christian tradition certainly would never deny any one the right of personal opinion, nor would we deny him the right to express that opinion. We also accord the individual the right to hold his own interpretation of the Scriptures. We should also remember that Christ promised that, "When he, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."

If we believe that Christ is vitally concerned about every thing that makes for human development, and that he has laid down for us the principles by which all men should be guided as they seek to move toward Christ's ideal, then we should seek divine guidance from the teachings of Jesus and the revelations of the Holy Spirit.

In what better way could we seek divine guidance than for men and women of good will to come together, consider the issues that are involved, examine what Jesus has said which bears upon the question, listen carefully, each to what the other thinks should be done, and then pray that God will reveal to them, by the power and wisdom of the Holy Spirit what they together should do?

Wealth of Spirit

Wealth of spirit is never attained by the greedy. Goodspeed translates Jesus' warning: "You must be on your guard against any form of greed, for a man's life does not belong to him, no matter how rich he is." Jesus illustrated his point with the story of the man with a bumper crop, who thought he could store up great wealth for his soul by building larger barns; this story is traditionally known as the Parable of the Rich Fool. God called this man a fool, for he had lived as if not only his goods but also his life were his own.

In the great Love Chapter of First Corinthians, Paul presents an entirely different but not unrelated situation. He pictures a man who is blessed with unusual ability and knowledge and faith, who gives himself unstintingly to good works, but who "profiteth nothing" to himself. He acts from pride, not from love. He is spiritually impoverished.

We should not misunderstand the point Paul is making. The man who is a stranger to love does not always live a useless life. Other men may profit by his knowledge; the poor may be helped by his gifts (although it will probably be hard for anyone to feel very grateful to him). As Goodspeed's phrase shows, he does himself no good: his soul is greedy, even if his actions are bountiful, he leads a loveless life. He might be called the Useful Wretch.

Wealth of spirit is never attained by the greedy. It is attained by those who know the true nature of God, for God is love. It is attained by those who are generous, not easy-going, of soul. It identifies the self with the high desires and purposes of mankind. It shares in the redemption of the world, the end for which Jesus gave his life. It enters into that peace which passeth human understanding.

We should notice that these parables of the greedy soul deal with public actions, as if the greedy soul were necessarily estranged from family life. This is no accidental insight. Jesus' pictures of the generous soul are often drawn in terms of family life. This is surely deliberate. Healthy love is almost invariably a function of the family. There is a warning in this which the church must not forget, on peril of building nothing but bigger barns.

Now, as the church represents the family of God, it should care for its new members as the family should care for a new baby. A child must be fed and tended if he is to grow in stature, but he must be loved if he is to grow in wisdom and in favor with God and man. And Jesus reminded us that we must become as little children—that our great capacity must be the capacity for spiritual growth. From this Paul deduced the nature of manhood for the Corinthians:

“When I became a man, I put aside my childish ways. For now we are looking at a dim reflection in a mirror, but then we shall see face to face. Now my knowledge is imperfect, but then I shall know as fully as God knows me. So faith, hope and love endure.

The child grows without knowing it: the man grows in faith, hope and love. The Rich Fool and the Useful Whetch do not grow at all. Wealth of spirit is attained by those who grow in faith, hope and love. “And the greatest of them is love.”

Religion IS Everyday Life

By EDWARD LANE-RETICKER

In our scripture lesson this morning, James says this: “If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridled not his tongue, this man’s religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world.”

If we read on in James’ letter, we find him developing the thought further: “What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body: what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show you my faith by my works.”

This whole letter of James makes a particularly appropriate text for the topic of our joint sermon, “Religion in Everyday Life.” And certainly “Religion in Everyday Life” is an appropriate topic for laymen on Laymen’s Sunday; and the only trouble, if there is any, with this topic is that it is somewhat like talking about a round circle or a four-sided square. The more we think about these words, “religion in everyday life,” the more we may be inclined to ask whether there is any other kind.

To ask that question is to answer it. Of course, there is no other kind. Religion IS everyday life. This is one of the great truths woven into the very fabric of the New Testament. But how often we do forget it. How often our religion does become a thing apart from everyday life. How often it becomes a thing of church on Sunday, service on a committee, and lip-service to the commandments of Jesus.

Almost all, if not all of us here this morning are members of a church—this church or some other church. Why are we church members? To have some place to go on Sundays, to serve on committees, and to be able to put down church membership on the various application forms and questionnaires with which modern life confronts us?

Every organization and institution, whether a club, a union, a political party, or a church, has a purpose; and great organizations have great purposes. But in every institution and organization, there is a danger that its purpose will be forgotten. Lurking like a cancer beneath the surface is the danger that an organization will lose its original purpose and that its only purpose will become its own perpetuation—that the club, union, political party, or church will become an end in itself.

In Newport, Rhode Island, there is an institution known as the Reading Room. The Reading Room is a club. If you are invited to the Reading Room, you may be surprised to find that no books are read there, but there is a well-stocked bar. I don’t know the reason for a Reading Room with a bar instead of books, but it wouldn’t be surprising if it happened something like this: A number of people who liked books and reading, got together and started a small library. After a while, they decided they would have to be careful about whom they admitted to membership. Later on, they decided that they did not care for reading anyway—and the loss of original purpose was complete.

What happens to clubs can happen to churches. Without constant vigilance, we are likely to lose sight of their fundamental purpose of fostering religion in everyday life. We allow them to concentrate on perpetuating themselves and to become so involved in their organizational affairs that it takes a great leader—a Wesley, a Luther, a Christ—to call them back to first principles.

It is well to remember that neither John Wesley, nor Martin Luther, nor Jesus Christ was trying to start a new church. Each was trying to revitalize the church of which he was a member. In all three cases, however, the churches had become so rigid and had grown so far away from their original purpose that they were unable to respond.

Even a brief glance at the ministry of Jesus will show that it was a ministry of preaching everyday religion to ordinary people—people who, today, would be called laymen. When the Pharisees wanted to know whether to stone the woman taken in adultery and thus observe the Mosaic Law, or not to stone her and thus violate the Mosaic Law, Jesus went straight to the moral instead of the legalistic issue: “He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.” When his disciples were criticized for eating without first washing their hands, as was required by Jewish tradition, Jesus defended them: “Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.”

Asked by the Pharisees, in an effort to discredit him, what was the greatest commandment, Jesus unhesitatingly replied that it was: “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” In the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, we find the everyday religion of Jesus summed up in one of the most beautiful passages of the New Testament:

“When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. . . . Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, “Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was a-hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited

(Continued on page 13.)

Knot-Hole Christianity

By DR. RICHARD K. MORTON

Knot-hole gangs have been a great help in work against juvenile delinquency and in interesting young boys in wholesome activities such as attendance at baseball games and the like. It has so often been that many boys have seen ball games only from the vantage point of the knot-hole.

The knot-hole, however, has its conspicuous disadvantages. Even where access to it is allowed and results in no outraged action from authorities, it is still on the outside and far removed from the center of action. It permits also only a limited view of what is going on, and also does not allow for the participation of many in the enjoyment of the game.

Hearing an announcement, this week, of the organization of another Knot-Hole Gang by an alert service club made me think about the more general matter of coming to grips personally with the life of our times and also about those whose connection with the church and the work of Christ remains so aloof, so under-tain, so limited, and so tentative.

I wonder if we cannot all, working together, do something about ship of Christianity. This type of this so-called knot-hole churchman-discipleship which receives a seismic jolt at Easter and pushes the pointer of enthusiasm way up high, and then promptly drops down again—is it not subject to enrichment and greater sustained effort?

One can press the metaphor too far, of course, but what I mean by this type of churchmanship is a kind which has just barely taken form at all. It is weak and ineffective and non-functioning. It is perplexing sometimes to discover why such churchmanship is satisfactory to any individual, for one would think that if he were to be a practicing Christian at all, he would want to get into it more thoroughly.

To attend a ball game via the knot-holes in the centerfield fence, for example, may be better than not attending at all, but it certainly is not very comfortable, nor is it satisfactory in other ways. A great deal is missed, and the individual cannot compare his enjoyment with that of the partron who sits in the stands.

Knot-hole Christianity is the dead weight on the membership lists of many of our churehes. There are so many who want to be identified, just the least little bit, with the Christian Church and its work, but do not want to spend any money or any effort or get right into the job at hand. They are strangely content with "lending their name" or contributing to the cause a small amount or attending a church supper, or worshipping at Easter.

If this kind of discipleship could be transformed into a working band, one with a message and a will to work, it would be helpful indeed.

Knot-hole Christianity is a kind of faith which remains all the time ignorant of much that is going on in the Christian world and fellowship. It is too far away, it is too loosely connected, to feel any of the thrill of the Christian enterprise or to share much of the power shed abroad. It is too uncommitted, too sketchy in its understanding, too limited in its scope, to be a significant part of the work as a whole.

These folks need the chalenge of the fellowship of those who are really accomplishing work. One church I know of had a campaign, and even released balloons telling of their work and earrying a brief evangelistic message. Still another put on a clever series of skits by people crippled in various ways for audiences handicapped in the same way. One much-publicized group has presented a great Easter play in sign language for the deaf. Another actually has a eommittee which looks after the pastor's leisure time program and arranges for staff affairs, so that all get a chance to attend instructive and also recreational affairs.

Our diseipleship should not resemble the action of these new refrigerators which have a different freezing compartment for various needs. We ought not to need such facilities in our churchmanship—their ought to be a willing and unmeasured participation on the part of all. When we start requiring conditions just this way or that, much of our power is lost.

Knot-hole Christianity is undedicated and cold. It is too far removed from the scene of action to be able to grasp quickly what the needs are. It fails to get up enough power to make any real impression upon the life around it.

As the summer months come, both in North and South, there is a good deal of quiet desertion on the part of the members and the friends of the church. They just disappear, whether they leave town or not. There is little opportunity taken to join with others to see what can be done about this season when work slumps.

We could all wish that if people are moved to associate themselves at all with the things of Christ and the church that they do so to a greater extent than is involved in looking through some distant knot-hole, as it were. What the Christian mission in our world today needs most is not more observers and idle critics who aloofly give of their opinions from a safely detached standpoint, but individuals who are eager to be part of the fight and who want to be right in the game.

Changing the figure of speech, I want to call to remembrance the remark of a relative who years ago attended an opera in Paris. She wanted to go, but what she wanted to pay proeured her a seat in so poor a section and so far to the rear, that is seemed to her that she was hardly present at all.

Now one purpose of the knot-hole gangs that bring boys to baseball games and get them interested in wholesome activities rather than in mischief, is to develop their love of baseball so that later they will go by themselves.

This is precisely the goal of the church leaders and workers who encounter the evidences of knot-hole Christianity. They want to encourage these people not to stand off, looking at the fight for the souls and minds of men today and for the building of the kingdom of God, but rather to pay the price and come in at the main gate and join in full participation in what is being done. If more of this can be accomplished, the Christian enterprise will gain much.

Walter A Graham is Present At Planning Meeting

Plans for bolstering the budgets of America's church-related colleges and for a national convention of 10,000 to 15,000 Protestant men were considered at a national meeting of church laymen held the past week in St. Louis, Missouri. Among those on the program were Walter A. Graham, director of our National Laymen's Fellowship, and the Rev. J. Kenneth Kohler, exeective secretary of the Churchmen's Brotherhood of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Value of Goals

It matters not what you undertake if the undertaking is worthwhile. You must have in mind ends you wish to attain. If such ends are worthy our best efforts are required if we are to succeed. There is at times a hesitancy in setting goals that challenge us; goals that we, after careful consideration, are reasonably sure that we shall be able to reach. Goals should challenge our faith and not our ability only. Faith exceeds ability. If we only undertake what we are reasonably sure we can accomplish, faith is left out of serious calculation. We are far more hesitant to set goals in our church programs than we are in keeping with personal ambitions. We do not hesitate for ourselves. If we need an automobile, we buy it. If we want a home, we mortgage ourselves far into the future. We sometimes hazard our holdings in making investments which we hope may prove to be beneficial. But when it comes to obligating ourselves for our church and our church's institutions, there is a hesitance lest the goals set are beyond our ability and may prove discouraging, rather than helpful. If we set our goals for the future and are successful step by step and year by year, we are encouraged to press on until the final goal is reached.

In the Southern Convention we are now toying with the idea of goals for the future, goals to be achieved during the next two years, at the end of which we are to celebrate the centennial of the organization of the Southern Convention. These goals have to do with material things as well as spiritual values. Some years ago, we set a goal for our college. The goal was $2,500,000 to provide needed equipment and additional economic values necessary for the continued progress of our college. This goal was to be reached in ten years, beginning in 1946 and closing in 1956. We have travelled a little more than half way. We have less than a year and a half remaining in which to reach our goal. If the goal is to be reached, we must double our efforts, increase our contributions, and multiply our faith. Now is no time to halt, to hesitate, or to question. The goal is worthy and we are able and must reach it.

As an additional step toward the realization of our goal, the proposal has been made that in the churches and through the efforts of church officials in cooperation with all concerned, we are to secure $300,000 through our churches in the Southern Convention over a period of years. We shall reach this goal provided we permit our Heavenly Father to prosper us in spiritual matters. All things are possible of those who believe. "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." This is to say, material goals will depend upon spiritual goals. We reach spiritual goals by resolution and effort. We cannot resolve ourselves into goodness by standing on firm resolutions. We attain spiritual goals by sacrificial efforts, not by resolution, but by fruits of spiritual goals attained. When we reach our spiritual goals, our material goals will not go by default. Christ came to save the whole of life and the forward movement of human interest must be led on by the spirit in his efforts to bring us to the greatest possible achievements of life.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

In an honest attempt to provide for the necessary financial support of our enterprises and institutions, the convention has requested certain amounts from each conference constituting our convention and through our conferences has requested definite amounts from each local congregation. When my conference or any church fails to reach its apportionment for any cause on institution, that cause or institution, of necessity, suffers and must operate in the red or secure necessary funds from other sources not included in our usual program.

The Eastern Virginia Conference reported what I believe to be the most unusual record ever reported by any conference in the total history of our church and convention. This conference was apportioned $38,167 for all causes and institutions of our church. The treasurer, Mr. Chapman White of Waverly, Virginia, reported that every church in the conference had secured and paid its entire apportionment, save one, and that amounted to only $11.00. I submit that this is a record unequalled in our church's history. The churches are to be congratulated and so is the treasurer, Mr. White. This achievement must represent not only hopes, goals, or desires, but a lot of effort. What this conference has done, all the other conferences in the convention could do. I trust that there is a resolution on the part of every church in every conference to reach the goals set for it by our convention. Hats off to the Eastern Virginia Conference!

Previously reported	$10,159.69
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Morrisville	$ 10.55
Mt. Auburn S. S.	4.54
New Elam	50.00
Wake Chapel	25.75
Eastern Va. Conference:
New Lebanon	$ 15.00
Windsor S. S.	23.71
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Bethel	$ 30.00
Bethlehem	56.00
Concord	20.00
Durham S. S.	26.87
Happy Home	34.18
Mt. Bethel	45.00
Lynchburg	3.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Brown's Chapel	$ 5.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester S. S.	$ 10.00
	<hr/>
	359.60
Total to date	<hr/>
	$10,519.29

READ THE BIBLE TOGETHER. (Continued from page 2.)

entrenched atheistic materialism. In such a time, how clear it is that we should treasure and further every act which fuels the flame of our faith. The observance of Worldwide Bible Reading is such an act; and I prayerfully hope that its success this year will be greater—that its imprint in the hearts and minds of the peoples of the world this year will be more pervasive—than ever before.

"I am sure that all who value faith and freedom, join with me in congratulating those good people who annually bring to pass this meaningful observance."

The high point of the program is Universal Bible Sunday, December 12, which will be observed in thousands of churches throughout the United States and in hundreds of churches overseas. Packets containing material, especially prepared by the Bible Society to assist the pastor in this observance, have been mailed to over 150,000 ministers.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Valley Women Accept Friendly Service Quota

I am sure that you will be happy to learn that the Valley Conference not only voted to accept its Fisk quota as a special, but I asked for a few minutes in conference and in a very short time the entire quota was promised. The societies agreed to bring their aprons, sheets, and mattress covers to the Spring Rallies. There the Friendly Service Chairman will collect them, check them, and send them on. How is that for quick work?

The group liked the layette idea and I am hoping that they will all do as our Fellowship in Winchester has decided to do—stork showers in each circle. (Quoted from letter from Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, convention chairman of Friendly Service).

* * * * *

Report from Puerto Rico on "Goat Fund"

On September 30, 1954, we received a check from the Board of Home Missions office in New York, in the amount of $223.63 designated for goats from the Southern Convention Women.

I believe I need not go into the details of our use of this money, for on April 15 and July 9 I wrote about our plans to build up the pure bred saanen goat herd here at our Yuquiyu Center in such a way that we could sell the offspring at moderate prices to the small farmers (and donate them where the economic situation is "rock-bottom"). The 10 pure bred saanen does are progressing nicely. We are expecting another shipment in the month of November. We will continue progressively to use these funds to bring in more stock, to care for them until they can be placed with the farmers.

I believe that I mentioned in my last letter that already the presence of 10 purebreds, under good care, has impressed the community and has put the level of a goat high enough in their minds so that they are beginning to ask when we will have goats for them to buy, how to protect them from parasites, what kinds of feed are needed etc. The native goat has always been turned loose to fend for itself, and consequently, with rare exceptions, there were no milk producers of any consequence.

We are getting out literature on the care of goats, and we are planning some conferences on goat care; from these we hope to have a considerable group of people prepared for getting and caring for a goat—such that it will be not only an economic and health asset but also a pride and joy.

It is in this way that we plan to step up the use of this gift and previous gifts to our goat fund, much of which we are still holding in trust. Before the end of this fiscal year (May 31) we will have all of this goat trust fund spent for goats, and we trust that many families will be benefiting from the generosity of the Southern Convention Women.

IVAN CHATHAM, Director,
Yuquiyu Rural Life Community.

* * * * *

A Tribute to Pattie Lee Coghill

Read at Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference.

So many tributes have been paid Pattie Lee, since her resignation as Educational Director of the convention, that it seems little more can be said, but we of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference feel we must express our gratitude and appreciation for all she has meant, and means, to us.

Today we are happy, perhaps selfishly so, that she is still with us instead of being in Ceylon filling a position offered her by our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

For more years than she may like to realize, her official duties in our denomination have been many, representing us in different capacities from New York to Florida. It seems she was always "on the run." No task was too great, not one too small, for her undivided attention.

We like to think of her worth when she met with small groups for intimate discussion of problems, and few were the ripples that Pattie Lee's smile could not smooth.

Her ability to relax, forget responsibilities, and be just "home folk" made her easy and delightful to entertain in our homes.

We were justly proud when she was one of the American Board deputation of four chosen to go to India, and fourteen other countries, to study all phases of mission work. From this great experience she came back with an even greater vision of the work so dear to her heart. Her seasoned wisdom and spiritual insight made her a tower of strength for all our groups.

Again today, we are grateful she is still with us, busy as ever, if in a different capacity. Her influence is being felt, as always, by all the lives touched by hers.

The most fitting expression of appreciation we could give her at this time would be to strive for the ideals she has always cherished.

"Many daughters have done gloriously, but Pattie Lee excellest them all."

MRS. W. MILLARD STEVENS,
MRS. L. W. STAGG,
MRS. L. W. VAUGHAN.

* * * * *

A Delightful Correspondent

One of the joys of being the editor of this page is that year after year one hears from old friends who do the reporting for their society. This is the time of year when I have piled up a supply of yearly reports which will be published, sooner or later, on this page.

One of the reports that came to me in September is from Mrs. R. E. Apple, who for some years has been reporting events at Apple's Chapel. It is always a delight to get her reports, for she not only puts in the facts, but also usually includes a little of her philosophy of life or reflections on the programs. Her report you will find printed below. Read it and enjoy it.

There is just one thing that would make me happier—for Mrs. Apple and other faithful reporters like her to send in reports of activities during the year as they happen: the Christmas program would have been a good write-up soon thereafter, the same for the World Day of Prayer program. And, gentle hint: More people read the short articles about events during the year than they do the long articles which include the report for the entire year!

Anyhow, we do appreciate greatly all the faithful correspondents from all our societies, even though some of them must not read THE SUN themselves—this year, as for several years, one society has sent its report to me at Elon College, though I have not lived there for eight years; another sent its report to Mrs. W. J. Andes, although she has not been the editor of the page for several years!

* * * * *

Apple's Chapel

Another year has come and gone. As time passes we feel our work is not accomplishing very much, but as we try to summarize a portion of our work, we feel much good has been done. We have been inspired by our programs; our friendly service deeds; and the Christian fellowship of each other as we met from time to time.

The mission study book, Where'er the Sun was reviewed by Cirele No. 2, whose work is less than three years old. It was a delight to see the enthusiasm with which the young women spoke on the chapter representing the different countries. Within These Borders was reviewed by Mrs. L. F. Pritchett.

The Bible study, taught by Mrs. Ted Andrews, opened the gateway to a better understanding of the beautiful things the Heavenly Father has in store for his children.

World Community Day, May Fellowship Day and Family Life programs were open to the public. World Day of Prayer service was observed at the Brown's Pilgrim Holiness Church. Mrs. Carston Hogan and Mrs. R. E. Apple were in charge of the service. The Junior Choir of Apple's Chapel furnished special music, including a solo, "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer," by Miss Wanda Summers. The service was observed with a spirit of dignity and sacredness that made us feel the personal touch of the Master through the power of the Holy Spirit. Our neighbors, who had never attended a World Day of Prayer service before, were deeply impressed. By taking the service to others, we opened a door of cooperation between two churches, and feel God was pleased by our having reached beyond our own doorsteps.

The Christmas program on Puerto Rico was a highlight of the year. The meeting was held in the Assembly Room of the Educational Building. The room was lovely in Christmas greens and candles. Gifts for Ryder Memorial Hospital were placed on a worship table done in white cloth, red candles, and a cross. An offering container with the picture of a goat was placed in the center of the table to receive the offering. To add to the sacredness of the moment, the room was in candlelight. A period of silent prayer was observed. Soft music was rendered by Mrs. P. L. Summers. The offering was received and the prayer of dedication was given by Mrs. R. E. Apple. Mrs. Gordon Powell and Mrs. Tom Oliver directed the program.

We have met all apportionments and sent extra gifts overseas. The sick and shut-ins, at home and in hospitals, have been remembered from time to time.

We recently sponsored a meeting in which Mrs. Norman Parish, a missionary from the Baptist Church, spoke to us and showed films on the work and conditions in Central and South America.

We have an enrollment of 46, divided into two circles. Officers have been elected and literature purchased in readiness for the new year.

It has been a real joy through the year to feel the presence of the Heavenly Father directing us as we seek to do something to promote his kingdom throughout the earth. It is our prayer that he will give us a greater vision of the things he would have us do in the coming year.

MRS. R. E. APPLE,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Quarterly Report of the Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Convention

The following is the quarterly report of the Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches:

RECEIPTS.

Eastern Va. Conference:
Women	$1,799.70
Young People	235.15
Juniors	285.64
Cradle Rolls	389.81
	<hr/>
	$ 2,710.30
Valley Conference:
Women	$ 206.52
Young People	86.50
Juniors	20.00
Cradle Rolls	2.60
	<hr/>
	315.62
N. C. Conference:
Women	$2,022.55
Juniors	97.15
Cradle Rolls	163.73
	<hr/>
	$ 2,283.43
	<hr/>
	$ 5,309.35
Eastern Virginia Young People's Special Mission Fund ..
	<hr/>
	207.97
	<hr/>
Total receipts	$ 5,517.32

DISBURSEMENTS.

Home Missions General
Fund	$1,760.82
Young People's Home
Mission Fund	150.32
Puerto Rican Goats ..	130.00
Christian Orphanage ..	12.50
Spanish Speaking Americans	20.20
Cent-A-Meal Offering ..	33.70
	<hr/>
	$ 2,107.54
Foreign Missions General
Fund	$1,760.82
Young People's Foreign
Fund	150.33
Thank Offering, Mindanao	36.00
Dr. Riggs	20.00
Christian World Mission	39.66
Missions in India	5.00
A. Pappas, Rachanyapuram Girl's School	9.00
	<hr/>
	2,020.81
Eastern Virginia Young People's Special Mission Fund ..
	<hr/>
	207.97
	<hr/>
Chehek to Walter L. Cooper, Tr. Southern Convention	$ 4,336.32
Check to Mrs. Leathers Tr. Life Members and Memorials (68 Life, 25 Memorials)	930.00
One Infant Memorial	1.00
	<hr/>
	$ 5,267.32
Cash in Bank	250.00
	<hr/>
	$ 5,517.32

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. W. V. LEATHERS,
Treasurer.

ALBERT B. COE HONORED AT DUAL PURPOSE DINNER.

(Continued from page 2.)

Coe is the first clergyman to become moderator in a unanimous and unopposed election. He also is the first state executive of the denomination to be elected moderator. It has been 62 years since a clergyman from Massachusetts has been elected moderator, the last was in 1892.

Dr. Coe comes from a family which has supplied leaders in the Christian ministry for five generations. His father was a minister. He has two sons who are Congregational ministers, also two brothers who are Congregational ministers. All four will be present at Dr. Coe's Testimonial Dinner.

A Southerner by birth, Dr. Coe is a New Englander by adoption, but was for nineteen years a pastor in the Middle West.

Dr. Coe was called in 1949 to head up the Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society, which represents nearly 600 Congregational Christian churches in the state—a larger number than in any other state in the Union.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

With a Meow, Purr and Miew we say Welcome to National Cat Week as proclaimed by the American Feline Society. "Feline" is a fancy word for cats. The purpose of this week the leaders say is "To acquaint the public with the protection, care, feeding and health habits of American cats."

There is quite a cat population. Cats are the second most important pets in our country—dog being first. There are two kinds of people: those who like cats, and those that don't. Much can be said in favor of cats: they are quiet, their purrs and mews can't compare with the bark of Fido. Cats are very clean—watch them wash their faces after meals. Cats are gentle if well treated, graceful and relaxed. Notice how graceful the cat walks and stretches.

Felines are our helpers. Many stores and factories keep cats to catch mice and rats which harm goods and material. Nearly every ship that puts to sea, be it freighter or big ocean liner, carries a cat or two. Well fed cats like to hunt for the sport of it. "Mousers" are much in demand so they are mans' helpers, and work for their keep.

Mother cats carry their young by the nape of the neck, but we should always lift kitty with one hand under her stomach and the other to support her legs which is reasonable for we don't like to be carried legs adangle do we? Plenty of plain food, a sunny or warm sleeping spot, fresh water and a daily frolic will give you a good pet. Need we add "No tail pulling?"

Kitty cats are very intelligent animals. I have known a few exceptionally smart cats. One I owned. His name was Ginger and he was literally a "church cat" having come from a family of members of Richmond's First Church, and his mother belonged to the choir director. Whatever his church inclinations were, Ginger was smart. He would walk on a lead like a dog, played dead and rolled over, and rode with ease in the back window of the car. He was beautiful and knew it, and thoroughly enjoyed parsonage life.

The Lane Family in Richmond owned a Manx cat (they are born without tails) which was quite smart. I taught a little boy that had a big gray cat named "Tutti" who was wise enough to climb atop the slippery refrigerator and stick in a paw when the door was opened. He always pawed the milk bottle his family-owners said. At the moment I have been hearing of the antics of a black feline called "Lucifer" who steals rides in a bakery truck.

You may have guessed I like cats. Yes, and I own three—or they own me: "Blue Boy," "Fuzzy" and his sister, "Wuzzy." Blue Boy has traveled a great deal and was born at a winter resort. The twins are young and know only our backyard world, but they are fun to watch—twisting, turning, teasing, tumbling—always at play.

God has made many creatures, but many of them we may never know—lions and tigers are of the cat family too, but they are not our friends! Love God's gentle animals and they will return your affection.

Happy catnapping to American Felines this very week!

* * * * *

"Little Lady"

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I'll never forget the first day little Ann came to the office with her grandmother. She was a charming child. Indeed, she looked almost like a fairy princess—small, graceful, with fine, light blond hair. There wasn't the sign of a wrinkle in her starched red plaid dress. She chattered childishly when talked to but was quiet the rest of the time. Here was a well-brought-up youngster, who remembered her manners and showed an interest in the many adults she was meeting. She was poised and gracious, a little lady of five years.

"Well," I thought, "that child has been nicely trained. She has good manners."

Some time later I heard her grandmother express a desire for a certain book—a book on bugs—for little Ann. Little Ann interested in bugs? I opened my mouth in amazement. Dainty little Ann! "She likes bugs?" I gasped.

Her grandmother laughed. "Loves to play with them," was the answer. "And to look for them."

Probably my own shying away from insects prompted my amazed look and surprise when I said, "But the day she was here she was such a little lady!"

Her grandmother smiled indulgently. "She is a little lady," she answered, with a curious look at me, "as much when with bugs as with people. Ann is a good child; sometimes mischievous, always kind."

This set me to thinking about good manners and personality. Little Ann was a model of deportment when she was out visiting. I felt certain that all formality was dropped off when she was alone with her bugs, but she was kind. After all, was not that kindness the true secret of her good manners?

Good manners are important. They should begin at home but be evident in all public places. Their absence does no one any good. Ann had learned when only a toddler to be kind to Dad, to Mommie, and to Brother. Soon there was the grocer's boy to whom to be nice, and later the laundress and her little girl. This being kind was Ann's first step in learning good manners. The forms followed closely. They were easy to remember, because, to Ann, they seemed so often to belong to the things she did.

Now, a "paper-doll" child, listless, apathetic, always "good," is something else again, something to worry about.

"It's not natural to be so good!" everyone thinks and says. And, indeed, it isn't; that is, if you call being apathetic "good." But "good" is really an active word. To be good you must do something. For instance, Ann offered the laundress's little girl, Sadie, one of her choice bugs in a pretty box, but when Sadie saw what was in the box she cried and gave it back to Ann.

Into the house went Ann. She took a stuffed horse from her shelf and brought it out to Sadie. How delighted that child was. And Ann? It was not easy for Ann to give up her horse, Billy, but she was truly a "little lady." She smiled graciously, because Sadie was so very happy.

Many a fellow would get along better if he stopped staring up the steps and started stepping of the stairs.—Anon.

Eleventh National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country is Held

The close connection between social and economic problems and the program of the church was the keynote of the eleventh National Convocation of the Church in Town and Country held at Salina, Kansas, October 26 to 28, 1954.

Representative Clifford R. Hope of Kansas, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, voiced this in declaring that "The strength of the rural church and the good it has done and can do is tied directly to the land. No man can be careful of his soul and at the same time be careless of his land."

This was also emphasized by the president of the National Council of Churches, Bishop William C. Martin, who said it is possible to build a strong church life in the country districts if the church will send to the country men trained for the rural job, rather than those who were "almost worn out" or who "did not expect to remain there long."

A thousand delegates of nearly twenty denominations, who came from 250 communities in 30 states and four Canadian provinces, attended the convocation. In addition there was a sprinkling of foreign visitors.

With the decline of the small church in the country arrested only in the last dozen years, the purpose of the convocation was to consider the current situation, exchange ideas, and inspire rural leaders with plans for greater strength of church program in the towns and "wide open spaces" of the nation.

Churches that "overlap and overlook," and shortage and turnover of ministers, chief problems of the small town and country churches, were pointed out as a seven-county Kansas survey, made during the past two years, was made public. With 246 churches in a population area of 75,000, there was overlapping of ministerial services in most town areas, leaving at the same time numerous "gaps" that left many rural areas "unchurched" or inadequately provided for. With one church for every 308 persons in the seven counties, five of the seven reported that half or more than half of their churches had less than a hundred members.

The survey was directed by Miss Alice Maloney of the Presbyterian USA Board of National Missions, and pointed up, Miss Maloney said, in-terdenominational efforts to "eliminate competitive situations which have adverse effect on the services which the church can perform."

Although not covered in the survey, Miss Maloney reported also that evidence of ministerial turnover was shown by one town of 4,000 where eleven of the twelve local churches changed pastors during the two-year period of the survey.

In a study of what services the churches were performing and how well, the youth program was shown to be the weakest, large numbers of youth dropping out of the churches after the junior high school age level. The second greatest weakness disclosed was the number of churches which did not have regular weekly services. Of the churches responding, approximately ten per cent indicated irregularity. Most of these and many others as well had non-resident ministers, suggesting that this affected both regularity of worship services and youth programs.

Dr. Herbert E. Stotts of Denver's Iliff School of Theology, charged that the "population is not leaving the rural areas as fast as the church is" and that "the rural church cannot afford to allow its membership to continue being second-class Christians." He stated that the seminaries are full of young men eager to serve in the country if given a chance.

Bishop Martin said that the country parish needs a man with broad vision, sense of humor, and a love for people. He also charged Protestant ministry with aiding the "flight from the country" by subscribing to "success in the city" as the standard of success. "What the church can do about it," he said, "depends on the man who represents the rural church, on whether he reveals in his own life the belief that there is something there worth staying for."

In commenting on the importance of the church in the rural life of the nation, Congressman Hope noted the yearly population increase of one and one-half per cent, and said that "to maintain our present standard of living, our existing acreage must produce 15 per cent more ten years from now than it does today. Whether we can do that under a system of family farming depends on (1) farmers receiving a fair return on their work, and (2) the love which people living on the land have for farming and rural life for its own sake. And that," he said "is where the rural church and the community which it encourages come in."

That Christian theology should be relevant to life was pointed out by Rev. Richard O. Comfort, Presbyterian minister of Jefferson City, Mo. Said he, "We need a balanced program in town and country churches that will utilize the talents and resources and which will minister to all the needs of the people."

Increase in Church Giving is Cited

For the first time in history Protestants are giving to their churches at an annual rate of more than one and a half billion dollars. Total cash contributions by 45 Protestant and two Eastern Orthodox bodies with a combined United States membership of more than 33,000,000 added up to exactly $1,537,132,309 for the fiscal year 1953. The figure was announced recently by the Rev. Thomas K. Thompson, executive director of the National Council of Churches' Department of Stewardship and Benevolence, at a council-sponsored workshop meeting of 250 church and college fund raisers at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania.

In terms of actual cash, said Mr. Thompson, the figure represents a jump of $136,000,000 over the previous year. Percentage-wise, it is an increase of 8.5 per cent, as compared with an increase of roughly 3 per cent—nearly twice as high as population gains in the same period—in church membership. Individually, each church member's cash gifts averaged out to $45.36 over the year as against $41.94 the year before. The new per capita figure is the highest ever recorded.

The great bulk of contributions was earmarked for local congregational expenses, a breakdown shows. The new annual figure is $1,228,257,647, with 47 church bodies reporting, as compared to $1,114,810,848 reported by 45 bodies the year before. These funds went to pay ministers' salaries, church maintenance and repairs, fuel, light and for similar expenses. Six church bodies estimated that as much as 35 per cent of all their congregational expenses could be ascribed to new building programs.

Significant gains were also shown in benevolence giving, Mr. Thompson said. Church-sponsored home and foreign mission programs, overseas relief, orphanages, homes for the aged and hospitals received $308,874,662 during the year—an increase of more than $22,000,000 over the previous year.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Prayer and Praise

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 21, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein"—Psalm 24:1.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Psalm 104.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 104:23-31.

More Praise, Less Petition.

Our prayers would be more rewarding for us, and more pleasing to God if there were more praise, and less petition, in them. There ought to be more "thanks you's" than "give me's" in prayer. We spend too much time in asking God for things, and too little in thanking him for blessings already received. Praise is as important as petition. The Psalm for today in an instance in point. It is a Psalm, or a song, of prayer and praise. As the Psalmist thinks about, or looks upon, evidences of God's greatness and glory and majesty, he bursts into a song of praise and thanksgiving. At the beginning, and at the end, he calls upon his soul to "bless the Lord" and to "praise the Lord." Here is a suggestion. Take up your Bible, and read, and re-read this great poem. It will warm your heart, and enrich your spirit. Praise ye the Lord.

God's Greatness and Glory 2-4

"O Lord my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honor and majesty." The man has a great and a glorious God. Honor and majesty belong to him. In him is light, men see light. The clouds are his chariot, the winds are his servants. Angels are his messengers, and his ministers are as a flaming fire. God is worthy to be praised. To him be all authority and majesty and power and honor and praise. Men need to worship this God for what it can do to and through their lives. Praise ye the Lord.

God's Greatness Seen in His Relationship to the Earth 5-9

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." For he laid the foundations thereof, he covered it with water, and then drove them back to form dry land, and holds them back by his word of power. He has given his word that they shall not pass over these bounds, and that they shall not turn to cover again the earth. Praise ye the Lord.

God's Greatness as Seen in His Care For His Creatures. 10-18.

The Psalmist turns from his contemplation of God's greatness as seen in his creative power, to God's greatness, as seen in his care for his creatures. He has provided for their needs, from the lowest to the highest. Water to drink, food to eat, shelter in which to live—all these has this good and great God provided for all his creatures from the smallest and lowest to the highest. Furthermore he gives to man that which strengthens and cheers him. Our God is good and generous and gracious. Praise ye the Lord.

God's Greatness as Seen in the Heavens 19-24.

Like another of his fellow-countrymen, this man saw the glory and greatness, and the goodness of God revealed in the heavens, and he praised God for it all. The moon, the stars, the sun—their beauty, their orderliness, their immensity, their mystery, their power awakened in his heart a sense of awe and wonder and praise. "O Lord, how manifold are thy works!" he exclaims. "In wisdom hast thou made them all. The earth is full of thy riches." How little did this man know of the riches in the good earth! Think of the riches of the earth as discovered and developed and exploited by modern man. And the end is not yet, for from earth and water and air, modern man is increasingly extracting the treasures which a good and generous God has put therein. Praise ye the Lord.

God's Greatness as Seen in the Seas 25-26

From the earth and the sky, the Psalmist turns to the sea, and he finds that here, too, God has manifested his greatness and his goodness. We know all too little about the seas. I recently read a book entitled, The Sea Around us. It was a thrilling, and at times a hair-raising experience, to read about the great oceans that surround the continents—their unfathomable depths, their underwater architectural wonders and beauties, their currents and tides, their incalculable power, their forms of life, their economy in the life of the world, their effect upon human life, their undreamed of wealth of materials, to say nothing of their beauty and their changing moods. Another Psalmist wrote, "The sea is his, and he made it." Praise ye the Lord.

Man's Dependence on God 27-32.

"These wait all upon thee: that thou mayest give them their meat in due season. That thou givest them they gather; thou openest thy hand, they are filled with good. Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled. Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created; and thou renewest the face of the earth." Everything is dependent on God. He is not only the giver of every good and perfect gift; he is the sustainer of life itself. Man is utterly dependent on God. If God should go on a "sit down strike" for even one hour, or for that matter for one minute, disaster would strike, and destroy the earth. How puny is man in the light of all of this. How dependent on God is he for everything. Praise ye the Lord.

Man's Praise to God 33-35.

The thing has mounted with increasing wonder and awe. The earth, the heavens, the seas, man himself reflects the creative, sustaining, redemptive power of a living and loving God. The man breaks forth in a personal expression of the greatness and the glory and the majesty and the power of his God. And out of a deep sense of his dependence on his God, he says, "I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live; I will sing unto my God while I have my being. My meditation of him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

The senator was covering a rural area seeking reelection. His long winded address had been going on and on, punctuated only by occasional gulps of water. During one of these very brief pauses an old farmer turned to his neighbor and in a loud whisper observed, "First time I ever saw a windmill run by water."

The Problem of African Nationalism

Africa's No. 1 problem is African nationalism. Says one authority on African affairs: "The problem is not that nationalism exists—which is inevitable—but where it is leading."

The world is watching with misgivings and fears the rapid spread of strong nationalistic feeling in Africa. Nationalism, properly directed, could conceivably lead to freedom, democracy and progress for the African—a state of affairs which would benefit not only Africa but the entire world. A democratic Africa would be a tremendous boon to the cause of the free world in its fight against Communism. Economically, too, Africa with her wealth of natural resources and labor is vastly important to the outside world.

Nationalism in Africa could be a force for good. In the Gold Coast, where black and white have an equal voice in government and are working together for a better future for all, nationalism seems to be accomplishing its best goal.

But in the other parts of Africa, nationalism threatens to lead Africa back to the darkness of primitive, barbaric civilization from which it has just begun to emerge.

Nationalism has taken on its most terrifying manifestation in Kenya, where lawless Mau Mau raiders, with the avowed purpose of driving out the white man, have attacked and murdered both white men and fellow natives suspected of being sympathetic to the white cause.

In the Northern and Southern Rhodesias, in Nyasaland, in Uganda and in other territories there are undercurrents of unrest and friction—a chafing on the part of African natives against European rule. In the Union of South Africa, where nine million black natives are ruled by two million whites, nationalist feeling among the Africans is more tangible. Natives, long angered and embittered by the injustices and indignities of white supremacy, have shown their resentment and hatred in race riots, deliberate violation of segregation laws and criminal attacks upon white individuals.

If the European governments which rule Africa try to suppress nationalism, they will almost certainly be feeding fuel to the flames of African hatreds which will explode in violent revolution. If they encourage nationalism, they fear that the nationalist movement will be taken over eventually by the Communists.

While the world views the situation in Africa with alarm and uncertainty, Christian missions are rolling up their sleeves and going to work as never before. If Africa is to be saved—politically, economically, socially, as well as spiritually—it must be saved before nationalism turns to Communism. It is evident to missionary leaders—if not to the eyes of the world—that the Gospel of Jesus Christ, bringing spiritual salvation and a doctrine of brotherly love, can work the miracle that is needed to save Africa.

With an awareness of the critical shortness of time in Africa, missionary leaders have asked for aid to supplement the existing missionary effort. Through the modern mass evangelistic and Scripture distribution techniques of The Pocket Testament League they will be enabled to reach millions of Africans who need the Gospel. This campaign which will require the wholehearted prayer and financial support of American Christians, will begin in January, 1955.

RELIGION IS EVERY DAY LIFE.

(Continued from page 5.)

me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

"Then shall the righteous answer him, saying,

"'Lord, when saw we thee hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? or saw we thee sick, or in prison and came unto thee?'"

"And the King shall answer and say unto them,

"'Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

This, then, was the religion of Jesus, the religion of everyday life. To the extent that our church helps us in living this religion, it serves its proper purpose and justifies its existence. The proper purpose of the church is positive, not negative. It is not the mission of the church merely to keep us out of mischief by keeping us busy. Its mission is to make us better everyday Christians. A layman in India has said it better than I can:

"We must outgrow the habit of thinking of useful laymen as 'pillars of the church.' It is not the layman's business to be a pillar of the church. . . . The main value of a good layman lies in the fact that he can be used outside in a manner in which the clergy cannot be used. He can go out into the world. His main business is to go out into the world and to help to conquer larger and larger areas of secular life for the purposes of God and thus build the Kingdom of God in the lives and wills of men. The efficient layman is not, therefore, just a pillar of the church, but is its vanguard. He is to be used, not as a buttress, but as a battering-ram."

It is not enough to have a goal or purpose but such must be worthy of our efforts.

Meeting Dates of Conferences

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be well represented by delegates to their respective conference. The church report for the Conference Year should be sent in promptly to the conference secretary, and remittances for Conference Apportionments should be paid in full before the conference meets. Send remittances for conference causes to the conference treasurer and for Convention causes to the Southern Convention Office at Elon College, N. C.

The meetings of the conferences of the Southern Convention this fall will be as follows:

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Grace's Chapel, near Sanford, November 11

Rev. M. A. Pollard, President

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary

NORTH CAROLINA & VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

First Church, Greensboro—November 16

Rev. Mark W. Andes, President

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dead Friends:

Let us see our reports climb the hill right on until the end of the year. This reports adds $1,076.80.

How much will next week's report be? Will you help bring it up by your own contribution, and by interesting some friend in making a donation.

A ten year old boy stood in my door just now with the sewing matron and showed me the nice coat someone had sent us which exactly fitted him. It was a good coat, clean, and did not show wear. This morning Jackie Wilson and Mrs. Stadler, the sewing matron, were mighty proud of a suit of clothes which "just fits me, Dr. Truitt."

Good clothes come in well and most of the children are very grateful for them. But it is a waste of time and postage to send adult size ladies shoes with heels and high heels or almost any large adult size clothing. The sewing matron could if she had time make something out of grandpa's britches. but she does not have time.

It was a pleasure to speak the past Sunday morning in our Newport News, Virginia, church. There was a large congregation, a beautiful worship service and a most attentive hearing. I was entertained in the pastor's home and most graciously. The pastor, Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., joined his home church in Norfolk when I was its pastor. As I told his congregation Sunday he was a charming lad then and a charming man now. He came often to my study in those days and ran many errands on his bieyele for me. He and Mrs. Granger have two fine sons, Donald and Larry.

It was a pleasure to attend a portion of the Eastern Virginia Conference. I regretted to have to go before it was over but I had been away from the orphanage and my office for several days and it was imperative to get back as soon as possible.

I wish to thank the editor and managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for bringing out the special orphanage number. I am very pleased with it, and only wish I had given them more and better material.

Every mail now I am looking for good news from our churches, friends, and Sunday schools. Several friends have helped to enlarge this week's report. They cannot realize how much their help is needed and how happy they made us feel here to get it.

For every child and every worker here I solicit your prayers and your goodwill.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER 4, 1954.
Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:
Mrs. Emma A. Anderson, Raleigh, N. C.
Mrs. Wofford A. Foster, Tryon, N. C.
Mrs. J. A. Herrington, S. Norfolk, Va. .
Coupons:
Mrs. R. L. Gilliam, Sr., Burlington, N. C.
50 copies of "The Upper Room."
J. H. Johnson, Norfolk, Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
Amount rrougt forward $12,193.71
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Christian Chapel$ 1.00
Mt. Auburn S. S. 7.50
8.57
Eastern Va. Conference:
Bay View S. S.$ 5.00
Bay View, Woman's Fellowship, Special 5.50
Suffolk 37.00
47.50
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Mebane$ 7.50
7.50
Western N. C. Conference:
Needham's Grove$ 20.00
Sophia 20.00
40.00
Total $ 103.57
Grand total $12,297.28

Special Offerings.
Amount brought forward $25,406.20
Mrs. Ester E. Jinkens,
St. Paris, Ohio$ 5.00
Philathea Class, Reidsville Church 10.00

New Hope Christian Ch.,
Roanoke, Ala. 4.54
D. M. McLelland, Elon
College, N. C. 10.00
Mr. & Mrs. Milton J.
Averette, Henderson, N.
C. 10.00
First Cong. Christian S.
S., Roanoke, Ala. 11.00
Thanksgiving Gifts:
A. D. Pate, Burlington,
N. C. 10.00
Mr. & Mrs. H. E. Ollerhead, Chapel Hill, N.
C. 100.00
Rev. Cameron D. Hayes,
Gore, Va. 10.00
Joe M. Byrum, Sunbury, N. C. 25.00
L. E. McCoy, Sunbury,
N. C. 20.00
Joseph L. Owens, Suffolk, Va. 100.00
In Memory of Walter R.
Sellars 5.00
In Memory of W. H.
May, Sr. 10.00
In Memory of W. H.
May, Sr. 5.00
In Memory of W. H.
May, Sr. 10.00
In Memory of Clarence
Bunch 5.00
Memorial Gift 100.00
Special Gifts 522.78
973.32

Grand total $26,379.52
Total for the week $ 1,076.89
Total for the year $38,672.80

Authentic art is explicitly religious if it expresses the artist's sensitive and honest search for ultimate meaning and significance with the aid of a recognizable religious subject-matter or religious symbols. . . . In the Christian tradition, all Biblical material and such symbols as the Cross are religious in this sense.

—Tillich.

MEMORIAL GIFTS
"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

.....
(Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)

.....
(Survivor to be Written) (Address)

Name.....
Address.....

In Memoriam

SAUNDERS.

It is with deep sorrow, the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church record the passing of our friend and co-worker, Jobie Preston Saunders on June 16, 1954. Mr. Saunders spent his entire life in this community and was faithful and loyal to his church and Sunday school, a good neighbor and kind friend to those who passed his way.

We shall cherish the memory of his friendship and try to emulate the good characteristics of our brother.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God realizing that "He doeth all things well," and that God's will should be our will.

2. That we express our deepest sympathy to the one sister that remains, and to other relatives and friends.

3. That they and we too may find comfort and consolation in our Heavenly Father's love and understanding as we mourn our loss.

Mrs. CHARLIE C. BAKER,
Miss ALLIE LEE NORFLEET,
Mrs. JUNE O. DAVIDSON, SR.,
Committee.

Arnold Toynbee, Famous Historian, Visits United States

Arnold Toynbee, world famous historian who has received wide acclaim for his final four volumes of A Study of History, recently published by Oxford University Press, arrived in the United States on the Cunard liner Queen Mary on November 2.

He will be in this country until November 27 and while here will visit New York, Boston, Cambridge, New Haven, Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia, Wooster, Cleveland, and Chicago. His tour of these cities will include lectures, radio and television appearances, and meetings with booksellers and book reviewers.

Mr. Toynbee, who is accompanied by his wife, a historian in her own right and the compiler of the 332-page index to the ten volumes of A Study of History, is scheduled to appear on both radio and T. V. programs while here.

In New York he will speak at Town Hall on November 13 and at the Columbia University Institute of Arts and Sciences on November 15. His other lecture engagements include: Cambridge, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University; Baltimore and Washington, The Johns Hopkins University and the National Press Club (where he will discuss the problem of "coexistence"); Philadelphia, the annual meeting of the American Philosophical Society; The College of Wooster; the Cleveland Council of World Affairs; the Chicago area, Lake Forest Public Affairs Institute, South Bend (Ind.) International Relations Council, Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, Sinai Temple Forum, and the University of Chicago.

Mr. Toynbee will also be the guest in New York, at luncheons and meetings, of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Fund for the Advancement of Education, and the Royal Institute of International Affairs. His publisher, Oxford University Press, will give a reception and cocktail party for Mr. Toynbee and his wife on November 4. Mr. and Mrs. Toynbee will return to England on the Ile de France on November 27.

World Council Sends Message to Russian Churches

A message from the World Council of Churches appealing "to the governments and the peoples" to help in the relief of present world tensions is en route to Patriarch Alexei, of Moscow, head of the Russian church. The message, adopted by the Second Assembly of the World Council in Evanston, Ill. this summer, was presented last week in Berlin to Archbishop Boris of the Russian Orthodox Church for transmission to Moscow. It was delivered by Bishop Otto Dibelius, of Berlin, a president of the World Council and Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, Council general secretary.

The five-point document appeals "to the statesmen and the leaders of public opinion and the press to refrain from words and actions which are designed to inflame enmity and hatred," and calls upon church leaders "in those countries between which tension exists to visit one another, so that they may gain a better understanding of one another, and of the countries in which they live, and thus strengthen the bonds of fellowship, and promote the reconciliation of the nations."

It also urges the churches "to bid their members recognize their political responsibilities, and also to ask Christian technicians and administrators to find a vocation in the service of U. N. agencies engaged in meeting the needs . . . of countries, thus bringing a Christian temper of love and understanding to bear upon the immensely difficult task of mutual assistance in the encounter of different cultures, (and) to unite in a common ministry of reconciliation in proclaiming Christ as the Hope of the World." Finally, the resolution appeals to "all Christians to join in prayer (that God) will guide the governments and the peoples in the ways of justice and peace."

Presentation of the documents to Archbishop Boris is in accordance with a directive by the Assembly that it be sent to all member churches and to a number of churches which are not members, including the churches in the U. S. S. R., and "to invite these churches to consider ways in which they might communicate the statement to the governments of their countries."—The Religious Newsweekly.

LET'S SHARE OUR SURPLUS.

(Continued from page 2.)

or father or child in the United States gets seven times that much.

As a result of recent legislation, United States surplus commodities are now being released to volunteer relief agencies, including Church World Service. This interdenominational Protestant agency needs the funds to distribute the surpluses now available. Church World Service calls this the "Share Our Surplus" program. The money is needed to help get this surplus food to the people who need it.

Money given for this program provides almost unbelievable amounts of food. Ten cents gives a cup of milk daily to a hungry child for three months; $1.00 delivers 400 loaves of bread; $2.00 will provide 1,600 protein-deficient persons with a ration of cheese; $5.00 (and what church school cannot give $5.00?) will supply vital fats for 100 persons for twelve days; $50.00 delivers 100,000 cups of milk; $500 delivers the butter for 850,000 slices of bread.

To help church school children visualize this giving-project, a world map poster with stickers, to be applied as money gifts are given, is available (free) from the Missions Council, Room 102, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

Why not plan to have your church school share in this special "Thanksgiving Project?" Send money to your state conference office or the the Relief and Reconstruction Fund, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts, marked: "Relief and Reconstruction—Share Our Surplus."

COMFORT for the SORROWING

A GREAT LETTER OPENING GODWARD

By DR. BORDEN P. BROWN of Boston University

My Dear: My heart aches for you. It is no lonely experience that has come to you. In your special grief, you but enter into the common fellowship of sorrow.

For some time you can only sit blind, dazed and numb from the shock. But by and by faith will again remember the divine promise, and hope will begin to dream of the glad reunion of the better land. Meanwhile, let grief have its way. It is natural and human and Christian to do so. But do not try to explain or understand or be reconciled. Leave all that and fall back on God. Go to God with the pain and the anguish and the overflow and the desolate home and the life that seems worse than death, and wait for his salvation. Wait in the faith that God has not forgotten, and that he was never more your Father than just now. He is the only one that can help you. I pray that the tenderest ministries and consolation of the Comforter may be yours.

It will take time to readjust yourself in any case. Every familiar object and association will long give pain by recalling "the touch of a vanished hand . . .

The sound of a voice that is still."

This we have to endure; but here, too, there comes a transformation. The pain becomes something tender and solemn—something at which the heart grieves, but from which we would on no account be divorced. It binds us to our dear ones gone. And gradually they, too, are freed in our thought from earthly limit and imperfection and remain a perpetual treasure and inspiration.

There is only one person on earth from whom I get anything like the inspiration which comes to me from some who have passed on into the heavens. I have reference to them in my work. I expect to meet them again, and I must do it with clear eye and face unashamed.

"My lost, my own and I
Shall have so much to see together by and by;
For I am sure that just the same sweet face,
But glorified, is waiting in the place
Where we shall meet, if only I Am counted worthy in the by and by."

In the midst of our sorrow, let us also think of them, of their unfading and radiant life, and of the divine revealings which have come to them. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. They live there to him, and are with him. And I have no doubt they have a knowledge of us which we could not safely have of them. They " . . . triumph in conclusive bliss

And the serene result of all."

And the longest life is short when it is done. If we live faithfully, and then having learned by loss how much we loved them, we meet them again to be with them forevermore, I am sure that then we shall not regret the brief earthly separation.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1954

NUMBER 45

"The Little Brown Church in the Vale"

There's a church in the valley by the wildwood,
No lovelier spot in the dale;
No place is so dear to my childhood
As the little brown church in the vale.

Oh, come to the church in the wildwood,
To the trees where the wild flowers bloom;
Where the parting hymn will be chanted,
We will weep by the side of the tomb.

How sweet on a clear Sabbath morning,
To list to the clear ringing bell;
Its tones so sweetly are calling,
"Oh, come to the church in the vale"

From the church in the valley by the wildwood,
When day fades away into night,
I would fain from this spot of my childhood
Wing my way to the mansions of light.

Chorus:

Come to the church in the wildwood,
Oh, come to the church in the vale;
No spot is so dear to my childhood
As the little brown church in the vale.

—William Pitts.

(See article starting on page 5)

News Flashes

A new, full-length color film titled "Souls in Conflict," has just been produced for Billy Graham Evangelistic Films. The movie is made against a background of the evangelist's recent crusade in London, England.

Each November the C. M. A. of the Eastern Virginia Conference solicits memberships: $10.00 for organizations and men, and $5.00 for women. The article on this page by Mr. Caleb D. West, a veteran lay churchman of the conference, gives several good reasons why this organization should be well supported.

While we continue to work toward merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Southern Presbyterians are having difficulty with their plans to merge with their Northern brethren. A seventh presbytery, in South Carolina, has just rejected the merger by a vote of 51 to 3. The six that had voted previously also rejected the plan. Rejection by 22 of the Southern Church's 84 presbyteries would defeat the merger.

The Managing Editor is responsible for the printing on page eight of this issue of a most interesting account of a most deserving honor received by our new Editor. We would also call attention to one statement in the first paragraph. We did not have the honor or pleasure of welcoming the guests. The Mr. John T. Kernodle mentioned is the son of Mr. Robert Junius and Mrs. Ruth Jones Kernodle, both well known to many older Elon College students, and is an active member of our Durham Church.

December 15 has been set aside as National S. D. (Safe Driving) Day. On that day, every motorist and every pedestrian in the country is being asked to put the Golden rule to work on our streets and highways with "the objective of eliminating all traffic accidents." In this connection, we are running on our back page an interesting article, "Immortality on Wheels." This article was written by the Rev. Robert F. Royster, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, La Porte, Indiana. Before entering the ministry, Mr. Royster was a practicing safety engineer. We recommend a careful reading.

Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce Installed at United Church, Raleigh

The Reverend Gaylord B. Noyce was formally installed as pastor of the United Church, Congregational-Christian-Friends, in Raleigh, N. C., on Sunday, October 10, 1954. Before accepting the pastorate of the United Church, Mr. Noyce was the associate pastor of the Hancock Congregational Church, Lexington, Mass.

The Reverend Mr. Noyce is a graduate of Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, and of Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Conn. He was born in Burlington, Iowa, in 1926, the son of the Rev. Ralph Brewster Noyce, a Congregational minister now serving in Richmond, Illinois.

After his high school graduation, he entered the U. S. Navy for a 26 month period of duty in the V-12 program at Miami University, and he remained on the Ohio campus for the completion of work for his degree in 1947.

REV. GAYLORD B. NOYCE

Immediately following his graduation, Mr. Noyce went to Istanbul, Turkey, to teach English in Robert College, remaining there for two years. He and Mrs. Noyce were married there in June, 1949. They returned to the United States in the fall and spent the next three years at Yale Divinity School, where the young minister received the Bachelor of Divinity degree in 1952. He was called to the Hancock Church of Lexington, Mass., in September of 1952, and was ordained there in October of the same year.

In addition to his teaching and pastoral duties, Mr. Noyce has participated in work camps in Germany

(Continued on page 7.)

The Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association

I have often said, and it represents my considered judgment, that if the Christian Missionary Association, during its more than fifty years of existence, had succeeded only in establishing our church here in Newport News, it can thus justify its own worth!

This is said with no sense of pride, but with humility. The support of this work from its inception through to maturity—and I say with emphasis, its generous support—obligates every member of our local organization to take memberships in the C. M. A. and continue to take them, for that is the only tangible expression we can give of our appreciation. Of course, the C. M. A. has done far more than its support here, for it has started work at other points which are now successful parishes. It has also helped in critical periods some old and established churches needing money to carry forward an enlarged program.

One particular thing about the C. M. A. that makes an especial appeal to me is this: It is a local organization operated by people we know on our own level and in places with which we are familiar and in which we have a natural interest. This makes a situation in which each of us shares definitely in a responsibility to contribute and work. It is a proposition in which each of us, regardless of our influence or lack of influence in the bigger affairs of the church, can have a definite influence, and therefore we have an obligation that we should not shun or avoid. In larger undertakings, and further removed from our locale, we often acquit ourselves of personal responsibilities. I think it is a fine idea to pool our contributions of five and ten dollar memberships—in themselves of little useableness—but with the grouping of these efforts two or three thousand dollars, which make a sizeable contribution to efforts of the Association.

Then, I really believe that the more we contribute to others, or to state it differently, the more we give unselfishly, the better it is for our spiritual development. Unless you are a terribly vain person you can get but little satisfaction in wearing a new suit, but what a joy when you have had a share in dressing some other child of God, the same applies to food, and likewise to such under-

(Continued on page 15.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

North Carolina & Virginia Laymen Meet in Burlington

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference Laymen's Fellowship met in the First Christian Church in Burlington, N. C., Friday, November 12 at 7:00 p. m. A brunswick stew dinner was served to 210 men in the basement of the church. Eugene Gordon, president of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Burlington Church extended a welcome to the group on behalf of the hosts. The response to the welcome was given by T. A. Vincent, president of the Conference Fellowship.

After dinner and before the group assembled in the sanctuary for the principal address of the evening, Robert Walker, of the church at Union Ridge, N. C., announced that he was very interested in the Moonelon project and although he didn't have much money to give he did have a steer which he wanted to donate. W. P. Mahan, secretary of the Conference Fellowship, announced that he and President Vincent had accepted the gift and that the management of the Alamance Frozen Foods, Inc., had butchered the animal, wrapped the various cuts separately, and frozen the meat free of any charge. The meat was then brought out and for a few minutes the stage in the basement of the First Church became a meat market with only men shoppers. Approximately $100.00 for Moonelon was realized as a result of this generous gift. It will be interesting to see whether this original idea and very successful means of raising money may be the necessary stimulus to set others to thinking of ways they, too, can contribute to the project at Moonelon.

The fellowship reconvened after a short recess in the sanctuary. One hundred seventy-five men from twenty-eight different churches answered the roll call. It was announced that reports of the work of the laymen were to be a part of the conference reports and would therefore be included in the printed Annual of the Southern Convention. Dr. W. T. Scott presented guests including Rev. Guy Veazey who is to assume his duties as resident manager of Moone- lon in the near future. A brief oral report on the Moonelon project was made by Earl Danieley; a mimeo- graphed report prepared by Dr. Henry Robinson was distributed to all present.

According to Dr. Robinson's report, "The main building is ready to go forward; the steel trusses are already on the grounds. Mr. Carl Monroe of Greensboro is construc- tion supervisor. . . . Our building at this time has footing poured and blocks up to ground level. It is lo- cated near the large dwelling on the highest elevation of the property overlooking the lake. . . . The Lay- men have undertaken the develop- ment of Moonelon as their major project over this biennium. . . . It will require $25,000.00 to develop our major buildings. About $12,000.00 will be required to complete our main building. Collections for the build- ing fund from January 1, 1953 to September 15, 1954 total $3,400.70.

"We have a real job to perform. It is an important job. The laymen of this conference need to take the lead and point the way. We can do it! Laymen of every church are asked to help. Has your group respond- ed?"

Supt. Scott read portions of a let- ter from Rev. John Graves, who will direct the religious education pro- gram of the convention beginning on December 1, 1954, in which Mr. Graves outlined many of the possible uses of the Moonelon Conference Cen- ter.

(Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represent- ed by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and lib- erty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Dan- ieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardecastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chair- man; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thurs- day except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Chris- tian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency no- tices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be ad- dressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Segregation in Our Churches

A very animated discussion of segregation engaged the Eastern North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches in its recent session at Piney Plains, as you will note from the report of the committee on publicity.

A resolution based upon that passed by the General Council at New Haven, precipitated this discussion. The General Council's resolution was as follows: "Be It Resolved That we recommend that local churches, where segregation has prevailed, move towards ways in which they and all churches can open their membership to all persons on a simple basis of faith and character, and that we call on Congregational Christian colleges, agencies, associations, conferences and institutions to practice non-segregation and non-discrimination in enrollment, employment, church extension and church conservation and organizations."

Neither the Southern Convention nor any of its constituent organizations has ever voted any action contrary to the spirit or the letter of the General Council's resolution. This was brought out in the discussion at Piney Plains. All churches of the Southern Convention subscribe to five Cardinal Principles. The fourth of these asserts that "Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership."

The history of the relations of Negroes and white people in the churches of the Southern Convention may have been written by someone; but your editor knows not by whom, nor where it is recorded. There are certain traditions which we have heard and which we believe can be established beyond any reasonable doubt.

It is the editor's good fortune to have been born of parents who were members of Liberty Spring Christian Church. At the age of 13 he united with Liberty Spring where his membership remained until 1920. He has been told that no members of Liberty Spring were slave owners. Two or three are reported to have had conscientious scruples against owning slaves, but most of them were probably too poor to buy them.

Cypress Chapel and Holy Neck were neighbor churches to Liberty Spring. There were owners of slaves in both of these churches, and most of the adult slaves were members of the church to which their masters belonged. Some of the ex-slaves who were aged remained members of Holy Neck as long as they lived. This writer distinctly remembers seeing them take Communion at Holy Neck.

Most of the former slaves asked for letters of dismissal to organize churches for members of their own race. This request was granted and those who withdrew from Holy Neck were leaders in the organizing of two Negro churches. Their former owners gave generously to aid in the erecting of church buildings. One of the buildings was almost an exact copy of the building in which the Holy Neck congregation was then worshipping.

It was the argument of the Negro leaders that they could best serve the interests and needs of their race in separate churches. They wanted Negro ministers to preach to them. They wished to develop their own organizations. The leading white ministers of the Southern Convention gave encouragement and aid in organizing churches and conferences. The Afro-Christian Convention was organized along the same lines as the Southern Convention and had practically the same territorial boundaries. A fine spiritual fellowship existed between the two groups for a number of years. Within the memory of many people now living there were always fraternal delegates from one Convention to the other.

It is regrettable that the cordial fraternal ties no longer exist. The separation, we believe, is not the result of any one's intent or planning. A generation has grown up knowing nothing of the happy relationships which once were maintained between the church members of the two groups. We believe that the re-establishing of fellowship would work out to the mutual benefit of each group.

There is nothing in Congregational Christian tradition which sanctions separation of the followers of Christ on grounds of race or social status. Such a separation is contrary to the teachings of Christ, and is in direct opposition to his example and spirit.

It is also true that there is a Christian liberty which gives to the individual the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience and to seek the fellowship which affords the better opportunity for spiritual growth and Christian service.

This is written to set forth, as we understand it, the way whereby we have come to the present situation. We are seeking a better way to a relationship more in keeping with the example, teachings and spirit of Christ. In our quest, we need the best light which knowledge, spiritual perception and the guidance of the Holy Spirit can afford.

The Little Brown Church . . .

By DR. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

Pastor, First Congregational Christian Church
Richmond, Virginia

The gospel song, "The Little Brown Church in the Vale"—sometimes captioned "The Church in the Wild-wood"—is sung by the congregations of many denominations. Its words bring to mind hallowed memories and sacred sentiments associated with every church.

The song was composed many years ago by a young school teacher, William Pitts, who later graduated from Rush Medical School of Chicago, Illinois, and became both a distinguished physician and a prominent layman in denominational and inter-church activities. In his desire to portray "Dream Church" that should later be built upon the very site where his inspiration for the song was received. The song, though referring specifically to this rural church in Northern Iowa, naturally brings to the minds of all some other church of their childhood and youth.

I have frequently heard religious leaders, who should know better, thus comment when referring to this beautiful song: "The song does not refer to any particular church," or "The author had no specific church building in mind when he wrote it," or "The Little Brown Church referred to in the song is but a symbol of all churches along the country-side, whether brown or white or yellow." Such ignorance on the part of leaders who claim to know, is pathetic and unpardonable.

I have heard people in various sections of the country make reference to the song about the Little Brown Church as if it were actually "nowhere," but might indeed be "anywhere," not realizing that this historic little church associated with the song which bears the title is an actual church of the Congregational Christian Denomination, and that it is located in North Central Iowa in the beautiful Cedar River Valley along a picturesque road-side on a much-travelled highway of Chickasaw County.

Numerous times I have visited this historic church in connection with conference programs and youth gatherings, and as guest speaker down through the eleven years of my residence as pastor in my native State of Iowa.

"The Little Brown Church in the Vale" is very real and very much a part of the community where it is located, filling a large place in the ecclesiastical background and history of the Congregational Christian Denomination in northern Iowa. From its very beginning, it has been especially blessed in having had unusually competent pastors—men of consecration and of scholastic training. The membership, down through the years, has been composed of a high type of sturdy, prosperous rural folk.

REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

The song entitled "The Little Brown Church" has long been one of the favorites at Church Youth camps, and other gatherings of the churches of many denominations. It is sung in many churches at the regular Sunday services, and at church conventions and religious conclaves of every type. It has been voted one of the three most beloved of gospel songs.

I have heard it sung with enthusiasm in England, Wales, Ireland and Scotland—few songs are so universally loved. Its reverent sentiment, its picturesque language, its captivating rhythm and its heart appeal give it high place in the appreciation of children, youth and adults.

The song was given to the world in the early days of the War Between the States, and was "sung by the soldiers of both the North and the South, when in camp and when on the march, proving to be a great morale builder for the young soldiers away from home," according to the records of that time.

Since the close of the War Between the States, the "Little Brown Church in the Vale," located near the town of Nashua, Chickasaw County, Iowa, has become a denominational shrine for the Congregational churches of the Middle West, because of its uniquely beautiful setting and the history and tradition associated with that church. It is said that more weddings are officiated in the church each year than in any other church in America, not excepting "The Little Church Around the Corner," in New York City. Great prominence has naturally been given the church by the song, written before the church was built, which gave the church its name and its prestige.

The religious-minded young school teacher, William Pitts, wrote both the words and music of the song in response to an inspiration that came to him when he saw the unusually beautiful site where he felt a church should someday be built. This visitor to the town called Bradford, when later returning to his home in Wisconsin, wrote the song portraying his "dream church" for that beautiful site "in the vale" at the edge of the town. Little did the author think when he wrote the song, that so soon his "dream church" would be a reality, or that his simple song would someday be sung around the world.

In the spring of 1857, William Pitts was visiting relatives in the vicinity of Bradford, which was then a thriving prairie town claiming a population of around six hundred. The young teacher was strolling about the town taking inventory of the spots of beauty and interest, and at the edge of the town came upon the open space where the "Little Brown Church" now stands—"a setting of rare beauty," he recorded in his diary. As he wrote later, "There was no church there then, but the spot was there waiting for it." And in his diary was also recorded the following interesting item, "When I returned to my home in Wisconsin, I wrote the song, 'The Little Brown Church in the Vale.' I put the manuscript away. In the spring of 1862 (five years later), I returned to Iowa and settled at Fredericksburg," the home of his wife's people.

Mr. Pitts taught school for several terms at Fredericksburg, which was not far from Bradford, and each

(Continued on page 13.)

General Church News . . .

Will Hold an Interdenominational Institute on Music and Worship

An interdenominational Institute on Music and Worship in the Town and Country Church will be held at Millstone Baptist Church near Nathalie, Virginia, on Wednesday, December 1. This meeting is being sponsored by the ministerial association of Halifax and Pittsylvania counties in cooperation with the Virginia Council of Churches. The Rev. Henry Langford of Chatham is the chairman. Church leaders from surrounding counties are invited to attend.

The morning session at 10 will feature addresses on Improving Music and Worship in various departments of the church. At 2 p. m. there will be simultaneous conferences for ministers and worship leaders, for choir directors and members, and for leaders of children and youth. At 7:30 there will be a Festival of Hymns and Choirs at which time some of the outstanding choral groups of that area will sing. The session is open to the public and choirs will attend in groups.

The leaders will include the Rev. Millard Lewis, Jr., pastor of the Market Street Methodist Church, Winchester, Virginia, a recognized authority in the field of church worship; Professor Galen Stinebaugh, professor of music at Bridgewater College, an outstanding choral director; and Miss Elizabeth Longwell, director of the Department of Christian Education, Virginia Council of Churches.

Annual Meeting of Eastern North Carolina Conference

Meeting at the Piney Plains Congregational Christian Church southeast of Raleigh, over 225 ministers and laymen gathered Tuesday, November 9, as the 129th annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches. The denomination has 48 churches in the area.

Besides hearing routine reports and transacting regular business, the conference heard Dr. Edward Wilder, of India, reporting on the progress of medical work by all mission boards in that country, and the Rev.

Dr. Sidney M. Berry, of England, executive secretary of the International Congregational Council.

Among resolutions presented at the conference was one favoring recent steps bringing the denomination closer to the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. This resolution passed by a large majority. Another, dealing with segregation, passed only after strenuous debate; it proposed that the conference committee on social action work with local churches to "implement the Supreme Court decision" (on desegregation of public schools); that the churches "reaffirm the historic Fourth Principle of the Christian Church," namely, that Christian character is the only valid test of fellowship and membership in the church; and that the churches study the resolution on non-segregation passed in June by the denomination's General Council. (This resolution reiterated the denomination's traditional stand for a non-segregated church and non-segregated society, and urged further movement toward "non-segregation and non-discrimination" in all Congregational Christian agencies and institutions.)

The appointment of the Rev. Fred Register of Fuquay Varina to the newly-created post of Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism in the Southern Convention was commended, as was the appointment of the Rev. John S. Graves to fill a vacancy in Christian education on the convention staff.

New ministers given standing in the conference by virtue of their transfer here from other parts of the country were the following:

The Rev. Wofford C. Timmons, minister at Southern Pines.

The Rev. Eugene Talley of Louisville.

The Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, minister of United Church, Raleigh.

The conference noted the decline of certain rural churches, and the growth of the more urbanized areas. Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, addressed the meeting, with particular reference to a government loan of $675,000 for two new dormitories and a dining hall at the college. In response to his challenge, the conference voted to join the other North Carolina conferences in raising $150,000 toward the amount.

Plans for the centennial celebration of the Southern Convention's founding in 1854 during the next biennium were announced by Dr. William T. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Convention, an organization composed of the five conferences of Virginia and North Carolina.

Officers re-elected to Conference offices are Dr. Will B. O'Neill, president, of Sanford; Rev. Carl E. Wallace, vice-president, of Fayetteville; the Rev. R. L. Jackson, secretary, of Chapel Hill, and Mr. W. J. Ballentine, of Fuquay, treasurer.

Executive Committee Acts—Moves Toward Merger

The Executive Committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, meeting in Cleveland, Ohio on October 12 and 13, took joint action with the General Council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church looking toward the consummation of the merger of the two bodies.

A Letter Missive from the Executive Committee of the General Council has been sent to all pastors outlining the action taken and this will be studied carefully by every church. The action is described in nine specific paragraphs calling for certain progressive actions. We quote paragraphs one and two as follows:

"In accordance with actions of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches and the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, we re-assert the validity of the Basis of Union with the Interpretations as the basis for this merger. We feel that the matter of drafting a Constitution is adequately provided for in this instrument.

"We look forward to the holding of the Convening General Synod in 1957."

The Letter Missive.

The Letter Missive, already sent to every minister, becomes a most important document to all the churches. It now becomes necessary that every church re-acquaint itself with all the processes that have surrounded this venture since 1942 and with the steps proposed to be taken in the time between now and the proposed Convening Council in 1957. Early press notices allowed the drawing of some

(Continued on page 15.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Federal Building Loan Authorized For Dormitories at Elon

By LUTHER BYRD.

Dr. Leon E. Smith, president of Elon College, received on the afternoon of November 12, a telegraphed notification from Congressman Carl T. Durham in Washington of the final approval by the Federal Housing and Home Financing Agency of a $675,000 loan to the college for expansion of student housing.

The message said the loan was to be used together with $50,000 of the college's own funds for the construction of dormitories to house approximately 123 men and 80 women.

In announcing receipt of the telegram, Dr. Smith stated that he has been negotiating for the loan for a year.

Dr. Smith said that the new dormitory for girls is to house 80 students and that West Dormitory, which at present houses girls, is to be completely renovated and modernized to house a minimum of 40 additional girls.

In addition, there is also to be erected a modern dining hall, a two-story structure, with the second floor to be used for larger banquets and as a social hall.

These improvements will cost more than $675, but President Smith said that the college is prepared to furnish the necessary additional funds.

William Henry Dietrick of Raleigh is the architect for the projected buildings, and he was asked some weeks ago to complete the plans and specifications necessary for bids. As soon as plans are ready, building operations will begin. All of the buildings will be constructed on the present main campus of Elon.

* * * * *

The Task Before Us

An application to the United States Government, through the Housing and Home Finance Agency, for a loan for $675,000 has been approved. We are assured that as soon as details are worked out, all legal matters are satisfactorily and legally adjusted, and the architects have completed plans and specifications required for bids by contractors, that the money will be available in as needed in amounts required.

The above sounds like a lot of details, but really they are not too complicated and will soon be adjusted. Then we shall be ready for the next steps, the opening of bids, the letting of contracts, the breaking of ground, preparing the foundations and the laying of the first brick. We look forward to these days with eagerness and joy. I am sure that the church at large, the alumni, and friends of Elon College are anticipating the beginning of these improvements for our college, so long needed.

The task before us becomes a reality. For years and years we have been thinking of better and more acceptable equipment for our college, but now these improvements seem to be in sight.

Wonderful, you say, but there is a sterner and more sobering side of this undertaking. These buildings and the equipment must be paid for. It will take money, a lot of money, to pay for these improvements. We need not expect some big-hearted philanthropist to come from some place beyond the blue and drop the funds into our treasury sufficient to pay for the construction and equipping of these buildings. These privileges and opportunities are our responsibilities and obligations. There are 35,000 of us who are church members. If we would invest only an average of 60 cents a month for five years, we would be over the top. Surely we can invest two cents a day for so great a cause as Christian higher education in our church.

This is our task; this is your task; this is my task. It is my task not only to contribute my share but my task to espouse the cause, to enlist someone else, to inspire others and others, that many of us can dedicate ourselves to see it through to a glorious finish as quickly as possible. Not many of us like to pay interest, but so long as the debt is owing we must pay interest. Let's finish our task.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The matter of sufficient funds to meet the current needs of Elon College has been an annual and recurring problem from the day of its founding until this very hour. Heat, lights, water, and salaries are monthly obligations that must be met, but how and from what sources—from the church, invested funds, gifts and student tuition and fees. The students, as low as tuition is at Elon College, pay approximately eighty percent of the current needs of the college, and this in comparison with our state schools where the student pays only about forty percent of the cost of their education and the taxpayers of the state pay the remaining sixty percent.

From these facts, it is evident that the church, alumni, and friends of the college must keep up their contributions and be as generous as possible. So long as we, the church, contribute our share for the support of the college, it is our college and we have a voice in the affairs of the institution.

To date, and there is but one more conference to meet, we are still nearly $4,000 behind in our apportionments for the college.

Previously reported $10,519.29

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Clayton	$33.00
Lebanon	5.00
Mt. Carmel	5.00
Pleasant Hill Hill	15.00
Youngsville	15.00

Eastern Va. Conference:

Bethlehem (Nans.) S. S.	$37.71
Liberty Spring S. S.	25.00

N. C. & Va. Conference:

Burlington, First S. S.	$70.17
Durham	408.22
Greensboro, First	61.33
Happy Home S. S.	29.00
Haw River	107.00
Hebron	34.00
Hines Chapel	40.00
Kallam Grove	30.00
Mt. Zion S. S.	5.68
Union (Va.)	22.00

Va. Valley Conference:

Bethel S. S.	$27.46
-------------------	---------

970.57

Total to date $11,489.86

NOYES INSTALLED AS PASTOR AT RALEIGH.

(Continued from page 2.)

and France under the World Council of Churches. For the summers of 1952 and 1953 he and his wife directed work camps for college young people on the grounds of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen at Swan- nona, under the auspices of the Congregational Christian Service Committee. While he was attending Yale he spent his summers in pastorates in Oregon and in a ministry-industry program in Pittsburgh, Penn.

There are two daughters in the Noyce family, the second having arrived shortly after the Noyces came to North Carolina.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

YEARLY REPORTS FROM OUR CHURCHES

Hank's Chapel

Highlights of year:

Bought silver for our new kitchen.
Paid for two thousand bricks used in the new Sunday school addition.

Had our study books reviewed by our pastor, Rev. R. T. Grissom, followed by a picnic supper.

Had our Thank Offering service.
Still sponsoring Roy Black at the orphanage.

Attended Rally and conferences.

Our young people have used filmstrips during the year, with the adults attending.

MRS. TOMMIE FARRELL.

* * * * *

Hines Chapel

The Woman's Missionary Society of Hines Chapel has completed another successful year under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Ray Carter. Our programs have been interesting and challenging, and have proved a blessing to all that attended. I will not go into detail and tell everything that we did, but would like to comment on three very interesting items in our year's work:

First—Book review in March on "Within These Borders." We met at the parsonage and had as our guests the Monticello group. The attendance from both societies was about 100 per cent, and the interest was extremely gratifying. This, I think, was due to the marvelous way that Mrs. Carl Dawson presented the book. She is truly wonderful with the knack she has for bringing us face to face with our shortcomings, and also challenging us to be better Christians.

Second—Bible study for the year. This was given by our pastor's wife, Mrs. John P. Littiken. She, too, was wonderful in the way she caused us to do a bit of soul-searching as she held us up before The Mirrors of the Soul. She did the study in five meetings and we could hardly wait from one meeting to the next to hear her.

Third—Our August meeting. We had a picnic for our families and guests. After the picnic one of our local girls, Miss Nancy Pritchett, an exchange student to Germany, carried us on a wonderful trip from her home to Germany and back with beautiful slides and interesting stories about people she came in contact with and the homes in which she lived while there. She brought us face to face with the fact that it is only through understanding of the peoples of the earth and their problems that we can hope to have world peace.

We are very thankful to serve the Master through our small local group. We wish we were larger in number, but we try to realize that it is not always in great numbers that we do our best, but it is the sincerity with which we go about it.

BESSIE ISLEY,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Isle of Wight

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Isle of Wight Christian Church, under the leadership of Mrs. H. M. Wilson, has had a very successful year. We met all necessary requirements, contributed money for a goat and helped in local needs.

The picture "The Hidden Heart" was shown to about ten of our members and several visitors. Both mission books were reviewed by members of the society and we particularly enjoyed "Where'er the Sun."

Trusting that we may be able to do even better work in the next year, we ask the divine guidance of our Lord and Master.

MRS. R. F. WHITLEY,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Pleasant Ridge

The Woman's Missionary Society of Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church, Guilford County, North Carolina, has had another successful year in missionary work under the leadership of our president, Mrs. J. Wright Pegram.

All of our programs have been interesting, inspiring, and well-attended. Our Bible teacher for the year has been Mrs. P. G. Fleming. Our Thank Offering program was held at the church on Sunday night, November 8. Our Young Women's Society had charge of the program. We were all very grateful for the offering received. The Missionary Conference, World Day of Prayer, and all of the special meetings have been attended. We used both study books in our society, gave to the goat fund, and gave a Memorial for Mrs. Mary Huffine Nelson, one of our charter members who passed away, March 11, 1954.

In September, 1953, we organized the Ladies Auxiliary in our church. Since that time we have met quarterly. Our Young Women's Society has done a wonderful year's work, of which we are all proud.

We want to thank our pastor, Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, for their help to us through the many years they have been with us. As we come to the close of another year's work we are thankful for what we have been able to do, and trust that we may be able to do more this year.

Let us not forget as we go about our daily tasks what a little visit, a get well card, or a few flowers may mean to someone who is sick or shut-in. The light that shines the brightest at home shines the farthest away.

MRS. S. F. HUFFINE,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Damascus Church, Sunbury

Rev. T. Fred Wright, the pastor of the Damascus Church, Sunbury, N. C., has sent in a copy of the report of the activities and achievements of the Woman's Fellowship of that church for the last year, as given at the September meeting by the president, Mrs. E. E. Parker. The information follows:

The Woman's Fellowship met all conference requirements, and sent six delegates to the Woman's Conference.

Supplied literature for the Young People's and Children's groups.

Had Thank Offering program with offering of $9.90.

Held World Community Day service. Articles contributed to the "Bundles for Peace" project consisted of bedspreads, curtains, sheets, pillowcases, towels, and wash cloths.

Contributed $30.00 to the "Goat Fund."

Contributed $50.00 and coupons to the orphanage.

(Continued on page 9.)

Durham Church Honors Dr. Harrell In Recognition of Long Pastoral Service

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell was honored at a reception on Sunday, October 31, at five o'clock, in the Fellowship Hall of the Educational Building. The occasion was in recognition of serving thirty-five years as pastor of the local church. Welcoming the guests were Mrs. Mittie B. Branch and Mr. John T. Kernodle. The Guest Book, which was in the Pastor's Study, was in charge of Mrs. Emmett T. Lee and Mrs. J. O. Kimrey. Mr. and Mrs. Arnis Glenn greeted the guests in the foyer.

Mrs. Robert S. Smith introduced to the receiving line of honor guests—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Mrs. Harrell and Miss Mary Ann Harrell. Dr. V. M. Mulholland introduced the special guests. They were Dr. Harrell's family—Mrs. Percy Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. William Harrell, Master Tommy Harrell and Mrs. Lewis Horton from Suffolk, Virginia; and Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Harrell from Norfolk, Virginia.

The entire building was decorated with fall flowers. The refreshment table was covered with a green faille lace-trimmed cloth. In the center was a silver tureen with an arrangement of white chrysanthemums from the R. J. Kernodle garden. This was flanked by white tapers in silver candelabra.

Coffee was poured by Mrs. J. M. Saunders and Mrs. C. C. Mulholland, Sr. Punch was served by Mrs. Walter Hesse, Mrs. Nat R. Hunter and Mrs. D. M. Estes. Others assisting in serving sandwiches, cake squares and nuts were Mrs. Vera Cheek, Mrs. J. L. Crumpton, Mrs. A. T. Crutchfield, Miss Shirley Delionback, Mrs. W. C. Haswell, Miss Jean Hendley, Mrs. J. R. Hutchings, Jr., Miss Lena Munday, Miss Ann Pleasants and Miss Margaret Walker.

The general social chairman for the reception was Mrs. J. R. Pleasants.

Music was furnished during the afternoon by Mrs. W. H. Woody, Mrs. Carl Key and Mrs. Waldo Boone.

The feature of the reception was a presentation program, presided over by Mr. J. O. Kimrey. He read a letter from the Liberty Springs Church, Dr. Harrell's boyhood church, commending him for his outstanding services during his thirty-five years of ministry to the Durham Church. Miss Clarine Perry then reported that seventy-two families of the local church, representing one hundred and seventy-two members, were subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper, of which Dr. Harrell is now editor. A scroll, with these names, was given to the honoree.

A leather bound book of testimonial letters from church members was presented to Dr. Harrell by Mrs. Robert S. Smith.

Tribute and appreciation were expressed to Dr. Harrell and to his family by Mr. J. L. Crumpton. In behalf of the church and church school, he presented Dr. Harrell a sterling silver water pitcher and tray. The tray was inscribed:

STANLEY C. HARRELL, D. D.

Pastor, Teacher, Friend Counselor for thirty-five years

Nov. 1, 1919 - Oct. 31, 1954

In grateful appreciation from

*The Congregational Christian Church and Church School
Durham, North Carolina*

Dr. Harrell responded with appropriate remarks. He then called on Miss Mary Ann Harrell to speak for the family. She said they wished to leave a tangible gift to the church as a token of their gratitude, and invited the group to the church parlor, where the gift was placed. The gift from the Harrell family is an imported wool, hand-hooked rug. It is 12 by 18 feet, in beautiful pattern and color. The entire membership is grateful to the Harrells and shall continuously appreciate this handsome and generous gift.

Many members of the church, former members and friends attended the reception.

Religion is the center of the present ideological conflict between East and West. The struggle will be resolved by intangible ideals as well as tangible defenses. The moral need of our age is apparent; but something more than a return to orthodoxy is needed: rather a vital recovery of moral and spiritual values.

—Arnold J. Toynbee,

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 8.)

Gifts to two sick members, and baskets of fruit to two shut-ins.

Had book review of the mission books Where'er the Sun and Within These Borders.

Observed World Day of Prayer with the Methodist Church.

Served turkey supper that netted $177.75, and served supper to the Ruritan Club and netted $40.00.

Sold flavoring extract and purchased a coffee urn.

Observed May Fellowship program and collection was $7.25.

Had a Cradle Roll party with a collection of $5.38.

Sent in Life Membership for Mrs. J. H. Carter.

Took a $10.00 membership in the Christian Missionary Association.

Thank you, Mr. Wright, for sending in this good report!

An Appreciation

The writer must have had in mind the type of the late Mrs. T. E. Brickhouse when he wrote the thirty-first chapter of Proverbs.

My association with her, especially through the old Memorial Temple, and later Christian Temple, prompts me to pay tribute to her memory.

To her church she was loyal, giving freely of her time, effort and means. Her interest was not confined to her local church, but to the larger interests of her denomination as well. Until recent years, when she was not so well, there were few Conferences and C. M. A. meetings that she, with her husband, did not attend.

Those who knew her best like to remember her as the ideal wife and mother, always looking to the interest of her household and the very careful training of her children. The late Dr. N. G. Newman once said: "I remember with pleasure the day I married T. E. Brickhouse and Mary Everette. They represent a type much needed today."

She was privileged to see her five very fine sons grow to maturity, and and realized the worthwhile achievements of her years before she passed on to greater work on September 23 of this year.

Together with her husband, children, and entire family, many feel a sense of loss at the passing of this gracious wife, mother and friend.

MRS. L. W. STAGG.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

We Go to See the Queen

Breathes their a girl—young or old—who has not spun a fairy-tail dream of being a princess or a queen? The little girls in our family expressed a desire to see England's Queen Mother. A few days later we were talking with Dr. Sidney Berry, the fine English minister who has been visiting our churches, and we were talking about hoping to see the Queen Mother. He said: "By all means do, you will find that she is worth taking a trip to see, for she is a lady of great worth."

On the second day of her visit to Colonial Williamsburg, we made our journey, hoping to see her as she returned from a tour of Jamestown Island. We arrived a few minutes before her Majesty, and as she swept by in her black Rolls Royce with such little ceremony that we had trouble realizing that she was royalty. As the car rounded a curve her eyes fell on a curly-topped little girl with eyes aglow, and she gave her a majestic smile and her graceful wave.

Later we were to see her closer as she walked across the Inn Yard. The old town is so lovely with its shrubs, and special pink brick, and very blue sky—all of these were a perfect background for the petite (but plump) English Queen Mother. We heard her talking to her escort in her fine, Scotch flavored voice. Her pastel blue and light gray costume was just right for her English complexion and blue eyes. She looks and acts like a queen! Her feet were dainty and her walk firm but ladylike.

Queen Elizabeth's accent puzzled the oldest grandson of our Governor. He remarked that she spoke English well after being here so short a time! We heard her gay (yet polite) voice as she passed from our sight. We thought of the special blessings that come to some of us. This beautiful lady was born a commoner and may have dreamed of becoming a princess but hardly a queen! She married a King's son when it was unlikely that he should go to the throne. Her charm, gentle ways and goodliness have won a place for her around the world.

We felt no difference in our attitude toward her because she was the Queen Mother, but we admired her because she acted like a lady. Her bearing and manner called for our respect. We learned another lesson too, fairy tales and dreams of royalty are fine, but hard to take! The little girls lamented the fact that so many people went with her everywhere, and that so many men were required to protect her. "When is she ever alone?" Not often! Is one alone when one sleeps?

The Mother of a promising young Queen, the mother of a rollickingly happy Princess, and the grandmother of Prince Charlie and his charming sister, Princess Ann, has gone out of our lives—the lives she touched but a moment, and yet we are glad we took our trip to see the Queen! Life is so full of "movements"—this is another to be shared with grandchildren some day.

* * * * *

By Example, Teach Calmness

By JEAN LYON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

During threatening danger, calmness, such as comes from an unquestioning assurance, establishes a family confidence that prevents accidents, while hysteria destroys confidence and often precipitates the accident that was feared.

There are many times when a child may be guided to safety by the calm voice of a parent in whom the child has confidence. The special need for trust in the judgment of their parents, and faith in what grownups tell them to do, makes it important for parents today to build and maintain this confidence and faith in children at an early age.

At a time of emergency confidence may be assured if the adults recognize a situation calmly. Such calm confidence can be illustrated by the following incident, which happened to a farm family in Iowa.

The father in this case, although calm and usually placid, was a quick-thinking man. The mother, also, thought quickly. She called to her husband one day, showing no alarm in her tone, to tell him that their son Paul, aged four and one-half, was walking around the platform near the top of their seventy-foot windmill. The child was totally unaware of the danger he was in. Had the wind changed it would have caused the millhead to turn and sweep him off of the platform to the ground below. The parents, of course, knew this.

To make the situation more acute, Paul's brother, Bobby, aged three and one-half, was attempting to follow his elder brother but was only halfway up the ladder. This was because he could just manage to span the wide steps in the ladder by slowly crawling onto each rung with his knees. Not until then was he able to stand on his feet and reach for the next rung.

The father quickly approached the tower and said in a voice loud enough to be heard by Paul, "You go too fast for Bobby, Paul; he isn't as old or as big as you are. Come on down now, so Bobby will come, too, and we will see if Mother has some candy for all of us. I'd like some."

Paul felt that his father was proud of his achievement and was now relying on him to lead his brother down, even as he had led him up. What could easily have been a dual tragedy was prevented by the calm, praising voice and attitude of the parent. Distinctly, he gave instructions to the leader and he made himself part of the activity by carefully directing it.

Paul immediately looked for the ladder, climbed off of the platform and started down. Though handicapped by having to pass Bobby, he succeeded in doing it and then in leading the way down. This was his opportunity to become the leader and his brother the follower, for Bobby, of course, came down, too, instead of continuing up.

Further good judgment was displayed by both parents. The candy was not forgotten and no punishment or criticism was awaiting Paul at the bottom of the ladder for his action, or for his influence in leading his brother into danger. The father realized that he had been himself unwise, for he had allowed Paul to see him go to the top several times. He now removed the lower section of the ladder, which heretofore had extended completely to the ground and had been an open invitation to the boys to climb up as they had seen Dad do.

It is one thing to be moved by even; it is another to be mastered by them. Jesus said: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

—Ralph W. Sockman.

"Why I Am a Protestant"

A Sermon by

AARON N. MECKEL, D. D., LL. D.
St. Petersburg, Florida.

"But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you . . ."

—I Peter 3:15.

These words are a command! They seem to say, "Don't just stand there stammering and hesitating! Get on your feet and speak up for your convictions. Don't apologize for your faith: witness to it."

Ah, but Peter ought to know! He was himself lifted out of the mouldy traditions and shibboleths of ancient Judaism, into a vital, personal, transforming relationship. Living encounter with a living God—that is what he had experienced. No wonder compulsion is upon him.

Indeed, a man should be acquainted with his heritage, and be able to commend it to others. A man should know. My friend, do you? It has been said that, if you ask the average Roman Catholic, Jehovah Witness, or Mormon, what he believes, the reply is quite specific, but that Protestants, on the whole, are dreadfully fuzzy and foggy about their faith. I recall the Mormon bishop who spent two hours trying to convert me to his religion. And the Seventh Day Adventist, who said, "If you will just let me bring my Bible, I will show you verse by verse where you are wrong." He was not invited, but I could not but admire his zeal for his religion.

Not that we are to be intolerant bigots when it comes to our religious profession. Not at all! I like the genial Roman Catholic priest, who, when he was asked, if he thought Protestants would go to heaven, replied, "I think they would have as good a chance as some of our Popes!" And the Methodist elder, who, when the Angelus struck in the Roman church tower, would remove his hat and say, "In my father's house, there are many mansions."

Nevertheless, we do need to put the "pro" back in Protestant, as someone suggests. Far too much we know only the negative connotation of that great word. It derives from two words, "pro" meaning for and "testes" meaning witness. The evangelical Protestant witnesses for something. His is a positive avowal of something God has graciously done.

Suppose then today, that we set in array just a few of the distinctive beliefs, or convictions, that make us Protestants. I know you will forgive me if I put this avowal somewhat personally.

I am a Protestant primarily, because I take the Holy Scriptures as my sole dependable guide in matters of faith. In other words, not popes, or priests, or hierarchies, or councils, but the religion of a Book.

While a guest preacher at Boston's Tremont Temple Baptist Church last summer, I ran across the words of a letter written by a convert to Dr. Sidney W. Powell, the pastor. This woman had been reared a Roman Catholic, and in this letter, she expresses the joy and freedom which her new church relationship affords her. This letter was gathered up into a sermon by Dr. Powell, and published in the Watchman Examiner of July 8, 1954. She had listened to a sermon on the radio, in which the positive teaching of the Epistle of the Hebrews was stressed. Christ once and for all made offering of Himself that she might know the forgiveness of her sins. This mighty sacrifice of the Cross does not require repetition on the part of merely human priests. What Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, accomplished, and did for mortals, was once and for all. By the shedding of his blood there is remission for all the sons of men.

Now, it was precisely this Scriptural teaching and preaching which gripped and satisfied the hungry heart of this radio listener. Here was a religion with an open Bible, holding forth the word of life, proclaiming a gospel of deliverance. The invitation to become an evangelical Christian and church member was clearly sounded, and she came! It has truly been said, that the Bible of the reformers, Luther, Calvin, Knox, and others, was not chained to the pulpit!

In this searching day in which we live, we should, all of us, be able to give a reason for the hope that is in us, to those who grope for life-giving faith. Friends, we should know our great text-book. We should be able to point men to the joyous and hopeful words of St. Paul: "If thou wilt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart God has raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10:9). And to Jesus' clear teaching to soul-hungry Nicodemus, "I say to you, unless one is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.—You must be born anew." (Chapter 3, St. John, R.S.V.).

It was the message of God as stated in the Holy Bible that stirred the soul of Luther to a new base. "The just shall live by faith," not by man's work—it was that message that became the watch-word of the Reformation. It was like a "shot fired around the world." Protestants (we are referred to as "evangelicals" in Latin America) are the people of a book.

Here now, is a second reason for which I am a Protestant: Protestantism, at its best always exalts Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior of the human heart, and as only head of his church. As a Protestant I find it impossible to accept the claim of Pope Leo VI in the year 1928: "All true followers of Christ will believe—the infallibility of the Roman Pontiff—with the same faith as they believe in the Incarnation of Our Lord." To such a statement the evangelical Protestant has but one reply, "No! A thousand times No!" With a sigh of relief he opens his New Testament and reads, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus." (I Tim. 2:5). He takes up his hymnal and sings the words of the beloved Gospel hymn,

*On Christ the solid rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sands.*

With Toplady, in the famous hymn, "Rock of Ages" he says, referring to Jesus Christ,

Thou must save, and Thou alone.

Indeed he joins with the great reformers of all centuries as he repeats the faith-laden words of Martin Luther's hymn:

*Did we in our own strength confide
Our striving would be losing.
Were not the right Man on our side,
The Man of God's own choosing.
Dost ask who that may be,
Christ Jesus, it is He.*

(Continued on page 13.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"In Time of Trouble"

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 28, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble." Psalm 46:1.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Psalm 142.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 46.

A Date With Trouble.

"For the test of the heart is trouble, And it always comes with the years."

Thus wrote some poet whose name I do not recall. He was no pessimist; he was a realist. Every man has a date with trouble; or perhaps it is better to say that trouble has a date with every man. "Nobody knows de trouble I'se in," goes the Negro spiritual. To be sure, some folks do not seem to have much trouble—life seems to be good to them. And some folks deliberately, or unknowingly, court trouble—they adopt such attitudes or form such habits or do such things that trouble is bound to come. But even in a good and well-ordered life, trouble comes. Jesus said to his disciples, "In the world ye shall have tribulation (or trouble)." So the first thing, and the wise thing to do is to accept trouble as a fact of life. Then we can learn how to face it and conquer it.

Loosing Your Religion or Using It.

A layman said to his minister one Sunday morning, "Parson, I came near losing my religion last week." The minister replied, "Why didn't you use your religion?" Well, why not? What is religion for anyway, if not to help a man when he is in trouble, when he is tempted and tried, when he is undergoing trial? The important fact about trouble is not that it comes, but what we do with it when it does come. One of the most important things in life is to learn how to handle trouble, how to deal with trouble. And religion, real religion in the sense of faith in God and trust in him, and in the sense that such religion can give inward power and peace, is the secret of dealing with trouble successfully.

Man Having "A Heap of Trouble."

The Psalmist was having "a heap of trouble." He was down in the dumps. It seems that his enemies had ganged up on him, had laid a snare for him, and there seemed to be no help. He had come to the place where he thought that no man cared for his soul. We usually put on our magnifying glasses when we are in trouble. We usually think that our trouble is worse than any trouble that others ever had or could have. "Trouble can become terror; terror can become panic, and panic is nothing more than fear running wild and cheating a man of help that awaits him right at hand. No trouble is final; there is always a way out."

Trust in Trouble.

"I cried unto thee, O Jehovah; I said thou art my refuge, my portion in the land of the living. Attend unto to my cry, for I am brought low; deliver me from my persecutors . . . for thou wilt deal bountifully with me." This man turned to God in his trouble, and although he did not understand, he trusted.

Talking Over Our Troubles.

It helps to talk over our troubles with others. More than once in my ministry, I have had folks to come to me who were in trouble, heavy and grievous to be borne. In confidence, they talked to me about their troubles. I usually let such folks talk and talk and talk and tell me all their troubles. An again and again, as they left, after a brief prayer, they would say in one way or another, "You have helped me so very much." The fact is that I had not done much, if anything. But they had shared their troubles with somebody else. They had "got them off their chest" and they felt better.

How much more does it help to talk over our troubles with God. Do not bother to put them in high-sounding phrases. Just sit down, or get down on your knees, or for that matter, while standing up and going about your duties, tell God all about it in the language of your heart. Cast your burden of trouble on him, and he will sustain you and make you more than conqueror.

A Shaken World and an Unshaken Heart.

"Though the earth do change, and though the mountains be shaken into the heart of the seas, . . . though the mountains tremble with the swelling thereof . . . therefore will we not fear." Only once in my life have I felt anything like an earthquake tremor; and believe me, when this solid old earth begins to tremble, that is something to get seared about. But the Psalmist says that even if this happens, he is not going to be afraid. Why? Because he knows that God is a refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. This was not a retreat from life. It was, and is, a very practical way of dealing with life. Because his trust was in the living God, he was not fearful or afraid. The cataclysms of nature might snuff out his life; they could not do anything to his soul. "Therefore," said he, "we will not fear." Faith in God is an antidote to fear.

"Be still, and know that I am God." Some wag has said that the "patron saint of England is St. George, the patron saint of Ireland is St. Patrick, and the patron saint of America is St. Vitus." We Americans are active people. We like to be "on the go." We do not like to be still. We do not like to take time to be quiet. And life is the poorer and weaker for all this. There are times when we must be still and silent if we are to know God and to hear God. Even in prayer, we are, for the most part, talking—we do little listening. The people of America need a "Quiet Hour"—a time when they can be still and know that God is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Silence is not only often golden; it is often generative of great strength and power and courage. One of the secrets of the Master's great poise and power was his custom of going aside from the busy round of the day and being still, and becoming acquainted with God.

"In the world, ye shall have tribulation. But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world," said Jesus.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

One who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or how elegant, can among Europeans and Americans, form a proper substitute. Western civilization is founded upon the Bible; our ideas, our art, our ideals come more from the Bible than from all other books put together.

—William Lyons Phelps.

THE LITTLE BROWN CHURCH.

(Continued from page 5.)

week he held a "singing school" at Bradford, where the church of his song was then in the course of construction. Mr. Pitts interestingly recorded the following in his carefully kept diary: "In the years of 1859 and 1860, the good people of Bradford set themselves to the task of building the church, and did so despite many disappointments, reverses and hardships involved in the enterprise. And the site chosen by the people of the community (for the church) was the identical spot that had inspired me to write the song, 'Little Brown Church in the Wildwood,' which song no one had yet heard sung."

This is the further story of the song, in the words of the author himself: "By the early winter of 1864, the church was ready for dedication (December 29, 1864). While I was holding a singing school at Bradford in the spring, the class went one evening to the church. My manuscript of the song I had brought with me from Wisconsin. It had never been sung before a group by anyone yet. I sang it on that occasion. Soon afterward, I took the manuscript to Chicago, where the song was published by H. M. Higgins and dedicated to 'The Little Brown Church at Bradford, Iowa.'"

The song won a speedy recognition locally, and with the years won its way into the hearts of Christian people of all the world.

The composer further recorded in his diary: "Soon after its publication, the church at Bradford, which had been painted brown (some say for want of money to buy better paint, but likely because the song so designated), became known as 'The Little Brown Church in the Vale.' My hope is that it will stand for a thousand years."

For nearly a century, this small but inviting country-side Congregational Church has been one of the rich heritages of Protestants throughout the world. Celebrities from afar: authors, artists, commentators, and people from all walks of life have made pilgrimages to this historic church for the lift of soul it gives to visitors.

The church is on an excellent paved road, but a few miles off the main highway between the East and the West. The once thriving town of five to six hundred people is now gone. The stores, offices, bank, town hall and school have now long since been moved (because the railroad was laid two miles away), but the church remains. And thousands of people from every state in the Union visit the church and its beautiful wooded grounds each year. Ample facilities are provided for rallies, anniversaries and reunions, as a courtesy from the church. An artesian well provides marvelously refreshing water to visitors and picnickers; and the delightful shade offered by the huge white oak and hard maple trees is most inviting to all who pass that way. As high as 800 visitors have signed the church register in a single day.

Through all the intervening years, "The Little Brown Church" has been, and is today, an "ongoing church"; and religious services have been maintained by the hundred or more members since 1855. There is now a membership of 120, mostly young people. Each year, on the third Sunday in June, a "homecoming day" is held by the church, with an attendance of two thousand or more. In 1916, the first pastor, Rev. John K. Nutting, aged 84, and Dr. William Pitts, the author of the song, aged 85, both attended the homecoming celebration, each giving an address and the author of the song sang it as he had written it 59 years before. Two years later, both of these noble men of God were called to their reward.

Today, the singing of the song, "The Little Brown Church in the Vale" by churches and over radio and television brings thousands of visitors to the church each year. Some come out of curiosity; many for the sacred rite of baptism; many for the solemnization of holy matrimony; and others for the privilege of silent prayer. The church is always open as "A House of Prayer for All People."

"WHY I AM A PROTESTANT."

(Continued from page 11.)

Is not that precisely what our convert-friend at Tremont Temple found to be true? She writes, "formerly I had only known a wooden Christ who looked down at me from great heights from a wooden cross." Now she discovered a living Christ for her heart, bringing her inward release and a peace that passed all understanding. Surely that is what he should be meaning in all our lives here today.

It is not very often that a Protestant minister quotes from a Roman Catholic layman in a sermon. But here is such a layman, Dr. Donald Terry, of Chicago, saying in the Christian Century, of October 20, 1954, that he is sick to death of the substitution of a Mary-Cult for the true religion of Jesus. Hear him: "How any clergy, claiming to hold in full authority and integrity that faith once delivered to the saints, can let the sublime personality of Jesus play second fiddle, and become a mere walking zombie to a revived deification of the ancient Earth-Mother complex, is beyond mere laical me." And he refers to "the intrusion of a pagan rhythm into the ordered business of Christian life." That is a Roman Catholic layman speaking for the unfettered, Biblical, evangelical insistence upon Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and only head of his church.

One remembers Mary, the sainted mother of Jesus, sitting at table with him at Cana, where he performs his first miracle. When they ask her about her Son, she has but one reply, "Do as he tells you to do." In other words, "Don't worship me, worship Him!" And after his resurrection, she is found, faithfully among others, in the upper room, glorifying and praising him.

Protestantism at its best, exalts this Christ, this Lord, this only begotten Son of the living God.

Then, too, I am a Protestant because I believe in the Biblical conception of the church as a priesthood of believers. This very same man who urges us to make a clear witness to our faith, reminds us that we are "a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Christ Jesus" (1 Peter 2:5). In very truth, it was this belief of a spiritual democracy within a spiritual theocracy that once went into the founding of our American Nation. Men who had been dictated to in matters of faith, and were sick and tired of it, came to these shores and entered into the Mayflower Compact as a "priesthood of believers" in God. The basic conception of government "of, by and for the people" sprang from that root.

Strangely enough, that conviction needs re-stating within Protestantism itself in this day. Again and again it needs to be said, "Give the church back to the people! No top-heavy brass, please! No little popes or dictators among either clergy or laity. Let the church be the church."

(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage has been an ad interim home for many a homeless, helpless little child. Here he has found shelter, food, clothing and love. Here he could lay his little head down on a warm, clean pillow, surrounded by big friends and little folks and sleep once more in peace.

I have never felt the real hunger pains, nor have I really been too sparsely clothed. I have never been without a home, nor friends. But I have seen little children like that.

Neither have I known the peril of a broken home. I have seen parents unreasonably angry with one another. They have either come together or separately to my study during a long pastorate. I know something of how wild folks can get. I have seen the results of anger and cruelty and fear. I have held a little child's hand when it was trembling with fear and compassionately watched its frightened face.

To see such children get a place of refuge when they are deserted and and left lonely and frustrated is to have your heart stirred. We have had them come here like that. There are so many differing circumstances even in our good society to send a little child out to face the world alone. Suppose that were your child and you were helpless to do anything about it. You would appreciate a home such as this one where kind friends and good business men and women get together for two hundred churches and take that little child over.

If we all understood and knew what some of us have learned and know, money would pour in here sufficiently to run this institution in a good manner.

This is an ad interim home where a child can find the needed refuge for the number of months or years he stands in need of it. As soon as a better home for him can be found, off he goes to it. Our work is so charitable it is a joy. It is a joy to see the color come back into the little cheeks and confidence come back into the face. It is a joy to see laughter and sunshine where there were tears and terror. It is a joy to see the knowledge of love and home and friends take hold of a little fellow.

It is a thrill to see with what confidence and pride a growing boy takes his place in his class at public school, properly clothed, properly coached, and provided for. Hundreds of homeless children go into private homes and foster homes, and hundreds more are adopted by worthy parents. But what about the child that does not fall under either of these benefactions? There are enough of them, like that, left to keep pounding away at the orphanage doors to keep it filled. Some of them, perhaps not so many, but some of them will find no better place. To them as well as to the others the orphanage does a good service.

At this Thanksgiving time, this harvest time, will we miss a donation made to the Christian Orphanage? Will we find excuses for not doing a simple act of charity where a needy child's welfare is at stake? To the kind-hearted and the wise-minded we offers an opportunity to render a real service.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER 11, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Cakes and Pies:
Fisher St. School PTA, Burlington, N. C.
Clothing:
Mrs. J. Osborn, Norwalk, Calif.
Mrs. E. C. Martin, Burlington, N. C.
Socks:
Mr. Theodore Samet, Greensboro, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $12,297.28
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Morrisville $ 11.41
New Elam 73.83

85.24

Eastern Va. Conference:
New Lebanon S. S. $ 32.44
Windsor S. S. 100.00

42.44

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Bethel $ 23.43

Bethlehem 5.00
Concord 23.00
Durham S. S. 30.71
Greensboro, Calvary S. S. 13.00
Mt. Bethel 45.00
Lynchburg 5.00
145.14
Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester S. S. $ 10.00
10.00

Total $ 282.82

Grand total $12,590.10

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $26,379.52
State of North Carolina,
Gasoline Refund $ 83.25
John Chamberline, Gibsonville, N. C. 10.00
Mary Sue Brittle S. S. Class, Bethlehem (N.) 5.00
In Memory of W. H. May, Sr. 5.00
In Memory of Clarence Bunch 7.50
In Memory of C. C. Griffin 10.00
Thanksgiving Offerings:
A Friend 50.00
Angie Crew Circle, Union Ridge Ch., Burlington, N. C. 25.00
Thomams O. Morrison, Brooklyn, N. Y. 10.00
Ross W. Sanderson, Bricks, N. C. 5.00
Dr. C. D. Johnston, Jr., Jr., Elizabeth City, N. C. 50.00
C. Clarence Stamey, Fallston, N. C. 100.00
Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Browning, Burlington, N. C. 25.00
Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Vipond, Norfolk, Va 10.00
Special Gifts 225.90
651.65

Grand total $27,031.17

Total for the week $ 934.47

Total for the year $39,611.27

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $..... as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

"WHY I AM A PROTESTANT."

(Continued from page 13.)

The story is told of a minister who went hunting in search of ducks, taking with him a seasoned Maine guide. After a fruitless day, he returned to camp, ate lustily and retired. That night the French guide and his wife were talking together. "Is the domine a good shot, Pierre?" "Yes, I think he is a good shot; but it is remarkable how the Lord does look after those ducks!"

Friends, it is nothing short of miraculous how the Church of Jesus Christ has survived all human interpretations and misrepresentations, down the long centuries! It is a sure proof of its divine founding. And if we have lost our aim, then let us hear again, fresh from his lips, the directive of the Church's Founder: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her." Founded upon what pray? Upon a human being, Peter, for instance? A thousand times no. But upon Peter's confession, as a redeemed and surrendered and humble follower, that Christ is the Son of the living God.

"The Church's one foundation, is Jesus Christ, her Lord." That is final and conclusive for the evangelical Protestant.

The place of the clergyman, the minister, in our Free Churches, is one of honor and respect, to be sure; but always as a man among men, as a brother amongst brothers. Christ has made us "kings and priests unto our God"—all and each of us, clergy and people.

One more word: the utter relevance of our religion to every-day living! Let not the church altar be too far removed from Main Street, where people move and breathe and live. Mr. Donald Terry, our Roman Catholic layman, urges the clergy of his church to take a helicopter out of their ivory towers of detachment and to co-operate with all men of good will for the building of a better world. That word should apply to all of us. Protestants and Roman Catholics, and Jews, to the laity and the clergy. Out of our ivory towers! Jesus took three of his disciples up into the Mount of Transfiguration, where he was transfigured before them, yes. But then he also led them down again into the valley below, where human beings suffered and hungered and died. They were to put the vision to work there. Let it be said: God pity the church which is but a pale reflection of the selfish, secular world around it. It has forfeited its credentials and survived its usefulness.

Recently I read a beautiful incident from the life of William Temple, which sums up what we have been trying to say. It is from the pen of W. Norman Pittenger. A London charwoman, scrubbing the stairs of an Anglican cathedral, fell into conversation with a priest. "Do you know the Archbishop of Canterbury?" she asked. "Yes, I do," was the reply. "Well, you know," said the charwoman, "I came 'ere the other day. And 'e asked me 'ow I was, because 'e said I didn't look 'appy. And I told 'im that I could not be 'appy, with two sons in a prison camp in Germany, and the old man not able to work, and me 'aving to do for 'im and not 'aving much to live on. And do you know what 'is Grace did? 'E sat down on that step there, and 'e talked to me for 'arf an hour about Gawd." (The Christian Century, October 27, '54.)

The Bible is our guide in faith and belief. The pre-eminence of Jesus Christ. The church as the priesthood of believers. The utter relevance of religion to living. There, my friends, is the "faith of our fathers, holy faith." God help us to know it, live it, and pass it on to our children!

EASTERN VIRGINIA C. M. A.

(Continued from page 2.)

takings as the C. M. A. tries to consummate.

So, I appeal to the members and friends of the First Congregational Christian Church to take a renewed interest in this Association; there is time between now and December to accumulate a savings for a membership and I believe it will be most rewarding. What a satisfaction it must be to Dr. I. W. Johnson, who stated at the last annual session that he had been a member for over fifty years thus having contributed more than five hundred dollars to this cause. And remember, part of that came here to establish our church!

CALEB D. WEST.

Men cannot live well either in poverty or in abundance unless they see some meaning and purpose in life, which can be thrilling. Lacking the joy which comes from meaning and purpose, we turn to all kinds of wretched substitutes.

—Elton Trueblood.

THE LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP.

(Continued from page 3.)

The first National Convention of the Laymen's Fellowship to be held at the Palmer House in Chicago, Illinois, February 25-27, 1955, was announced. Those who plan to attend were urged to contact Earl Danieley so that group reservations might be made.

The speaker of the evening, Dr. Sidney Berry, Executive Secretary of the International Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, was introduced by Dr. Scott. Dr. Berry presented an educational and highly entertaining address telling his audience of the development and the present status of the International Council; of the situation in England as far as the Congregational Churches are concerned; and, of the work of the laymen in Britain. He agreed that the contention that Britain has very low church attendance is true; he hastened to add, however, that that "does not mean that it is Godless." He pointed out some of the difficulties which the churches still experience as a result of the war. "What Britain needs," he said, "is a genuine revival . . . of religion. But, she doesn't need it any worse than you do."

GENERAL CHURCH NEWS.

(Continued from page 6.)

wrong impressions concerning the finality of the action taken at Cleveland. A review of all of the consecutive actions of our General Council through the years is necessary to a full understanding of the Cleveland action. In like manner a review of all other related actions within the churches or by groups of individuals from the churches is necessary to full understanding of our present position concerning the Union. More important than ever is the study of the Report of the Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity as made to the last General Council at New Haven and made available to all our churches.

Churches Interested.

There is no question that all our churches hold a major interest in the outcome of the processes set in motion by this action of the Executive Committee. This is evidenced by the many requests already made for information and the many questions already being asked. There will be lively interest in all of our churches.

—The Michigan Conference News.

Immorality on Wheels

By REV. ROBERT F. ROYSTER

Many who are concerned with the carnage on our highways are beginning to see that behind the fundamental causes of traffic accidents lie real moral issues. For too long people have only been concerned with traffic laws, and have been unconcerned with the moral problems which gave rise to those laws.

We do not like to be told we are immoral, and our favorite way of avoiding it is to attempt to take "right-and-wrong-ness" out of the picture. By such specious reasoning we have arrived, as a nation of drivers, at the conclusion that behavior behind the wheel is a legal matter, not a moral one. When careless, reckless, thoughtless, selfish driving begins to be known as sin, we will all be safer.

You see, sin is still a nasty little word. Even though our modern era tried laughing at it, it wouldn't go away; the era just before had tried to reason it out of existence, with like success. Many a person is willing to be a law violator who would resent being publicly recognized as a gross and unrepentant sinner. In spite of our veneer of amorality, most of us thoroughly detest real wickedness. It is time we faced the fact that most traffic accidents are simply the normal consequence of wilful, wicked acts—acts that are habits of sin, grown used to and committed without a twinge of conscience.

For example, a driver (your normally moral and friendly neighbor) leaves for an appointment in a nearby city too late to be assured of an easy trip and an on-time arrival. After a few minutes of impatience behind another vehicle while oncoming traffic prevented passing, he suddenly decides to pass, well aware that it will be close. THIS DECISION is what should concern us, for it is the sin that may produce death, disabling injury, or may impoverish both the sinner and unknown innocents in at least two other vehicles. It is in essence the same sin that drives dictators to their merciless slaughtering: a wilful pursuit of our own ends, without regard for others. The real question is not whether the decision of the driver was legal or not; rather, it is whether the decision was immoral—wickedly, destructively sinful.

The driver who dawdles along at a pace well below the flow of traffic on a main highway is a sinner as well as a menace to life and limb. His sin is selfishness, reckless and often deadly selfishness. The after-cocktails driver is a gambler, with the stakes his neighbor's life. The sleepy driver is an egoist, assuming that he can safely operate a vehicle with practically none of his senses functioning. Whenever human failure is a significant factor in producing an accident (and that means in nearly every one) the failure can be seen as a violation of God's law, not just man's law.

The effects of these driving sins are always produced by sin. They are outreaching circles of evil consequences, wavelets receding from the initial act. We are so enmeshed in the effects of these sins that the honestly safe driver is often a helpless victim of this mass immorality. We are caught up in a web of sin on the highways, and heroic measures are called for.

It is not enough to advertise and propagandize against dangerous and illegal driving practices: sin has seldom been noticeably affected this way. The best answer to the problem is to recover our moral sense on the highway. For when we begin to see much modern vehicle operation as moral degradation, we can restore safety to our highways as a by-product of restoring morality in our drivers.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1954

NUMBER 46

A Thanksgiving Prayer

By EDWIN MCNEIL POTEAT

Eternal Spirit, accept our grateful thanksgiving for the heritage that is ours in this green and pleasant land; for all those who have been our benefactors and the guardians of our spirits, and for those whose hopes and dreams have come to fruition in our security and our peace. And give to us diligence that will be worthy of them; a renewal of faith in those eternal values for which they wrought, and an undiminished confidence in the final liberation of all those whose enslavement to error is the challenge to our faith—faith in the truth that incarnate in the Son of God will yet overcome the world.

News Flashes

At this Thanksgiving season THE CHRISTIAN SUN is happy to welcome quite a large number of new subscribers to its ranks. It wishes to express to them thanks; and to subscribers, both new and old, to wish for them a joyful time of thanksgiving.

Supt. W. T. Scott christened Rosemary, daughter of Carl and Rachel Wallace, in a very impressive service at the Eutaw Community Church of Fayetteville, N. C., on Sunday, November 14. Dr. Scott later delivered an inspiring sermon on "The Church." The service was supported by the three choirs of the church.

Rev. Carl R. Key of Durham, N. C., who has since 1949 been the State Director of CROP for North Carolina, has been appointed to the new inter-church office for the Southeastern States to direct a project on "The Use and Understanding of the Bible." An article on this appears elsewhere in this issue. We also call the attention of our readers to the article, "Giving Thanks," by Mr. Key, on page 6.

Supt. W. T. Scott was the guest speaker at Liberty (Vance) church on Sunday morning, October 7. This was an Ordination and Installation Service. Two deacons were ordained and one was inducted into office. New officers of the church were installed. Dr. Scott used as his topic: "The Church and You." His sermon was inspiring and challenging. The pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, and the people of Liberty were honored to have Dr. Scott as their guest.

Piney Plains Church Host to the Eastern Carolina Conference

The Piney Plains Christian Church was host to the Eastern North Carolina Congregational Christian Conference on November 9, 1954. The congregation had just completed a quite extensive building program in time to entertain the Conference. Three classrooms were added to the church auditorium which was greatly enlarged, and parts of the auditorium can be cut off by movable partitions for church school purposes.

The church plant is just a little way from a hard-surfaced highway.

(Continued on page 7.)

The Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., Editor, The Christian Sun

Serving as pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Durham, North Carolina, for 35 years, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell ended his pastorate there on October 31, 1954. Under his long and faithful ministry, the Durham Church has grown to be one of our stronger churches of the Convention. During his ministry the church has doubled its membership, and more than $100,000.00 has been spent in plant improvement during the past six years. Dr. Harrell and our church in Durham are highly respected in that city.

A native of Eastern Virginia, near Suffolk, Virginia, Dr. Harrell, at an early age, united with the Liberty

REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, D. D.

Spring Christian Church. He graduated from Elon College and from Union Theological Seminary (Richmond). He holds the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Elon College. Dr. Harrell was a chaplain in the United States Army during the first World War.

At the recent session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, a citation was given to Dr. Harrell, which expresses the high esteem in which he is held by that Conference and the Convention at large. The citation, in part, reads as follows:

"In its long history few ministers of this Conference and of the Southern Convention have equalled or surpassed the leadership and devotion of Dr. Stanley C. Harrell. For 25 years he served this Conference as its efficient secretary, and later as its president. For many years he has served as chairman of the Conference Committee on the Ministry, and as such he has been an inspirer, example, counselor and friend of scores of young men preparing for the Christian ministry. (Two young men from the Durham Church are now preparing for the Christian ministry, one of whom was licensed at the 1954 Conference session by Dr. Harrell.)

"Dr. Harrell has served the Southern Convention faithfully through the years, as one of its able presidents, as the chairman of the important Finance Committee, as a member of the Executive Board, and as a member of the Board of Trustees of Elon College. In fact, there are few interests of our church where he has not served in various capacities, and with distinction to himself and honor to his Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

"Dr. Harrell has served our General Council as a member of its Executive Committee, and as an associate moderator. In interdenominational relationships he has been a useful leader. He served as one of the first presidents of the North Carolina Council of Churches. For two terms he was a Congregational Christian representative on the Federal Council of Churches, and for two years he served on the Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains.

"At the 1954 session of the Southern Convention it was a logical action of the Convention to name Dr. Harrell as the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Upon his retirement as pastor of the Durham Church, he is now devoting his energies to THE CHRISTIAN SUN as its editor. Under his capable, wise and devoted service, our church paper will serve our people with increasing effectiveness."

We believe that our whole Convention would wish to join with the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in expressing appreciation for Dr. Harrell's honored and faithful leadership; also, to extend our best wishes to him for continued good health and for much happiness and satisfaction in his new relationship as a servant of our churches as the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Let us add to our verbal and written appreciation by giving Dr. Harrell our prayers and assistance in his new responsibilities as our editor.

WM. T. SCOTT,
Superintendent.

Be a philosopher; but, amidst all your philosophy, be still a man.

—David Hume.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieleley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Laymen's Sunday Observed at Liberty, Vance

The men of the Liberty (Vance) Church went "all out" in observance of Laymen's Sunday on October 17. The entire service was planned and conducted by the men. Throughout the preceding week a number of meetings were held in preparation for this special service. More than fifty men participated. The pastor, organist, choir, ushers, even the women who decorate the church, were relieved of their duties for this day. The people of the church will long remember the special music of the morning furnished by the choir of 20 men. The men were in charge.

K. G. Weldon presided at the morning service. I. H. Vickery, a layman of Henderson, was the morning speaker. J. R. Collins, of the local church, served as organist. Twenty men of the church sang in the choir. Tollie Smith, Gill Eaves, and Bennet Ayseue decorated the church.

In addition to those who had part in the service a large number of men served as a publicity committee, whose duty it was to contact every man in the church. They had as their slogan: "Every man in the church present for Laymen's Sunday."

It was a great day!

* * * * *

"Genuine Stewardship"

PROGRAM FOR DECEMBER.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "The Church's One Foundation; "Work, for the Night Is Coming."

SUGGESTED SCRIPTURE: St. Luke, 12: 22-34.

PRAYER: Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee again for every blessing which Thou hast given us. Accept the commitment of our lives, all we now have, are or hope to be used solely in Thy Service. Amen.

MEDITATION: Genuine Stewardship.

Christian Stewardship to my way of thinking can be the salvation of mankind. In the New Testament, Christ made many references to stewardship in its various forms and I believe that the very foundation of Christian living is found in the kind of stewardship "Our Master" exemplified in his own life.

Stewardship is not just sharing some of our material possessions with the Lord but sharing with him our special talents and abilities as well. Too often many of us go to church on Sunday morning, put a few pennies into the offering plate and feel that we are doing something for God. Nothing could be further from the truth. God does not want just a part of us; he wants all of us. He wants us to use all of our special abilities and talents to further the work of the Kingdom here on earth. If we are salesmen, he wants us to go out and sell others on the value of the church. He wants us to go out and be fishers of men. He wants us to live Christian lives so that others may take strength from us and become better Christians. I feel that there is a staggering amount of talent available in all churches that is going to waste because men have failed to realize the very power and ability they have within their selves that for the moment is unused.

Getting men to realize that they have the potential and the ability within themselves to make the world we live in a peaceful one is not an easy task. I know that anything worth while does not come easy and never will. Therefore, I feel it is worth all of the time and energy that Christian leaders can put forth to get every Christian man to use all of his talent ability no matter how great (Continued on page 13.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieleley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. Honse; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harceastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Trnitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

THANKSGIVING

At Thanksgiving we look back upon the Pilgrim Fathers, virtuous, grim, and devout; and even as we think of our luxuries with gratitude, we feel that the heroic age is gone, that we are no better than our fathers. Many tend to deduce from this legitimate mood the idea that our own times are hopelessly corrupt and that the past was hopelessly heroic. Dr. Halford Luccock blames this, rightly, on "the haze of distance," and shows that Israel was not exempt from it.

"And there was no straggler in their ranks" (ASV). "Not a weary man among them" (Moffatt). "And there was none among his tribe who stumbled" (RSV). The text is Psalm 105, verse 37, as seen by our contemporary translators. The poet was obviously inspired by his vision of God's leadership, not by historical records.

See Exodus 14:10 and the verses following. At the Red Sea the people complained to Moses, "Is it because there are no graves in Egypt that you have taken us away to die in the wilderness?" Two months later, free in the wilderness and (let us hope) forgetting former miracles, they "murmured against" Moses and Aaron and said, "Would that we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the fleshpots . . ." Later, when they ran out of water, they said, just as if God had not given them manna, "Why did you bring us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?" A generation famed for its faith might well be remembered for its skepticism.

Now, this is not to suggest the Pilgrims said this sort of thing. It seems probable that they did not, although no doubt even the best of them thought of it sometimes. It is not to cast slurs at the people of Israel, who could not see their future as we do in our well-fed comfort. If the New England colonists had a stronger faith, it was precisely because they pondered the whole history of God's dealings with his people, and instead of indulging in invidious comparisons and pious envy, we would do well to follow their example.

If we do this, we might well begin by thinking over the fifth verse of Psalm 84: "Blessed are the men whose strength is in thee, in whose heart are the pathways to Zion" (RSV). For this season, we may choose Moffatt's reading: "Happy are they who, nerved by thee, set out on pilgrimage." Or McFadyen's: "Men of the pilgrim heart."

Dr. Luccock cites many men whom we honor as men of the pilgrim heart. We honor them all at this season; but at all times we honor Jesus, who knew that the pathway to Zion ended at Calvary, and that the mission of his followers began there. There must be no haze of distance when we look back at that scene.

And if we look back at that scene with no haze of distance, we see also that the vision of the psalmist is not at fault. We read the lament of Psalm 77, the fear that God's promises in history are abandoned, and when we read its conclusion—

"Thou didst lead thy people like a flock by the hand of Moses and Aaron"—

we remember our ever-present Shepherd.

M. A. H.

A Primary Motive for Giving

Christian people naturally think of the money they give to charitable and religious causes as a tangible expression of their love for God and their thanks to him for his blessings. This is especially true at this season of the year. Gratitude is a noble motive for giving to religious causes.

Other Christians give in response to the appeal of urgent need. They give only when their sympathy is aroused, and what they give is in proportion to the stirring of their emotions. Now sympathy is a Christian grace, and compassion is a great word in the New Testament vocabulary. When the earthly ministry of our Lord is recalled, his compassion can never be overlooked.

Those responsible for maintaining Christian organizations and institutions lean heavily upon the fact of need to prompt good people to give.

Some of us who attended the recent sessions of our Conferences could anticipate the appeals which would be made when certain causes were to be presented. Seldom were we either surprised or disappointed. Needs should help us in determining how much we will give, but not whether we will give or keep it all for ourselves.

The ministers of the Church of the Covenant, recently organized at Lynchburg, Virginia, told the members of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference what is required of the members of that church. A year of intensive training is required before one is eligible for membership. A member promises to read a selection from the Bible every day; to spend at least fifteen minutes in prayer every day; to attend a service of worship every Sunday; to set aside a certain amount of time to be devoted to specific Christian service each week; and to dedicate a fixed proportion of his income to the work of the church.

They did not state the reason for the last named requirement. It is placed on equality with the reading of the Bible and prayer. We can see no reason for such a grouping except that the giving of one's money is absolutely essential to spiritual growth and spiritual maturity. If that be true, a number of us must re-think our attitudes toward money and the giving of money to Christian causes.

Jesus certainly had a lot to say about money, how those who have it, and those who do not, should regard it. Much has been said about giving money that the work of the church may be adequately financed. Can it be that Jesus was thinking not about the treasury of the church being filled with money, but about the hearts of believers being filled with the grace of God?

It may indeed be that this matter of giving to the Church of Christ involves the very wellspring of one's own soul. One of the Proverbs says: "The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." There are issues involved here which every Christian should investigate.

landed, as at first they expected to be, in the territory of the Virginia Company, is not known. For some reason their course was deflected to New England, where the Pilgrims landed on December 21, 1620.

This mere handful turned fearlessly to the conquest of the wilderness, and in time paid off their English debt through trade in furs. They had defied the neighboring Indians, and then made friends with them. The Pilgrims, in their first Thanksgiving Day, revived the autumnal celebration of the fruitfulness of the earth. Elder Brewster announced in a Sunday Service of Worship that beginning the following Tuesday and continuing until Saturday, the colonists would enjoy a festival of thanksgiving similar to that which they had been accustomed to in northern England.

There was an interesting harvest ritual connected with the gathering of the last shock of corn. Artistically inclined maidens of the colony found the largest wicker basket in Plymouth and festooned it with ribbons of many shining colors. To the beating of a drum, the colonist then proceeded, column formation, to the corn field, singing a Psalm: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." Arriving at the field, Governor Bradford gave the word for each person to pick an ear of corn, one at a time, and place it in the basket. This done, the company marched from the field to the granary. By order of the governor they then knelt in a half-circle in front of the granary. Elder Brewster led the company in a prayer of gratitude. One by one, each man and woman present transferred an ear of corn from the festooned wicker basket to the granary. Priscilla Alden was chosen to carry the last ear of corn and lock the door. As she presented the key to Governor Bradford, the Pilgrims bowed their heads and sang: "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in, from this time forth and forever more."

While we reflect with gratitude upon the material prosperity which has been ours, we cannot wholly forget those who lack the material abundance usually associated with Thanksgiving. How will Thanksgiving fare in other lands? To what extent can we contribute to the experience of Thanksgiving in other lands? When there is famine in India, while malnutrition grows

(Continued on page 9.)

God's Cornucopia . . .

The cornucopia, usually referred to as the horn of Amalthaea or the horn of plenty, is an emblem of abundance, and therefore a fitting symbol of the Thanksgiving festival.

The cornucopia symbolizes the historic and continuing relationship of God with his people. Palestine is described in Deuteronomy 8:7-8 as "a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it." Historical data and archaeological finds furnish abundant evidence of a remarkable period of prosperity in Palestine which lasted for more than a thousand years before the decline began in the seventh century A. D. Two thousand years ago, Palestine, with its neighbors, Egypt and Syria, represented one of the most advanced economic areas of the Roman Empire. The olive, vine and fig have been described as Judaea's staff of life. They "not only sustained her inhabitants, but by their surplus supplied them with the means of exchange for foods in which their own land was lacking." Trans-Jordan grew considerable surplus wheat for export, and Palestine produced sufficient wheat and barley for local use. The fruit crop was abundant. The produce of the fields in good years seems to have been sufficient to enable the population to bear the heavy taxes imposed upon them by foreign rulers. The breeding of sheep and goats is known to have been a contributing factor to the economic independence of Palestine. W. C. Lowdermilk gives this descriptive paragraph: "The mountainous lands of Lebanon and Palestine, lying along the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, served as a highway between Mesopotamia and the Nile Valley. Their lofty hills condensed on their shoulders copious rain out of the moisture-laden storms that swept across the land from the Mediterranean in the winter. These rains supported forests which supplied timber to the empires of Mesopotamia and Egypt, and provided abundant ground waters that issued forth as perennial springs in the valleys." No wonder the Psalmist cried out, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein." Again, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want, . . . thou preparest a table, . . . my cup runneth over." There in the Old Testament and in Palestine we find the perfect picture of God's eternal cornucopia.

When we turn to the study of our own earliest national festival, Thanksgiving Day, members of the Congregational Christian Church should find it especially fascinating. That little group of English nonconformists, who had their own form of religious worship in the village of Scrooby; who, because of their religion had become objects of royal animosity; many of whom suffered imprisonment for conscience's sake and later stole away secretly to Holland; and at last decided to settle in America—these people are our spiritual forebears. It was in 1620 that these Pilgrims, having obtained a patent from the Virginia Company and borrowed money from English capitalists, assembled at old Plymouth. Thence the ship, Mayflower, bore them westward. Its passengers numbered 102. Why they were not

Giving Thanks

By REV. CARL R. KEY

The Pilgrim Fathers first held a Thanksgiving festival in 1620 after a good harvest. The New England Colonists have continued the practice ever since. Abraham Lincoln proclaimed the last Thursday in November as a day of national thanksgiving in 1864. Since that time the whole country has observed it with appropriate festivals and worship in families and churches.

Thanksgiving to the Lord God should not be taken lightly. Paul combatted this attitude in his day. Many forms of religion, especially among the Dionysians, regarded intoxication as a means of communion with the Divine. In our meditation we find that Paul offered something as an antidote for this practice, something high and holy, that any Christian would be proud to do. "And be not drunk with wine, where in is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Ephesians 5: 18-20.

We join Paul in this heart-felt desire, in the hope that greater reverence and respect may be shown toward God and much more gratitude expressed in adoration and praise for his manifold gifts and mercies. It is then our task to discover what Paul is saying to us in these few sentences. How should we give thanks?

I.

As a Christian people we ought to give thanks. We have plenty of precedent for it. Our spiritual fathers, the Hebrews, held each year the "festival of ingathering." It was one of their national holidays when the people made prayers of thanksgiving and offerings to God out of the deep gratitude of their hearts. It is an experience that all shared alike and out of it came the famous saying of the Psalmist: "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing praises unto his name." It was Paul's feeling that a person filled with the Divine Spirit would sing praises to God when he wished to give thanks for his loving kindness and abundant mercy. The Psalmist and Paul agreed here.

Since the beginning of Christianity it has been the custom of all believers to give thanks. The Pilgrim Fathers treasured this heritage in the life of the colonies. We should be grateful to them and to God that such a beautiful season has been preserved for us. Today, America is the only nation outside the scattered Jews, that celebrates a day of thanksgiving once a year.

At times the river of life flows swift and sweet. At others it leaps about from crevice to crag, and we, like pebbles, are being crushed in one degree or another. How hard it is to give thanks when things are difficult. Yet, "All things work together for good—evil days as well as good days. Nothing comes altogether amiss to the child of God. In the harvest loss, the severest pain, the sharpest sting of injury—'in everything,' the ingenuity of love and the sweetness of patience will find some token of mercy. If the evil is to our eyes all evil and we can see in it no reason for thanksgiving, then faith will give thanks for that which we 'know not now, but shall know hereafter.'"

REV. CARL R. KEY

Evil days are upon us now. The world has forsaken the way of love in setting its difference and turned to force as the way out. Those who follow such a path find themselves lost in the deep wilderness in a far-off dawn. There seems to be no way out of such misery and distress. We have a right to be thankful that we have avoided the holocaust so far. Then let us see to it that all future thanksgiving will not be marred by such dreaded destruction. God, help us to make this our national prayer.

II.

How often should we give thanks? The Apostle Paul would have us give thanks always. His letters to the churches are filled with admonitions and examples of thanksgiving. He praised God in the Philippian Jail. After four years of Roman imprisonment he writes the text of the day to the Ephesian church. Likewise he has reminded the Corinthian and Colossian churches of this great virtue in much the same manner.

It is good to be constant in our cultivation of giving thanks. Our churches provide regularly for thanksgiving through meditation, through hymns, through Scripture and through their prayers. Daniel found this practice so rewarding that he would not give it up even while in captivity and under penalty of death. In spite of the king's decree he continued his daily custom. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed, and gave thanks unto his God, as he did aforetime." What more could we expect from a loyal and devout soul like this one?

How many of us, like Daniel, could purpose in our hearts to give thanks each day for life, health, happiness and peace? Many of us have already determined to do this. By our "Thanks-With-Giving" this day we make it possible for others to share this spirit and this attitude with us. By so doing we join hands with a great host of Christians, past and present, who give thanks always.

III.

It is not enough to give thanks always. It is not enough to give thanks for only a few things. Paul would have us give thanks always for all things. That goes deeper yet. The deeper it goes the more difficult it gets. He, no doubt, would include as much as one of our Litanies of Praise contains. We praise God, in it, for the day, the earth, the sky, our food, our shelter, our fathers and mothers, the gift of children, good friends, for joy, for mirth and for health. Christosom would thank God for disease, poverty and even hell. The one sweetens life. The other disciplines it. Only the negligent or ungodly would forget such an important act of de-

(Continued on page 13.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Conferences Vote Approval of Campaign

All the conferences constituting the Southern Convention have had their usual annual sessions. At these annual meetings of our people, we endeavor to take a look at what we as a church have accomplished during the past year. Also, we would take a look into the future and see what there is that should be done and what we as a church should undertake to do. We have speeches and exhortations and resolutions. We are a little long on resolutions. Some of these resolutions are passed unanimously and are unanimously forgotten. Others are forgotten and there continues to exist a difference of opinion regardless of the seriousness or the necessity of the matter under consideration.

The writer sincerely trusts that there is one resolution passed by all of our conferences, with the exception of the Valley of Virginia Conference to which the resolution was not offered, that will not be forgotten. This resolution in question has to do with a united effort upon the part of our people to secure necessary funds for the proposed new buildings on the campus of our college, Elon College. The resolution calls for definite action upon the part of Convention, conference, and college officials. It will take a definite and united action to implement this resolution. In the resolution we commit ourselves to certain undertakings in behalf of the college.

That the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN may have the opportunity of reading and considering the resolution that seemed to be of sufficient importance to be brought to the attention of the entire church through the several conferences of the convention, it is herewith published in full as requested. In the interest of clarity of thought, universal understanding and united action, officials designated have certain definite instructions and should assume these responsibilities and take steps toward the discharge of the responsibilities assumed for us all.

The Resolution

Whereas the Southern Convention has previously authorized the raising of the Two and One-Half Million Dollar Fund for Elon College, and

Whereas the task of raising this fund has not been completed, and

Whereas the ministers of the Southern Convention at a meeting in Henderson, North Carolina, on January 5, 1954, approved the campaign and voted unanimously to undertake to raise in the churches of the Southern Convention the sum of $300,000—$150,000 from the churches in Virginia as part payment on Virginia Hall, a dormitory for girls, and $150,000 from the churches in North Carolina as part payment on Carolina Hall, a dormitory for boys, therefore,

Be it resolved, that the North Carolina and Virginia Conference accept the recommendation of our ministers and authorize the Executive Committee of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, in cooperation with the Superintendent of the Southern Convention and officials of the college, to proceed with plans and a campaign to secure its pro-rata share of the $150,000 for Carolina Hall, a dormitory for boys.

* * *

This resolution was submitted to and was approved by all the conferences in the Southern Convention with the exception of the Valley of Virginia Conference.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The last annual session of the conferences of the Southern Convention has been held. There seems to be a difference in the accounting of receipts in the Southern Convention Office and in the college office. The Southern Convention office endeavors to keep contributions according to conferences, their beginning and closing dates. Since these conferences all meet and close on different dates, more careful accounting is required to keep funds accurately. The college has, for a number of years, endeavored to record contributions from local churches by calendar dates. That is, the new year at the college begins January 1 and closes December 31. Contributions for the college from the Sunday schools and churches of the convention, according to the college's records are running nearly even with the contributions of last year. Last year on November 20 we reported to THE CHRISTIAN SUN that $12,455.95 had been received from the churches and Sunday schools of the convention. This year, as of this date we have received $12,216.37 or a total of $238.58 less than that received of last year. There are a number of churches, of course, that have not paid their apportionments in full. It may be that some of these have a generous idea and will make additional contributions on the conference year that is closing. Elon College wishes to express grateful appreciation of the generous support given the college by the Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention. The college feels under renewed obligation and pledges faithful efforts to serve the church during the ensuing year.

Previously reported $11,489.86

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Wake Chapel $111.24

Eastern Va. Conference:
Newport News S. S. ...$ 27.85
Oakland 32.17

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Berea$ 42.00
Bethel S. S. 5.00
Bethlehem 30.00
Concord 5.00
Elon College 327.00
Gibsonville 61.00
Long's Chapel 31.00
Salem Chapel 10.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Antioch (R)$ 8.00
Providence Chapel 3.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Mt. Olivet (G) S. S. ...$ 8.25

726.51

Total to date $12,216.37

PINEY PLAINS HOST TO E. N. C. CONFERENCE.

(Continued from page 2.)

It makes a very striking picture as seen from the highway. It is near enough to be readily accessible to the road and far enough away that traffic noises do not disturb. Everything about the church reflects credit upon the congregation that worships there.

The Piney Plains people matched the beauty of their building with a heart warming hospitality. Those of us who were privileged to attend the Conference session are deeply indebted to those who entertained the Conference. THE CHRISTIAN SUN awaits the report of the Publicity Committee.

S. C. H.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Response to Articles About Bible Study

I have discovered that people do read the Woman's Page in THE SUN! Several have spoken to me concerning the articles on Bible Study published a few weeks ago on this page, and several have written to me. Following are some of the ideas which have been expressed:

Effective Bible Study Plus Devotionals.

My personal reaction to the article was that Mrs. Jackson was saying that not enough time and thought were being given to Bible study, and that the Bible study book should be used only during a special period set aside for it. In other words, it was my impression that Mrs. Jackson was advocating more serious study. However, I feared that some would not get the idea she was trying to convey.

And now, even though I am three hundred miles away, reverberations are coming in. Quotations are to the effect that the study of the Bible is being abandoned by our women's groups.

It will help to clarify the situation, I think, if we understand that Dorothy Jackson was urging more effective Bible study in addition to the devotionals at all the meetings.

* * *

Thoughts on Bible Study.

Most of us, I suppose, will agree that Bible study in our society meetings is not done as thoroughly as it should be. But I must ask, what about our methods of doing the other 14 things that make us "Superior"?

It seems that the sales, suppers and money-raising projects are ever with us. At times we must put them first. We are indeed busy! Where is the woman who attended our three special days in 1954? Do we even know the names of the magazines we are supposed to promote? How many of us look between the pages of our Study Books? We at least carry our Bibles to circle meetings when we attempt to study the Bible.

As I have observed the women of the Asheboro church, I sincerely believe that they enjoy Bible study as much as any of the material we receive in our packets. I am all for dropping something, but, please, not Bible study.

MRS. ROY MOORE, President,
Asheboro Society.

* * *

A Member of a Rural Society Writes.

Mrs. Jackson says we should not use the Bible study as a part of our regular meeting. She has a shade of a point there. It certainly isn't the ideal way to study the Bible. But

=====

A Woman's Prayer of Thanksgiving

I thank thee, God,

For children three, who mean so much to me;

For husband dear, who helps me them to rear;

For an old car, in which to travel afar;

For a good home, to which we like to come;

For church that's small, to which we bring our all;

For faith in Thee, whom one day we hope to see;

Father in heaven, I thank thee.

Amen.

=====

what do you do if that's the only way it can be managed?

I do not mean just to count the points to report on. I consider the society and what it means to its members and the church community of much more importance than is any number of "points" to go on the annual reports. A society can do some extremely fine work in the community and still barely get by as an active group on reports. Reports of any group—be it woman's missionary society, Sunday school, or pastor's report—can never tell anywhere near the whole story.

But back to the Bible study idea. Do we abandon all Bible study because we can't get together for special studies? Do we say it isn't any use at all if we can't do it ideally with a well-educated person to conduct such studies? What if many of the group work at various hours in mills? What if many are elderly and can't get out much at night? What if many are young, with young children, and can't leave home in daytime while the husband is working? What if only a few of the group can drive? What if all are widely scattered? Do you abandon Bible study or do you abandon the society? There are small societies where all of these conditions exist.

Should we abandon Bible study for Sunday schools because many schools have only half an hour for study and with poorly educated people to teach? I don't think so and I also think that if the societies can arrange for a qualified teacher to teach a series of Bible studies for the society or the church as a whole, then they should do so. Our aim should be to do our best. But if our best is the 20-30-minute Bible study period along with our regular meetings, then that is what we should continue to do until conditions are such that we can do better.

* * *

A Minister Expresses His Views.

One minister has given this as his opinion: The Sunday school exists primarily for Bible study. In our area most of our adults attend Sunday school. The church service provides a place for the worship of God and interpretation of the Bible by the minister, who translates its ideas into everyday living. The missionary society is the one place where women of our churches are supposed to find out something about the missionary enterprise of our denomination, and of the world church.

When a group devotes thirty minutes to Bible study, a similar time to business, and has a little social activity, there seems to be no time left for mission study. Therefore, it would seem that the rural society, having one meeting a month, should specialize in programs having to do with the needs of our country and other countries and our concern for them in response to Christ's Great Commission, "Go ye . . ." Prayer and Bible reading will be a part of the meeting, as they are a part of the worship in the Sunday school, but the major emphasis should be on missions. Bible study should be done through the Sunday school, the church service, and (where possible) in a special series of meetings for that special purpose.

* * * * *

Society Organized at Bayside in Norfolk

The Bayside Women's Fellowship was organized in October. The first meeting was well attended, and the following officers were elected for the coming year:

Mrs. David Smith, Sr., president; Mrs. E. F. Caldwell, vice-president; Mrs. Paul Crawford, secretary, and Mrs. G. R. Callender, treasurer.

The Fellowship is taking an active part in the plans of the new church, and the outlook seems most promising.

We welcome this new organization.

* * * * *

Thank Offering at Rosemont

On Sunday evening the combined Women's Missionary Society of Rosemont held their annual Thank Offering for Center Church in South Boston, Virginia. Mrs. Melvin Dollar opened with a call to worship. A hymn "The Church of God is Established" was sung. Scripture, II Corinthians 9:6-11 was given by Mrs. A. H. Maynard. Talk: "Relating Our Project, Our Theme and Ourselves" by Mrs. C. A. Delong. Poem: "I Love the Nation's Churches" by Mrs. H. Fisher. Talk: "The Urgent Need for New Churches" by Mrs. H. R. Morrison, Sr. Duet by Mrs. H. Gilbert and Mrs. R. Gallup. Talk: "Our Center Church in South Boston" by Mrs. W. R. Skelly, Jr. Hymn, offering, and benediction.

Mrs. Cy DeLong,
Reporter.

GOD'S CORNUCOPIA.

(Continued from page 5.)

worse in China, while children are hungry in every country in Europe, we, Christian Americans, go blithely on with our industries, many of which are "super," but unessential. Some American Christians will keep a clear conscience and will mingle "thanks-with-giving." The price of a turkey dinner may be given to the Committee on War Victims and Services. Incidentally (or is it?) turkey was used by the Pilgrims because it was the cheapest meat which could be obtained, costing no more than the shot and powder required to bring it off the wing.

There is much that we can learn from the example of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is our custom on Thanksgiving Day to list the blessings where-with we were favored during the past year. The enumeration of these gifts, of course, is meant to serve a good purpose. It is intended to stimulate within us a spirit of thankfulness. But just as often it does the opposite,

In the years of our prosperity it tends to breed a self-complacency and even a greediness in our hearts. But in the early days the emphasis was not upon the GIFTS but upon the GIVER of those gifts.

Countless thousands of people have visited Plymouth Rock and read these words inscribed on the Bradford obelisk which stands in the graveyard of the Church of the Pilgrimage: "Under this stone rest the ashes of William Bradford, a zealous puritan and sincere Christian governor of Plymouth Colony from April 1621 to 1657. Qua patres difficillime adepti sunt nolite turpiter relinquere." The last words—"What our fathers with so much difficulty secured, do not basely relinquish"—have double significance for us today (in 1944, and possibly a still greater one in 1954—M.E.). First, we owe an immeasurable debt to the past. We stand in the line of a great tradition. While democracy did not have its inception here, it did receive a new setting on an advanced basis by these crusaders for God, the full fruition of which yet remains to be seen. Second, the same vision and tenacity will extend that heritage, plus contemporary gains, into the future. Dr. Fosdick insists in his latest book that this is "A Great Time to be Alive." He says: "What makes an era seem great or small is the man's own eyes, his capacity of insight and vision. Put some people in a great generation and they will only cry, 'Who will show us any good?' But from Moses in the desert at the burning bush, seeing in an enslaved Israel in Egypt the hope of the future, to our own founding fathers, seeing in the thirteen disunited colonies the possibility of a great venture in free living, men with eyes to see possibilities in times of travail and change have created the most hopeful advance in man's history. That is what we need to pray for now—eyes to see—for if we have this will be for us a great time for great living."

As Marshall Jan Smuts has so eloquently put it: "Mankind has struck its tents and is on the march in a vast unending trek of pioneers into a new civilization of which only the distant outlines lie before us, indistinct, but shining, far away." The modern Pilgrims have it within their power to begin the world over again and bring to realization the ancient hope of an enduring world peace.

With Rupert Brooke, the soldier-poet, who gave his life on the way to the Dardanelles, let us cry: "God be praised, who hath matched us with this hour!"—Editorial by the late Robert Lee House, from the issue of November 23, 1944.

"This Nation Under God"

"If this nation is not brought more fully under God, its own future will be in peril and the peace of the world jeopardized," Bishop William C. Martin, president of the National Council of Churches, declared in a statement addressed to the more than 2,000 church leaders who will attend the Council's Third General Assembly which convenes for a week in Boston, Mass., beginning November 28.

"According to the world's measure of power, our country has only recently emerged as the most powerful nation in history," Bishop Martin said. "It confronts unprecedented opportunities and at the same time moral hazards. Real power must be morally responsible. The significance of the role of 'This Nation Under God' cannot be overestimated.... So our responsibility—the responsibility of our churches is great. But it need not be overwhelming, because God's power is available to us if we are obedient and faithful. By his power, and by his power alone, we may be enabled."

Bishop Martin pointed out that the delegates of the 30 member communions of the National Council represent "the major aggregation of religious forces in this country, and as such have the heaviest responsibility for its spiritual welfare."

Delegates will concern themselves with a review of the progress and new plans for the four-year-old cooperative agency whose programs range from the resettlement of Iron Curtain refugees to teaching U. S. migrant workers how to read.

Thank God for America!

When I review the story of our country's beginnings, the framing of the Constitution, and the sturdy advocacy of civil and religious liberty by such gallant leaders as Jefferson, Madison, Roger Williams and others, I am deeply stirred and profoundly grateful.

In this trouble hour, with so many of the nations of the world having lost the boon of civil and religious liberty, who among us is not moved to exclaim, "Thank God for America!"—Edgar Dewitt Jones.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Our minister was telling us as we prepared for Thanksgiving services that our gifts of dollars would aid hungry boys and girls abroad—one of our dollars will do the work of twenty. Think of it! A note from Mrs. Ralph Galt tells about $16 given for milk to be served hungry youngsters abroad. The boys and girls of Bethlehem and Concord Churches (Valley) meeting together in Bible School brought their gifts of money to help through Church World Service. We think this is a wonderful Thanksgiving message to all—for we in America have the plus of our world. We have food, clothes, parents, TV, movies, radios, refrigerators, bathtubs, toys, schools, teachers, churches and ministers. We will sit to overflowing tables today and play with many wonderful gadgets and toys after dinner. Be thankful and share as the Pilgrim Fathers shared with their Indian neighbors. I can imagine that some of the boys and girls, especially the girls, felt the chills creeping up their little spines as they saw the tawny savages approach their tables. What do you think?

* * *

Thank you for the many kind responses to two of my letters recently—the one about Hurricane Hazel and then about the Queen Mother. There was an error in the last part of that account. It said “Life was full of movements”—it should have read “Life is full of moments.” There were some other errors too, mostly grammatical, and we would like to think they were made by the typesetter and not by the writer! And we know full well how busy and rushed the typesetter and proofreader are. One of these days we will retell the busy time it takes to bring you THE SUN each week. It is always good to hear from readers (even if they disagree) for we know someone reads one’s work. The Editor wrote to the big folk about that not long ago. He writes and the others write, and then we all wonder: “Who reads it?” “Do they care?” “Has it helped?”

* * *

Sunday begins another Advent Season. Please remember it in some special way in your home—with a prayer and song, four candles to light—one a Sunday—until all four stand brightly burning, or a quiet time to think of the season that tells us of the Precious Babe born in Bethlehem.

A peaceful Thanksgiving Day to you and your parents and a wish that you may have no tummy aches but joy and thanksgiving.

* * * * *

Are All “Comics” Comical?

By MABLE-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

“I don’t remember seeing all these ‘comic books,’ as they call them, when you were growing up, Richard.”

Hymn of Thanksgiving

Great God of Nations, now to Thee
Our hymn of Thanksgiving we raise;
With humble heart and bended knee
We offer Thee our song of praise.

Thy name we bless, Almighty God,
For all the kindness Thou hast shown
To this fair land the Pilgrims trod—
This land we fondly call our own.

We praise Thee that the Gospel’s light
Thru all our land its radiance sends
Dispelling shades of error’s night,
And heavenly blessings round us spreads.

Great God, preserve us in Thy fear;
In danger, still our Guardian be;
Spread Thy truth’s bright precepts here;
Let all the people worship Thee.

—Anonymous.

Mrs. Hardin, a trim, brown-haired woman, was visiting her married son and his wife, Virginia. “What do you think of them, Virginia?” she asked.

“Well, I don’t know,” her daughter-in-law returned vaguely. “I just know all the boys and girls are crazy about them. It seems as though almost any time I go into a drugstore, several youngsters are sitting on the floor by the magazine racks, reading them.”

Mrs. Hardin turned to her son. “What do you think about them, Richard?”

Richard grinned at his mother. “What are you getting at now, Mom?

Some bee in your bonnet, I know. Well, two or three times I’ve picked one up and read through two or three pages, but they bored me. For the life of me, I don’t understand what’s so fascinating about them to the youngsters.”

“Perhaps you would if you really set yourself to find out,” observed his mother. “Richard, I don’t know that I ever told you, but when I was growing up I was rather a lonely child and I read a good deal of the time. I read everything readable that I could get hold of—some of it was good, some was trash. No one paid any attention to what I was reading; all they said was that I always had my nose in a book or that I would ruin my eyes. So, when I had you, Richard, I made up my mind to get you into the habit of reading good literature only, if I could, hoping that then the other kind wouldn’t appeal to you. While you were little I picked out all your books—the ones we bought for you and the ones from the library. Of course, when you were older your choice of the subject was considered. One Christmas, I remember, you were given a couple of boys’ books—books that were written just to sell. You glanced through them but didn’t read them, and I heard you say to one of your friends that they weren’t worth reading. That was a proud moment for me.”

“And now, I take it,” said her son, smiling at her affectionately, “you’re leading up to suggesting that I pursue the same method with Richie in regard to the comics.”

“Richard and Virginia,” his mother was not smiling as she answered, “I ask you to take this seriously. I’ve just recently read two articles on the comics, describing some of the dangerous stuff that’s in many of them. You wouldn’t let Richie eat infected food. Then don’t let him read these poisonous things. One article I read was by a famous woman columnist. She said many of the comics depict ‘violence, crime and sexuality in the lewdest, most brutal form.’ Those are her exact words. They’re evilly exciting, and she said that, almost without exception, they are the principal reading matter of juvenile delinquents.”

Richard was not smiling now, any more than his mother, and Virginia looked deeply concerned. “I didn’t dream there was anything like that in them,” she said. “I thought they were just funny—like Mutt and Jeff used to be when I was little.”

(Continued on page 15.)

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

"Tips from Tom"

The postcard request for news from the Youth Groups is doing fair. We have received several replies. More cards are going out the first of each week. As you receive your card or as you have news, will you please reply promptly?

* * *

The "Trick or Treat" idea for Clothing to Korea, conducted by the Rosemont Youth, is a very excellent Christian project. If more youth groups would take heed, this could replace delinquent mischief now going on.

* * *

From the Western North Carolina Youth Rally Program: "The more friends you have, the richer you are. Why not be wealthy?"

* * *

Philosophical Note: "Men may take the atom apart, but it takes God to keep it together."

* * * * *

"Trick or Treat"

The young people of the Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk, Virginia, had a "Trick or Treat for Korea" program on Halloween. Instead of asking for treats for themselves, they collected warm clothing for the people of Korea. After they had made their rounds, they returned to the church, on Saturday night, October 3, and had a party and packed the clothing they had received. In this drive, the young people were led by Mrs. Larry Milteer and Mrs. Elsie Hewitt. It is a pleasure to report that the drive was very successful.

MRS. CY DELONG.

* * * * *

Western Carolina Youth Meet

The Asheboro Congregational Christian Church was the meeting place of about 250 young people registering for the afternoon session of the Western North Carolina Youth Rally.

The program began with a worship service, the Union Grove Youth in charge. Tony Smith, president of the Asheboro Pilgrim Fellowship, gave a welcome to the church. Those present were divided into four interest sections. These discussion groups were led by several adults: Problems, by Rev. S. E. Madren; Leadership by Mrs. F. C. Lester; Projects by Rev. Winfred Bray. Rev. Bill Simmons led the Program group. At 4:30 these several groups came together and gave reports on their discussions.

The afternoon program was concluded with a Questionnaire Period, led by Rev. F. C. Lester followed by the Rally business session.

The group shared together in supper, which was served in the social room of the church.

The attendance trophy, given at each rally, was won by the Liberty Young People.

The Asheboro Youth Group led the worship which opened the evening session. A movie, "The Beginning of the Rainbow," was the highlight of the evening session. Following this the group gathered to sing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds"; and the rally was adjourned with the benediction.

* * * * *

Elon College Youth Report

We of the Elon College Community Church Pilgrim Fellowship have Mrs. N. R. Franks as our leader, and the following officers: Kay Hughes, president; Tommie Boland, vice-president; and Jean Loy, secretary and treasurer.

We plan to rearrange our system of programs into the three commissions: Faith, Action and Fellowship. We will have one over-all program chairman and a chairman of each of the commissions. These chairmen will appoint different members of our group to conduct the programs. We hope in this way to get the members more interested and make our programs more inspiring.

Our group is hoping to have another successful "Work Day for Christ" this year. Last year we had a bake sale and made $27. We have no definite plans as to what type of work we will do this time, but it has been suggested that we follow the general plan set up by the National Council and that each member do some type of work on this day, and set aside the money they make to go to help others.

We hope, with the assistance of our new minister, Rev. Mr. Andes, and our leader, Mrs. Franks, that we can have a very eventful and inspiring year.

JERRY FUQUA,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Church, a Vital Influence in Lives, Youths Say

The great majority of young people who have participated at one time or another in church activities are convinced the church has been a vital influence in shaping their lives.

In general, too, they think the church has been effective in doing its traditional jobs such as teaching Bible content and church history—but could improve in newer areas such as the development of Christian attitudes on social issues, counseling on problems of marriage and dating and in helping with vocational decisions.

These are the results of a poll by the National Council of Churches of 1,300 young people in 188 local churches from coast to coast. The survey was conducted over the past several years by the Department of Research and Survey in cooperation with the Division of Christian Education.

Half of the persons interviewed were no longer considered active in church work—but of these, seventy-two out of every hundred affirmed the church's influence in their lives. Of the half still active ninety-three out of every one hundred said the church was important to them.

The young people were also asked what activities had provided "rich and lasting experiences." Only one-third of the total group reported activity in a fellowship group. The church school was mentioned by 21. One out of five mentioned Sunday church worship, and only two out of every one hundred said they found lasting value in the communicant's class—the special class giving preparation for church membership, usually conducted by the minister. On the other hand, of the two percent who had participated in interdenominational programs, all reported that they had found rich rewards for their time and effort.

A high percentage indicated it had been their adult leaders and teachers who had interested them in the church. The importance of this influence was mentioned by 81 percent

(Continued on page 15.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

A Cry Out of the Depths

LESSON X—DECEMBER 5, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Thou Lord, art good, and ready to forgive, and abundant in lovingkindness unto all that call upon thee." Psalm 86: 5.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Psalms 86 and 150.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 51:1-13.

A Man at the End of His Rope.

"Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Jehovah; hear my voice." This man was about down and out. He was down "in the depths." He may have been sick of body, which is bad. He may have been sick of soul, which is worse. In either case, he was in trouble, and he felt that he had struck bottom. He was at the end of his rope—he was facing discouragement, despair, perhaps even death. Then he turned to God and called upon God for help. Out of the depths he calls for God's help. Perhaps he was like so many men—he did not pray except in some great emergency or crisis. It is just too bad that men make a convenience of God. When things are going well, they give little heed to God, but when they "get in a fix" or have trouble, they call on him for help. To be sure it is better to call on him in a time like that than never to call upon him at all. But to say the least, it is poor sportsmanship. If God weren't so good and so gracious, he would let us stew in our own juices, when we treat him like that. We ought to bless God in times of sunshine, as well as to bombard him in times of shadow.

All in the Same Boat.

"If thou, O Jehovah, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who could stand?" Who, indeed? Even the best of us? Who is there of us who has not sinned and come short of the glory of God. There is none righteous, no not one. If any man says that he is not a sinner, he does not tell the truth. There is none who can stand before God in his own goodness. If God shouldest mark iniquities, none of us could stand before him. Get this straight—every man needs forgiveness for his sins.

Forgiveness.

"But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." What can a man do about his sin? He cannot forget it, cover it up, get away from it, cleanse himself of it, ignore it. The only thing that he can ultimately do with it is to confess it, forsake it, and seek forgiveness for it. And the glorious gospel, or good news is, that "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Yes sir, that is the assurance which God himself gives us in his Word.

But something needs to be said about forgiveness. It is no easy thing. It does not ignore sin. It does not condone sin. It does not do away with the penalty and punishment of sin. But it does restore the broken relationship that is caused by sin. Sin estranges men from God, breaks the bond of fellowship with God. But when a man sincerely seeks forgiveness for his sins, God forgives him of his sin and restores him to fellowship again. God takes the sin upon himself. Christ on the Cross revealed what it costs God to forgive sin.

There are people who are suffering from all kinds of mental and emotional ills who need more than anything else a sense of God's gracious forgiveness. To know that one has been forgiven, to know that the burden of guilt has been taken away, to know that the breach has been healed, to know that one has been taken back into the loving fellowship of God—this indeed is healing for the mind and soul. This can give a peace of mind that the world cannot give or take away. God forgives sins—this is the good news, this is the gospel. Men cannot go so far from the Father's house, or stay away so long, or behave so badly, that these things will cause him to close the door against them, or refuse them forgiveness, if they sincerely and earnestly seek forgiveness and meet the divine conditions of it.

Mercy, Not Justice.

"Be merciful unto me, O Lord." The story is told of an elderly Negro who was in court for some minor infraction of the law. He kept breaking into the proceedings. The judge finally said, "You will have to keep quiet, or I will have to fine you for contempt of court. I will see to it that you get justice." "Law's a merey, Jedge," said the Negro, "I don't want justice, I wants merey." Is there one who reads these "Notes" who wants mere justice? To be sure we want justice, but we want more than justice; we want merey. And God does not deal with us according to our iniquities, nor reward us according to our transgressions. "God be merciful to me a sinner," is the cry of every sensible, sincere man.

The Goodness of God.

"For thou are good, and ready to forgive, and abundant in lovingkindness to all them that call upon Thee." The goodness of God—some doubt it, and scoff at it. And there are many things in life that raise questions about it. Or granting his goodness, questions of his power arise in their wake. But the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind, as the hymn-writer puts it. God is good. He is perfect goodness. The evil that is in the world is not of his making, nor is it his will. One suspects that a man can assert the goodness of God only by an act of faith. But let a man believe this, the goodness of God, and he has a touchstone for all of life's problems. When and where he cannot understand, he can trust. Whittier's poem, "The Eternal Goodness," puts the goodness of God in language of beauty and power. It is a classic expression of faith in the goodness of God. Our God is not only great, he is good; and he is not only good, he is great.

The School of Life.

"Teach me thy way, O Jehovah, I will walk in thy truth. Unite my heart to fear thy name." One reason why we do not know more is because we do not want to know more. We are not hungry for righteousness. We do not want to be taught. We are not eager to learn. But if any man will do, he shall know. When one is willing to walk in the light of the truth he has, he will always have more light. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge. Would you know more about God? Would you walk in his ways? Ask him to teach you. Listen to his voice. Walk in the light of what you already know. Obey the truth you do understand. For he that does the truth, comes to the light.

(Continued on page 15.)

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

or how small to the end. That by doing this the Kingdom of God will truly inhabit the earth. How can this be accomplished? I feel that if one man in every Christian church would dedicate himself to the task of developing and training two men in Christian Stewardship and having those two men train two others we would have, in a short space of time, churches composed of men who would truly be stewards. The program would take time and effort but with God's help it could be done.

I mentioned earlier that the giving or sharing of our material possessions with God is also a part of Christian Stewardship. It is difficult to believe that there are thousands of Christians who really believe they are giving the Lord his rightful share when in truth they are only tipping him. When we pray "Our Father who art in Heaven" we must really mean it. I believe that God owns all and like a captain of a ship, who must report to the owners, we as captains of God's ship must report directly to God. The world today has become too materialistic for its own good. Too many people put all of their faith in their ability to make money and acquire property. These individuals will learn one day the hard lesson that learning how to live as Christians and learning how to share with others is more important than placing their faith in acquiring wealth and possessions. Christ pointed this fallacy out in his story of "The Rich Fool."

I believe that Christian giving is an educational process. Some people learn almost at once its importance to themselves and to the church. There are others who learn the principle over a period of a few years and some who never do. I feel that dedicated Christian leaders and teachers can accomplish a great deal in the business of teaching others to give by setting an example to others. If we have the will and the enthusiasm to see the job through, it can be done. I am an idealist in the sense that I feel someday all Christian men will learn to give proportionately to God of their time, talents and possessions. What a wonderful day it will be when all men become stewards of God. It will mean an end to war and the beginning of an era of peace. The road ahead is steep and rocky. There are many detours along the way. It will take courage, determination and fortitude to accomplish our objective but with God's help it can be and must be done. This I Believe.

Questions for Discussion.

1. Why is stewardship most generally thought of only in terms of money?
2. What is real Christian stewardship?
3. How is the Old Testament Tithe related to stewardship?
4. When can a good steward feel that he has given sufficiently?
5. What can be done to improve general stewardship of laymen?

Special Note.

Edward J. Sickles, Jr., of Park Ridge, New Jersey, was the author of this meditation. Mr. Sickles, Chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship for the Middle Atlantic Conference which includes New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Washington, D. C., is a Marketing Assistant for the Socony Vacuum Company in Newark, New Jersey.

GIVING THANKS.

(Continued from page 6.)

votion to God and appreciation to our fellowmen.

Too few of us are like the one leper who returned to Jesus to express his gratitude for having been healed of a dread disease. "And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, and fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?" How many of us have been ungrateful by mere neglect and lack of devotion?

"So thoughtless and thankless men can be, and no one knows this human weakness of ours better than does our Heavenly Father. We accept his gifts but forget to thank him! Only one of the lepers retraced his steps to thank Jesus for his healing. Shakespeare was right when he said: 'How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child.'"

IV.

Out of the depths of this great soul of Paul this expression of gratitude has risen. The sweep of his imagination and the power of his spirit pulls the curtains of heaven back and we are in the presence of the Almighty. Amid the splendor of it all we hear him say: "Give thanks always for all things unto God and the Father." In his presence this day we stand, trying in our feeble way, to give humble and hearty thanks for the many mercies that have been ours during the year. At this time we are not asking God for something. It is our high privilege to praise him. "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his lovingkindness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men! For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." "O give thanks unto the Lord for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

Henry Word Beecher expresses the same spirit in a most pertinent way. "If one should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes, and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and how it would draw to itself the almost invisible particles by the mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find, in every hour, some heavenly blessings, only the iron in God's sand is gold!"

V.

We should "give thanks unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Paul was speaking out of experience when he uttered these potent words. The Roman Christians had suffered all types and kinds of abuse, persecution and death for their faith. It was their perseverance which provoked thanksgiving in the heart of their spiritual father. "I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world."

Again, Paul advises the Colossian Christian to use the same method of thanksgiving. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."

"Drink to your fill of the Spirit; and when you want to sing, sing praises unto God."

For the beauty of the earth,
For the glory of the skies,
For the love which from our birth
Over and around us lies;
Lord of all, to thee we raise
This our hymn of grateful praise.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you one and all for the good report this week. Breathe a prayer that we may have a spirit of charity and goodwill throughout our Southern Convention for the outstanding need at your Orphanage. Our heavenly Father can touch resources we know not of, if we humbly and faithfully look to him in prayer and are willing to obey his direction in our efforts. If we do this, this home for the homeless will not suffer.

Many kind friends who have been patient with us during the summer and fall months are now rightly looking to us for payment of their past-due bills. Your liberal gifts, in compassion given, will help us at this time to do just that.

This week I had an interesting report from our Durham Church. Coy Franklin, one of the "boys" of the Christian Orphanage was asked by that church to tell them about the orphanage. This he did, and he did it well. He could do so because he was greatly served, he and the other helpless children of his widowed mother. He and they found the orphanage a real home. He and they loved the orphanage as a home and responded to its training and care. He went out into the world to make good, and he did. He has a lovely home in Durham, a lovely family and a good job. As a hobby, he raises flowers and he won several prizes at the recent North Carolina State Fair. He and his wife are Sunday school teachers.

Coy Franklin was elected president of the Orphanage Homecoming Society at its annual meeting this fall. He is compiling a list of alumni in Durham and elsewhere and bringing the records of the alumni to light. He tells me that the orphanage did so much for him and his folks that he wants, in turn, to do much for the orphanage. He is proud of what he is learning about those who have lived here.

Coy himself made a most excellent record in World War II. His love for birdhunting and his ability to train bird dogs was used in the American forces for training combat dogs for duty in strategic places at the battle front. Did you know that 56,000 dogs were loaned to the government by boys and girls and their parents across the country for such service? More than 27,000 of these dogs did service at the front in the dark and in the light, and helped greatly to hasten the end of the war. Coy Franklin has a thrilling story to tell about his part in that performance. He has the government documents to substantiate the record. He is only one of the many "boys" and "girls" from the church's child-rearing institution who have made inspiring records and who are living good lives in their communities. I can safely say that money contributed to the orphanage of your own church is a very worthwhile investment in life. Besides its charitable aspect, it starts a chain of blessings which only eternity can fully realize.

For instance, a lively new church now stands atop a ridge overlooking Burlington primarily because Louise Duke lived at the orphanage. A corps of Sunday school teachers appear every Sunday before their various classes, a minister every Sunday preaches the Word of God, and men and women every week put their hands to active tasks in the Lakeview Church—Congregational Christian—because this lovely girl grew to be a homemaker and mother in a pretty home that is now next door to the two-acre lot on which this church stands.

Why cannot we make our orphanage so right and good that many of the young people we are rearing there may give their lives in active service to the church? We can. We will. We do. There is one high school boy already avowedly headed toward the Christian ministry. Others in the grace of God will follow. We need to give him help and encouragement so that others will follow, and in order that his own career may become outstanding. Every church within the Southern Convention should rally to the needs of the Christian Orphanage now.

Thank you for reading this simple letter, and thank you most humbly for the part that you will play in helping us to do what we should do for the children in our care.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER 18, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Bananas:
Pate-Dawson Co., Burlington, N. C.
Coupons:
A friend, Sanford, N. C.
Mrs. J. Osborn, Norwalk, Calif.
Woman's Aux., Holland Christian Church.
Damascus Christian Church, Chapel Hill, N. C.
C.
Philathea Class, Suffolk Christian Church.
Mrs. E. W. Vickers, Elon College, N. C.
Mrs. Frank Brandon, Milton, N. C.
Clothing:
Mrs. James A. Carr, Jr., Holland, Va.
Mrs. John W. King, Suffolk, Va.
Mrs. M. O. Spence, Suffolk, Va.
Mrs. T. B. Henley, Norfolk, Va.
Coats:
Miss Christine Harris, South Norfolk, Va.
Miss Vera Gilliam, Greensboro, N. C.
Coat:
Miss Bessie Thomas, Burlington, N. C.
Mr. Joe Morris, Burlington, N. C.
Miss Wilma Holt, Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$12,580.10
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Clayton	$ 33.00
Mt. Carmel	5.00
Lebanon	18.00
Piney Plain	30.00
Pleasant Hill	11.09
Youngsville	15.00

112.09

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $..... as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address.....

Office on Use and Understanding of the Bible to Open

A new inter-church office for the Southeastern States to direct a 3-year project on "The Use and Understanding of the Bible" will be opened in Durham, N. C., with the Rev. Carl R. Key as staff executive, according to a joint announcement by B. Tarrt Bell of Greensboro, chairman of the North Carolina CROP Executive Board, and W. Arthur Kale of Durham, chairman of the Christian Education Commission of the North Carolina Council of Churches. In accepting the new position, Mr. Key is resigning as State CROP Director, a position he has held for the past three years. In his new capacity, he will serve under Dr. Philip C. Landers of New York, national director of the project, which is part of the program of the National Council of Churches.

The Durham office will serve North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, West Virginia, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

Mr. Key is a native of Robbins, North Carolina. He received his A. B. degree at Elon College in 1933, has B. D. degrees from Vanderbilt and Yale Divinity School, with graduate studies at Hartford Seminary. He has served pastorates in Virginia, Connecticut, Ohio and Michigan, and for nine months was the director of the North Carolina Council of Churches before joining the CROP organization in 1949, first as regional worker and later as State director.

The new Bible project was inspired by the widespread reception given the Revised Standard Version of the Bible in 1952. It is designed to offer practical ways of teaching the use and understanding of the Bible by the use of community inter-church programs.

Mr. Key will divide his time in traveling over the area served by his office, beginning with an extensive itinerary in North Carolina. The new office will be formally dedicated on December 14, in Durham, when Dr. Landers and Dr. Gerald E. Knoff of the National Council of Churches, will be present.

FOR OUR CHILDREN.

(Continued from page 10.)

"There are just funny ones," said Mrs. Hardin, "and some that are educational. But they're mixed up with the ones that depict horror, and a child doesn't discriminate. It's the parents' responsibility to do that."

"You've convinced me Mom," said her son soberly. "I'm going to investigate them for myself."

"We'll do it together," said Virginia, "and I'm going to talk to the mothers of the boys and girls with whom Richie plays. Why, maybe we can even get the stores to stop carrying the poison comics!"

"That's what some towns in Connecticut did," said Mrs. Hardin. "If one town can do it, another can. And remember, don't go against all comic books, because some of them are all right."

"Yes, we shall have to be specific," said Richard. "You can trust me, Mom. Virginia and I will go over them carefully and we'll note down the writers and publishers of the harmful ones, and we'll spread the word to other parents. I imagine many of them will be just as surprised and shocked as we are."

CHURCH A VITAL INFLUENCE IN LIVES, YOUTHS SAY.

(Continued from page 11.)

of active young people and by 70 percent of the inactive. Ten out of every hundred interviewed considered the adult leadership ineffective, but still reported that the church had had a favorable influence on their lives.

The young people made some concrete suggestions for strengthening church programs. They urged the churches to pay more attention to age levels and interests when planning programs, (they cited as frequently inadequate the activities for older young people, married youth, college students and employed young people); to make greater efforts to relate program content to everyday relationships; to provide better and more attractive adult leadership; to introduce better recreational activities; and to increase its efforts in youth evangelism and make more opportunities for youth to exercise initiative and participate in policy-making and program.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem (Nans) S. S. $ 37.88
Liberty Spring S. S. 20.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Burlington, First $ 50.00
Greensboro, First 55.45

57.88

Happy Home S. S.	46.70
Hebron S. S.	10.00
Kallam Grove	18.00
Monticello, Special	40.00
Union (Va.)	44.00
	246.15
Western N. C. Conference:
Pleasant Cross S. S.	$ 11.48
Pleasant Union	22.77
	34.25
Virginia Valley Conference:
Bethel S. S.	$ 2.00
	2.00
Total	$ 470.37
Grand total	$13,050.47

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward	$27,031.17
In Memory of H. P. Murphy	5.00
Lawrence S. Holt Trust Fund	150.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars	100.00
In Memory of W. A. Bell	2.00
In Memory of Gov. Wm. B. Umstead	10.00
In Memory of Mrs. Lois Saunders Pierce	5.00
Thanksgiving Offerings:
Alfred W. Haywood, New York, N. Y.	50.00
Mrs. Anna Lee Johnson, St. Petersburg, Fla.	5.00
Tire Sales Co., Burlington, N. C.	50.00
P. W. and Mary Iseley, McLeansville, N. C.	25.00
Mrs. Dora E. Steele, Durham, N. C.	5.00
J. H. Webster, Pittsboro, N. C.	10.00
Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Dofflemyer, Luray, Va.	25.00
Mrs. Clarke F. Cullers, Front Royal, Va.	10.00
Charles E. Miller, Graham, N. C.	17.50
Miss Georgia Bradley, Mebane, N. C.	20.00
A Friend	5.00
Mrs. Mamie K. Perkins, Wise, N. C.	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. Victor Murchison, Winston-Salem, N. C.	10.00
	514.50
Grand total	$27,545.67
Total for the week	$ 984.87
Total for the year	$40,596.14

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

Praise Ye the Lord.

"I will praise thee, O Lord my God, with my whole heart; and I will glorify thy name forevermore." He whom God has delivered from the depths, should sing praises unto God and glorify him forevermore.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

"All Things Come from God"

(A THANKSGIVING MEDITATION)

By REV. H. H. SMITH

An aged Christian man was traveling in California and came upon one of those wonderful scenes in the Yosemite Valley. Overcome with emotion, he fell upon his knees, clasped his hands and exclaimed, "Mercy, mercy, mercy! Have I lived seventy-six years to see this great glory? God made it all."

Only a man of a devout spirit could be so moved by the sight of God's wonders in nature, and think only of the Creator of it all. Multitudes, no doubt, look upon the same entrancing scene day after day without a thought of the One who brought it into existence. Let us read again those wonderful chapters in the Book of Job, depicting the omnipotence of God—the God who alone could create these things: "The earth, the sea, the stars, the light, the rain, the snow and the frost, the lightning, the variety of marvelous instincts and powers possessed by the animals."

God speaks to us impressively in the opening words of the Bible: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." But we do not go far in the Bible before we discover that the God who made this world is not running the world without man.

While it is true that "all things come from God," there is a divine-human partnership, or cooperative spirit, between God and man—and for this we should be devoutly thankful. Someone has said that whenever a man plants a hill of beans, he enters into partnership with Almighty God. God has made the soil and the seeds and sends the sunshine and the rain, but man must plant and cultivate or there will be no harvest.

God never made a telegraph, telephone or radio instrument, but he created electricity, electrical waves and magnetism, and gave man the intelligence necessary to use these forces of nature and construct the instruments which have brought great benefits to mankind. While giving due credit to man for his diligence, patience, skill, which have resulted in marvelous achievements, it is still true that "all things come from God."

It is reported that a little boy who had been operated upon by a great surgeon, said, as he came out from under the anesthetic: "My mother will never get done talking about you." This feeling of deep gratitude toward those who have helped us during some crisis of illness is understandable. When someone was overly-enthusiastic in his praise of his family physician, the doctor said something like this: "You are too generous with your words of praise. A doctor is only God's instrument in healing the ills of his patients. God has given the human body the power to heal, under the proper conditions, and the doctor helps nature do its work, perhaps with the aid of drugs which God has created." The devout psalmist offered praise and thanksgiving to the One "who heals all your diseases."

As we pray, Give us this day our daily bread," let it be an acknowledgment of our dependence upon him from whom "all things come," and be thankful.

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill,
And back of the mill is the wheat and the shower,
And the sun and the Father's will."

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1954

Elon College Library X

NUMBER 47

“’Twas a Sheep That Strayed”

’Twas a sheep, not a lamb, that strayed away

In the parable Jesus told—

A grownup sheep that had gone astray

From the ninety and nine in the fold.

Out on the hillside, out in the cold,

’Twas a sheep the Good Shepherd sought;

And back to the flock, safe into the fold,

’Twas a sheep the Good Shepherd brought.

And why for the sheep should we earnestly long

And as earnestly hope and pray?

Because there is danger, if they go wrong,

They will lead the lambs astray.

For the lambs will follow the sheep, you know,

Wherever the sheep may stray.

When the sheep go wrong, it will not be long

Till the lambs are as wrong as they.

And so with the sheep we earnestly plead,

For the sake of the lambs today;

If the sheep are lost, what terrible cost

Some lambs will have to pay!

—Author Unknown.

News Flashes

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference ministers will meet at Elon College Monday December 6, for the monthly meeting. This is one week earlier than the usual time. The Committee on Ministry will meet at 1:30 in the afternoon.

A long-promised Navajo New Testament is now in the hands of the printer according to information received from the American Bible Society. The complete manuscript was prepared by Mrs. Etta Dalton, a Navajo Indian. The Navajo language is exceptionally difficult, and the recording of it has been complicated by several different orthographies. There are almost 75,000 Navajo Indians living in Arizona and New Mexico, so the need for the New Testament is very great.

During her stay in New York recently, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, visited the offices of the American Bible Society. During a short ceremony, while she was there, Queen Elizabeth was presented with one of the society's regular King James edition of the Bible. In receiving the Book, Queen Elizabeth said: "It gives me the greatest pleasure to accept this Bible as a gift. . . The work that you are doing . . . is an inspiration to Christian people everywhere. I can truly say that the King and I found great comfort and strength from our reading of the Bible."

Students Supply at Durham

The three ministerial students from the Congregational Christian Church of Durham conducted the morning worship Sunday, November 21. Rev. Carl R. Key who is supply pastor for the month of November was on a plane trip to Haiti for CROP, delivering a load of thoroughbred live stock.

Clifton Walker and C. C. Mulholand conducted the service and Curtis Young preached the sermon, using as his theme: "Give Thanks to God." The sermon was excellent and the entire service carried a high spiritual note. The congregation was deeply grateful for these three young men of the church who gave promise of fruitful ministries.

S. C. H.

Radio Talks on the Bible

Dr. Francis C. Stifler of the American Bible Society will present a series of broadcasts on Radio Chapel over Station WOR for the four Sundays in December. Dr. Stifler has chosen Christmas as his general subject for these broadcasts. The program is:

Dec. 5—"The Coming Glory of Christmas."

Dec. 12—"The Bible's Big Day."

Dec. 19—"The Bible Gave Us Our Christmas."

Dec. 26—"How Use Your Christmas Bible."

The broadcasts will be heard on each Sunday, from 9:30 to 10:00 a. m., Eastern Standard Time. The program is especially prepared for those who are unable to attend Sunday school at that hour.

Bishop Arthur Moore Named Man of the South for 1954

Methodist Bishop Arthur J. Moore of Atlanta, Georgia, was recently named "Man of the South" for 1954, his name being chosen from a list of 200 leading Southerners selected by the editor of Dixie Business. This list of leaders has been referred to by the magazine as "The South's Hall of Fame for the Living."

Bishop Moore is the ninth person to be so honored. The title is bestowed upon some outstanding person each year.

Bishop Moore quit a job as a railroad brakeman forty-five years ago to enter the ministry. After two years of study, he became a circuit rider in South Georgia. Then he went to preaching revivals in a tent. Several years later he became the pastor of Travis Park Methodist Church in San Antonio, Texas, and one of his successors was among those casting a vote for Bishop Moore. Rev. K. W. Copeland, the present pastor at Travis Park, said in voting for the bishop, "I know of no one as worthy to receive the title."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends congratulations to Bishop Moore.

Housing Meeting Sponsored at Raleigh

The Committee on Peace and Service of our United Church at Raleigh, N. C., sponsored a public meeting on "Better Housing and Residential Neighborhoods" Sunday evening, November 21. The meeting may be the beginning of a movement to clear

(Continued on page 7.)

National Safe Driving Day Will be Observed on December 15

December 15 is to be observed as Safe-Drivering Day—a 24-hour period when every motorist and pedestrian in the country is being asked to put the Golden Rule to work on our highways and streets with the objective of eliminating all traffic accidents.

Governors and public officials of all states are issuing Safe-Drivering Day proclamations in cooperation with the President's Action Committee for Traffic Safety, a volunteer group of citizens appointed by President Eisenhower to help cut the toll of traffic accidents and deaths.

On S-D Day every driver and walker in the country is being urged to accept full personal responsibility in doing these three basic things:

1. Observe the letter and the spirit of all traffic regulations.
2. Be courteous to every driver and pedestrian; practice sportsmanship.
3. Give full attention to driving and walking.

"S-D Day will demonstrate that the place to attack the traffic safety problem is in the community, and that the responsibility rests on each individual," the President's Action Committee declared. "It will implant in the minds of all motorists and pedestrians the realization that if they can greatly reduce accidents on S-D Day, they can do it every day in the year."

In 1953 there were nearly 10 million traffic accidents. One person was killed in traffic accidents on the average of every 14 minutes, around the clock and throughout the year. The total death toll last year was 38,300. Injuries in traffic occurred approximately every 23 seconds, with a total of 1,350,000 persons being disabled beyond the day of the accident.

For every fatality, one or more persons was totally and permanently disabled, thereby becoming a financial burden either to his family, or to the community, or to both.

The price of traffic accidents in 1953, in terms of money, is estimated to have been $4 billion, including medical expense, property loss and other costs.

All knowledge is lost which ends in the knowing, for every truth we know is a candle given us to work by. Gain all the knowledge you can and then use it for the highest purpose.—John Ruskin.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Daniele, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Some Outstanding Features of the Coming Laymen's Convention

The first nation wide meeting of men—laymen, ministers and women—will be held under the auspices of the National Laymen's Fellowship, at the Palmer House, Chicago, Illinois, February 25-27, 1955.

Some of the things promised those who are fortunate enough to be able to attend include nationally known speakers, a warm fellowship, powerful singing, outstanding exhibits, inspiring devotionals, and good rooms and fine food.

There will also be a series of vocational seminars which will present a challenge to all delegates. Experienced leaders will preside over the groups, helping with the answers to the question, "What does it mean to be a Christian in your vocation?" Groups will be provided for accountants and bookkeepers, administrators, advertising, architects, bankers, doctors and dentists, engineers, farmers, government workers, graphic arts, hotel, motel and inn keepers, insurance, labor leaders, lawyers, manufacturers, merchants, ministers, politicians, retired people, salesmen, and teachers and professors.

The following are given as the convention purposes:

1. Enable participants to feel the power of a large gathering of our Congregational Christian churchmen, receive inspiration through addresses, fellowship and discussion.
2. Challenge men to look at vocations with careful Christian analysis to see if Christianity is being applied effectively, to understand through participation the Christian ethics involved in specific vocations.
3. Raise informational levels above local or state viewpoint and on high spiritual plain in a modern city, demonstrate church is at work and witness that Christianity is a full and complete answer.
4. Send men home with greater appreciation for Congregational Christian heritage, on fire to improve local church, the home, business and community Christian contacts and to keep well informed as to our changing world.

Those who are making plans to attend this meeting should contact the editor of this page immediately.

* * * * *

"Religion in Everyday Life"

By COMDR. F. LEE EDWARDS.*

Upon being informed that the subject for my talk upon this occasion of Laymen's Sunday, was "Religion in Everyday Life," I pondered the matter, trying to decide just what it means. Religion in everyday life is not what we know of the Scriptures or our philosophies about Christianity. It is how we practice religion. It is Applied Religion.

Allow me to illustrate what I mean. The University of North Carolina and other institutions of learning offer various courses of instruction that are described with the word "applied." There are courses in Applied Mathematics for those persons who are familiar with the theory of mathematics, but need more experience in using such knowledge. There are similar courses in Applied Psychology. Applied Harmony is taught by the local Music Department; and a member of this very church teaches a

(Continued on page 11.)

*Commander Edwards is the Executive Officer of the N. R. O. T. C. at the University of North Carolina. This talk was delivered before the United Church of Chapel Hill upon the occasion of Layman's Sunday.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Daniele; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardeastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Hollaud, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

Prayer

Prayer is first of all an attitude toward God. Jesus was emphasizing that in his saying: "When ye pray, say, Our Father." Prayer is based on the assumption that God is as anxious to give good gifts unto his children, as his children are anxious to receive them. There can be no real prayer until we accept the love of God as the basic reality of life. This is not a light or unwarranted assumption. This is one of the facts of religion about which to doubt is to fail.

Prayer is the way to maintain a vital relationship with God. One never hesitates to ask a favor of an old and trusted friend. It is easy to discuss one's problems and difficulties with such a friend. If help is needed, there is no hesitancy to ask it because of the intimate relationship that has existed through the years. So it is when the right relationship has been established with God through the habit of prayer.

The real difficulty in connection with prayer is in the mind and the heart of the person who is conscious of the need of prayer. It is easy to assume that the difficulties center around what God may or may not do. Most people are conscious of their spiritual needs, but a bad conscience makes it difficult for them to come boldly to the throne of grace and to ask of God that which they know they desperately need.

The issue is further complicated by the fact that the deep needs of the soul can be met only as the needy one can open the door of his heart for the grace of God to come in. Too often his heart's door has been closed to God for a long time. Hopes that have centered around the material and the human all of a person's life cannot be shifted to the spiritual and to God with readiness and assurance.

What we are saying is that the effectiveness of prayer is dependent upon the ability of man to receive. Prayer is an act of faith. Prayer must be based upon assurance. In the final analysis, prayer is an act of conformity to the will of God. Real prayer is not always easy, but it is indispensable if one is to grow in spirit.

Teaching the Bible

The church school teacher faces an opportunity and a challenge every Sunday morning. If the class members are children, it is an opportunity to influence developing life. If the class members are young people, they need authoritative guidance, for they are already aware of the perplexing problems which they face. Adults have come to grips with the issues of life, and are seeking help in meeting the issues.

The Bible is preeminently the book of life. It records man's temptations and sins. It pictures the tribulations of those who surrender to the baser things which men desire. It also relates the story of those who heed the call of God to walk in the ways which are ordained for men. It tells the story of the forgiveness of sins, and the lifting power of God which comes to those who seek it. All these truths the conscientious church school teacher can help other people to understand and to profit thereby.

That is the goal for which the teacher is striving. It is a long-range program which requires faith, patience, understanding, and love. Sunday brings the opportunity for which he has been preparing all the week. A lesson should mark one step toward the purpose for which the teacher is working. There are certain things that should always be done.

The first is to make sure of the message in the lesson of the day. That is not always easy to do. It must be studied in the light of the circumstances under which it was spoken, by whom it was spoken, and to whom it was spoken. There are other portions of the Bible which deal with the same subject. These must be compared with the material of the day's lesson, that one may be sure the message of the lesson is comprehensive.

The second step is to put the teaching of the lesson in terms of the present time, that the class may clearly see how it applies to life as the members are living it. It must become God's truth for each member, pointing up individual needs, and what ought to be done in the light of what God is saying through that particular lesson.

In order to thus get the lesson across to the class members, the teacher must first have thought it through as suggested above and then rethink it with the class. If in the rethinking the class members can be brought into the process, and their thoughts and suggestions woven into the discussion, then the conclusions will be the conclusions of the class.

"It's Later Than You Think"

A Sermon

By AARON N. MECKEL, D. D., LL. D.
St. Petersburg, Florida.

(I Cor. 7:29).

A friend was telling me about a relative of his, recently. This man has only a short time to live, but is making the very best use of the days that remain. He is letting his friends know how much they have meant to him, and in many other ways is letting his love and goodwill for human beings be known.

Today we want to think of the brevity of time, the swiftness of its passing, the careless use we often make of it. Seldom do I take the words of a popular ditty for a sermon title. Today however, let us do so. I've listened as the young folks gather around our piano at the manse, and sing,

*Enjoy yourself, enjoy yourself,
It's later than you think!*

One of the finest sayings of Emerson has to do with the value of time: "One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day of the year." And he continues, "No man has learned anything rightly, until he knows that every day is Doomsday."

That in essence, is what Biblical, Christian living is: It's buying up the time, treasuring it over against eternity, stamping the Cross on each moment as it passes. It's "eternity fixing the conception of a single hour." Consider the urgency of this saying of St. Paul's in I Cor. 7:29: "But this I say, brethren, the time is short—" Those first Christians felt the very ages had come upon them. They lived with a sense of crisis. The time was short!

Not that we wish to preach a scare sermon! Not at all. But each and every one of us, regardless of his age bracket, ought to put to himself the question, "Suppose that I had but a month or a year to live. What difference would it make in my life? How would I use the precious time that remained?" And then we ought to live each day and hour in terms of that new resolve. Stephen Grellett should speak to us all when he says, "I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness I can show to any fellow human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

For one thing, I would want to go out and look at the beauty God placed in this world, as I have never looked at it before! I would open, not only my eyes, but my mind and heart to take it all in. "Brethren, the time is short."

Some years since, Helen Keller wrote an article for the Atlantic Monthly which she entitled, "Three Days to See." I have never forgotten it. It might be a salutary thing, she suggests, if all of us were stricken deaf and blind for a few days of our adult life. The darkness and the silence would teach us the lesson of gratitude and appreciation. As Jesus long ago said, "Having eyes they see not, and ears they hear not." We fail to take in the bounty and beauty all around us. What would this great soul want to see if she had but three days of vision? First, she would call her dearest friends together, those who have made life worth living for her, and look deeply into their faces—and hearts. "The subtleties of expression, the quiver of a muscle, the flutter of a hand," none of these would escape her. Helen Keller wonders if we "seeing people" can describe at all accurately the faces of five of our close friends. Can we?

Then, too, she would want to see the face of a baby, and to look into the loyal trusting eyes of her Scottie and Great Dane dogs who have meant so much to her. After a walk through the wonder of the woods, she would pray for the glory of a colorful sunset. It would so thrill her that she could hardly sleep that night! Then the glory of "the magnificent panorama of light which the sun awakens the sleeping earth,"—a sunrise! These are just a few of the sights she would wish to see. "Oh, the things that I should see if I had the power of sight—for just three days!" And we who walk with dull eyes and slumbering senses through so much of this beautiful world, let this counsel of Helen Keller prod us wide awake:

"I who am blind give one hint to those who see: Use your eyes as if tomorrow you would be stricken blind."

There you have it! "live 'as if'—the time is short."

Again, if I possessed this crisis—sense of time, I should have a deeper, tenderer insight into the lives of my fellowmen. Let me begin now to see them for what they really are, the children of God, in various stages of advancement, true, but all of them needing the word of encouragement and love and forgiveness I can give. For the "time is short." It's later than I may know. Said Disraeli, who knew so well the taunts of hatred and abuse, "Life is too short to be little."

When I took the time to thank a teacher for the good she is doing our children, she made a very characteristic reply: "Your word of appreciation means more than you know. We get a lot of criticism in our work, but very little thanks." Why, my friends, are we so niggardly about expressing the gratitude we must often feel in our hearts?

With time at a premium I would, with God's help, be big enough to go and ask forgiveness of any to whom I have been unkind. Yes, and to want to forgive any who may have been unkind to me. How we would, all of us, seek out opportunities for reconciliation! The things which in our hectic lives, loomed so large would suddenly become small. And many of the things that formerly appeared small, would become big.

Have you ever read Whittier's poem, "Forgiveness?" Get it out and memorize it. It will help you cultivate the spirit of inward graciousness, and tenderness and forgiveness toward your fellows.

My heart was heavy, for its trust had been Abused, its kindness answered with foul wrong;
So, turning gloomily from my fellow-men,
One summer Sabbath day I strolled among
The green mounds of the village burial-place;
Where, pondering how all human love and hate
Find one sad level; and how, soon or late,
Wronged and wrongdoer, each will meekened
face,
And cold hands folded over a still heart,
Pass the green threshold of our common grave,
Whither all footsteps tend, whence none depart,
Awe'd for myself, and pitying my race,
Our common sorrow, like a mighty wave,
Swept all my pride away, and trembling
I forgave!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

(Continued on page 13.)

"It Shall Be Upon Aaron to Minister"

By REV. RICHARD K. MORTON
Jacksonville, Florida

Those who receive and respond to a call to minister in any capacity, to the beloved community in the name of Christ, have both a solemn obligation and an exhilarating opportunity.

"And it shall be upon Aaron to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he cometh out, that he die not" (Exodus 28:35). In these and other words we find the description of what Aaron must wear and do, in fulfillment of his appointed ministry, and how he and his sons are to be consecrated to their task.

In our day we need no thought of altar sacrifices and what garments the priest must don to be prepared to exercise his office. But we do need to give serious thought to what the modern Aaron's obligations and functions are in the ministry of the Lord.

Who would not tremble and be humbled at the words Paul heard (Acts 26:16): "Rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in which I will appear unto thee."

Through a tremendous experience he is commissioned and given a task to do, "That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power" (Ephesians 3:6-7).

Paul likewise reminds Timothy (and through him, others) not to shirk from being a "partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" (2 Timothy 1:8-9). Of this he was "appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles" (verse 11).

In the Epistle to the Hebrews (chapter 5), it is stressed that the high priest, "ordained for men in things pertaining to God," ought to offer for sins, "and no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (verse 4).

It is upon us, right now in some appointed place, to minister. And this ministry is not confined, by any means, to that of clergymen in the pulpit and parish. If we are to have the needed restoration of New Testament faith and life, we must once more create a sharing among all when it comes to ministry. We have lost much because we too lazily turned over to a special class or group what we tried to represent as their responsibility only. It is with real purpose that the Methodists and others have "lay preachers."

There are those who are ordained, after special training, for special service, but the hand of the Holy Spirit is laid upon all of us to perform some ministry.

It is upon us to minister, in the first place, by radiant and powerful witness to the truth that is in us. Our Christian faith is as strong as what we are willing to do about it, from hour to hour and from situation to situation. It is also ours to witness and minister through our active membership in the Church of Christ. This involves giving ourselves—our money, time, talents, interest, fellowship, love. It means connecting up with everyone and everything that can increase the depth and value of the spiritual life within.

Our ministry also must mean steady searching of the Word of God for truth and power and steady, humble petitioning at the Throne of Grace for the inflowing of divine power. We often see so little because our eyes are so seldom closed in prayer, and we often walk so falteringly in the faith because we so seldom bend our knees in prayer.

It is ours to minister by serving as well—doing something highly exacting and sacrificial or some little service which everyone else has forgotten or belittled. The altar is set up, and has fire upon it, and the vestments of priestliness are ready. But what of the inner desire on our part really to serve as a minister of Jesus Christ, in pew or pulpit?

All spiritual sons and daughters of Aaron should rejoice at the call of God to service. There is a ministry to which each of us may be ordained. There is no greater power in life today than that possessed by a humble but devoted servant of our Lord going forth in His Name to perform some needed service. It must be upon us all, today, to minister. No special group, set apart, can do the tasks that await the Church of Christ. Many more must have ears to hear a call like that which came to Paul: "stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee . . . to make thee a minister and a witness."

You are a minister of your church, and you have an ordination in the service of Christ. It is up to you to minister. Churches do not, in the long run, grow by their keenness in observing how the Holy Spirit guides their minister. They grow in being clean, humble, ready servants to carry the vessels of the Lord. They grow as they respond to the Holy Spirit acting within themselves.

"And it was upon Aaron—and upon you and me—to minister."

"Christmas and the Good News"

No. 1 of Three Articles

By W. R. CULLOM

People generally understand that the word "gospel" means "good news." A popular gospel song of some years ago said, "Tell me the old, old story." The word "old" as used here means that the gospel story has been tried through the ages and found to be thoroughly trustworthy and satisfying. In this sense, the word "old" is of course a most worthy one and one that is in complete harmony with the facts of long repeated and well tried experience. There is another sense, however, in which the story of the gospel is perpetually and even eternally new. I mean to say that it is a love story, and that love is always new, and grows more so with age. It is ever fresher and more meaningful with the passing years. This is true in the case of love between a man and a woman, and the love between parent and child. When responded to by faith and personal surrender, it is infinitely more so in the case of a personal human soul and its Father

(Continued on page 15.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Winter Quarter

Today, Monday, November 22, students are taking examinations ending the first quarter's work at the college for the year 1954-55. At Elon we have had the very best quarter in the past twenty years. The total enrollment for the quarter is 916. The students have done good work as I am confident the examinations will prove. During the quarter we have had no serious misunderstandings between the students, faculty or administration. We have had cooperation by everyone on all sides. All in all, it has been a fine experience on our campus.

In a student body of between 900 and 1000 there must of necessity be a number who enroll and drop out. We have had only one person to leave school because of homesickness which is very unusual. Then, too, there are those who realize that they are not going to pass and rather than take examinations and fail, they leave rather than face the test and, of course, there are those who take examinations and fail. It is estimated that from our present enrollment we will probably lose somewhere between 40 and 60 students. The Field Secretary's Office reports that we will have between 40 and 50 new students to enroll for the Winter Quarter. In all probability, the enrollment for the Winter Quarter will be about the same as it was for the Fall Quarter. There are a number of classes, of course, that must be taught. It has been necessary to employ an additional faculty member for the Winter Quarter.

We are happy to report optimistically for the college as we face the remainder of this year and the opening of another year in September.

* * * * *

Athletics

The Elon College football team has had a very successful season. It has been the most successful that an Elon team has had since 1951. Last year we tied one, won one, and lost seven. This year we lost three, tied one, and won five. We lost only one game in our athletic conference. The other two that we lost were to two South Carolina teams. One is a member of the Southern Conference and the other a South Carolina team. The final game on this year's schedule was with Davidson College. Davidson is a member of the Southern Conference. The score was Elon 14—Davidson 6. The Elon boys played smart football from the kick off to the whistle. It was an exciting game to watch.

The Elon team is coached by Sid Varney. Varney is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and played football at the University for four years. He was assistant coach at Presbyterian College in South Carolina until two years ago when he resigned to take the position as head football coach at Elon College. Coach Varney is a good student of the game, works hard, knows his football, and is cooperative in every way at the college. He has a good spirit and is a fine character. We are fortunate in having Sid Varney as a member of our faculty and coaching staff at Elon College. He has done an excellent job these two years and we are all looking forward to a more successful year during 1955-56.

The basket ball team is working hard getting in good shape. We have a good schedule and are looking forward to a successful year with our basketball team. Doc Mathis is the basketball coach and line coach for the football team. Doc does an excellent job of training and coaching the boys. He has been at the college for a number of years.

Scott Boyd is head of the Physical Education Department but does not coach any of the teams. The Athletic Department at Elon is moving along with the rest of the college in a satisfactory way.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The annual conferences for this year have all been held. Our churches are now operating in the new conference year. For a number of years Elon College has listed contributions within the calendar year. Our records show that we have received to date in 1954 a total of $12,350.25. The offerings received this week will leave the college far from the total amount apportioned. There are, of course, five more weeks in this year. It is entirely possible that we will receive enough from our churches to make the total receipts equal to the amount apportioned—$15,000, but it is not likely that we will.

The convention holds the college strictly to the amount asked for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It would be of much assistance to the college in making this payment if the amount asked of the churches for the college could be paid. Otherwise the requirements tend to work a hardship on the college.

I am sure that all our churches are aware of these facts and that they will do their best to see that their apportionments are paid.

Previously reported $12,216.37

Eastern Va. Conference:
Norfolk, First	$ 5.00
Rosemont	51.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Danville	$ 31.00
Shallow Ford	20.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Newport S. S.	$ 26.87
	<hr/> 133.87

Total to date 12,350.24

RALEIGH HOUSING MEETING.

(Continued from page 2.)

or renovate certain neighborhoods of the city where poor health, crime and delinquency, and various other social problems accompany exceedingly poor housing conditions.

The committee invited the City-planner, Mr. Herbert Stevens to present the conclusions of studies made of delapidation in housing, fires, over-crowding, and poor sanitation and their correlation with such burdens as tuberculosis, crime, venereal disease, welfare case load. Various other city officials commented on the charts presented by Stevens, and the president of the Raleigh Board of Realtors reported the efforts of his board to work out minimum standards for housing which the city might adopt.

The sponsoring committee was asked by the meeting to sponsor a second such gathering with reports on the social costs of the deplorable housing conditions which had been revealed. The feeling was expressed that the public needed to become informed and aroused over the issue. Research is also to report details of possible Federal guarantees for private capital if urban redevelopment is attempted in the slum areas which are the worst. Certain enabling legislation is needed from the State Legislature if such aid is to be used by North Carolina cities, it was understood.

GAYLORD B. NOYCE.

Missions at Home and Abroad

Centennial of Modern Nursing

Just one hundred years ago this month of November Florence Nightingale launched the modern nursing movement when, in cold, filth and suffering she ministered to sick and wounded soldiers of the Crimean War in Selimiye Barracks, Uskudar, Turkey.

This month she is being gratefully remembered all over the world, especially in Turkey, and from that land a New England nurse writes of what has been done there this year in memory of The Lady of The Lamp.

She is Miss Ethel Lovatt, R. N., daughter of Mrs. Mary R. Lovatt of Lubec, Maine, a Congregational Christian nurse in Gaziantep, Turkey under the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Born in New Bedford, Mass., Miss Lovatt holds her R. N. from the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Boston; a B. Sc. from Boston University School of Education and has taken special work in modern nursing at B. U. School of Nursing. She is a graduate also of the Maine State Teachers' College, Farmington, Maine.

The huge Selimiye Barracks still stand in Uskudar, once called Scutari. It is a massive white rectangle topped by towers on the corners but now its long corridors are bare. Today on the wall of the northwest tower there gleams a new marble plaque with the inscription "This tower has become the cradle of modern nursing through the undying service of Florence Nightingale in 1854-56."

Each year Turkish nurses make a pilgrimage to Uskudar to commemorate the day Florence Nightingale arrived on the VECTIS in 1854. This year Miss Lovatt made this visit with scores of Turkish students and graduate nurses. The celebration took place in April which had been designated as "Nurses Week" in Turkey.

The World Health Organization of the United Nations invited the Turkish Nurses' Association to join them in observing April 7 as "World Health Day." There were exhibits of pictures showing student nurse life and nursing books. There were displays of the variety of nursing caps worn in Istanbul. There were films on nursing and health and in several schools of nursing plays were given depicting scenes from the life of Florence Nightingale and present day nurses.

A Red Crescent School of Nursing student was a cover girl on the Turkish Pictorial magazine and the newspapers printed many articles on nursing.

At the Barracks in a special ceremony the Mayor of Istanbul welcomed the nurses; the Turkish army of Florence Nightingale was presented by Miss Duff Grant, visiting president of the National Council of British Nurses from St. Thomas Hospital.

MISS ETHEL LOVATT, R. N.

"Nurses all we were that afternoon. Turkish nurses, British nurses, band played the British and Turkish national anthems and a bronze statue American nurses, proud to belong to a professional that is respected, honored and needed in our world. We are 'modern' nurses today only because Florence Nightingale had the vision and undaunted courage to pursue what she believed a nurse should become," writes Miss Lovatt.

A book in Turkish on Florence Nightingale has just been published by the Publication Department of the American Board of Foreign Missions in Istanbul, Turkey, to aid in a better understanding of the need and the dignity of the great humanitarian service of nursing. To this cause of nursing in Turkey American Board doctors and nurses have made great contributions since 1842.

Miss Lovatt, who began her career overseas as a Christian nurse under the American Board in China in 1940, was forced to return home by the Sino-Japanese war two years later after serving as superintendent of nurses in Lu Ho Hospital, Tunghsien, North China.

Undaunted by this experience she went back to China in 1946 and had what she described as a "ring side seat" when North China was "liberated" by the Chinese Communist. Then in 1951 she again had to leave China as a "displaced missionary" because of the Communists.

She served for a time in the Salem Hospital, Salem, Mass. But in 1952, with the zeal and adaptability of the true missionary, she resumed her overseas career under the American Board in Turkey thus adding Turkish to her Chinese and English vocabulary. Miss Lovatt served in the Azariah Smith Memorial Hospital in Gaziantep, Turkey.

Before Miss Lovatt enlisted in 1940 she was Surgical Teaching Supervisor in the Maine General Hospital for a year.

Right now the American Board of Foreign Missions is looking for six nurses to go into overseas Christian medical service: two to Angola, Africa; one to Rhodesia, Africa; two to Madura, India, and one to Turkey.

Behind The Iron Curtain—A New Voice

There'll be a new voice in the strife torn land of Korea after December 1—a voice crossing the Iron Curtain barrier to bring the message of "peace on earth to men of good will" to men not only on the south side, but for the first time since Communist invasion, to men in the north.

It will be the Radio Voice of Christian Korea, the only evangelical radio station in the Far East, with the exception of the Philippines, and the first privately operated station to be granted a permit by the Korean Government.

Programs featuring straight forward gospel messages, and all types of music, dramas, English classes, Bible classes and a wide range of cultural and religious subjects will be beamed across the country. And in hundreds of south Korean country

(Continued on page 11.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

That Annual Report!

Each society makes an annual report to the District Superintendent, who, in turn, reports on those activities to the Conference superintendents and the Convention superintendents. But how many of our society presidents ever give a complete report of the year's activities to the women of their own church? The Chapel Hill society is one that does. Because it shows what a comprehensive report of the year's work for a society might contain, and because this might give an idea to some president of a society for this year, it is being printed in full. (Incidentally, a report of the activities of the women's organization should also be given at the annual business meeting of the church.)

* * * * *

Annual Report of The Woman's Fellowship, United Congregational Christian Church of Chapel Hill, N. C.

In September, 1953, the Woman's Fellowship of the United Congregational Christian Church of Chapel Hill had a membership of forty-seven. Ten new members were added to the roll, and eight members were discontinued.

The activities, projects and programs during the year were as follows:

Conferences and Meetings Attended.

Fall Conference in Greensboro—9 women attended.

Spring Rally at Liberty, Vance—7 women attended.

School of Missions, Elon College—1 woman attended full-time, 4 women attended part-time.

World Day of Prayer, Chapel Hill.
Peace Workshop, Chapel Hill.

Friendly Service.

Remembered four needy families at Christmas with gifts of food, toys and clothing. Names furnished to us by the Chapel Hill and County Welfare Department.

Collected and turned over to the Welfare Department good used clothing throughout the year.

Managed the "Empty Stocking" booth one full day before Christmas.

Remembered each ill member of our church with flowers, fruit, book or toilet articles.

Missions.

Sent gifts of soap, vitamins, powdered milk and books to Puerto Rico at Christmas.

Sent more than enough money for a goat to Puerto Rico.

A $25.00 Share Package was ordered from India and sold. Two more of these packages have been ordered.

For the second year, we have cared for three orphans, one in Lebanon, one in Korea, and one in India. At Christmas we remembered each of these children with a Christmas package.

Participated in the annual Clothing Drive for overseas relief. For this project, our women helped with planning and drive and made the posters to be used as an advertising medium. The drive was sponsored by the Chapel Hill Council of Churches and the Community Club.

Special Activities.

Served a luncheon to the Executive Board of the Conference.

One circle served refreshments after a church business meeting.

Contributed and served the student supper in September.

Prepared and served the second student supper.

Served a Father-Son banquet for the men and boys of the church.

Baked cakes for the Men's Fellowship for three ice-cream socials.

Served a dinner for the "Peace Workshop," held in our church and Hillel House. This was interdenominational and inter-racial. The workshop was sponsored by the Friend's Service Committee and the Chapel Hill Council of Churches.

Served dessert and coffee after the movie, "The Hidden Heart."

Programs.

Many of our programs have been from the packet, a very interesting one being "The Family Tree."

Read and reviewed both of the study books, "Where'er the Sun" and "Within These Borders."

Observed National Family Week by urging our women to visit new people in the church. Each family sat together the Sunday ending the week. After the worship service, a picnic lunch was served in the Hut, with several new church members as guests of honor.

Planned a program in conjunction with the showing of the movie, "The Hidden Heart."

Read and used THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Guide Posts, and Church Woman.

Used the Devotional Program material in the packet and supplemented when desired or needed.

Cradle Roll.

Mrs. Cherry, our Cradle Roll chairman, has kept a record of all children under three years of age. She has entered all babies at birth, visited all new mothers and remembered each child on his birthday. She held a party for the children and mothers at her home in August.

Special Honors.

Mrs. R. L. Jackson has served as vice-president of the North Carolina Conference for the past two years. Mrs. Jackson will serve as district superintendent for the Raleigh district for the next year.

Your president has served on the Nominating Committee for the North Carolina Conference and also on the district nominating committee.

We gave two Life Memberships during the year.

CORIELLE (Mrs. J. R.) ELLIS,
President.

* * * * *

Pleasant Ridge Has Two Special Programs

The World Community Day service's theme "Let the Children Come to Me," was presented in a program held at Pleasant Ridge on Friday night, November 5, 1945, with the Pleasant Ridge and Spoon's Chapel societies sharing in the program.

Spoon's Chapel was in charge of the worship, with Miss Edith Stout as leader. Mrs. S. H. Pell was pianist. The congregation sang "Come, Holy Spirit"; and Mrs. Max Vestal led in prayer. "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life" was sung by the group, and Spoon's Chapel society gave a responsive reading.

The Pleasant Ridge society presented a pageant, "Light from the Lamp." Speaking characters were: Mother, Kitty Cox; grandmother, Mrs. J. C. Newell; a public health nurse, Mrs. Max Vestal, and public health visitor, Welma Allen. Pantomime characters were: Mrs. Colbert

(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Thanksgiving is a real American holiday. Christmas belongs to all the world, but Santa Claus is rather special with us. Santa is for the "For fun" part of Christmas. It is really the birthday of the Christ Child that we keep.

One mother told about the smallest child in her family saying: "What is Christmas?" Rushing from one kitchen chore to another she said: "The birthday of Jesus, the little Christ Child." The smallest in the family thought for awhile and said: "You always make us a birthday cake, does Jesus get one?" Although she was very busy, the mother stopped and made a cake by her usual birthday cake recipe, she decorated it in white and wrote "Happy Birthday" in pale green. Later the family placed a small green (larger than birthday size) candle on the top and lit it. The father told the family how the Christ child grew to be a man who helped all the world and that he was described as "The Light of the World." The lighted candle reminded them of the growing life and light of Jesus. The cake was cut and each member of the family had a piece. When visitors came to the home they were given a piece of the birthday cake for the Christ Child.

The wise men who came from the East brought their best gifts to the Birthday Child and laid them at his feet. Today we give gifts too, for they remind us of love and sharing. The Bible tells us that "It is more blessed to give than to receive." As you grow older you will find that is true.

The Christ Child himself knew nothing of Christmas or special gifts. What did we know? His special time was probably the Hanukkah or Feast of Lights. It is an eight day festival that comes about the time of our Christmas. Those of you who have studied some Bible history know that the Jewish people had a long struggle to free their country from enemies. In 164. B. C. an army under Judah Maccabee (called "The Hammer") had defeated forces under Antiochus. As a people they gave thanks to God with the rededication of their Temple and the lighting of the Temple candles.

Today our Jewish friends will keep this happy time by a ceremony of lighting the candles. The family will read from the Book of the Macabees, and use the same hymn of praise and prayer for survival as used in those ancient times. The happiest part of this custom is the exchange of gifts and the little folk received a gift each night until the seven Menorah are lit. Let us never forget that our religion came from the Hebrews and they gave us our Christ Child. Even though we do not worship God alike, they do believe the Christ Child grew to be a great teacher, and we can share this blessed season.

O, Hanukkah, O Hanukkah, come light the Menorah!
Let's have a party, we'll all dance the horah.
Gather 'round the table, we'll give you a treat,
Svivonim to play with, levivot to eat.
And while we are playing, the candles are burning low.
One for each night, they shed a sweet light,
To remind us of days long ago.

* * * * *

What Does the Father Do?

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When a family name, new to my dad, was mentioned, he would ask—I can still hear him—"What does the father do?" And, too, when I was a young schoolteacher discussing my pupils, if he heard an unfamiliar name he would ask the same question. What a child's father did was, in truth, not very important to him. His desire was merely, to establish a means of identification.

I, for one, am glad the era of judging those we meet by their ancestors is, more or less, in the dim past. Now, when a name is mentioned, the question is, "What does your friend do?" Today's adults and young folks alike admire the up-and-coming person who is self-reliant and emotionally mature—one who is making a worthwhile social contribution to the world about him.

My neighbor's grandsons placed this want ad in one of our town's newspapers:

"Two competent, trustworthy boys are interested in baby sitting, odd or lawn jobs, to earn for joint boat project. Fair fees. Call 6-3848." These energetic youngsters are learning, and learning fast; to stand on their own feet.

In the business of growing up, children need to learn the satisfaction that comes from achievement. As an eight-year-old friend of mine pointed out, "We like to do whatever we do well!" Yes, one learns to do by doing, and the egos of our growing-up Americans hunger for encouraging assurance, but they know such assurance must be earned.

Our nephew Don, now seventeen, wrote that his parents had bought him a new car to drive to and from home while attending junior college. A relative threw up her hands. "An expensive car at his age!" She exclaimed. "But wait a minute, Myra," another aunt expostulated. "Don has helped in his parents' supermarket since he was nine. He has assumed responsibility like a man. Today, when not in school nor doing extra studying, most of his time is spent working at the store. He has earned the car!"

Parents need to start early and to work continuously at this job of teaching their boys and girls to meet life with happiness and stability. A spoiled, pampered child is neither happy nor self-sufficient. Even young children need small responsibilities, which should become larger as the child develops.

One way of developing self-reliance and, also, a sense of belonging is to encourage the children to take part in family discussions and to share in budget planning. Where such procedure is customary, it is not difficult for them to understand when Mom and Dad explain why "we can not afford the new bicycle." Every young member of the family feels complimented by being invited to share in the financial confidences.

Our children do not learn to be adults in ten easy lessons. They learn by climbing the ladder of life rung by rung. They need to identify themselves with the church and school activities, Junior Red Cross, boy or girl scout organizations, and other worthy causes. Doing this will help them to stand firmly for the right. As one authority puts it: "He joins, serves, persuades, and stands firm."

And so, Mother, Dad, your young-citizens-in-the-making must learn to stand alone. No longer do people ask, "What does his father do?" They want to know about the child himself.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Tips from Tom

Probably a number of our churches had a Youth Work Day for Christ. If yours did, please write us about it; if not, use the suggestions made below for next year's project.

* * *

Some answers have come in from our postcard requests for news; but quite a few more have remained unanswered. Who is falling down on the job, the minister to whom they are mailed, or the youth to whom they are given?

* * *

Note of philosophy: Some one has said that the reason a dog is man's best friend is because he wags his tail and not his tongue.

* * * * *

First Christian Church, Burlington

On Sunday evening November 21, the Pilgrim Fellowship and Junior Missionary Society heard an illustrated talk by Dr. Harold Kernodle of the European tour which Dr. and Mrs. Kernodle took in May and June of this year. Color slides, many of them taken by Dr. Kernodle showed the historic points as well as gorgeous flowering gardens in evidence in late spring in England, France, Holland, and Belgium. Some fifty young people of the two societies were present.

The above groups are planning a special Christmas program to which the parents will be invited on Sunday evening, December 19. The Pilgrim Fellowship is also planning a service with distribution of treats at the Prison Camp in Garham during the Christmas season.

* * * * *

Valley Planning Committee Meets

A meeting was held by the Valley Conference Planning Committee on Sunday, November 21, 1954. The purpose of the meeting was to plan for the coming rally to be held at Bethlehem Church on Sunday, January 30. The spring rally will be held on the fourth Sunday in May at Mount Olive Church. Some plans were made for the rally programs.

It was decided to try and get at least one ear-load of young people to go to Richmond for the state rally.

It was urged that more young people attend these meetings.

KAY KAGEY,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Work Day for Christ

The Junior High Youth Fellowship had a Work Day for Christ on Saturday, November 20. In this project, they did odd jobs such as raking leaves, cleaning out garages, baby sitting, house cleaning, etc., for forty cents an hour. They will give this money to their project of sending a Japanese student to college for one year.

Richard Miltter and Billy Phillips were the boys in charge of receiving calls for workers to report. Mrs. Larry Miltter is in charge of the group.

MRS. CY DELONG.

Note.—Mr. Madren or Mrs. DeLong failed to give the name of the fellowship. We are sure, though, that it is the fellowship of Rosemont Church in South Norfolk.

LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH.

(Continued from page 3.)

course in Applied Multivariate Analysis—whatever that is!

Perhaps we need a course in Applied Religion.

We give plenty of lip service to the philosophy of religion, but do we apply this as we should? We try to learn the history, the pitfalls and the errors of the people in Biblical times, but do we profit as we should from their mistakes? We act like Christians, but are we really as Christian as we pretend? We need to apply our religion.

Too often we practice our religion in the same manner that we carry out traffic rules and regulations on the highways. Sure we know how to drive—we demonstrate how well we can every time we renew our driver's license, but what is our performance on the state highways and on the highway of life? We know what to do but fail to do it.

We console ourselves with the thought that no one else does the right thing all the time and proceed to do as we please, thereby setting a bad example for the other fellow. Our mutual bad example is unfair to both of us.

When I was growing up, I could never understand why my parents kept repeating that I should be a good example for my younger brother. I never did understand exactly what they meant until I had children of my own. Now I understand it very well.

Our example is frequently followed by our associates whether they are younger, or older, or contemporaries. I can almost assure you that any man in this church today who will grow a moustache, will have some of his friends growing one. And any lady who comes out with an absurd little hat will soon find another lady with one equally unique.

Our examples in religion are followed more than we will ever know. We should make sure that they are a help not a pitfall to our fellowman.

Religion in everyday life is Applied Religion, it is the working religion, it is the end product, our knowledge of religion and its ethical, social and individual aspects is worth nothing unless we apply these precepts to our personal actions and serve God and our fellowman.

In the words of Gibran, "Who can separate his faith from his actions, or his belief from his occupation?"

BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN.

(Continued from page 8.)

areas people for whom radio is a unique experience will be listening with the help of pretuned battery receivers and farm pack battery sets provided by the station. A special hour-long program in English is also planned on Sundays for GIs in the country.

The radio station is the joint product of the Korean National Christian Council and of the various missionary groups which together raised more than $130,000 to launch the project. Additional funds for operating expenses are now being sought from church groups in the U. S. Station studios are in Seoul and a 5,000 watt transmitter is located just west of the city.

All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is that good men do nothing.—Edmund Burke.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Yearning for the Living God"

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 12, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "This God is our God for ever and ever." Psalm 48: 14.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Psalms 42, 84, 102: 25-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 63: 1-8.

Homesick and Heartsick.

This man was homesick and heart-sick. He was a devout Hebrew, exiled from his own land, somewhere in the north country. He was among strange people in a strange land, surrounded by pagan people. And a great homesickness and a great heart-sickness came over him. He was homesick for the Temple and its services of worship; he was heartsick for God. He puts all this in striking and vivid language. "As the hart (the stag) panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." It is the picture of a stag, pursued by hounds, tired and famished for water, desperate for any water that might be found near at hand. Or is it the same stag, looking for water during the summer season when the rains had not come, and the water courses had dried up. It is bad enough to be hungry; it is worse to be thirsty. The pangs of hunger pass away and one loses his appetite for food after a season; but thirst becomes more acute all the time. It is often said, "You never miss the water until the well runs dry." This man, perhaps, had not realized what it meant to him to go to the Temple to worship, until he was deprived of this privilege. And now he was hungering and thirsting for God, for the living God. Alas, there are those who have lost the appetite for God. They do not hunger and thirst after his righteousness. But there are those who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, and, thank God, they are filled.

Where Is Thy God?

It did not help the man much to have these pagan strangers taunt him with the question, "Where is thy God?" If this man cared so much for God, and if God cared so much for this man, why didn't God do something about it? Why not? That is the question which not only the skeptic asks, but which the believer himself asks. Why doesn't God do something about these matters anyway? Why doesn't he do something about my case in particular?

Where is thy God? Where indeed? This man thought that God was in the Temple in Jerusalem. He knew he was, for he had found him there. But evidently he did not think that God was with him in his exile. But, of course, God was right there, as well as in the Temple. Where is thy God. Is he in the little church back home in which you used to worship before you moved to the city or to another community? Is he only in your church? Is he with you when you are in the company of your friends? Is he completely absent from you when you are away from home, or among enemies or unbelievers? Come now, my friends, where is your God? Is he "up there in heaven"? Or is he right down here on earth, among men, alongside of you, and inside of you? This question gets right at the heart of religion. Where is thy God?

Tender Memories.

"These things I remember, and pour out my soul within me, how I went with the throng, and led them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, a multitude keeping holyday." He thought about "the old times," "the good old days." Perhaps it was of his boyhood. He remembered how he had "gone to church" and how he had sung songs of praise and thanks. And the memory was too much . . . he broke into tears. Have you ever stood in a strange church and sung some old hymn that you sang in your childhood, or in your old home church "back yonder," and felt that wave of emotion and homesickness sweep over you? Some of us know how this man felt.

Why Art Thou Cast Down?

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why are thou disquieted within me? Well, why? Is your faith dependent upon your unstable emotions and feelings? Because the day is dark and gloomy, have you lost your religion? Because times are hard, do you think God is dead? Do you think your salvation depends upon good works? Does the fact that you have doubts mean that there is nothing to religion? This is a good question. Why are you cast down, anyway? To be sure, if you are disobedient to God, if you are clinging to your sins, if you have not asked for forgiveness, you may well be cast down. But it will help if we ask ourselves once in a while why we are cast down. God never forsakes us, nothing can separate us from the love of Christ, either in this world or in the world to come.

Be of Good Courage.

"Yet Jehovah will command his lovingkindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me, even a prayer unto the God of my life." It may be night, but the day cometh. And even if it is night, he who keeps us neither slumbers nor sleeps. We are to live by our faith, not by our doubt; we are to count our highest moments, our truest moments.

The Source of Inner Strength.

"Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the highways of Zion." There is a power, a strength which does not come from things, or from outside a man; the strength which comes from faith in and fellowship with Christ. Happy is the man who, by waiting on the Lord, lays hold on that strength. As has been said so many times before, the important thing is not what comes to us, but how we handle that which comes to us. And no man can handle life adequately in his own wisdom and strength. Blessed, indeed, is the man whose strength is in the Lord, in whose heart are the highways to Zion, who has the inclination to walk in Jehovah's ways, and who seeks in all his ways to acknowledge him. Such a man shall go on from strength to strength.

Security.

We all instinctively seek security. But there is nothing secure in this world. The world will pass away. The very "foundations of the earth" which God did lay, and "the heavens" which are his handiwork, shall pass away. They shall wax old like a garment, and like a vesture they shall be changed. "But thou (God) art the same, and thy years have no end." From everlasting to everlasting he is God. He, therefore, is our refuge, and underneath are his everlasting arms.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

"LATER THAN YOU THINK."

(Continued from page 5.)

Then, there's that "piker feeling" I would want to get rid of! It is the feeling that I have been living a selfish, little life in so great and needy a world as this. Yes, I'd want to be rid of that with the time so short. I must find out how the "other half" lives.

There was the Scotch deacon with a very dutiful sense about his church but who had trouble getting along with others. He came to his pastor, one day, delighted at the prospect of taking a trip to Palestine. "When I arrive, I'm going to climb Mount Sinai and read the Ten Commandments from its top." The minister reflected quietly for a moment and then replied, "I can think of something better. Stay home and live them." The writer recalls a young man who finally made up his mind to come and unite with the Church. Once he had received baptism and partaken of the Lord's Supper, he said to his pastor, "Do you know, it surely is a relief to be rid of that 'piker feeling.' I should have taken this step long ago."

But do you know, friend, you can have your name on a church membership list and still live a smug and selfish life? You can live in a tragic and challenging world and still be a "rick shaw Christian," as Halford Luccock has suggested. Why speak of evangelism if I have never seriously attempted to lead a single soul to Christ? Why refer unctuously to Christian World Missions if the hunger and lostness of the millions leaves me unstirred? Why speak of social service if ordinary need passes from my door unheeded? In this day, so many moan and murmur about juvenile delinquency. But they have never had a share in extending to the youth, what Ella Lyman Cabot referred to as, temptations to right-doing. Said Jesus, "Why call me Lord and do not what I say?"

In a small, rural village a committee of deacons had gathered to pray about the plight of a certain home. All except one member were present in this needy home, and he was looked upon with disfavor by some. They regarded him as just a little worldly. Surely, those deacons thought, the Lord would send food and clothing to this home as a result of their petitions. And he did, but in a strange way! A large wagon rumbled to the front door of that home. The tall awkward son of the absent deacon got out and knocked at the door.

This was what he said: "Dad said to tell you that he was sending over his prayers in this wagon." And then he proceeded to unload food and clothing, something tangible, that would help keep body and soul together through the long, hard winter.

The lesson to be gained from such a homely incident is not, that we should forsake prayer in the time of need. It is rather that we should not besiege the Dear Lord to do things for others that we can do ourselves.

Is it not startlingly true, that we can live such smug, "religious," selfish lives in a world of suffering and woe? We need to launch out positively, to take the initiative in building a better, more livable world. But we are hamstrung by negatives. We know what we are against, but not sufficiently what we are for. Said Sir Alfred Zimmern, famous historian, "the greatest obstacle in the way of building a just and lasting peace in the world is the small-seale individual." In much the same vein, Dr. Adolph Keller has said, "It is five minutes to twelve on the clock of the world's history." Brethren, it is later than we think. The time is short.

One more thing: Somehow I would want things right between God and my own soul. I'll admit that when I first entered the ministry as a mere lad, I used to scoff at the red letter sign of the Gospel tent: "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." These were the religiously qucer people, with weird ideas in their heads about the end of the world. They were always trying to frighten people into repentance with their strange prognostications about the coming of Christ. This was the lunatic fringe.

That was what I said and what I thought, then. Today I am no longer so intolerant toward these sects. They teach an element of truth we need to heed. If time is of the essence, in the Christian scheme, then God knocks on my reluctant heart saying, Are you ready? Are you living a life that is deserving of the gift of Eternal Life, here and here-after? I'm done laughing at "fox hole" religion. It was Senaea who said, "Let me live every moment as though it were to be my last." And none other than Jesus teaches us to have our loins girt, and our lamps trimmed, and to be as servants, to whom much has been entrusted, ready for their Lord's return. (Luke 12:40.)

If it could be dinned in on my mind that time is of the essence, I would seize on the mighty and sovereign commands and promises of the Bible and, with God's help, make them my very own. I would take time by the forelock! I would stop dawdling and postponing in matters of life and death, affecting my eternal destiny.

When Mr. Daniel S. Ford, former editor of the Youth's Companion, died, they found on a conspicuous place on his desk, much worn with frequent handling, the following poem. It was a fitting epitome of one who had done so much to lift the burdens of others, and to be kind and helpful towards all men.

The bread that bringeth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live:
I want to help the fainting day by day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
Faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears,
Beauty for ashes may I give a way:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith,
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

"Brethren, the time is short."
It's later than we think." "We shall not pass again this way!"

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 9.)

Allen, Clarice Newell, Emma Allen, Susan Pell, Johnnie Beane, Butch Newell, Mrs. Earl Lowdermilk, Evan Cox, Elaine Beane and Mrs. Hilton Beane.

Miss Stout led another responsive reading. The offering was then taken and gifts of clothing for overseas relief for children were brought to the altar and dedicated with prayer by Miss Stout.

* * *

On Sunday night, November 7, 1954, the Pleasant Ridge Society had their Thank Offering service, with Mrs. S. H. Pell as leader. Mr. S. H. Pell and Rev. Max Vestal had part on the program. A film, "The Beginning," was shown. This film told of the Stryker family, who learned the importance of tithing. An offering was then taken for home missions. This offering will go to help a church near South Boston, Virginia. Rev. Max Vestal closed the program with prayer.

VELMER ALLEN,
Reporter.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our report this week brings us to $43,229.71. Our goal is $70,000.00. Well, to the top and over the top is a long ways, but prayer and hard work of the part of 35,000 church members ought to make it not too difficult. There are some of that 35,000 who are really working at it—a good many of them in fact—and I hope we shall make it.

If your church and Sunday school has not yet received the Thanksgiving offering for the Orphanage please get busy and receive it. It will be a joy for the people to have a share in supporting these children. Tell them that most of the year we have had 83 boys and girls here, that right now we have 79, 38 of whom are boys. They are all 79 of them a happy, healthy lot.

You will not have to argue with them, but just let them have a chance to make a contribution along with their fellow members and you will rejoice with them in the result. If every church in the Southern Convention "passes the plate" and tells those to whom it is passed that the offering will go to the Christian Orphanage, and means it, the results will be sufficient and everybody will be happy. Everything depends on giving the people a chance to contribute. If I could see all the people, or if you could see them all, and ask them for a donation our problems would be solved; but neither you nor I can see them all. However there are enough of us reading these lines to influence our churches to "pass the plate" either in Sunday school or church or both. For these children's, and for the church's sake let us receive an offering during November or December for the orphanage. Thank you. And God bless you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER 25, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Mrs. Howard Hensley, Elkton, Va.
Mrs. L. A. Logan, Elberon, Va.
Mrs. J. K. Landrum, Vernon Hill, Va.
Smithwood Christian Church.

Cloth:

Cone Mills Corp., Greensboro, N. C.
Columbia Mfg. Co., Ramseur, N. C.

Clothing:

Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, Guilford College, N. C.
W. T. Simpson, Burlington, N. C.

Canned goods:
St. Mark's Evangelical & Reformed Church,
Burlington, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $13,050.47

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Bethel $ 68.70

68.70

Eastern Va. Conference:

Antioch S. S. $ 7.59

7.59

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Berea $ 24.00

Bethel S. S. 11.71

Bethlehem 1.00

Burlington, First 50.00

Concord 5.00

Elon College 107.74

Gibbsville 44.00

Mt. Zion, S. S. 5.04

Salem Chapel 10.00

258.49

Western N. C. Conference:

Antioch (R) $ 8.00

Grace's Chapel 50.00

New Center 20.00

Providence Chapel 2.50

Zion 30.00

110.50

Virginia Valley Conference:

Mt. Olivet (G) S. S. ... $ 3.00

3.00

Total $ 448.28

Grand total $13,498.75

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $27,545.67

Ladies' and Men's Bible

Class, Winchester Ch. . $ 10.00

Young People's Class,

Reidsville Church 20.00

Burlington Asso. of Insurance Women 32.00

H. O. Byrd, Suffolk, Va. 12.00

Cong. Christian Sunday school, Columbus, Ga. 5.79

In Memory of Mr. & Mrs.

H. V. Simpson 10.00

In Memory of W. O.

Petrea 7.50

In Memory of Fred Sellars 15.00

In Memory of Walter R.

Sellars 15.00

In Memory of W. H. May,

Sr. 15.00

Thanksgiving Offerings:

Miss Vera E. Gilham,

Greensboro, N. C. .. 50.00

S. G. Womack, Greensboro, N. C. 100.00

O'Kelly Bible Class,

Greensboro, First Ch. 50.00

Mr. & Mrs. C. M. Fields and family, San Leandro, Calif. 10.00

Mr. & Mrs. H. B. Newman, Henderson, N. C. 10.00

Mrs. & Mrs. R. C. Jarrett,

Hampton, Va. 10.00

John H. Vernon, Bur-

lington, N. C. 25.00

Mrs. Belle F. Robinson,

Albany, N. Y. 25.00

Mr. & Mrs. J. A. Russell, Suffolk, Va. ... 50.00

C. B. Ellis Music Co.,

Burlington, N. C. ... 25.00

Mr. & Mrs. Doyle Me-

Farland, Sanford, N.

C. 200.00

Mr. & Mrs. A. D. Moore,

Burlington, N. C. ... 25.00

Mrs. J. Penn, Reidsville,

N. C. 25.00

R. O. Strange, Vernon

Hill, Virginia 35.00

Bernard Cone, Greensboro, N. C. 25.00

Mrs. W. M. Downey,

South Boston, Va. ... 20.00

A. D. Pate & Co., Bur-

lington, N. C. 10.00

Ed M. Hicklin, Burling-

ton, N. C. 5.00

A. V. Beck, Burlington,

N. C. 10.00

Hugh L. Holland, Suffolk, Va. 25.00

A. L. Curling, South

Norfolk, Va. 10.00

Mr. Marion H. Huber,

Cincinnati, Ohio ... 5.00

Sykes Foundry & Machine Co., Burlington,

N. C. 25.00

Mr. & Mrs. J. P. Johnson, Richmond, Va. . 20.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address

"White Christmas"

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.
(Paramount.)

Those remembering "Holiday Inn" will make inevitable comparisons with this amusing, colorful and spirited musical romance which it may have inspired. Those who have no such recollection may well enjoy this sprightly extravaganza on its own merits. It has a plot combining enough sentiment and pathos as well as comedy, singing, and dancing to hold interest. Some well known songs by Irving Berlin are included, and new ones which have already become popular are offered, such as "Count Your Blessings" whose sane philosophy is refreshing.

Two entertainers with hearts of gold and an eye toward romance—Bing Crosby and Danny Kaye—have become a famous team since they were war buddies. They cooperate in reviving the lagging resort hotel owned by their old division general, who seems to have joined the "not wanted" ranks since the close of the war. Calling the Army esprit de corps to the rescue, they restore the inn to prosperity and the general to self-confidence. A "sister act"—Rosemary Clooney and Vera-Ellen—is helped along and "White Christmas" undoubtedly leads on to the "Wedding March," the girls contributing their own talent to this elaborate confecton.

Beautiful Technicolor in bright hues embellishes this Paramount presentation with Vistavision giving depth and panoramic prospective to lavish production numbers, elaborate settings and scenic effects which compete with one another for visual enjoyment.

Good Holiday fare for the family.

Protestants Studying Papal Statement

An extensive study of the implications of the recent statement of Pope Pius XII that the authority of the Roman Catholic Church is not limited to purely religious matters is being made by Protestant and Orthodox Church leaders in this country.

Dr. Claud Nelson, executive director of the Department of Religious Liberty of the National Council of Churches, said last week that many Protestants share the conviction expressed by the Vatican as to Christian rights and responsibilities in the political realm, but would be seriously concerned with the way in which they are exercised, and particularly with the role of church authorities.

Pope Pius discussed the church's jurisdiction in temporal realms at a special audience to 900 prelates and theologians assembled in Rome. He declared that all of natural law, "its foundation, its interpretation and its application, so far as moral aspects extend" is within the sphere of the church.

Important differences are apparent, said Dr. Nelson, between positions taken by Protestant churches and those indicated in the Pope's address. "Among those readily observed," he said, "are the direct responsibility of the individual believer as affirmed by Protestants, different means and degrees of exercising social and political influence, and ideas concerning the nature and responsibility of the state as a secular institution. Clarification of these and other differences waits not only on further study, but on observation of the specific effect given in practice to Pope Pius' declaration of principles."

Dr. Nelson said the papal pronouncement also will be studied with regard to areas of thought and action in which parallel efforts by Protestants and Roman Catholics may be persued.

He emphasized that reactions are only tentative pending further clarification. The text of the Pope's statement, he said, will be sent by the National Council to representatives of its thirty-member communions in the United States.

"CHRISTMAS AND THE GOOD NEWS."

(Continued from page 6.)

Creator. This must be what the Sainted Augustine had in mind when he cried out in his Confessions, "O God, thou has made us for thyself, and our souls are restless until they find rest in thee."

The essential Christmas story announces an indescribable climax in the approach of God to man, a love story whose depth, whose height, whose richness, whose power, whose glory can never be known or expressed. The person in whose soul this story comes to be stale, dry and mere sing-song should never try to tell it to another. Such a soul should stand before Rafael's Sistine Madonna and meditate upon its lovely and loving significance until his soul is quickened and made to thrill with joy at what is here announced. The curtain between the spirit world and the material world is unfolded, the Virgin is entering our world bearing the Son of God upon her arms; the Pope, the saint, the cherubs and the angels are giving response as best they can with a wonder and amazement that no tongue can tell nor any pen describe.

The same type of response is given by the angelic song which shouts, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace among men in whom I am well pleased." The aged Simeon takes the babe into his arms and cries, "And now lettest thou thy servant depart, O Lord, according to thy word in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples: A light for revelation to the Gentiles, And the glory of thy people Israel." (Luke 2:29-32.)

A turning point in the history of the universe had come. Henceforth and forever after this, God's operations with men will be divided into two sections—B. C. and A. D.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Mrs. W. H. Ayseue, Henderson, N. C. ...	10.00
Mt. Bethel Cong. Christian Ch., Summerfield, N. C.	36.00
Woman's Missionary Society, Randleman Cr. Earl Russell, Suffolk, Va.	5.00
Shallow Ford Christian Church	100.00
Mrs. W. C. Wicker and Mrs. Ruth Rogers, Elon College, N. C. ...	10.00
Baker Cammack Hosiery Mills, Inc., Burlington, N. C.	100.00
Mr. T. M. Stroud, Sr., Greensboro, N. C. ...	5.00
Mrs. J. L. Burford, Winston-Salem, N. C.	10.00
W. C. Mull, Burlington, N. C.	100.00
Mr. & Mrs. Philip W. Faucette, Brown Summit, N. C.	5.00
"A Friend to the Orphanage"	1.00
A. C. Shearer Co., Chapel Hill, N. C.	50.00
Mr. & Mrs. Thomas W. Cates, Burlington, N. C.	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. R. Carter, Ruffin, N. C.	10.00
Burlington Rotary Club	664.00
Mrs. Eugenia G. Wilson, Burlington, N. C. ...	100.00
Special Gifts	20.00
	<hr/> 2,185.29
Grand total	$29,730.96
Total for the week	$ 2,633.57
Total for the year	$43,229.71

ABUNDANT LIFE

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." John 10:10.

Without God, there is death--the death of sin. Saint Paul writes of this state: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." (Ephesians 2:1.) There are the dead among the living, people who have immortal souls but without spiritual life. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Christ is, indeed, "The Way, the Truth and the Life." It is wonderful that in Christ we find life. The deaf found life coming into their ear drums, the blind found life in their optical nerves, the lame leaped as a hart as life flowed through their helpless limbs, and the dead come forth alive. All who believe in Christ with a saving faith, find life—joyful life—blessed life—that makes the heart rejoice in its new-found love.

Since there is life through Christ, there is also abundant life. "Even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it." (Ephesians 5:25,26.) There is a second installment of life in salvation, realized in cleansing and the power of the Holy Ghost. The cleansing is permanently received, but the anointing of power, or of abundant life, must continue to be received. One cleansing—many re-fillings. Heart purity has to do with our character and entrance into heaven, power has to do with our service, accomplishments and reward. Unless we continue to be filled with the Spirit, we will never accomplish very much. Abundant life, or power, must continuously be received, or we dry up. The church is dying for lack of food and power.

The Bible says: "Saul increased the more in strength." (Acts 9:22.) D. L. Moody once said: "We are leaky vessels and must stay under the fountain to keep full. I would rather say 'pouring out vessels.'" Christ said to Peter: "Feed my sheep." How can we give out unless we receive, and we must tarry, wait on God, to receive. The one hundred and twenty tarried in Jerusalem until their hearts were purified and they were filled with the Holy Ghost; then abundant life flowed like rivers over Jerusalem, and three thousand souls drank and rejoiced because the river of life reached them. If the early church had stopped "tarrying" the Acts of the Apostles would have had a short record.

Do we want to be successful? The only way is by having abundant life. It is God's plan. We are to be channels for the Holy Ghost to flow through. God so created us that we give out what we possess in our souls. The devil is continually trying to fill us with himself, or with evil spirits. Let us keep filled with the power of the Holy Ghost, thereby transmitting for God. Do not economize on the power of God. Let the ocean of omnipotence have you as a channel, then God can use you as an instrumentality in his hands to reach thousands with the water of life—S. H. Oakes.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1954

NUMBER 48

Elon College Library X

A Prayer

God, though this life is but a wraith,
Although we know not what we use,
Although we grope with little faith,
Give me the heart to fight—and lose.

Ever insurgent let me be,
Make me more daring than devout;
From sleek contentment keep me free,
And fill me with a buoyant doubt.

Open my eyes to visions girt
With beauty, and with wonder lit—
But let me always see the dirt,
And all that spawn and die in it.

Open my ears to music; let Me thrill with Spring's first flutes and drums—
But never let me dare forget
The bitter ballads of the slums.

From compromise and things half-done,
Keep me, with stern and stubborn pride;
And when, at last, the fight is won,
God, keep me still unsatisfied.

—Louis Untermeyer.

News Flashes

Rev. Bill Simmons is the new pastor of Hanks Chapel and Turner's Chapel churches.

Supt. Scott conducted services at New Elam Church on Sunday, November 28. Rev. E. M. Powell is the new pastor of New Elam.

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, is presenting its Annual Christmas Pageant, "The Beauty and Pageantry of the Birth of Christ," at 5:00 p. m., on Sunday, December 19. The program will be presented in the church sanctuary.

Rev. Fred P. Register, Evangelism and Stewardship secretary, and Rev. John S. Graves, Christian Education secretary, began their services for the Convention on December 1. They may be addressed at Elon College, N. C.

The Rev. Earl T. Farrell, for five and a half years the pastor of the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, submitted his resignation, Sunday, December 5, 1954. Mr. Farrell has accepted a call to the pastorate of Wake Chapel, Wake County, North Carolina.

Last night we worked late. As we were driving home, we decided to turn on the radio. There was beautiful music coming in over the air, but soon it stopped, and "the announcer" spoke: "You are hearing this broadcast of after dinner music by courtesy of the Bla Bla Brewing Company," and proceeded to tell the many virtues of Bla Bla Beer. We didn't stop to listen, but switched to another station—just in time to hear someone say, "We are bringing you the news through the courtesy of"—another brewing company. We tried a third station, and then turned the radio off in disgust. We suppose if we had listened long enough, we would have heard them wishing us an exciting and a dangerous Christmas season.

Foreign Students in North Carolina

For the second year the North Carolina Council of Churches has carried out a survey of the foreign students enrolled in our state's colleges and universities, according to the Reverend Morton R. Kurtz, Executive Director.

The results of the survey reveal that 461 students from 63 nations and territories outside the United States are enrolled in North Carolina institutions of higher learning. Thirty-two of the 35 schools replying to the questionnaire sent out indicated that they had one or more foreign students, and only 3 reported none. Schools reporting the largest number were: North Carolina State College, Raleigh—144; University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill—79; Duke University, Durham—68; Warren Wilson College, Swannanoa—42. Results of the survey were sent out to the denominational bodies constituting the North Carolina Council.

It is expected that churches will increase efforts already being made to welcome these students into the community in which they are located, as well as inviting them to visit various homes and churches. "The presence of these young people in our midst," said Mr. Kurtz, "affords all of us a welcome opportunity to acquaint them with the best features of our country and thus make new friends for us around the world. We, in turn, can learn from them and gain broader understanding of our friends and neighbors."

Rev. Earl T. Farrell Offers His Resignation to Cypress Chapel

To the members of Cypress Chapel Congregational Christian Church: After much thought and prayer, and counsel with friends, I have come this morning to give to the church a decision that on faith I have finally made. It is not easy to make this statement, because our relationship has been friendly and you have been helpful to me and to my family during the years of my ministry among you.

The church, I believe in all humility, has during the years of my ministry among you, made some progress, for which it is a source of satisfaction to me. Five and one-half years I have served as your pastor, three of which has been full-time. The church is out of debt, interest is keen, attendance is good, and the spirit of the church is healthy. Your opportunity has never been greater, the church is ready to move forward with a greater service to this community, and to take a larger share in our denomination's work both here and abroad.

(Continued on page 7.)

Advisory Council of the American Bible Society Meets

An estimated budget of $3,544,000 for the work of the American Bible society for 1955 was unanimously approved at the 36th annual meeting of the Advisory Council of the Society, meeting on November 30 and December 1 at the Society's headquarters in New York City. Seventy-four members and guests, representing 54 different communions were present. This is the largest group that has attended these annual sessions, representing, as they do, those churches that place the Bible Society in their yearly budgets as their recognized agency for Scripture translation, publication and distribution.

The session was opened with a memorial service for the late Dr. Frank H. Mann, general secretary of the Bible Society, who died on October 11. The service was conducted by Dr. J. A. Aasgaard of Minneapolis, official representative of the Evangelical Lutheran Church and Dr. Francis C. Stiffer of the Bible Society. Dr. Mann inaugurated and was responsible for the program of the Advisory Council. Before his death he had chosen as the theme for these meetings, "These Are the Lively Oracles of God." Dr. Robert T. Taylor, who had worked closely with Dr. Mann on the program, presided at the meetings.

The Rev. Richard H. Ellingson reported that Bible distribution in this country last year rose to almost ten million volumes in 81 different languages. In every state, and often county by county, trained people are now at work distributing Scriptures as representatives of the Bible Society. Twice during the Society's history a nation-wide effort has been made to supply whole Bibles for every Bibleless home. Of recent years, Mr. Ellingson said, such efforts have been state-wide or city-wide on a rotating basis so that every section of the country will be covered periodically.

Mr. Ellington, a former Navy chaplain, stated that last year 1,301,145 volumes of the Scriptures were supplied to Navy chaplains by the Bible Society for free distribution. Ever since its first grant of Bibles to the Navy in 1820, the American Bible Society has freely supplied military chaplains with all the Scriptures needed for their men, totalling over

(Continued on page 15.)

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Executive Board of Laymen's Fellowship to Meet

A meeting of the Executive Board of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention has been called for December 18, 1954, at 2 p. m., in the Alamance Hotel, Burlington, N. C. The call for the meeting is being made by Mr. W. B. Williams of Newport News, Va., who is chairman of the Convention Fellowship. Slated for discussion at the meeting, among other things, is the planning of the Mid-Winter Rally Meeting.

* * * * *

Amelia Laymen Organize Laymen's Fellowship

An organizational meeting of the men of Amelia Church was held on November 14, 1954, according to a report received from the secretary, Mr. Clyde Daniels.

Sam Amos and Johnny McKinney of the Wake Chapel Church, met with the Amelia men to explain something about the Laymen's Fellowship and how they might go about the business of organizing a local group.

Tinny Daughtry was elected president; Leon Stevens, vice-president; Clyde Daniels, secretary-treasurer, and Jack Penny, chairman of the Program Committee.

* * * * *

Who'll Represent Your Conference at the National Convention?

An effort is being made to have at least one representative from each of our Conference Fellowships to attend the National Convention of the Laymen's Fellowship, which will be held at the Palmer House in Chicago, Ill., February 25-27, 1955. Special hotel rates are offered for those who make their reservations early. Contact me immediately if you are planning to go and wish to make reservations as a member of the group.

J. E. DANIELEY,
Elon College, N. C.

The General Assembly

Are the nation's churches effectively discharging their responsibilities in a society wracked by turbulent change? This is the underlying question facing some 2500 leaders of the nation's largest religious organization meeting this week for the Third General Assembly of the National Council of the Churches of Christ, in Boston.

The challenge was posed by the Council's two highest administrative officials in the biennial message on "The State of The Churches" delivered today (Monday) at the first formal plenary session of the Assembly. Throughout the week church delegates representing 30 communions with a combined constituency of some 35,000,000 people will meet together in some 65 different sessions in an effort to answer the question and chart new patterns of action for the Council.

Citing formidable increases in church membership, material resources and progress towards co-operative unity shown by the Council's 30 constituent communions the Rev. Dr. Roy C. Ross, general secretary and the Rev. Dr. Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary, stated that "with God's guidance, the churches can be sufficient to our times." At the same time they also strongly suggested further self study by the church as a whole to define the problems more accurately and determine whether they are being adequately met.

Some of the challenges confronting the churches today, the general secretaries said, are: Dangerous moral conditions, including juvenile

(Continued on page 7.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardestale.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Trnitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

From the EDITORIAL Viewpoint

High Moments and Hard Work

Jesus had his high moments of spiritual exaltation. His baptism was such an experience, when he heard a voice from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The close of the temptation experience was another. After forty days of fasting, the tempter sought in vain for a weak spot in the spiritual armor of Jesus. "Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

The climactic event in the earthly experience of Jesus was his Transfiguration. There the past and the present became one, as Jesus faced the immediate future. The glory of heaven illumined human flesh and its material habiliments. Peter, vaguely aware of contact with the eternal, suggested that they build three tabernacles there, that they might come again, and others with them, to behold the glory which they had seen.

If Jesus made any reference to Peter's suggestion, it is not recorded. But before they had rejoined the other disciples, it is recorded that Jesus reminded them that he must suffer many things and be set at nought. When they came to the other disciples a great multitude had assembled about them, and in the company was a man who had brought his epileptic son whom the disciples had been unable to heal. Jesus healed the man's son and restored him to his father.

So it was with Jesus during his earthly ministry. There were moments of high spiritual exaltation, but most of the time there was the giving of himself in ministering to the needs of suffering people. It is the same with those who follow Jesus today. They have occasional soul-stirring moments, but the most of life is given to routine duties and the daily round of hard work.

There are those who seek a constant stirring of their emotions as the fruit of their Christian living. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." To be a Christian is to have in one's heart the Spirit of Christ. To know the Father is to serve as Christ served. It is hard work and not the high moments alone which makes for the abundant life.

Southern Convention History

The Southern Convention has done a poor job of recording and preserving its history. Many of the churches were organized one hundred and fifty years ago. In 1946, the Southern Convention will be celebrating the centennial of its organization. The Convention has made history, but much of its early history has been lost because no one realized its importance to future generations.

Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Virginia, has been requested to prepare the historical sketch for the Centennial Celebration. He will do that work well. If any readers of The Christian Sun have material concerning matters that are pertinent, Dr. Johnson will appreciate the use of it.

The Elon College Library has a Church History Room for the special purpose of preserving all types of materials of historic interest concerning the Southern Convention. Mrs. Oma Johnson, Elon College Librarian, has taken an active interest in the Church History Room; and has collected much valuable material. She is convinced that many of our church homes still have old papers, books and clippings which contain useful data. If this material is sent to the Church History Room, it will be safely protected there. If not, it may be ultimately lost.

Much of the history of the Convention is the history of the churches themselves. Very few of our churches have a complete record of their own history. If your church is fifty years old and has a complete set of minutes of its business meetings, it is to be highly commended. It frequently happens that when a new record book is purchased the old one is soon lost.

Every local church in the Convention should begin immediately to prepare a history of its church life. Every year that it is delayed the more difficult it will be to do. Certainly steps should be taken to prevent any loss of data that is now available. Every Conference in the Convention would do well to begin at once to compile the history of the constituent churches. When such histories have been made as complete as possible, they should be typed in duplicate, the church secretary filing one copy in the records of the church, and sending the other to the Church History Room in the Elon College Library.

Christ's Way of Winning the World

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

First Church, Richmond, Va.

In the first chapter of the fourth gospel, we find the basic principle of the technique which Christ wished his followers to use in the winning of the world to an appreciation of God, "And he introduced him to Jesus."

Andrew, on the occasion referred to, introduced his brother Simon to Jesus, and in that simple act rendered to God and humanity the greatest service of his life. That personal introduction by Andrew, of Simon, later to be known as Peter, gave Jesus contact with a life, without which the story of Christianity would have been sadly incomplete.

It was by personal contacts, personal introductions, that Jesus was enabled to launch the divinely human enterprise of his Church, against which the powers of evil shall never prevail.

Andrew introduced others to Jesus besides his brother Simon. It was Andrew who introduced the Greeks to Jesus—Phillip and his friends who had made known their desire to see Jesus. It was Andrew who introduced to Jesus the lad who was willing to share with the crowd his five barley crackers and two sardines. Not until the Books of Judgment unfold will we know what far-reaching significance those introductions had in laying the foundations of the Church and in promoting the work of the Kingdom of Christ upon earth. But as we read the gospel narrative, we are reminded again and again that through personal contacts Jesus envisioned the building of his Kingdom of Love and Truth among men.

Down through the centuries, since Andrew introduced Simon to Jesus, the greatest privilege and the greatest responsibility of those who have believed in the Lordship of Jesus has been and is to introduce their relatives, friends, neighbors, business associates and other people who have not personally met the Lord of Life, to introduce them to Jesus.

Pastors cannot assume that responsibility and privilege for the individual member of the church they serve. Professional revivalists absolutely cannot relieve pastors, or the laity either, of their individual responsibility in this, the basic work of the churches.

Dwight L. Moody, perhaps the most widely known layman of the Congregational Church of the past generation, was declared by the merchant prince, Marshall Field, to know more about salesmanship than any other man he had ever met. Early in life, Mr. Moody turned his back upon the alluring business career that had opened before him and dedicated his talents of salesmanship to the service of the churches of all denominations, giving as his reason that he felt that the laymen of the churches were falling down on their job in failing to act as contact media in the recruiting program of the Kingdom. Mr. Moody, while at the height of his fame, which spread throughout the English-speaking world, told a large gathering of laymen, that unless the churches recaptured the conviction that the genius of Christianity lies in "each one winning one," the very churches themselves would be responsible for the retarding, if not the defeating of Christ's program of human redemption.

Leaders in every denomination today are realizing the dire need of the conviction that every person who professes to be a Christian is honor-bound to prove that fact by influencing someone else to become a Christian.

It is realized that because of the cheap, clap-trap pronouncements of some professional revivalists, and because of the programs of certain religious cults that have sprung up throughout the land, partly due to the failure of the established denominations vigorously to sound the note of the evangel, that because of the offensiveness of the message and the method of the wrong type of evangelism, literally thousands of established churches have allowed themselves, seemingly, to forget that there is longer a place for even a rational evangelism, or longer any responsibility resting upon the laity of the church in its program of Christian recruitment.

But unless the established churches recapture their interest in and passion for passing on the torch of faith to other hands, they will find that gradually, but surely, their horizons will be narrowing, while the numerous cults will be thriving upon the fact of the evangelistic indifference of the established churches. A commonsense program of man to man religion is one of the greatest needs of the world today, and the outstand-need of the established churches.

Thomas Carlyle, while a professor in the University of Edinburgh, in addressing a large mass-meeting of students, made this thought-provoking statement, "To have been the evangelist of a single soul is not to have lived in vain." In other words, for a single person to be able to influence a single life to seek and follow in the Christian way of life, is to fulfill the highest mission of human experience. If, down through the years, the men and women and boys and girls of all the churches had accepted that responsibility, the mushroom growth of the cults could not have taken place. Moreover, if down through the years since Jesus Christ launched his program of human redemption, all the men and women who called him Lord, had accepted the responsibility of introducing another life to Christ and the Christian way of life, how different would be the state of the Church Universal and the whole world at this time!

Christ's way of winning the world, the plan on which he depends, is that fo personal contacts—"Each one win one." The world can never be won for Christ and the good life by legislation or by any other plan devised by man. It is only as men and women, whose lives God has touched, in turn, touch other lives, that the kingdoms of this world can be made to become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

The greatest thing anyone can do is to introduce some other person to Christ. Introducing people to Christ is the major responsibility and the highest privilege of every church member. It is the primary and most vital responsibility of the church itself. This in no way discounts the import of other responsibilities of the church for Christian social action, Christian legislation, Christian stewardship, etc., etc. But it is the recognition of the fact that all the other work of the church can but languish if the church neglects this, the primary task of evangelization.

Without a sincere appreciation of this fact on the part of the members of any church, no church can fill its mission in society. Without sincere regard for and acceptance of this responsibility, any, and every church

(Continued on page 13.)

"Christmas and the Good News"

No. 2 of Three Articles

By W. R. CULLOM

One of the brightest men of my day, I think, was Mr. Alley of Birmingham, Alabama. His pen-name was "Hambone." His picture—that of a typical post-war plantation Negro, along with one of his sayings—was for a long time a regular feature of many of our papers. I enjoyed "Hambone" greatly. One of his cleverest sayings probably was this: "Parson sho' skunt'm last night. He didn't splanify; he didn't argyfy; but he sho' did specify." In closing a former word on the theme named in my heading, I promised to specify a few items in this Good News. Three of these occur to me here:

1. We live, and move, and have our being in a universe whose Maker and whose Ruler is friendly in spirit, in attitude, and in purpose, toward all his creatures. He is a Person who thinks, who plans, and who loves, and all this is done in accordance with infinite wisdom. These are large claims that I am here making, but if the coming of Jesus into our world and his teaching as to the eternal verities do not bring to us all that I am naming here, then I have read the Scriptures and have experienced and observed life to no purpose.

We are thus not left to drift in a world of chaos, of uncertainty, of haphazardness. On the contrary, we are a part of a world of purpose, of order, of meaning. I consider the prologue to John's Gospel (1:1-18) to be the greatest piece of writing ever penned on this earth. The term "Word" here is "Logos" in the Greek. I know very little Greek, but I think I have a good idea and an accurate one as to the meaning of this word. It might well be thought of as the soul of the universe. The preposition in verse one is a most interesting one. It is pros, and is made up of two other prepositions, pro, "before," and eis, "into." So that it may be thought of as one standing face to face with God, and at the same time as moving into him. What a concept! Verse 14 tells us that this Logos "became flesh," and "dwelt among us." And what was the purpose of his coming? In verse 18 of this prologue we see this purpose plainly stated as being that of bringing God out into the open where he can be seen and known in personal fellowship. The basic motive in the God thus revealed is love as seen in that matchless statement John 5:16. All this is the best of news for the universe as such and for each person as a member of the universe.

2. If the coming of Jesus in the Logos is the unveiling of God, then the attitude of Jesus toward men is a revelation of God's attitude toward men. If this shows us anything it is that God is deeply concerned for each and every individual human being in all the earth. When our Lord's disciples would turn back those bringing little children to him, he was displeased with them and told them to "suffer the children to come" (Mark 10:14). I was called on to conduct the funeral of a man who seemed to me and to those who knew him best to have lived a very unworthy life. What was I to say? Was I to consign him to the traditional hell? I took as my text our Lord's comparison of God's care for each "sparrow that falls to the ground." Did I misrepresent God? I don't think so. How can one read the parable of the good Samaritan (Luke 10); or that of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15), and think I misrepresented him? Look again at the parables of the Lost Sheep, the Lost Coin. If the coming of Jesus into our midst; if the teaching of Jesus; if the example of Jesus; if the death of Jesus; teaches anything it is that God cares for each individual, however insignificant or even however unworthy that individual may be. His message is that whosoever will may come. If this is not good news for such a world as ours and for such men and women as we, what could be such news?

3. A third specific item in this good news is to be found in the task that he assigns to his followers. Just before he left his disciples he said in his prayer of benediction, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world" (John 17:18). What a marvellous privilege to become thus associated with Jesus in the identical task he himself is doing! And that disciple who is known as the "disciple of love," tells us that in the eternal tabernacle of God "his servants shall serve him" (Rev. 22:3). So that the holy and happy mission that he has assigned to his followers is to go on through eternity. Surely, here is good news of the highest and richest possible sort!

What then is a fitting response on our part to such good news? This will be the topic of a further word on my theme.

W. R. CULLOM.

"It Shall Not Happen Again"

By CRAIG THOMPSON

Three men who made rich contributions to their own world and to that of those who followed them, each died of tuberculosis, and each died too soon. They were Frederick Chopin, the pianist and composer; Anton Chekhov, the dramatist and author, and Sidney Lanier, the poet and musician.

Taking the last first, it is recorded of Lanier that, lying in bed with his beard flowing over the coverlet, his eyes glistening beneath an ivory brow and his body burning with a temperature of 104 degrees, he dictated his greatest poem, "Sunrise." In it a man made helpless by a scourge, filled with the overpowering desire to go on living and creating, found courage to ask of a tree:

" . . . with your myriad palms upturned in the air,
Pray me a myriad prayer."

Too soon thereafter he died, on September 7, 1881, not then 40 years of age.

And Chekhov. He wrote "The Cherry Orchard" and filled it with the anguish of frustrated youth and the spirit of decadent middle-age, and told it in universal terms, so that it became an ageless play in all languages. And he did this in the year that he died. That was in 1904, and he was 44.

And Chopin, who compressed into music the rolling thunder and the ruthless fury of the French Revolution, did it, also, within the year that he died. He, like Lanier, was 39, and the scourge claimed him on March 1, 1849.

Three tombstones bearing the death dates of 1849, 1881, 1904. Three men, a Polish born Frenchman, a Russian

(Continued on page 11.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Virginia Valley:
Winchester S. S.	$ 10.00
Linville	25.66
	<hr/> 100.66
Total to date	$12,450.91

Elon College To-Mor-Row

We know pretty well what Elon College is today. We may turn the pages of history and form an opinion of what it was yesterday. What it shall be to-mor-row depends upon those who love it and how much they love it. Love expresses itself in gratitude. Gratitude expresses itself in sacrifice. Sacrifice is the giving of one's self and possessions for the object of his or her affections.

Elon College was built under the inspiration of a vision for the training and development of youth and the coming of the kingdom of God through the church. It has sought prayerfully and diligently to accomplish its God given mission.

At times the going has been hard, exceedingly hard, forced to cary on without money and prestige. But even so its friends, those who lived it, never forsook it. The church and alumni have stood by determined that its doors should stay open for those who would come and they continue to come in ever increasing numbers. Elon College stands today at the zenith of its existence. To appreciate its present conditions and hopes for to-mor-row it would be helpful to compare yesterday with today.

During the first week in September 1932 there were 86 students enrolled. For the entire year of 1932-33, with the addition of 36 transfers from old Atlantic University, the enrollment barely exceeded 200. During the first two weeks in September 1954, 916 students were enrolled. Indications are that the total enrollment for the coming year will exceed 950.

The college faculty 1932-33 numbered 22 members. For the current year there is a total of 47 faculty members well prepared by training and experience in their respective fields.

From 1931 to 1936 were hard years for Elon College. There was but little money for salaries and expenses. No money for the payment of past debts that totaled an unbelievable amount. For 1954-55 there is money for past obligations and current needs. Faculty salaries are nearly doubled for the current year. And there is now no necessity for creditors to wait unduly long for settlements in full.

Elon College now enjoys first class ratings by institutions, colleges, accrediting agencies and the general public. It has the honor and respect of all who are interested in Christian higher education.

As we scan the books of yesterday and look at the records of today, we are hopeful for to-mor-row, however we should be reminded that there are obstacles in the way, hurdles to meet and opposition to contend with. The same vision, devotion, service, and sacrifices that were in evidence in the beginning of the institution shall be required for its continuous respect, enlarged opportunities and the multiplying demands for to-mor-row. We confidently and expectantly look to the church, the alumni, and a benevolent church to supply the needs and meet the demands that are upon us today and to-mor-row. Elon College's to-mor-row depends and is depending upon you.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Elon College endeavors to keep its records according to the calendar year. We are now in December. There are but a few more Sundays remaining in 1954. There are opportunities for churches that have not paid their apportionments in full and some of the better churches are on this list. To meet their obligations to the college before the old year dies away and make room for the new year with its hopes and promises. My friends, you would make a worthy investment that would bear dividends in human character and human achievements by meeting your economical obligations to our college. No contribution to Elon College however small or large is ever lost. There is a possibility that the ones who do not contribute may in different ways suffer irreparable losses.

Previously reported	$12,350.25
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Fayetteville	5.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Union	$18.00
South Boston	5.00
Hendersonville	11.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Randleman	$26.00

EARL T. FARRELL RESIGNS.

(Continued from page 2.)

You have reason to be proud of the long and distinguished history of this church, perhaps the most interesting of any church in our Southern Convention. The point now is that we who make up this body today may be concerned in the making of a history that will be a source of pride and encouragement to our children and to the generations to follow who will worship at this holy place.

Therefore, with a heavy heart filled with thoughts of leaving you, but made lighter with a faith of great expectations for the future of this church, I offer to you my resignation to become effective the first of March 1955, or at such prior date as may be found agreeable to both of us.

Yours in Christ,

EARL T. FARRELL.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

(Continued from page 3.)

delinquency, racketeering and violence, alcoholism, narcotic addiction and corruption in public affairs—disruption of “traditional patterns of family life” as illustrated by the national ratio of one divorce to every four marriages—materialistic secularism, particularly in many of the nation's universities and colleges—and the impact of Communism, especially in foreign mission areas. “Is China, North Korea, or northern IndoChina lost to Christ when it is lost from the orbit of Western influence?” they ask.

To help meet these and other challenges, the churches today possess a wealth of resources as unprecedented as today's crisis, the message declared. The general secretaries cited increasing church membership, growing church budgets and an unprecedented church building campaign. In addition the Council leaders pointed to a “great network” of state and local interchurch groups—and to the churches’ “increased recognition of the importance of lay activity in the life, work and leadership of the churches.” But the greatest resource of all, the message affirmed, is now as always the power of God.

Asia and Africa Ask Some Searching Questions

BY DR. CHARLES MALIK*

Asia and Africa are rising. They desire the full enjoyment of their natural rights. The Asian and African will is taken into account in world councils today more than ever before.

You are not only dealing with the vast majority of the human race and with incalculable natural resources; you are dealing with ancient cultures proud of their achievements, jealous of their spiritual values and increasingly conscious not only of their latent inner strength but of how much the West has owed them.

Debt of the West.

Where would the West be without Greece, Egypt, Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, the Near East in general, Persia, India? Where would the western church be without the tears and sufferings of the saints in North Africa, in Alexandria, in Jerusalem, in Antioch, in Ephesus—in that great area of the southern and eastern Mediterranean which constitutes the meeting place of Asia and Africa, and, in those days, also of Europe? The rise of the East is, in part, the affirmation of the original base of the West.

The church can and should rejoice in this phenomenon. How much the East owes its rise to the direct and indirect activity of the church, both to the faithful witness of the western church and to its manifold missionary impact, is a tale still to be told in all its pathos and depth.

Christ has been at work all along, in ways past our comprehension, to bring about the rise of the East. It is impossible for Christians not to pray for and bless every genuine attempt at dignity and independence, every craving for freedom and equality, every desire on the part of the peoples of Asia and Africa to exploit their resources for their own profit and to realize their potentialities to the full. These are as much the children of God, "created in his own image," as anybody else, and Christ died as much for them as for you and me.

The challenge of Asia and Africa, so far as their present fundamental revolution is concerned, is for the Christian conscience, in all sympathy and love, to understand and to be concerned about their political needs. Wherever people can rule themselves, even if imperfectly (and who amongst us can cast a stone at imperfect government abroad?), they have every right to do so. Wherever there is unjust foreign exploitation of natural and human resources, it should cease, and people should be trained in the theory and technique of mastering and turning to good use the riches of the earth.

The great stirrings for social justice, for the elimination of discrimination and misery, for the liberation of the eternally depressed and dispossessed, for conferring some dignity upon millions of human beings who are only human by name—all this certainly reflects the will of Christ. Whoever misses the bus with respect to fundamental social change is certainly going to be left by the wayside. Therefore, nothing is more necessary for Christians than to make sure that they understand the social forces at work, and to try to help the victims of these forces in their formidable tasks with all the moral and intellectual resources at their command, resources which we ultimately derive from the compassion of Christ and the righteousness of God.

In the relation of Asia and Africa to the outside world, problems of political freedom, economic development, social and racial justice always arise.

Profound Study Needed.

There is no one neat "solution" applicable to all of them, and whoever believes in such a thing is an irresponsible or misguided idealist. Every such problem requires profound political, social and scientific analysis on the part of the best minds directly involved before light can be shed upon it, and in some cases the profoundest and most responsible analysis fails to show a way out. The interests appear to be conflicting, to be irreconcilable, admitting of no happy issue. The question then must remain in "suspense" as a judgment upon the folly and sin of men.

The duty of the Christian in all this is clear. He is to identify himself with the cause of truth and justice everywhere, as he best sees and understands these things, leaving the issue to God. If he lags behind for whatever reason, he will be an unprofitable servant. Above all, he should never approach problems with preconceived ideas but should have the deepest respect for facts—especially as the facts are often anything but obvious.

The primary Christian virtue in international relations is hard-hearted idealism. If the Christian of the West cannot always determine policy, he certainly can and should help promote everywhere a more adequate knowledge of the facts. In tangled situations where unregenerate human passions rule, often it is a matter of producing an atmosphere of confidence, and if the spirit of Christ cannot induce such an atmosphere—the spirit of one who by obedience unto death has no ax whatsoever to grind—then nothing else will.

Individual Norms.

Asia and Africa will develop their own social and political forms. These will not be the same as those known in the West. The place and mode of existence of the individual, of the family, of the corporate organization, of government and law, and of the product and possession of wealth—all these will vary considerably from western norms. Asia and Africa demand that they enjoy the necessary freedom to develop their own institutions and values—namely, to be themselves. This is certainly right, for "in my father's house are many mansions," says the Lord, and all cultures will have to bring their own diverse gifts when he comes again.

The important thing is not uniformity of culture but the growth of an international and intercultural order wherein each people and each culture will freely develop its own genius as fully as possible, subject only to four conditions: (1) that no culture or nation encroach upon another; (2) that, therefore, they all voluntarily enter into some universal jurisdictional order; (3) that there be free interchange of ideas and goods among them; and (4) that the enjoyment of a certain indispensable

(Continued on page 9.)

*Dr. Malik is the ambassador from Lebanon to the United States and Lebanon's representative at the United Nations. This interesting and informative article is reprinted from the November 1 issue of Advance, our national magazine.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Institute Planned for Eastern Virginia

The executive committee of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference met on Saturday afternoon, November 27, at the Windsor Christian Church to plan the program for the Mission Institute which will be held on Wednesday, January 12, at ten-thirty o'clock, at the Suffolk Christian Church.

The Rev. Quentin Leisher of Boston, Massachusetts, will present our work in India, Pakistan and Ceylon. The institute will close with a luncheon served by the Woman's Auxiliary of the church.

The women of the Eastern Virginia Conference are requested to draw a circle around this date to remind them of the institute. Everyone who is interested in the missionary program of our denomination is urged to attend.

MRS. GARLAND W. SPRATLEY,
President, Eastern Virginia
Woman's Conference.

* * * * *

An Unusual Thank Offering Service

The Happy Home Missionary Society held its "Thank Offering Service" at the church on Sunday evening, November 7. Unlike previous services by the society, this service was presented by the younger women of the church. These women did an excellent job in bringing to the church congregation a vision of the actual needs in the South Boston Church. This year's service was unique in that the offering exceeded that of any previous year.

Women participating in the program were: Mrs. William Ward, leader, Miss Louise Sparks, Mrs. Robert Watkins, Mrs. Hazel Jones, Mrs. Frank Burgess, Mrs. Raymond Pryor, Mrs. A. J. Martin, Jr., Miss Virginia Robertson, and Mrs. Robert Cross.

A covered-dish supper that had been prepared by the church women was served following this service. Delicious food and wholesome fellowship were enjoyed by society members and their families during this hour.

The society had failed to show last year's feature film "The Hidden Heart." The showing of this inspirational film was an unforgettable climax for an evening of fellowship.

MRS. DILLARD POWELL,

Reporter.

* * * * *

Apologies to Flint Hill (R)

Mrs. Horace R. Farlow of the Flint Hill Society, near Sophia, N. C., sent a report from that society to me last July 12. It came to Asheboro while I was in New England on vacation and should have been seen by me when I returned the last of that month. However, it was November 26 before the unopened envelope was discovered in a desk draw in the church office. I apologize—and herewith is the article, "better late than never!"

Family Life Week Observed.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Flint Hill (R) Church observed Family Life Week the first week in May.

During this period invitations were sent out to those of the community who were not regular church people, with a special emphasis on attendance as a family group.

On Saturday night the women's group, together with their families, met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Frank Hedrick for a fish fry. Everyone enjoyed the fish, slaw, french fries, hush puppies and lemon pie.

Later a program on "Family Life" was given. The evening was rich in fellowship and inspiration.

* * * * *

North Carolina Makes Plans

The North Carolina Woman's Board met on October 19 at the home of Mrs. Carl Dawson in Elon College. Luncheon was served by the Elon College Women's Fellowship. Those present were: Mrs. Mark Andes, Mrs. W. E. Briggs, Miss Susie D. Allen, Mrs. H. E. Robinson, Mrs. Wilson Graham, Mrs. Ed Chilton, Mrs. W. B. O'Neill, Mrs. R. V. Powell, Mrs. J. R. Ellis, Mrs. Ruth Rogers, Mrs. K. D. Register, Mrs. R. W. Isley, Mrs. G. W. Pollard, Mrs. R. L. Jackson and Mrs. W. Walter Hall.

Mrs. Hall led a devotional on the theme for the year, "Out of the Heart of the Gospel."

Following an explanation by Mrs. Jackson, it was voted to join the North Carolina Woman's Council for the year 1954-55. This is a loose organization of various women's groups in the state: church, home demonstration, etc. It has a close working relationship with the Extension Division of the University of North Carolina in its efforts to help member organizations improve their leadership. It sponsors two major activities a year: A world affairs conference, and a leadership training workshop.

It was also decided to make a contribution to the Woman's Division of the Virginia Council of Churches since there are seven Virginia societies in the conference.

A committee to plan the Rally Programs was appointed as follows: Mrs. R. L. Jackson, Mrs. W. E. Biggs and Mrs. E. M. Powell.

A committee to draw up a Constitution and By-laws was appointed, also: Miss Susie Allen, chairman; Mrs. H. E. Robinson, Mrs. W. T. Scott and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.

Mrs. Robinson led a devotional at the close of a profitable day of business and fellowship.

MRS. W. WALTER HALL,
Secretary.

ASIA AND AFRICA ASK SOME SEARCHING QUESTIONS.

(Continued from page 8.)

ble minimum of fundamental human rights be guaranteed within each of them.

For all their intricacy, the political, social and economic problems of Asia and Africa are nothing compared to the intellectual and spiritual problems. We can already see with some assurance that, if people do not yet completely rule themselves, they will do so sooner or later; if people are not yet fully able to exploit their own resources, they are on the way to doing so; and if social discrimination and injustice still prevail, the pronounced temper of the age is to attack them. In these fields we can see ahead, albeit more or less dimly.

But what is going to happen to the mind and soul of Asia and Africa?

(Continued on page 13.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Santa Claus was brought to our country (then the New World) by the Dutch people who came to New York. The children called him Saint Nicholas, and he was known as the patron saint of children. Saint Nicholas really lived once upon a time in Asia Minor. He was supposed to have ridden a white horse from door to door and left gifts for the good children and sticks for the bad. Children gathered around him as he came to their homes. Through the years he has changed from Saint Nicholas to "Saint Nick" or "Santa Claus," who is a right merry little man.

Many of our Christmas ideas go back before the birth of the Christ Child, for December 21 is the time of the winter solstice—or the turning of the earth toward the sun so that warmth begins to return again. This was a time of merriment and feasting. Presents were tied and bits of mistletoe tucked in them, and mistletoe decorated the homes too.

In the Middle Ages people not only sang carols but they danced them as well. The babe of the family was placed in his cradle and put in the middle of the room, the mother sat by the cradle, rocked it and tapped the time of the tune with her foot, while the others danced around and sang. After that, gifts were exchanged. Gifts seem to have been a part of all Christmas celebrations.

What gifts do you plan? Buy a plain white cup and saucer at the dime store. Decorate it with decals or paint designs with a paint like Dekal. Buy some bulbs: lily of the valley, narcissus, or tulip. Find a few pretty rocks or pebbles, wash, dry and place in the cup around one or two bulbs. Tie a card and red bow on the handle and give without further wrapping.

When you hunt pebbles, look for a big, flat rock. One of these will make Dad a good paper weight. Wash to remove all dirt, paint a solid color (tempera paint does well), and after that has dried, paint a little design on it or slip on a decal. When well dried, shellac or varnish, because water paint rubs off so much.

A gift for any age will be a nicely decorated box. You may use cigar, salt, candy or stationery boxes. Be sure the box is clean. Paint a good solid color outside and a bright contrasting color inside. Added interest will be a border—straight, wavy, zigzag or curlycues. Paint your design or use bits of lace doilies, pictures cut from magazines, or cutouts from lightweight colored paper. The older girls may like to try cutout scraps of felt, material or bits of yarn. Practice your ideas on a piece of paper before you begin. A box without a top may be used to hold earrings, fasten the screws along the sides for safekeeping.

Or you may fill your boxes with fruit balls:

- 1 cup raisins.
- 1 cup currants.
- 1 cup dates.
- 1 cup figs, or prunes if you prefer.
- 2 cups chopped nuts.
- 1 teaspoon salt.
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Grind fruit with coarse cutter, add nuts, salt and lemon juice. Mix, roll into balls, chill, and wrap each piece in waxed paper.

* * * * *

Christmas

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A vague feeling of disappointment had stolen over me last season when I began to make Christmas preparations. You see, Harry, my fourteen-year-old, had expressed a decided lack of interest.

"Heck, Mother, I think hanging stockings and giving presents is all bosh," he said. "I wish I could have the money—to buy what I really want. I'm not going to hang up my socks this year. It's dumb!"

"I'd like that, too," Mary, one year younger than Harry, murmured, her face lowered as if ashamed of what she was saying.

"Well, I'll see what your father thinks about it," I answered.

Dad frowned when I told him. "They have too much," he declared. "All youngsters are spoiled these days. Look at the parties they have—school, Sunday school, music lessons, dancing: each has some sort of a feast. Weeks before Christmas stores are full of glitter. There's a Santa on every corner. Children are surfeited long before the Day arrives. As for handing out money for them to spend on themselves, no!" He took up his paper, and that was that.

A few days later Mary ran in from school her face all aglow. "Mother," her voice was soft with urgency, "could we use our Christmas money to make a Christmas treat for the Worrels down the street? They are not expecting to have any Christmas this year because their mother died—and there are a lot of little Worrels. We could make things for them and fill their stockings. We both want to do it—don't we, Harry?"

Harry mumbled assent without looking up from the radio set on which he had been working for weeks. Next day I found him in the basement fixing over an old sled for one of the Worrels. From that time on our house became a workshop. Dolls were dressed and a doll's house was built, painted, and furnished. Candy baskets were fashioned for the tree, and the spirit of Christmas returned with all its former delight.

Rather late on Christmas Eve our two went down the street laden with gifts they had made or bought, filled each little Worrel's sock and left a gay card inviting the family to spend the day with us. I had previously consulted with Mr. Worrel and he had complied willingly.

In our house the Christmas tree drooped under a wealth of ornaments and gifts, hung by our own youngsters, and bought with money we would have spent on them. New joy went into decorating the house, and into cooking for the feast. The Worrels arrived in time for noon dinner—the father and five little ones. There was not one unhappy moment. A warm glow was over all, tempered only by the sorrow that had fallen on this neighbor.

When the day was over Mary snuggled up to me, a radiant expression on her sweet young face. "Mother," she said, "this was the best Christmas of all."

The twenty-fifth of December will retain the joys of Christmas permanently for all those families where its spirit is demonstrated. Since the day commemorates the bestowal of the most priceless gift mankind has ever received, children, like adults, find their greatest joy at that time in giving. But, take care. Boys and girls need to learn this for themselves. It is most unwise to try to force such knowledge upon them—just open up opportunities.

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

New Group Organizes

The young people of the Bailey's Grove Church organized its young people's fellowship for the first time, Sunday, November 21, with ten young people present.

The meeting was opened with Gale Brady presiding. Officers were elected and then we decided on what nights we would like to meet. We decided to have our fellowship meetings on the first and third Sunday nights. Officers elected were as follows: president, J. C. Millikan; vice-president and reporter to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Nada Jade Robbins; secretary and treasurer, Betty Stout; program chairman, Lloyd Millikan. Counselors elected were Mrs. Betty Walker, Mrs. Millie Smith, and Mrs. Felcie Underwood.

NADA JADE ROBBINS,
Reporter.

* * * * *

Youth Sponsor Film Showing

A moving, dramatic film entitled, "And Now I See," was presented at the Franklin Congregational Christian Church on Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock in a Thanksgiving vesper service sponsored by the Pilgrim Fellowship.

The film tells an inspiring story of a typical small-town church and a typical family in that church. One of the stars is the charming young daughter, a victim of paralysis who brings faith and joy to those about her. The ending is a happy surprise.

"And Now I See" will afford superb entertainment for the whole family, states Jarvis W. Pierce.

As a part of the worship service prepared by Misses Mareella Long and Barbara Jean Pierce, the combined Junior and Youth Choirs sang Gounod's "Praise Ye The Father." Bryan Hastings and Roger Stienbach were ushers.

Under the guidance of Walter Barron and Miss Lynda Bradshaw, co-chairmen of the service projects committee, an offering of canned goods, potatoes, flour and other food staples was received at the door for use in packing Thanksgiving baskets for needy families of the community.

Tips from Tom

Congratulations to the new group organized in the Western Conference. We hope you success and growth as you venture forward, lending our support as fellow youth groups.

* * *

The new youth worker, John Graves, who replaces Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, is in school taking refresher work for his new job. As he undertakes his duties, let us actively support him in his efforts. The test of active workers may be the cooperation they give.

* * *

It seems that if we do not make active use in work of the potential ministerial workers that we have, the future may not reap the glorious harvest we would like to have. Discouragement comes easy and encouragement seems scarce.

"IT SHALL NOT HAPPEN AGAIN."

(Continued from page 6.)

and an American. One enemy—tuberculosis.

These three are not alone. The Bronte sisters lived in England. Charlotte Bronte gave to the world "Jane Eyre"; Emily, "Wuthering Heights," and Anne, "Agnes Grey." They, too, died too soon: Anne when she was 29; Emily when she was 30, and Charlotte at 30. There was a common cause. It was tuberculosis.

These are samples of mankind's tragic losses, a list that could be expanded indefinitely. How much richer they might have made the world we all live in, had they gone on living, is speculation. In each there was an indomitable will to create, to pour forth the contents of human spirit that is the essence of human creation, which would not be quelled even by the long shadows that approaching death threw over them. As it is, they speak with added poignance of that simple family grief that comes with the death of those "flowers that grow between."

There is no unalterable need of this. Tuberculosis can be prevented and it can be controlled. The task is a great one requiring constant vigilance, constant service, and the constant support of those who, enlisting in this march of human progress, might well adopt as their battle cry, "It shall not happen again."

* * *

The above story was written just a quarter of a century ago. It was thirty-five years before that, in 1904, that a small group of persons who were not inclined to run away from a hard job, determined to do something about tuberculosis. There was no known cure or preventive vaccine for the disease. Only a few health departments were doing anything to combat tuberculosis; and it was pretty generally accepted that if you had "consumption" you died, and that was that!

But this small group glimpsed in the distant future the goal that has since then guided them along the road of sound progress. In the year 1939, when the above story was written, they could report: "In thirty-five years, this association has gone far along the road that it could barely discern at the beginning. Today there are 200,000 persons alive in the United States who last year would have died of tuberculosis if that year had been 1904. In 1904, 201 out of every 100,000 persons died of tuberculosis, while in 1938, 49 out of each 100,000 died."

And progress has continued during the last twenty-five years. In this year of our Lord 1954, such progress has been made that there sanitoriums where tuberculosis was once treated that have been turned to other useful purposes. But it is not a time to relax. This enemy of human life is on the run, but any slackening of our efforts to eradicate the dread plague entirely, will give it an opportunity for a comeback. Now is no time for complacency. Now, as never before, you should buy Christmas Seals!

J. T. K.

*In the darkest night of the year,
when the stars have all gone out,
I know that courage is better than fear and faith is better than doubt.
And fierce thought the fiends may fight and long through the angels hide,
I know that truth and right have the Universe on their side.
And that somewhere, beyond the stars is love that is better than hate.*

*When the night unlocks her bars,
I shall see him, and I wait.*

—Washington Gladden.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Glory to God in the Highest"

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 19, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker."
—Psalm 95: 6.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Psalm 148;

Matthew 1: 18-25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 2: 8-20.

A Hallelujah Chorus.

Listen, do you hear what I hear—a great Hallelujah Chorus? A great symphony orchestra is playing and a great choir or chorus is singing a magnificent song of praise unto God. The whole of creation is involved. Things animate and inanimate join in the swelling chorus. It begins in the highest heaven and ends on earth. "Praise him, all his angels, praise him all his host"—the heavens and all their host are called upon to praise Jehovah. "Praise him, sun and moon, praise him, all ye stars of night"—the heavenly bodies as well as the heavenly beings are called upon to praise Jehovah. "Praise him, kings of the earth and princes and judges of the earth"—those in high places are to join in the chorus. (It is a good thing when our President, our governors, our leaders in state and government, praise and worship the Lord in public and in private.) "And all peoples . . . let them praise the name of Jehovah"—the common man as well as the crowned head are to join in this Hallelujah Chorus. "Both young men and virgins, old men and children, let them praise the name of Jehovah"—not only all classes but all ages and both sexes, everybody is to praise the Lord and to sing praises unto his name. It is a song in which all creation and all created things are invited to take part. For great is our God and greatly to be praised. "His name alone is exalted, and his glory is above the earth and the heavens." Praise has a vital place in the life of the spirit. There should be more praise, and less of plaint in human life. There should be more of praise and less of petition in prayer.

A Singing Religion.

Strangely enough,—or is it strange after all?—Christianity is the only world religion that is a singing religion. To be sure Buddhism is now trying to introduce singing into its religious services, but generally speaking, Christianity is the only one of the great religions of mankind which has a hymn-book! ! ! And Christianity has good grounds for singing. Men and women, young people, boys and girls, who have found God through Jesus Christ, and that Christ as a Redeemer and Savior, ought to sing. One of the disturbing features about some services of worship is the number of people who take no part in the congregational singing. This ought not so to be. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, and say it in song. Even if he is off-key a bit, he can still make a joyful noise unto the Lord in song. The Hebrew religion was a singing religion—the Psalms are the hymn-book of the Jewish people even to this day. And Christianity is a singing religion—the hymnbook, the Bible and the pocketbook are the three great books of the Christian religion. And not the least of these is the hymnbook.

The Greatest Night in History.

And now we come again to the story of that first Christmas night when Jesus was born in Bethlehem. That story for today's lesson is told by Matthew, but Matthew does not tell us much about that event itself—we have to go to Luke's Gospel for that. Matthew tells us about the events leading up to the birth of Jesus. Like Luke, he tells it with inspired delicacy and reserve, yet with such definiteness and clearness as to leave no doubt about its historical accuracy. He uses prose where Luke uses poetry, but the story is not prosaic. And he shows that the birth of Jesus, and the name which was given to him were the fulfillment of an ancient prophecy.

A. A Perplexed and Embarrassed Man.

Joseph, a good and true man, was betrothed (engaged) to Mary, a pure, lovely Jewish maiden. Betrothal, with the Jews, was as sacred as marriage, and as binding. To his amazement and embarrassment, he learned that she was to have a child. His first thought was to "put her away privily"—quietly give her a divorce—not willing to make her a public example. He was a gentleman and acted from high motives.

B. A Messenger in a Dream.

But even as he thought on this thing, Joseph had a dream in which an angel appeared unto him, and made everything clear unto him. Mary, his betrothed wife was to have a child, but that child had been conceived by the Holy Spirit, and he was to be the Saviour of the world. His name, Jesus which means Jehovah is Salvation, meant just that. "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit. And she shall bring forth a son; and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins."

C. Obedient to the Heavenly Vision.

Joseph was obedient to the heavenly vision. "He did as the angel of the Lord commanded him, and took unto him his wife; and knew her not until she had brought forth a son." It is not likely that he understood it all. But he was a man of integrity and faith and he obeyed what he felt was the voice of God. What a rebuke this man is to those who feel that they must understand everything before taking action.

D. A Saviour is Born.

"She brought forth a son; and he called his name Jesus." That is all that Matthew tells us about the first Christmas night. (The Wise Men came later). But that is enough. For the interesting and important thing is not how Jesus was born, but that he was born. Men have argued endlessly about his birth, but not to much avail. There stands the solid, stubborn, historical fact that God entered human history, that he was clothed in flesh and came to dwell amongst us, that he came as Saviour and Redeemer. His name is evidence to the fact that men sin and need a Saviour, and evidence that Jesus can save from sin. No wonder the angels sang at his birth. No wonder some of the world's greatest music centers around the theme of Christmas.

E. God With Us.

"They shall call his name Immanuel, which being interpreted is 'God with us.'" God with us, God among us, God in us, that is the good news of the Christian religion. God is not far away, unreachably, unapproachably. God is among men, taking upon himself their sorrows and sufferings and sins, forgiving them, redeeming them, empowering them. Let men and angels sing praises unto God!

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

CHRIST'S WAY OF WINNING THE WORLD.

(Continued from page 5.)

simply marks time, regardless of what its material wealth, its elaborate program and its inclusive equipment may be. Not until a church recognizes itself as a recruiting station for Christ, with every member accepting responsibility as recruiting officers, can it render its full service to either God or man.

The biggest thing any man can do, be he a scientist, a statesman, a scholar, a financier or whatnot, is to influence, by his own good life and his personal recommendations, another life of his own calibre, to enlist for Christ and for the Church of the living, loving God. That is how the disciple, Andrew, gained his way into the spiritual aristocracy of the Twelve. He introduced his brother, Simon, to the Christ: that is the way he became a member of the group within the group who seemed always to receive special recognition from their Lord, and who were most frequently mentioned by the gospel writers. Four out of the twelve disciples gained this special distinction as members of the inner circle of Christ's friends. Peter gained it by his enthusiasm for his Lord and his power of leadership. James gained it by his quiet thoughtfulness and loyalty—his valued counseling. John gained it by his deep love for his Lord, his close companionship. Andrew gained it, not because he was Peter's brother, not because he himself was a great preacher, but because the first thing he did, after becoming acquainted with Jesus was to introduce his own brother to him.

Andrew represents the ordinary disciple. He played the roll which Jesus desires every disciple to play, that of contact representative. The record says, "He first found his own brother Simon and brought him to Jesus." Everyone does not have a brother or sister in the flesh whom they might bring to Christ, or may influence to embrace the Christian faith, but everyone does have a friend or neighbor to whom he might render life's highest service by so doing.

Of course, Andrew's life rang true or else he would not have been interested in having his own brother meet Christ. And if his own life had not run true, his recommendations to his brother Simon would have made no impression.

ASIA AND AFRICA ASK SOME SEARCHING QUESTIONS.

(Continued from page 9.)

That is the question. Is it not true, we ask, that once people have achieved their political independence, once they have attained economic plenty and once they have brought about social justice the spirit then will take care of itself? This is the greatest fallacy of the present age: that the mind, the spirit, the soul of man, the fundamental bent of his will is derivative from and subordinate to, a function of, his economic and social existence. So long as man can say with Galileo "and still it moves," so long as he, of all creation, can commit suicide—and anyone of us can do so—there is here provided an absolute refutation of the doctrine that the intellectual and spiritual is wholly derivative from the economic and social.

Fundamental Attitudes.

If, in its theory of man, communism commits this radical fallacy (and yet, even in this, communism is dialectically hypocritical because nobody seems to pay more attention to ideas and fundamental attitudes than a Communist), then nothing is more ridiculous than the sight of those who say they wish to "fight communism" and then turn around to concentrate on the economic and social aspects alone. For by thus denying the original efficacy and independence of mind and soul they reveal that, so far as the theory of man is concerned, they are at bottom communist themselves, and that without even the advantage of dialectical hypocrisy!

The real challenge of Asia and Africa is of an intellectual and spiritual order. Western secular leadership has failed the world intellectually and spiritually. It is too encumbered with "problems" and with the consideration of means. If it be said that it is not its office to lead in these realms, then I answer: Let those whose office this is come forward and speak. Let them articulate the long-awaited message and carry it in mighty works beyond the confines of their study. For it is a fact that, for the most part, only spiritless secularism reaches the world.

In their demands for a message, a living message dealing with the ultimate things, Asia and Africa pose their greatest challenge. This is the test at once of our faith, of our hope and of our charity. For if we really believe, if we really hope and if we really love, then God's will will be done on earth. The shivering up of the genuine universal is the greatest agony of this age.

Partnership and fellowship on as deep a plane as possible—this is the dream of Asia and Africa. Communism can never be opposed in Asia and Africa by mere negation.

Mutual Reinforcements.

The cultural and racial continuities between the Communist world and Asia and Africa, and the cultural and racial discontinuities between Asia and Africa and the Christian world—these two things are too great and too mutually reinforcing for communism to be swept back only by negation. At the present rate of spiritual impotence under the protective covering of the hydrogen bomb, it is only a matter of time before the whole of Asia and Africa, and maybe even of Europe, will be engulfed by communism.

What is desperately needed, besides the highest political wisdom, is a ringing positive message—one of reality, of truth and of hope. Communism exposes the inadequacy, if not indeed the bankruptcy, of the western-imperialistic and the smug Christian approach of the past. Something infinitely more humble, more profound, more positively out-reaching; something touching the hearts of men, touching their need for fellowship and understanding and love, for being included and being trusted; something providing them with real hope, hope for themselves and their children, hope in this life as well as in the next; something of this order is needed. This "something" is Jesus Christ, the risen Lord.

The missionary movement must be intensified; the Eastern churches must be loved and helped. For who knows what task Christ will still ask, and may even now be asking, of the Orthodox church? The spiritually rich must come down and carry the cross, and there must be faith in the sufficiency of the simple story of the gospel.—Advance.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We have received Thanksgiving offerings from the following. It may be that others are in transit from the convention office:

Eastern Va. Conference:
Union (Surry)$ 96.80

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Mt. Gilead$ 16.50

N. C. and Va. Conference:
Lakeview$ 21.56
Hopedale 66.00
Kellam Grove 25.00
Mt. Bethel 36.00
New Lebanon 100.00
Shallow Ford 100.00
Tryon 52.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Grace's Chapel$ 76.13
Randleman (and WMS) . 41.50

Valley of Virginia Conference:
Joppa$ 5.00

We have had, as the reader can see by following through the reports, contributions from persons who desired their contributions to be credited to the "special" for their church.

More than I can tell you we appreciate the contributions from all our people and our churches. We appreciate the help of many friends of the orphanage. We know that the Thanksgiving offerings are just beginning to come in. We wish for them every day as we could do a better job "seeing" folks nearby the orphanage if we were able to pay what we owe them. If you are holding money for us just as soon as you can will you not send it on to us.

And if your church has not received a special Thanksgiving offering for the orphanage please do so. Thank you for everything.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER 30, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Clothing:

Mrs. Fred Swann, Tryon, N. C.
Sophia Church.
Mrs. A. Y. Allred, High Point, N. C.
Mrs. Lina Apple, Reidsville, N. C.

Coupons:

Mrs. James Osborn, Norwalk, Calif.
Seventh Grade, Pleasant Garden School.
First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C.
Mrs. E. F. Wilcox, Braintree, Mass.
Linville Christian Church, Harrisonburg, Va.

Clothing and shoes:

Mrs. W. J. Norfleet, Holland, Va.

Toys:

Mrs. Bertha Sykes, Washington, D. C.

Canned goods:

Smithwood Christian Church.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $13,498.75

Eastern N. C. Conference:

Ebenezer$ 31.07
Hope Mills, Thanksgiving 19.00
Pleasant Union 50.00
100.07

Eastern Va. Conference:

Liberty Spring, S. S. ...$ 20.00
Christian Temple, Thanksgiving 25.00
Christian Temple 25.00
Rosemont 83.00
153.00

N. C. and Va. Conference:

Belew Creek$ 26.40
Danville 29.00
Reidsville 263.00
Shallow Ford 18.00
336.40

Virginia Valley Conference:

Newport S. S., Thanksgiving$ 40.20 40.20

Total $ 629.67

Grand total $14,128.42

Thanksgiving Offerings.

Chas. V. Sharpe, Inc.,
Burlington, N. C.$ 50.00
Burlington Rotary Club . 135.00
Randleman Christian Ch. 25.00
Kallam's Grove S. S. 25.00
W. G. Saunders, Jr.,
Chuckatuck, Va. 10.00
J. W. Drake, Pittsboro,
N. C. 50.00
Mr. and Mrs. John M.
Holt, Burlington, N. C. 25.00
Alamance Laundry, Bur-
lington, N. C. 150.00
Mrs. Lina Apple, Apples'
Chapel 10.00
Huffman Oil Co., Inc.,
Burlington, N. C. 100.00
L. S. Burton, Suffolk, Va. 5.00
Faucette Coal Sales Co.,
Inc., Burlington, N. C. 100.00
Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Brown,
Burlington, N. C. 2.00
Harry A. Robinson, Yankton, South Dakota 5.00

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Burchett, Suffolk, Va. ... 25.00
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Booth,
Hampton, Va. 10.00
Conover Furniture Co.,
Lenoir, N. C. 200.00
Dr. T. E. Powell, Elon
College, N. C. 200.00
Mrs. C. W. Tatum, Norfolk, Va. 5.00
Mrs. James N. Williamson, Jr., Winston-Salem,
N. C. 25.00
A friend, Clayton, N. C. 5.00
Primary Class, Central Church, Norfolk, Va. .. 4.00
Jule Pace, Mebaue, N. C. 20.00
Mrs. H. E. Pearce, Frank-
lington, N. C. 15.00
King Electric Co., Bur-
lington, N. C. 25.00
Mr. & Mrs. A. W. Cooper,
Hamlet, N. C. 10.00
L. L. Brown, Hamlet, N.
C. 1.00
W. C. Carnes, Hamlet, N.
C. 1.00
M. R. Kersey, Dayton,
Ohio 25.00
S. J. Hinsdale, Burlington,
N. C. 15.00
Miss E. Friddle, Greensboro, N. C. 25.00
Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Whitley, Suffolk, Va. 10.00
Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Rountree, Sunbury, N. C. .. 25.00
Mr. & Mrs. E. H. Rawles,
Suffolk, Va. 50.00
J. M. Atwater, Burlington,
N. C. 5.00
Durham Christian Church 100.00
Mrs. Ernest Sibley, West
Hartford, Conn. 5.00
Miss Ruth Miller, Winston-Salem, N. C. 3.00
Capt. & Mrs. Kenneth M.
Lindner, Japau 15.00
W. D. Madry, Burlington,
N. C. 10.00
Ralph H. Scott, Burling-
ton, N. C. 25.00
Mrs. J. Monroe Harris,
Norfolk, Va. 10.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name

Address

In Memoriam

BUNCH.

In the early 20's, up from the Edenton, North Carolina, community, into Eastern Virginia, came a man and his family; both destined to be a real asset to the betterment of their new home.

After living in the Back Bay section for a while this man brought his family to settle in the Cypress Chapel, Virginia, community. Within a few years he, and those of his family old enough, had joined the Cypress Chapel Christian Church. Others joined as they became of joining age. Following the leadership of their father they have been, and continue to be, an inestimable influence for good.

Through the years this man increasingly demonstrated what one man can do when he really loves mankind and is devoted to its betterment. When in need many came to him for financial aid. Those he thought worthy were assisted. To many he gave kindly advice and encouragement.

It was in and through his church, however, that he lived, loved, and labored most effectively. For over thirty years he devoted much of his time, his talent, and his means to the organization, which next to his home, was his first love—Cypress Chapel Christian Church. Perhaps no man has done more to assure its success and fruitfulness, than he. To a large degree he made it possible for the church to erect a new edifice; meet its obligations during the Depression days; and to increase its budget one thousand per cent. It was not at any time his policy to merely tell others what needed to be done, nor wait for others to do, but rather, by his example, to lead others in purposeful and fruitful cooperative effort.

For quite a few years he was an able and interesting Sunday school teacher. For a much longer time—until his death—he was a Deacon, worthy of the name. Although age and declining health, naturally, decreased his active participation in the business of the church, his love for the Sunday school and church, and his efforts to attend increased. "In his place in his church" he was on the Sunday prior to his death.

He was especially fond of children. So were they of him. Few men will be, or could be, more keenly mourned and missed by them. To all of us, but especially to them, it is sad and hard to realize that "Mr. Bunch" is not able to be at church today.

In reality, however, he will be at church today, and every Sunday for years and years to come. For although God saw fit to call him "home" on the day after Hazel the Hurricane came by, his hallowed memory and uplifting influence in the church and community will continue to be present for a long time.

In our church and community, a venerated patriarch has served his day and has gone on to his reward. God grant that we may have the wisdom, the wish, and the willingness to carry on the work to which he so nobly gave his great devotion. May each of us feel it an honor and a privilege to take the torch he so faithfully carried—as long as he could—and carry it high and far, as opportunity permits. Thus we may assure that neither he nor we will have lived in vain.

To the family of Mr. Clarence Bunch we extend our heartfelt sympathy for its loss. May the sunshine of gratitude for so noble a leader often come shining through the tears.

G. C. MANN,
W. B. WHITE,
ROY BRINKLEY,

Committee for Board of Deacons.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

(Continued from page 2.)

the years more than 39,000,000 volumes.

Miss S. Ruth Barrett, secretary of the Society's work for the blind, said that for the past 120 years the Society's records show that it has offered the Bible to every blind person in America. Today the Bible in Braille, the embossed system most widely used by the sightless, requires 20 large volumes and costs $60.00. Volumes are furnished to the blind at 25 cents a volume. The Bible Society not only supplies the Scriptures to the blind in 38 different systems and dialects, but also provides the entire Bible in 170 Talking Book Records.

Russia and some Soviet-controlled areas are still closed to Bible Society work, reported the Rev. Laton E. Holmgren, one of the Society's secretaries engaged in foreign distribution. For Russia, the Society has Scriptures on hand for shipment to that country as soon as doors for which the Society is seeking are opened.

China is closed but measures have been taken to provide Scriptures there when opportunity comes. Nearly 20 million Chinese are living outside the China mainland in the countries of East and Southeast Asia. To minister directly to these people, the Bible Society has sent Dr. Ralph Mortensen, its former secretary in China, to begin a new ministry to these people. Dr. Mortensen, who with Mrs. Mortensen, is living temporarily in Japan, is visiting among these displaced people, to discover their Scripture needs and to set up a program by which the Society may serve them.

Supplies of paper are again being sent to Hungary for the manufacture of a second edition of 30,000 Bibles, declared Mr. Holmgren. Other Scriptures are being sent to Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. One hundred and fifty tons of paper and funds for distribution work have also been sent to East Germany. What the Bible Society has been able to do in Communist areas in 1954, concluded Mr. Holmgren, the Society can probably repeat in 1955.

Work in Latin America and particularly Brazil has rapidly expanded and if more Scriptures were available the Society's distribution could be greatly increased in these countries where there are many thousands of new literates and where others are becoming aware of the power of the Scriptures.

Dr. Samuel Nelson was introduced to the Advisory Council as a new member of the Society's staff. Dr. Nelson, a Baptist minister recently president of the Spanish-American Baptist Seminary in Los Angeles, California, has been appointed to head up a colporteur's training school to be located at some strategic point in Latin America. This is the first time such a project has been undertaken by the Society. The first year Dr. Nelson hopes to have six or eight students, who will be graduates of college or seminary, as his pupils. Training courses will cover class work and laboratory and field training. Dr. Nelson will leave shortly after the first of the year to establish this school.

The Bible Society is seeking to provide the illiterates of Pakistan with recordings of Scripture passages and inexpensive phonographs on which to play them. If this experiment is successful it will be extended to other areas throughout the world.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Rudd,
Greensboro, N. C.	10.00
Lakeview Community Ch. ..	21.56
Hopedale Christian Ch. ...	66.00
Grace's Chapel	76.13
Tryon Cong. S. S.	32.00
Mt. Gilead Christian Ch. ..	16.50
"A friend," Sanford, N. C. ..	5.00
Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Foushee, Sanford, N. C. ...	10.00

1,798.19

Special Offerings.

Philathea Class, Suffolk
Christian Church	5.00
Henry I. Jaffe, Suffolk,
Va., Christmas Offer. .	10.00
In Memory of M. A.
Smith	10.00
In Memory of M. A.
Smith	5.00
In Memory of M. A.
Smith	7.00
Special Gifts	105.86
	142.86

Total $ 1,941.05

Grand total $31,672.01

Total for the week $ 2,570.72

Total for the year $45,800.43

Salvation Through Singing

Christianity and Judaism were both religions productive of singing. Most of the Psalms were used for singing in religious services, and some of them in the ritual of the great religious festivals. When Paul and Silas were imprisoned in Philippi, other prisoners heard them together singing their songs of faith and courage at the midnight hour. St. John declared that he saw in his vision on the Isle of Patmos, "A multitude which no man can number standing before the great white throne, singing the songs of Moses and the Lamb."

And in the account of the first communion service which followed the upper-room observance of the feast of the Passover by Christ and his disciples, the narrator says, "When they had sung a hymn they passed out into the night." These instances record the encouraging and uplifting influences that singing has had upon the spirits of men.

However, one of the familiar Psalms tells the story of a group of Jewish people who refused to sing when there was nothing they so much needed to do as that very thing! It would have saved them from their homesickness and despondency, and it would have saved them from ultimate apostasy. They had been carried into Babylonian captivity where they were asked to sing some of the songs of their native land, but they refused, saying, "How can we sing the Lord's songs in a strange land?" So the songs went unsung, and it was not long after the Lord's songs had died from their lips that love for the Lord died also from their hearts. And, when a new ruler came to the Babylonian throne a few years later, and gave them permission to return to their native land, only about one out of seven of them cared to go. The rest of them had become conformed to the practices of the Babylonians, living on the low levels of their morality.

There are many modern people who refuse to sing the old songs because of changed conditions. They have learned scientific facts that make many of their former beliefs untenable. How can they sing the old songs of faith when they no longer feel sure about anything religious? Or after hard experiences have put their faith in God to severe tests?

But, my friends, if we are wise, we will continue to sing the old songs of aspiration and faith and of high resolution. When times are dark, as for Paul and Silas in prison and for the disciples when their minds were filled with vague forebodings of danger on the night of their first communion—even then let us continue to sing, for there's salvation through singing! It is a great thing to hear housewives singing at their kitchen tasks and toilers in field and factory singing as they work. A young man who remembered the heroism of his mother who had experienced many hardships and had suffered much and long, wrote in her memory:

"You did not feel the wind and driving rain;
The cheerless day was changed
To one of joy, in spite of pain,
BECAUSE YOU SANG!"

--John Alfred Nansen.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1954

NUMBER 49

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches 1856-1956

CENTENIAL PROGRAM OF ADVANCE OF THE 1954-56 BIENNIUM

Rev. James O'Kelly and his associates in 1792-1794 founded the Christian Church in the South. In 1856 the Southern Convention was organized, and is nearing 100 years of service. The Convention at its 1954 session voted that the 1954-1956 Biennium should be designated the CENTENNIAL BIENNIUM, and referred implementation to the Executive Board. The Executive Board appointed a Committee consisting of Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, President; Dr. Henry E. Robinson, Secretary; Dr. Wofford C. Timmons, Chairman of the Committee on Evangelism; Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Chairman of the Board of Christian Education; Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Editor of The Christian Sun; Rev. Fred P. Register, Secretary-elect of Stewardship and Evangelism; Rev. John S. Graves, Director-elect of Christian Education; and Superintendent Wm. T. Scott. The Committee submits the proposed PROGRAM OF ADVANCE herewith, and WE CALL upon our churches to join in a significant observance of our CENTENNIAL BIENNIUM.

While the PROGRAM OF ADVANCE is designed to promote every interest of the Convention and of our denomination as a part of "Our Christian World Mission," the Executive Board voted that special emphasis be made to coincide with the work of the newly appointed Secretaries of STEWARDSHIP AND EVANGELISM and CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

THE COMMITTEE.

News Flashes

Preserve this issue of THE SUN. You will find it valuable, as you carry on your work in connection with the Centennial Program of Advance.

Dr. W. W. Sloan of the Elon College faculty is supplying the pulpit at the Lakeview church until Mr. Veazey can arrive.

Bland A. Leebrick, pastor of the Carolina Church, Hopedale, N. C., becomes the pastor of the Apple's Chapel Church, January 1, 1955.

Mrs. L. E. Smith, wife of the president of Elon College, has been in the Alamance General Hospital in Burlington, N. C., but has now returned home.

Do not forget the offering for the Christmas Fund for the Veterans of the Cross. Make it as liberal as possible. It will bless both you and them.

Glen Garrett, student at Elon College and member of the Rosemont Church in South Norfolk, Va., becomes the new pastor of the Carolina Church, January 1, 1955.

John R. Lackey, pastor of the Apple's Chapel Church, near Greensboro, N. C., becomes the pastor of the Winston-Salem and Pfafftown churches, January 1, 1955.

Hines chapel recently voted to become a "full time" church, with the Rev. G. Julius Rice as its pastor. For sometime Hines Chapel and Monticello churches have been yoked.

Christmas Club savings for 1954 amounted to $1.08 billion. This record sum which will probably be disposed of before the year-end, means lots of spending for Santa Claus. We can but wonder what kind of presents he will spend it for.

Supt. Wm. T. Scott was the guest speaker at the Palm Street Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., recently, and conducted the service of consecration for the little Miss Grace Ellen Welch, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Mack V. Welch.

Robert T. Woodruff, Jr., who was formerly pastor of Ingram-Pleasant Grove churches and of the Beverly Hills Church in Burlington, is the new minister of the First Congregational Church, Key West, Florida. For the past several years he has been connected with the National Airlines in Florida.

Rev. G. H. Veazey becomes the pastor of the Lakeview Church, near Burlington, N. C., on January 1, 1955, leaving the pastorate of the High Point Church. Mr. Veazey will also be resident manager of the conference center, Moonclon. The present house on the conference center property is being renovated for year-round living.

Superintendent W. T. Scott was in charge of the every member canvass recently conducted by the Zion Church, near Burlington, N. C. One of the results of the canvass was enough gifts subscribed to enable the church to have the full time services of Rev. Garland B. Bennett, as pastor. Mr. Bennett is a student at Elon College.

The Elon College Choir presented Handel's "Messiah" in Whitley Auditorium, Elon College, Sunday night, December 5. In spite of the rain the auditorium was almost filled. The choir will present portions of the "Messiah" to the Wake Chapel and the Liberty Churches (the last one is near Henderson) on December 12. The College Choir is rendering Advent Music each Sunday in Advent to the Community Church at Elon College and thus giving all who attend the glorious music of the Advent Season. Laurence Hedgpeth is the director of the College Choir and Fletcher Moore is the organist.

Earl Danieley, Dean of Elon College, is supplying the pulpit at Wake Chapel Church, Varina, N. C. The former minister, Rev. Fred P. Register, has moved to the Brookwood Garden Apartments in Burlington for a temporary residence and hopes soon to be living in Elon College. Mr. Register is the new secretary of the Evangelism and Stewardship of the Southern Convention. Dr. Danieley is a busy man. Being dean of a college the size of Elon, a chemistry professor, a much sought after speaker, and a constant worker in his home church at Elon College, Earl Danieley is always ready to serve in any way that he can.

Burlington Area Churches Planning Program of Commitment

Ministers and churches in the Burlington, N. C. area are planning a Day of Prayer and Commitment for January 2, 1955, to be a part of the Centennial Program of Advance for the Southern Convention. Included in that day's service will be a home visitation for each church asking the members of the church to pledge themselves to greater loyalty in their church attendance, to deeper consecration through prayer and daily Christian living. The church attendance record is to be kept by each member from January 2, through April 10, 1955.

Included in the program for the Burlington area will be a paid advertisement in the Burlington daily paper setting forth the names of the churches and something of the projected program.

The Program of Advance during this period will emphasize Evangelism climaxing with Easter Sunday when the churches of this area hope to have a great ingathering of members.

Loyalty Service

A Loyalty Service was held in Centerville Church in Prince George County, Virginia, Sunday, October 31, 1954. The church was decorated with fall flowers, colorful leaves and an abundant cornucopia. Cathedral glass windows, newly installed, added to the appearance of the church.

Mr. E. N. Staples, a layman from Waverly, was the guest speaker for the morning service and gave an interesting talk on church attitudes and worship. The young people rendered special music for the service.

The Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the church, preached a sermon especially applicable to the young people at the afternoon service. Misses Lilian Morris and Charlotte Lewis, and Messrs. Edward and John Lewis presented themselves for membership and were received into the church. A graph to encourage Sunday school attendance was explained by the superintendent, Mr. R. F. Livesay. The young people of the church took an active part, reading the Scriptures, leading in prayer, conducting the offertory service, and giving several appropriate readings.

Dinner was served outdoors and even though the air was brisk every one was warmed by the bountiful dinner, and all present enjoyed the fellowship. MISS ELLA MEZOFF.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Finding God

PROGRAM FOR JANUARY.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: "Jesus Calls Us;" A Charge to Keep I Have."

SUGGESTED SCRIPTURE: Proverbs 2: 1-9.

PRAYER: Eternal God, we beseech Thee to make Thyself known to us in such a way that we may never again leave Thy blessed presence. Amen.

MEDITATION: Finding God.

I believe there is a living God, who created all things and retains power of control over all; that we are a part of his creation and his great plan; that Jesus came to help us find the Father. This is not a mere intellectual assent, but a certainty born of my personal experience of the very presence of God. Surely not one of us can doubt the actuality of God after once knowing his all-prevading love and feeling the burning joy of his presence. How could one ever be the same man again?

Being a common man myself, I believe that any man can prove the living existence of God, for himself, if there is sufficient desire and persistence; and it is worth any man's lifetime, "The pearl of great price." Although I was raised in a Christian home, attended church regularly and always considered myself a Christian, I came, in middle life, to realize that I had somehow missed the abundant life. I had all the things men need in earthly surroundings—a loving wife, three stalwart sons, work that I liked with adequate income, a comfortable home, friends, respect, recognition and trust—just about everything. Still I was desperately unhappy and found myself wondering when it would all end.

I sought God in the solitudes and to my great joy, found him waiting there. It is wonderful to remember how the Glory of the Lord shone around and how I saw beauty and brightness everywhere. All the earth seemer changed, God's creation is good, there is good in each man, "All things are made new." Since then life is a great adventure and has real purpose.

I believe that God called Moses, Paul and others for special tasks in the Kingdom; surely he is still calling, as the need seems as great now, for good leaders—and good followers. As for me, I dare not wait for a burning bush. I must listen with my whole heart and mind, I must be constantly alert and sensitive, to know God's presence and hear the still voice.

I believe that Christianity is, first of all, an individual matter. We love to worship with others, to talk over the things of the Kingdom, to unite in serving the great cause. But it does not mean much to us until our own contact with God thrills us, changes our lives, makes all things new. As George Buttrick says, "If the gospel does not begin with the individual, it does not begin; but if it ends with the individual, it ends."

There was the Maine backwoods character who, being asked about the death rate in that section, replied "Wal I reckon it's about one to a person." Likewise, lifetimes are dealt out only one to a customer, so we want this one to be productive of the deepest happiness and at least a little real value. It is worth a lot of time and study to determine the way we shall go. And, as our own Walter Graham says, "As far as time goes, all of us have all the time there is."

I believe that God has placed us in this wonderful world of multiple choices—beauty and ugliness, truth and falsehood, love and hate, good and evil. He made us free to choose, to make right or wrong choices every

(Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

EditorS. C. Harrell
Managing EditorJ. T. Kernodle
Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Harcastle.
Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colelough, Treasurer, ex officio.
Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year$3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun
() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

Program of Advance
CHURCH ATTENDANCE CRUSADE
 NEW YEAR'S TO EASTER
 (January 2 to April 10, 1955)

P U R P O S E

PURPOSE:

- To increase regular church attendance;
- To activate indifferent church members: to help them become consistent in attendance, to urge them to enroll in the church school and other church organizations;
- To exalt the place of corporate worship in Christian experience;
- To lift up the importance of preaching the gospel;
- To visit and invite non-church families to share in the services of the church and become members of church organizations and groups;
- To recapture the power of Christian fellowship.

The churches of the Southern Convention are now entering the CENTENIAL PROGRAM OF ADVANCE. Our discipleship demands that we move forward along the road upon which our Lord leads us. We believe that any Advance calls first upon us to bring our people to a more active relationship with the church through regular attendance upon worship services.

WE CALL upon our people to enter the Church Attendance Crusade as a part of our CENTENNIAL PROGRAM OF ADVANCE.

Never before has the secular world been so permeated with religion as it is today. Shining through the armor of military might and material strength is a deep yearning for faith—a faith in Christ which our founding fathers believed a sure source of strength.

Throughout America there is a resurgence of interest in religion. Church membership is up; and church attendance is increasing. New church construction continues. Seminaries are at top capacity. More Bibles were published between 1940 and 1950 than in any previous 40 years. Publishers report that the demand for books with religious themes, both fiction and non-fiction, is the greatest ever. Last year 37,000 broadcasts of religious programs were made, with a million listeners and viewers requesting religious literature.

Those who study spiritual trends are now forecasting an even more favorable climate for religious movements and emphases. The year 1955 looms as religion's greatest time of opportunity. Religious denominations, national organizations, government leaders, civic groups, and individual citizens are searching for a way, a plan, a crusade for capturing and crystallizing these hopeful trends in some great spiritual movement.

Although church membership has skyrocketed until 59 per cent of the American people are affiliated with some religious group in America, the remaining 41 per cent represent 69,000,000 Americans who belong to no church at all. And of the 59 per cent who do belong, numerous surveys have established that, even with the current increases, no more than 35 per cent attend worship services in their church regularly.

In addition to this, the swift, steady population growth promises a gain of more than 70,000,000 people within the next 35 years. With nearly 4,000,000 births during 1953, and only 1,500,000 deaths, the population rose by a net gain of around 2,500,000. Religion must meet this tremendous evangelistic challenge!

Centenial Program of Advance

1954-55 BIENNIUM

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH Evangelism

In this basic task of Evangelism we echo again the commission of Jesus, "Ye are my witnesses." In fulfilling this mandate—the faithful communication of the Gospel, the good news of God's redeeming grace as given in Christ Jesus our Saviour and Master, we are confidently confessing what we believe to be "the hope of the world."

Everything we long to do for the redemption of this world awaits a vital, authentic Evangelism.

The beginning of Evangelism is to call our present membership of 35,000 to a renewal of personal commitment to Christ and his Church. The Church is first a field, and afterward a force, for Evangelism.

We are called upon to restore to active church relationship all inactive members, whose inattention is dangerously near the point of denial.

We are called upon to reach out into all our communities to find the unchurched by careful survey. On the average, throughout the nation, almost one-half of our population has no spiritual home. Some of these may be as near as next door. And it is a most disturbing fact that of the unchurched population, 26 million are between the ages of eight and 24.

WE CALL upon our churches to plan a comprehensive program of Evangelistic effort, including such as:

- Church membership training classes, especially for youth;
- Lay visitation of the discovered prospects;
- Special seasonal missions appropriate to the observance of the Christian year;
- Preaching missions;
- Family daily devotions.

Whatever other methods have proved effective, these, too, should be faithfully followed.

THE GOAL: Eight thousand (8,000) new members by December 31, 1956. This requires each church to bring into the Christian fellowship a minimum of one member per month for each one hundred members of the church.

To this primary purpose, the Convention calls upon each church to have an Organization for Evangelism, representative of all the departments of the local church and parish.

The importance of this witnessing to the Gospel, and this need for winning of disciples to the Christian fellowship, calls us to the clearest understanding of the message and method of Jesus, and the fullest expression of his compassionate mood.

To assist the churches in their fulfillment of these objectives, the Convention offers the leadership and services of its newly appointed Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH Christian Leadership

That our churches may have pastors and that new churches may be started and assured of adequate leadership, WE CALL upon each church to commit itself to enlist its choice young people for the Christian Ministry, Christian Education, and other full-time Christian services.

GOAL: Each church, with pastor and parents cooperating, is asked to place upon the hearts and minds of its youth the claims and needs of the various Christian ministries. A minimum of 15 young men enlisted annually is an imperative for the pastoral leadership of our churches.

To the end of enlisting our choice youth for the Christian ministries, WE CALL upon Elon College,

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH Stewardship

That we may have lives committed to Christian service, and sufficient funds with which to enlarge our witness, we call upon each church to initiate a program of Christian Stewardship through:

- The presentation of an annual budget, including home expenses and benevolences;
- Stewardship education through the church, the Sunday school and other organizations;
- The Every Member Canvass, stressing proportionate giving on the part of each member.
- Enlistment of Tithers.

To assist the churches in their fulfillment of the above goals, the Convention offers the leadership and services of its newly appointed Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism.

the Board of Christian Education, and the Committee on the Ministry to sponsor jointly conferences on Christian vocations.

That leaders for the pulpit and pew may be trained and that we may bear our witness through Christian Higher Education, WE CALL upon the families of our churches to send their young people to Elon College for training.

That all our churches may have services of worship on special days, WE CALL upon our Laymen's Fellowship to develop lay preachers who may hold services when such occasions arise,

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE
THROUGH
Christian Education and Youth Work

The teaching ministry of our Lord was primary in his work. No greater task confronts the churches today.

Fundamental in this task is the dedicated Christian home. The faith of our parents must be deep and strong in order to set the basic patterns of Christian conduct for the child.

The Church School has as its primary purpose the acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Lord by each person.

WE CALL upon our churches to achieve this purpose by:

- Knowledge of the Bible which makes the scriptures come alive for each individual;
- Daily family devotions;
- A trained leadership;
- Increased attendance for both children and adults;
- A youth organization in each church;
- Participation in Summer Conferences;
- Development of worship;

The entire program of Elon College being directed to Christian commitment;

A ministry to our Congregational Christian students on every campus within the area of the Convention;

Adequate equipment.

Each church must appraise its whole educational program as to its objectives in the light of the teachings of Jesus.

To assist the churches in the fulfillment of the above goals, the Convention offers the leadership and services of its newly appointed Secretary of Christian Education.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE
THROUGH
Elon College

WE CALL upon the churches to support the current campaign of Elon College for $2,500,000, as authorized by the Convention, that leaders for the pulpit and the pew may be trained and that we may bear witness through Christian Higher Education.

WE CALL upon the constituency of the Convention to cooperate with the College authorities in raising these needed funds.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH

Women's Work

Theme for 1954-56: "Out of the Heart of the Gospel."

Suggested Goal of Advance:

"A Woman's organization in every church of the Southern Convention; every woman of the church a member of the organization; each organization enlisted in a fellowship of worship, education, service and giving to undergird the general program of the Convention as it serves the cause of Christ within its own bounds and throughout the world."

National Emphases:

- To deepen our spiritual lives as individuals and families;
- To further "Our Christian World Mission" by helping to establish and strengthen the Committee on Stewardship and Missionary Education in every local church;
- To encourage the commitment of our young people to full-time Christian service;
- To promote the use of visual aids, particularly the current denominational and inter-denominational films.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH

The Laymen's Fellowship

"Every man at work in his place in his church" is a worthy objective of the men of the church. No Program of Advance can succeed beyond the commitment of our Laymen. WE CALL upon the men of the Laymen's Fellowship to lend heart, mind and hand to the Program of Advance through:

- An active Laymen's organization in each church;
- Participation in the Laymen's Fellowship objectives.
- The completion of the "Moonelon" project (Convention Assembly Grounds);
- Laymen's Sunday observed in each church, on the third Sunday of October.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH

Christian Social Action

WE CALL upon our people to study the application of the teachings of Jesus to the Social, Political and Economic life of our communities, with special attention given to the implications of the recent ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States upon segregation.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH Concern for Others

The very life of every church depends upon its outreach. To live unto itself and for its own means death to any group of church members. The clear and unconditional command of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world," is supported in every phase of his own ministry and must be obeyed by his Church.

A goal no less than every member committed to "Our Christian World Mission" must be affirmed. This mission means the support by prayer, labor and money every effort beyond the bounds of the local church to bring the message of Christ to the hearts and lives of our people. Our deep concern must be manifest in all the undertakings which no single church can perform, but which all our churches working together may achieve in the name of and by the command of Christ, our Saviour and Lord.

WE CALL upon all our churches:

- To support all Mission Boards—Home and Foreign;
- To support the Institutions for whose life and welfare the churches of the Convention have special responsibility—Elon College and the Christian Orphanage;

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH Church Extension

The time to build churches is now! There are more people unchurched today than at any time in the history of our country. Our nation is experiencing its most rapid growth. New communities are springing up, and existing communities are expanding. Approximately 11,000 babies are being born every day in America. These growing millions need the Church. More than 10,000 new Protestant churches are needed in America. Congregational Christians must assume their share in this responsibility. We are in the midst of an expanding South, and action is demanded of us in the Southern Convention.

WE CALL upon each church to seek to extend its frontiers by sponsoring a new church organization, where needed in its area, either separately or with other churches.

GOAL: Twenty (20) new church organizations in the Southern Convention by December 31, 1956: Valley, 3; Eastern Virginia, 5; Eastern North Carolina, 4; Western North Carolina, 3; North Carolina and Virginia, 5.

A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE THROUGH The Christian Sun

The Christian Sun, to be the voice of our constituency, must be read by every family of the Southern Convention.

GOAL: The Christian Sun in every home.

-
- To support "The Christian Sun" and "Advance";
 - To support our Convention Office, including all paid personnel engaged in service to our churches;
 - To pay in full all apportionments.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH. Elon College, N. C.

What If Christmas Never Came?

Seldom has there been so many appeals for help as we have today. They are pouring in from all sides and from every conceivable source; boards, organizations, fraternities, sororities, clubs, churches, and institutions. No one person will want to give to them all, but all will want to give to some so that in the end all are supported.

The one big question is "To what shall I make my gift?". Make it a rule to know something about the cause or institution that is appealing to you and to know how the gifts are used. If used wisely, contribute, if used unwisely, then refrain from giving or give cautiously or with restriction.

Preceding the Christmas Season, these appeals come in abundance and with increasing persistence. Think a long time before you turn a deaf ear and close your purses to a worthy appeal.

Remember that in the long ago, the world was in great need of a Saviour and man was in great need of a Redeemer. Israel was appealing to God for a Messiah. In great grace and out of great love, God gave his only son that the world might have a Saviour and that man might have a Redeemer. In this supreme gift to the world, God also gave to man a benevolent spirit so that even in this materialistic age there are those who would divide their living that the hungry might be fed, the suffering relieved, and that the saving grace of God might be available to all people.

Christmas brightens our vision, broadens our sympathies, and increases our desire to share what we have for the benefit of others and for the glory of God.

Yes, I believe in Christmas and rejoice in the spirit of giving that it plants in the hearts of most people. It is good to send cards with crisp messages and to exchange gifts with friends of love and affection. What if we had no Christmas, no desire to administer to man in his needs? What if Christ had never been born? If man had never seen God in Christ, the world would still be in gross darkness and man would be groping in that darkness, not knowing the true paths of life, or where the paths would end, or what would be there when he reached the end of his way; no faith for the present or hope for the future.

Thank God for the priceless gift that grows more precious with every passing day, and for the light that shines brighter and shall continue to shine brighter unto the more perfect day. At this Christmas season, 1954, endeavor to be a blessing to someone. Bring joy to a single heart and hope eternal to a despairing soul.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

At Christmas time we think of others: neighbors, friends, and the unfortunate. We also think of our blessings: health, strength, hope and possessions beyond what we deserve. We are reminded of God's gift to us and of our opportunity to give to others. We do not give with the hope of receiving, but with a desire to share. Conscious of our obligations to individuals who have meant much to us and to institutions that have meant much to the cause of Christ and his kingdom. Elon College has endeavored through the years to lay hands of assistance on the hearts of the young people on her campus and to hold up to them the Christ and God who came that there might be life and hope to a darkened world and a sinful man. Your contributions through Sunday school and church for the college are greatly appreciated. We are short of our goal, but our faith is strong and our friends stronger still. May every reader have a joyous Christmas and a blessed experience in the church of God.

Previously reported	$12,450.91
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Fayetteville	$ 9.00
Piney Plain	30.00
Eastern Va. Conference:
Rosemont	$ 51.00
Western N. C. Conference:
Mt. Pleasant	$ 10.00
	<hr/> 100.00
Total to date	$12,550.91

"Christmas and the Good News"

The Last of Three Articles

By W. R. CULLOM

My two former papers on this theme have dealt with the general nature of this good news, and with three specific items in that good news. In this concluding paper I should like to approach the matter of A Worthy Response to Such News. What shall we say to this good news? What shall we do about it? These questions surely, are not easy to answer, and it is impossible to answer them in any adequate way. In attempting to deal with it, there are three things that I shall say:

1. It is impossible to make a response that is at all worthy of the challenge that is placed before us. One of the 18th century hymn writers says what I should like to say much better than I can say it:

No mortal can with him compare,
Among the sons of men;
Fairer is he than all the fair
That fill the heavenly train.

To him I owe my life and breath,
And all the joys I have;
He makes me triumph over death,
He saves me from the grave.

Since from his bounty I receive
Such proofs of love divine,
Had I a thousand hearts to give Lord! They should all be thine!

But to take it out in mere sentiment, however worthy that sentiment, would certainly be a most unworthy response. For, if there is anything that is really and truly down-to-earth and practical, it is the call that comes to us in the Good News that Jesus ushered into the world at his coming.

2. While I was preparing this paper it was my privilege to talk with two dear friends who will be used to bring out what I should like to suggest at this point. And it chances to be that one is a man and the other is a woman, just as I would have it.

The man is as fine a Christian spirit as I have known. Nor is his religion mere sentiment. He has served as deacon and as treasurer of his church; he has taught an important Sunday school class for a long time; he has one of the loveliest homes that I know. And when I use the term "home," I don't mean a mere house, though his house is all right. I mean by the word, "home" in this connection something analogous to what Sir Walter Scott had in mind when he wrote The Cotta's Sat-
(Continued on page 11.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Christmas Around the World

Boys and girls around the world enjoy Christmas. Here are some of their Merry Christmas greetings:

God Jul, Sweden;
Glaedelig Jul, Denmark;
Buon Natale, Italy;
Felices Pascuas de Navidad,
Spain;
Nadlaig Maith Chugnat, Ireland;
Hans Kojä Juhlia, Finland;
Joyeux Noel, France;
Frolich Weihnachten, Germany.

Many are our customs in America, and because we came from many lands, we have many happy ways of celebrating Christmas. Do you know that using mistletoe came from the Druids who lived in ancient England? From that country came also the plum pudding, the Yule Log and the caroling from door to door.

Germany gave us the Christmas tree, always a fir tree, gaily decorated and lighted. They sing a song about it, "O Tannebaum." They gave us the loveliest Christmas hymn, "Silent Night," and the pleasant idea of having a picture with cut out windows that may be opened for the 24 days before Christmas.

Italy gave us the ereche. It was their great saint, Francis, who placed the town folk in simple poses like the first Christmas must have been. And later the wonderful craftsmen carved little figures of the manger scene and they have been used by many countries to remind us of the first Christmas.

France sent us a wonderful song, "Bring a Torch, Jeannette, Isabelle." In this song the children are told to run to the ereche and bring a flaming torch (we hope they are careful with the fire!) and see the sleeping Babe and the softly smiling Mother.

The people of Sweden begin their Christmas celebration on December 13, which is the day of St. Lucia. The girls in the family wear white robes and the oldest girl wears a crown of leaves and candles on her head. The girls go from room to room in the household singing and calling the family to keep St. Lucia's Day and all the Christmas days that follow. Each home is swept and scrubbed and nicely cleaned, and there is much good food for all.

And what did we give the world? At first, the Congregationalists in New England were very strict. They were called "Puritans" and they believed in the religious remembrance of Christmas, but no gifts, fun or feasting. In Virginia's colony, it was quite different—holly and ivy from the custom in England—a yule log to burn on the hearth, and much singing and dancing. Plum puddings gave way to fruit cakes, and other customs changed, too. In modern times our street decorations—lights and ornaments—at homes and in the shopping centers, have become a very American way to mark the holiday season.

Community-Wide Thanksgiving Service Held at Elon College

A Community Wide Thanksgiving Service was held in the Elon College Community Church's Parish House on Thanksgiving Day. The Community Church's choir rendered special music; Rev. Truitt Gannon, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Elon College gave the Thanksgiving sermon. Members of the community, whatever their denominational affiliation, were present for the service and the Parish House was filled. Members of the Adult Sunday School Class of the Community Church (our church) canvassed the entire community for their Thanksgiving Offering for the orphanage. To date $411 has been received. Also several individuals had given privately to the orphanage. The Elon College Community is anxious to do its share for the orphanage which is located in its midst.

CHRISTMAS AND THE GOOD NEWS.

(Continued from page 10.)

urday Night. But in spite of all this, my friend has been greatly "down in the mouth" as to his acceptance with God.

In case of the other friend, in talking with her I spoke of lecturing in a certain North Carolina town for a week some years ago on the Gospel of Matthew. She told me then that Matthew was her favorite book of the Bible. "Yes," I said, "it has the Sermon on the Mount in it, and especially the beatitudes of our Lord." But I had not touched the heart of the matter with her. She went on to tell me of an experience in her life that must have been quite similar to that of my friend to whom I have just referred. She said, however, that she knew she had a little faith, and would turn to Matthew 25 and read over and over again, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (v. 40). In that spirit and in that way she has carried on with her Lord and for her Lord. That woman is to me one of the most beautiful characters and lives one of the most beautiful lives that I have ever witnessed.

Our Lord gives us in plain language the response that he would have each of us make in his own way and according to his own temperament, ability, and situation. It is couched in these words, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me" (Mark 8:34).

When I was a boy I heard a gospel song that appealed to me strongly. It was written the year after I was born. Many would count it doggerel. Be that as it may: it appealed to me in my early life, and it appeals to me now when I am trying to suggest something approximating a worthy response to the good news brought to all people in the coming of Jesus, the Son of God, into our human flesh. Here are the stanzas that I have in mind:

Hark, the voice of Jesus calling
Who will go and work today?
Fields are white and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?
Loud and strong the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer gladly saying
"Here am I send me, send me!"

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer,
You can help them at your door;
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite;
And the least you do for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

Let none hear you idly saying
"There is nothing I can do,"
While souls of men are dying;
And the Master calls for you:
Take the task he gives you gladly;
Let his work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when he calleth,
"Here am I, send me, send me."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Thinking Realistically About Life"

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 26, 1954.

MEMORY SELECTION: "This is the end of the matter; all hath been heard; fear God and keep his commandment; for this is the whole duty of man." Ecclesiastes 12:13.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Ecclesiastes 1-5; 12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Job 28:20-28.

The author of Ecclesiastes is described as a "preacher." If he was, he must have been a dry fellow, hard to listen to. That is, if the book bearing the name of Ecclesiastes is a fair sample of his preaching. Through most of the book his face is glum and sour, and his voice is rasping. Someone has said that "he must have had a bad stomach, or else had been disappointed in love." Most of his book reads that way. The fact is, however, that the word translated "preacher" really means a "member of the assembly." The writer of the book was a Hebrew philosopher, searching for the meaning of life, and putting down, frankly, what he found and what he thought. On the whole it is a pessimistic, gloomy book. But a helpful book for it shows what life is apart from God.

The Man's Problem.

What is the man's problem? It is basically, "What is the meaning of life?" Is life worth while? Is it worth living? Is it worth all the trouble it takes? What profit and what gain is in it? The man has a sense of frustration. Life does not seem to have any meaning. It seems to be a meaningless round of activities, something like a squirrel going around in a cage. Forty times in this book he uses the word "vanity." He is disillusioned, dissatisfied, discouraged.

There are many modern people who share this man's frustration. They do not see any meaning in life. It has no direction, no worthy ends, no ultimate goals. It is a meaningless round of activities. Indeed it seems as if he is the sport of fatalism. Many people commit suicide because life has lost its meaning. This man's problem was the problem of many modern men,

The Man's Efforts to Find a Solution.

In his efforts to find an answer to his problem, the man turns to several areas or activities of life. He tried wisdom or knowledge. "And I applied my heart to seek and to search out by wisdom concerning all that is done under heaven." Wisdom and knowledge have their place in life. Scholarship and study contribute to the satisfaction of the heart and the solution of the problems of life. But mere knowledge, certainly not book knowledge, is not enough. The more the man learned the more he learned how little he did know. He ends up disappointed and disillusioned. Man has a heart as well as a head, and life is not to be explained simply in terms of knowledge. It takes more than wisdom and education to give meaning to life.

The man turns from wisdom to mirth and pleasure. It was not the nightclub type of pleasure, a sensuous kind of pleasure. It was the pleasure which came from building great houses, enjoying ease and luxury, song and wealth. He thought, like many moderns think, that life's satisfactions are to be found in pleasure. There are those who give themselves to a round of pleasures in an effort to find happiness, and the meaning of life. Pleasure is not wrong, unless it is the wrong kind of pleasure. But pleasure does not satisfy the hunger of the human heart, and pleasure is not the end of life. Here as in the case of wisdom, the man declares that all is vanity, emptiness, inadequate.

From pleasure he turns to work. He gave himself to the round of duties that make up life's common cycle. He worked hard, and he laid up some money. But his work did not have any meaning for him. It gave him no satisfaction, it was a meaningless, routine, deadening thing. And even if he did make some money and lay it aside, what good would it be to him after he was gone. Others would inherit it, and they might not spend it wisely at all. He cannot enjoy his money for thinking about this. And with wisdom and pleasure, he puts labor and work as vanity of vanities. Many a modern man shares this man's attitude toward labor. And no wonder. For in many modern industries, men are simply cogs, and sometimes little cogs in a great machine. Take a man who works on an assembly line and spends eight hours a day putting a nut on a bolt in a machine as it passes by. It takes a lot of imagination for such a man to see much meaning in his work except as a means of making some money which will have to be spent for the necessities of life. Many a man finds that his daily toil is vanity, vanity of vanities.

And finally the man turns to money as the secret of his quest. Surely in wealth, with its power to buy things, one will find happiness and meaning. But not even here did the man find the answer to the hunger of his heart. He saw as many modern men do not see, that when one has much, he wants more. That things never satisfy. "He that hath silver will not be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth abundance, with increase." "The fulness of the rich will not suffer him to sleep." Many a rich man cannot sleep because he is afraid that somebody will get his wealth, or because he is wondering how he can make more money. On the other hand "the sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much." Many a laboring man, earning meager wages is happier than the man of wealth. Jesus warned against the danger and the delusion of riches and material things. They too are vanity, vanity of vanities.

The Man's Conclusion.

"For this is the end of the matter, all hath been heard: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." Life's satisfactions and life's meaning are not to be found in wisdom, in pleasure, in work, or in wealth, but in love for God and in loyalty to him. As a Methodist bishop once said after getting back from a trip around the world, "After all there is no man who is getting along pretty well, without God and Christ." God has made us for himself and our hearts are restless until we rest in him, as Augustine put it. Furthermore when God is put at the center of life, wisdom and pleasure and work and wealth will have meaning, and life will have a new quality.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons;" Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

Religion is the best armor but the poorest cloak.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Costumes Available

Mrs. Ralph Galt, Route 1, New Market, Virginia, writes that she has been having requests for Indian saris and for Chinese robes to use in connection with several programs in the packets: The ones on India, and "Voices from Africa."

Sometimes she has not been able to fill the request, because it came too late, or because the costumes were in use elsewhere. She suggests that you write her some time in advance to reserve them. Also, she suggests it would make life easier for her if you would send a "sticker" with your name and address on it.

Mrs. Galt also suggests that local gift shops, dime stores, etc., have a lot of articles from India these days, mostly beautiful brass ware. If the proprietor is requested to bring a display of articles to your meeting, you will usually receive a warm acceptance of the request. Incidentally, one group reached out through this method to draw in a woman who until then had had no contact with the local church.

If you live near Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Route 1, Henderson, or Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, 232 McCauley St., Chapel Hill, it is probable that you could borrow a sari from them. Mrs. Riggs left one for that purpose at the Lester household, 940 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, when she was here in September.

Let's make use of these costumes, and of displays, and thus make our programs come to life for the members of our societies!

* * * * *

Valley of Virginia Officers

President—Mrs. Cecil Whitlock.

Vice-President—Mrs. Tom Good.

Secretary—Mrs. Austin Kipps.

Treasurer—Mrs. J. E. Bryant.

Superintendents:

Young People—Mrs. E. J. Rohart.

Juniors—Mrs. Shirley White.

Cradle Roll—Mrs. Amy Kibler.

Spiritual Life—Mrs. R. A. Whitten.

Family Life—Mrs. E. Lena Rothgeb.

Literature—Mrs. Ralph Galt.

Life Membership and Memorials—

Mrs. Howard Hensley.

Visual Aids—Mrs. D. H. Dofflemeyer.

Historian—Mrs. B. F. Frank.

Interdenominational Cooperation —
Mrs. A. W. Andes.

* * *

Recommendations of Valley of Virginia

VOTED OCTOBER 8, 1954.

1. That each local church be urged to send representatives to Conferences, Rallies, and School of Missions at Elon, and to invite returned missionaries to speak.
2. Promote in each church the feature film, The Beginning.
3. That special emphasis be placed on the Thank Offering project —new Center Church in South Boston.
4. We urge that each Fellowship through Friendly Service send at least one layette, sweaters and quilts to one of the following:
 - A. Thrift Shop in Dehmo Community.
 - B. Korea.
 - C. Dr. Teofile Sant's work in Naples, Italy.
 - D. Philippines.
 - E. East Harlem Protestant Parish, New York City.
 - F. Japanese Orphanage.
5. That each Fellowship be urged to give one or more Life Memberships and Memorials, which go to renovate the Chapel at Franklinton Center at Brieks.
6. We recommend that each Fellowship strive to meet its apportionment so that the designated annual goal of $1,250 00 be met.
7. That we cooperate with the United Council of Church Women in interdenominational work.
8. That a letter of appreciation be sent to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill for her untiring efforts in the interest of our Valley Women's Fellowship.
9. That the Conference go on record advocating that our church members be total abstainers and diligently teach our children this way of life —Abstinence the only preventive.

10. That this conference and its individuals and members use their influence to bring about compliance with the recent decision of the Supreme Court, declaring segregation in the public schools to be unconstitutional, and that furthermore this Conference urge acceptance of people of all races in our Women's Fellowship.

MRS. AUSTIN KIPPS,
Secretary.

* * * * *

Franklin Off to Good Start

The woman's work of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church is headed for obvious success for the current year under the capable leadership of Mrs. Darden W. Jones, who succeeded Mrs. James Irving Beale, Jr., as president. To quote Mrs. Jones: "The organization's most heartening features are Christian-spirited teamwork of the four newly revised circles and the hearty cooperation I am receiving from every member. These things have already been well demonstrated to my delight and satisfaction in the annual Thank Offering service and Fall Festival."

The Thank Offering Service was held at the morning worship hour on Sunday, November 7, with the president in charge of the program. She was assisted by auxiliary co-workers and the sanctuary choir. A splendid congregational response to the service was evidenced in much outspoken praise and the offering of $80.50 which was received.

The Fall Festival was a fund-raising project for the auxiliary treasury. It proved to be a most successful venture in that it netted $550. This indeed showed the fine spirit of cooperative fellowship that is prevalent among the group of women. With few exceptions every member supported the event with their creative talents in ways and to the extent that five departments were bountifully filled with desirable articles for sale. This was made possible, of course, by the functioning for months previous of the various committees and individuals.

Besides the booths where household, personal and gift needs were arranged in attractive array, a tea
(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thirty bushels of apples are a lot of apples. In baskets there were Yorks, Delicious and Staymen Winesaps; in bags were Black Twigs and Yorks. They came from orchardists who are members of our Timber Ridge Church, High View, West Virginia, Rev. Cameron D. Hayes, pastor. I was saying my prayers on the night of December 6, and was just ready to retire when longdistance called. A large trailer truck was on the road and would pass through Greensboro in thirty minutes with several baskets and bags of apples for the orphanage. We drove up to the designated crossing at almost the same time. It was midnight and freezing cold. The drivers of the two trucks (Mr. Chas. E. Perkins, of the orphanage; and Mr. Theodore Nail, of Winchester, Virginia) quickly transferred the apples, which were wrapped to keep them from freezing and soon safely stored in the wheat granery.

Now thanks to Mr. Nail for bringing them, thanks to the Rev. Mr. Cameron for sending them, and very, very many thanks to Herbert Kump, Richard Kump, Mrs. Vera Larriek, Fred Oates, Willard Oats, and Vernon Whiteacre for giving them to us. This is a very nice thing to do and I greatly appreciate it. I read of such things in the leaflets I receive from other orphanages. Now I am so glad it has happened to us. Timber Ridge, thank you; and may God bless you!

One of the joys across the years in going to Holy Neck Church in Eastern Virginia was seeing and conversing with a good friend, the late Jobie Saunders. He was a good neighbor, a good friend and faithful and loyal to his church. He left the orphanage two bonds worth $840.00. This money will help homeless children through the years to come. It is most gratefully received.

Thanks for the good report.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR DECEMBER 8, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:

Mrs. B. G. Snow, Dyke, Va.
A friend, Colonial Heights, Va.
Mrs. C. W. Tatum, Norfolk, Va.
Mrs. Jack Flinchum, Belews Creek, N. C.
Mrs. J. M. Whitley, Suffolk, Va.

Toys:
Mission Belles, Grace Congregational Christian Church, Two Rivers, Wisconsin.
Women's Society, Tryon, N. C.

Clothing:
Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Melberg, Elon College, N. C.

Mrs. J. E. Harrell, Jr., Suffolk, Va.

Clothing and toys:
Woman's Missionary Society, Belews Creek Church.

Sweaters:
Harvey L. Sawyer, Portsmouth, Va.

Apples:
Herbert Kump, High View, W. Va.
Richard Kump, High View, W. Va.
Mrs. Vera Larriek, High View, W. Va.
Fred Oats, High View, W. Va.
Willard Oates, High View, W. Va.
Vernon Whiteacre, High View, W. Va.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.
Amount brought forward $14,128.42

Eastern N. C. Conference:
Fayetteville$ 5.00
Henderson 264.00
Mt. Auburn, S. S. 10.14
Piney Plain 20.40

Eastern Va. Conference:
Berea (Nans.), Thanks-giving$ 24.10
Bethlehem (Nans.) S. S. 53.12
Burton's Grove 10.00
Holy Neck S. S. 140.00
Mt. Carmel S. S. 18.36
Suffolk, Thanksgiving .. 100.00
Union (So.) 82.00
Windsor, Thanksgiving .. 61.04
Windsor 10.00

N. C. and Virginia Conference:
Durham S. S.$ 27.06
Greensboro, First, Thanks-giving 174.50
Greensboro, First 60.47
New Lebanon, Thanks-giving 100.00
Union (Va.) S. S. 5.00
Hendersonville 12.00
South Boston 5.00

Western N. C. Conference:
Randleman$ 26.00

Virginia Valley Conference:
Linville S. S.$ 14.66
Winchester S. S. 10.00

Total $ 1,232.85

Grand total $15,361.27

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward -31,672.01
Chester H. Roth Co., Inc.
(interest)$ 30.00
Hank's Chapel Missionary Society 3.50
Estate of J. P. Saunders . 840.00
D. M. McLelland & Family, Elon College, N. C. 10.00
Beginners' Dept., Suffolk Christian Church, Christmas Offering 5.00
Mary Sue Brittle S. S. Class, Bethlehem (N.) Church 5.00
Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. (interest) 36.00
Shelton Mem. Woman's Guild, Christmas Offering 10.00
In Memory of Gov. Wm. B. Umstead 5.00
In Memory of W. H. May, Sr. 5.00
In Memory of Lesley Moreland 5.00
Special Gifts 329.78

1,284.28

Thanksgiving Offerings.

A friend, Winston-Salem, N. C.$ 5.00
Joppa Cong. Christian Cr. 5.00
Union (Surry) Church .. 53.40
Union (Surry) S. S. ... 48.40
V. Lee Hanbury, Norfolk, Va. 25.00
Julius C. Helmer, Newport News, Va. 25.00
Burlington Rotary Club .. 90.50
West Mem. Bible Class, Suffolk Christian Ch. .. 25.00
Mr. & Mrs. Hallie Routh, Liberty, N. C. 5.00
Doreas Circle, Albemarle Cong. Christian Church 13.45

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS

"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased)

(City)

(Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written)

(Address)

Name.....

Address

Youth at Work in the Church

THOMAS W. MADREN, Box 103, Elon College, N. C.

Pleasant Union Youth Group At Work

Since the autumn of 1947, the year that the Pleasant Union young people organized into a Friendly Workers group, many interesting and well-attended meetings have been held, such as the one at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Yates on August 6 of this year.

At this meeting, all of our senior members were present. After the business meeting, games were arranged, and to finish off the program, a beautiful serving of ice cream and cake was enjoyed by all, thanks to James Yates, a senior member, and Nell Yates, a junior member, and their parents.

Several accomplishments have been brought to a finish, such as helping build Sunday school rooms, presenting plays, having charge of devotionals, organizing a boys' quartet, working on a play as we are at present, and keeping our three-year project going, which is our Church Building and Loan Fund. We are now contributing to the building fund of our church.

From the beginning, great enthusiasm has been shown in our regular meetings, and our committee which was appointed to see that our church is represented at the fifth Sunday Rallys, urging a large delegation for each one.

A well organized Junior group of approximately 15 is finding very interesting the task of taking turns in teaching the class. They are now making plans for a program to be given at Christmas.

We, the Senior and Junior Young People of Pleasant Union, are looking forward to a successful future.

JUDY YATES.

* * * * *

1954 Virginia Christian Youth Conference

The 1954 Virginia Christian Youth Conference was held December 3-5 at the Second Baptist Church, Richmond, Virginia. This is an interdenominational and interracial meeting representing the United Christian Youth Movement in the State of Virginia. The 1954 meeting was the largest yet, with over three hundred young people present, and more than fifteen different denominations represented.

The theme for 1955 Youth Week, "One Fellowship in Christ," was evident in the singing, the games, the discussions, and the speeches. Bill Simpson, a student at the Evangelical and Reformed seminary at Lancaster, Penn., welded the group together through recreation and singing.

Key addresses were made by Rev. G. W. Jones, pastor of High Street Methodist Church, Petersburg; Rev. James P. Lineohn, director of Youth Work for the Episcopal Diocese of Virginia and Rev. John S. Wood, associate secretary of UCYM from Chicago. Mr. Wood with his enthusiasm and knowledge of ecumenical youth work together with Rev. Clarence Brown of the Virginia Council of Churches kept spirits high throughout the sessions.

Our Congregational Christian fellowship was represented by three people from the Valley: Rev. H. V. Harman, Miss Martha Rohart, and Miss Tillie Striekler.

HANK HARMAN.

LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP.

(Continued from page 3.)

day, that we may grow strong, useful, understanding, happy and loving, serving the purposes of God, helping our brothers to find the way. Jesus makes it pretty plain: "Seek first the Kingdom." The Christian life is our vocation. This I Believe.

—Charley Hayden.

Questions for Discussion.

1. How can men find God?
2. When does God reveal himself to man?
3. Why do some church people fail to discover God?
4. What are life's real choices?
5. Where and what is the Kingdom of God?

Special Note.

Charley Hayden, of Creston, Iowa was the author of this meditation. Mr. Hayden has long been active in church work and especially the Laymen's Fellowship in his local church at Creston, his association and the Iowa State Conference; he is a musician by profession, teaching piano and directing the Creston, Iowa, City band.

.CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

(Continued from page 13.)

room was improvised by enclosing a section of the fellowship hall with a white picket fence, entwined with ivy. The tea room was operated all day from 10:00 a. m. to 10:00 p. m., with approximately 300 lunches and dinners served. The menus were planned and served graciously by a staff of women who worked tirelessly for the success of that department.

As members of this organization, we shall continue our humble services in Christ's name with whatever privileges and opportunities he gives us, great or small. To this end we are whole-heartedly dedicated.

Mrs. B. V. HARGRAVE.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.
(Continued from page 14.)
Misses Birdie & Sallie Wilson, Virgilina, Va. . .	6.00
Mr. & Mrs. M. W. McPherson, Burlington, N. C.	15.00
Christian Light S. S. . . .	25.00
M. L. Holt, Elon College, N. C.	16.00
Rev. J. A. Henderson, Henderson, N. C.	15.00
Clarence Hooper, Burlington, N. C.	25.00
R. L. Morgan Lumber Co., Glen Raven, N. C. . . .	5.00
Holt Hosiery Mills, Inc., Glen Raven, N. C. . . .	100.00
L. D. Tucker, Burlington, N. C.	15.00
Ben G. Johnston, Hillsboro, N. C.	25.00
Mrs. June K. Henderson, Graham, N. C.	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. George B. Vick, Courtland, Va. . .	10.00
Burlington Drug Co., Inc., Burlington, N. C. . . .	100.00
W. H. Morgan, Boone, N. C.	5.00
Mrs. Mary G. Curling, Norfolk, Va.	25.00
Happy Sharer's Club, Greensboro, N. C. . . .	20.00
Mr. & Mrs. Clyde R. Buckner, Burlington, N. C. .	10.00
Union Ridge Christian Ch. .	100.00
Mr. & Mrs. Jesse H. Jones, Halifax, Va.	5.00
Mrs. E. H. Morris, Ashboro, N. C.	5.00
Hines Chapel Christian Ch. .	121.75
Miss Antionette Darden, Suffolk, Va.	5.00
	954.50
Total	$ 2,238.78
Grand total	$33,910.79
Total for the week	$ 3,471.63
Total for the year	$49,272.06

Centenial Program of Advance

1954-56 Biennium

OF THE

Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches

1856-1956

THE CALL TO ADVANCE

In 1956 the Southern Convention will observe its Centennial. These one hundred years of service in the name of Jesus Christ, our Saviour, Lord and Master, present an occasion of joy for our heritage and a challenge for the future.

From January 1, 1955, through December 31, 1956, the churches of the Southern Convention are called to A PROGRAM OF ADVANCE. This PROGRAM OF ADVANCE is a "Call" to discovery—through Study, Fellowship, Worship, Prayer, and Service. It is a "Call" to Commitment, to Witnessing and to Giving. It is a "Call" to go forward!

A CALL TO PRAYER AND COMMITMENT

WE CALL upon all the churches of the Convention to designate Sunday, January 2, 1955, as A DAY OF PRAYER AND COMMITMENT, when the objectives and methods suggested for the 1954-56 Biennium will be presented.

WE CALL upon each church to hold a service on that Sunday, and to make this possible the Laymen's Fellowship offers to provide a speaker where desired or where regular services are not scheduled for that Sunday.

WE CALL upon each church and pastor on Sunday, January 2, 1954, to put themselves at the disposal of the Holy Spirit, that we of the Southern Convention may meet the challenge of our day as a church and as members of the Body of Christ. To that end let each of us be rededicated to regular attendance of public worship of the church; to observe daily personal and family devotions; to dedicate a proportionate share of our time, talents and money that the Christian witness may be made in power; and to devote ourselves to all the objectives of the Centennial Program of Advance.

WE CALL upon each church to hold both Sunday and mid-week services that our people may become more fully aware of the rich heritage and mission of our church.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CVI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1954

NUMBER 50

The Christmas Spirit

I am the Christmas Spirit!

I enter the home of poverty, causing palefaced children to open their eyes wide, in pleased wonder.

I cause the miser's clutched hand to relax, and thus paint a bright spot on his soul.

I cause the aged to renew their youth and to laugh in the old, glad way.

I keep romance alive in the heart of childhood, and brighten sleep with dreams woven of magic.

I cause eager feet to climb dark stairways with filled baskets, leaving behind hearts amazed at the goodness of the world.

I cause the prodigal to pause a moment on his wild and wasteful way, and send to anxious love some little token that releases glad tears—tears which wash away the hard lines of sorrow.

I enter dark prison cells, reminding scarred manhood of what might have been, and pointing forward to good days yet to be.

I come softly into the still, white home of pain, and lips that are too weak to speak just tremble in silent, eloquent gratitude.

In a thousand ways I cause the world to look up into the face of God, and for a little moment forget the things that are small and wretched.

I am the Christmas Spirit!

—E. C. Baird.

News Flashes

Do not forget the Christmas Offering for Veterans of the Cross.

Supt. Wm. T. Scott was with Dr. Ross Sanderson for three days recently, at the Franklin Center, now at Bricks, North Carolina.

Congratulations to United Church, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, in going over the top in their recent drive for building and improvement funds. Dick Jackson and his members deserve great credit for the job done.

There will be no paper issued the week of January 26. Meanwhile the printing staff of THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes for each of its readers a very, very happy Christmas, and a New Year brimming full of good things.

"Ready for a Great Revival"

The United States "is ready for a great spiritual awakening and revival."

In these words from a message to the nation's churches the National Council of Churches—the nation's largest religious organization—concluded its six-day Third General Assembly in Boston, Mass., last Friday.

Some 2,500 persons—including 650 voting representatives of 30 Protestant, Anglican and Eastern Orthodox communions with a membership of more than 35,500,000—met in 65 different sessions and sub-sessions to plan together the future of cooperative church work in this nation.

The 1,700-word text, the summary document of the Assembly, defined the present time as one in which "fear and doubt are rampant." It is a time, the church leaders said, when "there is apparent in America a spiritual seeking and hunger." This condition presents to the churches "a wider opportunity to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ" than ever before. In times such as these "the need is for a more understanding ministry in order that the gospel may become more effective in daily life."

How the churches can work together to meet this "wider opportunity" for service through the scores of National Council programs occupied the attention of delegates and visitors in plenary sessions, Divisional assemblies and other meetings throughout the week. Some of the assembly highlights were:

Election of Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, of Phila., Pa., Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., as the Council's third president, and of 16 vice-presidents, and 125 members of the ad-interim policy-making General Board. As the first significant task of his presidency, Dr. Blake left on Sunday December 5, for a three-weeks flying trip, visiting the Far East to carry Christmas greetings to G. I.'s and chaplains and a message to the churches of the Pacific.

Announcement of a two-months globe-girdling airplane journey by an international team of Protestant women headed by Mrs. James D. Wyker, of Mt. Vernon, as a means of building "greater unity in fellowship and prayer" and to extend an invitation to women church leaders in the score of countries on five different continents to be visited to participate in the seventh biennial assembly of United Church Women, at Cleveland, Ohio, November 7-10, 1955.

(Continued on page 11.)

Christmas Pageant Will Feature Manger Figures

A manger scene constructed at the Portlock School, South Norfolk, Virginia, will be the feature of a Christmas pageant to be presented at the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church during the Christmas holidays.

Miss Laurine Halstead, a teacher, supervised the making of the papier-mache figures at the school. Thirty pupils took part in making the 15-inch figures and stable. They constructed the figures of Mary, Joseph and the Baby, and made the animals and the seven-foot long and 30-inch high stable.

Mrs. H. R. Morrison will be in charge of the program; the Maude Hedley Bible Class will be in charge of refreshments.

The music will be furnished by the primary and junior choirs under the direction of Miss Ruth Dunn. Ed Drinkard will be the soloist, and Mrs. Frank Gaforth is organist.

Angels will be Carol Richardson, Lois Godwin, Anne Richardson, Patsy Trotman, Jackie Small and Shirley Brooks.

(Continued on page 7.)

A Christmas Prayer

By RICHARD K. MORTON

O God of the ages, we praise Thee for Thy perfect revelation within the bounds of time! O God of the infinite, we thank Thee that Thou hast made Thyself known amidst the finite!

As Thou hast for our sakes taken the form of man and dwelt for a redeeming purpose among men, be born this day in our own hearts, we beseech Thee!

Help us, O Lord, to see the Star shining in these our times, and attune our ears to the songs of angelic hosts! Through the beauty of this wonderful story of old, revive our jaded spirits and lift up our hearts and minds to that which is eternal and abiding.

As Thou hast come unto us in Bethlehem's Babe and in a manger, come unto us wherever we may be, in whatever humble condition or at whatever humble work.

Grant that our lives may be Spirit-filled and made beautiful and meaningful because of the spirit of the Christ Child that guides within.

As Thou hast come into the world, grant that we may receive Thee and recognize Thee and find a place for Thee within the inns of our hospitable hearts! Amen.

Laymen and the Church . . .

J. E. Danieley, Editor, Box 515, Elon College, N. C.

Laymen of Pleasant Ridge Observe Special Occasions

Laymen's Sunday was observed the last Sunday in October at the Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church, near Ramseur, North Carolina, with J. C. Newell, the president, presiding.

The theme was, "A Time for Decision." Larry Cox played the prelude, J. C. Newell gave the call to worship, and H. V. Cox led the responsive reading. The scripture lesson was read by Earl Lowdermilk and Victor Reed. Mr. Lowdermilk read Joshua 24:14-28, and Psalm 84. Mr. Reed read Matthew 6:19-24. A poem was read by Page Craven.

The following Junior Laymen took the offering: Frank Brown, William Brown, Milton Grove and William Beane.

Announcements were read by Harris Rumley.

The following short addresses were given:

"A Time for Personal Decision," by O. W. Allen of the Pilgrim Holiness Church of Ramseur; "Time for Work-a-Day Decision," by Theodore Cox; "Time for National Decision," by Hilton Beane; "Time for World Decision," by O. C. Brown. And Harry Stewart closed with a timely talk on "Starting with Ourselves."

J. C. Newell closed the service with benediction.

The Laymen were also in charge of the annual Harvest Day Festival held on Thanksgiving Day. Rev. Max Vestal was the speaker for the service, and before his most interesting address, offerings were brought to the altar by the different classes.

These classes participated in The Lord's Acre Project all the year, and the proceeds were given to the church at the Festival.

Following is a list of classes and their projects:

Cradle Roll, pennies; Beginners, Scripture text napkins; Primary, quarters; Juniors, extra money; Intermediates, paring knives; Seniors, home-made ice cream and woody woodpeckers; Young People, dimes; Young Adults, dimes; Men's Bible Class, birthday offering; Women's Bible Class, birthday offering and a table of handmade articles that were auctioned off in the recreation room, James Cates being the very able auctioneer. Cakes, pies, farm produce, hand made articles, were auctioned off.

Over $700.00 was realized from the Festival, and this was given to the church.

New officers were recently elected by the Laymen's Fellowship, and they were initiated into office on December 13, at the church. Those elected were the following:

Theodore Cox, president; Charlie Joyee, vice-president; Earl Lowdermilk, secretary; Page Craven, treasurer, and J. C. Newell, reporter.

Michigan Bans Liquor Drinking Over TV

Elimination of the dramatization of beer and wine drinking on TV commercials was unanimously approved at the annual convention of the Michigan Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters held recently. Any network program showing such acts will be out, it was declared. So far as is known, Michigan TV stations are the first to make this move. Since there was unanimous agreement on the matter, no formal penalty provisions for non-compliance were established. However, it was the impression given that any member not complying might be expelled from the association. What state will be next to take this wholesome step?

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interest of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL STAFF

Editor S. C. Harrell
Managing Editor J. T. Kernodle

Departmental Editors—Convention, Wm. T. Scott; Laymen's Fellowship, J. E. Danieley; Woman's Work, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Young People's Work, Thomas W. Madren; Children, Mrs. R. L. House; Sunday School Lesson, H. S. Hardcastle.

Board of Publications—W. W. Snyder, Chairman; S. T. Holland, Secretary; Clyde W. Fields, S. E. Madren, F. C. Lester, G. D. Colclough, Treasurer, ex officio.

Institutional Representatives—Elon College, L. E. Smith; The Christian Orphanage, John G. Truitt.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Year $3.00
Two Years 5.00

Published by the Board of Publications of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Inc. Printed every Thursday except the last in June and December by Central Publishing Co., Inc., Richmond, Va.

Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Richmond, Va., July 25, 1922, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscriptions should be sent to The Christian Sun, c/o Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

All general material for publication should be sent to Dr. S. C. Harrell, Editor, 1010 W. Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., not later than the Thursday before date of publication.

Departmental material should be sent to the proper departmental editor, at the address shown on their page.

Business communications, emergency notices and news notes which would otherwise be too late for publication should be addressed to the Office of Publication, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va.

The Christian Sun Subscription Blank

Subscription Price: 1 year, $3.00; 2 years, $5.00

Date....., 1954

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Supt.,
Elon College, N. C.

Enclosed find $....., for which please send The Christian Sun

() 1 year, () 2 years—() New Subscription, () Renewal:

To Church

Address

() Renew, () Enter my own subscription, () 1 year, () 2 years.

My Name Church

Address

What God Has Given Us

(EDITORIAL)

God has given us such infinite riches that our gratitude should never end. At this season surely it should surpass expression: we should borrow the refrain of the angels and cry, "Glory to God in the highest!"

"Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: bring an offering and come into his courts."

God has given us the mercies we regard as normal conditions.

God has given us the delicate and powerful balance of the universe, which holds the world for the radiance of the Star of Christ's Birth. God has given us the beauty and abundance of the world, in which we are sojourners as our fathers were. God has given us the power to sense and to study the mysteries of our earthly home, to employ them for the good of all nations.

"In his hand are the deep places of the earth: the strength of the hills is his also."

God has given us the power to distribute mercy in human accomplishments, wisdom in human associations, against the blankness of distance in space and time. God has given us the power to defend ourselves, our neighbors, our children, against heat and cold, against pestilence and famine, against the tyranny of ignorant fear.

"The Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it."

God has given us a sense of awe, a longing for justice; he has set eternity in our hearts. God has given us the history of his works among men. God has given us the history of his servants, of the leaders he has raised up for his people, of his unerring judgments to vindicate the righteous and to sustain the faithful.

"The Lord executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed. He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel. The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide: neither will he keep his anger forever. He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him."

God has given us the certain knowledge that salvation is not of our making, that through his mercy it is within our grasp.

God has given us the revelation of himself, of his infinite love for us; God has given us the most wonderful gift in his power, his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, to redeem us from ourselves, to restore us to himself.

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only Begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

God has given us the power, by the example of his Son, by the presence of his Holy Spirit, at this season and forever to give ourselves to him, that we may be born again into his joy and peace, as his Son was born into our sorrow and suffering.

"O Light Invisible, we praise Thee! Too bright for mortal vision."

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

"The Everlasting Light"

A CHRISTMAS SERMON

By THE REV. GEORGE ALLEY

Pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church

O little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie.
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep,
the silent stars go by.
Yet, in thy dark streets shineth
the everlasting light.
The hopes and fears of all the years are met in thee tonight.

—Phillips Brooks, 1868.

Have you ever let your mind wander over the years to single out some of the things that have happened to the Everlasting Light since first it shone in the dark streets of Bethlehem on the eve of the first Christmas? It has had a strange and fascinating journey, marked at every turn by eternal conflict between the Light, which was God's, and all manner of darkness, which has been the work of men. From the very beginning, men have done their best (and their worst), to extinguish the Light which was in Jesus Christ, once and for all.

Do you remember the panic of Herod, procurator of Judea at the time of Jesus' birth? So afraid was he that this newborn Prince of Peace would someday overthrow the tyranny and oppression upon which his power rested, that he ordered all the baby boys put to death, just to make sure that the One who threatened his security would be destroyed. Of course, Joseph, being warned of this in a dream, took the young child and his mother and fled into Egypt, and Herod's evil plot was foiled.

But scarcely a generation passed before the Light became a threat to other men of power. This time the plot was more successful, and the One who bore the Light was betrayed, condemned to death, and was hung upon a cross between two thieves. Another Joseph, this one from Arimathea, begged for the body of Jesus, and laid it to rest in his own tomb.

Do you remember the uncertainty of Pilate? For fear that Jesus' disciples might steal the body from the tomb, then claim that he had risen from the dead, Pilate set a guard to stand before the door of the tomb, and he said to them, "Ye have a watch. Go your way. Make it as sure as you can!" It has been thus in every age where men have brought opposition to the Light. Someone has always had to say, "Make it as sure as you can!" But, still, no one has ever really been sure, even for a moment, that the Light would be put out.

Man's opposition has taken many forms. Time after time it has been that of open hostility. Yet the antagonists have often been blinded by the Light itself, so that when they regained their sight, it was to follow after it and persecute it no more. Such was the one named Saul, a tent-maker, out of Tarsus. Brilliant he was; schooled in the best traditions of his faith at the feet of Gamaliel, great teacher of priests and rabbis. The story has it that one day while on the road to Damascus he even held the cloak of one who was stoning a man who bore the Light within his own soul. But on that road, Saul, the tent-maker, was blinded by the Light, so much so that he became a new creature: Paul the apostle, missionary to the gentiles, debtor to the Greeks and Barbarians, who said, "It is not I who lives, but rather Christ who liveth in me!"

The opposition has been that of indifference, too. In each new generation there have been those, usually among the vast majority of the people, who have simply said, "The Christian faith may have something, but I don't see it! It may be all right for some people, but count me out! If others want to spend their time in the churches, trying to change human nature, attempting to re-make society, so what?" All of these folks have not been outside the church, either. Many a church member has been just as indifferent to the demands of his faith as those outside the church. "Just leave me alone," he says, "I'll go along, so long as it doesn't cost me anything very much. Let's keep things the way they are. They were good enough for father and mother, this way, so they're good enough for me!" Once in a while the Light has gotten through in spite of everything, but not very often, and seldom is such proportions as to set the world on fire; just enough to keep things going until a new generation has been raised up to replace the old.

Couple the opposition of indifference with that of complacency and self-satisfaction, and you wonder how

(Continued from page 13.)

Our Christmas Carols

When we recall the wars of yesterday
And face the fears of lethal bombs tomorrow,
How can our Christmas carols chase away
The stormy clouds that threaten world-wide sorrow?
But when the Child whose birth we celebrate
Was born in Bethlehem long years ago,
His home was threatened by King Herod's hate,
For Roman rule had filled the land with woe.

The founders of the Church in those dark days
Obeyed their Lord's commands with fearless gladness;
Where Nero ruled they sang their psalms of praise.
The Kremlin must not mar our faith with sadness:
Our Christmas carols herald joy and cheer,
Exulting that the Lord of all is here.

C. REXFORD RAYMOND.

Christmas, 1954.

Congregational Christian Educators Sail for India, Ceylon and Southern Rhodesia

Two Congregational Christian educators, one an experienced missionary and the other a new recruit, sailed Thursday, December 9, from New York on the SS America bound for India and Ceylon under the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass.

They are Miss Miriam Dalton

Brown of Laneaster, Mass., (Boston University, American International College and Hartford Theological Seminary) returning to India; and Miss Bouneva Frence Farlow of Sophia, North Carolina, (Women's College of the University of North Carolina, Class of 1954) going to Ceylon for the first time.

Miss Brown is returning after furlough to her post as Director of the Lucy Perry Noble Institute in Madura, India, a Christian school and community center for reclaiming girls and women from poverty-stricken villages. The Institute is called "Raehanyapuram" which means "Place of Salvation."

Miss Farlow, 22, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Colon C. Farlow of Sophia, North Carolina, and born in Randleman, goes to join the faculty of the Uduvil Girls' School in Uduvil, Ceylon, the oldest girls' boarding school in Asia founded by the American Board in 1824. The school lays definite emphasis on Christian training and on the best in Eastern and Western cultures.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches with headquarters at Elon College, N. C., is especially interested in Miss Farlow and her work.

Miss Louise Fleming Torrence, Congregational Christian educator from Montana, sailed Wednesday, December 15, on the SS Queen Elizabeth from New York on her way back to her post in Mt. Silinda, Southern Rhodesia, Africa.

Miss Torrence has been a teacher for over 25 years among the Vandau people, specializing in domestic science at Mt. Silinda Institute, a fine Christian school for Vandau teenagers established in 1918 by the American Board of Foreign Missions under which she serves.

"There is an increasing desire for education among African youth and hundreds have to be turned away from the mission school because there is not room enough nor staff enough to take care of them. African Christians must be trained in sufficient numbers to take over and meet the need—and fast," says Miss Torrence who enlisted for service under the American Board in 1927.

Miss Torrence is the special representative in Africa of the First Congregational Church in Hardin, Montana; the First Congregational Church in Billings, Montana; and the Congregational Church in Deerfield, New Hampshire.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, has contributed a Christmas sonnet to our pages for several years past. We hope that there will be many more. Dr. Raymon, who served in our area for many years, retired in 1950, but has not forgotten his many friends in the churches which he served. For those who may wish to write him, his temporary address is the home of daughter and son-in-law, Rev. Orville D. Ullom, 27 Golden Street, Haverhill, Massachusetts.

A Gift for the Saviour

By RICHARD K. MORTON

THE GUIDING STAR shines in our own sky today, and even our tumult-dulled ears can catch the song of heavenly hosts, if he will.

Wise Men of old, when they saw the Star, as they followed something not truly your own?

You have sought gifts for friends and loved ones, and you have wondered what would be best and most appreciated, in each case. You wanted to give the right gift.

Are you willing to give the gift the Saviour wants? Have you the gift for which he gave his life?

O friend, get that most important Christmas gift, and offer it today! There is nothing in your hands that you can give, but there is something in your heart! There is nothing you control, nothing you have won, that will make the gift. There is only the gift of love, the unmeasured giving of the self!

Followed the behest of Herod, were guided by it to where the young Child lay. "And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts: gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. There must be a gift for so great an occasion!

O modern son of man, you can see a Star, and you have heard the announcement of the good tidings of great joy. You know that "unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." What gift can you bring? What gift will you bring? Does your soul cry out, in the words found in Micah 6: "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old?" Do you feel, with Jeremiah, the moving of a divine power within: "After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people?"

Is there upon your lips the song of the Psalmist (116: 12-13)? "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."

What offering can you bring? Is it without blemish? Is it large enough? Is it yours, and not something you have borrowed, or, worse,

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Trustees of Elon College Give the "Go" Sign

The Trustees of Elon College have had a number of meetings concerning the proposed government loan for the college. There has been opposition to securing the loan. This opposition has been expressed earnestly and sincerely. Those who favored the loan out-numbered the objectors. The final meeting, clearing the way for the loan was held on December 14, in the afternoon at the college in the president's office. There were 14 present in person and eight by proxy.

The loan agreement prepared and presented by the United States Government was read and considered seriatim. The Board was in accord on every item. The following resolutions were voted unanimously:

Resolved:

First, that the President and Secretary of the Board of Trustees of Elon College be and are hereby authorized to execute contracts and sign all documents necessary for the securing of the $675,000.00 from the Government of the United States through its Housing and Home Finance Agency to Elon College, Inc., for the purpose of erecting two (2) dormitories, one for men and one for women, a dining hall, and remodeling West Dormitory, on the campus of Elon College.

Second, That the President and Secretary of the Board of Trustees of Elon College be and they are hereby authorized to select a Bond Attorney to prepare 675 coupon bonds in the denomination of $1,000.00 each and pass on their validity for issuance and sale.

The President and the Secretary of the Board of Trustees of Elon College are authorized to select a printer and contract with same for the printing of these bonds. They shall have authority to make such surveys as may be required to meet the conditions of the deed of trust.

In compliance with these injunctions, the President of the College and the Secretary of the Board of Trustees have executed the necessary papers that the Government officials had signed, and forwarded the same to the proper officials in the Regional Office in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The next step is to get the plans, drawings and specifications for the buildings ready for the Government's approval, and the Board of Trustees' acceptance, and to submit the same to contractors for bids.

The architect, Mr. William Henley Deitrick, of Raleigh, North Carolina, was present and assured the Trustees of the College that everything possible was being done to complete the plans at an early date, but stated that work of this kind, if done right-ly, would take time and that it would probably be March 15, 1955, before they would be ready to offer for bids. In that event, it would probably be September 1, 1956, before all buildings could be completed, furnished, and ready for occupancy.

We would certainly like to have these buildings ready for you earlier, but it all sounds almost too good to be true that we are this near these new buildings and equipment needed so long.

Have you made a pledge to this great undertaking—the Two and One Half Million Dollar Fund? If not, now is a good time to make one. Have you made a pledge, and have you made your payments regularly to date? If you are behind with payments, now is a good time to catch up, before the old year, 1954, is gone.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

The Eastern Virginia Conference broke the record and still holds it. Every church in the entire conference paid its apportionment to Elon College in full. Wonderful! A record unheard of here before.

A number of churches in all four other conferences failed to raise the apportionment for the college. How about your church? If your church failed, can't you do something about it before January first? Won't you please make an effort? Should you make an effort in earnest, I am sure that good results will follow.

Here are some things that your college does for your church:

1. Provides four offices, furnished, heated, and janitored, for Convention officials, without cost to the Convention.

2. Pays from six to nine hundred dollars annually toward the expenses of printing THE CHRISTIAN SUN.
3. The college has contributed between three and four thousand dollars annually in scholarships to ministerial students and full-time church workers enrolled at Elon College.
4. The college gladly offers its facilities to any organization or group within the church for a nominal cost for meals.

Elon College, our college, is glad to make these contributions and offer these facilities to the church in the hope of being of profitable service to our entire constituency. We are grateful for every contribution received from our Sunday schools and churches on apportionment.

Previously reported	$12,550.91
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Morrisville	$ 2.00
Eastern Va. Conference
Rosemont	$ 84.00
Windsor	150.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Lynchburg	$ 6.00
Virginia Valley Conference:
Mt. Lebanon S. S.	$ 23.00
	265.00
Total to date	$12,815.91

PAGEANT WILL FEATURE MANGER FIGURES

(Continued from page 2,)

Miss Halstead and Mrs. Royal Gallup will be in charge of the worship service for the evening, and the Rev. Melvin Dollar, the pastor, will speak briefly in dedicating the Christmas cheer baskets which will be distributed to the less fortunate families of the community.

A Correction

In the December 16 issue, it was in error stated that Rev. G. Julius Rice is the pastor at Hines Chapel. The pastor of Hines Chapel is Rev. John P. Littiken. Mr. Littiken is presently serving Hines Chapel and Monticello. Hines Chapel is becoming a "full time" church under Mr. Littiken's leadership. Mr. Rice was formerly pastor of this parish, but is now serving Shallow Well Church, which recently became a "full time" work. Congratulations to Mr. Littiken, Mr. Rice, and their churches.

W. T. S.

Interesting Letter from Dr. Riggs About His Work in India

Bangalore 1, So. India,
December 1, 1954.

Dear Friends:

After two and a half busy and interesting months on the move, we are just unpacking our suitcases and settling down to life in one place again. It seems like a suitable time to stop a minute and let you know where we are and what has happened during this time.

The first month was one of visiting in the Eastern states—mostly in North Carolina, but ranging from Miami to Detroit and Boston. The schedule was hectic, but the friendships made and renewed made the experience very much worthwhile. Then came the month of travel to India by ocean, New York to Madura via England. I won't say much about the first five days, crossing the Atlantic. Although we just missed Hurricane Hazel, the water was rough, and the "bouncing" of the boat unpleasant. Because of the dock strike in England we had to land in Le Havre and cross the Channel in a smaller boat, and were unexpectedly separated from our baggage for two days. But the five days in England were very pleasant, with sight-seeing in London and visiting in an English home in Birmingham. Then came the seventeen-day cruise from London to Colombo, skirting by daylight close to the coast of Spain, Gibraltar, Algeria, Sicily, and Crete, going through the Suez Canal, and stopping at Port Said, Aden, and Bombay. Then finally came the train—ferry—train ride through Ceylon and across into India.

I was startled to find how attractive India appeared to our first impressions, even though we had just come from America. The typical Indian shops in the bazaar in Bombay, the full moon over the water off the West Coast of India, the green fields and wild flowers along the railway coming into Madura, where the monsoon rains have just finished, the warm welcome of friends—both missionary and Indian—in Madura. We found that morale was high and the outlook optimistic, even though rains this year were below normal, because of the excellent rain last year, which gave assurance that the long drought was definitely ended. But the sight of a tiny beggar boy in a station along the way, who happily seized a banana peel our children had thrown on the ground, brushed the sand off, and wolfed it down, reminded us that there is still hunger and need in this country.

When we arrived in Madura we learned that our request for a period of full-time language study had been approved and that we were to go to the Language School in Bangalore. During the few days we stayed in Madura making arrangements and repacking, we only had one thing on our "must" list. While passing through the railway station twenty miles from our Kilanjanai village home, on our way to Madura, we learned that a large delegation from Kilanjanai had waited there in vain all day the previous day to welcome us (because of my error in reporting our date of arrival), and had to walk that twenty miles back to their village disappointed. So we felt that a visit to Kilanjanai to pay our respects was certainly in order.

One of the missionaries offered to try to get us all the way there and back in his jeep so that the whole family could go along. After a five-hour trip—two and a half hours for the last ten miles—we arrived there successfully, taking the folks there completely by surprise. It was certainly a heart-warming sight. The
(Continued on page 11.)

Christmas Is Christ's Coming

Christmas; it sets forth the very essence of the Christian religion—that God cares for mankind.

The primitive world is ridden with belief in gods of nature—gods of the lightning, gods of the flood, or more benignant gods—whom devotees must fear and may even adore, but from whom concern for humanity is not to be expected. The civilized non-Christian world has its more sophisticated gods. Of the gods of Hinduism, looking upon our experiences as illusion, it cannot be said that they so loved the world that they gave their best to it. Allah, the god of Islam, had his mighty prophet Mohammed, but his worshippers do not believe that he came into the world himself in the person of an only son.

The unspeakably precious insight of Christians is that God, the all-powerful and only God, does love the world, that he did give his Son to suffer with suffering men, and that he is ready to enter any humble heart which will accept him now.

So, the All-Great were the All-Loving, too—
So, through the thunder comes a human voice
Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!"

To make this disclosure Christ came into the world.
This is the meaning of Christmas.

---Douglas Horton.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Greetings From Angie Crew

Many readers of this page know Miss Angie Crew, for many years a missionary to Japan, who worked in the Southern Convention during the second war. In a letter accompanying her printed Christmas poem she says she is dreaming of a "trip home" next summer by air—says it will probably be only a dream "but it's fun to dream!"

And here is her annual yearly "report expressed in the meter of "Hiawatha":

On the Hill Okadayama,
On our Kobe College Campus,
We Old-Timers still continue
In our task of teaching students,
Helping them unravel mysteries
Not only in the English language,
But in Life which brings great problems;
Though alone we cannot solve them,
We can introduce our Master
Who will lead them thru their troubles
In a safe, untroubled haven.
Each year brings its many changes,
Especially in K. C. teachers!
Dozens come and dozens vanish,
Though "Yours truly" stays forever!
Or so it seems to countless students
Whose mothers passed thru K. C.'s portals.

It was in May Miss Otis left us
On her long trip, heading homeward.
But reinforcements came in autumn:
First Miss Turner, then Larsons,
Next Miss Bogard, then Miss Pedde.
But in October Miss Dow left us,
Seeking for a less harsh climate
Where she'll endeavor to train students
In the art of making music.
It was in April our new leader,
Dr. Namba, came to help us;
(In April Mr. Hatanaka left us
To take a church in Honolulu.)
Now at the helm is Dr. Namba
Steering toward a rosey future
Bright with promises for K. C.
May God's blessing rest upon him
As he builds the Christian College.
This past summer brought me pleasure
And an easing of the burden
In helping students with tuitions;
Friends at home came to the rescue,
Now are sponsoring three fine students.
This past summer a vacation
Spent with Will and Mary McKnight
On a nearby college campus
Gave me just the relaxation
And the rest I felt I needed.
Still America's attracting
To her shores our brightest pupils
Rockford College takes one student,
While Ann Arbor has another;
Still another's in Chicago;
All are working hard preparing
For future service here at Kobe.

Not only students, but our teachers
Take time off for further study
In America, the lovely!
Our High School Dean is now avisting
Many High Schools thru the country.
Miss Okada, English teacher,
Now is training on the West Coast,
Miss Hayakawa, our gym teacher,
Is taking courses to prepare her
For guiding girls in camps and classes.
Thus America is helping
Many who have heard the challenge.
May God bless you who are giving
To these friends of ours assistance!

Merry Christmas and best wishes for a joyful, blessed New Year.

ANGIE CREW.

News From Frances Riggs

Many in our area grew to know and love Ed and Frances Riggs when they were here in September, just previous to sailing back to India. Christmas letters have come from both of them. On this page we will have the one from the feminine half of the family!

Zenana Mission Hospital
Bangalore 1, South India
December 1, 1954

Dear Friends:

We are finally settled again in one place for at least five months (for language study)—at least if the English ladies in this house can stand Americans for that long! I had a hard time over-coming the feeling that I mustn't unpack too much for fear that it would all have to be packed again!

It has been fun getting back to something we know, and I hated leaving Madura again for another "new place." It has been even more fun watching the children take in the new sights. When we landed in India, we began to watch Louis to see if he would recognize any of the Indian scenes, but he seemed completely blank. He called the oxen "camels," and wanted to know "why the silly old men wore skirts." We were very much disappointed that he had forgotten India so completely, but didn't tell him so.

After visits in Madura, American College, etc., we took a trip by jeep to Kilanjanat (where they worked before coming home on furlough.) We had quite a time getting in because there were huge irrigation ditches to be forded. Once all four wheels of the jeep were spinning, so that we had to be pushed out. We finally drove into Kilanjanai about 1 p. m., wiping dust out of our ears, eyes, and hair. We were hopelessly dirty. One of the local men spotted us and went running into the village with his arms waving in excitement, going so fast that he nearly fell flat on his face. Just as we drove up in front of our house in Kilanjanai, Louis let out a happy squeal, tired and dusty as he was. He seemed to really remember Kilanjanai, and immediately accepted the little Tamil boy he used to play with.

After re-packing for the last time we made the final trip from Madura here. We had the usual irritating delays. Every little thing seems to take so much more time. At least this time I know what to expect. Last week I had my first Tamil lesson. It was an awful blow to realize how little I knew. Ed is way ahead of the other students in his class, and I'm way behind. Guess I'll have to give up my family life and study.

This morning Mrs. Thomas, from the London Mission, here, came around to see if Louis and Joy would go to the Nursery School-Kindergarten she is running. So we will all be students now except for Martha. Martha is very unhappy about having someone besides me take care of her while I study. I guess she will readjust, eventually.

We are glad to be here and want very much to learn our Tamil well, so that we can be more useful in the future.

With all the moving and excitement we haven't had time to think about Christmas. It is awfully late now, but we want to wish you all a very Merry Christmas, and a Happy New Year.

FRANCES RIGGS.

* * * * *

Important Notice

Women of the Eastern Virginia Conference: this is to remind you of the meeting on January 12, at 10:30 a.m., in the Suffolk Christian Church, when Dr. Quentin Leisher will give an informative talk on India, Pakistan and Ceylon.

You will be cheating yourselves if you miss hearing him.

Bring your sandwiches, and the ladies of the church will serve a hot drink.

Mark this date in your calendar!

MRS. FRANK H. LEWIS,
Cor. Secretary.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, 1045 23d St., Newport News, Va.

Some Ideas for Observing Christmas Day

Dear Boys and Girls:

Some of you are fortunate children who belong to a church school that uses our Pilgrim Press literature and have been using "Christmas Here and Christmas There." This little booklet tells of the customs in other lands; and it has poems and songs and a service for Christmas to be used by the family. Many of us are not so fortunate as to have this book, so here is one of our own.

The family gathers around the tree, the Manger Scene, or a worship center of candles and greens.

Father reads the Christmas Story, Luke 2:1-14.

Family sings, "Away in the Manger."

Mother reads Mattehew 2:7-11.

Older Child reads, or says a poem such as:

Winds through the olive trees
Softly did blow
Round little Bethlehem
Long, long ago.

Sheep on the hillside lay
Whiter than snow
Shepherds were watching them,
Long, Long ago.

Then from the happy sky
Angels bent low
Singing their songs of joy
Long, long ago.

For in a manger bed
Cradled we know,
Christ came to Bethlehem
Long, long ago.—Author unknown.

A younger child says the prayer, thanking God for the Star that came to tell of the blessed Christ Child.

The family joins in singing "Silent Night" and off to bed.

* * *

From beginning to end, may your Christmas be blessed and lovely, and bring you great joy. I hope you find your favorite toy under the tree, enjoy sharing it with your friends, that you have many good things to eat, and that your whole family goes to church the day after Christmas.

Merry Christmas and a Peaceful New Year to all my friends, Young and Old!

JUNE JOY HOUSE,

Timmy's Gifts

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

On Christmas morning Timmy Broughton, accompanied by his nurse, and showing all the eagerness of a normal three-year-old, hurried to the family living room. On the threshold he stood still for a moment, delighted by the glittering tree. Then there began for him the exciting job of opening gifts. Parcel after parcel had its gay wrapping torn off, but the toy each contained was tossed quickly aside to make way for the next sparkling bundle already waiting to be placed in his wee hands.

A huge rocking horse standing by the tree had to be pointed out to the little fellow, who even then did not show much interest, and when he was placed on its back he cried to be taken off. A wonderful electric train did not seem to take his fancy either.

At last the excitement was all over, and the adults, busy with their own presents, forgot the child. By and by he came carrying two boxes and some string. "Nana, please makes holes," he said to his nurse. "I want to tie these boxes together to make a choo-choo train."

"Nonsense!" the mother interrupted. "You have a train! Look at that beautiful one over there! I tell you it isn't every little boy who gets an expensive train like that for Christmas! Come, let's clear away all this litter." She began hurling wrappings, including those the boy had been holding, into the fire.

The child burst into tears, stamping angrily as his boxes blazed up the chimney, and finally throwing himself on the floor in a tantrum. This was too much for the adults. They gathered up their belongings and left the room.

"Hannah, see that Timmy learns to play with his toys!" the mother said as she swept out leaving the frantic youngster to the better understanding of the nurse.

This sad story is a true one—it really happened. Why did that boy want to play with the wrappings rather than with his expensive toys?

Partly because he had been given too many new toys at one time. Besides this, most of his gifts were in advance of his years; but perhaps the strongest reason was that he found more interest in making, in creating, something of his own than in just handling something already made. When he grew older the train no doubt would appeal to him. As to the rocking horse, even horses are not very well known by the little children of today, and this plaything was far too big and frightening for so small a lad.

Back in his own nursery where he could do what he liked, more boxes were found. With Hannah's help several were tied together and drawn across the floor, the child supplying the whirring sound of imaginary wheels. He was happy.

Buying gifts for children is sometimes difficult—that is if we really want to please them and not merely to please ourselves. To buy gifts wisely we must know the recipients—be aware of their interests, and their capabilities. Even then, we may make mistakes. Toys with which the boy or girl can do things are best. But winding up a train and watching it go round and round on a track soon grows tiresome. On the other hand, blocks, even a bundle of planer ends, and some tools that can be used in making things offers days and months of fun.

In stores today are many educational toys grouped for the right age interest. Ask to see them. For a seven or eight-year-old girl an ironing board with an electric iron that really heats up and smooths the doll's clothes will give hours of pleasure. A doll whose clothes are buttoned on so that they can be taken off and replaced at the will of the little mother is much more desirable than the doll whose clothes are sewn on.

An array of too many gifts at the same time is bewildering and tiring to young children. To give one or two at a time is a better plan. If many arrive together some can be put away and brought out later; then they will be appreciated.

An inexpensive gift—a simple picture-puzzle, or a bubble pipe—often pleases a young child more than an expensive one does. Little boys and girls have not yet learned to value gifts by what they cost. A child who is able to turn boxes into a train is having real fun and is learning much. Let him do it.

"READY FOR A REVIVAL."

(Continued from page 2.)

Assembly acceptance, after a short debate, of a report of a special sub-committee recommending New York as the site of National Council headquarters—with Chicago, Ill., as the location of a major branch office. In a later action the new General Board voted authorization of a special committee to invest $600,000 of Council funds toward the construction of a United Church Center in Manhattan and to seek gifts from other sources to help finance the project. The center will house both the National Council headquarters and the headquarters of possibly five of the major Protestant denominations. The Rev. Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary announced that private assurances had already been received for about half of the $600,000 sought.

An almost unanimous vote to change the Assembly schedule from a biennial to a triennial basis thus enabling Council staff "to devote a larger proportion of their time to program services in comparison to time spent in preparation for meetings of the Assembly."

A call to Christian churches for greater efforts toward racial integration in their own membership and in society, recommendations from three assemblies of Council divisions held concurrently during the week, were unanimously adopted by the plenary session.

A message from the Rev. Dr. Roland H. Bainton, Yale Divinity School professor, deploring the current excesses in resisting Communism. Delegates stood, applauded and cheered when Dr. Bainton declared, "If worst comes to worst, better that we go down under the heel of a foreign tyrant than be the agents of our own destruction by our own betrayal of freedom."

Interruption of a regular plenary business session Thursday afternoon to offer a prayer for Pope Pius XII as delegates learned of his critical illness. The resolution presented by Dr. Blake expressed sympathy with our "Roman Catholic friends in their anxiety over the illness of their spiritual leader."

A vote to hold the next meeting of the General Assembly in St. Louis, in 1957.

The Assembly concluded Friday afternoon with the installation of Dr. Blake as Council president in a solemn service of worship and dedication in Boston's historic Old South Church. In his inaugural sermon, Dr. Blake speaking of the response of the churches when "faced with human need and an expectant world," declared, "Do we not need more than anything else to enter into the posture of prayer as the only way in which the power of God can transform a council of churches from embarrassment in the face of the world's needs into a renewed discipleship?"

—The Religious Newsweekly.

LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

(Continued from page 8.)

doctor who had replaced me there left last April, and the "compounder" and nurse were carrying on alone, doing their best to diagnose and treat what came in. They had no help except notes asking for advice on the more difficult cases which they would send by runner to the Mission doctor in Ramnad. They wanted us to stay as badly as we wanted to settle down, then and there. But we still couldn't talk with them, except the few who knew English. So we all realized that language must come first.

Now, at last, we are here in Bangalore, twenty-four hours by train from Madura. We are renting a room in the Nurses Bungalow at Anglican Hospital which is conveniently near the Language School. The term is just ending at the school, and regular classes don't start again till January. But another new couple for the Madura Mission and we are getting special tutoring during this period and have already started classes. The two of us men, who have less in the way of family responsibilities than our wives, hope to cram through a year's course by the end of April so that we can take the first set of Tamil exams in May. If successful we will be ready for assignment to work in June.

Meanwhile the whole idea of studying way off here is to get away from all possible Mission responsibilities and calls for help, so that we can get uninterrupted time for study. So we are expected to go into seclusion like a hermit, and forget everything else during this period, so that we can concentrate on this job of learning Tamil. You may be sure, however, that we will not lose interest in what is going on around us here and in our Madura area. So we still should have something to write about whenever we can find time for letters.

Best regards to all,

ED RIGGS.

The Unreturning Years

Each day the tide flows out and in,
Each day the gray ships leave,
Each night the mute-lipped stars appear,
Each night the waters grieve;
But from their distant harbor home
Toward which our hearts are yearning,
No more with laden ships of dreams
We see the years returning.

Each year that passed the silent bar,
Went out beyond forever;
Though on the heights we watch and wait,
The ships are sighted never;
But in our hearts old memories
Come to the heart's discerning,
And comfort us, if nevermore
We find the years returning.

—A. W. Peach,

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"The Bible, the Source of Christian Teaching"

LESSON I—JANUARY 2, 1955.

MEMORY SELECTION: "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." John 20: 31.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: John 20: 31; Acts 8: 26-38; Romans 15: 4; II Timothy 3: 14-17; Hebrews 4: 12; II Peter 1: 16-21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119: 89-96.

A Preview.

We begin today a series of lessons on Christian Teaching or Doctrine. They will deal with many of the basic truths in our Christian religion. They will afford us an opportunity to become familiar with those things most surely believed among us. And the topic for today's lesson sets the pattern for the whole series: The Bible, The Source of Christian Teaching. The central truths of the Christian faith are derived from the Bible. It is the textbook of Christianity. Its words are written for our instruction, and they are able to make us wise unto the salvation that is in Christ Jesus. This series of lessons may well help us to know what we believe and whom we believe. May God open our eyes that we may behold wondrous things out of his word.

The Why of the Scriptures.

"These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." John gives his reasons for writing what he did: that his readers might believe that Jesus was the Christ, the one whom God had promised, the Messiah, the Saviour of the world, that they might believe that he was the Son of God, the Word made flesh. But more: that believing thus, men might have life through his name. Faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God was a means to an end, life, life more abundant, life eternal. What things did he write in order to help men to believe these things—that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God? He wrote three things in his gospel:

The Things Jesus Said, the Things Jesus Did, the Thing Jesus Was. Do you want to believe? Would you like to know whether Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God? Well read the gospel of John, listen to what he says, look at what he does, and above all see what he is like. Truly this Man was the Son of God.

Paul puts it in another way. He says that whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, for our instruction, for our education in spiritual things. They were a source of Christian teaching. And through them we have hope. Romans 15: 4. Or again, writing to his beloved Timothy he says that the Scriptures have been inspired by God, and that they are profitable for doctrine, (teaching) for reproof—the Bible does not always give us a pat on the back, it reproves and rebukes, and condemns; for correction—it is the standard by which words and actions and motives are weighed or measured; and for instruction in righteousness. And why all this? That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Like John, Paul says that believing ought to find expression in action.

The How of the Scriptures.

How come these Scriptures? How did we get them? Peter gives us one answer in today's lesson. They are not cunningly devised fables or stories, made up by the imagination of men. Men did not make them up. They came from the mind and heart of God. Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Here is the doctrine of the Inspiration of the Scriptures. This does not mean that these men were automata, mechanical figures, marionettes. It does mean that the Spirit of the Living God moved upon their minds and hearts, and that they wrote as they were moved by this Holy Spirit. God did not violate their faculties; he used them while at their highest and best. The Bible is the inspired Word of God. It was written by men, but by men who were under the influence of the Holy Spirit. As one great man once said, he did not have any difficulty in believing that the Bible was inspired because it inspired him. Make no mistake about it, the Bible is the Word of God.

The What of the Scriptures.

Space will make it necessary to give only a scant outline of the contents of this Book of Books. It is a whole library in itself—there are sixty-six books in it. History, law, prophecy, poetry, stories, parables, proverbs, songs, drama, biography, autobiography, and many other kinds of literature are to be found within its covers. It runs the whole gamut of human life and human nature. It deals realistically with the life which now is, and it speaks assuringly of the life which is to come. There is an infinite variety in it, but a definite unity underlying all this variety. It is so simple that a child can understand some of it and so profound that a scholar can never fathom all its depths.

One word in conclusion. The writer of Hebrews gives an insight into its pervasive and penetrating power. It is sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. After a woman, recently come into the Christian faith had read her New Testament, she exclaimed in amazement "This Book knows all about me." It searches and stabs the inner heart of man and reveals his thoughts and even his motives. It tells us all that we ever did, all that we are, all that we will ever become.

But what good is this book unless we read it, unless we teach it, unless we apply its precepts and principles to our everyday lives!

* * * * *

"The Living God"

LESSON II—JANUARY 9, 1955.

MEMORY SELECTION: "God is spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4: 24.

BACKGROUND SCRIPTURE: Exodus 3: 13-16; Psalm 103: 8-13; Isaiah 40: 18-31; Matthew 6: 9; John 4: 23-24; 10: 30; Acts 17: 22-31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 42.

Where He Is.

Is there a God? The fool says, in his heart, there is no God. Others say that there is no God except as created by the mind of man—the idea of God is a kind of wishful thinking, a handy and comforting concept, but with no reality. And if asked to prove that there is a God, (Continued on page 15.)

"THE EVERLASTING LIGHT."

(Continued from page 5.)

the Church, originally dedicated to spreading the Light into all the dark places of the earth, has ever survived at all. Men (and women, too) have done everything imaginable to kill it, without ever really intending to at all. That the Church lives today may be just as much in spite of what we have done as because of what we have done. To me, the major proof that the Church is a divine institution rests not in its origins, nor even within the things it has tried to teach and do for the welfare and happiness of mankind, but in the fact that it is still here (and with some semblance of strength), after man's indifference toward it and satisfaction with what he has done to it for nearly 2,000 years!

As though open hostility, indifference, and complacency were not, in themselves, enough to extinguish the everlasting Light long ago, we try other things as well. Think of the ways in which well-intentioned Christian folk have done their best to imprison the Light, to contain it in some special form; usually just for themselves and for those who happen to agree with them. Too bad, about the rest, but let the devil take the hindmost! From the early centuries of Christendom, down to and including the present day, men have tried to bottle up the Light in a particular set of words. This they have called a Creed. We have the Nicene Creed, the Apostles' Creed, the Westminster Confession, and our own Kansas City Statement of Faith, to mention but a few. That any one of these is capable of containing the Light of God which is in Jesus Christ our Lord is doubtful; that they all do is posterous!

Think, too, of all the busy-ness over the years about revelation. Most people who are trying to be Christians will agree that the supreme revelation of God was in Jesus, born there in the stable at Bethlehem more than 1900 years ago. But beyond that point, we ride off in all directions! Some will say that the Light is contained only in the Scriptures, and in just the first four books of the New Testament at that. Others say that the Bible contains no inspiration and no revelation, just history, a pretty garbled history, too. Still others would insist that God has been making himself known to men in devious and wonderful ways in every place and in every age, and that those who really follow the Light which was in Jesus are most apt to see him. Again, it is impossible that all of these can be right. The wonder is that any of us ever see the Light at all, so sure are we that we have the one true faith. To top it all off, when we get together, we can only agree to disagree, peaceably, and then off we go, each in our own direction, all over again.

Finally, we have tried to say that the Light is in the sacraments; here, again, in some special way. The Lord of Light was baptized in the River Jordan. If we are to be really baptized, then our baptism, too, must be in a river, or the closest thing to it we can manage to install indoors. Yet others will insist that the form is not important, that just a little water will do, so long as it is really water. The other sacrament held in common among us is that of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion. Many will say, "You can't share in this with us, because you were not baptized as we were baptized." Others will say, "You're all wrong, because Christians are supposed to observe Communion on every Sabbath, and you only do it once each month." The once-a-month folks will frown upon the once-a-quarter folks, and vice-versa. Do you think, for a moment, that the true Light, the Everlasting Light, is really in all this business, or that it could possibly remain there while we argue about it? No! As one of the soldiers at the tomb has been made to say, "It has been let loose in the world, where not all the legions of Caesar, nor all the thoughts of men will ever stop it!"

It is a very interesting thing to me, that when this Everlasting Light was let loose in the world, it did not come, first, to either a prince or a ruler. It did not come to anyone of wealth or fame. Jesus could have been born in a palace; the angels could have announced his birth to Caesar or to Herod. But instead, he was born in a stable, and the announcement came, first, to a group of shepherds, abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. So it has really been through all of the succeeding years; the Light has been revealed in simple ways, to simple folk. There has been no great need for lavish surroundings, nor beautiful cathedrals, nor even a soul-consuming faith. When the spirit of a man has been rightly prepared, no matter who he may have been, nor what he may have been doing, nor where, the Light has come.

May God grant that in the hustle of preparation for the coming Christmas 1954, you will not be too anxious nor concerned to make some spiritual preparation for his coming in your own life, in your own mind and heart. As you go about the sometimes tedious chore of buying and wrapping, mailing and giving gifts, may you take the time to remember whose birthday Christmas really is. And may all your preparations be such that this Light which man has never been able to put out, may be born in you, anew and afresh, in this Christmas time. Amen.

Is There A Santa Clause?

(Woman's Page Material.)

Mrs. Effie Chilton of Reidsville, Family Life chairman for North Carolina, has recently attended the Family Life Institute in Asheville and promises articles about the meeting soon. In the meantime, she sends an interesting article from the Grade Teacher Magazine, entitled "What About Santa Clause?"

Space does not permit printing the entire article, but here are some ideas from it:

"Christmas should mean giving, not getting alone. The traditional Santa Clause stands for giving. Since children usually do not readily understand the abstract, this idea of giving must be put into some concrete form. Santa Clause is that concrete form. Before children reach the questioning stage, this symbol should be explained to them by their parents. . . .

"The spirit of giving will always exist among right-minded people, especially at Christmas time. So it can honestly and truthfully be said,

'Yes, there is a Santa Claus!' . . .

"Sometimes it is better to admit to the children that no one has ever seen the real Santa Clause. But men who like to entertain the children at Christmas dress up the way they think Santa Claus should look. Everyone can play at being Santa Claus. . . .

"Pretending that the crude Santa, the man on the street corner, is really Santa Clause; and the using of Santa Claus as a threat or a bribe for children's behavior, creates situations that are far from the meaning of Christmas. This is not being honest or forthright with children. . . .

"Yes, Santa Claus, the North Pole and the sleigh drawn through the air

(Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you. We have gone above $53,000.00 on our goal of $72,000.00. In round numbers we need $72,000.00. It will take that much to balance our books with all our creditors. Your check of $5.00, or $50.00 will help us greatly. We have heard from only 42 churches with Thanksgiving offerings up to the present writing. There are more than 150 churches to hear from. Something may be in the mails. We anxiously await each mail to see if your church is reporting either with a special or a regular gift through the Convention office. We are working and have worked hard to make the in-gathering during November and December enough to make ends meet.

If you have followed these contributions carefully you have seen that many business firms and people outside our fold have been, and are being generous to us. In this report is a good example of that, namely, the $100.00 contribution of Zimmerman Lumber Co. Mr. M. R. Zimmerman, owner of the company, is a member of the board of trustees of the big Methodist orphanage in Raleigh. His local church is paying on a large building fund to which he contributes liberally, and he contributes also to the large budget of his church. He knows what orphanages are doing, and most encouragingly responded to my visit to his office with a check in the amount of $100.00. A few blocks from him a good Presbyterian who is contributing liberally toward budget and building fund of the Burlington First Presbyterian Church gave me a check in the amount of $200.00. See it listed in this report as Rotary Club" through which he gave it.

To be sure there are gifts from our own people who give as much, but it is doubly encouraging when friends who are supporting their own orphanages and churches thus remember ours. Every day I pray that I may humbly and energetically serve, along with each worker here and every member of our board of trustees—yes, and our church as a whole—to make this institution worthy of all that it stands for and a real credit to our church. For all your help I am most grateful.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REPORT FOR DECEMBER 15, 1954.

Commodities for the Week.

Coupons:
Beginners' Dept., Suffolk Christian Church.
Mrs. Louella Ritchie, Harrisonburg, Va.
Mrs. Elizabeth Hutcherson, Cottonwood, Arizona.
Coupons, clothing and gifts:
Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Turner, Suffolk, Va.
Clothing and quilts:
Woman's Aux., Greensboro, First Church.
Quilt and sweaters:
Happy Sharers' Club, Greensboro, N. C.
Socks.
Renfro Hosiery Mills, Mt. Airy, N. C.
Blouses, sweaters, and pajamas:
Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Cobb, Asheville, N. C.
Clothing:
G. C. Talbert, Halifax, Va.
Miss Emma Hart, Sanford, N. C.
Mrs. Wade Robbins, Randleman, N. C.
John Craddock, Gibsonville, N. C.
Quilt:
Liberty (Vance) Christian Church.
Twin beds:
Dallas Bright, Greensboro, N. C.
Show tickets:
Levin Brothers, Inc., Burlington, N. C.
Graham Underwriters Agency, Inc., Graham, N. C.
Lilien and Lee, Inc., Burlington, N. C.
Candy:
W. H. Weatherly, Elizabeth City, N. C.

Sunday School Monthly Offerings.

Amount brought forward $15,361.27
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Auburn S. S. $ 22.51
Wake Chapel, Special ..1,600.00
Fayetteville 7.00
1,629.51
Eastern Virginia Conference:
Centerville$ 16.00
Christian Temple 20.00
Rosemont 83.00
119.00
N. C. and Va. Conference:
Bethel S. S.$ 6.56
Bethlehem 100.00
Burlington, First S. S. ... 89.12
Elk Spur, Thanksgiving . 5.00
Elon College 418.21
Mebane 52.00
670.89

Western N. C. Conference:
Mt. Pleasant$ 10.00
Pleasant Cross S. S. 11.01
Pleasant Union 20.22
41.23
Virginia Valley Conference:
Winchester$128.00
128.00
Total $ 2,588.63
Grand total $17,949.90

Special Offerings.

Amount brought forward $33,910.79
W. P. Robinson, Chicago, Ill.$ 2.00
Woman's Miss. Soc. of Pope's Chapel 5.00
Vanceville S. S., Tifton, Ga. 3.00
In Memory of E. Pelham Trotman 5.00
In Memory of Wm. S. Beaman 5.00
In Memory of C. B. Godwin, Jr. 5.00
In Memory of Walter R. Sellars 10.00
Special Gifts 153.00
188.00

Christmas Offerings.

Sunshine & Wicker Bible Classes, Palm Street Christian Ch., Greensboro, N. C. 30.10
Rev. R. L. Hendrickson, Lincoln, Kansas 50.00
80.10

Thanksgiving Offerings.

Mrs. Laurin Leete, Norlina, N. C.$ 20.00
Zimmerman Lumber Co., Burlington, N. C. 100.00
Burlington Rotary Club . 200.00
Pleasant Union Church, Lillington, N. C. 100.00
Dr. E. Budge Kent, Danville, Va. 5.00
Alamance Motors, Inc., Burlington, N. C. 25.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. D. McClenney, Suffolk, Va. 35.00
Miss Novie Hardee, High Point, N. C. 5.00

(Continued on page 15.)

MEMORIAL GIFTS
"Instead of Flowers"

Dr. John G. Truitt
Christian Orphanage
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Dr. Truitt:

Please acknowledge the enclosed $ as a memorial gift sent to the Christian Orphanage in lieu of flowers in memory of:

(Name of Deceased) (City) (Date of Death)

(Survivor to be Written) (Address)

Name.....

Address.....

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

(Continued from page 12.)

we would find it difficult, if not impossible, to prove it as one proves a mathematical formula. But central in the Christian faith—and we are studying this quarter the Bible as a source of Christian Teaching—is the assertion that there is a Living God. God is not an abstraction or a creation of the mind of man; he is a Living Reality, he is a Fact, He is. The words God Is represent what is perhaps the boldest statement ever made by the lips of man. To assert that God exists, that God is, marks man's highest achievement in the mental and moral and spiritual realm of life.

There are arguments for the existence of God. But ultimately, the assertion that God is, is an act of faith. Without faith it is impossible to please God, for when we come to him, we must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. The Christian faith insists that God made himself known to man, that he gave a knowledge of himself by revelation. Man did not imagine God, create God out of his own mind—God made himself known to man through revelation. It was an experience of God, and not arguments about God that convinced men that God is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Nowhere in the teachings of Jesus is there any argument about God—Jesus takes God for granted and begins there. God for him was so real that there was no reason for argument. It is the Christian faith that there is a God, that God is, that God exists.

What He Is.

If God is, what is he like? There are many folks who accept God as a fact, but they do not think it is a good fact. They believe that God is either good, and not powerful, or else powerful and not good. If there really is a good God why does he allow so many things that are bad in the world? Cancer, suffering, hurricanes, war, social evils and their ilk—why doesn't God do something about these things? If he is good, he must be weak, perhaps he cannot do anything about them. Or if he is strong enough to do something about them, he is bad for he does not do anything about them. Thus goes the reasoning of many modern men.

But the Scriptures uniformly assert that God is, and that he is good. Throughout the book he is presented as the Perfect One, in him there is no evil. Every virtue finds its complete embodiment in him. He is good, gracious, patient, merciful, longsuffering, kind, forgiving, tender, loving, just, holy, pure, wise, powerful. He is omnipresent—he is everywhere; he is omniscient—he knows everything; he is omnipotent—he can do everything. The heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind. The Judge of all the earth can be counted on to do right. And although men can delay his purpose they cannot thwart it. The future belongs to him.

In addition to listing many of his attributes, the Scriptures define him in at least four instances.

God Is Creator. In the beginning God created the earth and all things that therein are. From him all things come and in him all things consist and exist. And that creative force is still operative in the universe. He is continually making things new.

God Is Spirit. He does not have a body like a man, he is not an oversized man. But God is Spirit, he is a personality, he thinks and feels and loves and wills. An analogy to man is helpful here. Man has a body, but man is a spirit. The body is the instrument of the spirit. God is not to be likened to anything made with human hands. God is Spirit.

God Is Father. It was Jesus who gave this concept of God. The word Father was on his lips more than the word God. In essence the character of God is like unto that of a father raised to the nth power. To quote again, The heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind.

God Is Love. His essential nature is love. God is love. He has many qualities and virtues, but essentially he is love. This does not mean that he is soft. This does not mean that he runs the universe with an easy hand. He is a wise and good God, and his love is guided by love, and by his character.

Great is God and greatly to be praised. How marvelous are his works. In wisdom has he created them all. Praise ye the Lord.

Based on "International Sunday School Lessons," Copyrighted 1954 by Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches in the U. S. A.

IS THERE A SANTA CLAUS?

(Continued from page 13.)

by reindeer, all are a part of fairy-folk, need fairyland in their lives at least once a year. He is part of that fairyland in which good fairies' chief delight is giving peace and happiness to others. When we teach about him in that way, then we can truthfully say, 'There is a Santa Claus.' "

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

(Continued from page 14.)

Mr. & Mrs. J. E. Branch and Dottie, Garner, N. C.	75.00
Women of Berea (Nans.) Church	10.00
Mrs. C. Lynch Christian, Lynchburg, Va.	25.00
The Ladies Soc. of the Cong. Church, Clinton, Conn.	10.00
Mrs. E. H. Hughes, Richmond, Va.	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. G. Sharpe, Reidsville, N. C.	25.00
J. Griffin McClure, Graham, N. C.	10.00
Haw River Christian Ch. Primary Dept., Center Cong. Christian Ch., So. Boston, Va.	2.00
Carolina Steel & Iron Co., Greensboro, N. C.	100.00
D. C. McLennan, Greensboro, N. C.	25.00
Franklin O. Bleelman, Newport News, Va. ...	25.00
Milton T. Elliot, Suffolk, Va.	5.00
T. E. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va.	50.00
	883.36
Total	$ 1,151.36
Grand total	$35,062.15
Total for the week	$ 3,739.99
Total for the year	$53,012.05

For CHRISTMAS

GIVE THE REVISED STANDARD VERSION BIBLE

THE PERFECT GIFT R. S. V. B.

No. 3807—Black, Genuine Leather...$10.00
No. 3800—Maroon Buckram 6.00
No. 2800—Blue Cloth, illus. 3.25

Visit your local book store and examine the RSV Bibles and Testaments on display for the Holiday Season Or send your check or a money order for the proper amount to CENTRAL PUBLISHING CO., Inc.

1536-40 East Broad Street
Richmond 19, Virginia

A SAVIOUR IS BORN TO DAY

In the fields with their flocks abiding,
They lay on the dewy ground,
And glimmering under the starlight
The sheep lay white around.
When the light of the Lord streamed o'er them,

And lo! from the heaven above
An angel leaned from the glory
And sang his song of love;
He sang, that first sweet Christmas,
The song that shall never cease:
"Glory to God in the highest,
On earth good will and peace!"

"To you in the City of David
A Saviour is born today,"
And suddenly a host of the heavenly ones
Flashed forth to join the lay.
O never hath sweeter message
Thrilled home to the souls of men;

And the heavens themselves had ne'er heard
A gladder choir till then;
For they sang that Christmas carol
That ne'er on earth shall cease:
"Glory to God in the highest,
On earth good will and peace!"

And the shepherds came to the manger
And gazed on the Holy Child;
And calmly o'er that rude cradle
The virgin mother smiled.
And the sky, in the starlit silence,
Seemed full of the angel lay:
"To you in the City of David
A Saviour is born today."
O, they sang, and I ween that never
The carol on earth shall cease:
"Glory to God in the highest,
On earth good will and peace!"

—Edwin Waugh.

CHRISTMAS MORNING

Come all ye weary wanderers,
Beneath the wintry sky;
This day forget your worldly cares
And lay your sorrows by.
Awake and sing,
The church bells ring,
For this is Christmas morning!

With grateful hearts salute the morn,
And swell the streams of song,
That laden with great joy are borne
The willing air along;
The tidings thrill
With right good will,
For this is Christmas morning!

We'll twine the fresh green holly wreath,
And make the Yule log glow,
And gather gaily underneath
The glistening mistletoe;
All blithe and bright,
By the glad firelight,
For this is Christmas morning!

Come, sing the carols old and true,
That mind us of good cheer;
And, like a heavenly fall of dew,
Revive the drooping year.
And fill us up
A wassail-cup;
For this is Christmas morning!

To all poor souls we'll strew the feast
With kindly heart and free;
One Father owns us, and at least
Today we'll brothers be.
Away with pride,
This holy tide,
For this is Christmas morning!

So now, God bless us, one and all,
With hearts and hearthstones warm;
And may he prosper great and small,
And keep us out of harm.
And teach us still
His sweet good will
This merry Christmas morning!

—Edwin Waugh.

