HAPPY NEW YEAR

This familiar and appropriate greeting goes from the editor to all members of The Christian Sun family scattered across the United States of America and to many other countries.

The past year is gone, and 1961 opens possibilities for happiness in our disturbed and turbulent world. Happiness is not something that comes from wishing, or from waving a wand. Here are some things that may assure it.

Good Health. This is not an essential, but is a help. Attention to health laws will tend to make the new year a happy one.

Clear and Active Mind. Confused and stupid thinking causes much unhappiness. It does in many parts of the world, and it does where we live — you and I. Strive for sanity, and do not be afraid to think clearly.

A Sensitive Conscience. Conscience — that something within that says "this is right and that is wrong" — is not out of date. It is essential to real happy living.

A Willingness to Dare. This is not the daring of a bully who threatens to fight, but the courageous activity of those who believe something needs to be done and set themselves to the task though they may be alone and the prospect of accomplishment dim indeed. With faith in God they move forward.

All of this, and more, we mean when we say

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Here And There Among The Churches

Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., has resigned as pastor of South Norfolk church, effective February 7. He has accepted a commission as chaplain in the United States Air Force.

Eastern N. C. Laymen's Fellowship will meet at 6:00 January 8 at McCullers Ruritan Building, according to information from Rev. L. Gale Brady. McCullers is located just off highway 401 about half way between Raleigh and Fuquay-Varina, near Saul's Barbeque. Rev. Robert Knowles will be the speaker. Plymouth, the host church, asks that reservations for the supper be sent immediately to Dewitt King, Route 3, Raleigh

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, will hold its first "Family Night" of the year January 9, with adult class meetings and the monthly session of the official board following dinner. "Men of the Wilderness," in the Life of Christ motion picture series will be shown. The annual meeting will be held January 16, at which time votes will be taken on changes in local church's constitution and on the constitution for the United Church of Christ.

Last reminder for the Greensboro Area School for Christian Growth to be held January 8-11 at First Church, (Sunday session, 2:45, others at 7:30.). In addition to the more usual courses for teachers, one of general interest on "The Church in Heritage and Action" is planned, according to announcement by Rev. Thomas Madren. Coordinator will be Martin Garren and speakers will include Revs. Harold Myers, F. C. Lester, Clyde L. Fields, and Carl Daye.

Rev. W. W. Snyder, superintendent of the Home for Children, will speak at Pleasant Hill, Liberty, January 8. A cornerstone laying service and a service of installation for the pastor, Rev. Reuben Askew, Jr., will be held that day.

A teacher training class, to be held every other month, will have its first session January 6 at Pleasant Hill, Liberty. Some classes will be taught by the pastor, while at other times there will be guests who are specialists in the field of Christian education.

January activities at Shallow Well include the installation of officers and teachers at the morning worship service January 1; a study session on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Max B. Vestal, January 4; quarterly church business meeting January 8.

Rev. Collie Seymour, president of the Western North Carolina Conference, announces that a service of licensure for James Jackson is planned for January 5 in Charlotte, and a service of recognition and ordination for Reuben Askew, Jr., is planned for January 8 at Pleasant Hill church.

Western N. C. Laymen's Fellowship meets Saturday, January 23, at the new Pleasant Hill church near Liberty, according to announcement by Clyde Pell, president. Entertainment will be provided by Hoyt Blalock, amateur magician from Albemarle. Special feature will be the announcement of the "Layman of the Year." Churches which have not sent in their nomination are reminded to do so at once.

The Albemarle church bulletin for December 18 reports $11,078 pledged toward a budget of $10,840.

Annual meeting of our Tryon church will be held January 11. Following a 6:30 dinner reports will be received, the budget for 1961 adopted, and a vote taken on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ.

January sounds like a busy time at the Elon College Community Church with holy communion at the morning service January 1; emphasis on the Mission of the Church with the observance of Epiphany January 8; and a business meeting January 15 with election of officers, vote upon the Constitution of the United Church, and a reflection upon the past year.

"Off To Adventure," the television program sponsored by the National Laymen's Fellowship, is now running its African series. Laymen of the Southern Convention join in sponsoring this which can now be seen on two Virginia stations — Richmond, WRVA, Saturday, 9:45 a.m.; Roanoke, WDBJ, Sunday, 1:30 p.m.; and one in North Carolina — Durham, WTVD, Sundays (time not given).

YOUTH WEEK MATERIALS

Youth Week is to be observed Jan. 29-Feb. 5, using the theme "Into All the World Together." A Youth Week Packet, containing helpful suggestions for local churches and communities who share in the United Christian Youth Movement, is available for $1.00 from P. & D., National Council of Churches, Box 301, Madison Square Garden, New York 10, New York.

FAMILY FELLOWSHIP SUPPER AT LEBANON

Mrs. Carlton Scott

The Young Adult Class of Lebanon church, Semora, North Carolina, sponsored a family fellowship supper November 23 in the new community house. Supper, which consisted of country ham, turkey and all the trimmings, was served to 72 members and their families.

Following supper Miss Martha Brittle of Elon College led in singing folk songs and rounds. Rev. Lafayette Wilkins, Jr. presented a film entitled "The Split Level Family," which was enjoyed by all. After this our pastor brought a most inspiring meditation, which was concluded with prayer.

This family fellowship supper was a suggestion of our pastor and it was such a success we hope to make it an annual event.

VALLEY LEADERSHIP SCHOOL

Monday evenings January 9, 16, 23, 30, and February 6, 7:30 to 9:00 o'clock there will be a Leadership Training School sponsored by the United Church of Christ (Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed) of the Valley. This school will be held at the St. Paul's Church, Woodstock, Va.

The courses to be offered:

1. "The Pre-School Child and the Church". For teachers, prospective teachers, and parents.
2. "The Primary Child and the Church". For teachers and prospective teachers.
3. "The Junior Child and the Church". For teachers and prospective teachers.
4. "Understanding and Working with Youth". For teachers, prospective teachers and advisors of Youth Fellowships.
5. "Building and Equipping the Church and Church School". For Church School and Church officers, Committees of Christian Education Members, Members of Official Board and those interested in church buildings.
6. "Our Christian Beliefs in Today's World". Adult teachers and any interested adults.

Annual business meeting of Bay-side, Norfolk, will be held January 12. A committee, consisting of Oscar Atkinson, Joseph Hyder, and Roy Twiford, has studied the constitution of the United Church of Christ, and will present it for vote.

REV. W. B. FULLER DIES SUDDENLY

The Rev. Walter Bennett Fuller, 74, a well known resident of Harrisonburg, Virginia, and a minister of the Congregational Christian Church, died early December 17 at his home 272 Franklin Street. Mr. Fuller had not enjoyed good health for some time but his death was unexpected.

A son of the late Pressley Jefferson Fuller and Pattie Jane Smith Fuller, he was born on Dec. 18, 1885 in Vance County, N. C. He moved at an early age to Franklin County, N. C. where he made his home for the next 18 years. In 1907 he entered Elon College to study for the ministry. During World War I he did YMCA work in Oglethorpe, Ga. He later held pastorates in the Eastern Virginia Conference and the Valley of Virginia Central Conference of the Congregational Christian Churches.

On April 6, 1921 he married Miss Pearl Benton who died in June of this year.

Mr. Fuller is survived by two children, Mrs. C. J. Payne, of Luray; and Walter Bennett Fuller, Jr., of Lewisburg, W. Va.; three grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. Mary F. Green and Miss Lillie Fuller, both of Henderson, N. C. and one brother, Hugh Fuller, of Louisburg, N. C.

Funeral services were held Sunday, December 18, at 3:30 p.m. from the chapel of the Lindsey Funeral Home with the Rev. S. E. Madren in charge. Burial was in Woodbine Cemetery.

Active pallbearers were A. R. Hosafloek, O. W. Andes, C. A. Phillips, J. K. Ruebush, Glen Shomo, Sr.; and Alen G. Miller.

ATTENTION, MINISTERS!

A pre-lenten convocation of ministers will be held at Franklinton Center, Bricks, North Carolina, February 8-10, according to announcement by John G. Truitt, Jr. Cost will be $9.50.

The chaplain will be Dr. Gerald J. Jud, executive secretary of the Office of Evangelism, The United Church of Christ. Lecturers will include Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of the Interdenominational Theological Center, Atlanta, Georgia, and Dr. Robert S. Paul of England, who is professor of church history at the Hartford Seminary Foundation.

CONCORD WOMEN REPORT

Mrs. W. R. Simmons, Sr.

The Women's Fellowship of Concord church, Caswell County, North Carolina, has closed a successful year's work with Mrs. Wilbert Reagan as president and our pastor's wife, Mrs. Bill Traylor, as spiritual life leader.

Our fellowship has an active membership of 23. We have used the denominational packet of literature and had planned programs each month. We carried cheer boxes to the aged, sick and shut-ins at Christmas and met our Friendly Service quotas. We sponsored an Easter sunrise program and served coffee and doughnuts to the congregation following the program. We sent flowers, cards, and gifts to a large number of people who were sick at home and in hospitals.

We shared with Bethel church women in serving an African meal, along with the mission study on Africa. We served dinner to the Laymen's Fellowship, also to the governing board of Bethel and Concord churches. We assisted in holding a fall festival, the proceeds of which will go to the building fund.

We gave a life membership to Mrs. A. Y. Allred, our first president, paid our apportionment in full, sent a thanksgiving offering to the Children's Home, and at our November meeting presented and dedicated our thank offering.

We are looking forward to another year of Christian service.

ELON COLLEGE LYCEUM SERIES

The University String Quartet will appear on the Elon College campus at 8:00 p.m. Tuesday, January 10.

February programs include Cecil Northcutt, English theologian and lecturer, who will speak on "World Prospects and Problems of the Christian Faith Today" February 17, and Norman Shetler, young American pianist, February 23.

Thomas Richner, New York pianist who has made a number of appearances at Elon, will present works of Mozart on the piano and organ March 7. Later in the month Walter Spearman, journalism professor at the University of North Carolina will speak on "Communications — What, How and Why."

The two final features will be David Kwok, April 19, for a lecture on "An Introduction to Chinese Painting" and the Columbia Singers, May 8.

1961 In Our Churches

Elsewhere in this paper there are suggestions as to the goals for our nation, a possible union of denominations, and other prospects for the New Year that is just beginning. All of those suggestions are worthy of serious thoughts and effort.

Your editor is wondering just what the churches of the Southern Convention will accomplish in this new year of opportunity. At this moment records for 1960 are being assembled, while plans for 1961 are in the making. Please join your editor in looking at some possibilities.

Better Churches Are Needed. "Depth" is the word currently being applied to many things, including religious experience. Church membership in America is the highest ever; and so is the crime rate. Churches that have more than fifty per cent attendance and contributors are notable exceptions. The budgets of churches all too often declare the selfishness of the members. People can live and die under the shadow of a church without any serious effort being made to enlist them in Christian living. The educational program of our churches is crying for attention that will make the church teaching worthy to be compared with the best work done by the state. In nature it is understood that things which do not grow are dead, or ready to die. Apply that rule to your church and see how happy it makes you.

More Churches Are Needed. A glance at a map of North Carolina and Virginia with our churches located on it will quickly show that central and western Virginia, and eastern and western North Carolina are not reached by our denomination. For more than half a century — during my day — there has never been a comprehensive plan to broaden the home base in the Convention. Occasionally some church has spilled over and started a new one, some minister has become enthusiastic and rounded up a new group, or the Mission Board has initiated a new church. But Edenton, Wilmington, Charlottesville, Roanoke and a dozen other cities in our two states have had little consideration, and are without churches of our faith and order. We need a plan that will challenge our ministers and millionaires.

A United Church is Needed. Merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church still hangs in the balance. It awaits the positive votes of our churches, and our willingness to make the United Church operative in our own area. The votes will doubtless be cast before June 1 in favor of the Constitution for the United Synod, but where is the prophet who will dare suggest that the merger become operative now in North Carolina and Virginia? Fighting the Civil War again will not move the Church forward in a world rapidly being conquered by Godless communism, but a serious attempt to work with our neighbors in brotherly love would be a beacon light seen in Africa and Asia that would bring to the peoples there something of the brilliance and glory seen by shepherds minding sheep on the hills near Bethlehem nineteen centuries ago. It is good to talk of a United Church of Christ that may include many denominations not yet in our progressing merger, but it is far better to actually correlate the work the lies close to hand. In a world like ours it appears to be positively sinful to waste money with over-lapping organizations. Specifically: why have three quarters for the United Church of Christ in North Carolina?

We Need a World Mission. The little item in Conference Apportionments called Foreign Missions is a proclamation to all and sundry that we have no world mission. The apportionment may act as a sort of soothing syrup for our conscience, but it will never win the world to Christ; and surely nobody expects it to do so. While the budget of our mission for four or five large cities in Africa runs less than $6,000 per year, we certainly are not expecting to win over the Communists in that area. Before me lies a report of a Congregational church in Ferndale, California, that is building a 20-bed maternity ward to a hospital in Chilesso for the Ovimbundu people of Africa. An alert doctor in the Ferndale church started the process. Do we have doctors, and churches, with vision enough and daring enough to undertake to reach a helping hand to our torn world?

We Need Trained Leadership. Many of our young ministers are working diligently to get college and seminary training while they help to keep our churches alive. Imagine trying to train scientists in this fashion! No, the people who are seeking the secrets of nature, disease, warfare, outer space, etc. give themselves diligently to their studies. Then we expect our partially trained ministers to make religion real to these scientists. What folly! High school students who know their ministers cannot use correct English are exceedingly doubtful that they know exactly what Christian ideals, habits, and experience really are. Today we are having difficulty in supplying ministers for our churches, and unless the young people of today are challenged to enter the ministry, and then given the proper training, one dares not think what the Church will be in the next generation.

Are you wondering what has happened to your editor? Well, the answer is simple. He has just experienced Christmas. There was time to consider God's interest in our world, to see and hear reports of what is actually happening right now, and to think a little of the churches he loves better than life itself. He is disturbed, but far from hopeless. He knows a man in one of our churches who gave a $2,000 Christmas present to foreign missions. The things we need are available, and can be had. It will take courage, faith, and love to get them.

Let's start a new crusade in our churches — a crusade that will really help to make the world Christian.

A SERMON ON LOVE
BY A LITTLE GIRL

In Shakespeare's "As You Like It" the reader is reminded that tongues may be found in trees, books in running brooks, and sermons in stones. And it could have been added in the heart of every child.

A child's love is natural, real, and there are no explanations and no apologies made.

That is why a brief story recently printed in an Oklahoma newspaper about seven-year-old Dorothy Lou Gravitt is interesting, heart-warming, yet sad.

In a world of perpetual turmoil, torn with strife, distrust and misunderstandings for the lack of confidence and love, little Dorothy Lou "preached" a "sermon" on love.

She walked into a hospital in a small Oklahoma town and said: "I brought some flowers for a lady — just any lady." Attendants learned that her mother was in a hospital in a distant city. "That is too far away for me to take flowers", said Dorothy Lou, "so I brought some flowers for a lady here."

News of Dorothy Lou's act of love for a stranger soon spread among the townspeople. Two weeks later she returned to the hospital — this time critically ill. A week later she died in a room which was filled with flowers placed there by men, women and children who had been moved by the spirit of love which a little girl kindled in their hearts.

The world will long remember Dorothy Lou's "sermon" on love. It was without text, division, or "in conclusion".

LET'S PREPARE

Jewell Tedder

I do not believe in making a lot of New Year's Resolutions that I do not keep. As we enter the new year may we all take with us Jesus Christ and give him first place in our hearts and lives. May we live each day of our lives as if it were the last day we would spend on this earth. Certainly we all know that one day will be our last and we do not know which will be that day.

—Union Grove Fellowship

Father, let me dedicate all this year to Thee,
In whatever worldly state Thou wilt have me be:
Not from sorrow, pain, or care, freedom dare I claim;
This alone shall be my prayer: "Glorify Thy Name."

If in mercy Thou wilt spare joys that yet are mine;
If on life, serene and fair, brighter rays may shine;
Let my glad heart, while it sings, Thee in all proclaim,
And, whate'er the future brings, glorify Thy Name.

—Lawrence Tuttiett

Another year is dawning,
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting,
Another year with Thee.

Another year of progress,
Another year of praise,
Another year of proving Thy presence all the days.

Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace;
Another year of gladness
In the shining of Thy face.

Another year is dawning,
Dear Master, let it be,
On earth, or else in heaven,
Another year for Thee!

Goals For Christians

J. Earl Danieley
President of Elon College

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

As 1960 draws to a close and we begin to use new calendars marked "1961" the greeting "Happy New Year" will be heard countless millions of times. What do we mean by this greeting?

For Christians the New Year should include many things other than our own personal health and happiness. . .

Increased Membership — our churches have failed to grow in terms of numbers. May the New Year find an increased interest in evangelism which will be reflected in the addition of members to our churches -- not just an increase in membership but in committed Christians.

Stewardship — we find ourselves still emphasizing the needs of Our Christian World Mission. Sometimes the Convention and its interests are almost in the position of "begging money". When Christian people use the financial resources for which they are the stewards with gratitude and in humble recognition of the source of "every good . . . gift" the church does not have to worry about its support.

Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men — Our hearts are burdened with reports coming from all over the world of man's inhumanity to men. During the Christmas season our hopes are lifted and we look again to the Prince of Peace with the prayer that peace may, indeed, come to the earth. As we begin the New Year, we do so with the recognition that we are "His hands . . . His Voice . . . His feet . . . His representatives . . . to all the world."

May God grant us the wisdom, the courage, the strength, and the determination to go forth in His name to do those things which are necessary that peace may come and that men may live together even as children of God.

Happy New Year!

Reasons For Voting "Yes"

SAY IT RIGHT...

WRITE IT RIGHT

Carl Wallace

Regardless of the sermons preached, the books written, the questions answered and the assumptions made, some of our people are still asking, "Why join the new merged denomination?". I would like to set forth a few positive reasons for consideration:

I. IT IS CHRISTIAN

The Christ we believe in and worship called his followers together in unity. Division is foreign to our understanding of the Christian spirit. The merger of Christian groups testified to the fact that the Spirit of Christ is a stronger force than traditionalism or individualism.

II. IT IS PRACTICAL

Denominations organize themselves for independent action at home and abroad. This means each denomination has its own publishing house, mission organizations, executive offices, etc. Two denominations can function together almost as efficiently as either one could separately. Thus the savings in man-hours, money and talent is tremendous. Our apportionment dollar, therefore, raises in value. Is this not pleasing in God's sight?

III. IT WILL BE MORE

PRODUCTIVE

When two burning candles are brought together the light is almost doubled in effectiveness. The United Church of Christ will be sixth in size among Protestant denominations in the United States. Congregational Christians are about 13th or 14th as is. It is our Christian responsibility to be as strong a witness for the Cause of Christ as possible. In North Carolina alone the United Church of Christ will double our strength and effectiveness once we are organized on a state level.

OBJECTIONS TO THE MERGER

seem to fall into two categories:

A. Want No Change: This is a natural but impractical position for Christians to assume. Remember, it was change that ushered in the Christian Era.

B. Want To Maintain The Past Denominational Tradition: A denominational tradition is a medium of the Christian life and must not be mistaken for, nor upheld above the Christian values we are seeking. Our Christian tradition as well as the Congregational tradition was vastly altered, or should have been, in 1931 when the Congregational-Christian merger took place. Our tradition since 1931 has been bi-focal and should have been generously saturated with the ointment of change, making this present merger an accustomed diet.

ONE FURTHER CONSIDERATION

is worthy of our attention. Our national organization has already merged. The Southern Convention and our Eastern North Carolina Conference have voted favorably. Should we not approve the Constitution and not become a part of the United Church of Christ we could still maintain a relationship to the Southern Convention but we would be awkwardly related to the denomination without representation to the United Church Conferences and Synods.

Let us consider prayerfully the Constitution and be prepared to vote in such a way as to best serve our church and our Lord in the years ahead.

The loose use of the expression, all right, in answer to any question requiring an affirmative reply should be avoided. More specific and definite language should be used. Yes, for example.

The words swam and swum are both correct as to the past tense, but swam is preferable. Swum should be used for the past participle. Example: He has swum across the river.

To denote an unspecified time, sometime should be written as one word. Example: We shall be glad to have you visit us sometime. Some and time should be written separately when some is an adjective and time a noun. Example: When you have some time, please visit us.

The two words which look alike at casual glance are metrology and meteorology. Metrology is the science of weights and measures, and meteorology is the scientific study of weather causes and conditions.

C.B.R.

WHAT MONEY CANNOT BUY

"With a little more money, I'd be a lot happier." Does this sound familiar? Yet you know from experience that there are some things in life you just cannot buy. Even your wealthiest friends have problems. All the money in the world cannot buy happiness or security or good health. For example, what top price would you pay for the following: Eyes that see well, good hearing, capable hands, sturdy feet, a strong heart, an alert mind, calm nerves, good health?

In your own life, which of the following things have you found to be priceless? Perhaps you can add your own to this list.

- The warmth and depth of a good friendship.
- The love and trust of a child, or parent, or friend.
- The feeling of security that grows out of living in a good home where the parents get along well together.
- The steady kind of hope for the future that wells up out of trust in God as our heavenly Father.
- The kind of inner courage that comes to sustain us as we do the best we can day by day.
- Sleep that so marvelously refreshes the body.
- The right-mindedness of all such people as the milkman, the neighborhood druggist, the family physician, the rubbishman, the grocer, the bus driver and a hundred others.
- The high skill and devotion of good teachers everywhere.
- The amazing hearts and minds of missionaries who dare to take the gospel to dark places, sometimes right in the midst of our own cities and communities.
- The personal integrity of all the thousands of men and women who are willing to man the station of our far-flung lines of defense in this atomic age.
- The general trustworthiness of our great newspapers, radio, and television networks.
- Or simply to feel trusted by someone dear.
- Or the precious certainty of heart that God hears every prayer — and cares what happens to each of us.

United Church of Christ Organized 103 Years Ago

The following article was copied from The Christian Sun, April 29, 1859, W. B. Wellons, Editor. The original is in the Church History Room at Elon College, Elon College, N. C.

UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST

We have received in pamphlet form, "A Declaration of Principles," acknowledged and adopted by a body of ministers, brethren and sisters of different denominations, assembled in Convention, for the spiritual welfare, and the propagation of the kingdom of Christ on earth: in the town of Brighton, Beaver Co., Penn., Feb. 8th, 1858.

The principles adopted by this new organization, known as the "United Church of Christ", are in substance the same as our own, and we cannot see what there is to keep the two bodies apart. We presume, from what we have learned, that these Pennsylvania brethren, knew but little about the Christian Church, at the time of their organization. We have had some correspondence with Rev. James B. McCullen of Beaver one of the body, who expresses a desire to know more about the Southern Christians. We believe, he was formerly a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

We give in full, their declaration of principles, and hope to become better acquainted with these brethren:

We are the UNITED CHURCH of CHRIST, — the members thereof Christians — to the exclusion of all the names of faction and party, but not to the exclusion of the good of any party.

The Bible is our rule — to the exclusion of all the creeds, covenants, disciplines and articles of faith ever prepared by uninspired men and imposed upon the Church.

Regeneration of soul and Christian character is our only test of fellowship and communion — to the exclusion of all the shibboleths of party and tests of bigotry ever urged upon the humble followers of Christ.

We acknowledge no name but CHRISTIAN, because,

1st. That name designated the followers of Christ. It has been customary in all ages to name disciples after their teachers — followers after their leaders. We acknowledge no Leader but Christ — no authoritative Teacher but Christ and the inspired writers of the Holy Scriptures; consequently, no other name can be applied to us with propriety.

2d. It is the name by which believers in Christ have been known from the first establishment of Christianity on earth. Acts 11:26. The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

3d. It is the only name on which all Christians can unite — the only one to which no objection can be made. All receive it and call themselves by it. It distinguishes Christians from all who are not Christians, but makes no division in the "Body of Christ," by distinguishing them from each other.

4th. It is characteristic of Christianity. No other name that has ever been adopted by Christians is. Each of them has another signification, and is indicative of some other circumstance. One indicates a form of government — another a favorite dogma — others the names of distinguished partizan leaders, &c. &c., thereby creating divisions and pro-

CHURCHES URGED TO VOTE

The Executive Committee of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention in session at Henderson, N. C., on December 14, passed the following resolution:

"The Executive Committee of the Executive Board commends those churches already voting on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ and urges all other churches to vote at their early convenience, so as to be included by June 1, 1961."

Copies of the Constitution for study may be ordered from the Convention Office at 10c per copy.

moting strife; fostering the spirit so severely censured in I Cor. 1:12, 13: "Now I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos. and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were you baptized in the name of Paul?"

We acknowledge no creed but the "Bible — because,

1st. We deem it impossible for uninspired men to set forth the things necessary to salvation any more distinctly and positively, than they are found in the inspired Word of God. 2 Timothy 3:16, 17. "All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be PERFECT, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

2d. Every enlightened individual understands that he is accountable to God, and will be judged by the Scriptures; consequently he will claim and exercise the right to read and judge for himself. Hence it follows legitimately, and unavoidably, that NO ONE has a right to deprive another of this right, which is done whenever assent to a creed is made a condition of admission to the privileges and advantages of the church militant.

Thousands, whose Christianity is undisputed, are to-day refused the ordinances of the Church, and the enjoyment of Christian watch-care, sympathy and companionship, because they cannot conscientiously sign the creed, and pronounce the shibboleth, which others have made a condition to the enjoyment of these privileges. We ask all who do this to ponder well the import of Mark 9:28-42. "And John answered him, saying:—Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us, and we forbade him because he followeth not us; But Jesus said, forbid him not: for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us, is in our part. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not

Union Of Four Denominations Urged

Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, chief executive of the United Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., preaching in Grace Cathedral (Episcopal) in San Francisco on the eve of the opening of the National Council of Churches, made "A Proposal Toward the Reunion of Christ's Church" which was reflected in headlines all over this country and around the world.

He said, "Led, I pray by the Holy Spirit, I propose to the Protestant Episcopal Church that it together with the United Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. invite The Methodist Church and the United Church of Christ to form with us a plan of church union both catholic and reformed... Any other Churches which find that they can accept both the principles and plan would also be warmly invited to join with us."

After stating the reasons why he thought such a union important now (and explaining that his use of the word "catholic" did not mean "Roman Catholic"!), he listed the principles of reunion as he sees them:

1. The reunited Church must have visible and historical continuity with the Church of all ages before and after the Reformation.
2. It must clearly confess the historic trinitarian faith received from the Apostles and set forth in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.
3. It must administer the two sacraments instituted by Christ, the Lord's Supper and Baptism.

4. It must accept the principle of continuing reformation under the Word of God by the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

5. It must be truly democratic in government, recognizing that the whole people of God are Christ's Church, that all Christians are Christ's ministers even though some in the church are separated and ordained to the ministry of word and sacrament.

6. It must seek in a new way to recapture the brotherhood and sense of fellowship of all its members and ministers.

7. It must find the way to include within its catholicity (and because of it) a wide diversity of theological formulations of the faith and a variety of worship and liturgy, including worship that is non-liturgical.

Dr. Blake asked his listeners to pray for the reunion of Christ's Church and to think about it in the spirit of the Apostle Paul when he addressed the church at Philippi (Philippians 2:1-11). "If you and all others who consider and discuss this proposal do so in this spirit and from this motive, I have no fear but that the eternally recreative God will find His way to renew and reunite His Church."

Joint Statement By Hoskins And Wagner

The complete joint statement by Dr. Fred Hoskins and Dr. James Wagner, co-presidents of our United Church of Christ, in regard to the proposal of Dr. Blake (which was endorsed by Bishop Pike of the Episcopal Church), is found in the current issue of United Church Herald.

They said, in part: "We cannot speak officially or definitively for the United Church of Christ, but we can assure our fellow Christians of all communions that if such a joint invitation were received it would be given most careful and thoughtful consideration by the General Synod of the United Church of Christ. We know that our people want their church to be not only a united but a uniting church."

Recognizing that it will be at least four years before the four denominations could take basic authorizing actions, our co-moderators said, "Meanwhile the United Church of Christ is committed to begin preliminary conversations with the Disciples of Christ as soon as our Constitution and By-Laws are declared in force... Omission of the Disciples at the planning stage would seem to be especially regrettable... We hope that the Blake-Pike proposals can be so enlarged before they are implemented further."

CHRISTIAN UNITY PROGRESS IN 1960

Events during 1960 contributed to a further relaxation of tensions and an improvement in communication between the churches in the major branches of Christianity. They gave impetus to efforts to achieve better mutual understanding.

Four developments should be given special attention:

1. The establishment at the Vatican of a Secretariat for Christian Union. This provides a center of orderly communication between the Roman Catholic and other Christian churches, and should help to eliminate many needless misunderstandings.

2. The approval by the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches of a statement on Christian Witness, Proselytism, and Religious Liberty, which has contributed to the consolidation of the fellowship among Eastern Orthodox and Protestant churches.

3. The visits of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the leaders of ancient Eastern churches, including the Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, and to Pope John XXIII. It illustrated in tangible pattern the friendliness and courtesy generally prevailing in the new climate of relationships among the major branches of Christianity.

4. The bold and ingenious personal proposal of the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake supported by Bishop James A. Pike that four churches in the United States combine to constitute a "Catholic and Reformed" church, precipitating an earnest consideration of a significant step toward unity among leading American churches.

These events gave encouragement to those who seek a larger measure of Christian unity to be manifested in the life and relationships of the churches. They also helped the average Christian to realize the seriousness of some of the basic problems that must be faced.

Experienced and thoughtful leaders of the movement for Christian unity have known that tolerance and goodwill, though essential, are not enough to achieve Christian unity... The churches are now in a better position to settle down to serious dialogue in the effort to enlarge the areas of agreement, not by compromise of truth but in loyalty to it.

Goals For Our Nation

ACTIVITIES OF SUPERINTENDENT

A Commission on National Goals composed of ten distinguished Americans appointed by President Eisenhower last February, has reported what it considers should be the goals of the United States for the next decade. In summary, they are:

1. Civil Rights. The U. S. has no more vital goal than to live up to the statement in the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal. Respect for the individual means respect for every individual. Every man and woman must have equal rights... an equal opportunity to vote and hold office, to be educated, to get a job and be promoted when qualified, to buy a home, to participate fully in community affairs.

2. The Economy. An effort should be made to keep the number of unemployed, now 6.4% of the work force, consistently below 4%, while finding jobs for 13.5 million new workers. Economic growth should be encouraged and technological change promoted, with sensitive regard for any adverse impact upon individuals — those displaced from jobs by machines.

3. Individual Freedom. The status of the individual must remain our primary concern. All our institutions — political, social and economic — must further enhance the dignity of the citizen, promote the maximum development of his capabilities, stimulate their responsible exercise, and widen the range and effectiveness of opportunities for individual choice.

4. Urban Problems. The decay in modern cities must be checked, and the necessity for low-income and minority groups to cluster there must be relieved. The nation should seek solution for haphazard suburban growth, meet the needs for parks and recreation, and relieve traffic congestion and the breakdown of metropolitan rapid transit.

5. Foreign Policy. Our basic foreign policy should be the preservation of our own independence and of free institutions, of cooperation with those who share our ideals and interests, of accommodation with our opponents wherever prudence permits. We must try to reduce tensions and should seek disarmament — if safeguarded. The healthiest world economy is attained when trade is at its freest.

This should be our goal... We must meet Communist military threats used for political purposes. We must be ready to make the sacrifices necessary to meet the rising costs of such military capabilities.

6. The Arts. Our society must stimulate and support richer cultural fulfillment.

7. Health. We must have more doctors, nurses and other medical personnel... more hospitals, clinics and nursing homes... Extension of medical insurance is necessary, through both public and private agencies.

8. Agriculture. Farm goods must ultimately be sold on a free market. Prices must be determined by supply and demand. Federal assistance programs must eventually end.

9. Education. The development of the individual and nation demand that education at every level and in every discipline be strengthened and its effectiveness enhanced. New teaching techniques must continue to be developed.

10. Science. We should allot a greater proportion of our total effort to basic research... We must give high priority to those aspects of science and technology which will increase our military strength, but for the longer term we should recognize that our creative activities in science and all other fields will be more productive and meaningful if undertaken, not merely to be ahead of some other nation, but to be worthy of ourselves.

11. Government Reform. The institutions of the federal government require improvement but not drastic change.

CONCLUSION: Man has never been an island unto himself. The shores of his concern have expanded from his neighborhood to his nation, and from his nation to his world. Free men have always known the necessity for responsibility. A basic goal for each American is to achieve a sense of responsibility as broad as his world-wide concerns and as compelling as the dangers and opportunities he confronts.

Wonder Where The Money Went?

Kitte Turmell

Is money a problem with you? Are you earning and spending more than ever before — or at least wished you were?

You've heard so much about the billions teens are spending these days. But where's your share? You've heard that the average amount of teen pocket money has increased in 15 years from $2.50 to ten dollars per week. But why doesn't your allowance, or your small-job income, seem to stretch to cover what you want?

These problems aren't new! If you've watched adults worry over the monthly bills, you're quite aware that money is a problem you'll be facing all your life. And you can't start too soon learning how to manage your money. Just remember this: The big problem with money is not so much how to earn enough, but how to spend, save, and share wisely what you have.

What do experts on money management have to say about you and your money?

First, let's hear from Dr. Everett D. Hong, chairman of the business management department at Southern Illinois University and father of three teenagers.

Financial Facts of Life

"You're never too young," says Dr. Hong, "to learn to face the financial facts of life and discuss with parents how much you need, what they can afford to give, and how much you can earn. Living beyond your own or family's means brings nothing but pain.

"To decide what to spend, ask yourself, 'Can I afford it? Is it worth it?' Make your decision and stick to it.

"What impresses me most," continues Dr. Hong, "is that many of you young people fail to realize how much you spend casually on pop, gas, snacks. As a result, you're always short on cash for something important.

"Buy a five-cent notebook. Put down every penny you spend for a week and what you spent it for. Check back on what you spent for unimportant things you wish you'd have put aside for something more important.

"When eating out, get the most for your money. Invest in nourishment, not frills. Don't order a whole meal if you only want a sandwich.

"Restrict club memberships and sports to what you really enjoy. Active sports are a good investment in health and usually cost less than spectator sports."

Dr. Hong says that 50 to 60 per cent of the average adult expenditures could be eliminated. So you can guess what percentage applies to you. You can cut down on the money you spend without cutting down on your fun or necessities if you learn self discipline and discrimination.

What about savings? "It's easier to save if you begin by putting aside for something you want in a short time — two or three months. To save from what you earn helps you to see how long it takes to save $500 for a car, $50 for a formal, or $5 for a date. If it's impossible to save without giving up all your social life, maybe your goal is too extravagant. Better wait until you can earn more!"

In conclusion, Dr. Hong says, "Money is no good except to spend for necessities, including reasonable pleasure, and to provide for yourself such security as money can give you."

Your Shopping Dollar

Our second expert on money management is Dr. Ralph Libby Westfall, professor of marketing at Northwestern University, who has done extensive market research. Recently, for the readers of "Youth" magazine, he gave me a crash course on how you can spend your dollars wisely. I'll brief it for you.

The typical teenager today, says Dr. Westfall, thinks of his allowance and earnings as something to spend — not save. This does not tend to develop habits of thrift, in the sense of putting money aside indefinitely, but it does give "incentive for smart spending."

Here are some tips from the doctor on how to get your money's worth when you're shopping for clothes, accessories, cosmetics. It doesn't cost as much as you think to look your best.

"Decide whether you want to shop for a good basic style that's always in fashion — or for a fad that will go out in a hurry. Assume that what's sold in good-quality stores will be accepted by many your age and last awhile.

"Check ahead of time on where to shop within your spending range. Know what to shop for — what's in fashion and will be appropriate for you at your age.

"It's a good idea to shop with one other person — whose taste you trust — but not with a crowd.

"Don't think you have to go to the top store in a big town to catch up with what's new and popular. Fashions are moving so fast now — coming in sidewise in all parts of the country — that you'll find tiny-town displays, the mail catalogues are very little behind the latest accepted fashions.

"Remember that you're buying the "image" — the "look" that is advertised or rumored as most appealing to "a typical teenager" — as well as the product. To select what most youth your age want may give you your money's worth. But also check the quality, the ease of laundering, the cost of upkeep, etc.

"On some items the label is just the name of the store or manufacturer — the routine price tag. On others, it's important to know how to launder and iron. If nothing is said on the label about how easy this product is to launder or drip-dry, assume that the usual precautions on hand-laundering, low-heat ironing and cleaning are to be taken. You can't put everything in the washer for a twist-dry. This is the age of synthetics, and how to use and not abuse them will streamline clothes upkeep.

Shopping Don't

"Look around all you like — stores always encourage that for impulse-buying. But don't:

—Tie up the sales person's time if you are not expecting to buy. Do your own looking through the racks and at the displays.

—Charge or take out on approval anything you're likely to return. Return items can be so costly in the turnover costs on labor, bookkeeping, etc., that one department store in New York found it cost more than six cents on each dollar for the exchange routines. Stores expect a reasonable amount of exchanging and changing of minds — but you should have enough mind and opinion of your own in the store not to take home six of anything if you are apt to buy one or none."

Installment Buying

What about buying on the installment plan? To this Dr. Westfall replied, "What to do about installment buying is a very personal thing. Formerly, most people would save enough money then buy a product. The trend now is to buy the product with money he doesn't have yet but promises to have by periodic payments called the installment plan. It is, in a sense, enforced savings contracted for in advance. Some people spend almost all their income. I would not care to be that far committed. It's easy to say I'll pay $5 a month for this — $5 for that — now it's up to $10 and can accumulate very rapidly.

"I don't say not to buy on the installment plan — that's part of our economy. Some would never, otherwise, have a car. Or you might have to do without it awhile (and whether that would be good or bad is again strictly personal and a matter of opinion).

"If you are thinking of purchasing on installment, use caution, especially at your age. Double-check sales blurbs that may hide, by not telling what all you'll be paying. Cumulative interest over a period of time may average as much as 12 per cent.

"The tendency that can lead you astray on per year costs is to think in terms of cost per month — not per year — as it adds up!

"Figure the over-all cost of anything you buy," Dr. Westfall concluded on the topic of installment buying. "Compare what you would save — if you buy on the installment plan and pay interest or if you save up in advance and then buy with cash but with no interest. You might be surprised to discover that the difference in interest you do not pay could enable you to buy something extra — like a shirt or blouse to go with your new suit or skirt."

Summing up, Dr. Westfall said, "No one way of handling money is good or bad. Figure what you want and need and can afford to buy right then — so you know what to buy when! How can you spend your money wisely? That's a learn-it-yourself thing — a life-time process — I'm still learning and wish I knew how to buy the best, the most, whatever I spend!"

TWELVE ELON STUDENTS MAKE "WHO'S WHO"

Twelve Elon College students, including eight seniors and four juniors, have been named for places in the 1960-61 edition of "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities," according to an announcement from the office of Dr. H. H. Cunningham, dean of the college.

The eight seniors honored included Deanna Braxton, of Elon College; Barbara Day, of South Boston, Va.; C. G. Hall, of Leaksville; Janette Inge, of Elon College; David Plaster, of Bassett, Va.; Kenneth Price, of Danville, Va.; Douglas Scott, of Durham; and Ann Vickers, of Ridge-way, Va.

The four juniors chosen were Phyllis Hopkins, of Reidsville; Dick More, of Sunbury, Pa.; Tommy Sears, of McLeansville; and Helen Wright, of Greenville, S. C.

A "Young At Heart" night was held recently by our Winston-Salem church group. Believing that when people play together they learn to enjoy one another, the group plans to get together once a quarter for square dancing, a bridge party, or some other form of recreation.

UNITED CHURCH ORGANIZED

lose his reward. And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged around his neck, and he were cast into the sea."

3d. Efforts to compile a creed acceptable to all the followers of Christ, have been, and we believe must forever be unsuccessful and vain. While human knowledge is defective, and human reason liable to err, the judgments of men, however honestly and firmly formed, must differ. It would be no more futile to require all the members of the Church to look alike, than to require them to believe alike.

4th. To place a creed at the threshold of the Church, and to stigmatize all as heretics who do not adopt it, is to forestall investigation — to put a stop to progression — and set up a claim to infallibility; the peculiar characteristic of the "Church at Rome."

5th. Assent to the most perfect creed that can be produced is not sufficient to constitute a person worthy of church membership. A perfect head does not constitute a perfect heart. God searcheth the heart.

We acknowledge no test of Church fellowship but regeneration of soul, and Christian character because:

1st. Christian Character will admit a man into heaven, and we know no good reason why it should not admit him also to all the privileges of the Church on earth. Peter says, (Acts 11:17,) "Forasmuch as God gave them (the Gentiles,) the like gift as he did unto us (Jews) who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, that I could withstand God?" So say we, We have no right to be more exclusive or particular than the "Head of the Church." If others who profess Christianity hold errors, they are as well aware of that as we are, and as much interested in all the consequences. They feel the necessity of a pure and holy church as sensibly as we do; and surely they will find no fault with us if we follow their example. Acts 10:35, "He that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." All who give evidence of acceptance with God, will be received by us.

2d. As the Church on earth is an association of Christian people, Christianity is the only appropriate test for admission into it.

- 8—Rev. Eric A. Gass has lived in India for many years, as his parents were missionaries there. After study in the U. S. he has gone to work in social service program of Gass Memorial Center, specializing in religious journalism. He will work with adults who cannot read and provide Christian material for new literates.
- 9—Miss Hedwig Schaeffer has been a missionary in India since 1925. She is an administrator and teacher in mission schools in Raipur and in the district primary schools. She has a training program for the 30 teachers under her supervision.
- 10—Dr. and Mrs. Theodore Feierabend went to Tilda in 1952 where he is superintendent of the Evangelical Mission Hospital. She is a registered nurse. His father and grandfather were missionaries to India.
- 11—Miss Minnie Gadt has been a nurse in India since 1926. She is nursing superintendent and director of the school of nursing.
- 12—Dr. and Mrs. Justus Laun worked as medical missionaries in Ghana under the Basel Mission (Swiss) before coming to Tilda in 1959. She is a laboratory technician.
- 13—Mr. and Mrs. William K. Whitcombs are both children of missionaries in India. They went back in 1960 and he was business administrator of hospital. Now an Indian does that and he has established a Christian agricultural center 10 miles from Tilda. In radius of 10 miles there are 140 villages with 60,000 people, most of them poor and illiterate.

THE MADURA MISSION

- 14—Congregational missionaries began work in the Madura Mission of South India in 1834. Now our missionaries work as a part of the Madurai-Ramnad Diocese of the Church of South India.

The First Of His Signs

Background Scripture: John 2.

Devotional Reading: Luke 7:19-23.

In reading the Gospel of John one should keep in mind that there are two things to be taken into consideration: there is the simple story of what Jesus did (or sometimes said), which is on the surface so that anybody can understand it; and the wealth of deeper meaning for those who have the eagerness to search, the eye to see, the mind to understand. The story of Jesus at the Wedding Feast at Cana of Galilee is a case in point.

THE HAPPENING

Jesus and his disciples — there were five of them at this time — were invited to a wedding feast. In Palestine at that time a wedding was a great occasion, an occasion of feasting lasting often a week. The wine which was an integral part of such a feast gave out. (There was a great difference between the wine served at such a wedding feast — it was two parts wine to three parts water — and the stuff served at modern weddings and cocktail parties. And to become drunk then was a disgrace.) That was an embarrassing situation, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, told her son about it. "Lady, don't worry; you don't understand what is going on; leave things to me, and I will settle them in my own way." The word which He used for "woman" is the same word which he used on the Cross when he left his mother in care of John — it was a title of respect. He instructs the servants to fill up the large water jars, which would hold from twenty to thirty gallons, with water and then to draw out and bear to the head waiter. When this fellow tasted the wine he was surprised, to say the least. That wine was far better than the wine that they had served at the beginning of the feast, which was contrary to the custom of that day. John then adds that this was the "first of the signs" that Jesus did... and displayed his glory; and his disciples believed on him. Is there something that lies beneath the surface of this interesting and unusual story? Let us consider for a moment.

THE MEANING OF WHAT HAPPENED

Look when it happened. It happened at a wedding feast, a time of the greatest joy and cheer. And Jesus was invited there — they would hardly have wanted an old sour-puss or wet-blanket, or kill-joy at an occasion like that. Where do folks get the idea that Christians have to be so sad and serious and somber? Look where it happened. It happened in a simple Galilean home in a small village. What a strange paradox some of us make of our home. We admit that it is the most precious of all earthly places, and at the same time we are often more boorish, selfish, impolite there than we would dare to be to strangers. As someone has said it is a "tragic fact that so often strangers see us at our best while those who live with us and love us most, see us at our worst!" For Jesus the home was a place for which nothing but the best was good enough.

Look why it happened. In this case, Jesus used his powers to save

Why Christ Came

Background Scripture: John 3.

Devotional Reading: Luke 19:1-10.

Memory Selection: For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved through him. John 3:17.

Some people think that Nicodemus was a coward because he came to Jesus by night — he was ashamed to come to him during the day. The more likely fact is that he was courageous. It took a great deal of courage for a man who was a member of the Sanhedrin, the Supreme Court of the Jews, to come to a young Rabbi seeking information on spiritual concerns. And the probability is that he came by night so that, apart from the crowd, Jesus and he might have unhurried time for a full and free discussion of religion. In any event, Nicodemus later appears as a witness in behalf of Jesus (John 7:50-52), and still later as a disciple who assisted in preparing the body of Jesus for burial.

THE FAITH OF DOUBT

Nicodemus was "an intellectual." He probably belonged to a distinguished Jewish family, may have been wealthy, was a Pharisee, and a ruler of the Jews, a member of the Sanhedrin. It is an amazing thing that he came to Jesus at all. He was an honest doubter — there is not the slightest evidence that he came to Jesus to trap him. Doubt has a place in religion. The man who never asks a humble Galilean family from great embarrassment and hurt and humiliation. He acted out of kindness and sympathy.

There is an interesting sidelight on, or insight into Mary's character in this story. We see how she instinctively turned to Jesus when things went wrong. He was now about thirty years of age, she had lived in the intimacy of the home with him all these years, she knew his instant response to those in trouble.

And of course there is eloquent witness to Mary's faith in her son. Even when He seemed to refuse to do what she requested, she still believed in him. In short she believed where she could not understand.

AN EVEN DEEPER MEANING

There is an even deeper meaning than lies on the surface of the story. John tells the story in such a way as to point to the superabundance of the goodness and grace and generosity of Jesus. No wedding feast could possibly use 180 gallons of wine, especially after the guests had already been served rather adequately. No need on earth can exhaust the grace of Christ. The story also suggests that when Jesus touches life, it has a new quality, a new taste, a new meaning, a new joy, a new beauty, a new dimension. He transforms that which He touches.

any questions does not get the answers. Doubt can be the doorway to a larger, sturdier faith. But a man must not live by his doubts; he must live by what faith he does have. This lesson ought to have a practical message to teen-agers, especially older teen-agers, and young people. For in every normal person there comes a period of doubt, and many times

Dear Friends:

Now we have to become accustomed to writing 1961 instead of 1960. It's hard to realize that another year has passed so quickly. Let us all resolve to make the most of this new year while it is yet so young, for if we don't before we know it, it too shall pass from us.

We here at the Children's Home look forward with great anticipation to this year for come May we hope to be in our two new cottages. We have in this issue a picture of the progress of our buildings as of the middle of December when this picture was made. During the fall we were blessed with nice weather and progress moved right along on the cottages. We are hoping this winter season will not be too severe.

Payments continue to come in on the pledges made for this Improvement Program, from churches, individuals, business and industry. We are much encouraged by this. It is the hope of the Superintendent and the Board of Trustees that the pledges will all be up to date by May of this year so that we will have to borrow as little as possible to complete the buildings. One of our local banks has agreed to loan us the balance that we will need against the unpaid amounts for the balance of the three-year pledge period.

As you well know, this is not an expansion program, but one of improvement. This will enable our Southern Convention to do a more adequate work in the field of modern child care.

May this new year be a most prosperous one for each of you!

W. W. Snyder

A devoted patron of "The Christian Sun" and "The Orphanage at Elon" has passed on to her eternal reward. The following prayer during the funeral in the Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, N. C., bespeaks of the truly great life she lived:

Our Heavenly Father, as we are here gathered to honor the life of this dear one, may thy spirit be near weaving comfort with honor and strength with our weaknesses in the name of Christ, Our Lord.

As the shades of her life are drawn, we pause to glimpse once again the rays of light she cast in our midst.

Her unswerving sense of concern for those who were bedridden and shut-in, her regular visits, words of comfort and thoughtful deeds will surely be remembered by thee and missed by all of us.

The willingness with which she undertook responsibility regardless of the weight of the task, the courageous manner in which she faced life with its ups and downs, the genuine sympathy for the mourners which prompted her presence at many a service like this, her personal words of encouragement to those who were trying, her love for little children and the tender way she could identify herself with them and capture their interest, her love for good religious music and the beauty of nature, all this and more we are confident will find favor with thee and linger long in our minds and hearts.

The light of her church work will be an example for us to follow. The many little details gladly assumed behind the scene, the passion for our mission outreach and her continuous efforts to promote the many phases of the church's life and work, surely will not go unnoticed.

Her persistence in doing the good and avoiding the evil leaves us all with a deeper challenge to rise up and follow thee. We are grateful for this life lived among us. We humbly accept this passing as her move to a far greater experience, a reward for those who have faithfully lived and served thee. As this peace has encompassed her, grant to us the urge to also lose ourselves in the comfort and assurance of thy spirit and service even as she has done so before us.

Her thanksgiving is o'er;
her gratitude is expressed.
In the Name of the Father,
The Son and The Holy Spirit.
Alleluia, the strife is O'er.

Amen

know where the wind comes from? Do you know where it goes?" Jesus asked Nicodemus. Of course not — we are dealing here with a mystery, which even now modern science cannot explain. Well, if we cannot explain the common and simple things of life, need we be troubled because we cannot explain the deeper, spiritual things of life!

3. It is available. Every man has that within him which can respond to the Spirit of God. And when a man repents, confesses, believes, he is "born of the Spirit" and God's Spirit bears witness with his spirit that he is a child of God.

"THE LITTLE GOSPEL" OR "THE GOSPEL IN A NUTSHELL"

John 3:16 is perhaps the most widely-known and the best-beloved verse in the whole Bible. Luther called it "The Little Gospel." Here in the brief compass of one verse is summed up many aspects of the "good news" or the "Gospel." Here is (a) The Motive. It was because God loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son. His unspeakable Gift was given because of his immeasurable love. (b) The Medium. God's love was to be expressed in and through his Son, Jesus Christ. (c) The Mission. Christ's mission was to the whole world. God so loved the world, all the world, the whole world that He gave his Son. Not simply the Jew, as the Jew thought, and not simply to the white man as some white men think, but to all men, all the world. (d) The Method. Men were to be saved through faith — whosoever believeth on or in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Faith in Christ brings a man into a new relationship with God, a relationship that is nothing less than salvation.

THE CONDEMNATION

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light." When a man confronts Jesus or is confronted by Jesus, and sees nothing lovely in Jesus, he is condemned already — he condemns himself. In short, by a man's reaction to Jesus Christ, that man stands revealed. Christ who was sent in love, becomes for men their judgment. Furthermore Jesus said that men loved darkness rather than the light, because their deeds are evil. The man bent on evil dreads the light for the light reveals his evil character and conduct. But the man who does the truth comes to the light.

they think it is terrible, or a sin to doubt or to ask questions. Doubt might well be called the "growing pains" of faith.

THE NEW BIRTH

In spite of the fact that he was an intelligent man, and schooled in the formal religion of the Jews, Nicodemus knew little about the inner spiritual realities of religion. Jesus said three things about the New Birth:

1. It is necessary. A man had to be born into the physical life; in like manner he had to be born into the spiritual world. He had to be born again, or born from above. The Spirit of the living God must beget him into a new life of the Spirit. It should be added that this does not mean that this experience must always be cataclysmic. The experience may come, and often does come, in an orderly, progressive, quiet way.

2. It is mysterious. By an analogy of the wind, Jesus points up the mystery of the New Birth. "Do you

Individual Growth In The New Year

GOOD MENTAL HEALTH

Dr. George Stevenson, veteran medical consultant for the National Association for Mental Health, offers these suggestions for good mental health:

1. Maintain a tolerant, easy-going attitude toward yourself and others.
2. Don't underestimate or over-estimate your own abilities.
3. Keep your self-respect.
4. Develop the ability to take life's disappointments in stride.
5. Learn to like and trust other people.
6. Feel that you are part of a group and have a sense of responsibility for your neighbors and fellowmen.
7. Accept and face your responsibilities.
8. Consider the interests of others.
9. Plan ahead and set realistic goals for yourself.
10. Put your best efforts in what you do and gain satisfaction from it.

WHY WE FAIL

A noted psychologist was asked recently to give the reasons why so many people fail in their efforts to make life successful. The great mind-scientist penned ten frank and valid reasons. Try them, and see if they fit into your life.

1. Finding fault with the other fellow, but never seeing your own faults.
2. Doing as little as possible, and trying to get as much as possible for it.
3. Spending much time showing up the other fellow's weak points and too little time correcting our own.
4. Slandering those we do not like.
5. Procrastination — putting off until tomorrow something that we should have done day before yesterday.
6. Deceit — talking friendly to the other fellow's face and stabbing him in the back as soon as he turns round.
7. False belief that we are smart enough to reap a harvest of pay before sowing a crop of honest service.
8. Disloyalty to those who have trusted us.
9. Egotism — the belief that we know it all, and no one can tell us anything.
10. Last, but not least, lack of necessary training and education to enable us to stand at the head in our work.

SEVEN DON'TS FOR YOUR TONGUE

1. Don't argue. Keep an open mind on debatable subjects, and maintain the conversation on a discussion basis.
2. Don't talk too much; rather say less than you think. To hold your tongue is often the better part of wisdom.
3. Don't direct witticism or sarcasm at the other fellow. Be careful always of feelings. Jokes often hurt.
4. Don't neglect an opportunity to extend your congratulations when the other fellow has made some achievement, or to encourage him when he is trying.
5. Don't promise rashly. Every promise implies an obligation to fulfill it.
6. Don't gossip. Try to make your remarks about those absent kindly and understanding.
7. Don't be in a hurry to answer unkind things that have been said about you. After all, it's how you live that counts.

—B. W. Elsom

THE MATURE PERSON

There are many ways by which we recognize the so-called "mature person." A list of a few of the personality traits of such a person, who has, in truth, outgrown childish ideas and feelings, includes the following:

1. He (or she) does not expect special consideration from anyone.
2. He controls his temper.
3. He is a good loser—can take defeat and disappointment without whining or complaining.
4. He does not worry unduly about the things that cannot be helped.
5. He accepts responsibility for his own acts.
6. He does not boast or "show off" in socially unacceptable ways.
7. He is not a chronic fault-finder.
8. He listens thoughtfully to the opinions of others, and does not argue heatedly, when his views are opposed.
9. He has outgrown the "all-or-nothing" stage, recognizing that no person or situation is wholly good, or wholly bad.

Berlin Bishop Describes Church Life In Divided City

Communist atheism has not yet succeeded in crushing the Christian faith of the German people, Berlin's Protestant bishop told a large group of church leaders last fall. Bishop Otto Dibelius, Bishop of Berlin-Brandenburg, warned, however, that if the Communists should succeed in isolating all Berlin, "the whole structure of the Christian church in East Germany would collapse." The 80-year old Bishop is a president of the World Council of Churches.

"Once Berlin is isolated," he said, "16 million Protestants in East Germany would be left utterly to themselves and lost." He added that it is still legally possible to send financial aid to the East German churches, "but only political decisions will decide how much longer it will continue."

Two-thirds of Bishop Dibelius' five-million member parish lies in the East Zone of Berlin. A churchman of the Lutheran-Reformed tradition, he is chairman of the Council of the Evangelical Churches in Germany.

The Bishop described the "island city of Berlin" as an oasis where East and West can still meet. They read the newspapers from each side and see that the stories differ. What is success in one is defeat in the other, he said, adding: "Only the weather forecast is the same."

The persistent Communist propaganda aimed at uprooting the Christian faith, he said, promises no more need, no more injustice, and happiness for all mankind.

"In order to help man bring about this happy state," he continued, "they try to wipe out Christianity, starting with the children." Parents must raise them to be "good citizens of the world revolution" and a father loses his job if his child is confirmed.

The Bishop also described the perplexity among Communist officials that any American should come to Germany "just to proclaim the Gospel." He referred to Evangelist Billy Graham's recent rally at the Brandenburg Gate. East German authorities prevented people from going to the rally, claiming that Dr. Graham came with a special commission from NATO, the western defense alliance.

Expressing the thanks of the German people for the aid sent them by the American churches through Church World Service and the World Council churches, Bishop Dibelius declared: "Thanks to this aid, the people of Germany have learned each day that there is a world church of faith and hope and love."

He addressed the Board of Managers of Church World Service and members of the Division of Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees of the World Council who met the first of November in Buck Hill Falls, Pa.

Here And There Among The Churches

Annual church reports were due at the Convention Office at Elon January 10.

Mrs. Reva Strosnider holds the record for attendance at church school at First, Winchester, Virginia — 17 years.

Purple paraments (pulpit scarf and Bible markers) for use during Advent, Lent and Pre-Lent, have been given to our Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, in memory of Douglas H. Gorman.

Mrs. Walter Morris, superintendent of the nursery department of our Durham church school, is enthusiastic about the way the new nursery curriculum is interesting the children, so the church newsletter reports. She invites interested adults to be trained in her department to serve as assistants.

Dr. W. T. Scott reports that Oakland went "over the top" on its 1961 budget Loyalty Sunday, November 20. More than $15,000, or 80% of the budget, was subscribed at the morning service. As a result of afternoon calls the remainder of the budget was pledged.

Rev. Melvin Dollar reports that the charter membership at the new United Church of Mission Village, San Diego, California, closed December 18 with the reception of 26 members, making a total of 194 charter members. During the last eight months a church has been organized; a Sunday school of more than 100 children established; two youth fellowships organized; and a successful building fund campaign conducted with $29,000 raised from 50 families.

The Durham church has a new filmstrip projector and the past quarter each department used the curriculum filmstrip "What Do We See of Jesus?"

First Congregational Christian Church, Winchester, Virginia, has received $1,000 from the estate of Mrs. Viola V. Sibert. Have you remembered your church in your will?

Mrs. J. Monroe Harris, a former president of the women of the Southern Convention, presented the home mission study program for the Women's Fellowship of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, January 3 at a luncheon meeting.

According to the announcement in the mimeographed December news bulletin of the Congregational Christian Home for Children at Elon College, beginning in January there is to be a quarterly bulletin printed and mailed out to friends of that institution.

Recently Holland Phillips, member of Beverly Hills, Burlington, received the Silver Beaver, highest scouting award, at the annual meeting of the Cherokee Council Boy Scouts of America. Tate Horton, Jr., received his Eagle award at the morning church service December 4.

A consecration service for the parsonage of the new Garner Community Church will be held Sunday, January 15, according to announcement by the pastor, Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp. Superintendent Clyde Fields plans to share in the service, which will begin at 11:00 a.m. in the Vandora Springs School and will be ended at the parsonage.

As a special feature of the Girl Scout program of First, Burlington, one girl will assist in the nursery during the worship service each Sunday.

A study group to discuss the content of the Christian faith is meeting on Wednesday after the fourth Sunday in each month at First, Winchester.

The North Carolina Church Builder's Club has chosen St. Peter's United Church of Christ in Greensboro as the object for its first call in 1961. It is expected that the call will be made in January and will be completed by Easter. Pastor of St. Peter's is Rev. Carl Daye.

The Elon College football squad made national headlines when the Associated Press chose George Wooten's great 108-yard touchdown return of a Catawba College field goal attempt the "Number One Gridiron Oddity" of the 1960 collegiate grid season. The AP sports staff chose the sensational scoring sprint as the most unusual play of the entire year, according to the Maroon and Gold of Elon College.

Last fall a "Brainstorming Session" at First, Richmond brought surprising results. A panel of 12 members considered "How to Increase Church attendance" and "How to increase the financial income of the church." They came up with 75 ideas on the former and 44 on the latter! A committee of four, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Dennis Cofer, then met to select the ideas that would be adaptable to the local situation and to suggest periods of time in 1961 that these would be used.

According to The Standard for December 15, forty-three of the seventy-eight Evangelical and Reformed churches in the Southern Synod had paid their apportionments in full.

May V. Faucette reports that the Monticello church, Brown Summit, North Carolina voted at its quarterly business meeting on Sunday, January 1, to accept the constitution of the United Church of Christ and to name their church "Monticello Church of Christ."

The Fellowship Bible Class and the Templemen's Bible Class of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, both have attractive bulletins to use each Sunday with a worship service outlined and announcements of interest to the members. Rev. Frank Hamilton installed officers of the latter January 1. President for 1961 is C. A. Downing, while teachers are R. A. Walker, Herman Capps and Bob McLellon.

According to The Newsletter of The Convention of the South, two North Carolina conferences of our Negro churches plan to merge. The Eastern Atlantic and the Southern Conference are in the process of becoming "The Southern Atlantic Conference" under the leadership of their respective presidents, Rev. F. A. Hargett and Rev. J. W. Albright.

The Road to Damascus is the interesting title of the news bulletin of Damascus Congregational Christian Church, Chapel Hill, where Rev. William T. Joyner is pastor. The editor is Mrs. Paul Long and the typist is Ann Wilson. From this bulletin we learn that the twin sons of Rev. and Mrs. Harvey Carnes were christened at Damascus August 14 with the preacher-grandfathers (Carnes and Bingham) both sharing in the service, and with both grandmothers present.

The January Newsletter of Pfafftown Community Church includes these items of interest: an anonymous donor gave a mimeograph to the church; a special gift by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Fulk completed the payment on the building and the note was burned by Mr. Fulk at the Christmas program; a class for church membership will begin January 8 and continue for four Sunday evenings; quarterly business meeting January 8 will include consideration of a new parsonage and church building.

Every member of Union Ridge church, near Burlington, North Carolina is appointed to serve on the Hospitality Committee for 1961, according to the January 1 bulletin. "This is the best way to extend a friendly welcome to each other and to friends who worship with us each Sunday. Be present each Sunday this year and resolve to continue a hospitable spirit through the Christian service which you will render through your church."

Mr. L. M. Grissom was ordained as a deacon of Liberty (Vance) church at the worship service January 1, just prior to the communion service. Mr. C. O. Eaves has been made a deacon emeritus.

Mrs. Fletcher Fuller reports that Liberty church, near Henderson, North Carolina, voted unanimously at the quarterly conference Friday, December 30, in favor of adopting the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. The business session followed a fellowship supper in the church annex.

S. H. Pell of our Pleasant Ridge church near Ramseur, North Carolina, has recently been promoted by Pilot Life Insurance Company of Greensboro as Field Trainer for Division Two of the company. This means that he will travel through North and South Carolina and part of Georgia training workers for his company. Mr. Pell lives in the community of his birth, and has an office in Asheboro where he and his wife, a musician, helped to start our church. They have also served our church at Ocean View, Virginia.

IN MEMORIAM

A memorial service for Dr. Cleon Swarts, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Congregational Christian Conference, was held January 2 at Hartman Center Memorial Chapel, Milroy. Dr. Swarts, who was known by many in the Southern Convention, passed away December 31 after several months of ill health. The family requested that in lieu of flowers a memorial fund be established for the purpose of providing assistance in the area of Christian vocations. Contributions may be sent to The Cleon Swarts Memorial Fund, Hartman Center, Milroy, Pennsylvania.

BURLINGTON AREA PICNIC

The Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed Ministers and their families in the Burlington area are invited to share in another "Family Night" Monday evening, January 16, at 6 o'clock at the Bethel Congregational Christian church, Route 3, Burlington, North Carolina. The Bill Traylor family will be the hosts for this fellowship.

"NEW CHURCH" AT SEAGROVE

You are invited to stop by and see the new Seagrove church. The outside is the same, but the inside has been completely redecorated from the ceiling in the sanctuary to the floor in the basement.

The choir sponsored a ham supper with the proceeds going to purchase choir robes which are worn at each service.

The Pilgrim Fellowship put on the play, "The Starlight Path," which was enjoyed by the large attendance.

December 18 we held our first candlelight service, which was an inspiration to all those who attended.

CANDLELIGHT SERVICE AT UNION GROVE

Sunday evening, December 25, the Union Grove church held its first candlelight service under the leadership of its minister, Rev. B. J. Willett.

The Pilgrim Fellowship put on the play, "No Room in the Inn." This was enjoyed by all who attended.

The members of the Pilgrim Fellowship, along with their adult advisors, went caroling to the homes of several shut-in people. Following the caroling the group enjoyed a hot dog roast sponsored by the advisors.

Mrs. Frank Lewis reports that Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth, Virginia, is having its annual dinner and business meeting January 11, when the program for 1961 will be adopted. The men of the church are rebuilding the kitchen. The parsonage has been turned into an educational building and two used pianos have been purchased to use in the new quarters.

We learn from the bulletin of the Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, that a Leadership Training School is being held the first three Monday evenings in this month at Wake Chapel, with classes taught by Revs. Robert Knowles, Max Vestal, Rosser Clapp, Carl Wallace and Miss Martha Brittle.

The Church That Serves Me

Some years ago a man in one of our churches was being honored for the liberal contributions which he had made to the improvement of his church. His response was impressive, and truthful: "Whatever I may have done to help my church cannot be compared to what my church has done for me."

So say we all.

For more than three years this editor has shared with First Congregational Christian Church of High Point, North Carolina, its service and dreams. Extra work of some sort has been necessary, and still is, because money available for editing this paper will not feed a family. Our High Point church needed help at the time the editor was looking for an increased income, and the church and minister found mutual companionship.

Last night, January 4, in this beautifully paneled large room which was added to an already lovely dwelling, 25 adults stood in a circle with joined hands and sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds Our Hearts in Christian Love" at the close of an annual business session which followed a supper. It was not a large crowd; neither is it a large church. The thirteen children and young people who had eaten with the group entertained themselves in the living room while the adults transacted business for the church.

There were the usual reports from officers, organizations, and committees, with the election of officers for 1961. Every active member of the church is an officer of some kind in church, Sunday school or youth group. Only two families of the active church group were absent. That may speak something concerning the interest and loyalty. There were other family groups present who are not yet members of this church.

A very important matter for decision was a vote on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. Copies of the Constitution have been available for some time. Questions and discussion were invited, but none followed. Either of three motions were in order: 1. To approve the Constitution; 2. To join the United Church without approving the Constitution; and, 3. To oppose the Constitution and the United Church of Christ. A motion to approve, by standing, was voted unanimously by members and regular attendants of the church.

For three years the church has been seeking sale of its property on West Green Street, and hoping to build on Chestnut Street where more than ten acres of woodland has been secured. The trustees at long last were able to report that the buildings have been sold and removed, and that the land is sold with payment to be received this month. Those who have never waited long for the fulfillment of a dream cannot understand the depth of joy that came to the church that has met in school and home for more than a year while disappointment after disappointment came to it. The news that this hurdle is about to be overcome gave hope that other closed doors may also open, and that before faith fails there will be a beautiful church of Congregational Christian background erected in what many think is the most lovely place to be found in High Point.

The community in which this church was established in 1914 has undergone great change in recent years. The supporting membership has largely moved to the suburbs of the city, and the membership has greatly declined. There are now 33 persons who can rightfully be called active members, and some of these are too feeble to attend services. Attendance last year averaged about 35 persons, including children, with a slight increase towards the end of the year. None are wealthy. The treasurer reported that the congregation contributed $6,492.53 — not a large sum for a church, but close to $190.00 per year for each contributor — man, woman and child.

Why should an editor write about the church he serves? And why should this particular church receive editorial consideration?

The answer to the first question is that the church is doing the serving. It furnishes a rented house in which to live, and love to make it seem like a home. It dreams of the impossible, and then undertakes to make it real. The item in the budget which usually comes first, the pastor's salary, is last in ours, for it is the balance of $100.00 annually when other necessary expenses are paid. Do not laugh at this for the work of the Church is a venture of faith. If the church can do more, it will. Then there is the hope of a new church building in a new community. No one knows how it is to come, but we are all expecting it to be there where it is needed and we are working to that end.

But why High Point? Look at a map of North Carolina and it is easy to see that High Point is no far from the center of the state. Other churches of ours surround the city. It is almost at the center of the industrial development that reaches from Raleigh through Durham, Greensboro, Thomasville, Salisbury to Charlotte. Our church has been caught in the familiar pattern of changing community, and it has had only three resident ministers, and one of them was a student. There has never been adequate financial support. If we are to live and grow in North Carolina, High Point is a necessary center.

From time to time, and in the past two years the Southern Convention Mission Board has assisted and the Board of Home Missions through the Building Division has aided in securing land for a new location. But the time has come for a concerted effort to erect the type of building and promote the kind of program that will make our denomination a recognized force in the life of the city. This will call for large contributions outside the local group.

A person with money could render a real service by helping to build a church in High Point. Attractive plans have been drawn, the land is ready, the people are anxious, but the money is not available. God may have loaned the money to some reader of this paper. Surely somewhere there is money with which to do the necessary work of the Church. Unless the source can be discovered, and the Church move forward around the world, the freedoms we love and the Christianity we boast will surely fail before the onslaughts of communism that thinks liberty is the gift of the State and God is a myth. A strong church of ours in High Point will certainly be part of the bulwark of faith that may yet save the world for humanity. — Editor

A war of some kind is always being fought. Insects wage war against other insects; in the vegetable kingdom there are plants that strangle other plants in order to survive. Creatures, including man, cannot live without warring on other life. Life undersea is a battle to death.

But the strangest and least observed war of all is man's battle against sand. This sand war is not new, for it has been raging in India, China, Denmark, Holland, and many other countries for centuries. This invasion of soil by sand is proceeding at the rate of a foot, a yard, or a mile a year, depending on the area.

The gradual loss of cultivable land to the inroads of sand seems alarming only when considered in the light of the world's increasing population of about 120,000 mouths a day to be fed from the products of the soil. The annual population increase in India alone equals the combined populations of Denmark and Norway. Since 1956, the United States has fed 10 million hungry people in India. A similar story covers prior years.

The fiercest sand war of all is being fought in the Sahara Desert in North Africa. In the southern Sahara, the desert has advanced more than 150 miles during the last three decades. Ancient records show that once the Sahara Desert supported a large population. Even down to Roman times, the coast of North Africa from Alexandria to Tunis was a vast grain-growing region. Much of the same area is now devoid of vegetation, man having lost his war against sand.

If this war against sand seems far off and not interesting to the American people, consider this country's first real war against soil erosion a few decades ago. That effort to prevent soil from being washed into streams at an alarming rate is still in progress, and not every battle is being won. One example among many, of an unsuccessful battle against the loss of soil, is found along Maryland's bayshore line where farmers are losing an equivalent of 485 acres each year because of lashing waters and drifting sand. Bayshore lines in other States are similarly affected.

Better methods of cultivation are gradually being introduced on a world-wide scale as soil-saving devices, but in many instances lack of know-how and unwillingness to learn permit the loss of soil to go on almost unchecked.

Man inherited the earth for his benefit, but he has not always been an ideal protector of that inheritance. Carelessness and indifference have caused a needless destruction of soil, unwise, and wasteful harvesting of timbers, ruthless killing of wildlife, and pollution of streams.

Man's ability to live in the centuries ahead may depend upon the results of his warfare against all soil-destroying elements in the present century. Save the soil and save lives could be a prophetic statement.

Color In The Sanctuary

Color is one of the great gifts of God to his creation. Color is the outward expression of the spirit of joy. It is the flowering of the adoration we give our blessed Lord. Without it our sanctuary would be cold and lifeless. The use of altar cloths and colors goes back to Numbers 4:11 "and upon the golden Altar they shalt spread a cloth of blue." And again: "and they shalt take away the ashes from the altar and spread a purple cloth thereon." Today we use the colors red, white, green, purple and black in our church. The colors used at the altar in connection with the various hangings and other pieces commonly used in the chancel. and the stoles of the officiating clergy are as follows:

- Advent to Christmas Purple
- Christmas to Septuagesima White
- Septuagesima to Lent Red
- Lent to Maundy Thursday Purple
- Maundy Thursday White
- Good Friday Black
- Easter to Ascension Day White
- Ascension Day to Whitsunday Red
- Whitsunday to Advent Green
- Reformation Red
- Funerals Purple
- Baptism, Confirmation White
- Weddings, Ordinations White

NO UNIMPORTANT CHURCH

Robbins Ralph

One day there came into the Conference office at Avon Park a retired minister. This elderly veteran of the cross, full of wisdom and good works, became engaged in conversation with your Superintendent and Registrar. The visitor fell to reminiscing about his early recollections, perhaps fifty years ago.

He said he was sitting beside the Superintendent of the Iowa Conference on a long slow train ride across the state where the tall corn grows. They talked of churches, as ministers will, and they spoke of one small town church in particular. "Is it an important church?" asked our visitor. "There is no unimportant church" replied the Superintendent.

There is no unimportant church. Some are bigger than others. Some are beautiful and others plain, some are bustling and others quiet, some have advantages in location, or in resources of wealth and talent. But all are important, and the Iowa Superintendent knew it, and thus he served them all, large and small, with a magnificent impartiality and disregard for outward appearances.

Our visitor at the Conference office that day was the Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, now a regular attendant at our Holly Hill church. The Superintendent of the Iowa Conference half a century ago was the father of the Rev. William N. Tuttle, recently the executive of this Conference and still its registrar and the editor of our NEWS. The present Superintendent is grateful for this heritage of those who have gone before, and seeks to serve in Florida as best he can, on the principle that there is no unimportant church.

Comments From Supt. Fields

TWO GOOD BOOKS

Two books have come to the attention of the Superintendent recently, which have relevance to the work of the church in the field of Home Missions. I call these to the attention of the readers of The Christian Sun, with a suggestion that they might be read profitably by ministers and laymen.

1. Safe in Bondage, by Dr. Robert W. Spike, published by Friendship Press, New York. $2.75. (paper, $1.50)

The author of Safe in Bondage has wide experience in the pastoral ministry, having served as pastor of the downtown old First Church in Rochester, New York; in an industrial suburb in Rochester; and a church in Queens, New York and in Greenwich Village of New York City. It was while serving as pastor of the church in Greenwich Village that his work came to the attention of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Church. From a very successful pastorate here, he came to be General Secretary for the Program of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Church, having served also for some years with the Department of Evangelism of the denomination. Dr. Spike writes with a penetrating understanding of the problems that confront us in our complex time. Dr. Spike leads his readers with him on a search for the role of the church in the area of home missions in our land today. Dr. Spike points out that when civilization was young on the American continent, the nature of home missions was rather easily defined. The task was to follow trails to all the geographic frontiers, carrying the gospel and the ministry of the church, but as the frontiers vanished and the wilderness has been verily cemented over with highways, the character of home missions has undergone a drastic change. What, then, is the mission of churches and boards in the role of home missions today?

American culture has undergone drastic change since the frontier day, when rugged individualism made it possible for men of iron to rise up and build a brave, new world, and today, after 100 years of fashioning cities out of forests, bearing the labor pangs of a technological revolution, coming through three destructive wars, feeling the impact of a psycho-analytic understanding, the cult of mass consumption, leaves man now more limp than the pioneer.

Modern man is not so dazzled by our chromium plated civilization. He is learning to live day by day with tragedy. He knows that deep forces can drive him to create an armageddon to end man as we know him. There is hunger for the tender and permanent. When, then, is the role of the church for modern man? Dr. Spike feels that the church must be involved in the needs of modern man for the real and the permanent. No longer can the church exist on the periphery of man's sentimentalism. The church must meet the need of the man in the shop and in the office.

By mission field, we used to think of an area of land. Now, we mean an area of life. A mission field is any area of life in which Jesus Christ is not known.

The two chief characteristics are expansion and penetration. The old word, "Go" remains, but not only to go "out", to all of the world, but to go in to all of life. We used to think only of neglected continents; now we think of neglected communities and individuals in all continents. We used to think of unoccupied fields, but now we think of hearts unoccupied by the gospel. We used to think of unfinished tasks as something remote and distant. Now, we know they can be next door. We formerly thought of the un-Christian world as foreign; now, we fear America could be a part of it.

Dr. Spike's chapters on the World of the Organizational Man, The Threatened Rural Community, The Runaway City, and World of Culture Molders are helpful, penetrating, and suggestive.

The last chapter of Dr. Spike's book "Safe in Bondage" points out the role of Christ in the modern world. He points out that Christ when here in the flesh stood among the outsiders and needy wherever they were found. In such a role, Dr. Spike would place the church today, as it brings its witness for Christ.

2. Ferment on the Fringe, by Shirley E. Greene. The Christian Education Press, Philadelphia.

Dr. Greene is Secretary for Town and Country Church of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. He has long and rich experience in the life of the rural church. He writes from a background of personal experience and long time association with the problems associated with the rural church in a changing world.

"Ferment on the Fringe" would be especially helpful in a self-study conducted by a local church located near or in a changing community. The book is written to help churches undergoing transition from a rural to a suburban or to a small town status. Many small or large rural churches have found the city pushing out and taking in what formerly was a rural community. Many churches in our country are facing the problem of transition in situations like this. Dr. Greene's book would be especially helpful in a church facing this kind of problem.

The book points out that change is all about us. We must realize that most churches now are facing the problem of change and need to be geared so as to face it with courage and determination. The book deals with ten actual case studies of churches who have more or less successfully met the challenge of transition. The churches are located in many parts of the country, so as to give a country-wide breadth to the problem. The thrilling story of how ten churches met the transition with success would be helpful and interesting for any church, minister, or layman to pursue.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PASTOR'S CLASS

Someone has suggested that the Constitution of the United Church of Christ and/or the Manual of the Southern Convention might well be used for Pastor's Classes during Lent in preparation for church membership. Young people and adults might find a study of both the Constitution and the Manual of great help in understanding the meaning of the church. The Constitution of the United Church of Christ may be ordered for 10c from the United Church of Christ, 289 Park Avenue, S., New York 10, New York. The Manual of the Southern Convention may be ordered from the Southern Convention, Box 247, Elon College, N. C. Cost is 50c a copy, or $4.00 per dozen. The Constitution and the Manual might be profitably used by Pilgrim Fellowship groups as they study the history of the United Church of Christ.

INDIA

The Madura Mission

Aruppukottai is a town of 50,000 30 miles south of Madurai and is the trading center for a farm area of hundreds of villages.

- 15—Miss Bertha Smith went to India in 1917, living most of the time in Aruppukottai where she has trained and supervised many "Bible women" and has made a fine contribution in teaching girls and women to read. Bangalore is the rail and commercial center of southern India with a population of 780,000.
- 16—Rev. and Mrs. David Gallup met in India where he was a teacher for Oberlin College's program and she was a laboratory assistant at Lady Doak College. She is the daughter of a minister of the Church of South India. 1957-58 they were in California where he was chaplain at Claremont and she taught at Pomona. They went back to India last year.
- 17—Rev. and Mrs. Max Harrison are on pre-retirement furlough. She is the daughter and granddaughter of American Board missionaries, and taught in Ceylon before her marriage. 1937-54 he was principal of United Theological College.
- 18—Rev. and Mrs. Leroy Rouner are well-educated — he Harvard, Union Seminary, Columbia; she Smith, Andover-Newton and Union seminaries. They went to India last year where he will teach religion at United Theological College.
- 19—Miss Carolyn Weeber went to India as a nurse in 1947. At first she served in a big city hospital, but felt a call to work in rural area. She was assigned to Chatrapatti in a dry district noted for famines. She combines public health work with education and evangelism, traveling by jeep.
- 20—Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mills went to India in 1956 and after language study settled in Kallimandayam in midst of area being reached by Christianity. He helps people with dry-soil farming, sinking wells, revolving loan societies for purchasing cows, taking up waste land offered by government, spinning projects for women. Kilanjunai is a village of 400 in an isolated area of great medical need. 300 villages are in 10-mile radius.
- 21—Dr. and Mrs. Edward Riggs are both fourth-generation missionaries who were married in China. At present they are on furlough in the U. S. Their work in India is well-known to the people in the Southern Convention. They do public health work in connection with a small hospital and treat tuberculosis and leprosy in weekly clinics.

Christmas In India

Miss Katie Wilcox, founder of Lady Doak College for Women and Girls in Madurai, India, eleven years ago, writes from Chester, Connecticut:

"This week and next will be full of Christmas celebrations at Lady Doak College. There will be small Christmas programs in the various dormitories and serenades on the campus in the evening; there will be the Christmas carol service and the Christmas play to both of which the public will be invited. In the student serenades you may be confronted with, 'All poor men and humble, All lame men who stumble,' as well as with shepherds and wise men, for costuming is not omitted.

"In addition, there will be the college family celebration with its Christmas tree and bright lights. There will be no gifts on the tree except a few parcels containing the traditional gifts of clothing to the college servants. At this family celebration, we will sit down on the ground under the open sky and eat our food together. It will be the ordinary college food embellished a wee bit for Christmas for it is the fellowship we stress and not the quality of the food.

"In the East, there is not much flurry and worry about gifts. There Christmas is Christmas — the coming of the Christ child. It fits the Eastern setting, the cows walking in and out of the doors of the houses, the early morning service in the church (4 a.m.). When I was there, I used to think, 'Why does one want to get up for this early service when there is to be the 8 a.m. service?' Now in retrospect, I think of the beauty of it, but it is a custom that would not fit with us in America where the winter morning is cold and dawn does not begin until about 7 a.m."

N. C. UNITED CHURCH WOMEN TO MEET

The annual meeting of United Church Women of North Carolina will be held at White Memorial Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, January 30-February 1. The Board of Managers meet Monday evening for dinner with Dr. Guion Johnson of Chapel Hill as the speaker on "Africa — A Threat to the World."

Tuesday registration will begin at 9:15 a.m. with a coffee hour and literature display. At 10:00 a.m. the session will open with Mrs. W. Murdock MacLeod speaking on "Freedom for What?" Luncheon speaker (Hayes Barton Methodist Church, 2209 Fairview Road) will be Mrs. Monica B. Owen on "Mission to America" (migrants). Mrs. MacLeod will speak at a joint dinner for men and women at 5:45 at White Memorial on "Living Dangerously."

The Wednesday morning session will feature a panel on "Working Together on the Local Level" and a business session which includes installation of officers. Dr. Carlyle Marney of Charlotte will address the closing fellowship luncheon. Overnight hospitality will be furnished. The meals mentioned above are all open to interested persons. Price is $1.25 for each. Registration fee for the entire meeting is $1.00. Requests for overnight entertainment or reservations for meals should be sent to Mrs. Leslie Evans, 1600 Craig Street, Raleigh by January 26.

Miss Elizabeth Johns of New York City, who has taught sociology at Antioch College in Ohio and held positions with the national YWCA, joins the staff of the Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ February 1 as secretary and editor of Social Action magazine. She succeeds Fern Babcock Grant, who is joining her missionary-husband in the Philippines.

THE CHANG FAMILY

Rev. and Mrs. Timothy Chang sent the above picture to friends in their Christmas greeting. Our church people in the Southern Convention will be interested to know that Cynthia Lynn is now 3½ years old and Jonathan Lee will be two years old February 22. They both speak Chinese and English.

Annabelle (Mrs. Chang) keeps busy looking after their home. Timothy has been director of the bacteriological research laboratory of Whitmoyer Laboratories, Inc., for the last four years.

The Changs are members of the Myerstown (Pennsylvania) Reformed Church, where they are advisors to the Youth Fellowship and he is a member of the Board of Christian Education. Timothy often supplies pulpits and teaches Sunday school in nearby Evangelical and Reformed churches.

He writes, "It has been a long seven years since I left North Carolina and Virginia, but I still have a vivid picture in my mind of the warmth and generosity of the Southern Convention friends. I can now communicate with them only through reading The Christian Sun. I would like to take this opportunity of saying 'Hello' to my Southern Convention friends, and to wish them all a happy New Year in 1961."

The December issue of the newsletter of United, Raleigh, expresses the appreciation of the church for the services of Rev. James W. Ray during the interim between pastors. Mr. Ray has a Christian Counseling Service in Raleigh. He specializes in pre-marriage, marital and youth problems, personnel difficulties and other types of personal problems.

Who? Me???

You are a walking advertisement of your Church, and of the faith it proclaims. You take the Church out of the four walls of its building, out of the realm of words, to make it live in the everyday affairs of life. In fact, for all practical purposes, you are the Church!! When people think of your Church, they think in terms of you — the Church whom they know.

There are some persons who have the idea that the Minister is the Church. The Minister does often speak for the Church; he declares what it stands for, invites and welcomes people into its fellowship. He is an important person, for his mission is to mediate God to his congregation. It is his job to know the Church's business, and to act in the Church's behalf. He is your representative, but he is not your substitute.

The preaching of the pulpit is fruitless unless it is ably exemplified in the acts of the parish. Preachers, teachers and others act officially for your Church, but it is you who make that work meaningful or meaningless.

Your Church is measured not so much by what its leaders say, as by what you do! It is easy to make speeches and claims, but claims must be validated by the product.

Your Church expresses a concern for people. You express that concern in the way you act toward people. Your Church advocates the building of a Christian world. You give sense to that advocacy by the way you live your religion in your job, your community, and all other social relations.

You are an important person! You are the personal representative of millions of people, past and present, who constitute the Christian Church. Your daily acts preach more sermons, teach more people, save more lives than words that are spoken by Pastor or Teachers within your church edifice. You are a cell of the Living Church; without you the church has no real life!

WHO? ME?? ? YES! YOU!!

NEWS FROM RETIRED MINISTER

In a personal letter to the editor, Rev. T. Fred Wright, Route 1, Zuni, Virginia writes:

"You asked what I have been doing since I retired September 1. First, I moved out of a Christian church parsonage to a house where I pay the rent. It is a five-room bungalow about a mile from Mt. Carmel church.

"We have visited three of our four living children — Milton lives in Orafino, Idaho. We have also visited with other relatives. I have preached seven or eight times. I have done a little fishing and some squirrel and deer hunting. I have rested a lot and am glad to say my blood pressure is now at a safe level."

Our Florida Conference sponsored a senior high Work Camp at Lake Byrd Lodge, the conference center at Avon Park, December 28-30. The theme was "We Build With Christ." At a cost of $10 and with a limit of 5 young people from each church, the group undertook interesting work projects which will add to the usefulness of the center. Another group meeting there during "vacation" was the "College and Young Adult Winter Camp."

Contented Christians

William T. Joyner

We are told that it is good for cows to be contented. In one sense it is also good for Christian people to be contented — in the sense that they have found an inner peace through knowing God. But many of us are contented in the wrong way. We are content in the same foolish way that a farmer would be content to see a crop go unharvested; or in the same way as the one who said, "I'm not afraid of work. I can lie right down beside it and go to sleep." Many of us are content to lie down beside a world in which millions perish physically and spiritually every day — a world crying for "Good News." This kind of contentment is unchristian and pathetic! It is our Christian responsibility to be dissatisfied with an unchristian society. Likewise, it is extremely important that we should not become self-satisfied. Contentment? Yes, contentment with God. But with our own progress and the condition of the world? Never!

Dedicated Laymen

W. H. Bradshaw

Yes, we have dedicated laymen, and what a God-given blessing they are to any church. They can be found in all churches, I am sure, both key men and key women.

My church, Rosemont in South Norfolk, Virginia, is now experiencing quite a lengthy period without a full-time minister, a condition beyond our control. We who are interested in our church enough to be concerned about its program know that a church gets in a bad way when there is no head.

We have no head, but I wish to emphasize the fact that we do have dedicated laymen; if that were not the case, our plight would be pitiful. We should be proud of the dedicated men and women who happen to be so numerous in our church. Different ministers of the area, even some outside the area, have graciously and religiously seen to it that our pulpit has been filled at all regular services. I am sure I speak for the entire church when I say we deeply appreciate the interest of these ministers, who often have gone "the second mile" to help us carry on in this crisis.

It is unfortunate that we are without a minister at this particular time — the expiration of the year when there is so much to be done, important decisions to be made that will affect our church during the new year. The nominating committee without the aid of a pastor is, I think, very much handicapped, but they have worked consistently and patiently in selecting dedicated men and women to fill the key positions in the church.

And I would mention the very able board of deacons. They have been effectively busy during this period, working under the leadership of a dedicated chairman who has worked closely with the chairman of the executive board. They have developed teamwork that is surely a credit to the two boards.

Now, to the executive board, a committee of three elected by the church to perform, in a way, the duties of a minister until we have a full-time pastor. They have been hard-pressed many times in trying to keep the church at large functioning properly. They have done and I am confident they will do a swell job from here on out, because again they are dedicated people to whom their church comes first.

On down the line as a whole we have a group of men and women who are a great asset to our church and I think deserve public mention. I am a great believer in giving flowers while we can smell their fragrance. It does something to anyone to get a pat on the back.

I am glad to say we are in good shape and I am sure the next minister will not have to begin from scratch. All he will have to do is fall in line and catch the cadence and march on with us, for we are not standing still. For this we owe a vote of thanks to our dedicated laymen and laywomen.

DECEMBER ACTIVITIES AT EUTAW

Sunday afternoon, December 11, Rev. and Mrs. Truett High held open house at the Fayetteville parsonage for all who wished to drop by for coffee and cookies. The living room and dining room were beautifully decorated with Christmas greens and decorations and a warm fire was very inviting. That evening a pot-luck supper was enjoyed by about 75 members and friends of the Eutaw Community Church. Informal singing of Christmas Carols before and after the supper was enjoyed by all.

Wednesday evening, December 14, from 7:30-9:00, Rev. and Mrs. Truett

High and family were honored at a reception given by Mrs. Esther Dept and Mrs. Elizabeth Stout at the home of Mrs. Dept. In a friendly atmosphere of candlelight, members and friends of the Eutaw Community Church dropped by for punch and cookies and an opportunity to say "Good-bye" to them. During the evening they were presented with an electric blanket to keep them warm in their new home at 8746 Arbor St., Duluth 8, Minnesota.

Many hearts were saddened by the departure of this fine family from our midst. May God's richest blessings be with them as they continue to serve and witness for Christ and His Church!

Sunday evening, December 18, the Sunday school and choirs of the church presented their Christmas program, The Hanging of the Greens. After the program, the Women's Fellowship served coffee, punch and cookies and the Men's Fellowship presented the little fellows with candy stockings.

Sunday School attendance pins were presented on December 18 by the superintendent, Louis Joyner, to the following persons:

Four-year pins — Linda Tyndall, Mrs. Elizabeth Stout, Danny Stout and Barbara Stout; Three-year pin — Randy Walker; Second-year pins — Louis Joyner, Phil Joyner, Gee Gee Joyner, George Stout, Coleen Dickerson, Mrs. Esther Dept. and Linda Dept; First-year pins — H. E. Simpson, Jimmie Simpson, Susan Simpson, Mrs. Hazel Smith, Roberta Smith, David Smith, Sharon Walker, Elizabeth White, Allen Broadwell.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

RICHMOND P. F. PLANS

Pilgrim Fellowship officers and counsellors met with the minister, Rev. J. Everette Neese, the last of November and planned programs through May, 1961. Topics include temperance, stewardship, missions, youth work, The United Church, Christian higher education, and the place for Christian youth in a changing world.

Speakers will include an exchange student and Dr. Dwight Chalmers, pastor emeritus. The pastor will review the young people's mission study book.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

According to the New Year's Day bulletin of Union Ridge, Burlington, the following was the statement of one North Carolinian:

I RESOLVE TO—

- Eat less; breathe more,
- Talk less; think more,
- Ride less; walk more,
- Worry less; work more,
- Waste less; give more,
- Gossip less; help more,
- Preach less; practice more.

"To be nominated to an office in the church is a high honor not to be taken lightly nor refused quickly," says the bulletin of Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, in connection with an announcement concerning the work of its nominating committee.

WHY CAMPUS MINISTERS ARE NEEDED

There are approximately 100,000 students of the Congregational Christian and the Evangelical and Reformed churches in college. Several thousand of these attend our church related colleges. The others (about 93%) attend other state and private schools.

DAY CAMPING WORKSHOP

A Workshop on Day Camping will be held at Camp Hanover, near Richmond, on February 1 to 3. This is one in a series of training experiences planned by the denominational representatives on the Committee on Camps and conferences of the Virginia Council of Churches. The Rev. Clifton W. Freeman, Director of Youth Work, Methodist Virginia Conference, is the chairman.

Day Camping is a new and growing phase of the Christian education program of the church. Christian education leaders on the state, district and local levels need to know more about the unique opportunities and values in this program. The workshop will provide opportunity for consideration of the basic philosophy underlying day camping and to study program, materials, methods, staff training and camp management for day camps with juniors, youth, adults and families.

The leaders will include Miss Elizabeth McCort of New York, Associate in the Department of Children's Work, National Council of Churches, and Miss Eunice Floyd, Director of Christian Education, West Market Street Methodist Church, Greensboro, North Carolina.

Registrations are limited and will be accepted in the order received. For registration blanks contact your area denominational office or the Virginia Council of Churches, 109 West Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia.

ATTENTION, YOUNG PEOPLE!

Packets for Youth Week (January 29 - February 5) may be secured from the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina, for $1.00, according to announcement from Miss Ruth Dunn. Order at once!

It is quite often the case that people keep their stumbling block under their hat.

I KEPT MY DATE

Last week I kept my dates at the place where I work and was not tardy or absent even one time. I kept my date with the lodge even though it rained cats and dogs! I kept my date for the supper engagement we had with friends on Thursday evening and was there long before some other guests arrived. I kept my date with the league Friday night at the bowling alley. I kept my date with the card club Saturday night.

But Sunday morning I was resting so comfortably when I felt the tug of our little boy and little girl and heard their voices saying, "Get up, Mommy and Daddy! It's almost time for Sunday school and church!" And when I looked outside I noticed it was raining. So, I went back to bed.

At breakfast time it was still raining, and my little boy said, "Daddy, it was raining when you went other places last week. Why can't we go to God's house when it rains?"

His little voice sent a pain through my heart, for I knew deep down in my heart that I had lied — lied to myself and my family, lied to my God and my church.

And all this week that little voice called "Conscience" has kept saying to me, "Yes, you kept all your dates last week. But your date with God you broke because it rained!" — The Christian MesSenger, Chicago Avenue Christian Church, Columbus, Ohio.

BE A MISSIONARY

Be a missionary — invite, go by and bring someone to church with you next Sunday. Then be sure you stay for church yourself.

WHEN THE MINISTER CALLS

In times past, the call of the minister at the home of one of his parishioners was an occasion for great excitement. The best parlor was opened up, the water put on to boil for tea, and the best of everything was displayed.

Things have changed somewhat in our modern day. The modern minister makes his visits brief; and unless there is some problem which requires his counsel, the visit often remains on a rather light note. In fact, he often calls at a time when the house is in the worst possible disorder, with the children seeming to act in like manner! Some persons seem chagrined about this and feel that the minister never finds them in any other condition.

Here are some suggestions which might be kept in mind to help make the call of the minister more profitable to the parishioner. It is well to think of the minister as a representative of the Church. He has not come on an inspection tour to see if everything is shipshape. His primary concern is the state of your soul and that of your family. If there is a problem, he would like to discuss it with you. These things he keeps locked in his own soul and will not share any of it with anyone without your permission. This is the Lord's business and this is the minister's primary concern.

Your minister also wishes to help you to keep your relationship with the Church strong. His visit may serve as a reminder to you that you have not been attending church lately or that your services are needed to carry on the work of God's kingdom here on earth.

It is well to remember that when your minister calls, his call has a religious purpose. Therefore, when he arrives, it is well to turn off the television and the radio, and if the children are in the house, call them together to meet him also — unless, of course, you have some personal problem about which you wish to talk to him. He would like to ask God's blessing upon your home before he leaves so an undisturbed moment is very helpful.

Please remember that the business of your minister is your welfare. If in the course of your daily lives his prayers and friendship can be of assistance, please let him know.

Our Little Acre

Our little acre,
In college town,
A pretty house
With pines to crown.

Majestic oaks,
The lawn to shade,
A pretty place,
Here home is made.

The Chinese fir,
The dogwood trees,
The deodars
To scent the breeze.

A sunny spot,
For roses fine,
Where little acre
Likes to shine.

O little acre,
A pretty place,
Quite big enough
To share His grace;

And think of others Everywhere,
And pray for them
God's love and care!

—John G. Truitt

What Members Expect of Their Pastor

(Prepared by a Layman)

1. We expect you to be a man of God, and in character and life to show that you are truly a representative of Christ by displaying a Christlike way and spirit.

2. We expect you to preach the Word of God so plainly that the Holy Spirit may be effective in us. We expect you to tell us the truth about ourselves without coddling or without regard to our feelings.

3. We want you to conduct yourself professionally in such a manner that a high standard of the holy ministry is maintained.

4. We expect you to help us get to heaven. God has appointed you to watch over our souls, and we want you to do that very thing. Should we be found in soul-endangering sin, we expect you to admonish us fraternally...

5. We expect you, whose life reflects faithfully your own concept of faithful stewardship, to take the lead in helping us to a rich fruit-bearing life in Christ.

6. We expect you to give us responsibilities to carry. We do not ask you to carry out each project in the Church but to delegate certain responsibilities to us that we may grow thereby.

7. We desire you to take leisure hours and thus lengthen your usefulness in the Kingdom of God. We do not expect you to attend every meeting and be present at every social event.

8. We desire that you devote time to the members of your family who deserve as normal a family life as possible.

9. We desire to give you a liveable income, so that you do not need to be concerned about living expenses, needed supplies, transportation and normal security demands.

10. We do not want you to become discouraged or faint in your ministry among us, but to realize that we are praying for you, upholding your ministry, and are interested in your spiritual as well as your physical welfare.

11. We want to be proud of you and to point to you as an example of devotion to Christ.

12. We desire you to remember that we are weak individuals with many imperfections, and we desire that you bear with our weaknesses.

13. We want you to pray for us and especially for our children.

14. We want you to rejoice with us in our good fortune, to weep with us in our sorrows.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL ELECTS WILLIAMS

The Rev. George A. Williams, Minister of Education at Hanover Avenue Christian Church, Richmond, has been elected Associate Executive Secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches and assumed his new duties January 1, 1961. He is a graduate of Lynchburg College and holds the M.R.E. degree from the Presbyterian School of Christian Education, Richmond.

As Associate Executive Secretary, Mr. Williams will assist in the growing cooperative program of the Council's sixteen member denominations through the departments of Christian Education, Christian Life and Work, Christian Missions and Services, Research and Church Planning, Evangelism, and Radio and Television. He will also be available for assistance to local programs of cooperative Christianity in cities and counties across the state.

“Can This Be The Christ?”

Background Scripture: John 4.

Devotional Reading: John 1:43-51.

Memory Selection: They said unto the woman “It is no longer because of your words that we believe, for we have heard for ourselves, and we know that this is indeed the Saviour of the world.” John 4:42.

There is enough teaching material in this lesson for a whole year of Sundays! That is literally true — a good teacher could find enough lesson material in it for lessons, and good lessons, for fifty-two Sundays. It's all the more pity, therefore, that it will be taught in many instances by teachers who are ill-prepared to members of classes who have not given the slightest preparation to the lesson! The best that these NOTES can do is to touch upon only a few of the central teachings of the lesson.

THE LESSON TELLS US SOMETHING ABOUT JESUS

It shows us the reality of his humanity. “Being tired from his journey, Jesus was sitting by the well.” (RSV). It is significant that John who stressed so strongly the DEITY of Jesus, also emphasized the HUMANITY of Jesus. He shows Jesus as a figure who becomes tired and weary and worn with the ordinary business of life, one who was tired, but who had to go on. So he knows how to sympathize with and help us when we share that experience with him.

It shows his warmth of sympathy. This woman was an outcast — she probably came to the well a great distance from the city at noonday because she could not draw water at the village well along with the other women. She was criticized, condemned, ostracized. She probably would have fled in embarrassment from the ordinary religious leaders of that day. But to Jesus it was the most natural thing in the world to speak to her, and to deal kindly with her.

It shows him as a breaker of barriers. The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans. They loathed them and hated them and ostracized them. And the feeling was reciprocal — it was tit for tat. But Jesus broke down this barrier and spoke with a Samaritan, treated her courteously, ministered to her spiritually. Furthermore he did something even more startling than to speak to her as a Samaritan; he spoke to her as a woman! A Rabbi did not speak to a woman in public, even to his own wife! But here was Jesus speaking, not only to a Samaritan, and a Samaritan woman, but a woman of shady reputation, and dissolute character! It was an amazing thing.

It was a courageous thing. How indefensible are our racial and religious prejudices when tested by the action and spirit of Jesus Christ.

It shows us something about Jesus' method of dealing with persons. He began in a simple, friendly way. He spoke in terms that she could understand. He began to talk about water; he compelled the woman to face and to discover the truth for herself; he appealed to the woman's deep-seated, but perhaps unrecognized, thirst for God; he brought her face to face with herself; he promised her satisfaction for her heart hunger; he awakened within her a desire for the better life; he led her from the trivial to the timeless water — water of life.

All of this is an amazing story. Here is the Son of God tired and weary and thirsty and hungry. Here is the holiest of men listening with understanding to a sordid and sorry story. Here was Jesus breaking through the barriers of nationality and orthodoxy. Here is the beginning of the universality of the gospel; here is God so loving the world, not in theory, but in action.

THE LESSON TELLS US SOMETHING ABOUT WORSHIP

As the conversation developed between Jesus and the woman, the question of worship emerged. The Jews insisted that God's people should worship at Mt. Zion in Jerusalem: the Samaritans insisted with equal vigor that they should worship at Mt. Gerizim. In reply to the woman's statement, Jesus gave a final and complete word concerning worship. In the first place he said that God was a spirit, or was spirit, and that statement throws a floodlight on the whole matter of worship. If God is spirit, God is not confined to things, and therefore idol worship is not only irrelevant and irreverent, it is an insult to the very nature of God. If God is spirit, he is not confined to places, and therefore to limit the worship of God to Jerusalem or to Gerizim or to any place is to set limits to that which by its very nature overpasses limits. If God is Spirit, a man's gifts must be gifts of the spirit. Animal sacrifices, man-made things become insufficient and inadequate. The real and acceptable gifts that befit the true nature of God are gifts of the spirit — loyalty, love, obedience, devotion.

THE LESSON TELLS US SOMETHING ABOUT HOW THE GOSPEL WORKS

When the woman increasingly discovered the meaning of Christ for her life she left her waterpot and went into the city to tell others. She felt the impulse to share the good news. Here was what we might call the introduction. She introduced them to Jesus. The word of God must be transmitted by man to man. God cannot transmit his message to those who have never heard it unless someone delivers it. Then there was intimacy and growing knowledge. These people wanted to know more about the matter. They invited Jesus to stay with them that they might learn more about him. We can bring others to Christ; they must go on to learn about Christ. And finally there was discovery and surrender. They went from hearsay to experience. They believed now not simply because of the words of the woman, but because they had listened to him and had come to know that he really was the Saviour of the world. We can help others to meet Christ, even to understand him better. But each man must come to know Christ personally. He must go beyond what others have told him about Christ to what he knows about Christ himself. And beyond that — from what he knows about Christ, to knowing Christ himself.

ENJOYS HELPING

Mamie Tussey

The women of Hayes Chapel went a little further than their own church this Christmas. We got as far as The Congregational Christian Home for Children and brought back little Bobbie Ingram to the community for the holidays. This occasion will live long in his memory and also in the memories of the families that shared the season's spirit with him. He will return to The Home with a fuller life after receiving gifts that made his heart happy.

This was Bobbie's second visit since the Fellowship sponsored him in October. He spent Thanksgiving and most of his Christmas visit with Mrs. Lib Goss, the president. Bobbie is thankful for what has been done for him.

December 29 there was a fellowship supper in honor of Willard Stone, a missionary from Hayes Chapel, who will be returning to Indonesia in January to stay five years. We pray God's blessings upon him. He covets the prayers of all readers of The Sun.

An unusual feature of the Christmas season at Apple's Chapel, Gibsonville, was the program given by the adult department of the Sunday school on Sunday evening, December 18. It was written by Mrs. Orelia Hogan, one of the adult teachers. The play showed in story, song and pantomime the beautiful part of Christmas depicted in the home with a good mother and loving children. It also showed the power of Christ to change those who love themselves and money too much. This information comes from Mrs. E. H. Thompson, reporter.

ROUNTREE

We, the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, offer this tribute of love and esteem to the memory of Mrs. Edith Hayes Rountree, who passed away November 17, 1960, after a short illness.

She was a devoted wife and mother, a faithful church member, and a willing worker of the Women's Fellowship.

We extend to the family our sincere sympathy in their time of sorrow and adjustment, and commend them to God the Father, knowing that they will find in him needed strength and comfort for all the coming days.

PIERCE

Clifton Linwood Pierce, Sr., a former member of the Board of Deacons of the Suffolk Christian Church, and with whom many of us were privileged to serve, passed away on Sunday, November 27, 1960, at eighty years of age.

Our brother was a true Christian gentleman, and as such we shall always remember him. Quiet, humble, and unpretentious in spirit, he was a constant and devoted servant of his church and gave himself unselfishly to the Cause of Christ wherever he found opportunity to meet a need.

In his relationships with others, whether in business, family, or civic affairs, he was a man of sincerity and exhibited a high degree of personal integrity in all his dealings.

We recall his determination to support the interests of his church by his presence far beyond the time when he was physically able to do so without personal discomfort and sacrifice, this being typical of the manner and spirit in which he lived.

In the bonds of a common sorrow at his passing, we join in this unanimous expression of our sincere sympathy to the members of his family, praying that they may have the assurance of God's blessing and the comforting ministries of His holy spirit in the hours of their bereavement.

McCLENNY

Jesse David McCleddy, senior member of the Board of Deacons of the Suffolk Christian Church, passed away on Monday, December 5, 1960. Ordained as a Deacon in October of 1928, he had served with untiring devotion for more than thirty-two years.

We pause, in our sorrow at his passing, to call to remembrance those attributes of character and personality which endeared him to all who were privileged to know him:

1. His abiding love for and loyalty to the Church of Jesus Christ.

2. His deep Christian faith and the integrity with which he applied its principles in all the affairs of life.

3. His constant devotion to home and family and the sincere concern which he displayed for the welfare of others.

4. His great personal courage and patience in the face of many years of pain and affliction.

All of these qualities were a shining example to us and will ever serve to keep his spirit alive in our minds and hearts.

We join in this unanimous expression of our deepest sympathy to the members of his family in this time of their bereavement, with the prayer that Almighty God will richly bless them by the comfort of His presence.

Applying Christian Principles

By Richard K. Morton

Daily application of Christian principles is a test of both the Church and its people. No matter what resources have been handed down, or how true all of it is, application is what is needed.

Nowhere is this truer than in the home. I think that much of the power of the Christian Church is dissipated in generalities or in fields where it is not needed.

For example, those who are involved in the heat and fret of the day in responsible work may be in desperate need of privacy and relaxation which restores their equilibrium nervously. Failure to recognize this results in much domestic conflict and in failure to respond to the message of the Church. There must be real understanding in fully grasping the power and riches of the Christian message and knowing what parts of it to apply and where and when.

Every week I am sure consecration is shown by pastors and church members who nevertheless do not win people—and largely because they have not understood the situation or what was needed at what time.

It would seem the part of wisdom for any church, in its worship and educational program, to be as careful in its techniques of application as in those of interpretation. Much counsel and effort is needed to draw up a program that is not only competent and modern, but which is actually relevant to existing needs.

To me it is astonishing to what extent programs have been drawn up and fitted to people, instead of first finding out what people really needed and what they would be most ready to respond to. Nowhere is this more evident in some parishes than in connection with domestic affairs. The church has largely failed, I fear, in changing daily habits of family members, especially with regard to social interests, reading and entertainment habits, and the like. But most of all families, having all sorts of psychological and spiritual testings, get practically no help from the ministries of the church. Some members, perhaps, are nearing nervous breakdowns, or, they are lonely, or pushed by their work, or striving to get to know a new neighborhood. While going through any kind of a mental testing, they need sympathy and understanding, even if the church cannot directly help.

Marriage counselling and help with family affairs comes all too often far too late. If Christian principles were working more actively and were more closely applied to daily affairs these problems would for the most part not occur.

I am aware that is a very old theme and concern — but the need is not being met. Christian principles, with their power and enlightenment and meaning, are not being connected up with daily human needs. We still persist in drawing up patterns for church school instruction, for church worship and for adult education, in particular, which are not enough the outgrowth of investigation as to what is most needed.

The empty pews, the languid attendance, the general listlessness about church programs, noted in so many places, is often largely a matter of poor planning and partial misunderstanding of what people want. Failure in this regard has driven away many in such groups as labor, youth, and the seriously troubled.

While we are considering our patterns of procedure for the days ahead, let us remember above all the need for competent understanding of what the Christian faith is supposed to do. It is not simply an instrumentation for maintaining worship services, educational programs, and building a great organization, with buildings and officers, and so on. It is a dispenser of power and healing and light, addressed to the human needs of each area and time. Only as it brings the meaning and power of the Christian truth to bear upon actual problems, is it going to perform adequately its divine mission.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Give a generous portion of your love and share it liberally with your neighbors. Add large portions of the following:
kindness, sincerity, forgiveness, respect, and generosity.
Deal with the whole with faith and confidence and store in a warm place, in your heart.

The resulting product will be a life of beauty, a life of service to God and fellowmen.

New Buildings At Home For Children

This is a reminder that new buildings are rising at our Congregational Christian Home for Children at Elon College. Churches are making needed payments for this through the "Christian Home Improvement Program," better known as CHIP.

Last fall a number of people from our churches gathered at the Home for the ground-breaking ceremony and the above picture was made at that time.

Ministers joining in the important occasion included, from left: the Rev. Robert Kimball, pastor of First Christian Church, Burlington; the Rev. Wm. E. Wisseman, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro; and the Rev. Richard M. Petersen, pastor of Shallow Ford Christian Church, Elon College.

Here And There Among The Churches

According to his custom, Dr. George D. Alley based his New Year's sermon at Suffolk on Isaiah 55.

Nine children were baptized at the Christmas worship service and four on New Year's Day at First, Norfolk, by the pastor, Rev. Olin B. Pendleton.

The Reverend Lillian Gregory, executive secretary of the National Women's Fellowship, is the new manager of the Chicago office of the Missions Council, located at 19 South LaSalle Street. Miss Gregory succeeds Rev. James Weary, who is being released to do additional field and promotional work for the Missions Council.

Dr. Ira Black of New York, secretary for new church development for our Board of Home Missions, preached at The Community Church, Garner, North Carolina, January 8. He conducted a visitation evangelism program for this new church the succeeding three days. January 16-20 there will be a leadership training school for church school officers and teachers.

Thanks went from Hunterdale, Franklin, church in their January 1 bulletin to Bill Ellis for card catalogue; Women's Fellowship for painting hall and class rooms; people who presented live manger scene; choir and Mrs. William R. Butler, Jr., for Christmas cantata; Faye Edwards and Jerline Cobb for work on 1960 bulletins; Mrs. Edward Sykes for work as church treasurer; Bill O'Brien and building fund committee for raising $33,000; and to Bill Ellis and the budget committee for raising budget for 1961.

Supt. Clyde Fields met with leaders of First, Norfolk, at an official board buffet supper meeting January 2.

During February morning worship services of our Suffolk church will be broadcast over Station WLPM.

A leather pulpit edition of the new Pilgrim Hymnal was presented to the Albemarle church as a Christmas gift from Jack McSwain.

The Laymen's Fellowship of our Albemarle church has purchased a bus to be used in attending rallies and other meetings. It will be available for use by any group of the church.

Dr. Fred Hoskins reports that as of the end of 1960, 787 local churches had voted on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. 747, or 94.8%, voted affirmatively. Statistics show that the greatest proportion of "no" votes has come from churches with less than 100 membership.

From The Messenger of First, Richmond, we learn that Rev. Carl K. Marks, minister at the New St. Andrews United Church in Richmond, resigned December 15. Next Sunday he begins his pastorate at Friedens Evangelical and Reformed Church, Buffalo, New York.

Mrs. Mary Kellogg McKnight, a missionary in Japan for 38 years, died December 29 in Hampton, Virginia, where she was visiting her daughter, Mrs. Bernard Coleman. Her husband, Rev. William Q. McKnight, died last August. The McKnights visited the Southern Convention on several occasions. They retired from active missionary service in 1958.

Officers for 1961 for the Sunday school and church at Albemarle were installed as a part of the morning worship service January 1.

Officers of the W. N. C. Ministeria Association for 1961 are: president Garland Bennett; vice president, Bob Hultman; secretary-treasurer, Dolan Talbert; reporter, Bill Joyner.

"Basic Christian Beliefs" is the subject being discussed at the mid week services at First, Burlington. Annual meeting will be held January 18 following a picnic supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Newma joined our First, Richmond, Virginia church December 11, making a total of 16 received into membership in 1960. Present membership is 206.

Rev. and Mrs. R. Eugene Tall held "open house" at the parsonage of Third Avenue, Danville, Virginia Sunday afternoon, December 4, in celebration of their 25th wedding anniversary. During the afternoon approximately 300 people called.

An ordination service for Winfrey Riley and Weldon Ward as deacons was held at Mt. Zion, Mebane, January 8. Communion was also observed. The January 1 bulletin reports an average attendance of 9 in Sunday school for the previous quarter.

Princess Catherine Caradja of Roumania was a visitor at First Congregational, Asheville, in December. The report is that she gave an impassioned speech of what it is like to live under Communist rule. She was the guest of Dr. and Mrs. William H. Morgan.

Eugene Burdick, co-author of The Ugly American, will be the lecturer January 23 for the Institute of Religion currently in session at our United, Raleigh, church. His Topic is "Americans Abroad: Three Portraits." The lecture is at 8:00 p.m., following a fellowship dinner and classes.

Rev. Telfer Mook, secretary for India and Ceylon for our American Board, is on a two-month trip to visit our mission stations in those areas. En route he will consult with English mission board executives concerning ways in which western mission boards might work together more closely in India.

Dr. Cyril Haas, who gave 42 years of dedicated medical missionary service in our Near East Mission (1910-51), passed away Sunday, January 8, at Pleasant Hill, Tennessee. Since their retirement, Dr. and Mrs. Haas have been living at Pleasant Hill where he served as a volunteer member of the staff of Uplands Hospital.

Ground-breaking ceremonies were held December 11 for the United Church of Mission Village, San Diego, California, where Rev. Melvin Dollar is the organizing pastor. He writes, "Having a congregation of people from all parts of the United States, Mexico, England, Canada, China and Japan makes the work very interesting."

1960 IN OUR ASHEVILLE CHURCH

The January issue of Congregational Newsletter, published by our Asheville church tells of several accomplishments during 1960 under the leadership of Rev. Frank E. Ratzell. Included are:

The highest membership on record — 194.

Renovation of the sanctuary, with an accompanying increase in attendance.

Automatic lighting to illuminate the facade of the church building.

New Pilgrim Hymnals secured, the gift of two anonymous donors.

Program of newspaper advertising, aimed at informing the community as to the nature and purpose of the denomination.

A budget of $20,200 for 1961 adopted December 18, a large portion of which has been underwritten by pledges.

Share In Dedication

These five ministers participated in the dedication service for the first parsonage at Mt. Zion United Church of Christ, Route 3, Mebane, North Carolina, December 11. Superintendent Clyde L. Fields brought greetings from the other 206 churches of the Convention and pronounced the benediction. The pastor, Rev. Glenn Garrett, led the service and read greetings from Rev. W. W. Snyder, former pastor. Rev. H. Winfred Bray brought greetings from the churches in the community. Rev. Reuben Askew gave the prayer of dedication. Rev. W. A. Rich, president, brought greetings from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

Others participating included Winfred Riley, chairman of the building committee, and Percy Terry, chairman of the trustees, who burned the mortgage, and Miss Judith Crutchfield who sang "Bless This House."

"Open house" was held at the parsonage immediately following the dedication service, which was held in the church. Myrtle Shepherd

Supt. Clyde L. Fields, Dr. R. A. King of Raleigh and Mrs. F. C. Lester of High Point shared in the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Franklin Center last week. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman taught in the school for women's leaders there January 9-13.

Burlington Area Laymen's Fellowship will have a dinner meeting at 6:30, January 26 at Bethel Church, according to announcement by Royal Councilman, president. Rev. Frank Snider of St. John's Evangelical and Reformed Church, Burlington, will be the guest speaker.

"SCHOOL OF MISSIONS" AT WAKE CHAPEL

Wake Chapel, Fuquay-Varina, North Carolina, is beginning the new year with its first "Family School of Missions." For three Sunday evenings classes are being held for all ages under the theme "Into All the World Together."

Mrs. Howard Cayton and Mrs. Earl Farrell will teach the beginners, "Jesus and Children Around the World."

Primaries will study "Into All the World with the Bible" under the leadership of Mrs. Fred Dickens and Miss Linda Keith.

"Old Trails and New" is the topic for juniors under the leadership of Mrs. Jesse Reaves and Mrs. Ben Stephenson.

The youth fellowship group will use "Remembrance and Renewal" led by Mrs. Tommy Jones and Mrs. Glendon Johnson.

Adults considered "Safe in Bondage" with a panel of eight members under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Earl T. Farrell; "One World, One Mission" led by Rex Powell, January 15; and will share in the presentation of the program "Remembrance and Renewal" given by the young people January 22 under the leadership of Dickie Powell.

The cradle roll chairman, Mrs. Johnny McKinney, is responsible for the nursery on these evenings.

The church library has available a display of 25 books on various phases of missions for use in connection with the school.

GIFTS AT FIRST, NORFOLK

The loose offering at the Christmas worship service at First, Norfolk, went to the Congregational Christian Service Committee designated for work with Arab refugees in Lebanon. This is under the direction of Mr. Daoud Yousef, who visited the church in October when he was in the Southern Convention as conference speaker.

Church school children brought gifts to the Christmas party for Jesus' birthday on December 24. These are also to go to Mr. Yousef.

Thanksgiving gifts sent by the children of this church school were distributed by Hoyt Webb, an officer on the USS Hermitage, to children in Belem (Bethlehem), Brazil, to say "Merry Christmas" from Christian children in the U.S.A.

America On The March

Senator John Kennedy declared again and again all over the United States that America must move forward; and the people elected him President.

When Terry Sanford began his administration as Governor of North Carolina January 5 he challenged his fellow-citizens to join North Carolina in a march forward. (See his inaugural address on pages eight and nine.)

Both state and national leaders are telling us in no uncertain terms that progress must be made in the political units of government, that America must move into a new day.

Education is emphasized as being of tremendous importance. His Excellency the Governor says: "Quality education put in its bleakest terms is survival. In its brightest terms it is life, and growth, and happiness." Those are brave words, and true. Without education of citizenship democracy will disappear in an area, in a nation, in the world. People should think of this before they close schools, or complain too much about the cost.

The Governor puts himself on record "that no group of our citizens can be denied the right to participate in the opportunities of first-class citizenship." It will be interesting, and valuable, to see this made effective in schooling, in voting, and in all public contacts. It will mean open school doors to Negroes and Indians on equal terms with others. It will mean that qualified voters can own property and sell their products as they like. It will mean that purchasers of gasoline at service stations can also use toilet facilities regardless of their race. It may mean that travelers will not be detained on the highway because one appears to be a bit whiter than another. It can mean good-will and friendship among all the people of the state. Wonderful! So mote it be!

The challenge to the people of North Carolina by the man they have elected to highest office is worthy of acceptance, and, if carried through, can really mean a new day in our beautiful state. The Governor promises not to forget big and little business, farmers, laborers, the mentally ill, juvenile delinquents, slaughter on the highways, and the cultural opportunities needed by our people. Good for you, Governor. Multitudes of the best people in the state will follow your leadership in such undertakings. We want the good things proposed, and are willing to work to get them. The quality of life in the sturdy stock of North Carolina is capable of marching forward, and will surely do so under daring leadership. Try us!

The Church On The March

Suppose the state and nation arise in their might and march forward under the leadership of their Governor and President as they are challenged to do. What will happen in the Church? Will it keep step with progress initiated by political leaders? This is our great "concern."

Right now Congregational Christian churches are voting on a Constitution that will unite them, if the vote is affirmative, with Evangelical and Reformed churches, if they approve. Will our churches meet this challenge that is so new in American Protestantism? Or will they fearfully refrain from voting a vote in the negative? Will our people look to the future of a united Church, or will they be content to look backward to the divisions known by our forefathers? In an atomic age division is dangerous, and in a Christian world it has no place.

Here in the Southern Convention are we ready to advance? In recent years we have enlarged our college facilities; and at present new buildings are being erected at our Home for Children. A meeting place for young people, Moonelon, has hardly hit its stride because of its newness. The Convention Office force has been increased in recent years and supplied with tools with which to work. A Church History Room is preserving a record of what we do. Some new churches have been erected, and parsonages are scattered all over the Convention for the first time in its history. Carpets, paint, furniture, and even air-conditioning have all gone into making our churches more beautiful and comfortable. Certainly such things can be counted as progress.

But in missionary endeavor are there signs of equivalent progress? How many of our young people have volunteered as career missionaries? A few, but not enough. Have the churches increased their gift to world missions enough to convince ourselves, or anyone else, that we really want to win "all nations to the Christ? Perhaps you had better answer the question by looking up the record of your local church. Is there any clarion call going to our people to "deny self" and follow the Master to where need are greatest? Unfortunately the answer to such questions is much too negative. We seem not to be aware of the struggle to the death that is in progress between Christianity and Communism around our world. The time may be exceedingly short in which we can do something to help.

If we are to win, we must do a better job here in America. Church membership is at the highest level ever. So is crime, and crime is increasing at a much faster rate. Christian principles are much too easily forgotten in the market-place, and in the home. Depth in religious convictions is not something recent to many people. Church life is all too often just social life on a rather high plane. Convictions concerning right and wrong need to be strengthened. We need to look again at the Man of Galilee who climbed Calvary carrying a cross. Christianity needs to regain its ruggedness. The safety of the nation and the world still lies in obedience to the Creator.

Is the Church, your church and mine, ready to really "take up a cross daily" and do the things that need to be done? Or are we going to take life easy while the world moves ahead and leaves us slumbering, dreaming, hesitant, faithless, without daring? A new day is dawning in our world. Awake. Be aware. Move forward. The Master leads the way.

Earl T. Farrell

A more extensive use of the seas in recent decades, and the commercial possibilities they hold, have resulted in a vastly increased interest in the portions of the earth covered by water.

The seas have always been vast mysterious areas in which are hidden thousands of forms of life. It is finding more of these and the development of more efficient and more productive methods of obtaining the metal treasures of ocean water that have given added interest to the hidden parts of the earth.

Out in the open seas it is only a guess to what extent and how much life is being produced. Hunters and researchers cannot, like those who hunt game on land, pursue their quarry. So only by experiments can it be determined what animal life and minerals are hidden in sea water.

The area of the earth covered by water is vastly greater than that covered by land, and the portion covered by water is far older than the land. It was in water that life first came into being, and although the great ocean areas have persisted since the world began, this is by no means true of the land, which time and again for millions of years has alternately been submerged and thrust up. Marble floors and halls, buildings made of stone, coal mines and chalk cliffs all bear witness to this.

Dead bodies known as fossils, and which are often found entombed in these ancient land masses, bear witness to the strange types of animals which have had their day and ceased to be. And these no less than the living creatures of the present which the exploration of the seas reveals, all bear the impress of the results of the struggle for existence which went on then as now.

To maintain a hold on life all living bodies must eat, but the food supply of a given population, whether it be man or animal, is nowhere inexhaustible. The number of mouths in the seas to be fed may in time affect the food supply of man.

Gold is generally regarded as a product of the earth, but the oceans are full of gold. Also numerous other minerals, such as tin, nickel, zinc, iron, lead, iodine, radium and potassium. These metals are being extracted from sea water to some extent, but large-scale production is possible, many scientists believe.

It is only a half truth to say that man has conquered both land and sea. In reality he has only discovered their whereabouts and gained some inkling of what they possess. The ocean is the greater mystery of the two, and perhaps is man's future challenge, not the moon.

"The Church Does Make A Difference"

Marjorie Niccum

Another of the significant experiences which I had this past summer on the C. S. A. World Tour brought home to me very sharply the above truth.

Upon our arrival in a certain country we were met by our guide (as we had been in each country) and taken to our hotel which according to our standards was definitely third rate. The personnel of the hotel were actually rude to us although we represented 32 customers and the people we met on the streets either ignored us or even seemed to resent our presence. They were eager however to sell us their wares. This all happened on Saturday.

On Sunday morning we went as invited guests to a United Church. There we were greeted cordially, worshipped with them in a dignified and inspirational service and enjoyed a coffee hour with the members afterwards. The friendliness and concern of these fellow Christians made our stay in their country a good experience, where otherwise it would have been a bad memory for us all.

I have always known that "The Church Makes a Difference" but now I know how much of a difference it makes. We were happy that in each country we visited we had the opportunity to meet with Christians as well as politicians and labor leaders. In this way we saw the country in several lights.

—Indiana Conference News

In almost every business establishment that you enter these days, you discover an inventory is being made. In public places there are posters reminding that it is time to list taxes. In one way or another, almost everyone is checking up on what he owns. One outcome is for the business man to learn just what he is making. To the taxpayer it is to determine how much he owes. This is all happening at the beginning of the new year.

For us in the church it is also the time when we think about what we have been doing. But more important is what we are now doing and what we plan to do in the months of the New Year that is yet to unfold upon us.

May I suggest a few thoughts for your consideration that will help us do a more acceptable job for Christ and His Church in 1961? "Every person in his place in his church" is a motto that should express our Christian concern and interest. There is some need in our church that only you can serve. Some work needs to be done that only you can do. As individuals do their work the whole church is made stronger.

It is good for us to seek what we can and should be doing apart from what any one else is doing or can do. We are not made to be judges of each other. There is more inspiration in a job done for the love of Christ than in criticism of what someone else is doing or is failing to do. Unkind words seldom do any good and are always harmful to the person speaking them. "Be kindly affectioned one to another."

I would hope for us in this new year to be especially concerned for the unchurched. With our membership well distributed over the community, we should be able to know who is not in church and the newcomers moving into the community. You can visit these people and give their names to the pastor.

We should all give deep consideration as to how we as a church can better serve the community. Wherever Jesus went he found people in need of something that he could give. The same is true for us if we really love people.

God bless us as we continue to worship and seek ways and means to serve him throughout the New Year.

Powells Are Welcomed At Palm Street

Mrs. James T. Winslow, Reporter

The first Sunday in January was an eventful occasion at Palm Street Church in Greensboro. Rev. Odell J. Powell began his pastorate and he and his lovely wife and daughter, Rose Mary, were able to move into our debt-free parsonage, 212 Cornwallis Drive.

The Chairman of Finance, Mr. Pearlie Hall, presented the chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mr. James Hicks, the mortgage paid in full, during our Sunday morning worship service, in which Rev. Powell brought a very inspiring message. A native of Rockingham County, he came to us from the Randleman Congregational Christian Church.

We at Palm Street are proud to have the Powells with us and welcome them into our midst. And we feel by working together, with God's help, much is in store at Palm Street.

A reception honoring the Powells was held at the parsonage on Sunday afternoon, January 7, 1961 from 3:00 to 5:00.

We would also like to take this opportunity to thank Dr. John Truitt and several laymen from our neighboring churches, who so willingly supplied our pulpit in the absence of a pastor. Mr. John Warner from the Reidsville Christian Church, Mr.

Rev. Odell Powell

Dalton Harper from the First Church in Greensboro, Mr. Lewis Wicker, a student at Greensboro College, Dr. Sloan who held our communion service, and several others who held one service. They each brought some wonderful messages.

A Watch Night service was enjoyed by 23 members of the Pilgrim Fellowship on New Year's Eve at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pearlie Hall, High Point Road. Larry Hall was in charge of the devotion. Mr. and Mrs. Mack Fulk are leaders of this group.

"Christ—And Your Witness"

Text: "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." John 9:25.

Rev. J. Everette Neese
First, Richmond

An ancient legend tells of a good man who went about his work diffusing virtue as a star diffuses light or a flower emits perfume, without being aware of it. The angels asked God to give this man the gift of miracles. God's answer was, "first ask him what he wishes." The angels spoke to the good man about it. Did he wish that the touch of his hand could heal the sick? "No," was the reply. "I would rather that God do that." "Did he wish for the power to convert souls?" "No," he said, "that is the work of the Holy Spirit."

"Well," said the angels, "what would you desire above everything else?" He answered, "that God may give me the grace of an effective witness."

What more could one wish in his Christian life? Could there be a greater satisfaction than to know that the faith to which you have given witness has given hope to some despairing and needy soul?

The statement in the text was given by a man who bore witness to a reality far beyond his most imaginative expectations. An eye-lid mud pack, by a peasant from Galilee, had given sight to a man who had been born blind. Although the religious authorities tried to discredit this miracle by saying that his benefactor was a sinner, the man who received his sight replied, "whether he be a sinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see."

In this one attestation the man who had been born blind gives accent to three things. First, the accent of experience. He was not relating an intellectual achievement; not voicing an opinion or "hear-say"; and not supporting a theory. He had experienced the sight-giving touch and because of this "he knew." Experience is the attestation to reality.

Secondly, he was attesting to the accent of authority. Of all the Pharisees and neighbors present he, only could speak with authority. Other might question and theorize, but the man who had been born blind could speak with certainty.

Finally, this man was attesting to the accent of finality. He knew Jesus had imparted to him the gift of sight. No one else was in better position than he to give the final word. Accordingly, the man to give finality to the argument of salvation is the sinner man himself.

When God gave his only begotten Son it was not to save the world from mere poverty or physical defects, but to save the world from the sin which blights human souls. When this transformation takes place, then man becomes the high purpose and supreme duty of every Christian to witness to what he has experienced in Jesus Christ.

There are many forms of Christian activity for which special talents are needed in order that one may give effective service, but personal witnessing to what Christ means in one's individual life is possible for every one. Certainly, he who loves the Lord with all his heart will greatly desire that others also know the joy of fellowship with him.

Present world conditions are far distant from "the new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Therefore, the challenge is urgent to all believers to take up the task of witnessing laid down by past believers, and by our unwavering devotion, continue the witness until the Kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Your task and mine is simply to be Christian witnesses in the full and varied and costly implications of the name,

Christmas In Africa, India, Japan

Do the African, Indian and Japanese Christians put more of a spirit in Christmas than Americans?

In those parts of rural Africa where there are Christians, festivities assume more of a community than a family spirit. Dr. John Reuling, West Newton, Massachusetts, secretary for Africa of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, overseas agency of the Congregational Christian churches, says that instead of each family celebrating by itself, they all come together as a community to worship in the local church. There is some carol singing and merrymaking, but the emphasis is more on the religious significance of the occasion than on gift-giving and partying. The ceremony attracts the whole village which gives the local minister or deacon the chance to tell everyone about the birth of Christ and the meaning of Christmas.

The use of the Christmas tree, says Dr. Reuling, was established in Africa by homesick missionaries. Any tree will do, because evergreens such as Americans have aren't very plentiful in most of Africa. Instead of putting gifts under the tree, they tie symbols of the gifts on the branches. A father, for example, represents a chicken and six beans in a paper bag presents a peck of beans.

In India, where the Christian population is a very tiny minority, the celebration of the birth of Christ is a very sacred occasion for Indian Christians, reports the Rev. Telfer Mook, Waban, Massachusetts, secretary for India for the American Board, who with his family, spent the last two Christmases in India. For a non-Christian population, he says, Christmas passes unnoticed. But where there is a Christian village, everyone takes part in a religious ceremony. He remembers vividly a candlelight ceremony in Ahmednagar called Light of the World. At the end of an impressive Christmas eve service, each person took a candle, and after lighting it from a huge central candle representing the light of Christ to the world, returned to his hut in the village. The flickering light from a hundred candles spread to every dark alley and crevice.

At another Christmas in Vadalar, Mook says he was awakened at 3 a.m. by carolers who had been out all night singing to the village. Public singing is common with Christians in India, he says.

Preparations for Christmas in Japan begin as early as September when the big department stores start erecting their massive displays. This is a secular celebration, according to the Rev. Paul Gregory, Auburndale, secretary for the Far East of the American Board, because the majority of Japanese are non-Christian. It is an opportunity for everyone to have a good time and for the stores to sell more merchandise. They play American Christmas carols over loud speakers enjoying the music but not understanding the meaning of the words.

For the Japanese Christian, December 25 is a holy day, and one in which there is little merrymaking as Americans know it. It is one of two major occasions during the year when adults are baptized, he says. There are some of the traditional Yuletide trappings, such as Christmas trees in the churches, but most Japanese Christians reserve their big annual celebrating for New Years.

The Madura Mission

January

Kodaikanal is a health resort in the hills where there is a school for missionaries' children.

22—Dr. and Mrs. Horace Thomas went to India from Australia in 1929. He is now staff physician for the Kodaikanal School for Missionary Children. He is also head of the Van Allen Hospital. Until a serious automobile accident in 1959, Mrs. Thomas gave much time to a mobile medical unit.

Madurai is the ancient capital of South India, a stronghold of Hinduism. A number of missionary institutions are located here, in what is one of the three hottest places in the world!

23—Rev. and Mrs. Paul Dettman went to India in 1952. He is bursar and professor of English at American College. He received Douglas Horton Scholarship for study at Harvard during his furlough 1957-58.

24—Miss Dorothy Hoath is an Australian nurse who is in charge of the Nursing School at Christian Mission Hospital. Here nurses get four-year course following high school and are ready to serve in India, where there are seven times as many doctors as nurses.

25—Rev. and Mrs. William Kelly have been in India two years — the first spent in language study. Now he is chaplain of American College, guiding 1,000 undergraduate men in religious life. He has studied at Yale College, Boston U. School of Theology, Harvard Law School and New College, Edinburgh.

26—Miss Ellen Lang is an Australian nurse who is assistant director of Nursing School of Christian Mission Hospital, where 60 girls are in training.

27—Miss Oline Nicholson is a vocational teacher at Lucy Perry Noble Institute, a practical arts school for girls. From 1929-38 she was supervisor of the Criminal Tribes Settlement. She now salvages girls from ignorance and poverty and teaches them how to help themselves. She has visited in the Southern Convention.

Nagpur is a leading commercial and industrial center with population of nearly a million.

28—Dr. and Mrs. Edward Wilder have been in India since 1922. He is now Secretary of the Christian Medical Association of India and Medical Secretary of the National Christian Council. He visits the 250 mission hospitals of many denominations, counseling with them. She has advocated using Roman letters instead of complicated Tamil alphabet in order to increase literacy, and has recently published a New Testament and Psalms using this.

The New Governor of North Carolina Promises Progress

Inaugural Address of Governor Terry Sanford

There is a New Day in North Carolina!

I am here not to proclaim it, but rather to acknowledge its arrival.

It is here because our people are seeing, with new vision, the richness and vastness of the resources of North Carolina. It is here because they have seized upon the ideas which will turn these resources into limitless achievement.

There is an eagerness, an alertness, a confidence, a will to move ahead, that has now caught up our people and fired them with the reality of a New Day.

Past Achievements

It is here because of the past achievements of the people who have dreamed and worked and sacrificed for North Carolina throughout this century.

It is here because Charles Brantley Aycock had a great heart and dauntless vision, and because he made North Carolina believe in universal education in an uncertain, uneasy and difficult day.

The New Day is at hand because Glenn, Kitchen, Craig and Bickett were willing to step out in bold leadership when the day was still dark.

The arrival of the New Day acknowledges the imagination of Morrison in anticipating the transportation requirement of a growing state in a growing region.

It acknowledges the fiscal soundness and responsibility contributed by McLean and Gardner, and the advance of higher education under Morrison, McLean and Gardner, culminating in the consolidation of the Greater University

It acknowledges the courage of Ehringhaus who led the way to unpopular decisions in order that our public schools could be financed during the depression.

It acknowledges the stability and public conscience of the Hoey and Broughton administrations, the medical care and the human concern of a great and good state.

It acknowledges the sturdy courage of Cherry and Umstead, the still-broadening public conscience in the goal of total care for the mentally ill and retarded.

It acknowledges the tough-minded, warm-hearted, unbeatable drive of the great agrarian, Kerr Scott, bodily lifting up the rural segment of our economy, putting a new pulse-beat into the progressive heart of North Carolina.

Calm Skill

It acknowledges the life of Luther Hodges, whose energy paved the road of industrial development, and whose calm skill steered us through the threatened storms of racial strife to the shores of wisdom.

It acknowledges these and many other things, and it acknowledges in the names of these governors the tens of thousands of loyal and selfless members of the General Assembly, the teachers, the state employees, the institutions, the agencies and the countless citizens who have shared each other's love of North Carolina.

It acknowledges the spirit of North Carolina — that we are doing well but we must do better — that we can do whatever we set out to do.

For many years our progress was impeded by the shackles of inadequate capital, the limitations of an economy in which agriculture was not sufficiently matched with high wage industry, and the overwhelming obstacles of inadequate transportation facilities. That was yesterday.

Shackles Gone

Gone are the shackles.

Gone are the limitations.

Gone are the overwhelming obstacles.

North Carolina is on the move and we intend to stay on the move.

We are on the move because the leaders have drawn their strength from the people in a state which requires her leaders to stay close to her people.

We are on the move because we have put our fundamental faith in universal education.

We are on the move because we are making the most of the natural resources God has given us, and because we are driving hard to lift our agricultural and industrial income.

We are going to continue to put our faith in these fundamentals: Universal education, supporting, and supported by, a stronger economy.

Rely On Faith

I am not going to rely on dire statistics to prove my determination to lift the quality of education and to broaden the opportunities of earning a better living. Instead, I am going to rely on faith. We have come a long way from a beginning which rose out of the ashes of disaster and despair.

We all are proud of our universal education. But now, in the closing decades of the Twentieth Century, we must do more than merely make education universal. We must give our children the quality of education which they need to keep up this rapidly advancing, scientific, complex world. They must be prepared to compete with the best in the nation and I dedicate my public life to the proposition that their education must be of a quality which is second to none. A second-rate education for our children can only mean a second-rate future for North Carolina.

Quality Education

Quality education is the foundation of economic development, of democracy, of the needs and hopes of the nation. Quality education put in its bleakest terms is survival. In its brightest terms it is life, and growth, and happiness.

I have already detailed my program for quality education in North Carolina. It is a model program which represents the best thinking in the education field. Already it has received national attention and comment. We are confident that this is the program that the children of North Carolina need.

If it takes more taxes to give our children this quality education, we must face that fact and provide the money. We must never lose sight of the fact that our children are our best investment. This is no age for the faint of heart.

Believes In People

I believe that the people of this state will rise in boldness and will go forward in determination that we have chosen wisely when we base our future hopes on quality education. I need your help, your understanding, your firmness of purpose, and your hard work if we are to achieve this goal.

While quality education is the rock upon which I build the house of my administration, we are not going to fall into the error of thinking that this, or any other single emphasis, will alone build a better North Carolina.

Education supports the economy but education must be supported by the economy. As we work for quality in education we must at the same time work just as boldly for broader opportunities to lift the income of our people.

Expanding Economy

Our goal is not only full development of the talents of our children, but also the creation of an expanding economy which will give everyone a better chance to make a better living.

I see for us three points of greatest economic emphasis: Lifting farm income, expanding industry and developing new industry, and properly using, conserving, developing of our water resources, which we have been given in such abundance, and which in turn will contribute to the industrial and agricultural pursuits.

I promise these next four years will demonstrate that I believe in the future of farming and that I have carried on with the Kerr Scott fervor.

I promise these next four years will demonstrate that I believe in the potential of industrial development and that I have carried on with the Luther Hodges energy.

Carry On

And with this fervor and energy I pray that I will always carry on with the faith of Aycock and Gardner and all the other governors of North Carolina whose leadership and love have brought North Carolina to its New Day.

As we work here to build a better state, we will also do our part to build a better nation.

Today we stand at the head of the South, but that is not enough, I want North Carolina to move into the mainstream of America and to strive to become the leading state of the nation. We can do it.

As the dynamic leadership of President John F. Kennedy moves us into the New Frontiers of a changing world, we will accept for North Carolina our responsibilities as citizens of the most powerful nation in the world, the last, best hope of the free world. We pledge to march with President Kennedy.

Future Will Tell

When the story is written it will be said that North Carolina did its part, that North Carolina contributed to the peoples of the world in the unending struggle for world peace and world understanding.

We can do this by appreciating that we are a leading part of the leading free nation of the free world, and that everything we do reflects good or bad upon that leadership. We can do this by appreciating that if America is to be strong for its job of leadership, then it is up to us to make North Carolina strong for its important part of that leadership. Quality education and a stronger economy thereby take on added significance of a most sobering nature.

In our segment of the free world, North Carolina will conquer, settle, and civilize the New Frontiers.

Won't Forget

While we are observing the big responsibilities, we will not forget the total responsibilities. If we achieve prosperity, prosperity will not harden our hearts.

We are not going to forget the progress we have made in the treatment and care of the mentally ill and the mentally deficient. We will improve our program and facilities which already stand with the most enlightened and advanced in America.

We are not going to forget the ill, the old, the dependent, the helpless, the handicapped.

We are not going to forget the modernization of our programs for penal institutions and juvenile correctional institutions.

We are going to find more effective ways to reduce the slaughter on our highways.

We are not going to forget the working man, the laborer, the small businessman, who often find the cards being stacked against them.

We are not going to forget the importance of our libraries, our symphony, our dramas, our art museums.

State Spirit

We are not going to forget, as we move into the challenging and demanding years ahead, that no group of our citizens can be denied the right to participate in the opportunities of first-class citizenship. Let us extend North Carolina's well-known spirit of moderation and good will, of mutual respect and understanding, in order that our energies and our resources, our abilities and our wills, may be directed toward building a better and more fruitful life for all the people of our state.

I stand firmly in the footprints of Aycock when he chose this creed for North Carolina:

"I would have the strong to bear the burdens of the weak and to lift them up and make them strong, teaching men everything that real strength consists not in serving ourselves. But in doing for others."

Common Good

All these things can be done, but they cannot be done in bitterness or factional strife. We need the help of all people of good will. I promise not to look back to past partisan differences, but to keep my eyes forward on the hopes and goals of North Carolina. If we work together for the common good, then all things are possible.

The General Assembly, the Council of State, the school people, the administrative officers, the state employers across the state can help move North Carolina forward, but they are powerless without the support and good will of the entire citizenry.

I call on all of us to put aside partisan differences, to turn our backs on those things which divide us and join hands on those things which can help us grow great. I promise to do this.

On The March

North Carolina is on the march. We are going forward. We will continue to march forward.

I pledge to North Carolina my devotion, my time and my energies, the full measure of all that there is within me to move in the faith of our fathers for a future bright with promise.

I call on all citizens to join with me in the audacious adventure of making North Carolina all it can and ought to be.

Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and I founded great empires; but upon what did these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love and to this day millions would die for Him. I think I understand something of human nature; and I tell you all these were men, and I am a man. No other is like Him; Jesus Christ was more than a man.

CREATIVE EXPRESSION — ART

Rosemary Hoffman,
Fellowship Co-Chairman

The world of art is a wonderful and often undiscovered world to many young people. Let's explore a little and see what we can find. First of all we might chance upon Young Pillars, a hilarious book of cartoons about church youth groups done by Charles Shultz, the creator of "Peanuts." Maybe a few of the more artistic members of the group would like to try their hands at drawing some cartoons of this sort. Even for those of us who are not artistic, soap carving can be loads of fun. Try it some evening; see who can be the most imaginative sculptor.

Fortunately, when we hang pictures, they don't meet the same fate that a person would in the same situation; however, for as much as we notice or understand about most of the pictures we see, they might just as well have fallen off the wall long ago. Have a resource person meet with your PF some evening to help enlarge your understanding of some of the great art of the world. Take a field trip to see some original paintings if there is a museum nearby.

Architecture is an important art form and changes just as paintings do. Study the various forms of church architecture and the history behind them. Then plan to visit some of the churches in your community to see these as they are being used. At the same time, you might learn a little of the background of stained glass windows and observe them everytime you come in contact with them.

Because we do not understand some of the extreme forms of modern art, we often tend to ignore it altogether. This is certainly unnecessary. A superb filmstrip, "This Sustaining Bread," is available from the Southern Convention offices. This filmstrip uses modern art in a very effective manner to interpret the meaning of our communion as Christians with God and man. It is extremely effective in a worship service.

Understanding and appreciation of art is not restricted to the artist and genius. Learn a little bit about it. Enjoy it.

Creative Expression — Music

Music is very important in the lives of many people. It can also be an important part in the life of your P.F.

Recreational singing can be enjoyable as well as educational. Singing and understanding folk music of our own country as well as that of other lands is a good way to begin to understand people and their cultures. The "Songs of Many Nations" songbooks have been prepared especially for use in our youth groups. They are filled with folk songs, spirituals, and hymns from all over the world. You can order copies from the Southern Convention Offices (Box 336, Elon College, North Carolina). Recordings may also be borrowed from the Southern Convention Offices. Sing a lot and enjoy it. The more you sing, the more you like to sing.

We almost always use music in worship but do not usually know enough about the background of the music to really understand and appreciate it. Organize a study group of several interested persons and learn more about some of the great hymns of the church. Have this group report back to the P.F. group. A worship service based on the church's hymnal heritage would be most appropriate.

Use music whenever you can. Use it for both fun and inspiration. It has great potential and can open many new worlds of enjoyment, emotion, and understanding.

Young people at First, Norfolk, sponsored a New Year's Eve watch night party, which began at 7:30 p.m. Each family brought sandwiches or dessert.

David Andes, president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, led the Pilgrim Fellowship service at Apple's Chapel January 8. Hines Chapel and Monticello P.F. members were guests.

Young people at Hunterdale, Franklin, Virginia, conducted the New Year's Communion service at 7:30 p.m. January 1. Participating were Earl Blankenship, Betty Bradshaw, Hoyle Green, Gale Burgess, Chester Burgess, Shirley Scott, Bobby Burgess, Chuck Hollowell and James Green. The junior board of ushers performed that service. Rev. Harold W. Tribble, Jr., the pastor, administered the communion.

CHURCH VOCATIONS RETREAT

Rev. John R. Lackey announces that the annual Church Vocations Retreat will be held from 6:00 p.m. Friday, April 14 to noon, April 16 at Moonelon Conference Center. This year invitations are going to the Southern Synod and Convention of the South.

High school juniors and seniors who think they might be interested in a church vocation are invited to attend. Cost? Nothing. This is one way our Church attempts to interest young people in church-related vocations.

The purpose is to explore the field of church vocations, to find out about qualifications, to provide an opportunity for a serious concentrated period of thinking about the will of God for one's life.

The Thrill Of Teaching In Turkey

Americans themselves are responsible for the distorted views of the American way of life held by many people overseas, a young Congregational Christian educator in the Near East writes.

"One of our biggest jobs," says Miss Winifred Hertzog, "is contradicting American movies, love magazines and servicemen with our own standards and memories."

A native of Twin Falls, Idaho, who grew up in the state of Washington, Miss Hertzog is teaching at the American Academy for Girls at Uskudar, Istanbul, Turkey, for a term of three years.

The Turkish people, says Miss Hertzog, have a fierce pride in their own country: nationalism is one of their most conspicuous characteristics. The students' singing of the national anthem, she says, "brings tears to my eyes, and their renewed veneration of Ataturk since last spring makes this year an exciting time to be here."

The American Academy for Girls, which has an enrollment of about 550 students — "almost all Trukish and Muslim girls" — receives more than 500 applications, can accept

"only 50 or 60." This screening process gives the school a select group of students.

"The girls are thinking easily in English," Miss Hertzog says of her pupils, "and the idea content of their papers is superior. I have a hard time devising a Literature test that they won't all get perfect grades on."

She teaches speech to grades six to eight and English and literature to grades nine to eleven. She also supervises study hall and library several times a week and directs plays. She spends much time with the girls and is discovering that "these girls have the same problems as high school girls in any country."

Miss Hertzog says that as she teaches her Literature classes she has never been "so conscious of the Christian influence in all of English writing" but is "constantly amazed at these girls' open-mindedness toward these same influences. What have become cliches to us are fresh and challenging ideas to them... As my students succeed in reading Chaucer's antique English and love it, and as they quote Macbeth in every casual conversation, I can't help loving our literature, and teaching, more."

Layman Leads National Council

Inducted as the fifth president of the National Council of Churches on December 9, Mr. J. Irwin Miller became the first layman to hold this high post. Business executive, manufacturer and a member of the boards of banks, Purity Stores and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the new president is a dedicated churchman first. Long active in the National Council, he served for the past three years as vice-chairman of its Division of Christian Life and Work and has represented his Church, the Disciples of Christ, on the Council's General Board since 1952.

Mr. Miller is a Hoosier, hailing from Columbus, Indiana, where he and his wife, the former Xenia Ruth Simons, and their five children make their home. Columbus is also the home of the Cummins Engine Company, top producer of diesel engines, of which Mr. Miller is board chairman. An alumnus of Yale University, he also has a master's degree from Oxford University.

Whether it is modern architecture (he heads his home church's architectural committee for which Eero Saarinen made the plans for the new sanctuary) or teaching church school (he can read the New Testament in the original Greek) or playing the violin (he owns a rare Stradivarius) or sailing with his family in his 17-foot sloop, Mr. Miller's many interests always come back to the church. Of him, his pastor says, "He is the most biblically literate layman I know."

Mr. Miller is a member of the Board of Sponsors of Religion in American Life, Inc., a trustee of the Taft School, which he attended, and chairman of the trustees of Christian Theological Seminary in Indianapolis.

"I believe there is no area of life," he told the press in San Francisco, "which should not be governed by Christian principles."

If You Believe In God

By Rev. Henry E. Robinson

If you believe in God why worry? Most people worry far more than necessary. Worry is not a necessity; it is a habit. Yes, there are many things to worry about. There always will be. If you permit yourself to worry there is no end to it. If you find the solution to a difficulty which has caused worry, you cease to worry about that only to begin all over worrying about something else. Many who seem to worry the most are good people. They fulfil all their religious duties. They believe in God. Still they drain off their energy and even harm their health through worry. Why? God is a loving Father who knows your needs, who makes provision for your bodies, who loves you as his child. It must displease God to know that you have so little faith in his wisdom, power, and goodness.

If you believe in God why doubt? Doubt is another word for uncertainty. None of us likes the unknown, and many shy away from the intangible. But here again you cannot know all that the day may bring forth. Neither can you comprehend all the mysteries of God. Just because you are created with certain limitations, is no reason to become bound with doubt, fear, and a sense of insecurity. In place of these you need to put God. If you believe in God you have in him the perfect answer to the frailities of life and the unknowns of the future. In him is strength for the day and confidence for the days ahead. If you believe in God why give room in your mind to doubts which sap life and destroy hope?

If you believe in God why hoard? The basic reasons for hoarding are worry and doubt. You worry about having enough in old age and doubt the validity of spiritual values. Consequently many good people hoard their possessions far beyond the point of need — even to the point of centering their faith in things. When this happens, what becomes of belief in God? It is only a hollow phrase without application to daily conduct especially at the point of worldly wealth.

If you believe in God, worry, doubt and hoarding will have to go, for true faith in God inspires peace, confidence, and joyous sharing. These feed the soul on the bread of life.

Some Practical Suggestions

James W. Lenhart

President, Board of Home Missions

The proposal of Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake to unite the United Church of Christ, of which the Congregational Christian Churches are now a part, with the Methodist, Protestant Episcopal and United Presbyterian Churches should be welcomed by all Protestants as a reminder of the need for Christians to join together in the service of the Gospel of Christ and in opposition to destructive movements such as Communism, which is a perversion of Religion.

However, if the proposal of Dr. Blake and his collaborator, Bishop James A. Pike, is to be taken seriously, we need some indication that the communions they represent are prepared to enter into a united ministry. There are certain things the four denominations named by Dr. Blake could do immediately to show their sincere desire for ultimate union: They could unite their church extension programs, looking at the nation and each community as a unit and never in the future establishing churches in competition with each other. They could immediately coordinate and eventually unite their foreign missions programs. It is generally agreed among Christians that there is not room for sectarianism in countries where Christianity must face non-Christian cultures. They could quickly unite their work in television and radio under one head and in so doing strengthen the hand of the National Council of Churches to represent all Protestantism in mass communications. All of these actions could be taken without protracted negotiation and would be an earnest that valid church union and not publicity was being sought in this proposal.

If there is to be a serious attempt at union of Protestant denominations along the lines suggested by Dr. Blake, I believe it is incumbent upon those of us who are in the Congregational tradition to consider two important things:

1. That the witness of the local church in American Protestantism has been the backbone of our Protestant life and has had an enormous influence on the political and social structure of the country. I mean not only Congregational Christian witness but that of the churches of other denominations, including the Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian, all of which have a degree of local autonomy and govern their local affairs democratically. We do not want to form a great central Protestant Church at the expense of stilling the voices of the local churches.

2. The Constitution of the United Church of Christ carefully preserves the centrality of the local church and its freedom to speak and act. It seems to me that if we are to enter into serious planning for a united Protestant denomination, this constitution should be the basis upon which negotiations between the interested communions should be conducted. This constitution allows for the development of a national organization which is not authoritarian or hierarchical but may be representative of the wishes of the membership. It permits the widest possible scope in action and witness. The constitution is broad enough to preserve the cherished forms of non-congregational churches without invading the rights and privileges of any church members. Above all, it guarantees to the local church the necessary freedom to be the Church in fact as well as in name.

A Little Church Can Grow

Karlton C. Johnson,
Minister of Stewardship,
New York Conference

I was asked to give you some particulars about one of our New York churches that has made an outstanding record of achievement in support of Our Christian World Mission.

There are several that have made substantial advances in the past few years, but I think that perhaps the most significant progress has been made by the church in Portland. Here are the particulars from the past six years:

1. Membership increased from 122 to 129 — which indicates that approximately the same people were involved.

THE LAYMEN AND THE CHURCH

Laymen, as a rule, do not realize the importance of church attendance. If they did they would not so often allow a cloud, or a shower, or a wind, or a snow, or a caller, or a newspaper, or a headache, or a fit of laziness to keep them home. A minister deserted by his representative men, dies. He dies by inches. No man can preach with sustained fire and hope whose leading people show by their desultory attendance that public worship is to them one of the incidentals or electives of life.

—Charles E. Jefferson

2. Total giving increased by 16% — from $3,755 to $9,946.

3. In 1959 the total giving per member was $77.10.

4. Giving for Our Christian World Mission increased from $278 to $2,061.

5. In 1959 the giving to Our Christian World Mission per member was $15.98.

6. The ratio of giving to Our Christian World Mission per dollar for local expense increased from 8.5 cents to 29.6 cents.

It seems to me that this reflects a mighty fine development that is well-rounded, since it included the local "mission" as well as the world mission. It is of special interest because it is one of the smaller churches in the Conference and thus demonstrates the premise we so often iterate, sound stewardship education and practice works in churches of any size, whether large or small.

During the past six years they have added a new electronic organ to the sanctuary and laid new tile flooring in the parish rooms. Plans are in progress to add a modest extension to the rear of the building to accommodate a growing Sunday School.

Portland Congregational Church is one that I am proud to bring to your notice as one of our husky smaller churches that has discovered itself and its mission effectively. The present pastor is William W. Blume, a student for the ministry.

Jesus' Authority Challenged

Background Scripture: John 5.

Devotional Reading: John 8:25-32.

Memory Selection: Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and he shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death into life. John 5:24.

While Jesus was in Jerusalem for one of the great Jewish Feasts — it should be noted that Jesus was faithful in attendance at the religious services of his people — he went to church, as was his custom. There he saw a hopeless cripple lying at the edge of a large pool called Bethesda. Fed by an underground spring, the surface of the pool was "troubled" from time to time, and there was a superstition that the first person who stepped into the pool at that time would be healed. Noticing this poor fellow, Jesus abruptly asked "Do you want to be made well?" It looked like a foolish question, but it was not — it pin-pointed the situation. Did the man really want to be made well? There are many invalids who do not want to be made well. As invalids they have somebody to wait on them, to make their decisions, to make them the center of their interests, to do all the worrying for them.

But invalids are not the only people who need to be asked this question. We all need to ask it of ourselves. Do we really want to be changed? Do we want really to be made whole? Do we desire it enough to do something about it? Alcoholics Anonymous members will go anywhere and do anything to help a drunkard or alcoholic to become a teetotaler, but only on one condition — the person must want to be helped. Do you want to stop drinking, to stop smoking, to stop swearing, to stop gossiping, to be a good man? That is, do you really want to be made whole? Or do you just kind of wish or hope that something will happen to make you whole? One thing is sure, a desire for better things must surge up within our hearts, and we must bend our wills to it. No man can sit back and relax and expect a miracle to happen. There must be intensity of desire and determination of purpose and effort if anything worthwhile is to happen. But miracles can happen when our will and God's power cooperate to make it possible. And this applies to social conditions as well as to personal life. How much do we want a better world? What price are we willing to pay for a brave, new world? Do we merely wish such a world or do we will such a world?

A Man Is Healed

A miracle was wrought. A hopeless cripple for thirty-eight years was healed. He picked up his "pallet" and started home, perhaps to share the unbelievably good news with his family. He must have been walking on air. But the Jews soon brought him back to earth. "What do you mean by breaking the Sabbath Day?" they asked. In a way he was guilty. For the Jews had taken the principle of "keeping the Sabbath day holy" and spelled it out into hundreds of petty rules and regulations. To carry a needle in one's robe on the Sabbath, to wear an artificial limb or false teeth, or as this man was doing, to carry a burden, even if it was one's bed, on the Sabbath was to sin by breaking the Commandment! The poor fellow, who did not even know at the time who Jesus was, replied that the man who had healed him had told him to take up his bed and walk. He was setting a good example for us, for he was taking his orders from Christ and not from men. Later Jesus found him in the Temple — the first place he went after he was healed was to the place of worship, and there again he set us an example. Those whom Christ has helped and healed ought to worship him. Jesus told him to go and sin no more lest a worse thing should happen to him. There are those who think that

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Christian Church,
Driver, Virginia

because they have been forgiven they can go on sinning and getting forgiveness. To say the least this is a poor way of showing gratitude to God for his mercies and grace. A person who takes that attitude may well consider whether he has ever repented in such sincere manner as to receive divine forgiveness.

Jesus' defense of his action and of the man's action was shattering. As God's Son he was Lord even of the Sabbath Day. This claim added fuel to the fire. The idea of making himself superior to the Law, and equal with God! That was blasphemy indeed. But the claim of Jesus was based on (a) identity with God; (b) obedience to God; and (c) obedience based on love and not compulsion. And although Jesus did not go into detail in this instance in regard to Sabbath observance, he did suggest that there were three simple rules for a Christian use of the Sabbath: (1) Make it a day of rest; (2) Make it a day of worship; (3) Make it a day of kind deeds and happy fellowship.

A Claim Is Heralded

The remaining verses of the fifth chapter of John's Gospel which comprises today's lesson record several claims which Jesus made for himself. They are tremendous claims. He claims to be the Messiah, the Son of Man and the Son of God, he claims the power to raise the dead and to be their judge when they are raised. He claims to be the giver of life here and hereafter, and also the bringer of judgment as mentioned above. He claims to have authority from the Father to execute this judgment.

In Benjamin Franklin's autobiography he tells of a minister who was ordered to read from the pulpit a proclamation from Charles the First, ordering the people to return to sports on Sunday. To the congregation's amazement and horror, the minister did read the royal edict, altho many other ministers refused to do it. But he followed the proclamation with the words "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" and he added, "Brethren, I have laid before you the commandment of your king, and the commandment of your God. I leave it to you to judge which of the two you ought to obey."

Someone has said "A man's Sunday self and his week-day self are like two halves of a round-trip ticket; not good if detached."

At Our Church Home For Children

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Christmas Visits Enjoyed

The following letter was received January 4, 1961, from Mrs. Robert R. Compton, Jr., Mebane, N. C., who had Mary Alice Wallace in her home for the Christmas holidays. Mrs. Compton is a member of the Mebane Presbyterian Church.

Dear Mr. Snyder:

We just wanted you to know how much we enjoyed having Mary Alice in our home for the Christmas holidays. I feel very confident that you could have not sent us a more deserving child because she certainly proved that in every way.

After we had supper the first night that she was with us, she and my three children went in the den and began playing some kind of game they had received for Christmas. From that time on, they seemed to have a good time and were very close to each other the whole time she was with us.

I know from Mary Alice's manners that you along with your matrons and others connected with the orphanage are doing a wonderful job. I think it takes parents to really appreciate the fine job you are doing and some day the little ones you have will know in a greater way than they know now.

Thanking you again for a visit from one of your fine little girls and give our love to Mary Alice. In my eye, she is truly a little "Mary."

Sincerely,

s/Coleen L. Compton

We are certainly encouraged by a letter such as this one. We had other letters and verbal reports from homes where our children visited for the holidays and the people told us of their joy in having our children in their homes. Of course, we are ever so grateful to all who entertained our children because it means so very much to them to visit among their friends and also to make new friends. Thank you, everyone, for all that you do for our children and our Home.

BUPPERT

Mrs. Mildred G. Buppert, of Chuckatuck, Virginia, passed away December 30, 1960. She was the widow of the late Albert C. Buppert, and was a member of Oakland Christian Church for many years. She is survived by three sons, two daughters, three brothers, one sister and 10 grandchildren. Mrs. Buppert was formerly a public school teacher, and was active in the Missionary Society and Sunday School of Oakland church.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon, January 1, 1961, from Bullock Funeral Home Chapel, Smithfield, and burial was made in Oakland cemetery. The services were conducted by the pastor and Dr. H. S. Harcastle, former pastor.

Wm. T. Scott, Pastor

BARNEY

A former resident of Elon College and a son of the late Professor J. W. Barney and Mrs. Barney, Harold L. Barney died December 30, 1960, and was buried in Elon College Magnolia cemetery January 2, 1961.

For many years, Mr. Barney was associated with Bell Laboratories, developing an electronic larynx for persons having lost their voices through surgical removal or paralysis of the vocal cords. He held 34 U. S. patents and 15 foreign patents in the field of wire and radio communications. He made his home in Madison, New Jersey.

He is survived by his wife, the former Sara Johnston, daughter of the late Charles D. Johnston and who formerly lived at Elon College, and by three sons: John, Harold, Jr., and Richard. Also surviving are his mother, Mrs. J. W. Barney, Sr., who still resides at Elon College, four sisters and one brother.

Harold was a graduate of Elon College and of North Carolina State College, Raleigh, N. C.

CADDELL

Mrs. S. W. Caddell, for many years a resident of Elon College, died November 20, 1960. The funeral service was conducted in the Elon College Community Church. Her late husband was a doctor for the Elon College community for many years.

Mrs. Caddell was a great-grandmother and eagerly looked forward to the return of her children on special occasions. She watched the progress of the building of the new sanctuary for the Elon College Community Church and was always anxious about the spiritual life of her church. As a pillar of community and church, she will be greatly missed. Her words of wisdom and her faith will live long in the lives of those who knew and loved her.

He's got a long way to grow—guide him carefully.

Who says it's a small world?

Not a little fellow. To him it looks awfully big. And how he grows to face it depends on you.

Teach him well. Teach him Love. Love of God and of his fellow man. Let him see it in your daily life. And he will grow—loving and loved.

Teach him Respect. Live in such a way that he can respect you. Then teach him to respect others and that which belongs to others. And he will grow—seeking not to destroy but to build. And he himself will be respected.

But above all, teach him Faith. And he will gain a strength that will not fail him. Teach him Faith and it will add to his happiness. Teach him Faith . . . and he will never be alone.

Give him this legacy . . . Love, Respect, Faith. And he will grow in strength to be a man.

Find the strength for your life . . . worship together this week

New Building Is Started At Bay View, Virginia

January 8 was an important day at Bay View, Norfolk. 154 were present for Sunday school, and 147 for the morning worship service when the Constitution of the United Church was approved. Officers of the church for 1961 were installed.

In the afternoon the cornerstone was laid for a new sanctuary and social hall, with five large classrooms as pastor's study and choir room. More than 200 people witnessed this impressive ceremony and attended the reception following given by the Women's Fellowship.

Participants in the service, shown above, are Revs. John G. Truitt, Jr., H. S. Hardcastle, Frank R. Hamilton, George D. Alley and the pastor, Charles Pegram. Facing the camera is Elmer C. Womack, trustee, assisting the mason who had donated and constructed the foundation.

Completing the day was a mission program of slides and records presented by the Women's Fellowship and titled "An Evening in An Indian Village."

Here And There Among The Churches

This is a busy week for our Missions Council meeting at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania. It is a beautiful place to be busy.

James Jackson was licensed January 5 by the Western North Carolina Conference at a service at the new Clanton Park Church, Charlotte, where he is the organizing pastor.

Miss Dorothy Hampton, formerly Race Relations Consultant for North Carolina and Virginia has accepted a position with the Missions Council in Boston, as of January 1. Her title is Resource and Information Secretary in Missionary Education.

New tile for the floor and carpeting for the center aisle are being installed in the chapel at Bayside, Norfolk. From the newsletter we learn that Rev. and Mrs. Julius Rice and family received $239 as a Christmas gift from the church.

January 8 was a "big day" at The Christian Temple, Norfolk, when 377 were in church school and 386 present for morning worship, the largest number since last Easter. Rev. Frank Hamilton's sermon topic was intriguing — "How Old Are You?"

The Social Action Committee of our Tryon church is asking the church people to contribute $100.00 to aid three high school young people to visit the United Nations this spring. The people to go are winners in an essay contest sponsored by the University of North Carolina and the American Freedom Association.

Rev. Reuben Askew, pastor at Pleasant Hill, had his conference ordination elevated to that of full ordination at a service by the Western North Carolina Conference January 8.

The pastor, Rev. W. T. Madren, reports that Happy Home church, near Ruffin, North Carolina, voted to approve the constitution of the United Church of Christ January 1. That same Sunday they received five members on confession of faith.

Rev. Collins Kilburn, new minister of United, Raleigh, is preaching a series of sermons in January on "What Is A Great Church?" Topics include The Worship of the Church, The Fellowship of the Church and the Mission of the Church.

Preliminary announcement indicates that Congregational Christians should be especially interested in sharing in the Tidewater Preaching Mission this year February 19-26, for three of the speakers will be from our denomination. They are: Dr. Fred Hoskins, Dr. Sheldon Mackey, and Congressman Walter Judd.

Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama, has been selected as the 1961 project of the Churchmen's Brotherhood of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, according to an announcement made January 3 by Mr. Theodore Schwalm of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, president of the Brotherhood. The goal is $30,000, much of which will be received on Men's Sunday, October 15. The fund will be earmarked to improve the science facilities at this Congregational Christian junior college.

The Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, N. C. held its annual meeting January 18, and will install its Sunday school staff of 25 people January 29.

Rev. Bill Simmons of Great Bridge, Virginia, will hold a three day revival in Butt Station Prison Camp during the first week in February. Chaplain of the prison says this will be the first such revival in Virginia.

The peace and service committee of our United, Raleigh, church is seeking foster homes for Indian students from Dunn who are attending Catholic High in Raleigh, because they cannot enter public high schools there. This committee is also making arrangements for a fellowship dinner with some of our Negro churches at Manly Street Christian Church February 12, Race Relations Sunday.

BAY VIEW NEWS

Mrs. D. O. Houck, Jr.

The chancel choir and men's chorus presented their Christmas cantata "The Shepherd and His Lamb" December 18. The Sunday school classes presented a program December 19. The Laymen's Fellowship sold fruit cake and candy during the holidays, the proceeds going to help the Cub Scouts they sponsor. The junior class, taught by Mrs. Mary Green, gave the church a stainless steel punch bowl.

Three of our men have recently been promoted to the rank of naval lieutenant: David Davis, Thomas McFarland, and George Varshock, our new organist.

INSTITUTE OF RELIGION

The twenty-second annual Institute of Religion is being sponsored by United Church, Raleigh, for six Monday evenings. The theme is "The Face of America."

Remaining lectures in the series include:

January 30 — Rev. James Lawson, pastor of Scott Chapel Methodist Church, Shelbyville, Tennessee on "The Sit-Ins: Their Effect Abroad."

February 6 — Helen Fuller, managing editor of The New Republic, who is taking a sabbatical leave to write a book on the first year of the Kennedy administration, "Outlook for the New Frontier."

February 13 — Dr. Howard Schomer, Congregational Christian minister who is president of Chicago Theological Seminary, formerly at the Fellowship Center, Le Chambon-sur-Lignon, France, "The Voice of Churches as Heard from Abroad."

February 20 — Franz Danier, assistant director of organization of the American Federation of Labor and the CIO, "Labor and the Face of America."

The lectures are held at 8:00 p.m. They are preceded by fellowship dinners ($1.50) at 6:00 and classes at 7:00. Courses being offered: "Citizen Consultation on Traditional Values in Modern Life in India and the U. S.," "Responsibilities of Organized Labor in Our Society," "The Face America Presents to the College Student," and "The Adult Criminal Offender in Our Society."

LEADERS OF LAYMEN MEET

The Board of Directors of the Churchmen's Brotherhood and The Board of Directors of the National Laymen's Fellowship met in joint session at The Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., November 19, 1960. Twenty-three directors and two executive secretaries were present.

It was voted unanimously that the two executive secretaries be instructed to proceed on preliminary plans for a convention of the Churchmen's Fellowship to be held in 1962 having as its theme "The Churchman in Society."

It was voted: (1) That the Committee on the Constitution be continued as presently constituted; (2) That it circulate to the directors as soon as possible a "revised tentative draft"; (3) That it present to these boards the recommended revised version at the meeting to be held in 1961 for board approval and recommendation to the convention in 1962; (4) That upon adoption by the convention in 1962 it be declared to be in force.

Dr. Kohler reported on the several Lay Schools of Theology conducted in the past year and indicated a growing interest and concern for such work both on the part of churchmen and the educational institutions.

Secretary Peterson reported on his contacts with United Churchmen and indicated a good rapport.

Dr. Kohler made a brief but interesting report of his visit to various European countries during the past summer. At Dr. Kohler's suggestion it was voted that the Churchmen's Fellowship provide sponsorship for Theodore Schwalm during his tour of Europe in 1961.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER AT BURLINGTON

World Day of Prayer will be observed in our Burlington First Church February 17, according to announcement by Mrs. H. C. Pollard, chairman for the sponsoring Burlington Council of Church Women. Dr. Bernard Boyd, of the department of religion at the University of North Carolina, will be the speaker, and the service will begin at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Boyd is in popular demand as a speaker, and the theme for this year is "Forward Through the Ages."

CALLING ALL MINISTERS

"The Ministry of Reconciliation" is the theme for the state pastors' Conference being held January 31 at White Memorial Presbyterian Church, 1704 Oberlin Road, Raleigh, in connection with the annual meeting of the N. C. Council of Churches.

Following the call to order by President Cecil Robbins at 10:00 a.m., Dr. Bernard Boyd will speak on "The Biblical Basis of Reconciliation" and Dr. Theodore Wedel on "The Pastor's Role in Reconciliation." At luncheon Dr. Benjamin Mays will speak on "Reconciling the Individual." Dr. Boyd and Dr. Wedel will give second lectures in the afternoon.

A joint fellowship dinner with United Church Women will have Mrs. Murdock MacLeod as the speaker, while Dr. Ralph Sockman will address the evening worship service on "Reconciled to be Reconcilers."

The business session of the Council will be held on February 1.

Dr. Ned Brannock

"Dr. Ned Faucette Brannock died today."

That is what the newspapers said January 16. But a multitude of people know better. Ask the students who followed his leadership in search of knowledge at Elon College for more than fifty years, and they will tell you that there was something about Dr. Brannock that was ever new and living. The body he had inhabited for 89 years grew tired, and lay down to rest, but the man himself is surely off on some further search of what is eternally true.

Elon College was young when it gave Ned Brannock, a native of the county in which the college is located, a degree in 1899. Nine years later the college welcomed him to its faculty, and, because of his scholarship, Christian character, ability to teach and to inspire students, he continued to teach in his beloved institution far beyond the usual retirement age. Thousands of alumni scattered across our world will be saddened to know that they can see him no more in classroom or on campus, but they will feel a bit closer to that unseen world where great spirits abide, not in idleness but still searching to know whatever may be in the mind of the Infinite.

Newspapers can record simple facts about the man. They can say that he received a Master of Science degree from Columbia University, that Defiance college honored itself by conferring on him the degree of Doctor of Literature, that he taught public school in Georgia and North Carolina before becoming a member of the Elon College faculty, that he studied in Johns Hopkins and at the University of North Carolina, that he is survived by one son, four daughters, four grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, and that his body was laid to rest in Magnolia cemetery at Elon College. But that is not the whole story, nor even the greatest part of it.

Students to whom he revealed some of the mysteries of chemistry, neighbors who shared his delight in gardening, friends who worshipped with him in church, alumni who received his hearty welcome back to the campus, and many more who knew him well know that the simple record of facts fail to tell the story of this wonderful man whose body has fallen on sleep. Surely he has heard his Master say, "Thou has been faithful... enter into the joys..."

"Ministers Have It Easy"

Some time ago there came across the editor's desk a letter from a woman who questioned a minister about the "racket" of the ministry. She seemed to think that the ministers have a rather soft job, that they are in a tight brotherhood, and that the "squawks" sometimes heard from members of the fraternity are not worthy of much consideration

We are all familiar with a variety of "rackets" these days. The idea back of them seems to be to make some easy money, and in large quantities. The ministry is not the place to get great wealth; neither is it the place to starve. Many Protestant churches are now following Roman Catholic practice by furnishing a house and other living expenses for the minister. This has been greatly encouraged by the Government which allows such emoluments without taxation. Then there is a salary of some sort. Sometimes it is quite inadequate. It must also be admitted that sometimes it is more than the person is worth, or could make in other professions. Doctors, lawyers, school teachers, farmers, industrial workers — these people are given no houses, utilities, and annuities. Some of them receive more cash, but it costs them more to live. Perhaps we are reasonably well off, and should not gripe too much about money.

How about the easy job? It can be. Little talks are not too hard to prepare. Visiting is considered a pleasure by many. Going to meetings is not terribly strenuous work. But to change the life of individuals and of the community is something else again. It is not easy to convince parents they are playing the fool when they talk of separating and leaving their children. Some greater love has come to them, or they are tired of living together. Try changing such ideas so a home can be maintained. Tell young people to wait for marriage until after college, and get them to believe it makes sense, and you go home wear at night. Try to convince a businessman that "honesty is the best policy" when he sees a million dollars just ahead if he makes that shady deal. You will probably stay awake nights before you get it done. Try preparing a sermon on the brotherhood of man when you know the leading members of your church are members of the Ku Klux Klan or the White Citizens Council. You will shiver in your shoe when you stand up to speak. Or, let the trustee recommend a new church building when you are thoroughly convinced that what is needed is for the congregation to send a missionary to some far corner of the world where fires of hate are burning and are ready to spread through civilization. What will you say in that meeting? Not all of the work of the ministry is easy — if one really tries to probe the depths of human experience and to interpret God to people and to make religion relevant to life as we know it today.

Now what about the "fraternity" of the ministry. Is it a bit difficult to get into this exclusive society. No more so than to be a doctor of medicine. There is an "order" in the ministry. A youth says he wants to join. He is taken "Under Care of the Conference" while he goes through college, and perhaps two years of seminary training. If he is worthy, he can get license to preach. With experience, knowledge, and the appreciation of those he serves he becomes a candidate for ordination, which is the highest honor our churches give their ministers. These are standards set by the churches to protect themselves, and makes a fellowship worthy of the best that any man can give. It costs work and character to get into the fraternity of the ministry.

It is not a "racket". It is a calling of God for people who are willing to listen to his voice.

HOPE

"We Are Saved By Hope."

Romans 8:24

In hope there is a beautiful ouyancy — clean, pure, sweet. It is ore than therapeutic, it is salvation!
We are saved by hope."

Hope has helped me all my life.
ow beautiful hope is!

Hope is out there beyond, above, viting, calling. I think Paul's "with atience wait for it" is to teach us ot to press too hard in the joy and allenge of it. Yes, Paul wants us o "with patience wait for it."

However, I am confident it is more an passive, more that static. It is stepping out with enthusiastic persistence.

"I hope I can go to college." "I ope I graduate." "I hope I can ut my best into a life calling."

That word "wait" is quite a word!
akes space of something more an 500 words in my dictionary.
odus 3:10, "They shall wait on eir priest's office." See Simeon enturies later: (Luke 2:27, 28)
The parents brought in the child esus... then took he him up in his rms, and blessed God..."

Yes, work and joy and happiness re in hope — and prayer, and peace!
e are saved by hope!

Year-Round Garden

Plant 4 rows of Peas:
Presence, Promptness, Preparation, and Purity.

Plant 3 rows of Squash:
Squash gossip, Squash criticism, and Squash indifference.

Then sow 5 rows of Lettuce:
Let-us be faithful to our church
Let-us be unselfish and loyal
Let-us have good fellowship
Let-us work for new members
Let-us be kind to one another

No garden is complete without turnips:

Turn-up for all meetings
Turn-up with a smile
Turn-up with new ideas Turn-up with determination to make everything count for something good and worthwhile.

you will plant this garden 1961 ill be an out-standing year for you

God Builds No Churches

God builds no churches. By his plan
That labor has been left to man.
No spires miraculously arise;
No little mission from the skies
Falls on a bleak and barren place
To be a source of strength and grace.
The humblest church demands its price
In human toil and sacrifice.

The humblest spire in mortal ken,
Where God abides was built by men
And if the church is still to grow,
Is still the light of hope to throw
Across the valleys of despair,
Men still must build God's house of prayer.
God sends no churches from the skies;
Out of our hearts must they arise.

OTHERS WHO SACRIFICE

When a man gives up a fabulous salary in private business to accept a position in government service,
State or national, he is complimented by the press and the general public for his sacrifice.

Of the several definitions of the word sacrifice, relinquishing income or profit in favor of public service is one of them. But for every man whose decision fits the definition, there are millions of men and women throughout the world whose sacrifices symbolize the same definition but who are rarely ever applauded by anyone.

There are also millions of human beings who have never had a small fraction of the better things of life enjoyed by other millions. Many of these less fortunate millions go from cradle to grave without medical care, and the map of the United States contains some of the places where many of these sacrificing souls live.

In many hospitals, homes for the aged, orphanages, and rescue homes tens of thousands of dedicated men and women serve humanity year in and year out on a full or part-time basis with little or no compensation.
In some hospitals in large cities the shortage of nurses is so acute that Red Cross volunteers do a laudable job of helping, and their only compensation is the inward satisfaction of being helpful to others. All these lovers of humanity are seldom if ever heralded by the press or otherwise applauded.

There are numerous cases where men with a compassionate love and concern for those who suffer sacrifice comfortable homes and small fortunes to help bring health and happiness to others. One example is 87-year-old Dr. Albert Schweitzer, scientist, theologian, musician and eminent scholar, laboring among the jungle dwellers of Equatorial Africa.

Dr. Schweitzer is often called "the greatest living missionary". Another example is youthful Dr. Thomas A.
Dooley, suffering with a possible fatal disease, yet ministering to the sick and dying in several hospitals he has established in the small and troubled Asian kingdom of Laos when he could be enjoying a lucrative practice in most any part of the modern world.

Among the lesser known and unknown cases of sacrifice is the mother who through instinct that cannot be defined with a love that cannot be defied, sacrifices most of a normal life for an unfortunate child, not only in infancy but through adulthood.
Her case can be multiplied by untold thousands of other mothers who sacrifice without public recognition, often in the communities in which they live.

The man who exchanges a top salary in private enterprise for a much smaller salary for the privilege of serving the public for an indefinite time deserves commendation. But the millions who also sacrifice to serve humanity, often for life, also deserve more praise from the press and public.

The world would be a happier place if more flowers were handed to the living rather than placed on their graves. And, too, a word of praise on a grave marker cannot be read by the person beneath it.

Morton Kurtz

Director, N. C. Council of Churches

Much interest has been aroused by the proposal made recently in San Francisco by Dr. Eugene Carson Blake and Bishop James A. Pike looking toward a merger of the Methodist, United Presbyterian, United Church of Christ and Protestant Episcopal churches. The resulting church of 18 million members in turn would invite others to join. The plan is neither unique nor new, since the Church of South India resulted from a similar merger several years ago, and such a merger in the U. S. has been discussed since the "Greenwich Plan," which goes back even farther. That, however, is not important. What matters is, what will result and what should result from this sweeping proposal.

Dr. Blake and Bishop Pike are both highly competent and highly respected church leaders. Each has been a leader in ecumenical circles. We shall listen to them with care.

I am not sure, however, how practical is their plan. If they were desirous of startling Protestantism out of apathy toward its own divided state, they have succeeded to a degree. But what then? The proposed merger would take, according to the most optimistic forecast, at least ten and more probably 25 years. Meanwhile, a hue and cry would be raised by those opposing it and all kinds of old prejudices would be dragged out to have their inning.

Personally, I should prefer to have our denominations devote the next ten years to an intensive campaign to:

(1) Revitalize and rededicate their members to an acknowledgment of Christ's preeminence over all our lives and the life of our society;

(2) A co-operatively planned evangelical witness to the unchurched, including visitation, united religious censuses, and evangelical preaching;

(3) A really determined campaign to undergird and make more effective the ecumenical or council movement at the world, national, state, and local levels. I am particularly (and naturally) concerned over this third point, for unless we can work more effectively together through councils of churches there seems to me little chance of our working together at all. This may be only a preliminary step toward unity, but it is a vital one;

(4) Pray while we work together for the guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us all into greater unity of spirit and, eventually — if it be His will — to union itself.

These seem to me challenging as well as elemental goals. I believe that such mergers as are good and needed will come from such a foundation. I particularly like Bishop Nolan Harmon's suggestion that mergers begin by reuniting divided "families" such as exist among Baptists and among Presbyterians. But I am not interested in mergers per se unless they are clearly led by the Spirit. We have enough efficiency and more than enough organization in our present age. What we need more than ever is to acknowledge the supremacy of Christ over all. The closer we approach to Him, the closer we ought to approach each other.

A BIT OF EXPERIENCE

I have met with a good many people
In jogging o'er life's varied way;
I've encountered the clever, the simple,
The crabbed, the grave, and the gay;
I have travelled with beauty, with virtue;
I have been with the ugly, the bad;
I have laughed with the ones who were merry,
And wept with the ones who were sad.

One thing I have learned in my journey—
Ne'er to judge one by what he appears;
The eyes that seem sparkling with laughter
Oft battle to keep back the tears;
And long sanctimonious faces
Hide oft the souls that are vile,
While the heart that is merry and cheerful
Is oft the freest from guile.

And I've learned not to look for perfection
In one of our frail humankind;
In hearts the most gentle and loving
Some blemish or fault we can find;
But yet I have ne'er found the creature
So low, so depraved, or so mean
But had some good impulse, some virtue
That 'mong his bad traits might be seen.

And, too, I have learned that most friendships
We make are as brittle as glass.
Just let a reverse overtake us,
Our "friends" on the "other side" pass.
But, ah! I have found some few loyal,
Some hearts ever loving and true!
And the joy and the peace they have brought me
Have cheered me my whole journey through.

"THE UNITY OF THE CHURCH"

By Wm. N. Tuttle

One of my first assignments when a freshman in Union Theological Seminary almost a half century ago was to write a paper on Cyprian's views on "The Unity of the Church." I am glad I got that assignment. It has influenced my whole life.

Cyprian was of a wealthy patrician family in Carthage, a lawyer and a teacher of rhetoric. Born a pagan, he embraced Christianity in middle life and became Bishop of Carthage until his martyrdom in the year 258. During the persecutions under the emperors Decius and Valerian he had long periods of imprisonment, which he used as did St. Paul in writing the treatises that have survived until today.

Cyprian felt that Christian disunity was heretical. In an age when many prelates were arrogating to themselves more and more personal authority he believed strongly in church councils and held seven of them in the course of the ten years he presided over the see of Carthage. He believed that the Holy Spirit was present and vocal in the decisions of councils of the church.

Either because of Cyprian, or perhaps just because I was born that way, I have always been interested in Christian Unity. Some of the things I remember with most satisfaction are small parts I have played in helping to bring unity out of an unchristian chaos. I am glad to have had a part with four other ministers 15 years ago in founding the Florida Council of Churches, now growing in strength and influence. I was happy last month when I heard that Pope John and the Archbishop of Canterbury had a friendly meeting. I am pleased as the reports come from our own Florida churches that have voted to ratify the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. Up to January 1st., ten of our churches had taken their votes on the Constitution. All were affirmative and most of them unanimous.

Dr. N. F. Brannock

Dr. Ned Faucette Brannock, a member of the college faculty since 1908, passed away at 2:50 a.m., Monday, January 16. He had worked at his desk at the Carolina Biological Supply Company on Friday; had been a dinner guest at his neighbor's home on Sunday; and had gone to the Elon College Community Church for the church business meeting on Sunday evening when he became ill and had to return home. Later in the evening he was taken to the hospital where he expired a few hours later.

He is survived by his son York Brannock of Burlington and his four daughters Mary Rouse of Burlington, Annie Lou Harward of Fountain, N. C., and Madge and Edith Brannock of the home; four grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted at the Elon College Community Church on Tuesday, January 17 at 3:00 p.m. by the pastor Dr. W. J. Andes. In accordance with his wishes the family requested that in lieu of flowers contributions be sent to the Ned F. Brannock Scholarship Fund at the college. The Fund was established by some of his former students approximately ten years ago.

Dr. Brannock was a competent scholar, a student who pursued study for the sheer joy of learning, a thorough teacher, a dedicated Christian, and one of my closest and best friends. He was devoted to his church, his College, his community, and his family. Surely a great and good man has left our midst today... his life has been a blessing to those who knew him... the lessons he taught us in the classroom and the example he set for us as a man will be an abiding influence for good for years to come.

AT FRANKLIN, VIRGINIA

From the sprightly little newsletter of our church in Franklin, Virginia, we gather several interesting items.

January 15 the Fireside Club went to Patrick Henry Hospital, Denbigh, to hold a religious service, visit the 45 patients, and distribute gifts.

Placing a rose on the pulpit to announce the birth of a baby is the habit of Tucker G. Humphries, the minister. January 8 there were two roses — one for Phillip Andrews

January 24, 1961

Colclough, III, and the other for William Bryant Hastings, III.

Dr. Ernie Gatten, T. Hayes Holland and Rupert Tart were commended for faithful service as deacons while J. Vaughan Beale, C. F. Smithwick and Mills P. Daughtrey were welcomed to the board of deacons. Dr. Darden W. Jones is chairman and Wesley Mills is secretary for 1961.

The annual church meeting was held January 11 with excellent reports, and a supper that created fine fellowship. A vote of thanks was given to Warren Council, retiring Sunday school superintendent, and Robert Council, Jr., was elected superintendent for this year.

The Laymen's Fellowship had a supper meeting January 17 with Jack Beale, Irving Beale, Bobby Cobb and John Kitchen in charge of the meal and Wesley Wills in charge of the program.

MINISTER MAKES PLEDGE

At the annual business meeting of the church, held Wednesday night, January 11, as Reverend T. G. Humphries presented his report to the Franklin church he pledged:

1. To try to stimulate afresh and anew every group in the church. To challenge each one again with their obligations and responsibilities to God's Kingdom and their church.
2. To be a better friend, a better pastor, a better shepherd in 1961.
3. To represent our church as our members would have us do in our many outside of the church engagements.
4. To increase our calling. At least 150 calls a month, besides, sick, trouble or sorrow calls.
5. In short, our best in making our church a power for good and for God in Franklin.

* * *

In return, your Pastor asks that every member give God, your church, and its program, priority in your life.

Congratulations to Rev. and Mrs. Grant J. Burns of Carolina, near Burlington, North Carolina, who announce the birth of a son, Daniel Wayne, born December 12. Mrs. Burns is the former Patricia Coghill.

Young people will be in charge of the church service next Sunday at Great Bridge. Speakers will be Pat Barefoot and Joan Wilson.

MRS. FLORENCE ROGERS

Mrs. Florence Rogers of Fayetteville, North Carolina was buried January 23. She gave the land for our church in that city, and was a great help in getting the church started. Further details will be given next week.

The Western North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship will hold its fifth Sunday Rally at Pleasant Ridge next Sunday afternoon with registration beginning at 2:30 o'clock. Young people from all the churches are wanted to share in this meeting. The featured speaker will be the Rev. James Jackson, pastor of our new church in Charlotte.

The 14th Annual Laymen's Rally will be held at Elon College February 19. Leaders will include Rev. Albert Ronander from the national offices and Clarence Stasavich who is athletic director and head football coach at Lenoir Rhyne College. Reservations at $1.25 for the banquet need to be in by February 10.

The fifth Sunday union service of the South Norfolk area will be held in our South Norfolk church.

Church Chuckles

"Better change this announcement to read 'eminent lecturer will HONOR our church,' not 'FILL our pulpit!'"

Here is an outstanding example of diplomacy... an attribute all ministers MUST have... an attribute they must use OFTEN. And if we study the qualities that go to make up a 'diplomat,' isn't the principal quality simply an inborn ability to deal with others in a spirit of Christian kindness?

Build World Friendships Through Student Visits

Mrs. John R. Kernodle

As Women's Fellowship Social Action Chairman, I would like very much to encourage the people in our churches to become acquainted with the students from other countries who are at Elon College. This should not be difficult, as they are few in number.

It would be good for them — for us, too — to become friends, for them to see democracy and Christianity at work in the U.S.A. through "us." If we put ourselves in their place — living in a strange country with a different language, different customs, even different food — how would we react?

Some of these young people have nowhere to spend holidays. It would be best if the invitation came from their classmates, but if they are left on the campus alone, it seems that there might be some interested church members who would enjoy sharing holidays with them.

I would like especially for our group to take into its heart and into its homes, the young man from Turkey whom the Southern Convention Women's Fellowship is "sponsoring."

Women Sponsor Turkish Student

Carey Andes

The Southern Convention Women's Fellowship is helping to sponsor a boy from Turkey at Elon College. His name is Barbaros Chelikkol, he is 18, and he arrived about the middle of September. He is a very fine student, averaging higher than most other freshmen entering college at Elon.

It may not be generally known that the women are sponsoring this young man. It all happened last summer at the School of Mission when President Marion Gordon appointed a Committee to consider the proposition of Louis Wilkins, now teaching in the Amerikan Kolej Tarsus, Turkey, that we help to sponsor a young Moslem boy who has been one of his prize pupils. The committee, composed of Mrs. Robert Kimball, Mrs. Robert Smith, and Mr. William Andes, decided that it would be a good thing to sponsor this young man and assist him in getting his education by providing scholarship aid of $500.00 a year at Elon College and the executive board of the Women's Fellowship approve. Elon College is also assisting Barbaros by providing other financial help.

Barbaros was late in arriving at Elon College because of difficulty in getting his passport and visa. He left on Friday night from Turkey, and arrived in New York on Sunday. On Monday evening, my husband and I met him at the bus station in Greensboro. In this way, we, along with two of the college students, were the first ones to greet Barbaros upon his arrival.

Barbaros spent the Thanksgiving holidays with the family of Louis Wilkins at Lennig, Virginia; he spent the Christmas holidays with the Andes family in Elon College. He is a very attractive young man, very intelligent, and has a keen sense of humor. We thoroughly enjoy sharing our home with him during the holidays. We took him along with us to the Valley of Virginia so that he was able to see this part of the country. Several people were kind enough to send him Christmas gifts, so that he shared his "Sa-

Elon Students From Other Countries

Elon College is proud of its students from other countries. Each one is making a definite contribution to the life of the college and of the community. They come from communities in which they were honored and treated with respect. They are taking their college work seriously and are doing well.

Despite their busy lives they are glad to make addresses to church groups and thus help people in North Carolina and Virginia to understand more about our world. Mrs. W. W. Sloan is chairman of the committee for foreign students. All requests for the services of these students should be channeled through her. These students do not ask to be entertained or shown off. They are mature, busy people. In their home communities invitations to speak would be sent them in writing, and definite expressions of appreciation would be sent to them later.

John Bede came from Pakistan where his father is a college professor of English. He secured his degree from Elon last spring with a major in business administration. He is taking an additional class at the college, living with Dr. and Mrs. Sloan, and working with Burlington Industries in Burlington in preparation for graduate work. Mr. Bede expects to return to his country in the summer of 1962.

John Ling is from Sarawak in northern Borneo, where his father is pastor of a large Methodist Chinese church. Mr. Ling will receive his degree next spring. He expects to take graduate work in religious education to prepare for supervision of religious education activities in the church schools in Sarawak.

Nabil Abu Aitah came from Bethlehem in Jordan. He was at Elon for one year on a Rotary scholarship. Individuals who are interested in him are paying his expenses this year. Mr. Abu Aitah is majoring in chemistry and hopes to assist his country as a chemical engineer.

Barbaros Chelikkol came to Elon this fall after graduating from our mission high school in Turkey where Louis Wilkins, a recent Elon College graduate, is teaching. Mr. Chelikkol is majoring in physics and mathematics. He is being sponsored by the Southern Convention Women's Fellowship.

Ada Hernandez recently came to Elon from Cuba. Her parents are living in Greensboro, N. C.

If you want one of these students to address your group, contact Mrs. Sloan telling her exactly what is wanted. After she makes arrangements, send the student a note confirming these. Give him plenty of time to deliver his message — never less than twenty minutes. Respect him as a mature person who has had a rich experience, and give him financial appreciation as you would any other public speaker. Your lives will be enriched, and so will his.

Claus" along with our family on Christmas Eve.

Barbaros has no difficulty with the English language, and is readily understood. Now that he has become somewhat oriented at Elon, perhaps he would enjoy visiting in our churches throughout the Convention.

All in all, I would say that our Christmas was a great deal better because Barbaros was with us, even though he is not a Christian. He is very congenial, and very likeable. He is very anxious to see as much of American life as possible, and is interested in our customs.

Barbaros plans to be an engineer, though he is not certain what kind. Whatever he decides to be, I am sure he will be good at it. He really wants to stay in the U. S. long enough to get his Master's degree.

If this young man is a sample of the type of work Louis Wilkins is doing in Turkey, I would say that it is a wonderful work.

BETHLEHEM WOMEN REPORT

The Women's Fellowship of the Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of Suffolk, Nansemond County, with 141 members, had a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. Harry Schadel.

We participated in the World Community Day, World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day by showering patients at Patrick Henry Hospital. We observed Women's Fellowship Sunday in November with guest speaker Mrs. Guy Benchoff of the E. & R. Church from the Valley of Virginia.

We raised over $625.00 for our missionary apportionment, seven Life Memberships and two Memorials, and Home Mission and Social Service budget.

Other highlights of our year's work are $650.00 raised for our building fund with a bazaar and turkey supper.

Our Mother-Daughter banquet was so successful, we are having another this year; we entertained the young people at a youth banquet for youth week and entertained all the families of the church with a family picnic at Planter's Club.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan taught our foreign mission study book on Africa and Mrs. I. W. Johnson taught our home study book.

After our February quarterly meeting and covered dish luncheon, we held a cancer workshop where 990 cancer dressings were made.

We have enjoyed working together and are looking forward to another successful year.

FLINT HILL WOMEN REPORT

By Mrs. Robert Britt, President

The Women's Fellowship of Flint Hill Christian Church of Biscoe, North Carolina, was very successful in 1960. We are pleased to report that we purchased a pulpit, communion table and flower stands for our church. Also we had a time clock installed to control lighting the church on the outside.

We have had only one meeting in the month of January, but we are proud to report that at this meeting there was enough money pledged to furnish our church with pews.

Our thanks go to the men and other members of the church who have helped with the work. Our acting pastor, Jimmy Caviness, has also been a wonderful help and inspiration to us all.

With the blessing of God and the cooperation of the group we have reason to hope for the accomplishment of great things during the coming year.

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

How To Become Likeable

Here is one of those goals in life that can't be achieved by going at it directly. We can't say: "Now I am going to be likable. I am going to make myself popular." The most probable result of tackling the matter in this way is just the opposite, namely, to become a laughing-stock.

It is worthwhile, of course, to give careful thought to just what is popularity and how it comes. But about all this kind of thinking can accomplish is to clear away any misconceptions, and locate the crucial points that need attention. Beyond this, the less we think about the matter, the better. For the more we aim at popularity directly, the more we miss it. The harder we try, the farther short we fall of what we hope to accomplish. What is needed is a flank attack, not a frontal attack.

The first step in this indirect approach is to develop an out-going interest in life. This should not be too hard, for there are so many fascinating things to do, see, learn, and enjoy. They are all ready and waiting for you. So, if you would like to be likable, forget about it, and turn your attention away from yourself to things outside you. It can be anything from algebra to be-bop; from religious art to roller skating.

Of course, it goes without saying that the higher the interest, the better it will be for you. Shakespeare, for example, is scarcely to be mentioned in the same breath with the comics. Also, an interest that can be shared with others is generally to be preferred to one of the "long eagle" type. Bridge is better in this respect than solitaire, and basketball than weight lifting. But the important thing is to get outside yourself, and get yourself off your hands. And interests will do the trick!

As you follow these interests, and lose yourself in them, a number of things will begin to happen. You will find that you are less self-conscious. You think less about yourself. You talk less about yourself. Furthermore, you are happier. You have more to live for. Some of these activities are of interest also to others. You can talk about them with your friends, and do them jointly with a companion or a group. And, the first thing you know, you are an interesting person. While you were concentrating on these outgoing interests, the capacity for friendship came sneaking in the back door.

The second step in this indirect approach is to develop an out-going interest in other people. Of course, this must be genuine, for a sham feeling for others which is turned on for the occasion is worse than nothing. But the real thing should not prove at all difficult. For other persons are interesting. As someone has said, "People are more fun than anybody." They do such strange things, and make such funny remarks.

What are they like — these people who are all around you? What are they hoping, fearing, and secretly worrying about? Here is a little child next door, who is something of a nuisance. How does life look to him? Have you ever given the matter much thought? Or your teacher, who stands before you every day. What would it be like to be in her shoes? Or a classmate, with whom you have grown up. How much do you really know about him (or her)?

As you concentrate in this way upon other people, something will happen to you. If by chance you have been spoiled a trifle, and somewhat wrapped up in yourself, you will find your selfishness and self-concern slipping off you like an overcoat from your shoulders. You will be happier, and easier to live with.

As you concern yourself naturally and sympathetically with others, they will respond. They will like to be with you. If you happen to notice it, you will realize that you have become likeable. While you were thinking about someone else, the capacity for friendship tiptoed quietly in through the back door. It always happens that way.

(For whoever would save his life will lose it, and whoever loses his life for my sake and the gospel's will save it.)

OUR GOAL Leslie Wicker

Have you ever seen anyone shoot a basketball through a goal? I'm sure you have. There is another goal which we should try to reach. It is a goal to carry Christianity over all the world. These two goals may sound very different but they aren't so different. Let us examine them more closely.

Now in the game of basketball, a team is trying to make a goal. Of course, the opposing team is trying to keep them from making it. Now in making that goal the team must go by the rulebook. The team works on a play in order to get set up for a shot and then sometimes the shot is blocked.

Now our goal as Christians is to spread the gospel throughout all the world. Of course, there are those who wouldn't want us to reach this goal so we are met with opposition. We must work together as a team or we will be defeated. Our opponents have a strong defense. How strong is our offense? Will we, as Christians, reach our goal? —Northview Star

Ideas For Action In Richmond

WELCOME ALL

In the early fall a Brainstorming session was held with a selected Committee to "come up" with ideas on "Increasing Church Attendance" and "Increasing our Financial Income." From this session came 75 ideas on "Increasing Attendance" and 40 ideas on "Increasing our Income." The Minister appointed a special Committee to take these ideas and select from them the ones that could be best used in our local situation. The results of that Committee's work are listed below:

CHURCH ATTENDANCE

Ideas on which immediate action could be taken:

1. Sing familiar hymns.
2. Continue to be friendly and talk to everyone at church. (Especially new-comers and visitors.)
3. Have children light the altar candles each Sunday.
4. Serve Holy Communion to shut-ins quarterly.
5. Encourage people to come to Sunday School and stay for the Church Service.
6. Make class rooms more attractive. (During the first quarter of 1961.)
7. At Sunday School opening Worship place chairs to make one section so there will be more togetherness. (Rearrange chairs in men's class to face in opposite direction. January 1961.)

8. Publicity be given to our orchestra playing at Sunday School. (Publicise in bulletin and "Messenger". 1961. Use orchestra at Church service when appropriate.)

9. Make a specific point — that any visitors to the Church be visited sometime during the following week.

10. Find the unchurched. (Immediately. Have a drive in the Spring of 1961.)

11. Continue the splendid music now being given by the choir. In addition, have the children sing occasionally, and use the orchestra whenever it can be arranged.

12. Publish church attendance in the bulletin.

13. Send out a questionnaire listing the activities of the Church and ask that each check the activities with which they would like to be associated. (This could be included in an issue of the "Messenger".)

14. Portico on front of Church should be lighted at night. (Second quarter 1961.)

15. Develop car pools for Church attendance.

16. Encourage members to attend the business meetings.

17. Remember those who are sick or in poor health. Send cards or call.

18. Visit the new members more.

To those who are young and need counsel; to all who are strong and want a task; to those who are thwarted and need courage; to all who are lonely and want companionship; to all who are sinful and need a Saviour; this church opens wide its doors and in the name of Christ our Lord, says "Welcome."

Problems In Ceylon

A serious crisis faces American Board work in Ceylon. Our educational work there consists of 69 Tamil schools and 9 English medium schools. Most of the latter are boarding schools, of which 7 have extensive lands and buildings. In addition there is Jaffna College, which has a primary and secondary department as well as an undergraduate or collegiate section.

The government now proposes to take over all schools up to the collegiate section. No compensation will be paid by the government for the lands and buildings of the schools taken over. Once they are taken over, the head-masters and principals will be appointed according to the faith of 51% of the children. In effect, the schools will be run as non-Christian schools. In our area of work in the North, therefore, the schools would be run as Hindu schools. It is also rumored that the teachers will be appointed according to the faith of the children. Since a majority of students in our schools are Hindu students, this means that Hindu teachers would be appointed.

At the present moment, an alternative is allowed. This alternative provides that a school can choose to become "an unaided school." Under this plan, a school would not receive any government aid as it does now. However, the school must continue to pay the same salaries to teachers, keep all present students until they graduate, maintain all present facilities, charge no fees (except small facilities fees), and admit only Protestant Christian students. As students graduate, they can be replaced only by Christians. The result of this would be that as the years passed, our schools would shrink to very small schools because there would not be sufficient Christians to replace the Hindus who would be graduating.

"JOURNEY TO UNDERSTANDING"

Mrs. R. G. Williams of Lake Worth, our own "Mary Ann," is leading a Mediterranean and Middle East tour 39 days in duration, flying from New York on April 12, and visiting Lisbon, Madrid, Athens, Cairo, Jerusalem, Beirut, Damascus, Ankara, Izmir, Istanbul and Rome.

Special attention will be given to visits to mission and educational institutions and some of the places visited by St. Paul, as well as the holy places in Jerusalem and Bethlehem.

This will be the third tour Mrs. Williams has conducted. Unlike the first two which were intended for women leaders in our fellowship, this tour is open to both men and women of our own and other denominations. Applicants will be chosen carefully from among persons of similar church interests, whose purpose is beyond seeing and shopping and are interested in both the adventure of visiting areas not on the usual tourist routes that emphasize the Christian World Mission of the church.

Three Florida women are already enrolled for this tour which is reasonably priced at $1,690. Other men and women from our Conference will be specially welcomed. Full information on the tour can be obtained from Mrs. Mary Ann Williams, P. O. Box 1206, Lake Worth, Florida.

YOUTH WEEK AT FRANKLIN

Sunday, January 22, we will observe youth week in our church.

Our Youth Choir will sing — young people will participate in the service in various ways. Our pastor will bring the message.

Other plans for the week include an ice-skating party in Norfolk, and breakfast, followed by a period of devotions, one morning before school.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Porter are our counselors in charge of the week. All eight counselors will assist with breakfast.

The True Bread

BREAD OF LIFE

Background Scripture: John 6.

Devotional Reading: John 6:47-57.

Memory Selection: I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. John 6:35.

It is John's custom to tell about some sign or miracle of Jesus, and then to add either Jesus' own words interpreting that sign, or his own interpretation of the sign. Today's lesson is an instance of this. There is first the story of Jesus feeding the five thousand, and then the discourse on "the bread of life."

FEEDING THE FIVE THOUSAND

In the story of the Feeding of the Five Thousand we see several truths concerning (a) The Divine and (b) the Human.

(a) The Divine. We see here (1) The Divine Compassion. When Jesus saw the multitude he was moved with compassion for them. Crowds always tugged at Jesus' heart. He had compassion for people. He cared so much that he wanted to do something about helping them. (2) The Divine Multiplication. Whether we interpret the feeding of the multitude in terms of an outright miracle, or in terms of the response which the people made to the boy's example in sharing his meager meal by sharing what they had — many of them were pilgrims who probably had food with them, or in terms of a sacramental meal in which all partook sparingly of the meager resources, there is an evidence of God's power to multiply an hundred fold. A farmer plants one or two grains of corn and reaps from the full-grown stalk several ears of corn with hundreds of grains of corn on them. Here is the "miracle of multiplication" so characteristic of God. (3) The Divine Order. Jesus had the people not only to sit down, but to sit in groups in an orderly way. God works in an orderly way. He likes things done decently and in order. (4) The Divine Economy. "Gather up the fragments that nothing be lost," said Jesus. Waste is sin. Conservation of any resources has the divine sanction. It is also symbolic of a great truth that there were twelve baskets that remained over.

(b) The Human. Andrew brought the lad to Jesus. The lad gave what he had to Jesus.

BREAD FOR LIFE

After Jesus had fed the multitude and had returned to the other side of the lake, he was followed by a large crowd of people. He frankly and bluntly told them that they were interested in him only because he had given them bread to eat. They followed him for what they could get out of him, and went back and followed him no more when he made demands of them. It is thus today. We want comfort in sorrow, strength in difficulty, peace when troubled and in turmoil, help when life gets us down, and there is no one so wonderful as Jesus at such a time. We talk with him and walk with him and open our hearts to him. But when he comes to us with some stern demand for sacrifice, with some challenge to effort, with some offer of a cross, then we will have nothing to do with him. Many of us love Jesus for what we can get out of him!

Even at that Jesus realized that men must have bread. Man cannot live without bread interpreted in terms of material things. The fact that he fed the multitude is evidence of God's concern that his people have bread. A world in which there is hunger is not a world in keeping with the divine plan. Furthermore, hungry men are dangerous men. Communism has thrived on the fact that it promises hungry and underprivileged people "bread," material things, the good things of life. The world is in travail because a new world is being born in which there will be a better distribution of bread for all people. A living wage, better housing, better food, better advantages, equal opportunities are an integral part of the new order and the Kingdom of God. The underprivileged people of the world have struck their tents and are on the march toward a new day.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

FEBRUARY 5, 1961

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, D. D.
Pastor of Berea Congregational
Christian Church,
Driver, Virginia

But even as man cannot live without bread, he cannot live by bread alone. That of course is the weakness of Communism. It promises men bread, more bread, and it may be able to give man more bread, more material things in life. But that is all that Communism has to give men. And that is not enough. In words that must have startled the people of his day, and which ought to startle the people of our day Jesus said that people spend so much of their time and strength on "the meat that perisheth." He was perhaps paraphrasing Isaiah's words, "Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" There are two kinds of hunger: there is physical hunger which bread can satisfy, and there is spiritual hunger which physical bread can never satisfy. A man may be as rich as Croesus and yet have this haunting dissatisfaction, this unsatisfied longing in his heart, this incompleteness in his life. Just a few years after Jesus spoke these words, luxury in Roman society was unparalleled. Feasts of peacocks' brains and nightingales' tongues were served at meals. A Roman lady was married in a robe so richly jeweled and gilded that it cost the equivalent of $2,160,000! ! There was a reason for all this — a deep dissatisfaction, a hunger that things could not satisfy, that drove the people to seek some new thrill, some new satisfaction.

Jesus boldly said "I am the Bread of Life." He was saying that in him men would find abundant and abiding satisfaction. And again and again, men turning from the physical bread, unsatisfied and unhappy, have found in Christ that which satisfies all the deepest hungers of the human heart and soul.

DOING THE WILL OF GOD

When the people asked Jesus what they should do to do the works of God, he gave them a strange but simple answer: "This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he has sent." The one work that God desires from man is FAITH. Faith in the sense of a certain relationship with God, a relationship in which we are friends of God, submissive to God, responsive to God, not afraid of God. And this new relationship will issue in love toward God and our fellowmen, holiness of life, and submission to God.

At Our Church Home For Children

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

REPORT FOR JANUARY 9, 1961 SOUTHERN CONVENTION CHURCHES

Dear Friends:

Last Friday night I watched the Elon High School basketball team defeat a favored neighboring team — Altamahaw-Ossippee. Now, ordinarily this would be of little interest to you. What makes the difference is the fact that three of the starting five were boys from our Children's Home. Kenneth Ferrell started at center, scored 13 points and played all but part of the third quarter. He was held out of action until the fourth quarter because of having four fouls. George Morningstar started at guard, scored 9 points and played the entire game. Starting at the other guard position was James Crumpler who scored 8 points and also played the entire game. All these boys played an excellent floor game and were very instrumental in the victory.

As often happens in high school games, the boys became over enthusiastic and tempers flared on several occasions, but upon each occasion when the instance was over the boys on both teams showed good spirit and extended the hand of friendship. This is an important part of the game and we are glad that our boys are getting this kind of training, for in life there is give and take and if these boys can learn it here it will help them later as they grow into manhood.

Our coach at Elon High this year is Mr. Eddie Hughes, Jr. We are most fortunate to have such a fine young man working with our boys. The kind of training he is giving them is not only valuable on the basketball court, but off of it as well.

Two of these young men, Kenneth and George, will be graduating in June. James has one more year. Kenneth and George are both hoping to enter college next fall. Somehow we hope both will be able to find ways to do this, for both are very fine, deserving young men.

The baby carriage was invented by Charles Burton, an American lithographic artist. The first was nothing more than a child's high-chair mounted on wheels. The inventor's wife appeared with it at the Battery Park in New York City on Easter Sunday in 1848, and it attracted much attention. An order was soon received from Queen Victoria for three carriages for the royal children.

Dr. Crawford W. Long, of Georgia, in 1842, was the first American physician to use ether as an anesthetic in performing an operation.

Ducks and other water birds which sleep on the surfaces of ponds and lakes avoid drifting ashore during the night by tucking one foot up into their feathers and then paddling slowly with the other one, thus traveling in circles all the time they are asleep.

In many remote parts of the world today even a hoe is not known in the pursuit of farming. Instead, man's first crude plow — the crooked stick — is still in use.

CANDLELIGHT COMMUNION AT ROSEMONT

Ruth P. Herbert

One of the most outstanding events of the year, at Rosemont Christian Church, was a midnight, candlelight communion service held on Christmas Eve. The church was beautifully decorated with candleabra and evergreens. The chancel choir under the direction of Mrs. Royal Gallup rendered two anthems "Comes To Us a Savior" by Handel and "Lo How a Rose E'er Blooming" from the 16th century. A solo "O Holy Night" was sung by Mrs. Gordon Ward.

The Reverend John G. Truitt, Jr. gave a communion meditation, "Lonely at Christmas."

The service was arranged by the Women's Fellowship and was attended by approximately 225 members and friends.

Build a stronger, richer life . . .

WORSHIP TOGETHER EVERY WEEK!

You know the hymn—"How firm a Foundation?" Of course you do. But it's more than a hymn. To many it is a way of life.

The foundation is faith. Faith that gives every day a shining new quality. Faith that provides a strong shelter in time of need. Faith that sustains you in sickness and trouble. Faith that makes life a great adventure, truly worth living.

You find faith as a member of a family, as a member of a community. Worshiping together every week, with those you love, with others who believe as you do—gives you strength to carry through with hope and courage.

You can build a stronger, richer life—on a firm foundation of faith. Worship together this week . . . every week!

Here And There Among The Churches

At Monticello it is desired that readers know that the new name for the church is "Monticello United Church of Christ" and not what was mistakenly reported recently. Several called attention to the mistake. They must read this paper. Thanks.

That Missionary Poster from the Convention Office (looks just like the brain-child and handiwork of Robert Knowles) should remind all of us that there are important interests in the field of missions at which we should really work between now and Easter. The bulletin board of your church is a good place to "file" the copy that came to your church.

At Tryon the Women's Fellowship meeting January 23 saw a film entitled "The Procession" in which Dr. Robert Spike is the narrator; the monthly informal social gathering was as "at home" with Rev. and Mrs. Wm. R. Stevenson, Friday the 26th beginning at 3:30 p.m.; Mr. David Cromer was the guest speaker January 22 when Dr. Graham, the minister, was on vacation in Florida; and attendance was 112 in Sunday school and 68 more for church January 15.

Did you see the Christmas letter of the Edward Riggs with the picture of the four children? Mary Frances was born December 31, weighed eight pounds, stayed in the hospital four days, and within a week her mother, whose name she bears, was in the "swing of housework again." The doctor completes his work in April, they will do some visiting, and the family of six will sail from the west coast back to India in the early summer.

At Apple's Chapel January 22 the minister, Bland Lebrick, spoke on "Simply Out of This World" (if you have the same kind of curiosity this writer had you will look up the next in Psalm 72:18.), and Mr. Thompson spoke in the evening on "Heritage and Horizons in Home Missions."

At High Point last Sunday morning the young people conducted the service of worship while the minister was at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania, attending midwinter meetings of the Missions Council (they would have done it if he had been home).

At Mt. Zion (Mebane) the minister modestly does not put his name on the Sunday Bulletin but on January 22 he spoke on "The Things That Are Ours" and announced in the Bulletin an area meeting of laymen January 26, the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship meeting at Elon February 19, the annual rally of Pilgrim Fellowship at Moonelon April 16, a community prayer meeting in the Mebane Baptist Church January 25, and a previous Sunday offering of $139.53.

At The Church of Wide Fellowship January 22 Pastor Carl Wallace led his people in thinking about "Strange Relationships in the Quest for Faith," announced that the Junior P. F. would see the film "Family of Ghana," congratulated Mrs. George S. Proctor on her 91st birthday, reported unanimous approval at the Annual Church Meeting of the Constitution and a desire to consider a different local name, and listed new officers for church and Sunday school. The Sunday before there were 141 in Sunday school and 144 in church.

January 8 was a busy day for Rev. Bill Simmons at Great Bridge. He baptized 17 people and ordained three deacons in addition to speaking on church vows with the topic "Under Oath."

At Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth, February 8 the Rev. Frank R. Hamilton of Christian Temple will discuss in the evening meeting the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, and a week later the church will vote on the Constitution. Young people met last Sunday for breakfast, conducted the morning service, and after the evening program enjoyed bowling.

OAKLAND BIBLE CLASS MEETS

The N. G. Newman Bible Class of Oakland Christian Church met Tuesday night, January 17, in the home of Mrs. W. C. Dailey. Twelve members and one visitor were present. Mrs. Webster Chapman, president, presided, Mrs. A. G. Griffin led the devotionals with Dr. Scott leading the prayer.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read, and the treasurer reported a balance on hand of $388.00. The class voted to give $300.00 to the Building Fund. Suggestions were made that the class meet only four times each year, and that officers be elected for two years. These are to be voted on later.

A basket of fruit was sent to Mr. Curtis Griffin on his 79th birthday. He has been sick for eleven years.

A committee composed of Mrs. Ellsworth Savage, Mrs. C. P. Andrews and Mrs. A. G. Griffin were given information to go in the Year Book.

The hostess served delicious refreshments.

A Letter From A Polio Victim

Route 4, Box 268
Asheboro, North Carolina
January, 1961

Dear Mr. Lester,

I am a polio victim. Have had polio since July of 1953. You probably have read about me in different news papers.

The foundation took care of my hospital expense, amounting to more than thirty thousand dollars, provided me with an Iron Lung, a rocking bed, Chest Respirator, and other equipment, and helps to keep the equipment in good working condition.

As you all know, this is the month for the NEW MARCH OF DIMES. Will you please take up a collection in your church for this great organization? It would be truly appreciated. The Salk-Vaccine has reduced the number of polio cases but there are still a lot of people who need treatment for polio and this treatment is made possible through your donations to the MARCH OF DIMES.

Enclosed is a picture of me typing with my mouth, using a mouth piece.

IMPORTANT EVENTS AT PLEASANT HILL

The beautiful new building of Pleasant Hill church, Route 2, Liberty, North Carolina has been a busy place during January.

At the morning service January 8 the Reverend W. W. Snyder preached on "Why Do People Lose Their Religion?" That evening the corner stone was laid and the pastor, Rev. Reuben S. Askew, was recognized as pastor of the church and a member of the Western North Carolina Conference, and his standing was raised from Conference to Full Ordination.

Sharing in this evening service were Rev. Collie Seymour, president of the Western N. C. Conference, Rev. Clyde Fields, superintendent of the Southern Convention, Rev. Glen Garrett of Mt. Zion church, Rev. T. W. Madren and Rev. T. F. Liverman in addition to several local people.

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Conference was scheduled to meet there Saturday evening, January 28, with a meal being furnished by the church.

Locally there were several important events, also. January 22 was Family Night when the young people were presenting "The Split Level Family," and an offering was to be received so they could purchase a movie machine.

On the first Sunday the minister installed the Sunday school teachers, and at the first meeting of the laymen this year he installed their leaders. January 20 a selected group of leaders met to consider ways in which the church may become more useful in the community.

Efforts were being made to organize a Junior Choir of children from 9 to 11 years of age, and memorial gifts were being sought for the church and Sunday school rooms.

Missions Council Midwinter Meetings

Buck Hill Falls, Pa., — Nearly 800 church leaders, both clergy and lay members gathered here this week for the annual Midwinter Meetings of the Congregational Christian Churches and of units of the United Church of Christ.

Sessions began on Thursday, January 26, and continued through Wednesday, February 1.

The annual gathering brought together the executive staffs and boards of directors and executive committee members of every national agency within the Congregational Christian Churches.

Programs were established and plans set for denominational work in home missions, foreign missions, social action, lay members' activities, promotion and Christian service. An overall denominational budget for promotion of the mission work was set.

A number of agencies of the United Church of Christ also met during the week. The United Church was formed in 1957 by a union of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the

"The Cross-Bearer" is the name of the interesting four page legal size mimeographed news letter distributed to 200 families. Bulletin for the 15th says the offering made by 309 people in Sunday school and 215 in church the Sunday before amounted to $358.63.

General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches.

A joint meeting of Congregational Christian state Conference Superintendents and presidents of Evangelical and Reformed Synods was held during the week, bringing together the regional executives of the uniting denominations.

A unique Committee on the Aging, made up of representatives of nearly a dozen organizations and agencies of the uniting denominations, met during the week to assess the resources which the United Church will have to tackle problems of the elderly and to make recommendations for further work and study in this area.

At Shallow Well the annual report showed an income for current expenses of $10,306.65 and for building fund $5,010.02. Added to this from a variety of sources was $865.00 which made a net income of $16,181.67. Pastor Max Vestal reported 993 calls, 54 hours worked each week.

Storms Make A Difference

The changed arrangement of the paper this week is not a planned new look; it was a necessity caused by a storm. Out of the south and west came cold rain that froze on everything it touched here in the heart of Carolina, and that was followed by a sleet and snow. Traffic came to a stand still — or at least the editor's part did, for he did not have the nerve to wrestle the storm and risk travel the twenty-five miles to the print shop the day he was supposed to be there. A day late made changes necessary so the pressman could get the paper rolling.

Come to think of it, storms do make a difference. And they are not all wind, and rain, and snow, and sleet. Many of them are in the minds and emotions of human beings. They are just as destructive as those in nature. And when they are past the person is not quite the same as before.

One of the great lessons of life we all need to learn is how to accept the storms, to prepare for them, to grow stronger because they sweep over us. Troubles never seem good when they are present; but it is through trouble that character shines, and is strengthened, sweetened, purified. Remember Calvary. Without it there would have been no Easter.

Statesmen Speak Truth

Some readers did not like for this paper to carry the inaugural address of North Carolina's new Governor. They will probably be more distressed when they see herein a similar address of the new President of the United States. But these men put themselves on record as being in favor of progress in our world. That is the message of the Church.

In partisan politics a religious newspaper has little place, but in government, in the united effort of a nation to render service to its citizens and all the people of the world, in an attempt to bring hope to the downtrodden, health to the helpless, learning to the ignorant, and peace to all men — in matters of this kind the Church finds its heart. It dare not stand on the sidelines and let the procession move forward unattended and unaided.

In America today we are experiencing something new. A Roman Catholic is challenging all of us to devoted service to humanity, to join in a crusade for freedom, to develop adequate character for the dangerous time in which we live.

Protestantism is not made of the kind of stuff that refuses to share in human betterment because the elected leader happens to be of a different faith. A sure way to lose is to do nothing.

Friendship Has Value

The reason we have a church in Fayetteville, North Carolina, is because Mrs. Florence Rogers gave the land for it, and otherwise helped to start it.

At 79 her frail body ceased to function, and her friends laid it to rest in the family plot in Goldsboro.

Mrs. Rogers was an unusual person. As a widow she transformed a 300 acre farm into a beautiful residential area and a magnificent shopping center. The old farm house was stuffed with antiques, cats and dogs. This remained her home until the day of her death, and to her doors came leaders of city, state, and church. Her perceptive mind challenged those who discussed with her matters of business, politics, or religion. Her sense of friendship was deep. Her love for the Church expressed itself in ideas, service, and gifts. Her business acumen, shared with four others, transformed her small estate into millions.

Six months as pastor of Eutaw Community Church gave this writer a chance to share with Mrs. Rogers not only the erection of a church building, but, something much more precious, an abiding friendship based on mutual confidences and religious devotion. Her death January 20 has left a loneliness.

At Oakland, Dr. W. T. Scott, minister, the first Newsletter has made its appearance — nine pages of nicely mimeographed information concerning the church and its activities.

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

SEEING JESUS

"The eyes of all in the synagogue were fixed on him."

Luke 4:20

Here right before their eyes was a living page out of the age old book of their great prophet Isaiah. The prophecy had come true.

They heard Jesus read: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me... he has anointed me to preach good news to the poor... to proclaim release to the captives... recovery of sight to the blind... to set at liberty the oppressed... to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

It was enough. He closed the book. Undoubtedly the reading described the reader. Their eyes were fixed on him. The hometown boy. Ah! Isaiah's long expected, the anointed of God.

He talked to them. He told them: "Today this scripture has been fulfilled in your hearing." They spoke well of him and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And well they might for those words and his teachings have been proved by the saints and the centuries to be "the beautiful words of life"!

Some who fixed their eyes on him that day looked with faith and love, some with wonder, some with unconcern, and still others with envy.

Let us today look on him with renewed appreciation and love, with deepened humility and an increased desire to serve him — to serve him with all our heart. It is high time for us to be more concerned about the "good news" he was anointed to preach, and with all earnestness make it come alive right where we are and in all the world. Amen.

Youth Week

This is what is known in church circles as Youth Week. This paper is glad to share in this "celebration" by giving extra space to our young people and their work.

Did you say this is no celebration? Right. But just think how we would celebrate new births if there had been none in our country for a decade. Because babies are born every few minutes and grow to be intelligent teenagers is no reason for us to forget their importance, dignity, and worth. So long as we celebrate the birthday of former Presidents, contributors to literature, music, art, medicine, science, or even the birth of a nation, is it not reasonable to take some time to appreciate, encourage, and rejoice in the life of present day youth who may be remembered for centuries because of their contribution to the welfare of mankind? Let's celebrate Youth at least one week during the year.

We low-rate them, criticize them, call them delinquents and criminals — unfortunately a few deserve this doleful tune of their elders — but there are times when we need to think of other qualities of the people who will soon inherit our houses, run our business, including government and church, and be the leaders of our brave new world. They are the young people who are so regular in attendance in church that we sometimes forget they are there. But give them a chance in the chancel while you sit in the pew and before you know it they will have led you into the presence of God whom you will adore. Ask them about how to live with all the people of the community, and you may be surprised at the simplicity and saneness of their answers. Depend upon them for some responsible job, and the chances are that you will not be let down. Look behind the outside care-free attitude, and in most cases you will find serious consideration about what to do with the life that is theirs. Join them in an evening of fun and you will find refreshment indeed. Keep alive by living with young people; that is the way to stay young.

The Christian Sun is glad to say that our churches believe in their young people. That is the meaning of Moonelon, and Bob Knowles. We have a place to meet, thanks to the laymen, and we have a trained leader. These cost money. We believe it is a good investment, for it is an investment in young people who want to be better than they are, who want to know how to live effectively and well. So, in this Youth Week, we salute the young people of the Southern Convention and their comrades with whom they join hands and hearts around the world — the good young people who will be better tomorrow!

Choosing Life's Work

Some people never choose what they will do. They just drift wherever currents or tides may take them. They start no place, and they never arrive.

Others make wrong choices. Selfish indulgence, a desire for pleasure, over-eagerness for wealth, and a dozen other little devils offer glittering prizes unworthy of people who can think and feel. Sometimes it appears to be easier to choose the low way rather than the high, but it should always be remembered that bogs, swamps, and fogs are in the lowlands, and that only the high road leads through sunshine to where the vision glorious and life at its best can be found. There may be much company on the low road, but who wants company if life seems not worth living?

This piece will be read by those who think noble thoughts, who dream of fine accomplishments, who desire deep in their hearts to know and to do the will of God. To them a minister would like to say a brief word.

The Church needs you. It needs your youth, adulthood, and old age. It needs your intelligence and your talents. It needs your vigor and daring. It needs your sturdiness and resilience. It needs your songs and dances and prayers. It needs your love and loyalty. It needs your humility filled with faith.

No, this does not mean just being a missionary or a minister — but for some it surely will. It means that you can help to plan that new crusade envisioned by men like John R. Mott and Robert E. Speer that will "evangelize the world in this generation," as they so well said and undertook to accomplish. My generation failed them; but you may not. You need not. It may mean that you will delve into scientific discoveries that will destroy disease and lengthen human life; that you will help to solve the problem of food so that nobody goes to bed hungry at night (more than half the world's people do now); that you will enter government service and be the prophet to lead nations into cooperative endeavor that will eliminate forever war that destroys; or you may earn money with which to do the work of the Church that now is impossible because church members will not give enough. Such hopes for you are very real in the hearts of your elders who have failed to find the way out of many pitfalls. It could be that you are the ones whom God has sent to the world for just such a time as this. In the long ago it was a beautiful queen who was given such an opportunity. Now it is your chance.

When thinking of what you will do with the years that lie ahead, do not forget that preachers who are prophets and teachers are necessary in a good civilization. If you are endowed with the talents, this may be your job. The place may be close to where you are, or it may be on the other side of the earth. This is not important. The work is.

Choose your life's work in the light of Christian truth, and then prepare for it. You will love it, and you will be the best that you can be.

A NATIONAL BURDEN THAT IS NOT A TAX BURDEN

The public has become so tax conscious that everything having U. S. as a part of its name becomes suspect as "us" taxpayers. The rare and possibly the only exception is the Soldiers' Home, which occupies a 300-acre tract of land about seven miles from the main business section of Washington, D. C.

Not one cent of tax money goes to support this more than a century old institution which cares for some 2,000 retired and disabled service men.

The home is supported by a small deduction from the monthly pay of all men and women of the regular army, and since 1947 by those of the regular air force. The amount of each deduction varies, but is often as low as 15 cents and rarely more than 50 cents.

The home was established in 1851 by an act of Congress, and the original fund came from a levy on Mexico made by General Winfield Scott, and about $54,000 from an unexpended fund provided by Congress to return wounded and disabled soldiers of the war with Mexico. This ended all public expense for the home's operation and maintenance.

Both men and women are eligible for admission if they have had 20 years' service or discharged for disability in line of duty. Most of the occupants are homeless, and many will be buried — as a host of others have been — in the home's "Little Arlington" which had its beginning with the burial of several thousand casualties in the ranks of the blue and the gray.

Occupants of the home receive living quarters, rations, clothing, and medical service, including hospitalization in the home's modern hospital. They also receive free laundry and dry cleaning service and adequate facilities for recreation. Those who have abilities to make useful articles are furnished a workshop, which is open to the public, and are allowed to retain all incomes from sales. Sightseeing and fishing trips are arranged for those who care to take them.

The home's grounds are beautifully criss-crossed with walkways, shrubbery, rest benches, and the condition of all these is so admirable that an ideal housekeeper would find a rival. Modern buildings erected in recent years give the area an air of up-to-dateness amid giant trees and spread their branches, like the outreach of a mother's arm, over those who "have seen the glory" and are awaiting the sound of taps in a home provided by their comrades, not American taxpayers.

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

In December it was my privilege to attend the annual meeting of the "Friends of Kobe College" in Chicago. This is a group of people in the United States who are interested in Kobe College in Japan and who support it by paying the salaries of term teachers, as well as in other ways.

The dinner meeting which followed the business session was delightful. Held at Chicago Theological Seminary, and presided over by Dr. Bryant Drake, there were decorations in the Japanese motif, a Japanese dancer, and greetings from several young Japanese women who are graduates of Kobe and who are studying or working temporarily in the Chicago area. They spoke beautiful English and were living proof of the kind of teaching which Angie Crew does there.

The speaker was Dr. Pierce Beaver, an Evangelical and Reformed minister who is professor of missions at the Chicago Theological Seminary and who has recently spent time in Asia. The things he told us about Japan interested me very much. Here are a few of them.

In Asia there is a revival of religions and there is more religious ferment in Japan today than anywhere else in Asia. "Shrine-Shinto" religion now includes "pastoral care" which is a new idea picked up from Christianity. "Sectarian-Shinto" has a college in which the only course in the history of Christians is taught anywhere in Asia. Buddhism is now concerned with helping people with daily problems and the temples of this religion are crowded. Dozens of new religions have appeared since the war — off-shoots from the above, and from Christianity, and some combine elements of all three. These are each centered around a kind of messianic leader, who encourages "doing rather than thinking" and the people respond with joyous participation.

There are few Christians — about 300,000 Protestants and an equal number of Roman Catholics. The Protestants are unique compared to other "mission" countries in that they are nearly all of the urban middle class, rather than from rural areas. There is no bar to Christian missionaries. Many are from so-called "Faith Missions" who do not cooperate with others, and who glorify themselves and their work.

The weaknesses of Protestantism there: narrowness and ignorance of the role of the pastor — a teacher but not a shepherd or evangelist; many students become Christians but "graduate" from the Church because local churches in home communities or where they go to work do not absorb them; the Christians live too much to themselves — not good neighbors; many seem to think the prohibition of smoking is more important than the deity of Christ; little place in their lives for beauty or meditation, both of which are important to the average Japanese. He was surprised to find that people in general feel that Christianity was introduced outside Asia and is supported from outside, saying "Western government money provides funds for mission work."

He was very complimentary about the work of Kobe College, but said more resources were needed to maintain its pace-setting in leading education for women in high school and college. It is an effective evangelistic agent, with a higher percentage of conversions than most schools. Training in Christian homemaking is very important, as many graduates marry non-Christians. Need: practice in lay ministry; to give leadership in church music, bringing Japanese heritage in music into the Church; theological training to get over men's idea of just Church; the English is so good there they could take the role of interpreting Japanese Christianity to Americans — both tourists and those in military occupations or industry there.

The people, not institutions or laws, are the brotherhood that must crush oppression and inhumanity.

President Kennedy's Inaugural Address

My fellow citizens:

We observe today not a victory of party but a celebration of freedom — symbolizing an end as well as a beginning — signifying renewal as well as change. For I have sworn before you and Almighty God the same solemn oath our forebears prescribed nearly a century and three quarters ago.

The world is very difficult now. For man holds in his mortal hands the power to abolish all forms of human poverty and all forms of human life. And yet the same revolutionary beliefs for which our forebears fought are still at issue around the globe — the belief that the rights of man come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God.

We dare not forget today that we are the heirs of that first revolution. Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friends and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans — born in this century, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage — and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed today at home and around the world.

Let every nation know, whether it wish us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend or oppose any foe in order to assure the survival and success of liberty.

This much we pledge — and more.

To those old allies whose cultural and spiritual origins we share, we pledge the loyalty of faithful friends. United, there is little we cannot do in a host of cooperative ventures. Divided there is little we can do — for we dare not meet a powerful challenge at odds and split asunder.

To those new states whom we welcome to the ranks of the free, we pledge our word that one form of colonial control shall not have passed away merely to be replaced by a far more iron tyranny. We shall not always expect to find them supporting our view. But we shall always hope to find them strongly supporting their own freedom — and to remember that, in the past, those who foolishly sought to find power by riding on the tiger's back ended up inside.

To those people in the huts and villages of half the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help themselves, for whatever period is required — not because the Communists may be doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If the free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich.

To our sister republics south of our border, we offer a special pledge — to convert our good words into good deeds — in a new alliance for progress — to assist free men and free governments in casting off the chains of poverty. But this peaceful revolution of hope cannot become the prey of hostile powers. Let all our neighbors know that we shall join with them to oppose aggression or subversion anywhere in the Americas. And let every other power know that this hemisphere intends to remain the master of its own house.

To that world assembly of sovereign states, the United Nations, our last best hope in an age where the instruments of war have far outpaced the instruments of peace, we renew our pledge of support — to prevent it from becoming merely a forum for invective — to strengthen its shield of the new and the weak — and to enlarge the area to which its writ may run.

Quest For Peace

Finally, to those nations who would make themselves our adversary, we offer not a pledge but a request: that both sides begin anew the quest for peace, before the dark powers of destruction unleashed by science engulf all humanity in planned or accidental self-destruction.

We dare not tempt them with weakness. For only when our arms are sufficient beyond doubt can we be certain beyond doubt that they will never be employed.

But neither can two great and powerful groups of nations take comfort from our present course — both sides overburdened by the cost of modern weapons. Both rightly alarmed by the steady spread of the deadly atom, yet both racing to alter that uncertain balance of terror that stays the hand of mankind's final war.

So let us begin anew — remembering on both sides that civility is not a sign of weakness, and sincerity is always subject to proof. Let us never negotiate out of fear. But let us never fear to negotiate.

Explore Problems

Let both sides explore what problems unite us instead of belaboring those problems which divide us.

Let both sides, for the first time, formulate serious and precise proposals for the inspection and control of arms — and bring the absolute power to destroy other nations under the absolute control of all nations.

Let both sides join to invoke the wonders of science instead of its terrors. Together let us explore the stars, conquer the deserts, eradicate disease, tap the ocean depths and encourage the arts and commerce.

Let both sides unite to heed in all corners of the earth the command of Isaiah — to “undo the heavy burdens... (and) let the oppressed go free.”

New World Of Law

And if a beach-head of cooperation can be made in the jungles of suspicion, let both sides join in the next task: Creating, not a new balance of power, but a new world of law, where the strong are just and the weak secure and the peace preserved.

All this will not be finished in the first one hundred days. Nor will it be finished in the first one thousand days, nor in the life of this administration, or even perhaps in our lifetime on this planet. But let us begin.

In your hands, my fellow citizens, more than in mine, will rest the final success or failure of our course. Since this country was founded, each generation of Americans has been summoned to give testimony to its national loyalty. The graves of young Americans who answered the call to service encircle the globe.

Twilight Struggle

Now the trumpet summons us again — not as a call to bear arms, though arms we need — but as a call to battle, though embattled we are — but a call to bear the burden of a long twilight struggle, year in and year out, “rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation” — a struggle

Responsibility Of American Board

Telfer Mook,
Secretary for India

When the first American Board missionaries went out to India just one hundred and forty seven years ago — and India was their first endeavour — they went to bring men to Christ. They went to save them from the deep darkness of ignorance and superstition in which they dwelt. They went to make disciples of all nations to preach and teach and baptize. They went to share urgently the gospel of God which they knew to be meant for the whole world, not just for a western fraction of it.

But they were also ambassadors for Christ in another way. God made his appeal through their acts of compassionate service which, they trusted, would show forth the love and mercy of Christ himself.

Thus, mission became service in India, or at least service became a large and valued part of mission there.

Today, thirteen years after independence, the picture has changed. The government is taking over the program and problem of education as it should. Our Christian schools have long been under government regulation. Our teachers are appointed by us but are paid by the government. In recent years our privilege of teaching the Christian faith has been curtailed gradually to instruction only outside school hours. The third five-year plan, which begins in April, 1961 provides for compulsory education for all children aged six through eleven. It may not be many years until the educational system of India will be taken over in toto by the government. Similarly, the government is moving heavily and strongly into the medical field and into programs of economic development.

We cannot and should not try to compete with government by clinging to the old works which were our offering in the past. But there are still vast frontiers for Christian service, unconquered and untouched, and there is still plenty of place and indescribable need for the trained specialist who will settle down in the village or the city, speaking the language of the people and working with them on their level, supplementing the governmental program but giving it the special Christian character which no one can mistake. In India, compassionate service, freely given without ulterior motive, is one of the best witnesses we can make to Christ.

However, service should not be the central focus of our work in the future. The center of our work should be the strengthening of the Church. Western partnership with the Indian Church should be oriented around the training of Indian leadership in the Church, as distinct from its educational, medical and other work.

In an address in January, 1960 at the Church of South India Synod in Bangalore, Prof. Chandran Devanensen of Madras Christian College said: "...perhaps the Church itself became distorted in India because it had to spend so much of its time and energies on the problems of poverty and illiteracy that it could not concentrate adequately on the strengthening of its own inner life. Should we not also look upon the emergence of a welfare state in India with relief because some of our resources and energies can be channelled now into church-building activities like theological education and Sunday schools? Will it not enable the Church to be less of an employment agency and more truly the Body of Christ?"

The center of our work should be the training of Indian leadership in the Church. Such a training program has many facets.

First and above all we should concentrate on the training of the laity, that is, of voluntary workers. Pastors

The Marathi Mission

February

- 5—Rev. and Mrs. Bruce Jones arrived in Bombay last March to begin a short term with the Student Christian Movement of India. They are graduates of Union Seminary and will travel to Christian colleges, working with Christian young people and faculty members.
- 6—Mrs. Maude Miller served in China three years with her husband, who was a medical missionary representing Yale-in-China. He lost his life there in 1948. A trained nurse, she went to India in 1960 and will do public health work in rural areas.
- 7—Rev. Edith Pruesse (pronounced Price) is an ordained minister, who is District Minister for the large Ahmednagar and Supa Districts, assisting and working with both village and city pastors. She first went to India in 1944 as a teacher in Ahmednagar Girls' High School. She has visited the Southern Convention.
- 8—Mrs. Eleanor Tishkins (with whom Mrs. F. C. Lester had the pleasure of sharing a hotel room at the General Synod last summer) is now on her way back to India after her first furlough. She is the manager, treasurer, and advisor of the Cisal Fiber Industry in Ahmednagar. More than 100 women earn their living in pleasant surroundings, while their children are cared for in a nursery. Their products are sold by women's groups in our churches.
- 9—Mr. and Mrs. Ross Thomas went to the Marathi Mission in 1928. Now he is treasurer of the Madura Mission as well as the Marathi Mission and assistant treasurer of the Ceylon Mission and treasurer of Ahmednagar College. His wife is the assistant treasurer.
- 10—Rev. Loleta Wood went to India in 1918; after 3 years had polio and had to return to U. S.; in 1929 went back as principal of Orlinda Childs Pierce Memorial where she worked until 1948; she is now on staff of United Theological College in Poona.
- 11—Rev. and Mrs. Robert Fairbank have served in India since 1926. He is a fourth generation missionary, who has done a variety of work in the last 35 years in India. Now he is establishing a ministry to industrial workers in textile center of Sholapur and she works in social service center. They have visited the Southern Convention.

who must now minister to from fifteen to forty congregations desperately need assistance. Already we have made one significant experiment. In South India two farmers and a drummer were ordained in June, 1959, to minister to the congregations in the villages where they live. They had been brought together several times over a period of three years for Bible study and instruction in basic Christian belief. Finally, it was decided by the local Diocese that they were ready for ordination. They now serve their congregations on a voluntary basis under the general direction of a circle pastor who has received a more complete theological education. Bishop Lesslie Newbigin and others have given considerable thought to a reshaping of the pattern of the ministry in India that would not only meet the needs of the Christian community but also reach out to non-Christians. They believe that the voluntary worker may be the key to this new pattern. The training of such workers should have a prior claim on our attention and resources.

Secondly, pastors presently serving the Church need (and are eager for) further training. Provision should be made for ministers from the west, who have already had fruitful years in the pastoral ministry, to spend time among pastors in India and Ceylon, sharing with them from their experience. Many groups of pastors in India have already earnestly asked for this help. Similarly, Indian pastors who have served enough years to know the strength and the weaknesses of their own ministries, should be provided the opportunity of serving briefly as assistant pastors in western Churches. Under the guidance of senior pastors, new insights can be gained that will deepen and enrich their work after returning home. At the same time, it is important to recognize the corollary that we in the west have much to learn from them, whose spiritual depth and personal, intimate knowledge and love of God are very humbling to us.

Thirdly, there is urgent need for training of Sunday school leaders and teachers. Deprived of the week-day school as the traditional center of Christian education, the Church is conscious of its lack of readiness for carrying on this important responsibility. It is desperately asking for help in the training of personnel and in the use of materials. So much is available now that is not being fully and properly used. The All-India

Sunday School Union and the World Council of Christian Education, to take two examples, are publishing excellent materials, but in many areas of our work there are no teachers prepared to make use of them.

And lastly, there is the basic need for stewardship education. Already we know that one group of Christians, despite their poverty, has increased their offerings two and one-half times over an eight-year period as a result of careful and prayerful Bible study and preparation. Such an experience can be repeated only as we in the west, in response to our partnership of sharing in the life of the Indian Church, are willing to make provision for the training of the necessary leadership.

SAY IT RIGHT...

WRITE IT RIGHT

The words approximately and about should be carefully used. Approximately is the better word in scientific language because it does not imply guesswork. About signifies near or nearby and is less exact in its description than approximately or approximate.

Perfectly right and perfectly honest are two expressions which should not be used. There are no degrees of right and honest.

A person gives something for a purpose, as relief; he gives to a person or organization.

Lunch and luncheon are almost interchangeable, often so used, but luncheon is more formal.

What's New In The New Year?

Robbins Ralph

The turn of the calendar brings to mind a story of the old and the new which reveals a curious twist of supposed logic. "I never go to a movie unless I've seen it before" gushed a sweet young thing: "That way I know if it's any good." Her reasoning was about as logical as that of the food fussy child who says "I don't like it" when he's never tried it.

New Hymns

Before we smile too smugly let us confess how often a similar twist of mind or habit imprisons us in the old and familiar. The choice of a new hymn always meets with congregational resistance. "Why don't they stick to the old familiar tunes?" we grumble. Isn't that the same as saying "I never sing a hymn unless I've sung it before?" Has it ever occurred to us that the old hymns were once new and had to survive initial resistance?

New Translations

Perhaps less objection is found to departures from the King James version of the Bible, but some will feel unhappy at the pulpit use of the revised standard version and the modern free translations of the Holy Word. Can't we hear God speaking to us in contemporary idiom? Don't we want to listen unless he says the same old thing in the same old way? Perhaps we need to be jarred with a fresh note, as modern as it is eternal.

New Friends, New Ideas

The "logic" of the sweet young thing is the prescription for settling into a rut, for going stale; eventually it is the road to death. Suppose we said, "I never speak to a person unless I've spoken to him before; I never accept a friend unless he's already my friend; I never entertain an idea I haven't already long accepted." To stop growing is to start dying.

All Things New

Behold, I make all things new," says our Creator. (Rev. 21:5) Let us enter the new year as the child enters life, eagerly, restlessly, trying all things, venturing on new paths, learning the joy of discovery. Otherwise our fondness for the old may shut us out of the new heaven and the new earth which God is bringing into being.

Youth Faces The Future

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

Dozo yoroshiku!*

It's raining. One of those nights that make you want to curl up in a warm place and let responsibility go to the winds. But, I've finally decided to quit reading "wild novels," and write down some of the things that happened to me this summer — and wish you a merry Christmas.

Okinawa was a nice experience because I had a nice host; but as a whole the situation of the human beings that dwell on that small-rock-in-the-sea is depressing. My opinions are not grounded in a long stay or "extensive observations," but in my three days there I began to share the confusion of values and purpose that seem to dominate both the Americans there and the Okinawans. As a whole it's a rather sad example of the "meeting of East and West," but since both sides are good at exploitation, it

JOHN R. KERNODLE

The president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Pilgrim Fellowship is John R. Kernodle, Jr. of Burlington. He is the 16 year old son of a doctor, is a Junior in the Walter Williams High School, shares in the Junior Exchange Club, Speech Club, Debating Club, French Club, and concert band, and is a trainer for varsity football, basketball and track teams. He is a junior assistant on the school paper, assistant scribe in DeMolay, a member of First Christian Church where he is P. F. Action chairman. He is also a member of the Alamance Regulators Chapter of the Children of the American Revolution and recording secretary for the North Carolina chapter of the same organization.

The five Conference presidents of Pilgrim Fellowship were requested to send pictures and information about themselves. Brevity of time and exceedingly difficult weather hindered our ability to get all the pictures and information for this issue. We hope that it will come later. F. C. L.

maintains a "certain kind of balance." It's "Strategic Militarily" — and maybe that's all we need to say to justify ourselves. "What price freedom?" — and who pays the bill?

Taiwan is not like Japan. The main construction material is red brick, and all the villages are a cluster of small red brick buildings. Quite a contrast to the dark unpainted wood of most Japanese homes. There seems to be a great deal of poverty, and I was somewhat surprised to see groups of men used in the capacity of dray animals. Water buffalo and carts jam even the main highways early in the day as the people take their vegetables and other produce to the market. Beggars are apparent on main streets, but in Tainan they and soldiers-on-one-day-leave seemed to fill most temple gardens. A statue or large portrait of Chiang Kai Shek and/or Sun Yat Sen appear in the center of every village. All children come to school early for "flag raising," exercises, and "military preparedness training against the communist invaders on the mainland." In the movie we stood for the national anthem, "reconquer the mainland" songs, and a newsreel of/by/for Chiang Kai Shek — after the movie we sang other "patriotic" songs and left to the strains of a march. Secret police or "military guards" seemed to be in all trains, buses, public stations, and posted at both ends of every bridge on the highway and railroad.

My trip to Tainan on the solitary railroad (that runs almost parallel to the Jet fuel line and the only North-South highway) was sooty and mountainous. The mountains are very rugged, but beautiful and majestically green. Beaches seemed numerous and alluring, but heavily guarded. The countryside seemed pleasant and prosperous, but overloaded with people. Stopping in Taichung to visit Dnghai University (sister school to International Christian University in Japan, Chung Chi College in Hong Kong, and Silliman University in the Philippines) found me in an American auto (taxi) going at "kami kaze" speed along a highway covered with milo maize — which we automatically shelled for them as we ran over it. (I was part of a similar favor for some Okinawans.) School was not in session, but the campus is quite impressive, and talking with a few lingering foreign professors was convincing that Dnghai fosters strong academic intent.

Three Chinese college students took me in hand for my last two days of sightseeing in Taiwan, and although we talked through the gamut of subjects, and became quite informally friendly, none of us dared broach the military or political situation of Taiwan. Their seeming belief in the future of Taiwan, and quiet submission to Nationalist propaganda, was disconcerting.

The lines of military vehicles on Taipei streets and constantly screaming jet fighter planes overhead might not have frightened me if they had not been American. At first I was surprised, changing to a feeling of tragic responsibility, and finally guilt. More and more, every khaki colored truck seemed to point to me and my personal responsibility for the existent situation. I left Taiwan rather shaken.

Work camp began about 21 hours after I arrived in Hong Kong, and those four weeks of living and working with 24 other young people from six different countries on a lonely, "unkempt" island, included plenty "in's," "out's," "up's," "down's," and "arounds." The first two weeks may have been dedicated mostly to

Japanese term meaning "wind of the gods."

"around's," as "East and West began meeting" and found that their differences were sometimes just as apparent as their likenesses. Eating cabbage, scooping cement, and carrying rocks gradually brought our "approximate living" into a real group experience. What Christian love we may have been able to share was not "manufactured" or commanded, but resulted richly from sincere personalities meeting in a Christian concern and effort. The steps, walks, and pier that we turned our cement smoothing skills to, were part of our worship — praising God through physical effort. At times it seemed ridiculous as our unskilled hands left air bubbles in the concrete, but the "... tie that binds our hearts in Christian love ..." was forged as much on the pier as it was in the chapel. We went seeking challenge, understanding, fun — and vision. Vision for our lives and for the world. We left after four weeks, not certain how much of any of these we had found, but exchange of letters in these following weeks is telling me that I am not alone in my discovery of "how much our month on Chu Lap Kok really meant," and the influence it promises to play in the future. Its values were illusive, but strong.

The Light Of The World

Background Scripture: John 7-9.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 59:20-60:3.

Memory Selection: I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. John 8:12.

Jesus had just done another of his "signs" which John includes in his Gospel as evidences that Jesus is the Son of God, as an aid to faith, and as a means through that faith to "life in his name." By the way it is the only miracle in the gospels in which the sufferer is said to have been afflicted from his birth. (Acts tells of two such instances, the man laid at the Beautiful Gate, and the impotent man at Lystra.) In this "sign" or miracle, Jesus had given sight to a man born blind. He had done this by mixing spittle with some clay and anointing the eyes of the blind man. It may seem strange to us that Jesus used spittle, but he was only using the methods and customs of the day for spittle, especially the spittle of a distinguished person, was believed to have curative qualities. There are many references to its use in the writings of that day. Having anointed the eyes of the blind man with the moist clay, Jesus sent him to the Pool of Silsam to wash. When the man obeyed Jesus he received his sight. It is worth noting that obedience to the divine command brought the divine blessing. It always does.

A GOOD DEED BY A BAD MAN?

Jesus had done a good deed, a wonderfully good deed. He had given sight to a man born blind. But the Pharisees said that he was a bad man, indeed he was a sinner. For listen to this — Jesus had broken the Mosaic Law, at least their interpretation of the Mosaic Law, on two points: (a) He had been guilty of working on the Sabbath day — had he not mixed spittle with clay, and wasn't that work? And (b) he had healed on the Sabbath day, and all medical attention was forbidden except where life was actually in danger, and then only to keep the patient from getting worse, and not to make him any better. And could not this man who had been blind from birth waited at least one more day! Thus do we see to what fantastic extremes the scribes and Pharisees had gone concerning the use of the Sabbath day. But as Jesus said on another occasion, "The Sabbath was made for man" and human need had precedence over institutions. The simple fact is that these men were facing a fact which they could not explain, and they had recourse to abuse, and insult, and threatened force in an effort to browbeat the man into admitting that it was all a fake, and to insinuations and open charges against Jesus himself. The fact is that Jesus is always doing things which seem to the unbeliever to be far too good and far too wonderful to be true. And these Pharisees and Scribes are typical of many moderns who will go to any length, even to absurd lengths to explain away the miracles and mighty works of Jesus.

THE UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT

The Pharisees had some ingenious arguments. They marshalled some damaging facts. They readily confounded the blind man, uninitiated as he was in the fine art of theological hair-splitting. But there was one argument they could not get around — there was the man that knew, whose parents knew, whom the people who knew him knew, had been born blind and was now able to see, to see clearly. There just was no answer to that stubborn fact. Here, of course, is the unanswerable argument in defense of Christianity. A Christian man, a man whose life has been changed, a man whose life shows the transforming effect of Christ's power — there is no argument against that. Peter later writes to his fellow Christians to this effect: "Having a good conscience, that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good manner of life in Christ." I Peter 3:16

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, D. D.
Pastor of Berea Congregational
Christian Church,
Driver, Virginia

THE COMPASSION AND CONCERN OF CHRIST

The compassion of Christ is shown in his healing of the man born blind. Where heretofore nothing had been done for the man, indeed nothing could be done for him. Christ took him in hand and healed him. But he did not stop there. When he heard that the Pharisees had excommunicated him, "thrown him out of the church," he looked him up and led him gently into larger truth and established him in the way of life. It is significant that Jesus found the man in the Temple. His first reaction after his healing was to go to the place of worship. Let the man who has been graciously helped and healed by Christ, enter into the house of God to return thanks. All too often we turn people out of the church, or mark their names off the roll, when perhaps what we ought to do is to look them up, give them a sense of being wanted and of belonging, and try to bring them back into fellowship and service.

It should also be noted that when the man found himself unable to cope with the subtle and finely-spun arguments of the Pharisees, he fell back on his personal experience. "One thing I do know, that whereas I was blind, now I see," he said. There are countless Christians who know little if anything about the great theological issues over which learned men argue so valiantly and violently, but they do know one thing — they know that Christ has made a difference in their lives. That is the central issue. Thank God we can experience what we cannot explain.

GREATER AND MORE WONDERFUL AS THE YEARS GO BY

If we read this chapter straight through at one time, with care and attention, we will see a lovely progression in the blind man's idea of Jesus. He begins by calling Jesus A MAN. "A man that is called Jesus opened my eyes." He began thinking of Jesus as a man, but as a wonderful man. The blind man had never met anybody like him, or anybody who could do wonderful things like him. If a man only begins thinking of Jesus as a wonderful man, as supreme among men, if we think of the sheer magnificence of his manhood, we do well. He stands at the top of the list of the world's greatest men, and occupies the highest place in the Hall

CHRISTMAS BANQUET FOR MINISTERIAL STUDENTS

The annual Christmas Banquet, sponsored by the Church and Ministry Committee of Southern Synod, for ministerial students and their pastors, was held at Calvary Church, Thomasville, Tuesday evening, December 27, with Rev. Allan Rohrbaugh in charge. The attendance of students and guests was the largest ever, and an evening of fine fellowship was enjoyed. After a delightful meal, served by the ladies of the Guild of Calvary, introduction of students and guests was attended to by Dr. Banks J. Peeler, Chairman of the Church and Ministry Committee. Greetings were spoken by the President of Synod. Christmas carols were led by Mrs. Rohrbaugh in which the entire group joined heartily.

The main address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Richard Mendsiek, pastor First Church, High Point, who used as his subject, "Having the Everlasting Gospel to Preach." The speaker developed his theme out of a background of many years in the pastorate together with several years experience as a synod president. The closing prayer was spoken by Rev. J. Wayne Fouts, pastor of Emanuel Church, Thomasville. Approximately twenty-five young people are now under the care of Southern Synod, preparing for either the ministry or service in the field of Christian Education. A total of fifty-six were served, which included pastors of students and their wives.

January 15 at Mt. Zion (Mebane, N. C.) Winfred Riley and Weldon Ward were ordained as deacons. Chairman of the board of deacons, Gorman Wilkerson, asked the questions, Billy Walker read the Scripture, deacon emeritus, Gattis Carden, gave the charge to the new deacons, and Hubert Walker led the prayer. Deacon Odis Johnson and Clarence Atkins joined the others in laying hands on each man as Rev. Glenn Garrett ordained them.

While their building is undergoing repairs the Oak Grove Methodist Church will join our Great Bridge Church in Sunday evening services. This announced as an opportunity for the two groups to become better acquainted and to share in religious services with an evangelistic flavor. The ministers and choirs will alternate in conducting services, and children's choirs will combine for each service.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA LAYMEN HEAR ROBERT KNOWLES

"The Overall Picture" of his job as Minister of Christian Education of the Southern Convention was presented by Rev. Robert Knowles to the Eastern North Carolina Laymen's Fellowship at McCuller's Ruritan Building (Plymouth Church) on Sunday night, January 8, 1961.

Mr. Knowles began his illustration by placing a pair of "used" overalls on the board; then he added lettered cards showing the different phases of Christian Education work.

First and most time consuming was traveling, about 20,000 miles per year, or the equivalent of 50-60 eight hour work days. Next, came letter writing in answer to the many questions and requests he receives every day, and consulting with ministers and many committees to help coordinate the work of all churches. Recommending resources and compiling displays takes many hours and hard study. Interpretation of questions and requests can be difficult and time consuming. Work with church schools is a very important phase of his every day job. Laymen's work, campus ministry, youth work, Moonelon activities, camps and conferences, Leadership Training Schools, Missionary Education, Christian vocations, and counseling are some of his responsibilities.

Evangelism always takes much time from all our ministers. Along with the work in the churches, it moves next to the Conferences, and then to the Southern Convention; then to the denomination, on up the ladder to United Church of Christ, Council of Churches (N. C. & Va.), and the United Christian Youth Movement. If that were not enough to keep him busy, there are always Special Concerns — things that come at no particular time or place, and no one to tackle it. This is handed to our Minister of Christian Education, along with all these other duties. With all these cards on the pair of overalls, we could hardly see what he had left to use for mowing lawns, working gardens, flowers, and maybe even a little pleasure. In fact, all his time was taken. Maybe we do not appreciate the many efforts and long hours that "Bob" gives our churches.

Approximately 100 laymen attended. A delicious meal and the wonderful talk by Mr. Knowles was enjoyed by all. Joseph Ayscue, Eastern N. C. Conference Laymen's Fellowship President, presided. Dr. Danieleley will be our speaker April 9, and we are looking forward to having him with us again.

A PRE-LENTEN CONVOCATION FOR MINISTERS

February 8-10 is the time for the Pre-Lenten Convocation for ministers of the Convention of the South, the Southeast Convention, the Southern Convention, and the Southern Synod, and the place is Franklinton Center at Bricks, North Carolina.

The stated purpose is "to provide for ministers of the conventions and synods of the United Church of Christ relaxation, fellowship, information, new insights and inspiration; all designed for a more effective and fruitful ministry."

Guest leaders will be Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta, Georgia, Dr. Robert S. Paul, professor of church history at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, Hartford, Connecticut, and Dr. Gerald J. Jud, executive secretary of the office of evangelism of the United Church of Christ with offices in Cleveland, Ohio.

The schedule calls for registration Wednesday afternoon, February 8, at 1:30 with the opening session at three o'clock. Adjournment will come at one o'clock Friday. Topics which will be presented include "Incarnation and Redemption," "The Last Hope," "The Church as the Body of Christ," "The Importance of the Spirit," "Christ and the Eucharist," and "Some Immediate Steps." Devotions will be led by Dr. Jud who will be chaplain.

The program has been planned by Rev. W. Judson King, Rev. Billy Joe Leonard, Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., Rev. Lewis Bill Simmons, Rev. Frederick A. Hargett, Sr., and Dr. Gerald P. Jud, with superintendents J. Taylor Stanley, James H. Lightbourne, Jr., and Clyde Fields as ex officio members.

The total cost is $9.50 per person. Entertainment will be in the dormitory.

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Sunday, January 22, most of our children, your Superintendent, Mr. Biggerstaff, Miss Foster, Mrs. Privette and Mr. Perkins visited our Edgewood United Church of Christ, which is located between Elon College and Burlington. They have a very new and fine Church. Many of the members of this church are young couples and they and their families are working together in an inspiring fellowship. It was our pleasure to conduct the service in the absence of Rev. Harold Myers, who was attending a workshop in the Evangelical and Reformed Synod. A group of our girls sang two hymn anthems and did a most creditable piece of work, with Sheila Beaman and Elizabeth singing one verse of each hymn as a solo. It is a joy to us to see our children do their part so willingly and so well on an occasion like this. We are so happy to visit our churches and we are delighted to see the fine work that the Edgewood congregation is doing.

Sunday night, January 22, the Burlington First Church Pilgrim Fellowship, visited our campus as guests of the Elon College Senior High Pilgrim Fellowship. A worship service was held in our Holt Chapel and then the group moved to the basement of the Chapel where they enjoyed recreation, followed by supper served by our group.

Construction continues on our cottages. The contractor gives us good hopes of their completion by May. We are eagerly awaiting this time. With the completion of the buildings we will need quite a sum to meet the contract prices. We hope that all who possibly can will meet their pledges to CHIP before May so that we can have as much cash on hand to meet this obligation. Another word about CHIP: we notice that several churches send payments on their pledges through the Convention Office. We request that payments to CHIP be sent directly to us. Since the CHIP pledges are not related to Conference Apportionment, it will be most helpful to the Convention Office and to us if we receive them directly. Thank you.

Your Superintendent is looking forward to attending the Mid-Winter Meetings at Buck Hill Falls, from January 27 and returning here about February 1.

Our total income of $611.58 for this week is about one-third of the cost of operation for one week.

Missions Council literature hereafter will be handled only in our Chicago and New York offices (Women's Fellowship literature only in Chicago) and not in Boston and San Francisco. Send your order to the nearest address:

287 Park Avenue South, New York 10, New York

19 So. LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois

In addition, distribution of films and filmstrips will also be discontinued in Boston, Chicago, and San Francisco and will be handled for us by these offices of the Bureau of Audio Visuals:

1501 Race Street, Philadelphia 2, Pennsylvania

1720 Chouteau Avenue, St. Louis 3, Missouri

Allow ample time for the mails to forward your order and deliver your materials. The offices listed above will continue to give you the best of service.

Then the man goes on to call Jesus a prophet. "He is a prophet", he said later. He realized and recognized that Jesus "spoke for God," that he brought a message from God to men, that he was a man who lived close to God. Those with discerning minds will gladly give their approval to the words of the men sent to arrest Jesus when they said "Never a man spoke like this man." He was God's supreme spokesman, and if men followed his teachings, all the personal, social, national and international problems would be solved. If ever a man deserved to be called a prophet, a man who spoke with the voice of God, it was Jesus.

Finally the man came to confess that Jesus was the Son of God. More than a mere man, even though the greatest of men, more than a prophet, even though the greatest of prophets, Jesus was the Son of God. The fact is that the more we know about Jesus, the greater he becomes, and the more the wonder grows and grows. Only one term can describe him. HE IS THE SON OF GOD, THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS.

Happy Home Is Building

Happy Home Church, Ruffin, North Carolina, broke ground for the construction of a new educational building December 18. Shown participating in the service are R. J. Hudson, representing the deacons; Ira Powell, representing trustees; Dillard Powell, the building committee and board of Christian education; Mrs. E. M. Gunn, Women's Fellowship; E. M. Gunn, older young people; Alfred Strader, young adults; Gayle Powell, young people; Rodney Pryor, boys and girls; Rev. Weldon Madren, pastor.

The building, being built by Hunt Construction Company of Greensboro, consists of six classrooms, fellowship room, kitchen, rest rooms, pastor's study, and nursery. Built of block and brick, it is expected to be completed within six months.

January 8 it was reported on the bulletin that the building fund amounted to $10,604.77. Total offerings for 1960 for the current and benevolent budget totaled $8,786.85, while the total raised for the year (exclusive of young people's and young adult classes) was $15,121.36.

GREENSBORO AREA TRAINING SCHOOL TERMED SUCCESS

An average attendance of 100 for each session proved the success of the 1961 Greensboro Area Training School for Christian Growth which was held at the First Congregational Christian Church, 400 Radiance Drive, Greensboro, North Carolina, January 8-11, 1961. Four courses were included in the school: "The Use of the Bible With Children", John Graves; "The Gospel of John" — Mr. Philip Stendel; "The Program of Music in the Church" — Mr. Donald Trexler; and "The New United Church of Christ", moderated by Mr. Martin Garren with a different speaker for each session: Reverend Harold Myers, pastor of Edgewood United Church of Christ in Burlington; Rev. Clyde Fields, Rev. Carl Daye and Dr. F. C. Lester.

The Planning Committee for the 1962 School will meet Sunday, March 5 at the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C. for an evaluation meeting and to make plans for the 1962 School. The Planning Committee is:

First Evangelical & Reformed Church, Mr. & Mrs. John Yeattes; First Congregational Christian, Mrs. J. C. Cordle, Mr. Paul Huffines; Pleasant Ridge, Mrs. Kermit Robinson, Mrs. Hugh Nelson; Palm Street, Mr. Fritz Apple, Mr. Charles Brady; Apple's Chapel, Mr. Robert Pritchett, Mr. Lloyd I. The officers for the 1961 School were: Dean, Miss Dorothy Ballinger; Business Manager, Reverend Thomas Madren; Secretary, Mr. Robert Pritchett; and Treasurer, Mr. Rayburn Hinshaw.

Eleanor Wilson Is Coming Home

October 16, 1960

Dear Friends Around the World.

Here I sit in Winter Park Lodge, a little two-room house, not beside the road, but beside the sea! The ladies of Winter Park Congregational Church gave me the money for this little place and so I named it "Winter Park Lodge." I thought that sounded cool and refreshing! I wouldn't have any other place to live this year if I didn't have this little house because I have had no other home since the typhoon. I had once thought that I might retire out here but I have changed my mind and expect to leave here next summer. Just where I shall settle I don't yet know, but I do not plan to live in Cambridge during the winter!

I tried unsuccessfully to get a teacher to come out and teach in the church day school here in Uliga. There are 270 elementary school students in the school and so I expect to sell the Morning Star this month and plan to teach here this school year. I have five periods of teaching at present but I hope to be able to drop one of them as soon as the principal arrives. I am acting principal until Jude comes.

At Newport News our church is sharing in the Peninsular Preaching Mission February 19-26. Dr. Fred Hoskins opens the series at Hampton High School and Dr. Walter Judd will close the series a week later at the same place. Dr. Sheldon Mackey will teach a Bible course each evening previous to the preaching. Other important speakers will appear during the week.

Can we force against these enemies a grand and global alliance, North and South, East and West, that can assure a more fruitful life for all mankind? Will you join in that historic effort?

In the long history of the world, only a few generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility — I welcome it. I do not believe that any of us would exchange places with any other people or any other generation. The energy, the faith and the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it — and the glow from that fire can truly light the world.

And so, my fellow Americans: Ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country.

My fellow citizens of the world: Ask not what America will do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man.

Finally, whether you are citizens of America or of the world, ask of us here the same high standards of strength and sacrifice that we ask of you. With a good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds, let us go forth to lead the land we love, asking His blessing and His help, but knowing that here on earth God's work must truly be our own.

Find the strength for your life...

Help is only a prayer away

WORSHIP TOGETHER THIS WEEK

Somewhere in your town a man you may have never seen waits hopefully for you.

He is a minister. A priest. A rabbi. A man used to speaking out . . . making decisions . . . taking action for himself, for his congregation and his community.

But where you're concerned, he can only wait and hope you will come.

He holds something in trust for you—the powerful, crucial first introduction to Faith. And he is anxious to pass it on.

The strength and confidence of Faith can mean many things to many men . . . and to the families who count on them.

So together with your family start to find that Faith this week.

Brotherhood

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star is brotherhood,
For it will bring again to earth
Her long-lost poesy and mirth;
Will send new light on ev'ry face,
A kingly power upon the race;
And till it comes, we men are slaves,
And travel downward to our graves.

Come, clear the way then, clear the way!
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path,
Our hope is in the aftermath;
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led to build the world again.
To this event the ages ran:
All hail the Brotherhood of Man!

Here And There Among The Churches

At Union Ridge the Laymen's Fellowship had Ladies' Night January 21 with men serving the banquet. The Women's Fellowship is to share the World Day of Prayer with the Bethel church women February 17.

Mrs. I. H. Vickery, Sr., was ordained as a deaconess in our Henderson church January 22 by their minister, Rev. Joe A. French. Mrs. Vickery was conducted to the altar by Mrs. E. M. Powell, wife of a minister. The Church Activities Calendar lists regular meetings for the year.

The February issue of First Church Herald (Congregational), Fairfield, Connecticut, says that Dr. and Mrs. Henry Robinson were to be on vacation February 2-9, and would be visiting in North Carolina. Dr. Robinson presided as chairman of the Missions Council at Buck Hill Falls, Penn., last week. He is the former pastor of our First Christian Church in Burlington.

Dr. George Alley started his eighth year as pastor of our Suffolk church February 1. In the Newsletter for February he says that he has not gone to his study a single morning without "enthusiasm and excitement about the day's work and plans." The church has just elected and installed a Board of Junior Deacons, furnished copies of the Constitution of the United Church of Christ to all attendants and plans to vote on it at the church conference April 12, is broadcasting morning services in February, and will join with the Methodists in evening services February 19-24 with Dr. A. Purnell Bailey of Richmond as speaker.

Rev. and Mrs. A. Lanson Granger have recently moved into a new and larger parsonage of our Warwick, Virginia, church.

Are you seeing on TV the "Count-down" series of plays by NBC that concerns the "conformity and apathy" of Americans? Time is 1:30 p.m. on Sundays. The series began February 5, and will continue for twelve weeks.

At Durham January 1 two deacons were ordained and church officers installed. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman spoke to the women at a candlelight Friendly Service dedication January 15. Ballot by mail is being made on a new church site.

"Our Children" is the name of the new quarterly printed bulletin of the Congregational Christian Home for Children at Elon College. Attractive in format and full of information, this replaces the mimeographed monthly bulletin. One item of special interest is that radio stations WBBB and WBAG in Burlington are now scheduling monthly programs concerning the Home for Children.

The Southern Convention and the Southern Synod are cooperating in plans for a Teaching, Reaching, Preaching Mission, probably next fall. Dr. Robert A. Heppel, Field Secretary for the Department of Evangelism for the United Church of Christ will be in the Southern Convention February 21-27 to assist in planning the enterprise. He will meet with the ministers in the Western N. C. Conference at our Asheboro church at 5:00 p.m. February 23, according to announcement by President Collie Seymour.

A joint Sunday school workshop for Northview and Lee's Chapel will be held at the former Wednesday evening, February 15. Dr. David Shepherd will be the guest leader.

Rev. Collins Kilburn of United, Raleigh, and Rev. D. N. Howard of Davie Street Presbyterian will exchange pulpits February 12, Race Relations Sunday. "Mr. Howard is president of the Raleigh Ministerial Alliance and one of the outstanding Negro ministers in Raleigh," according to the United Church Letter.

The Pfafftown church is sharing in a potluck supper and book review by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman this evening at Winston-Salem; in a leadership training school February 12-16 for the area at Memorial E. and R.; will begin lenten mid-week services February 15; the 19th the men go to Elon for Southern Convention Laymen's Rally; 21st the teachers meet; 22nd family night supper; 28th church officers meet. A new parsonage has recently been occupied by the Rev. Keith Wright and his family.

The Fellowship Bible Class (women) of Christian Temple (Norfolk) had a banquet January 30 at the end of a month's effort to increase membership and attendance. Dr. L. E. Smith was their chosen speaker for the occasion. The Temple has a new format for its Sunday Bulletin which now carries an etching of the church on the front page. Last Sunday the church shared in Holy Communion, and the ordination and installation of deacons Brady Drake, Thomas Gery, A. Clarke Godfrey, O. L. Hodges and F. M. Pritchard.

Christian Education Day In Western N. C. Conference

Sunday, February 12, is being planned as Christian Education Day in the Western North Carolina Conference. This will take the place of the Superintendents' Conference and the series of evening training sessions we have had some years. We are hoping that Sunday School superintendents and other officers, teachers of all age groups, young people, and any person who is interested in learning more about the Bible will come.

This is the Plan: The "workshop" will begin at 3:00 p.m. and close at 8:00 p.m. It will be held in our Asheboro church. You will please bring sandwiches. Dessert and drink will be furnished through the courtesy of the host church. Study sessions will be interspersed with worship and fellowship.

The Courses:

Pre-School Teachers — Miss Dorothy Ballinger.

Children's Teachers — Miss Ruth Dunn.

Young People's Teachers — Winfred Bray.

Adult Teachers — Martin Garren.
S. S. Management — F. C. Lester (supts., secretaries, treas.).

How Our Bible Came To Be — David Fee (new professor at Elon).
Pilgrim Fellowship — Robert Knowles.

During the second session of the classes a course on Vacation Church School will be taught by Misses Ballinger & Dunn.

Please bring samples of the S. S. literature you are now using, if a teacher. Please bring a Bible, if you are going to take Mr. Fee's course.

Although this is short notice, we hope you will find it possible to cancel young people's or evening worship services February 12 and bring the entire group to this important training session.

If the weather cooperates, we hope to make this Christian Education Day a really Big Day for our Conference. We are depending on you to see that people get to Asheboro February 12 from your church.

Conference Christian Education Committee

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE PLANS WORK

At the first meeting of the Western N. C. Conference committee on Christian social action for 1961, the following transactions were carried out:

1. By way of orientation, the film strip, First Church Serves its Community, was presented and discussed.

2. Specific areas of concern were chosen by members of the committee as follows:

Mrs. A. R. Millikin — Education
Mrs. Street Morgan — Race Relations
Mr. Lewis Wicker — International Affairs

Mrs. Sherman Maness — Social Welfare

Mrs. J. C. Newell — Citizenship
Mrs. Garland Bennett — Economics

3. It was decided that members of the committee would be available either in teams or as an entire unit to visit churches requesting them to come and discuss the importance of organizing committees on Christian social action in the local churches.

Any church wanting to take advantage of this service is requested to make contact with Rev. William Joyner, 508 Barnes Avenue, Durham, N. C.

4. It was decided that plans would be made to hold a social action clinic in the conference either in September or October of this year.

5. Plans were made for presenting a special program at the WNC Ministerial Association in April. This program will be a panel discussion with members of the committee participating.

Teach us, O Lord, true brotherhood
In daily thought and deed,
That we may tread with humble heart
The path where thou dost lead.
Help us to spurn a life of ease,
While brothers labor long
In mill and mart to give us bread,
And labor without song.
Cast from our hearts, O Lord of life,
Our selfishness and pride;
Help us to choose the toiler's part,
And suffer by his side.

—Marion Savage

"NO ONE SAID A THING"

The Atlanta Journal in its issue of December 4, 1960, carried an article by Harold Martin entitled "No One Said a Thing." The article described a confirmation service in St. Philip's Cathedral in Atlanta.

"Defend, O Lord," intoned the Bishop as he placed his hand on the head of kneeling candidates for church membership, "this thy child with thy heavenly grace; that he may continue thine forever; and daily increase in thy Holy Spirit more and more until he come into thy everlasting kingdom." Then the writer says:

"And nobody said anything about the fact that four of the people who went up to kneel and receive this blessing, and to be received into the church were Negroes, and that their friends were sitting out in the congregation watching, along with the parents and friends of the white children.

"Nobody thought anything about it. It was the Church performing its ancient function, in solemn ceremony, receiving into its fellowship any child of God who in faith and humbleness and love desire to come."

ATTENDING MIDWINTER MEETING

The Midwinter Meeting of the Missions Council of our denomination, held January 27-February 1 at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania, was notable for participation on the part of the 800 members. An advance goal of $11,500,000 for benevolences was adopted with enthusiasm.

Attending from the Southern Convention was one layman, Dr. J. Earl Danieley, and several ministers: Supt. Clyde Fields, George D. Alley, Jesse H. Dollar, Joe A. French, Frank Hamilton, F. C. Lester, Charles Pegram, W. W. Snyder.

Women attending included: Mrs. J. H. Booth, Jr., Mrs. Ray Gordon, Mrs. Austin Kipps, Mrs. John Lackey, Mrs. F. C. Lester, Mrs. W. B. Williams and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.

Former Southern Convention ministers sharing in the meeting included the chairman, Rev. Henry Robinson, and Supt. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr. of the Southeast Convention, Supt. Fred Register of Nebraska, acting superintendent of Pennsylvania, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Sr., and Rev. Duane Vore of Battle Creek, Michigan.

Mrs. Wisseman was installed as education chairman of the National Women's Fellowship.

Brotherhood

Some people say that next Sunday is Race Relations Sunday while others say February 19 is the beginning of Brotherhood Week. Both are right, and both know that neither designation of a day is significant unless the ideas are translated into action.

But what of the ideas?

Race Relations Sunday is a time designated by Church leaders for the people in the churches to face frankly the fact that there are many races of people in our world, and that all people need to consider their relationships in the light of Christian teachings and ideals. It is quite easy for any race or nation to forget that there are others and try to accept for themselves only the good things of earth and heaven. But in our kind of world many of those who have reveled in this sort of selfish philosophy are being rudely awakened by constant contact with those who are either ignored or thought to be unworthy of consideration. It is a frightening awakening from pleasant dreams.

Standing at the door of our pent-house, or, to change the figure of speech, walking in our private gardens and picking some special flowers, are uninvited guests whose presence we have not yet learned to appreciate. In some areas of America it is the Negro who insists that he is a person worthy of recognition in school, at the ballot box, in public places, in industry, wherever persons of character and education excel. In other areas there are people from many nations who face us, and who seemingly expect equal recognition.

It may surprise us to learn that one major reason this situation has developed is that these other people have read the same books that are in our libraries, and especially the one authoritative book which we call the Bible. In this Book they find that in the beginning God created man and that he made man in his own likeness. They learn that because of man's sin something needed to be done to breach the chasm between man and God, and that God sent his Son to be the Savior of men. They know that the first commandment is to love God, and that Jesus hastened to add that the second is very similar to the first — "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Who is my neighbor? Yesterday it may have been the person next door, but today it includes the people in Africa, India, China, Russia, Cuba, all people of every race and nation. We cannot be choosy.

So, it is evident that Brotherhood is the foundation stone on which modern civilization must rest, or civilization will explode with man-made bombs, and God will have to begin all over again in his attempt to make man in his own image. It may hurt our pride to be made aware that all these other people are our brothers — "the good and the bad, as good and as bad as I" — but to deny the best we know is to destroy the soul.

Brotherhood for a week is better than none at all, but it is not enough. Brotherhood is a spiritual characteristic that is eternal. It needs to be recognized every week, every day, every moment.

Brotherhood is a basic reason for missionary activity. Those who draw their skirts close to keep from being defiled never make missionaries. Jesus broke the ancient habit of exclusiveness and ate with "publicans and sinners" with ceremonially unwashed hands, and some of those sinners became saints. Missionaries go into the "highways and hedges" to find the uninvited to tell them of God's love for all people — that they have a right to sit at the Father's table with the rest of the family.

Isn't it strange that even yet some very good Christians have missed the significance of the teaching of Jesus? Beggars still wait at the gate; the robbed go unfed and unattended; we seldom climb into the chariot of the Ethiopian even to explain the Scripture (there must be no integration in church); Jesus' prayer for the unity of his people is not our prayer — we are afraid of church union, even in Councils on state, national and international levels; and the Commission of the Master to make disciples of all the nations goes unheeded — last year our churches gave for foreign missions about the same number of dollars they did in 1930.

This brotherhood business is urgent. The teachings of Brotherhood have helped to cause a revolution in our world. Now we must make clear exactly what brotherhood means lest those with less snatch that which rightfully belongs to another. Brotherhood means giving, loving, sharing unselfishly. This our world needs — and it is good for each of us.

Try to do something significant during Brotherhood Week, something that will bring you and someone else a little closer to the Man on the Cross who said then and must needs say now, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

The United Church of Christ

Rapid progress is being made in uniting the Evangelical and Reformed Church with Congregational Christian Churches. Synods and churches are voting favorably on the Constitution for the new United Church, and boards and agencies are planning to work together after the Constitution is declared to be in effect next summer. The midwinter meetings of the Missions Council last week made this very evident. Within this year the United Church of Christ will evidently become an established fact.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is ready to become part of an agency of the United Church in overseas work. Likewise the Board of Home Missions will become part of the instrumentality of the United Church in the homeland. Women's Fellowship and Guild and the Laymen's Fellowship and Brotherhood will be a Lay Activities group. So with all agencies.

Nominations will be ready so officers and staff can be elected and proceed in orderly fashion in the United Church of Christ. Four former denominations have learned through experience that mergers are not only possible but that they are helpful, and the leaders who are working out plans for this merger are being strengthened in their Christian faith. They have no fear of the future, for they find that in each of the former groups there are devout and devoted people who are honestly trying to help establish the kingdom of God here on this earth.

When new achievements are being reported almost daily, it is easy to forget some of the commonplace things that have made possible numerous by-products that meet many needs and provide additional employment.

Coal is an illustration and, although atomic energy may further lessen the need for coal, this type of fuel is still essential in the production of that power. Meantime, coal continues to yield its secrets to chemists who are constantly finding new uses for what was first known as "black rock".

Although coal was mined in England as early as 1239, it was 500 years later that this world-revolutionizing mineral was discovered in the United States. Richmond, Virginia, was the seat of this country's first coal mine, in 1753, but not until 1792 near Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, was a discovery of coal made that started one of the greatest industries of the nation.

Outstanding among the by-products of coal are coke, gas, and coal tar, while the sundry compounds fill a catalogue of useful things common and needed in everyday life. For example, delicate flavors for food, coloring compounds for dyeing, fragrant perfumes, rubber, camphor, and a dozen other necessities are all products of what is termed "dirty coal". Studies of coal continue and its possibilities seem limitless.

In a certain period of the earth's development foliage of all kinds grew in great abundance. It was a land of marsh, moss and bloom. The earth's movements, its upheavals, swallowed millions of tons of vegetation, retaining carbon and oxygen and other chemicals that went into a substance now called coal. Into the decaying substance went the feathery staghorn moss, the lily, the rose and the fern.

After a few million years scientists fathom the mysteries of these mountains of black substance and bring back the beauties that make them in other and more useful forms for human comfort, advancement and enjoyment.

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

I only heard — I was not there — about a meeting in one of our Southern Convention churches where adult advisers made talks to young people about people of another race, calling those other people names not commonly used in Christian homes, and indicating that there is only one word to be used in connection with integration — "bad".

It interested me to hear about this for two reasons. I thought the day had passed when adults "told" young people, and that now they act as counsellors in helping youth to discover truth, whatever it may be. Furthermore, as this incident was told to me (I do not know, I was not there), the Christian attitude was not mentioned, neither was it suggested that Church people might act differently from other groups.

This incident not only interested me, it alarmed me. Time and again our denomination, like most others, has declared in favor of a classless society. Are we to ignore this? Two-thirds of the world's population is colored. Are we to live with them peaceably? Many of the Negro church members in our area are better educated and enjoy greater culture than a large number of white people. Does culture count? What effect will "training" like that referred to above have on the young people of our churches? Hopefully, I am inclined to believe that the young people in our churches are thinking far ahead of some of their leaders, and that the world may yet be a safe place for them to live.

Not long after hearing about the above incident, I had occasion to talk with a church family. The man is not a high school graduate. When the subject of integration entered the conversation this is what he said:

"I'll admit that it is hard for me to get used to the idea of integration. But it is morally right, and it is Christian. That makes it the thing to do. If we believe in the teachings of the Bible, we can do nothing but accept all people as children of God and respect them as such — and treat them as such... People talk about intermarriage. I am not as wise as God, and I do not know his plan for creation. It is just possible that in the mind of the Creator God this is the plan for the human family. Who am I to say?"

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

HIS ACCESSIBILITY

He took them (his disciples) and withdrew apart . . . when the crowds learned it they followed him; and he welcomed them, and spoke to them of the kingdom of God, and cured them that had need of healing.

Luke 9:10,11

It is good to make the Lenten season a learning-about-Jesus season. I like Luke's sharp pictures of Jesus.

His disciples have just returned from their first assignments. They had worked hard, and were telling Jesus about it.

He took them aside for a time of fellowship, and quiet, and rest. But the crowds learned about it and followed him.

He did not dodge them, however. He welcomed them! To him they were not mere multitudes, they were many individual persons who wanted to see him, hear him, and learn from him.

He welcomed them! I like that. He welcomed them, and talked to them, and told them about God's kingdom. He let them draw near to him, so near he learned of their needs. He was accessible. He was not too busy to hear them. He loved them and showed them his kindness.

Listen at Luke the physician, who has written so kindly of him, as he adds: "And cured those who had need of healing!"

Let us take our cue from Christ. Let us come close to him, and learn of him; and, for him, open the door of welcome gently, effectively. Amen.

Many Beautiful Places And Happy Experiences

Miss Margaret G. Hammaker

108 E. College Street
Oberlin, Ohio
November, 1960

Dear friends everywhere:

Dark elms against a gray wintry sky bring more of the Christmas atmosphere, perhaps, than the bright skies of Sholapur, but there are no red poinsettias peering in my windows! But the climate of the heart is what makes Christmas, after all — it doesn't matter where we are! And what a joy to be in a country where everyone celebrates the birth of the Christ child, where all are friends at Christmas time.

The year has brought me ten thousand miles to this little home where Edith Husted and I are happily settled. The apartment belongs to Oberlin College and is very conveniently located in the heart of the quiet town. We have loved the trees around us — tall and green when we arrived in August, gold and crimson through the autumn. Tall and protecting always.

The first weeks here were full of getting our housekeeping started, seeing the doctors and dentist, emerging from our daze. Now we have started our speaking for the Board and find our days fly by. It has been fun to be a "team" for some of this. Last week we spent in Cincinnati at one large church, sharing our lives in Japan and India with all groups of the church. There are other "double dates" ahead, too — to speak to an honor educational society, to a women's association, to share in a three-day conference. Until January our speaking is limited to Ohio.

My trip home was a dream come true. For years I planned that trip. I was very exhausted when I sailed from Bombay on May 1st, but my two sweet cabin mates, both Sisters of Charity en route to Kobe, were restful to be around. I found their costumes most interesting with the great starched head-dresses like gulls about to take off. One was French and one Italian but we managed to communicate well.

Calls at ports were often and fun. At Colombo I went with several others to Kandy and it was a delightful ride up to that cool spot, with palms lining our way, temple elephants nonchalantly bathing in rivers we passed. Singapore and Manila were just big port cities, very modern, but Saigon was a surprise. I had not even known in what country it was located! It was exciting to travel for four hours up the broad river to the city. There, I could believe I was in France, with lovely flower markets, and tree-lined boulevards to delight one's eye. Every Vietnamese woman was beautiful! Shops held many temptations, especially the exquisite lacquer which may now be the best in the world. Hong Kong at night was a jeweled crown. And then there was Kobe with Edith to meet me at the pier in the rain.

Our own Kobe College was a wonderful place in which to be introduced to Japan. High on a hill, the campus is very beautiful. It was with pleasure that I met many attractive Japanese students and staff members and learned of the fine Christian influence of that center of learning. Nearby is the school where kindergarten training and religious education training are so happily combined. How I wish that were possible in our Sholapur college.

It seemed to me that we were never out of sight of beauty, and the mountains. Rushing mountain streams, cheerful green rice fields, tea-growing hillsides, flowers and flowers — these were my delight. And there was man-made beauty, too — in the temples and formal gardens, in the shops with exquisite prints, lovely china, silk, dolls, and toys.

Many experiences were possible for me because of Edith's knowledge of Japanese customs and the language, and her many friends. Always to be remembered are the tea ceremony

The Marathi Mission

February

- 12—Miss Margaret Hammaker, who went to India in 1925 after receiving a kindergarten Diploma from Oberlin College, teaches Indian women to be teachers of pre-primary children. She is also interested in Women's Fellowship work.
- 13—Miss Miriam Rogers, another Oberlin graduate, went to India in 1937; later had polio and had to return to U. S.; then back to India; back to U. S. for further treatment and now is back in India. She is principal of Woronoco School.
- 14—Rev. Joseph Moulton, who with his late wife visited the Southern Convention several times, is now on pre-retirement furlough after 42 years in India. He served in Satara, Sholapur, Vadala, Admednager, and Supa.
- 15—Dr. and Mrs. Hale Cook have recently returned to Vadala where he is director of the public health program for the Marathi Mission. His wife went to India as a Swedish mission nurse. They have six children. Dr. Cook is an ordained minister as well as a medical doctor. He has visited in the Southern Convention.
- 16—Rev. and Mrs. Winfield Swart (appointed 1926) work with 18 churches in 65 villages in Vadala District, with a total of about 4600 Christians. They are assisted by 5 Indian pastors, 7 preachers, and 11 village school teachers.
- 17—Rev. and Mrs. Gifford Towle (1939) direct rural reconstruction in Ahmedgaar district, teaching better agricultural methods and lifting whole standard of living.
- 18—Miss Katherine Mix works in Pierce Memorial Hospital, supervising operating theater and wards; distributing Multi-Purpose Food and milk sent out by Church World Service; handling Friendly Service gifts; she is also manager of 200 children in Waj Station School.

performed by a gentlewoman of the old school in a Zen Buddhist retreat house where we were served a delicious vegetarian dinner on most lovely red lacquer dinner ware. Always to be treasured are the hours spent in Japanese homes, so lovely with their wooden panelled walls, and floors, the sliding screens, the little gardens at the doorstep. And the hot springs baths; and Japanese inns where we left our shoes in the lobby not to see them until we went out, putting them on with long-handled shoe horns — the boon of the pleasingly plump! The babies riding in harnesses on their mothers' backs; the red public telephones and red mail boxes; the people with masks over the mouths because they have colds (the dentist wears one as he works over his patient); the starched sheets on one's bed; the announcers on trains who reminded people not to forget anything as they disembarked and thanked them for riding on their trains; the gay flying carp on poles in front of homes where there were boys — all these are part of the charm of Japan.

There was just enough sight seeing to whet my appetite for more. Kyoto won my heart at once, with all her art treasures. Several day trips through the Inland Sea, along with hundreds of Japanese sight see-ers, visits to temples and gardens where we encountered many hundreds of school boys and girls made me realize how much their country is appreciated by the Japanese themselves.

Matsuyama, where I lived with Marion and Clarence Gillett and Edith for four weeks, is just across the Inland Sea from Hiroshima and I was glad that we could visit that historic place. The day of our visit suited our mood with its rain and gray skies.

From there we went to the lovely shrine island of Miyajima, where there is the great torii (Shinto gateway painted red) in the sea and where the shrine "floats" in the sea at high tide. Many were the charms of the Japanese inn — a low table where our meals were served, we sitting in legless "chairs" which so ease sitting on the floor; our comfortable beds of high-piled thick quilts; the delightful custom of strolling out to the many souvenir shops in one's hotel kimono, after the Bath, meeting other guests recognizable by their same kimono!

After the years of letters about it, I was glad to get acquainted with Shinonome Girls School where Edith had been teaching high school and college-age girls. Its position on the side of Castle Hill has been made beautiful with flowering trees and bushes, and curving walks, the "green chapel" with its prayer circle which appeared in an April number of Time magazine. Fine work is being done there and it was inspiring to see more than one thousand girls gathered together for chapel in the morning. It was heart-warming, too, to visit the high school for boys where there is a Japanese principal, and a real Christian atmosphere. Both schools are now rejoicing in the addition to their staffs of new young missionary personnel much needed.

Two weeks before sailing, we returned to Kobe College where we met more friends, and from which we went to Osaka to see old graduates of the Bible School where Edith had previously worked; to Kyoto to see the famous Katsura garden-palace for which special permission was necessary; to Kobe for shopping. Whenever we met with Christian groups, I was always impressed with the close feeling of fellowship, whether or not there was any English spoken. Language made little difference there.

And I was impressed with the devoted loyal Christian workers, women and men, whom I met in so many places. Though the church is small, I feel sure that it has many special strengths, and much to contribute to the Household of God.

Now we are in another of our worlds and happy to be here. I hope that I will meet many of you before long, perhaps as I go about to speak and share some of the wonderful experiences I have been privileged to have.

Recent news from India brings word that my Vellore Christian Medical College boy has passed all of his exams for his first three years and is now on the last lap of his course. That means his final exams will come in 1961 — December.

Sholapur continues to be a busy place and I think of them all with great interest and hope that you will continue to do so, too.

May the tinsel and bright wrappings, the gay lights and carols be a real expression of the joy that fills our hearts with the Advent of the Christ child, and may we meet at his cradle once more in friendship.

Affectionately yours,
Margaret Gail Hammaker

Ramseur Women Report

Mrs. Sherman Maness

Under the very capable leadership of Mrs. C. E. Brown, we had a most profitable year in the Ramseur Women's Fellowship. We used our theme, "Move We On Together," studying our six areas of work.

We had a memorial certificate with appropriate words telling of the characteristics and good deeds of Mrs. Clatie Johnson, a charter member, placed in our book in the History Room at Elon College.

We had scheduled the World Day of Prayer service in our church in cooperation with the other churches in our town, but due to snow our plans were changed. Each one called one and asked for a pause for prayer sometime during the day and asked each one to take her offering to her own church Sunday morning. This proved successful from the standpoint of the number of women taking part in the observance and the offering.

We were glad to finance our pastor's wife's attendance at the School of Missions. We met with the Pleasant Ridge women for our home mission book review given by their pastor, Rev. Lynwood Hubbard, and had our own world mission study on Africa within our group.

Aside from our designated gifts of Friendly Service, we sent fruit baskets to the sick and shut-ins of our community at Christmas, gave a donation for free school lunches, bought a new communion tray and glasses for our church, and furnished Bible school refreshments.

Our pastor, Rev. Garland Bennett, gave our Bible study, "Jesus' Teachings on Citizenship."

It was a pleasure to have our district chairman, Mrs. Clyde Fields, visit us in February of last year, giving us helpful information.

With renewed faith and enthusiasm we are now moving forward into another year.

"This Is Our World And Our Responsibility"

Address by the Rev. Herman F. Reissig, International Relations Secretary, Council for Christian Social Action, United Church of Christ, presented at the Midwinter Meeting, Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania, at 8:15 P. M., Sunday, January 29, 1961.

Looking at our contemporary world, a thoughtful person could feel deeply encouraged, even elated, if it were not for three facts, which taken together or singly, are enough to put a crimp in any merely optimistic expectations. The three facts are: multimegaton bombs, ready to reduce our national societies to an unrecognizable mess; the struggle between Communism and the West and the appalling human, personal misery that lies all around us. I want to comment on each of these dark clouds in our sky but, first, let us see if it is true that, without them, we have reason to feel encouraged.

Look at some central features of the world that is now going to pieces. In the West it was a world that had made a religion of nationalism. Even now, a world society with a comprehensively sovereign world government, moving toward the reduction of all political and cultural differences and the creation of a universal way of life, is an unlikely and also a profoundly unwelcome prospect. But nationalism, as we have known it in the past 300 years has, like Christian denominationalism, outlived its usefulness.

On the domestic level, nationalism pulled men together; on the world level, which is the level on which we must now operate, it pulled them apart. Nationalism gave men something greater than self to live for but at the same time tended to shut men off from the family of God as a whole. Even for Christians, singing in their churches, "In Christ there is no East, no West," national loyalty was far stronger than the concept of one family under God. In our own nation one was permitted to assert the supremacy of God provided this God was a good American. National security became a spiritual substitute for the only real security man can have — security at the hands of God. Had there been in America more living faith in God we should still have been properly concerned about the nation's security but we should not have come so close to a nervous breakdown when we discovered that our security as a nation was not as impregnable as we had been accustomed to think. — So, from both the political and spiritual standpoints, nationalism became an obstacle to human well-being.

In the fullness of time God sent his scientists and technologists, and under their attack nationalism is going down. The new, resurgent nationalisms of Asia and Africa must be viewed as a way in which men and women are asserting their dignity as human beings. But the new nations prove, even more than the old, that traditional nationalism is finished. For in the very moment that their plea for independence is answered, their plea changes to "Help us or we perish!" One - humanity - under - God has thus, for the first time in history, a chance to move from a theoretical or spiritual concept toward practical reality.

This is wonderful, exhilarating. For poets, dreamers, humanitarians, believers, it is cause for elation. Pity, only pity, for those persons and organizations in our own country for whom the United Nations is a threat, rather than an inspiring symbol and a foundation stone of long-delayed world community! To take the material framework of true world community, provided by technology, and give it the political, spiritual and human bonds it cries for — what an exhilarating opportunity that is!

End of White Man's World

The world of yesterday had a second aspect. It was a white man's world, with mischievous consequences to all men — their bodies and their spirits. The notion of racial superiority is one of a long series of false gods whom men have served in the effort to establish their human worth. If we cannot be God, so runs the unconscious spiritual reasoning, we can at least be little gods, lording it over some minority or alien group. This tendency will not be cured when white-skinned men and dark-skinned men work and worship and live together. We shall then only have abolished one of the worst ways in which men try to make themselves great. But, since we human beings relinquish our idols only under severe pressure, thank God for the pains that are now upon us!

How exhilarating to live in a time when the absurd and obnoxious walls between the races of God's family are at last coming down! Does it not strengthen one's faith in the God who "will not fail nor be discouraged till he hath set justice in the earth"?

Passing of Colonialism

We should also feel greatly encouraged to see colonialism passing out of the world picture. Colonialism is a perfect illustration of that mixture of good and evil which is characteristic of so much human enterprise. At the heart of colonialism was a very great evil — perhaps the greatest of evils. For colonialism was essentially the use of people and their resources primarily for the benefit of other people. Everything is wrong when man is approached, not as an end in himself, but as a means to another man's enhancement. For all the wracking troubles accompanying the abolition of the colonial system, what morally sensitive person could be content in a world in which one-half of the human race was used for the benefit of the other half?

Let us rejoice, also, that everywhere reactionary and feudalistic governments are in danger before the demands and the wrath of their people. If the wind blowing across the world sometimes becomes a damaging whirlwind, what Christian, worshipping the God of justice, wants to go back to a world run by the few for the few? Do the revolutions move too fast? They almost always move too fast when those in control of unjust systems move too slowly. Witness Cuba and the Congo! Justice thwarted turns to wrath, but let us be glad that justice cannot forever be thwarted.

In the world that is dying, there was for the majority, poverty, disease, illiteracy without hope! Now there is at least a chance that more than just a handful of God's people will have opportunity to develop their personal resources. Amid the tumult, this is cause for elation.

Reform of the Churches

And finally, complacency about the future of the Christian movement is disappearing. That also is a good thing. For "the old-time religion" was not fit to survive. Even when it was the old-time liberal religion of American Protestantism, it was not good enough. Jesus had no chance of reigning "where'er the sun does his successive journeys run," when the followers of Jesus talked much about justification by faith and were largely indifferent to injustice, when their words about love were eloquent and their deeds of love were hardly the faintest adumbration of the love that lays down its life for the brethren. Thank God our superficial, easy-going churches must now reform themselves or go beneath the boiling waters of God's judgment!

In sum, as God lives, that old world had to go to pieces! God sent scientists, business men, labor leaders, statesmen, teachers of love and justice — sent them often in deep disguise — to blow their trumpets against the walls of Jericho. And the walls are crumbling.

It is exhilarating. This could be the best of all times for the human spirit. For it is a world that asks of us everything we can deliver! Brains, heart, stamina, courage! So profound are the changes, so complete the overturning, so great the opportunity that one might suppose God has decided to put his people's resources to a supreme test. Here is a confrontation of depths and heights, of great need and great resources such as men have never before seen.

How are we going to come out? God knows. The next fifty years may be man's finest hour to date. They may also turn out to be his worst. This is no time for optimism or pessimism. It is only the time for saying, "The people who see the people who care, have now an awesomely great opportunity. I shall do my best."

There is time tonight to make only one or two comments about two of the dark clouds in our sky — the bombs and the struggle with Communism. Since not even Ghandi could convert India to pacifism, there is no chance of getting any of the great nations to try the experiment of unilateral disarmament, even if all Christians were sure it is a Christian policy. But it should be clear that the way to peace and security does not, for any nation, lie in some final victory in the arms race. And multi-megaton bombs are, in Father John Courtney's phrase, 'from the moral standpoint, unshootable.' There can be no greater evil than the consequences of a war fought with these weapons. Our new President is quite

RESUME OF LIBERTY SPRING ACTIVITIES

Lloyd Carr, Reporter

The junior high and senior high Pilgrim Fellowships of Liberty Spring Church have had a very active year.

The new officers, who commenced their service at the monthly meeting in October, are as follows:

President, Linda Turner; vice president, Kaye Savage; secretary, Dorothy Anne Wilkins; assistant secretary, Linda Butler; treasurer, Richard Harrell; faith commission chairman, Hazel Bradshaw; action commission chairman, J. M. Perry, Jr.; fellowship commission chairman, Linda Presley; reporter, Lloyd Carr; key worker, Thomas Harrell; adult advisors, Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Bradshaw, Jr.

The officers later had a planning session. Our group was represented at the Fall Rally at Oakland. Members of our group also attended the Thanksgiving worship service which was sponsored by the Suffolk Pilgrim Fellowship.

For a Work Day for Christ project, we sponsored a sweets sale in the Suffolk City Market. A total profit of $26.31 was made. At Christmas we went caroling by bus to the shut-ins of the church and to each of the four floors of the Louise Obici Memorial Hospital. We also had a Christmas party in the fellowship hall of our church.

At our January, 1961, meeting, we fed members of the Whaleyville Ruritan Club. Our latest project was the planning of Youth Week activities.

If any of your groups are interested in either participating in the sponsorship of a caravan or in having such a caravan visit you, drop a line to David Andes, Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship president, Box 625, Elon College, North Carolina.

Many of you are probably beginning to think ahead about the summer. Don't forget to include Moonelon in your plans. Now is a good time to begin saving money for the inexpensive fee for a week of fun and fellowship. Maybe some of your groups will want to establish a fund for helping its members and officers pay their fees.

Plan ahead!

IN MEMORIAM

Funeral rites for Jean Capps Workman, 20, of Raleigh, North Carolina, were held December 23 at the Wake Chapel Congregational Christian church in Varina.

Jean was a devoted church and youth worker. She was one of five persons to represent the Congregational Christian churches of North Carolina and Virginia at the National Pilgrim Fellowship Biennial in New York in June, 1958. She also served the Pilgrim Fellowship as president of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and later as secretary and treasurer of the same organization.

In 1958 she was chosen Teenager of the Year.

She was a student of Christian education at Elon College.

To Jean the following poem is dedicated:

"I cannot say, and I will not say
That she is dead — she is just away!
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,
She has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how fair
Its needs must be, since she lingers there.

So think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;

Think of her still as the same, I say;
She is not dead — she is just away!"

The Eastern Virginia Executive Committee met January 15 at the Suffolk church. After planning for the spring rallies, many of the officers showed interest in beginning a caravan team. A committee of six officers was formed for further study of such a caravan team.

HOLY NECK ELECTS OFFICERS

The Holy Neck Pilgrim Fellowship and guests recently visited the Morehead Planetarium in Chapel Hill. At a more recent meeting, the following officers were installed:

President, Oscar Fowler, Jr.; vice president, Shirley Simmons; secretary, Doris Holland; treasurer, Molly Holland; faith commission chairman, Mamie Harrell; action commission chairman, Paige March; fellowship commission chairman, Mary Ann Barnes; hospitality chairman, Martha Ann Holland; and reporter, Trudy Fowler.

DENDRON, VIRGINIA

Wayne Morris, president of the senior class of Surry County High School, led the worship service for Sunday School at the Dendron Christian Church in observance of Youth Week. Roger Ward read the scripture lesson after a brief explanation of the scripture by Kathleen Burgess, John Spratley led the morning prayer. Kay Ward and Ruthie Livesay sang "Give of Your Best to the Master" and Herman Trueheart Burgess read a poem before the classes started. Mrs. Thurman Williams is the teacher of the Young People's class and assisted in the service. Last Friday evening the young people honored Mrs. Williams with a surprise birthday party in the home of Mrs. Garland Morris.

The Rev. H. E. Crutchfield is now serving the Dendron Church.

Hong Kong is many things. A cosmos. "An illuminated graveyard" — refugees. "The Gem of the Orient" — beauty. . . The mountains are always green. The "Peak," at whose foot the most talked about part of the city lives, offers HK's "dearest" citizens seclusion and beautiful home sites. The "Peak Tram" serves both the "dears," and those who brave her heights for the stunning night view of the city. The "Star Ferry" carries a flow of people "headed for the other side" — coolies with large bundles of clothes or live chickens on poles, suave businessmen, sexy secretaries (in their split-tailed Chinese sheath), black pajamaed fisher-ladies, fair haired Britishers, lean quick students — and tourists. Red and green rickshaws mingle with Mercedes taxis and compete with double-decker buses and trams for room to move on the busy streets. Laboring women with large hats have their babies slung on their backs, their heads bobbing limply at a frightening angle. The piercing white shaft of a new apartment building perches on a rocky ledge dwarfing the hoards of people that scramble past on the stair-stepped streets. OAKLAND P. F.'s MEET JOINTLY

Betty Sue Knight, Reporter

Forty-three members and advisors of the Oakland Pilgrim Fellowship met recently for a joint supper meeting. The meal was served by members of one of the women's circles.

Dr. W. T. Scott, pastor at Oakland, gave the invocation. Danny Chapman, Pilgrim Fellowship president, presided over the business meeting.

The devotions were conducted by Kenneth Wagner. Miss Mary Powell, Pilgrim Fellowship counselor, introduced Mrs. Pat Robertson of Portsmouth who was the guest speaker. Mrs. Robertson gave a review of the mission book, "The Unbroken Line."

the Peak. Chinese fishing junks, U. S. aircraft carriers, African cargo ships, French luxury liners, British patrol boats, and Hong Kong ferries crowd the polluted but busy bay waters. Shek-O, Repulse Bay and Big Wave Bay (etc.) afford beautiful sights and great swimming. Aberdeen has only one main water tap for its refugee population . . . but is most famous for its floating seafood restaurants — a spouting fierce dragon in a crimson and gold sunset — and the hundreds of dark fishing junks "home for rest." "The Dairy Farm" doesn't guarantee "milk from contented cows," but from the sight of the glorious habitation of these animals their ice cream seems to come by its quality naturally. The "Hong Kong - Shanghai Bank" complete with virile crouched lions, flags, armed-turbaned-bearded Sikh guards, high turbulent mosaic ceiling, chandeliers, marble stairs, and that aloof "moneyed" atmosphere, competes with the "Bank of China's" white marble impressiveness for economic prowess. "Queen Elizabeth's post office" proudly reminds its patrons (a sign therein) that the folks at home are always glad to hear from someone who's far away. Clever Chinese merchants loiter about their shop entrances, alert to lure and snag the slightest prospect. Movie marquees proclaim the wonders of their British, American, Japanese, French, Chinese, or Italian movies. Record shops offer "American treasures" on less expensive British labels. Book stores raise their profits by converting pounds prices literally into Hong Kong currency. Shoeshine boys stare with amazement at the flood of bewildered dirty shoes pounding by. Ques form continuously for buses that rumble through Wanchai to North Point, or groan and blurr up Garden Road. The U. S. Embassy fetes July 4th (to the joy or consternation of the neighboring British government houses and St. John Cathedral). JAL*, Jintan, and Pepsi-Cola signs of Times Square proportions firefly the waterfront. "Certificate of Origin available on all goods bought here." ments or sidewalk dwellers that afford a constant din. Hong Kong traffic cops — perhaps the only ones in the world whose movements are as graceful as ballet dancers . . . Hong Kong is all of this — and much more. It jangles and spews. It cheats and bites. Its ethic is money — its politics utterly vulnerable. It ignores the past — and anticipates the future only enough to open its eyes again each morning. It opens its heart and poverty to the vagrant, and its lust and mercenaries to the tourist.

Macao is an experience in modern decay. This five mile square Portuguese colony is a peninsula on the southern Chinese communist mainland and is quite controversial politically. One of the few areas remaining neutral during World War II, it is presently a refuge for opium smokers; crossroad of extensive spying, illicit trade, and gambling; producer of fire-crackers and matches; main outlet for refugees (averaging 79 per day) — mossy cobblestone streets, Spanish balconies, cathedral ruins, an obsolete fort, a lighthouse (now both used only for typhoon warning stations), pink-white-green-and-gray government buildings, a convent, tropical flowers, thatched bathing houses, bronze statues of Portuguese heroes, museum of Sun Yat Sen, Bishop's mansion, dark North African Portuguese soldiers, beggars, crimson tassled police hats, burial ground of pioneer American and European merchants and missionaries to China. . . A bit of Europe — a bit of Asia — a bit of corruption — a bit of decay — a bit of indifference — a bit of nothing — but not a bit of hope. Faces speak of nothing past or future, only of existence — now — of oranges stacked in the street, of crated ducks, of dirty lime drink jostled on a cart, of a modern tea room and sweet shop — of staying alive because you must, fighting for it, but not knowing why!

I returned to my luxurious life at Kobe College September 10 via a pleasant three day voyage on a French luxury liner. After work camp and such stimulating travel I found this set schedule, semi-isolation, and social expectancy quite trying. Not only present adjustment and patience to work within the limits of my situation and language inabilities here are needed, but I'm constantly faced with the necessity of making a decision — reaching some sort of commitment and involvement in a purpose and plan of action in my future. Only 18 more months and I'll be tossed back into

The Lord Of Life And Death

Background Scripture: John 10:11.

Devotional Reading: Romans 8:31-39.

Memory Selection: I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. John 11:25,26.

A House of Friendship

After Jesus left Nazareth and entered upon his public ministry, he had no home of his own. He himself said "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." The nearest thing to a home was the home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus in Bethany, in which the Master was often a guest. Here were three people who loved him, who put their home at his disposal, a place where he could enter at any time and find rest and peace and understanding and love. They could have given him no greater gift. Many a man in public life can stand the worst that the world can do to him, if he has a home where love dwells, where there is patient understanding, and rest and peace and trust.

A House of Mourning

The house of friendship had become a house of mourning. Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha had been taken seriously ill, and had died rather suddenly. Instinctively the sisters turned to Jesus, their friend. They sent word of the sickness of Lazarus, but significantly enough, they did not ask Jesus to come. They knew that it was enough that he knew it. They could depend upon him to do the right thing. Their's was the simple faith of the wounded man about whom C. F. Andrews tells. Struck down by a shell and lying helpless and in great pain in "No Man's Land," he was rescued by his dear friend, who at great risk and in great peril, crawled out to him and brought him safely back into the lines. When his friend reached him, the wounded man looked up and said simply "I knew you would come." The simple fact is that human need brings Jesus to our side.

The Divine Delay

But not always as quickly as we would like! As in the case of Lazarus, there is sometimes a divine delay. "When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days in the same place where he was." We do not always get what we want or ask for at once. Indeed sometimes we do not get what we ask for at all. But we may be sure that we do not turn to God in vain. He answers in his own way and in his own good time, but he answers. Faith has its tests, sincerity must be tried. But let no man think that God is not interested, or that he is unresponsive. Faith is the victory that overcomes. God is not reluctant, men do not have to persuade him to change his mind. But he does test our sincerity and prove our faith.

A Doubter But Dauntless

Thomas is often used as a representative of doubt. Have you not heard the phrase "a doubting Thomas"? Doubter he may have been, but he was an honest doubter. He doubted only that he might the better believe. He might have been "from Missouri", but when he got an answer to his doubts, he followed the truth which was revealed unto him. In this instance we see him as a man of superb courage. He knew, as Jesus knew that it was dangerous for them to go to the vicinity of Jerusalem. But he had real courage and determined to go with Jesus, even if it did mean death to him. He was determined, that come what may, he would not quit. The story is told of an officer whose duty in World War I was to go up in a balloon and observe where the shells of his company were falling so that he could indicate to the gunners how to insure a direct hit on enemy targets. The captive balloon in which he was placed was a sitting target for enemy guns and planes. Speaking to a friend about these experiences, the officer said "Every time I go up in that balloon I am sick with nerves; but I won't quit." That is the highest form of courage. Real courage does not mean not being afraid; it means doing our duty even if we are afraid. Thomas had that courage.

True To Character

The sisters, Mary and Martha are true to character in this story. When they learn that Jesus is in the vicinity, Martha rises up promptly and goes to meet him. But Mary sits quietly in the house. It was characteristic of each of them. They are representatives of the active, busy, bustling type, and the quiet, meditative type. And although each gently chided Jesus for his delay in coming, each expressed a simple faith in his ability to do what needed to be done.

God Cries

Standing before the tomb Jesus, seeing the heartbreaking sorrow of the sisters, and feeling keenly the death of his friend, gave way to his emotions. John says "Jesus wept." To the Greek reader or observer that little sentence would be the most astonishing thing in an astonishing story. That he who was the Son of God could weep would be to a Greek a thing beyond belief. But to us they are assuring. If it is true that Jesus came to reveal the Father to us, then we have here a revelation of how God enters intimately and sympathetically into our sorrows and bereavements. These words "Jesus wept" tell us volumes about both the humanity and the divinity of our Lord.

The Voice That Wakes The Dead

His word was with power. He commanded and it was done. "Lazarus, come forth!" Jesus thus spoke his word of command, a command that even death was powerless to oppose. And Lazarus came forth at once. It must have been a wierd picture — a heavily bandaged figure staggering out of the tomb. We are, of course, in the realm of the mysterious and the miraculous here. It is folly to try to explain it away, even if it is futile to explain it. The best thing to do is to accept it as a historic fact, and to interpret it as best we can in its symbolic meaning.

The Resurrection and The Life

"I am the resurrection and the life," said Jesus. "He that believeth in me, even though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die", He went on to say. What did he mean?

the sea of decisions, academics, and choosing my own form of action. I've asked myself a million questions, and I suppose this is part of reaching an eventual answer. I can't seem to create a real framework within which to choose and plan action.

My Bible class and Japanese church have taken on new promise and vitality since moving into their church building October 23. I'm finding myself with more to say since work camp and the lectures of Dr. Hendrik Kraemer in Japan this fall. Dr. Kraemer speaks in an almost prophetic perception of the position and mission of the church in the non-Christian world. I have found his book, "The Christian Message in a Non-Christian World," a terrific help and stimulation.

Seven days of autumn travel with the high school seniors (and some Japanese teachers) were rich in friendships and appreciation of the small beauties, and history of Japan. To be seeing so many of the places, things, and settings that I had read about was surprisingly significant. Somehow at times I felt I was almost beginning to make contact with something of the soul of Japan. A feeling I have never had before.

Which brings me to mention my increased sense of ease in and with Japan. The exotic strangeness is not gone, only slightly more approachable. Teaching is not an inconsequential routine, only a bit more within my ability. I still stand in puzzled awe of Japanese politeness, gaze with admiration at a handsome kimono clad woman, study the symbolism of a Buddhist temple with very little understanding, push into packed trains without feeling accustomed to such crowded living, and talk too fast for even my best students to understand what I'm saying. Japan is a land rich in feeling and significance — perhaps farther from America in understanding than in distance.

This Christmas season brings us lots of sentiment, exaltation of sharing, thoughts of home, and joy. I hope it also speaks to us strongly of the significance of the Christ for the present world. Christmas is not a time we can remove from history, in which to forget about international trade problems, the trembling U. S. dollar, Red summit meetings, Quemoy, Laos, Korea or Turkey, but rather a period of rededication, of daring to embrace real conviction, of affirming the claim of the Christ in our lives.

There is so much we must do. Christmas is a joyous part of the dynamo that says we ". . . push on to the upward call of Christ." A time of feeling the Good News come alive within our lives. A time of gripping reality and challenge. A time of meeting the Christ in new, dynamic, exciting and demanding dimensions. May it be this for you. May it overwhelm and possess you. This is the greatest thing I could wish.

THIS IS OUR WORLD

right: neither we nor the Russians have been really serious in the quest of plans to control and reduce our armaments. You and I are not in a position to work out and present such a plan. We can insist that the nation "begin anew the quest for peace, before the dark powers of destruction unleashed by science engulf all humanity in planned or accidental self-destruction."

With respect to the struggle against Communism, let us say only that the intelligent response to a world that includes Communism begins — it begins with the recognition that anti-Communism is not enough. The question for the United States is: Will we lean into the legitimate and necessary revolution of our time, rejoice in it, help it along or will we lean away from it, a satisfied nation wagging a warning finger at a dissatisfied world?

Turning now to the appalling personal suffering in our world, we are all familiar with the parable of "The Rich Man and Lazarus." In this world Lazarus was sick and hungry and he was given heaven as compensation. The other man was both rich and insensitive to the suffering at his gate, and he, for that reason, went to the place of eternal torment.

This is unfair, is it not? Assignments to heaven and hell ought not to be made on that basis! How unfair it is the following story will make clear.

There was an American, who was dressed in Dacron and wool and who ate three excellent meals every day. And his house was a place of beauty and comfort, and his church was a dream of stone and glass. And a few hours away by plane lived a Greek, pinched with hunger and full of disease. And he desired only that the American share his surplus.

The poor Greek died and went to heaven. The rich American also died and went to hell. And, being in the torment of isolation from God, he lifted up his eyes and saw Jesus afar off and the poor man by his side.

And he called out "Lord Jesus, have mercy, and send the poor man to comfort me, for I am in anguish."

But the Lord said, "Son, remember that on earth you had all the comforts of life and this poor man had none. But now he is comforted and you are in misery."

And the rich man said, "Then I beg you, Lord, to send the poor man to the United States, for there are millions there who live as I lived, that they may be warned of the fate in store for them."

And the Lord said, "They have my words and also many who tell them that while they live in luxury, most of their fellowmen live in misery; let them pay attention." And the rich man said, "No, but if someone were to arise from the dead they would come to their senses." And the Lord said to him, "If they do not listen to my plain words and are unmoved by the cries of their fellowmen, neither will they respond if someone should rise from the dead."

Unfair? But there it is. And if there were time we could listen again to the stories of "The Rich Young Ruler," "The Good Samaritan" and "The Last Judgment." How the New Testament underlines it! "But if anyone has the world's goods and sees his brother in need, yet closes his heart against him, how does God's love abide in him?"

But look at us — Christians! — singing,

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a tribute far too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my life, my soul, my all."

Look at us singing that — when the most effective slogan we can think of in the area in which Church World Service operates is "Share Our Surplus"! That is not a Christian slogan. That slogan is an indictment of Christians! Crumbs from the rich man's table! Hardly can we be persuaded to share the surplus of our economy of waste!

"Hypocrite" is an ugly word, but few who have deserved the epithet are conscious of intent to act a false part. Men believe themselves honest long after those around them see that

At Our Church Home For Children

Walstein W. Snyder, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Meet Master Jerry Neese. Jerry, our youngest child, will be six years old on April 9. We are quite proud of Jerry. He is such an amiable little fellow and has recently been chosen as one of the mascots of the Senior Class at the Elon College High School. This month an opening in our local kindergarten permitted us to enter Jerry, so he is now having the advantage of pre-school training. He will be entering the first grade next fall. Jerry came to live with us in November, 1959, along with his brother Van and their sister, Janice.

Jerry Neese

Yesterday, Sunday, January 29, was the beginning of Youth Week in our church and a number of our young people participated in the service — leading in the worship and serving as ushers. We are happy to see our young people taking an active part in the work of our church. During this week the Pilgrim Fellowship will be enjoying a number of activities together.

Mr. Snyder is this week attending the Mid-Winter Meetings of our denomination at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania. He and Dr. Danielely left by train last Thursday night in the wake of the snow and ice storm of that day. While we adults were probably annoyed at the inconvenience of the icy conditions which left a number of us with no means of transportation except walking, and sliding, the children were over-joyed with "no school" and the conditions which afforded them many happy hours of sledding and skating. The hill behind the Holt Memorial Chapel is an excellent sled run and is used not only by our boys and girls, but by many neighbors.

Since we are looking forward to the occupation of our new cottages within a few months, we are wondering if there are Sunday school classes, Women's Fellowships, Layman's Fellowships or other church groups which might care to furnish one of the rooms in the cottages. For several years a certain Sunday school class in one of our churches has "sponsored" one of the rooms here. When the room needed to be painted, they furnished the materials necessary. A few years ago they completely refurnished the room with bedroom suit, lamps, desks, rugs, etc. They also see that the floor covering is kept up to par. This is a real benefit to us and to the children who occupy this particular room. What a blessing it would be if all our rooms were sponsored.

JOINS UNITED CHURCH

St. Paul's church in Cincinnati, Ohio, considered the Constitution of the United Church of Christ and came up with these ideas concerning the local church as found in paragraph 21:

It retains or secures its own charter and name.

It adopts its own constitution and by-laws.

It formulates its own covenants and confessions of faith.

It admits members in its own way.

It calls or dismisses its own minister.

It acquires, owns, manages its own property.

It controls its own funds and benevolences.

It selects delegates to Association meetings.

After such careful consideration it is little wonder that a motion "to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ and to become part of that body" was voted unanimously. By vote the name of the local church was changed to "The St. Paul United Church of Christ."

This must have pleased the new minister, Richard Jackson, who is well known and much loved in this part of the world. It can also be a bit of reassurance to churches that may be doubtful of their standing as part of the United Church.

They are dissemblers. And hypocrisy is a particular temptation of the religious because it is good and necessary to praise love, justice, and courage, but so much easier to praise them than to love and do justice and be courageous. Must we not admit that the distance between our Christian professions and the life response of American Christians is so great that serious persons cannot be blamed if they begin to suspect us of hypocrisy? Let us put to ourselves a few questions.

Have we a moral right to sing the great marching songs of the church if we do not intend to cease from our amiable strolling and begin to march?

Have we a moral right to be the professional celebrants of self-denial when, although we do work hard, we — ministers and people — avail ourselves of almost every luxury our society affords before we decide what we will give to the church?

Have we a moral right to sing, over and over again,

"Grant us wisdom, grant us courage, for the living of these days."

When in thousands of our churches the description of a social problem is "controversial" is enough to ensure that it will not be faced?

Have we a moral right to take to ourselves the name of him who was the friend of "publicans and sinners" when the alcoholic, the drug addict, the beatnik, the homosexual, the Communist and the delinquent and the prisoner find in the churches little compassionate concern?

May not the God revealed in the prophets and in Jesus say to us: "I hate, I despise your beautiful Sunday services, and I take no delight in your lovely church buildings. Take away from me the noise of your choral anthems; to your pulpit prayers I will not listen. But let justice come to the slum dweller, the nigrant, the Negro and let food be given to the hungry."

Within the contemporary church there are signs of reformation. Paying attention to the best that is being said and done by the World Council of Churches, by the National Council of Churches, by boards and councils of our own denomination, finding here and there a local church that is far from complacent, seeing little groups within the churches that search the Scriptures, ask the radical questions, are unimpressed with the irrelevancies of numbers and popularity, observing the realistic dedication of the leaders of our own Missions Council, one knows that the Christian fire has not gone out and that there is at least a chance that a church now badly in need of radical reformation may once more stir the hearts of men, command their intellects, and exert powerful influence on the currents of history. But let us not delude ourselves. The threat to man, as the Judaeo-Christian faith conceives him, is too serious and the social forces of our time much too powerful to affect effective help from a vague theology, a conventional ethic and a timid church. A modern Jeremiah would surely say of our churches what the ancient prophet said, "They have healed the wound of my people lightly."

I shall change only a word or two of some great words uttered in Washington on January 20th and put the whole in question form. Are we Christians now prepared to "pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success" of the Christian faith and the Christian cause in our time?

In Memoriam

NASH

We, the members of the First Congregational Christian Church of Hopewell, Virginia, wish to pay tribute to the memory of the Reverend Durant D. Nash, who slipped away suddenly Friday morning, October 14, 1960, to be with the Lord. Reverend Durant D. Nash was pastor of our church from 1927 until 1930, again taking up the pastorate in 1944, and preached until 1951, at which time he retired, becoming pastor emeritus.

While he was pastor he served the church loyally and faithfully, making many friends by his kindness, sympathy, and helpfulness to all who needed him. After his retirement he faithfully attended the services of the church, although his health was very poor. He loved the church.

We shall miss his presence among us, but rejoice in the fact that our loss is heaven's gain.

Be it resolved that we extend our deepest sympathy to his wife and family, and may our Saviour's undying love abide with them always.

Be it resolved further, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife — a copy to the Christian Sun for publication, and a copy to be entered in the records of the church.

OAKLAND RECEIVED MEMORIAL GIFT

Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, has received a gift of $5,000 from Rosser W. and Henry Gayle Bradshaw and Mrs. Barbara Bradshaw Nelms, in memory of the late Mrs. Edith Gayle Bradshaw, a devout member of the church for many years.

In accepting the gift at a business meeting, the church passed a resolution to the memory of Mrs. Bradshaw and authorized the appointment of a committee of five to study carefully the needs of the church and to present recommendations for the use of this fund as a fitting memorial. Committee members are: Mrs. P. D. Howell, Jr., Mrs. Raye V. Knight, Henry Gayle Bradshaw, Mrs. Asa B. Johnson, Harvey F. Saunders, Sr., and ex officio, Mills E. Godwin, Jr. and the pastor, Rev. William T. Scott, Sr.

One thing is clear — he was not talking about physical life, for no matter how much and how strongly a man believes in Jesus, he will experience death just like any other man. We must look further and deeper for the meaning of these words. Jesus was speaking about "the death of sin" as Dr. Barclay writes. Jesus can resurrect the life that is dead in sin. The selfish, the insensitive to the needs of others, the dishonest, the hopeless, the spiritually dead have been touched and brought to life by Christ, from the death of sin. Jesus still has the power to touch men in this life and give them new and more abundant life. And more. Jesus was also thinking of the life to come. We often and usually call this world "the land of the living", when in fact it would be more correct to call it "the land of the lying." But through faith in Christ and in union with him, we know that when death comes we do not pass out of the land of the living; the fact is, and it is a glorious fact, we pass into the land of the living. God is not the God of the dead but of the living. Through Christ we know that we are not journeying to the land of the sunset, but to the sunrise. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!

"Let Love Be Genuine"

A MESSAGE FOR RACE RELATIONS SUNDAY

FEBRUARY 12, 1961

BY THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

"Let love be genuine; hate what is evil, hold fast to what is good; love one another with brotherly affection; outdo one another in showing honor." Romans 12:9
(Revised Standard Version)

The Apostle said, "Let love be genuine." Indeed so! If love be not genuine, it is nothing. To be genuine is to be pure, true, authentic. Thus Paul is saying, "Let love be itself; let there be in it no pretense . . ., nothing alien to what it is; let love be love."

Tests of Love

But how can we tell whether our love is genuine? From the several tests of love's authenticity let us select two.

The Loveless, Lovelorn, Untouchable

Christian love is tested first by its approach to three kinds of people: the loveless, the lovelorn, and the unlovable. Most of our loving flows toward another kind of people: those who love us, those who are idolized by the world, and those who through ties of kinship and kindness draw us to them. When our love is no more than this, it never knows whether it is true love or not. "If you love those who love you," said the Master, "what reward have you?" If you love those to whom the whole world flocks in adulation, what do you more than others? If you love only those in whose lives you live, do you not love them for the sake of yourself?

The love of God was demonstrated by Jesus. He loved the loveless — the callous soldiers who put Him to death, the Samaritans who rejected Him, the disciple who betrayed Him, the men who coldly plotted His death. Such love is authentic. This is required of us. He loved the lovelorn — the tax collector, the woman taken in adultery, "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," the stranger and the alien. In loving the social outcasts He revealed that He loved all people. This must be true of us. He loved the unlovable — those whose repulsive filth and disease, dementia and wickedness offended every aesthetic taste. This proved the genuineness of His love. This must be true of us. Christian love stands or falls by its response to the loveless, the lovelorn, and the unlovable.

Human Needs

Second, the genuineness of Christian love is tested by its response to three elemental human needs which are not diminished by race or culture; age or sex; intelligence or wealth; they are invariable. How does love respond to these primary yearnings of all human life?

The Bantu, the Chinese, and the Cuban speak for all men when they cry, "Give me the opportunity to have!" Millions of people hunger for a fuller share of the good things of life. Every man has the right to have what is his as a man: food, shelter, clothing, work, health, play, beauty, knowledge. God has given him the right to these things and true love takes the form of justice as it confronts every man's plea for what is his as a man. This is a test of love: does it respond in justice to the need and the right of all men to have what is theirs as men?

The untouchables of India, refugees in many parts of the world, the migrants of America wandering from farm to farm, represent all men when they say, "I want in!" True love wills to grant every man his place in man's estate; it honors his part in all realms of commonwealth and church. Every man struggles for dignity — for status and recognition, for a fuller meaning for both life and work. But in doing so love does not leave him alone. Love is communion; it is one soul penetrating and identifying itself with another soul. It says in justice, "I am my brother's neighbor," but this is not enough. It says in kinship, "I am my brother's brother;" but this is not the end. It must say in the communion of God's love, "My brother and I are one." This is a test of love: does it respond in communion with men who need to belong?

People in every walk of life — the business executive, persons who labour in office, factory or field, as well as those of every race or color — speak for man in their expressed or muted yearning, "Let me be myself!" Every man, with God's promise in the pocket of his heart, has the right to be what he is as God's man and to fulfill what God expects of him. Genuine love sees this man. It breaks down the middle wall of partition and looks upon every man as infinitely sacred. What he is and what he can be no man must desecrate. This is a test of love: does it respond in reverence to every man's right to be?

"Let love be genuine!" Indeed so! Let our society, our institutions as well as persons, be tested by the genuineness of love. This is the basis of justice in human relationships. When love is genuine, race or cultural background, age or sex, intelligence or wealth will not be a basis for separation. So let YOUR love be genuine!

The National Council of Churches is indebted to Dr. Kyle Haselden for drafting this Message. Dr. Haselden is Managing Editor, The Christian Century, Chicago, Ill.

World Day Of Prayer

75th Anniversary Observance

Friday, February 17, 1961

Theme: Forward Through the Ages

Call to Prayer

Come, all whose hearts are moved with thanksgiving for the World Day of Prayer;

Come to worship the Hope of the world;

Come to pray that together we may proclaim his gospel;

Come to witness that his kingdom is everlasting.

Prayer

Lord Christ, who prayed that all may be one through the might of thy spirit, forgive us that we have not yearned for brotherhood. Forgive our nearsightedness and complacency. Rule in the hearts of all men that we may learn repentance and forgiveness, for we live only in thy forgiveness.

Savior of the world, we pray for eyes open to see thee at work in the events of nations; ears sensitive to hear thy call to be peacemakers;

hands stretched forth to give the treasure held in trust for thee; faith steady and unfaltering as we seek ways to do thy will;

For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

"The Gospel should be preached on the first Sunday of Lent as to call the congregation sentry duty at the crossroads history, standing where Jesus himself once stood."

Here And There Among The Churches

Shallow Well, Sanford, unanimously approved the Constitution of the United Church of Christ at its business meeting January 8.

Great Bridge Congregational Christian Church and Oak Grove Methodist held their first joint Sunday evening service February 5 in the former with Rev. Graham Carlton, pastor of the Methodist church, preaching.

"Family Night" will be observed by United, Winston-Salem, February 25 with members invited to homes of the church for pot-luck supper and some recreational activity. A "Young in Heart" evening, in the form of a bridge party, was enjoyed February 4.

Sympathy is extended to Rev. E. M. Powell of Henderson, N. C. in the death of his brother, R. Clemon Powell of Denton, February 3. Mr. Powell was a retired postmaster of Denton and active in the Central Methodist church there.

Children's mission study groups are being conducted at Elon College, with the "Willing Workers" (1st and 2nd grades meeting at the school February 14; the "Crusaders" (5th and 6th grades) at the Parish House February 21; and the Intermediates (3rd and 4th grades) at the Parish House February 28.

"Back-Talk" sessions will be held at the Raleigh parsonage for four consecutive Sunday afternoons, beginning February 19, when Rev. Collins Kilburn will welcome discussion of the morning sermons. Under the theme "Modern Rivals of Christian Faith," he will discuss nationalism, scientism, religionism, and humanism.

World Day of Prayer will be observed at Oakland, Chuckatuck, Virginia, February 17 at 8:00 p.m. with neighboring churches invited to share in the service.

Rev. John G. Truitt's final Sunday at South Norfolk February 5 was marked by good attendance at both the morning and evening services. A member writes, "Mr. Truitt's farewell messages were wonderfully inspiring and so applicable." The topics were "A Song in the Dark" and "God's Healing Balm."

First, Norfolk, had a covered dish dinner and annual church meeting following the morning church service January 22. The church voted to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. This church has a men's study group sponsored by the board of deacons which meets on Monday evenings and a similar study session for women meets on Tuesdays. This meeting is followed by visitation.

Union Grove church near Asheboro continues its monthly newsletter called The Fellowship, and indicates progress under the leadership of Rev. Billy Joe Willett, their new minister of a few months. Wednesday evenings there is a Bible study for families. A Boy Scout troop is increasing in numbers and promoting to higher standing. At the December 31 church conference the Constitution of the United Church of Christ was approved and a budget for the new year adopted. In 1960 the entire Bible was read by Leona Byrd, Sarah Coble, Mrs. Gann, Rietzel Ingram and Ruth Wilson.

"On Sunday morning, January 29, the temperature was freezing, the ground was covered with a couple of inches of ice, the sun was shining beautifully, and 192 people attended Sunday school at Wake Chapel, Fuquay-Varina, North Carolina," writes Mrs. Glendon Johnson.

Rev. Albert Ronander will meet with the Elon College and Community Church choirs early next Sunday morning and then preach at 11:00 a.m. in the Community Church. Dr. Howard Schomer, president of Chicago Theological Seminary, was the guest speaker February 12.

Dr. Earl Danieleley, president of Elon College, and Rev. Kenneth Kohler, executive of the Churchmen's Brotherhood of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, led an area meeting for laymen at Lancaster Seminary, Pennsylvania, February 11. Discussions concerned the new Council for Lay Life and Work; the Lay Schools of Theology; the coordination of the work of the Laymen's Fellowship and Churchmen's Brotherhood; and the nature of programs and projects for local men's groups.

Friends of Rev. J. Howard Smith, formerly of the Southern Convention, will be sorry to learn of his serious illness last fall, which included "walking pneumonia" and a cerebral embolism, which affected his speech. He is much improved and would appreciate hearing from his friends, according to C. B. Riddle, who has been in touch with him. Mr. Smith's address is 155 Grand Avenue, New Haven, Connecticut. The Christian Sun family of readers wishes for him a speedy and complete recovery.

LEADERSHIP EDUCATION WORKSHOP

Rev. Robert Knowles, minister of Christian education for the Southern Convention, attended the National Workshop on Leadership Education at Lisle Conference Center, New York, January 22-26, sponsored by the United Church of Christ. He then attended sessions of the Missions Council Mid-winter Meeting in Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania. Miss Dorothy Hampton, formerly of this area, was a representative of the Boston office of the Missions Council at the Lisle Conference and also attended the Buck Hill Falls sessions.

A special feature of this Workshop on Leadership Education was to plan for a group of 2500 volunteer Christian Education Associates, who will be trained in connection with the introduction of the new church school curriculum of our denomination.

MT. PLEASANT ELECTS S. S. OFFICERS

Mrs. Beulah Cameron, Reporter

Members of Mount Pleasant church elected Sunday school teachers for 1961 after Sunday school January 15. They are Mrs. Betty McKay for the primary class, Mrs. Beulah Cameron for the juniors, Mr. A. D. Wooten for the seniors, Mrs. Lewis McKay teacher of the women's Class, and Mr. L. D. Brooks teacher of the men. Mrs. Ruby Marks was elected to be secretary of the school.

We started the year with a new superintendent, Mr. George McKay, and Mr. Vivian Jones, treasurer. Rev. Ronald Nichols of Garner is also the new minister, with whom the members seem to be well pleased.

"CALL TO ACTION" AT NEWPORT NEWS

A "Call to Action" was recently adopted by our Newport News church. Mrs. W. B. Williams was elected acting chairman of an enlarged Board of Christian Education, which includes representatives from each class. For the next 6 months efforts are to be directed toward enlistment of new church school members and increased attendance and membership in church. Reports are to be made each week. A goal of 100 new church school members was adopted.

A goal of 50 new members of the church by June 30 was set, with the pastor, Dr. Jesse Dollar, and the deacons to take the initiative in this enlistment.

A Tithe To The Year

AN EDITORIAL IN UNITED CHURCH HERALD

Although the season of Lent, beginning February 15, is an increasingly meaningful and creative period, bringing to full climax the Christian year, there was a time not long ago when its observance by non-Episcopal and non-Lutheran Protestants was not only a novelty but even a cause for suspicion. What is its meaning? There are many interpretations. Gregory the Great, who decreed that Lent be forty days not counting Sundays, had this to say on one Ash Wednesday in the sixth century:

"From this day unto the joys of Paschal solemnity we, who through the past year have lived too much for ourselves, should mortify ourselves to our Creator during the tenth of the year through abstinence. When, most dear brethren, as ye are bid by the law to offer the tenth of your substance, so offer him also the tenth of your days." Christians have spent this "tithe of the year" in many different ways. "By using these days for deepening the devotional life," states the CC Book of Worship, "the faithful Christian is better prepared to enter into the sufferings of Christ, which are recalled during Holy Week, and into the joyous triumph of Easter."

The 1960 Pastor's Plan Book of the E and R Church defines Lent and then lists specific services for the observance: "Organize a church membership class... reactivate inactive members... preach on great themes... provide a place for sacrificial giving as an integral part of the Lenten program." All sources seem agreed that a disciplined observance of Lent — not primarily as a season of denial but as one for repentance and inward enrichment, the development of sensitive ethical awareness and of sincere gratitude to a gracious God — will provide us with the authentic affirmations, the transforming certainties and the assuring power we all so desperately require in these turbulent times. avm

"Gratitude To A Gracious God"

Gratitude is all too often left to one day in the year — Thanksgiving. Then we remember especially the abundant harvests from fields and factories. In Lent one remembers something much more vital to life at its best — the life, teachings, death and resurrection of Jesus who lived in Palestine centuries ago, but whose magnetic love has drawn into the fellowship of God millions through all those long centuries.

Think for a moment what would be left worth keeping if there were no "gracious God" to whom one could turn with hope and affection. The "little lower than angels" phrase used in the sacred Book to describe man would need to be changed to "a little lower than animals," for hope and love would bedevil us, torment us, and only disappointment would come at the end. Soulless animals would have the advantage, for they seem to expect nothing from the Infinite.

Experience teaches us that there is always reason for gratitude to One beyond and above us whose mercy underlies all our doings. Lent properly observed by study, meditation, prayer and a reaching out for that indescribable Something that "broods over us," leads us to repentance that lifts the downcast countenance into the beaming glory of the gracious God. "Take up thy bed and walk." "I will. Be thou clean." "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more." This day shalt thou be with me." Such are the comforting words to be found in the story of Jesus — the one to whom we turn with gratitude and affection as we live with him those tragic days that led him to a cross.

When Laymen Meet

Next Sunday afternoon laymen from all our churches are invited and urged to meet at the Convention center of learning—Elon College. If prophecy can be based on past experience, there will be hundreds of laymen and a scattering of ministers in the Whitley Auditorium when President H. H. Cunningham calls the meeting to order at three o'clock. Many of these busy men will have missed the morning service in their local church, and some of them will have driven more than 200 miles to be in this meeting of North Carolina and Virginia laymen. Strangely enough pastors will not complain about this absence from church. On the contrary they will have favored it, and shared in it.

What is the purpose of the meeting? Is it worth the effort? Many answers can be given. Here are some.

Acquaintance and fellowship. In such meetings the men who serve churches in Virginia clasp hands, exchange stories, think of common problems, and worship with men from Carolina. Both groups go home happier and stronger.

New Vision. It is easy to see only the little spot in front of the eye and forget that the world is much larger than what we see. "I will lift up my eyes" comes to us from Biblical poetry, but it is a practice sorely needed in our time. Specialists have their place; they must be. But all of us need to know more than our own job or church; we need to look beyond the hills and know the people over there.

New jobs and new people. Laymen in the convention have made possible the place of meeting for young people — Moonelon. Now they need to see something else that they can do. One of them has suggested that the laymen put this paper into all the homes of our church people. A good start has been made, but most of our church people never read any publication of our Church. They do not know what is being done. Young people grow to maturity without knowing much of the denomination that has given them a church home. Whether this should be the work undertaken by the laymen, or whether something more important and pressing shall claim their attention is a matter for them to decide. However, if the men who gather at Elon Sunday afternoon see something worthy of accomplishment and resolve in their hearts to do it, they will go home and back to their regular jobs with a sort of renewal that makes them new people. So mote it be!

The bold and daring contact with the Antarctica by the United States submarine Seadragon several weeks ago will increase schoolroom interest in one of the greatest mysteries of the world.

The Antarctica is not a comparatively small place as many believe. It is estimated to embrace an area of about 5,000,000 square miles, which is nearly 100 times the size of North Carolina, or 20 times the size of Texas, the second largest State in the Union.

The Antarctica surrounds the South Pole and is covered by a continental sheet of ice, the largest ice mass in the world. Discovered in 1820, all national claims have been nullified because of the impossibility of colonization.

The depth of the ice sheet is problematical. Some scientists say that it is 2,000 feet thick while others believe that this figure is too conservative. The ice has buried all the land except the highest mountain peaks and a few areas of volcanic rock along the coast. The ice moves down to the sea as an extended glacier along the coast, while in the depressions between the mountains it forms true valley glaciers. The mountain chains form a buttress for the vast central plateau, 8,000 to 10,000 feet above sea level on which the South Pole is situated.

For geographical purposes, Antarctica is divided into four quadrants which take their names from the seas or the land to the north. Thus there are African, Australian, Pacific and American quadrants. The coastline of the African and Pacific quadrants are virtually unknown. Only a small coastal area of the American quadrant has been observed by explorers, but the Australian quadrant is comparatively well known.

One of the many interesting parts of Antarctica is the Ross Barrier which extends across Ross Sea to King Edward VII Land, a distance of 400 miles long and 400 miles wide. This barrier is the largest ice shelf of all. It is the creation of glacier tongues that rolled down from the mountains — some of which are 15,000 feet high — probably millions of years ago and overran the submerged portion of the continent in the Ross section of the Antarctica region. It was on the Ross Barrier, near the Bay of Whales, that the late Admiral Richard E. Byrd made his base of operations.

The Ross Barrier and the Ross Sea were named in honor of Rear Admiral Clark Ross, a Britisher, who was leader of an Antarctic expedition in 1839. Many other places in this land of ice are named for explorers.

The Antarctica supports no year-round animal life except a few wingless insects and penguins. In what is known as summer there, whales and seals may be found on the coast.

Scientists have many opinions about the history and future of the Antarctica. Some think it was once temperate or tropical. Those who hold this view, along with a few others, also say that in millions of years the continent may be inhabited. If this view is correct a huge defrosting task lies ahead.

A Time For Greatness

William Joyner

The world and the God who made the world demand greatness from those who call themselves Christians in the present age. The same Lord who called into his service the first small band of disciples and sent them out to conquer the world with a Gospel of Love, still challenges men and women to dedicate their lives to his mission. He is still enlisting recruits into his service. He is still seeking volunteers who are willing to devote their best energy to the greatest cause of all — the Kingdom of God. To accept this challenge requires real greatness on the part of all who apply. Small ideas and small beliefs will never win the battle to which God calls us.

It would be well for all of us to ask ourselves just what we are doing to win the world for Christ. Are we honestly doing all that we possibly can do to make the witness of our own local church as strong and as attractive as it might be? Are we supporting its program by our regular attendance and gifts? Are we practicing the greatness which is demanded of us, or are we wasting our energy in the pursuit of trivial things? The Lord of life demands greatness of all who serve him in this age and in every age. As members of his Church we must rise to this demand.

A LENTEN MEDITATION

THE GOOD SHEPHERD

"I am the good shepherd."

John 10:11

The twenty-third psalm is beautiful. It was sung by a brave boy beneath blue skies. It was born of his courage and devotion, and trust of innocent sheep. To protect those sheep he would give his strong, young body, if need be. Indeed, he had a chance to prove it, and did! Jesus must have said, That is it!

He knew the psalm. Perhaps he tangled with the doctors in the old Jerusalem temple about its meaning. At least he upset them about something! He told his mother, too, that he must be about his Father's business.

David sang his song as he saw it. Without his shepherding the sheep would be lost. He saw their faith in him, felt his own faith in God. Said he, The Lord is my shepherd. Green pastures, quiet waters, righteous paths because he loves me, peace of mind, restoration of spirit, and his unfailing presence in dark valleys. Even though enemies be near food and joy were overflowing! No paraphrasing is as pretty as his own beautiful words: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Jesus must have said, That is it! I am the good shepherd!

When we see him going to the cross bearing our sins; when we see his love and anxiety over against so much unfinished business in our own hearts, in our own communities, in our wide troubled world; we should choose to do more than "give up sweets" during Lent, rather we should "take up his cross" and follow him with "goodness and mercy" on either side until time to "dwell in the house of the Lord forever". Said Jesus: "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep!"

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

A very insignificant item in the schedule of a church service sometimes interests me — the announcements, or that delightful word the English use, "the intimations."

Have you gone into a church service where nearly the first item on the agenda (one could hardly call it "the order of worship") was a hearty welcome to visitors, whose presence the minister seemed to take as a real compliment to his abilities. And this may be followed by other "announcements" which utterly break into the mood set by the first hymn.

Or have you been drawn into the mood of worship through hymn and scripture and prayer, only to have long-drawn-out announcements interposed — and then have the minister say piously, "We will now continue our worship (?) by making our offering to the Lord"?

In churches which use no printed bulletin it is, of course, necessary to have announcements as part of the Sunday morning program. A layman told a minister whom I know quite well that he wished he would not give the announcements on the bulletin from the pulpit, since all the congregation could read and it was an insult to their intelligence when the minister seemed to think otherwise.

It appears to me that the congregation comes to church to worship God. Then during the first part of the service one should try to have all parts fit together to provide the setting for that worship — call to worship, invocation, responsive reading, prayers, scripture, offering, maybe a poem or litany, hymns. Then, if announcements need to be made, have them a "breather" between the opening worship and the sermon. Ordinarily, the minister chooses a hymn to lead into his sermon following the more prosaic news of the church and community.

Maybe I am peculiar and no one else feels the continuity of worship is broken by "announcements" if they are thrown into the order of the service without thought for what comes before or after.

Dr. John G. Truitt was the leader for chapel services at Elon College January 31 and February 1. He preached at Virgilina February 5.

Ancient Questions

THAT STILL HAUNT US

By Erwin L. McDonald in Arkansas Baptist Newsmagazine

Little Rock, Arkansas

One of the earliest of man's recorded questions, "Am I my brother's keeper?" with its related query, "Who is my neighbor?" reverberate across the skies of man's habitation today with a crescendo that drowns out the din of atomic blasts. How much territory, how much time did the Lord cover when he said: "Love one another"? Can we be disciples of Christ and restrict our love to ourselves? To our own families? To our own churches and denominations? To our own clubs and societies? To those of our own neighborhoods? To our own political parties? To our own nationalities? To our own races?

Can we cover all of these with our Christian affection and go on building interminable walls that shut out of our compassion others — others made to be in the image of God? Others for whom Christ died?

What does it mean to love our neighbors? Does it mean to love them reservedly? Does it have any practical application that reaches down to capital-labor relations? Does it concern itself with salaries and wages paid, with working conditions? Does it have any bearing upon the quantity and quality of labor a workman expends for his day's pay?

Does the love Christ commands of Christians have anything to do with race relations? With how we feel about people whose skins and whose languages and backgrounds may be quite different from our own?

Does the love we are to have as followers of Christ have anything to do with attitudes of our hearts toward our fellow men, whether in our judgment they are wise or foolish, rich or poor, good or bad?

Does the love of Christ in our hearts make any difference in the way we treat people, whoever they are and wherever they are, whether in the face-to-face relationships of living together in the home, or working together, doing business together, or just living in the same world?

Selfishness and self-centeredness, the very base of man's inhumanity to his fellow man, are narrow in their concepts and in their outlooks, but they are almost limitless in the scope of their influence for strife in our civilization. Here is the cancer

ALBERT RONANDER

Rev. Albert Ronander is Assistant to the Secretary of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. Ronander attended high school in Los Angeles, California, and graduated from the University of Southern California in 1938, cum laude. He received his Bachelor of Divinity Degree, cum laude, from Chicago Theological Seminary and received the Master of Sacred Theology, magna cum laude, from Union Theological Seminary in New York City.

Before coming to his present position in 1957, he was Assistant Minister of the Congregational Christian Church of Oak Park, Illinois, for three years, and minister at Wilton Congregational Church, Wilton, Connecticut, for eight years. He was minister to service men for the Chicago Congregational Christian Union for two years and served two years as a Chaplain with the United States Army.

For three years Mr. Ronander was Teaching - Reaching -

Preaching Mission

The Committee on Evangelism of the Southern Synod has invited the Southern Convention to share in the Evangelism Program—"The Teaching, Reaching, Preaching Mission" to be held in the area of the Convention and Synod, roughly, North Carolina and Eastern Virginia, September 1, 1961 — September 1, 1962.

On November 4, 1960, a meeting was held in Raleigh, N. C. between the Committee on Evangelism of the Southern Synod, and the Chairmen of the Committees on Evangelism from the various Conferences in N. C. and E. Va., Chairman of the Committee on Evangelism of the Southern Conv. and Dr. Harvey Fesperman and Rev. Clyde Fields. A great deal of interest and enthusiasm was expressed for having the program in our area.

Dr. Robert Happel, Field Secretary of the Department of Evangelism of the United Church of Christ, reviewed briefly the TRPM and its successes in all types of churches. Every church that participates must vote to enroll, then a manual is sent from the National Office of Evangelism. Dr. Happel is to return to our area and meet with the ministers' associations of both groups and explain in detail the TRPM, February 21-28, 1961. Churches and ministers will not be pressured into this, but must enroll willingly and voluntarily.

It seems that the Southern Convention has about six or seven natural groupings, such as Henderson, Sanford, Burlington, Greensboro, Asheboro, Suffolk and Norfolk. The Southern Synod has about five. Where we overlap we will work together.

WHAT IS THE TEACHING, REACHING, PREACHING MISSION? It is a concentrated program

Dr. Sloan To Lead World Tour

To understand our Bible and the background of our religion a minister should know Palestine where Christianity was born. One group of thirty-three Baptist churches has recognized this and every one of the churches is sending its pastor to the Holy Lands this summer. They will walk where Jesus walked and visit places where Abraham, David, and the prophets lived.

Should not our churches show the same interest in improving the work of our pastors? Perhaps we should do even more and help our ministers see what Christianity is doing around the world. A new opportunity has developed for our churches to do this.

Dr. W. W. Sloan, well-known Christian authority on Palestine, professor of Bible at Elon College, Elon College, North Carolina, has had wide experience in visiting Christianity around the world, and particularly Palestine. Last summer he took a group of ministers to the lands of the Bible. This was so successful that several people who were along have asked him to lead a tour to visit church work around the world. He has been working very hard with various companies to develop the best possible trip for ministers and laymen at rock-bottom prices. The first price quoted for around the world was $3200. He has finally got this reduced to $2660 for a six weeks visit. This is less than the price of a new car.

For those who cannot spend this much time, Dr. Sloan has arranged for a group to meet him in Beirut, Lebanon. The two groups will then visit all of Palestine together. Dr. Sloan has succeeded in reducing the cost of this shorter tour to $1275. It will be possible to handle either tour on a "go now — pay later" plan. Pleasant Travel Service, Burlington, N. C. is accepting enrollments for the Fellowship Around the World tour and the Christianity's Birthplace tour.

The round-the-world tour will visit church activity in sixteen countries. It will leave New York June 23. The shorter tour will leave New York July 20. After Palestine members of either tour may visit as much of Europe as they wish. A copy of Dr. Sloan's book, "Bible Lands and the Bible" will be given to each member of both groups. This will be Dr. Sloan's 15th trip abroad, his seventh to Asia, his fifth to Palestine, his third around the world.

of spiritual renewal, of study and of lay evangelism carried on simultaneously and cooperatively by the churches within a given area. Hundreds of congregations, both E & R and C have already had the benefit of the TRPM and enthusiastic have been the testimonies as to its effectiveness.

The TRPM has a threefold emphasis: Teaching the church; Reaching the unchurched; and Preaching the Living Word. The objective of the Mission is comprehended in the title (1) an arousing of the present members of the Church to an awareness of their spiritual potential (inreach); (2) a growing concern on the part of the present members of the Church for those outside the Church (outreach); and (3) renewal of the Church, involving a deepened commitment to Christ, to His Body (the Church) and to God's redemptive purpose on the part of present and future members of the Church (upreach).

One of the many fruits of TRPM's concerted, cooperative, simultaneous effort is the sense of solidarity and of singleness of purpose discovered by participating congregations and pastors. Inestimable also is the impact made on communities by such a united witness.

This is truly a rare opportunity for us in the Southern Convention.

Dates for ministers' meetings with Dr. Happel are on page three. It is my earnest hope that we will have every minister present for one of these meetings.

PASTORS ARE TO BE USED

Paul frequently spoke of himself as a slave. Jesus said he came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Your pastor is "in the midst of you as he that serveth." Use him. Let him be a minister in the fullest sense of the word. If you have a special problem, tell him about it. If there is sorrow or sickness, do not fail to let him know. If you have run into a moral tangle, let him help unravel it. Use him. Step to the telephone and tell him you wish to see him. He cannot help you unless you let him know.

Daughter Of Missionaries To Go To Turkey

Miss Charlotte Jane Bunker, daughter of distinguished Congregational Christian educators in Ceylon, has been appointed a teacher for service in a Near East mission school.

The appointment, announced by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, becomes effective after Miss Bunker's graduation from Oberlin College, Ohio, where she is now a senior.

Her father, the Rev. Dr. Sydney K. Bunker, has been president of Jaffna College at Vaddukoddai, Ceylon, for the past 23 years. Her mother is also active in the college and also has been prominently associated with the Kodaikanal School in South India. (See Calendar of Prayer.)

Miss Bunker was born in Inuvil, Ceylon, in 1939 and received her elementary education at the Kodaikanal School. She entered Oberlin in 1957 and during her three and a half years there has been identified with the Musical Union, Y.W.C.A., Cosmopolitan Club and other college groups. Her summer activities while going to school in South India included participation in a work camp program, helping in a school for retarded children and entertaining the sick in hospitals.

Miss Bunker saw much of her parents during the past year when they were in the United States on furlough.

Appointed to a three-year term as a teacher of English, she will be assigned to either the American Collegiate Institute at Izmir, or the American Academy for Girls at Uskudar, Istanbul, Turkey. She hopes to sail for the Near East next summer.

THE CEYLON MISSION

February

19—The Ceylon Mission of the American Board has worked among the Tamil-speaking people of the Jaffna Peninsula since 1816. There are now about 5,000 church members in Jaffna (many educated Christian young people have gone elsewhere to work), 2 hospitals, 60 elementary schools and junior colleges and Jaffna College.

Manepay

20—Miss Dorothy Appleby is assistant nursing superintendent at Green Memorial Hospital. She is an English woman who went to India to work in a hospital for tea planters. She became a missionary nurse of the American Board in 1950.

Vaddukoddai

21—Rev. and Mrs. Coenraad Bernadus (Ben) Bavinck are Dutch. His parents were missionaries to Indonesia. He is chaplain of Jaffna College and teaches Bible and manual training in high school, does Boy Scout and Student Christian Movement work. She does social work and teaches Sunday school in outcaste village.

22—Rev. and Mrs. Sydney Bunker have headed Jaffna College for 20 years. He was born of missionary parents in South Africa. He studied at Oxford and Yale and taught at Talladega College. They are helping students to meet changes which are coming to Ceylon — political, social, religious.

23—Mr. and Mrs. W. Robert Holmes are at Jaffna College, where he teaches history, coaches basketball, has catalogued the library, and visits villages doing Christian work. She leads the choir, works with church and Sunday schools and counsels students.

24—Mr. and Mrs. Edson Lockwood have been at Jaffna College since 1936, following work in India since 1927. He teaches advanced mathematics and was acting president for the 300-student school during Mr. Bunker's recent furlough. She channels Friendly Service help to 28 centers, leads Sunday school work in whole diocese and is adviser for the college literary magazine. (See article on this page about their daughter.)

THE ANGOLA MISSION

25—The Angola Mission was established in 1880 among the Ovimbundu of the central highlands. In Angola there is opportunity for evangelization and direct Christian work equalled in few other fields. In recent weeks this area has been in the news, as there has been some revolution against the Portuguese owners.

Damascus Women Report

Mrs. William Crabtree

The members of our Women's Fellowship have enjoyed the past three months of programs and work together. Under the able leadership of our president, Mrs. Jerome Crabtree, and program chairman, Mrs. Paul Long, we have had interesting and informative programs. One of the highlights were the slides of a recent trip to the Far East shown by Miss Louise Cantrell of the School of Public Health at U. N. C. Her talk was both amusing and educational. Another highlight was our Women's Fellowship Day supper at the church in November. Mrs. Marvin Poythress' mother, Mrs. Ralph Phelps, showed slides of her trip overseas. With her camera Mrs. Phelps captured the great beauty of the countries she visited, especially the flowers.

Our Women's Fellowship members were invited to Mams Chapel Church November 30, to share the study book review. Miss Ann Poythress, senior at Pittsboro and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Poythress, reviewed the book in such a professional and inspiring way we were all very proud of her.

Mrs. Walter Crabtree, Friendly Service chairman, led our Fellowship in December in an interesting program about the needs of our migrants, colleges and hospitals. Many baby clothes and dolls were sent to the designated places.

Youth Faces The Future

Becky Harward

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

PERSONAL CHRISTIAN COMMITMENT

Becky Harward
Faith Commission Chairman

So many young people today do not seem to be committed to anything. The Faith Commission feels that "because of our 'lostness' in a world of conflicting demands, we need awareness of what and to whom we should be committed. We should think of personal Christian commitment not as an end in itself, but as a continuing process of response and growth through doubting and questioning, through studying and experiencing God's truths as 'we strive to know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ.'" (Program Hints, 1960-62)

Programs planned around the emphasis "Personal Christian Commitment" can be very beneficial to members of local P. F. groups.

First, the group should decide whether or not it makes a difference to whom or what its members are committed. For instance, the group could set up a role-playing situation showing the demands on youth of science, of a steady boy or girl friend, of our country, or of a social club. One person would represent the attitude, "Why bother with Christ?" or "Is God worth it?" while others would defend the Christian way of life. Also, the group could make a comparison of the Protestant faith with others, or discuss the lives of noted personalities to see how and to what they are giving their lives. The play, "Verdict of One," by Helen Kromer would be helpful. It deals with one person's response in the world as it exists today. (Order from the Commission on Church and Ministry, 2969 West 25th Street, Cleveland 13, Ohio.)

After deciding to what they are committed, the members of the group could discuss why they should be committed. To do this, take a good look at current events and discuss the effect the personal Christian commitment might have on the community, the state, the nation, and the world. Present and analyze The Faith Hawker, a play showing a lost person who needs meaning and purpose in life. (The above-mentioned play can be found in the booklet, Seeking Years, edited by John Gunn, Bethany Press, $1.50.)

Next, the group could explore the question, "What is my responsibility in making a personal Christian commitment?" Use the Bible to see how persons have committed themselves to God and to Christ. Invite people with different vocations to share their convictions with the group. The topic, "Freedom and Responsibility", in "Youth Fellowship Programs" would be excellent in preparing a program.

I hope that you will use some of the suggested methods for studying "Personal Christian Commitment" within your group.

* * *

At the Joint National Youth Council last summer, the Faith Commission, after three days of studying and discussing its areas of concern, selected two subjects to be emphasized in the next two years. These two subjects are "Personal Christian Commitment" and "Youth Evangelism." My next article will be concerned with "Youth Evangelism."

—Becky

The long-range goal of the youth program is to secure complete commitment of each young person. In your purpose you say, "to dedicate ourselves to do His will." Eventually, you've got to decide for or against God. This is no half-way affair.

You may not know what you're letting yourself in for when you become a "committed Christian." But somewhere in your spiritual growth, you've got to declare yourself in or out. The words are these: "Lord, I believe; help my unbelief."

Following are some suggested activities for your group:

a. Find the words of some hymn of consecration and study their meaning. What do they say to us? (For instance: "Take Thou Our Minds, Dear Lord," "O Jesus, I Have Promised," "Take My Life and Let It Be," "Spirit of the Living God," and "Make Me a Captive, Lord.")

b. Conduct meetings which bear on commitment. (For instance, in Youth Fellowship Programs, No. 1, "Lost and Found—One Self"; in No. 2, "You Can Tell the Difference"; in No. 3, "What Does God Expect of Us?"; in No. 5, "Loyalty — What Is It?")

c. Get the words of prayers of consecration and dedication, delve into their meanings, and see what they say. (Get help from your pastor.) Then write your own prayers of dedication.

d. Read or get a book report on the biographies of outstanding Christian personalities. Ask your minister for suggestions. (See the Eagle and Frontier Books of Friendship Press: sample titles: Two Swords, Send Me Among Savages, Armed With Faith, Missionary to Oregon.)

e. Look in the Bible for illustrations of persons who have committed themselves to God and to Jesus Christ. Arrange a general research session, and make a list of such persons. What did commitment do to their lives?

Youth Sunday In Our Churches

"Youth and the Demand for freedom" was the sermon topic of pastor Carl Wallace at the Church of the Wide Fellowship on Youth Sunday. Young people shared in the service.

"The World Crisis and American responsibility" is the subject being discussed by the Raleigh P. F. during February. Discussion is based on a book of essays by Reinhold Niebuhr on the above topic.

The Elon Pilgrim Fellowship members were guests of the Burlington, First, P. F. group at a Valentine party February 12. This is a "return visit," for in January the Burlington group visited the Children's Home at Elon as guests of the Elon Pilgrim Fellowship.

The young people of our High Point church conducted the entire service January 29. Those participating included: Ronnie Gardner, Larry and Virginia Payne, Nancy and Wayne Woodell, and Dorothy and Larry Lester.

Joan Wilson and Pat Barefoot were the "preachers" when young people conducted morning worship at Great Bridge, Norfolk, January 29. Others sharing in the service were Jimmy Jackson, Douglas Wall, Carol Sever, Alice Barefoot, Betty Gallimore, Katie Ange, and the junior and primary choirs.

On the fifth Sunday in January, when the Shallow Well church does not have a worship service, the senior High Pilgrim Fellowship had a day of worship, fun, and planning in the form of a retreat at Percy Measamer's cabin. The counselors, Mr. and Mrs. Woodrow Marsh and Rev. Max Vestal, accompanied them.

The Senior Pilgrim Fellowship of Damascus, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, meets twice monthly in homes of members. At the January 6 meeting in the home of Jean Dollar they played hymns and members had to "Name That Tune." The pastor, Rev. William Joyner, led a discussion on the subject "The Challenge of Being A Christian." The P. F. activities are reported by Bruce Long in the church newsletter, appropriately called "The Road to Damascus."

Rosemary Hoffman and Prudence Beatty spoke on "Youth Looks At the Church" at United, Raleigh, February 5 when the young people conducted the service.

Young people of Burlington, First, led a special youth night worship service in the sanctuary February 5. Guest speaker was William Hight, head of the guidance department of the Burlington city schools.

Young people participating in the morning service at Mt. Zion, Mebane, February 5, included Linda Wilkerson, Murray Lynch, Roy Hall and members of the youth choir. "Our Craving for God" was the subject of the minister, Rev. Glenn Garrett.

Youth Sunday was observed February 5 at Liberty, North Carolina, where Rev. Thomas Liverman is pastor. Guest speaker was Robert Baxter, director of development for Elon College. Young people conducted the worship service and furnished special music.

Young people led the morning worship at Beverly Hills, Burlington, January 29 using as the theme "Into All the World Together." Participating were Jerry Faulkner, Sue Hurdle, Tommy Hall, Don Fogleman, Sam Fowler, Jim Phillips, Johnny Register, Ruaine Riley, and the youth choir. The message of the pastor, Rev. Kenneth Register, was entitled "Making the Bitter Sweet!"

"The Concern of Youth for the Church and the World" was the theme discussed at Albemarle on Youth Sunday by Ronald Sells, Boyd Simmons, Wayne Seymour and Carolyn Varner. Other young people sharing in the service included Janet Seymour, Pat Mullins, Janey Ragsdale, Cathy Sells, Butch Barringer, Freida Plyler and Lana Hinson.

The MAD (Elon College Ministerial Association Deputation) Team spent the week-end of February 4-5 at Shallow Well, Sanford, helping the junior and senior high P. F. groups in planning their programs. Jimmy Lewis Rosser, president of the Ministerial Association, led the group. Young people from Sanford and Northview were invited to share in the activities.

"Into All the World Together" was the theme for the annual United Christian Youth Movement service for all Protestant young people of Raleigh held at Davie Street Presbyterian Church February 5. Rev. Collins Kilburn, new minister of our United Church, was the speaker.

At Union Ridge, Burlington, February 5 the young people led the morning worship service. Participating were Roy Stanley, Jr., Ronald Walker, Jimmy Starnes, Eloise McCauley, Tommy Thompson and both the youth and senior choirs. The pastor, Rev. Winfred Bray, spoke on "Taking Life's Greatest Test."

Lacy Presnell, Jr., assistant superintendent of schools for Randolph County, was the speaker for Youth Sunday January 29 at Asheboro. Tommy Hodgin, president of the P. F., presided. Others sharing in the service were: Jane Hughes, Dale Morgan, Mike Morgan, Libby Williams, Jimmy Brown, Jane Adams and Margaret Hall. Mr. Presnell has recently been elected clerk of the Asheboro church.

YOUTH SUNDAY AT APPLE'S CHAPEL

Mrs. E. H. Thompson, Reporter

Youth Sunday was observed at Apple's Chapel February 5. The worship service was led by the young people who are active in the Pilgrim Fellowship. The singing was done mainly by the early teen-agers assisted by the regular choir. Gail Cook gave the call to worship, and Pat Brown announced the hymns. Donna Andrews led the responsive reading, and Gail Summers read the scripture from Ephesians 1:1-23. Catherine Elliot gave the Invocation.

Latne Summers received the offering, and Janice Powell led the morning prayer. Gloria Shepherd gave the prayer of confession.

The ushers were: Vernell Oliver, Gary Clapp, David Jarrett, and Richard Cook. After the worship service conducted by the young people the pastor, Rev. Bland Leebrick, gave an inspiring sermon on "The Relationship of Age and Youth." The service of the young people and the pastor was much appreciated and was very inspiring to the large audience in attendance.

"Big Day" At South Norfolk

Beatrice George

Notwithstanding the crusty snow and ice which covered the ground, there was a warm inspirational spirit at South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church on Sunday, January 29.

The morning worship service was conducted by the young people. Randal Harris gave the call to worship and invocation. Jack Wagner led the responsive reading and offered the morning prayer. The two-part sermon was given by Alan Harrell, who spoke on the activities of youth today and the part they take in present day living in comparison with those of their parents and grandparents, and by Billy Robbins, who developed the subject of "Jesus, the Light of the World." The Junior Girls Choir under the direction of Mrs. J. G. Truitt, Jr., rendered the anthem "Fairest Lord Jesus."

At the close of the service, Rev. Mr. Truitt, Jr., conducted a brief business session at which time the congregation voted unanimously to adopt the Constitution of the United Church of Christ.

The evening service was a united service of worship with Rosemont and Great Bridge churches as guests. A song service was directed by Mr. Joseph R. Balderson. The Rev. Mr. Truitt conducted the preliminaries, including the scripture reading from Matthew 7:1-14. The guest choirs sang "The One Hundredth Psalm" under the direction of Mrs. Roberta Whitten, with Mrs. James W. Go-forth, Jr., at the organ.

Rev. Lewis Bill Simmons delivered the sermon on the topic, "Crossroads." His introduction was a very stirring heroic story of World War II of a Luzon University dean who made a

SEND YOUR RESOLUTIONS

According to the provisions of the Constitution and By-Laws of the General Council I am requesting "persons who have resolutions or subjects for resolutions to present" to the coming meeting of the General Council in Philadelphia, June 29 - July 3, 1961, to send them to the chairman of the Committee on Resolutions — Reverend Charles L. strong decision in the face of personal danger. Mr. Simmons emphasized the importance of making right decisions today in a world where so many sinful things exist all around us. He reviewed the fall of the nations that let sin prevail and drag them down. In closing he enlarged upon the two ways — The Broad Way and The Narrow Way — as laid down by Jesus in his wonderful Sermon on the Mount.

The loose offering from this service was designated for Moonelon Conference Center.

After the service there was a get-together in the social hall for coffee and home made cookies served by members of the Dorcas Class.

SUMMER SOCIAL ACTION INSTITUTES

Dates have been set and initial plans roughed out for the 1961 edition of the summer Christian Social Action Institutes. The schedule of times and places is as follows:

Blue Ridge Assembly of the YMCA, Black Mountain, North Carolina
— June 19-23

White Memorial Retreat Center, Mill Valley, California — June 19-23

Lakeland College, Sheboygan, Wisconsin — June 10-14

Massachusetts Congregational Conference Center, Framingham,
Massachusetts — July 24-28

A major consideration at all institutes will be "The Family and Rapid Social Change." Other topics include "Next Steps Toward Racial Equality," "Jewish-Christian Relations," Justice and American Abundance," and "The United Nations Confronts New Problems." Sessions on practical application and social action strategies will also be part of the program. Competent people in each field are being secured to serve as speakers and resource leaders. Social action committees on all levels should take note of the institute dates in their areas and make plans to be represented. The cost of each institute is $30.

A new feature of the institutes this year is that one course of special interest to pastors will be offered, with a parallel course for lay people. The Council is also exploring the possibility of an institute for youth some time in August.

The Days Of Lent

Bill Simmons

Do you remember last September 12, when hurricane Donna swept through Tidewater leaving us without electricity for days? The great damage from this hurricane was to the trees. Millions of them were destroyed by the heavy rains and the powerful winds. Of the trees that fell, some were uprooted because their roots were too shallow, some broke off because they were decayed at their center, some were too inflexible and were snapped off by the fury of the storm.

The storms and tensions of our time have revealed similar weaknesses in people's lives. Some people lack a tap root of faith to hold them steady when the storms of temptation and trouble come. Some are weakened because of hidden and unconfessed sin in their lives. Some break when the storm comes because of pride; they will not bend or give an inch.

Right here is the meaning of Lent. It is the period between Ash Wednesday and Easter when we think about strengthening our own foundations.

Lent doesn't necessarily mean giving up things. It rather means adding to our lives those experiences that can contribute to Christian growth, such as:

1. Regular church attendance. The Sunday morning services and the Sunday evening services during Lent are all designed to lift and strengthen. No time can ever be better spent.

2. Devotional reading. Select some good reading material for daily use. "The Upper Room" and the "Daily Devotions" are good.

3. Joining the church. What better way is there of strengthening one's life than that? If you are not a member of the church, join it during Lent. Lent begins Wednesday, February 15. Make it count in your life.

Jesus Faces The Cross

Background Scripture: John 12.

Devotional Reading: Matthew 16:13-23.

Memory Selection: He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life shall keep it unto life eternal. John 12:25.

The Seeking Greeks

John wrote his gospel to present the truth of Christianity in a way that the Greeks could appreciate and understand. It is natural that his gospel is the one that tells of this incident of the Greeks who came to see Jesus — and it is the only gospel that does tell it. We do not know anything about these Greeks — whether they were proselytes, converts to the Jewish faith; or Greeks who just happened to be in Jerusalem at the Feast. We need not be surprised that they were there, for two reasons: the Greek was an inveterate wanderer — he was always trying to learn new things and to go to new places. And he was characteristically a searcher after truth. He had a seeking mind. In any event, these Greeks came to Philip saying, "We would see Jesus." Theirs was instinctively the cry of humanity. Weary of speculation and philosophy and fine-spun theories, folks want to see Jesus. Furthermore here in John's gospel we see the dawning recognition that Christianity was a universal religion, that it was designed to meet the needs of all men, that its message was to go out into all the world. This is evidenced by the "lift" which the coming of these Greeks brought to the Master. "Now the hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified." Here was the beginning of the turning of the Gentile world to him.

The Amazing Paradox

When Jesus said "The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified" he really threw a bombshell into the ranks of the Jews, and of the Greeks, too, for that matter. For in the thinking of the Jews, the Son of Man was to be the world conqueror whom God was going to send to establish a Kingdom with Jerusalem as its capitol. In their thinking, the Son of Man was to be glorified by material and military might.

But Jesus here insists that the "Son of Man" would be glorified by being crucified. In contrast to the Jews who thought the conquest would come by the armies of God, Jesus plainly stated that the conquest would come only through or by the Cross. This was turning their world upside down. No wonder they did not understand him. And the tragedy is that they refused to understand him. Conquest by sacrifice and death! Impossible, incredulous, preposterous! The fact is that every dynasty or empire or nation founded by force has vanished, leaving only a memory, which with the years becomes fainter and fainter. But the empire which Christ founded upon a Cross each year extends and increases its sway!

Another Amazing Paradox

Jesus goes on to say that "unless a grain of wheat falls into the ground and dies, it remains all by itself alone." But if it dies it bears much fruit. He is saying that only by death can life come. A grain of wheat, carefully protected from all outside forces, produces no increase, yields no harvest, furnishes no flour, makes possible no bread, feeds no hungry people. But put into the ground and surrendering itself to the earth, losing its life in a mysterious death-life process, it reproduces itself thirty, sixty, an hundred fold. A quiet Quaker started what he called an experiment with "Dynamic Kernels." Starting with 360 grains of wheat which he planted in a small plot four by eight feet, he took, each year, for five years, one tenth of the harvest and gave it to the church, and planted the remaining nine-tenths. At the end of five years, it required a field of 30 acres to get the yield of that original 360 grains — 5,000 bushels of wheat! !

Jesus also said that it is only by spending life that we retain life. Hoard life and you lose it. To be sure one would undoubtedly exist longer if he takes things easy, avoids all strain, sits by the fire and hoards his resources, looks after himself like a hypochondriac looks after his health. He would exist longer — but he will never live at all.

Once again, Jesus says that true greatness comes by service. Our modern world needs this truth. A schoolboy was once asked what part of speech "my" and "mine" are, and he replied "aggressive" pronouns. There are many people today who are in life and in business for nothing else than what they can get out of it. The people whom the world remembers and honors are not the people who had great wealth, but the people who rendered great service.

From Tension To Certainty

The Master frankly said that he was greatly troubled in soul. We have here perhaps John's reference to the feelings with which Jesus faced the "Cup" or the "Cross" as described in the other Gospels as taking place in the Garden of Gethsemane. No man wants to die at thirty-three, and certainly no man wants to die on a cross at any time! But in the battle between his desire and the will of God, Jesus won the victory. As someone put it "Here there met the horror of death, and the ardour of obedience." And Jesus triumphantly declared that that Cross would be the magnet which would draw all men unto himself. These few verses show us how Jesus passed from tension to triumph. How come? What came between the tension and the triumph?

The Voice of God

In between the tension and perhaps even terror which Jesus felt as he considered the Cross, and the sense of triumph which he soon thereafter expressed as to the magnetic and transforming power of that Cross, came the voice of God. "I have both glorified it (Thy Name), and will glorify it again." In his hour of trial and temptation there came the sure, steadying voice of his Heavenly Father. It followed a familiar pattern — Jesus heard it in connection with his baptism, on the Mount of Transfiguration, and now here when he finally decided to take the way that led to Jerusalem and to the Cross. It was thus with Jesus, and it can be thus with us. God still speaks to his children in their hour of testing and need, if they will listen to his voice. When God sets us out on a task, he gives direction and guidance. He is not a silent God. The trouble is not that God does not speak, but that we do not listen enough, or obey when we do hear.

At Our Church Home For Children

BEQUESTS ARE HELPFUL

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We sold the Ballentine property at Fuquay Springs, N. C. in January and have placed the money received from the sale in our Bequest Fund in the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, Burlington, N. C.

The property was willed to the Home by Joe Ballentine, who was a trustee and a friend of the institution for many years. He was a member of the Wake Chapel Christian Church. The Ballentine property was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Johnson of Fuquay Springs.

We plan to use the money as a memorial to Mr. Ballentine. This is in keeping with our decision to place all bequests we receive in the future in the Bequest Fund and use them only as an endowment or a memorial to those making the gift.

From time to time our Home is remembered in the wills of those who cared for the welfare of children in need. Over a period of years these amounts could total a sizeable sum which would be most beneficial to our Home.

Endowment Funds are also most helpful to an institution such as ours. By investing funds in good securities we would be assured of a certain income each year, and we could use this as the basis of our income and work from that in obtaining the balance of the income necessary to carry on the operation of our Home. This has long been the dream of our Home and we hope that in the near future such an Endowment Fund will become a reality.

Last Sunday, February 5, a group of our younger children presented the third in a series of monthly programs about the work of our Home over the Burlington Radio Stations. The 15-minute taped program was a worship service led by our children with singing, prayers, scripture and a brief message. We are so happy for our boys and girls to have the opportunity to bring our Home before the people and it is good experience for them to appear in such a manner. We are most grateful to the radio stations for giving us the time and facilities to tell our story to many friends in this area.

New Film And Filmstrips Available

HOME MISSIONS

"The Procession", 16mm sound film, 30 minutes. This describes the role of the church in the new style of life that is struggling to emerge in the great cities of America. Filmed in Chicago, this exceptional motion picture utilizes the interview technique to explain the mission of the church today and to predict the new philosophies the urban church must develop to meet the needs of the future. This is how one church solved the problem of integrating Negroes and Spanish-speaking peoples into its life.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

"The Sending And The Sent", 35mm filmstrip with record, 22 minutes. A new filmstrip in conjunction with the celebration of the 150th Anniversary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, showing its historical beginnings and its present role in the world.

"The World In A Word", 35mm filmstrip, written script. How the "young" Christian Churches the world over are taking up the missionary enterprises of their own, and our role to aid them.

"Into All The World Together", 35mm filmstrip, written script. This filmstrip is a summary visualization of the work of the American Board of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Board of International Missions of the Evangelical and Reformed Church as they now go "Into All The World Together" in the United Church of Christ.

These Visual Aids may be obtained by writing to Miss Ruth Dunn, Box 336, Elon College, North Carolina. Several weeks notice should be given in order to assure reservation. Promptness in returning the Visual Aids is stressed so that others may have the use of this service. All Visual Aids should be returned the day following use.

Dr. Sheldon Mackey, secretary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church who (as announced at the Midwinter Meeting at Buck Hill Falls) will be the head of the Stewardship Council of the United Church of Christ, will be the guest speaker at The Christian Temple, Norfolk, February 19. Rev. Clyde Fields, superintendent of the Southern Convention, will be the guest speaker February 26.

Veteran Missionary Dies

Boston, Mass., Jan. 30 — Funeral services for Mrs. Dorothea K. Brueckner, for 42 years a missionary in South Africa under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, were held today (Monday, Jan. 30) in Johannesburg, S. Africa.

She had been in frail health and died in Johannesburg Saturday (January 28) at the age of 71.

The wife of Dr. Karl Robert Brueckner, who was also an American Board missionary in Africa, Mrs. Brueckner began her overseas service in 1915 as a teacher of Domestic Science at Inanda Seminary, a girls' school inland from Durban, South Africa.

Dr. Brueckner, appointed four years earlier, was vice-principal of Adams College at Natal, less than 50 miles away, and in the course of their mission activities they met and fell in love. They were married in 1919 and for the next 30 years shared a full and productive life of service at Adams College. Four daughters were born to the couple during these years and the missionary wife and mother had her hands full.

In 1949 they were transferred to Durban, on the South Africa coast, where Dr. Brueckner had general supervision of 70 large primary schools. Their children had grown up and gone out on their own and Mrs. Brueckner was now able to devote much of her time to counseling with mothers and other African women who turned to her with their problems. Despite a nagging chronic illness, she served as the mission statistician, helped her husband in his work with the schools, and maintained her own program of service among African women of the area without uttering a complaint.

"She gave of herself unstintingly," said Dr. John Reuling, the American Board's secretary for Africa. "Where he was, the poor, the abandoned, the suffering always found some material help, as well as love and sympathy."

Mrs. Brueckner and her husband were voted emeritus missionaries in 1957. But though officially in retirement since that time, their Johannesburg home has continued to be a center of Christian activities for many Africans of that area.

Born in Kendall, New York, in 1889, Mrs. Brueckner was graduated from Cornell University in 1913.

FAREWELL PARTY FOR TRUITTS

Beatrice George

The Women's Fellowship of the South Norfolk church entertained at a farewell party for Rev. and Mrs. John G. Truitt, Jr., February 3 in the social hall. Mr. Truitt left February 7 to take up his duties as chaplain in the U. S. Air Force.

Mrs. Gregory Tegerides was "mistress of ceremonies," and led the group in singing. Other musical numbers were rendered by the junior choir and a "Barbershop Quartet," composed of Carlton Chappell, Ellsworth Morris, Warren Morse and Rev. O. D. Poythress. Mrs. W. B. Evans, president of the Women's Fellowship, read a poem written in honor of the Truitts. Mr. C. F. Reece, chairman of the official board, expressed the regrets of the members that Mr. and Mrs. Truitt were leaving the South Norfolk church. A gift purse was presented to them by Mrs. Evans.

In addition to Rev. and Mrs. O. D. Poythress, guest ministers and wives who were introduced included: Rev. and Mrs. Charles Pegram, Bayview; Rev. and Mrs. Sammy Nelson and son, Lynnhaven Colony; Rev. and Mrs. Julius Rice and family, Bay-side; Rev. and Mrs. Kenyon Edwards, Central; Rev. and Mrs. Olin Pendleton, First, Norfolk; Rev. Lowell A. Smoot, Hodges Ferry, Portsmouth.

Refreshments were served following the program. Mrs. Hugh Rawls was chairman for the evening, with the six circle leaders assisting.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING SCHOOL AT HAYES CHAPEL

B. G. Partin

A leadership training school was held at Hayes Chapel January 16-20 with the following churches taking part: Auburn, Amelia, Clayton, Garner Community, Piney Plains, and Hayes Chapel. We had a wonderful time together, with a lot of fun and fellowship. We all learned how to teach better and have a better Sunday school.

The program committee consisted of Jessie W. Evans, chairman, Leonard Stone and J. C. Ford. Teachers were: Adult, J. C. Ford and Rev. E. H. Sessom; young people, Rev. Carl Dixon; juniors and intermediates, Emerson Woodall and Mrs. Leonard Stone; beginners and primary, Ralph McCracken, from United Church, Raleigh. Our attendance averaged 35 each night.

We all want to thank the committee who planned the program and also the teachers who spoke to us each night. May we all go forward teaching for Jesus Christ.

NEW SOCIAL ACTION EDITOR INSTALLED

Miss Elizabeth Johns, formerly training secretary of the foreign division of the National YWCA, was installed as new publications secretary and editor for the Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ at Buck Hill Falls, January 29.

Miss Johns, who succeeds Mrs. Fern Babcock Grant, will edit the monthly magazine Social Action. She graduated from Goucher College, has her M. A. degree from Mt. Holyoke, and has studied at Harvard, New York School of Social Work, University of Pennsylvania, Union Seminary and Yale Divinity School.

"FORWARD MARCH" AT CHRISTIAN TEMPLE

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, is engaged in a "Forward March" February 1 - July 31, presented as a challenge by the pastor, Rev. Frank Hamilton, and adopted by the members at the annual business meeting.

The deacons are accepting responsibility for the effort to secure 50 new members during this time.

Increasing attendance in the church school and at the morning worship will be the responsibility of the department heads and teachers. Each class will have a membership committee and an attendance committee.

WORLD CONGREGATIONALISM

"World Congregationalism," the three-times-a-year periodical issued by the International Congregational Council, appeared in January in new and larger format. Edited by Dr. Ralph F. G. Calder, who visited the Southern Convention with Mrs. Calder a year ago, this magazine is well worth the $1.00 per year in order that you may keep in touch with Congregational churches in other parts of the world. Subscriptions in the United States are handled by The National Women's Fellowship, 19 South LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois, although of course the magazine is of interest to our church people in general, and not just to women.

MISSION CONCERN

When through prayer and study we renew our concern, from day to day, for the total work of the Church in the world, we build a great reservoir of fellowship and spiritual power. Without this, the money and lives devoted to the work... become merely instruments of charity which are mechanical and ineffective.

CONSECRATION of GARNER CHURCH PARSONAGE

Mrs. Lewis Wilkins, Reporter

The Consecration service for the Garner Community Church parsonage was held on Sunday, January 15, at 11:00 a.m., with 131 present. Supt. Clyde Fields delivered the morning message on "The Nature of the Church." Rev. T. N. Daughtry of Clayton, N. C. also shared in the service. The Auburn church choir rendered special music for the occasion. Representatives of the Hayes Chapel church were also present.

Greetings were sent by the following: Dr. George Alley, President of the Southern Convention; Rev. Carl Wallace, Chairman of the Mission Board; Rev. Earl Farrell, Pastor of the Wake Chapel Church; Rev. Walstein Snyder, Supt. of the Home for Children; Dr. David Shepherd, President of the E. N. C. Conference; Dr. William T. Scott, former Supt. of the Southern Convention and minister of the Oakland Christian Church; and Dr. F. C. Lester, former Supt. of Southern Convention and Editor of The Christian Sun.

Eighteen united with the church during the service of worship, making a total of 62 members received since April.

Many friends visited the pastor, Rev. Rosser L. Clapp, and family in the parsonage during the afternoon "Open House." The parsonage consists of a living room, dining room which will be used as a study until the church building is constructed, kitchen, den, three bedrooms, two baths, two utility rooms and carport. It was built by contractor Howard L. Perry, a member of the Garner Church. The estimated value of the parsonage and land is $19,900.

Here And There Among The Churches

February 12 our ministers and their families of the area met for breakfast in the home of Rev. and Mrs. Willis Joiner of Shelton Memorial church in Portsmouth, Virginia.

The sixtieth anniversary service of our Newport News church was observed last Sunday. Sermon topic for the pastor, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, was "Sixty Years: and Sixty More." Lenten sermon topic theme is "From Nazareth to Calvary," with Luke used as the background.

Rev. Frank Hamilton was the speaker at a covered dish supper meeting at Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth, Virginia, February 8. Mr. Hamilton explained the proposed constitution of the United Church of Christ, which the church voted on the following Sunday.

Pleasant Ridge, Ramseur, is having guest speakers for Sunday evening services during Lent, according to announcement by the pastor, Rev. Lynwood Hubbard. They include: Revs. Winfred Bray, C. Fred Allred, Bill Traylor, Reuben Askew, Jr., Dolan Talbert and Clyde L. Fields.

Word received from Mrs. Dan Stout indicates that Rev. A. M. Campbell arrived February 17 to begin his pastorate at Eutaw Community, Fayetteville, North Carolina. Since Mr. Campbell has been a Methodist minister, Mrs. Stout feels it very important for him to begin receiving The Christian Sun immediately, so that he will become acquainted with the Southern Convention, and therefore sent a gift subscription for him.

The pastor, Rev. Grant J. Burns, was the speaker at the World Day of Prayer service held at Carolina church, Burlington, February 17.

"On Being A Good Scout" was the sermon topic of Rev. Arthur M. Brown at Tryon, N. C., February 12 when members of Boy Scout Troop 1, sponsored by our church, were special guests.

After the Elon College Community Church had cast 135 ballots for (and none against) the Constitution of the United Church of Christ January 22, the congregation stood and read together the Statement of Faith of the United Church.

The First, Burlington church bulletin recommends the reading of Dr. Herman Reissig's article entitled "This Is Our World and Our Responsibility" (The Christian Sun, February 7) in preparation for the mission study on "One World, One Mission."

First Congregational Christian Church in Sanford, North Carolina. Dr. David Shepherd, minister, has issued its first edition of NEWS FLASH, a newsy three page paper which carries a lovely picture of the church and parsonage in the masthead. Many improvements to the interior of church and parsonage are reported. Young people led church services on Youth Sunday and "acquitted themselves in a most impressive way," and also sing in a choir of their own each Sunday. The second annual Family School of Missions is scheduled for March 12, 19, and 24.

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, reports as having voted unanimously January 16 to become a part of the United Church of Christ by approving the Constitution thereof.

We apologize for the incorrect title on the editorial last week "borrowed" from United Church Herald. "A Tithe of the Year" was the way co-editor Andrew Vance McCracken wrote it and is the way it should have appeared.

A recent bulletin of Union Ridge, Burlington, expressed best wishes to members Mr. and Mrs. William J. Cantreal. She was 90 years old February 7 and he was 89 February 9. Does any church have an older couple as members?

Twenty-five parents and teachers met at Shallow Well, Sanford, January 23, to discuss mutual concerns. "The Teacher's Faith — and How He Teaches" and "Why Have Worship in the Home?" (articles from the January issue of Church School Worker) were the basis for discussion.

The lenten program of our Pfafftown church is announced by the pastor, Rev. Kieth Wright, as follows: mid-week services in the social hall for study of the meaning of the suffering, crucifixion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ; communion service Maundy Thursday with offering for "Share Our Surplus"; 7:00 a.m. service Easter morning, followed by breakfast, the offering to go for missions; Sunday morning sermon topics are on the theme "Jesus Christ — Who Is He?"

NEW LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP OFFICERS AT PROVIDENCE

Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., recently installed the 1961 officers for the Layman's Fellowship at a Sunday evening service. The new roster consists of J. C. Welch, president; T. H. McMullan, vice president; C. W. Russell, secretary; B. H. Craven, treasurer; and J. N. Bowman as program chairman.

Prior to the installation of officers, a film entitled "Laymen's Fellowship at Work" was shown. A discussion period followed the film. In reviewing the year's activities, Mr. Ralph Sykes, 1960 secretary, commented on various projects by the men which had benefited both the church and the community. High on the list was participation in the CHIP Campaign for the Children's Home at Elon, and the presentation of family Bibles to two newly married couples of the congregation. Although the group was organized just one year ago, it has grown in numbers and service. The incoming president challenged the men to "become Christian leaders for church and community."

VISITING SPEAKER AT MT. ZION

Myrtle Shepherd, Reporter

The surprised congregation of Mt. Zion United Church of Christ, Route 3, Mebane, North Carolina, were the recipients recently of an inspiring message on "Stewardship" by Rev. Reuben Askew of Pleasant Hill Congregational Christian Church. The Scripture for the morning message came from Matthew 25:14-30. Rev. Mr. Askew brought out some nice points on what we should do with what God has intrusted to us. Of the time we spend in the things of God's work, of our talents — and what we are doing with them. He said it would cost us something if the church was important to us, just as it costs a parent to rear a child and give him the things that he desires, such as an education, food, clothing, etc.

Our pastor, Rev. Glenn Garrett, said he would feed Mr. Askew according to the way he preached. According to this, he should have received a nice dinner.

In the afternoon between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock there was a visitation — Every Member Canvass — for the purpose of raising the budget for the year. We were slow in getting started on this, but we feel sure it will be a success.

NEWS FROM SEAGROVE

Mrs. Birchel Hancock

Sunday, February 12, was "Awards Sunday" in our Seagrove church with 15 persons receiving perfect attendance awards. Receiving a tenth year bar was Nancy Spencer; next with five years of perfect attendance was Clyde Bumgarner. Those receiving fourth year bars were Mr. and Mrs. Birchel Hancock, Larry and Janice Hancock, Mrs. Marie Bunting and Mrs. Geraldine Bumgarner. The one second year bar went to Mrs. Blanche Spencer. Four six-month awards went to Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Luck, Rebecca Auman and Emilie Auman. We are proud of the 63 in our church school who have perfect attendance awards.

Sunday, February 26, will be "Youth Sunday" in our church, when the young people will have charge during Sunday school and worship service. Saturday, February 18, the Youth Fellowship had a party in the church basement.

We like the "new look" our adult choir is wearing these days. They have recently purchased new black robes. We would like to hear more from our junior choir, who shared so effectively in the Christmas candlelight service.

Much praise should go to the Women's Fellowship and other ladies of the church for the efforts they put forth to completely "re-do" our sanctuary. The walls and overhead have been painted, and our pastor, Rev. Billy Joe Willett, did a nice job of sanding and refinishing the floors. Our laymen, too, had an important part in finishing the basement.

Eddie Cotten Observes Fiftieth Anniversary

Students at Elon College in the middle teens will remember Eddie Cotten, long since the Reverend E. T. Cotten, who celebrated February 5 his 25th anniversary as minister of Plymouth Congregational Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. He is a native of Dendron, Virginia. He was ordained in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference where he served several churches and was at one time secretary of the Sunday School Convention.

Previous to going to Cincinnati he served for ten years First Congregational Christian Church in Eaton, Ohio. An account in a Cincinnati paper enumerates many accomplishments of the church there during the

DUKE PASTORAL CARE CLINICS

Two-week clinics with the theme of "Selfhood" are being sponsored by Duke Divinity School June 19-30 and July 10-21. Limited to 20 ministers each of any denomination who have their B. D. degrees, the clinics will feature lectures and discussions on Christian faith as an expression of selfhood and the communication of that faith to persons in need. Daily visits to Duke Hospital will involve participants in personal experiences.

Staff members for the program include Dr. Richard A. Goodling, associate professor of pastoral care; Dr. Robert E. Smith, assistant professor of pastoral care and psychiatric counsel; Rev. P. Wesley Aitken, chaplain of Duke Medical Center; and Dr. McMurry Richey, associate professor of theology and Christian nurture.

Registration is $10 and the ministers will be responsible for their own room and board, which may be obtained at Duke University. Those interested may write Dr. Goodling, The Divinity School, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina.

Some kind of a record: Rev. W. Walter Hall within two months was pastor of four churches in two different states voting to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ without one dissenting vote! He was pastor at Union and Hebron in Virginia when they voted, and then moved to North Carolina where the Asheboro and Bailey's Grove churches voted.

ministry of Mr. Cotten. On the anniversary occasion Mr. Cotten used as a text Ecclesiastes 12:1, and spoke on memories of his ministry in Cincinnati. At the close of the service the congregation surprised him with a properly engraved ring and a "very generous" purse.

"From my youth I have been an enthusiastic reader of The Christian Sun," says Mr. Cotten in a personal letter to the editor, who was a college friend in those far-away and never-to-be-forgotten days. The Christian Sun sends its congratulations and good wishes to this Virginian who has served successfully our churches in Ohio for 35 years.

Brotherhood Week

Brotherhood is not a word found in the news this week. There is murder in the Congo; rioting in England, India, Ceylon, Pakistan; starvation in China; threats in Moscow; war in Laos; and bewilderment all over the world. But brotherhood — what a strange word for our kind of world!

Even in our country brotherhood has its difficulties. College students languish in jail because they sought food at serving counters. Honorable industries pay big fines for seeking to take advantage of purchasers. Little children undertake to rob banks. Crime runs rampant across the country, and is found in high places and low. "If you have it, I want it; and I am going to take it if you do not give it to me." Such seems to be a slogan known and used by multitudes.

Rising, like flowers from the muck of swamps, is brotherhood in the midst of our confused and confusing world. It can be seen in the most unexpected places.

Negroes are pressing for the rights they believe are guaranteed them by the Constitution of the United States, and their marches and prisons are shared by white volunteers.

Young church ushers consider what should be done if people of another race enter their church doors, and the decision is to seat them near the front as courteously as if they were rich white people — like they would want to be treated if the circumstances were reversed.

Ministers and young people are purposely holding meetings with people of different races for acquaintanceship and fellowship. So are women's groups, and church laymen.

Protestants, Jews and Roman Catholics plan conferences to face their differences, and to join hands across all barriers in the work that is good for all people, Councils of Churches, local, state, national, and world-wide, unite the divided into working groups of the kingdom of God.

Even governments are hesitant about entering into war, in part at least, because of the consideration of what will happen to people of other nations. Food, clothing, and many other aids are given freely by one nation to another — something new in our generation.

This is not the time to believe that brotherhood is dead. On the contrary, this is the time to practice what we know, and to expect a great flowering of that brotherhood which is so abundantly evident in the teachings of the Man of Galilee whom we delight to call Master.

It appears from the daily news reports that we of this modern world must soon choose the way of Brotherhood or the Road to Destruction. Concerning the former we have heard for centuries; it is written large in the language of religion. Adequate weapons are ready to destroy most of the human family in a few minutes time. Let us be reminded that Jesus said, "You cannot serve God and Mammon." There must be a choice. And "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." What better decision could we make than that? If that is our decision, the time is ripe for us to be busy "about our Father's business." Even tiny success will be like a beautiful flower in a wilderness. Brotherhood — the God-given potential of every person!

Lent And Missions

Leaders of the Southern Convention join with Christians everywhere in presenting the claims of the Church during these forty days leading up to Easter. They call it missions, and tell us that the Church is Mission.

As we study again the story of Jesus marching steadfastly to a cross, the old, old question must arise: WHY? Was his suffering and death without purpose? Was his a needless sacrifice?

As strange as it may sound, the answer to such questions depends upon us. If we join the procession, and help to carry the cross, the leadership of Jesus has value. If we know Jesus and introduce him to the world, the crucifixion makes sense. If we get enough of his spirit so we, too, can say concerning a defaming, critical, and distraught world, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," then that infamous Friday becomes Good Friday, and the world is blessed by his death. If the Church through us can witness in the midst of all Congos to the beauty of Christian living, the way of sharing, and the brotherhood that joins all people together at the foot of the cross, then peace may have a chance and the story of Easter become significant indeed.

Not many of us who read this paper will be able to go to the far places of the world to preach and to teach, but money will make it possible for those who are trained for the purpose to relieve suffering, to supply food to the hungry, to direct the reading of Christian literature, to preach that this is "the acceptable year of the Lord." Plan for a big offering at Easter.

It is good to remember that the light that shines brightest where it is sends its light farthest out into the darkness. Brotherhood, Christian fidelity, faith in the Infinite, practiced at home becomes a missionary message far away.

Honor To Whom Honor

This paper this week and last has not been the brain-child of the editor. He has been tussling with some tiny germs and struggling to overcome too much exhaustion. Two weeks in the house, and much of it in bed, with the brain on strike has made it necessary for the "assistant" to do the work. When she said "I will" 22 years ago she did not know that part of that promise was to edit this paper. But — well, thanks to the Madam, here is your paper. (Note: "She" did not write the editorials. — E.C.L.)

There are many historical places in the United States and many notable dates in American history that deserve wider recognition. One of these places is Vincennes, Indiana, and the date of importance not only to that city but to the country as a whole is February 23. A prominent Virginian and prayer figured conspicuously and heroically in giving that date a worthy place in history.

It was at Vincennes on February 23, 1779, that one of the most important events in the struggle of colonial America for its independence took place, ending for all time England's control of that section of the new republic.

The British obtained possession of Vincennes in 1763, but gave little attention to it until 1777 when Lieut. Governor Abbott, of Detroit, took possession and called the place Fort Sackville.

George Rogers Clark, a patriotic member of the Virginia legislature, asked Governor Patrick Henry of "give me liberty or give me death" fame to grant him authority to recruit 350 Virginians to recapture Vincennes, or Fort Sackville. Permission was granted by the governor and the Old Dominion's law-making body supplied funds for Clark to feed and pay his soldiers and supply them with arms.

Clark went to Mt. Louis, then down the Wabash River to the Ohio, and proceeded to Kaskaskia, Illinois, which he had previously captured. He realized that Fort Sackville must be retaken, or the whole Ohio Valley might be lost to the American forces. Clark's force was small, it was mid-winter, and his men were poorly clothed. It seemed a near-impossible task to transport his limited army with weather conditions as they were, but Clark dispatched 64 men by boats, carrying supplies and ammunition, and started an overland march of 200 miles with 170 men.

Most all inhabitants of Kaskaskia accompanied the marching force for a few miles, then they halted and the soldiers and citizens knelt while a minister offered prayer for the success of Clark and his soldiers. When Clark and his men marched on they left the citizens on their knees praying for the success of the expedition and of the American cause.

Clark had no tents for his men and there were no settlements on the line of march where they could be assured of a friendly welcome. They had insufficient food. However, they were sustained by a high degree of courage, and on February 23, hungry, footsore, cold and weary, they arrived on the heights back of Vincennes. When the French inhabitants there learned of the arrival of the Americans they gave them a welcome and provisions.

That night Clark led his forces into the town and at once began an attack on the fort. General Henry Hamilton, British leader, surrendered the next morning, and the American flag was raised over the fort, which was re-christened Fort Patrick Henry. The place was held by Virginia until 1783 when it was ceded to the United States.

C. B. Riddle

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

Early last fall announcements in the papers about the new nursery curriculum of the United Church of Christ seemed to alarm some of our church people. From the newspaper write-up (and without seeing the material itself) they condemned it. The article told of Jesus pictured in "clam-digger pants" (whatever they are!) and suggested that the booklets were written to appeal to three year olds. The price for writing, editing, printing and art work for the entire curriculum for all ages when finished was given as $2,000,000. But some who got excited thought it said this one part — "3's in the Christian Community" — cost that much.

It is very hard for us adults to place ourselves in the position of three year olds. That is why the pictures which come in this material may seem strange to us, for some of them look like "childish scribbles," to quote a minister friend. However, I recently received some brand-new books for use in the first grade in public school and they have the same type of pictures!

I noticed with interest that the teacher of the nursery group in our Durham church recommended the material highly after using it for a quarter. It would be interesting to know reactions of other teachers who are actually using it.

Once again we have come to a most Holy season of the Church Year. For many, Lent is a time for giving up something, and that in a very superficial manner. But in a real sense, it is not so important what we "give up" as what we "take in" during the Lenten Season.

Lent is a time of preparation, renewal and rededication. It is a time when pastors should engage their members in serious study and reflective thoughts. It is a time when church members — young and old — should rethink the whole matter of the Christian life. This may be an excellent time for pastors to conduct a church membership class to prepare both youth and adults for confirmation, baptism or church membership.

Easter can be a glorious experience if preceded by such preparation.

Two true stories came to my mind as I heard people criticizing the pictures of Jesus because they did not look like the traditional ones:

The first comes from Lillian Gregory. In the days when she worked in a settlement house in Chicago, a little girl showed her a picture of a lady in high heels, earrings, and a party dress. When pressed to know who it was, the little girl answered, "Jesus, all dressed up to go to a party." And then Lillian found out that the little girl, who had seen Jesus pictured in long, flowing robes and with a "page boy haircut" had thought he was a woman!

Another is from a Vermont church where a junior was given a small picture of Sallman's "Head of Christ." It came into the possession of his little brother, who asked the preacher if he could trade it off for a picture of the "boy Jesus" because he didn't want a "girl Jesus" like his brother had!

The United Church is spending a lot of money to provide the best possible curriculum for our churches. Units for other age groups will be reaching our local churches in the next few months and years. Let us be willing to try to use it, remembering that it is educationally sound and that the pictures are historically correct.

Southern Convention's Greatest Challenge

AS VIEWED FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF MISSIONS

Carl Wallace

The question of challenge in regard to our Southern Convention was put to me recently by one of our alert young ministers. In trying to respond some impressions kept seeking audience in my mind. We are still predominately a rural group and this coincides with the past and present population balance in this section of the country but rapidly our area is becoming urbanized. Sociologists and City Planners revealed to us at Chapel Hill in 1959 that people are leaving the farms for city life due primarily to opportunities for more income and a higher standard of living. Furthermore the population explosion is causing already existing urban areas to multiply at an unprecedented rate.

The overwhelming majority of established urban churches of our Fellowship find themselves located in old areas of the cities and towns. I shall cite only a few examples: Southern Pines, Sanford, Raleigh, Durham, Henderson, Suffolk, Christian Temple in Norfolk, Richmond, etc.

This means that people are leaving our rural churches. In many cities and towns we have no churches, and

The Committee on Cooperation with Latin America of the National Council of Churches has recently released a report of expert opinion on the changing situation facing Evangelical churches in that part of our world. The report states that there is resentment in Latin America towards the United States because the people feel neglected in comparison to our sharing with Europe and Asia and more recently with Africa; that in ten years population has increased 10 per cent; that a better understanding of the "sects" is necessary; and that "it is not Fidel Castro but the causes which brought him to power which are likely to continue."

A special Bible study of the Gospel according to St. Luke will be given by Dr. John Truitt for the Elon College Community Church Sunday evenings, February 26 and March 5 and 12.

where they are established they will not likely be in the near proximity of new people moving in from our rural churches or elsewhere. In other words we are not presently equipped to face the challenge and opportunities of the population shift and growth.

What can we do? We can think of expansion in terms heretofore never dreamed. As a matter of fact we must think of expansion if we are to live in a healthy, growing manner. We must go where the people are going to be in the decades ahead. Where is this? It is the suburbs of our expanding urban areas. We need a long-range planning program that will consider cooperative advantages to be gained from merger. We need financial resources that will enable the purchase of desirable sites long before the price of developed property becomes prohibitive. We need interest and prayers by our church people. We need vision to evaluate our situation today for the purpose of securing our witness for tomorrow.

THE ANGOLA MISSION

February

- 26—Rev. and Mrs. Robert Carter are studying Portuguese at the University of Wisconsin, then must study it in Lisbon, Portugal, and then must study Umbundu in Angola — then they will be ready to start work!
- 27—Richard Dole has finished his language study in Lisbon and now is studying Umbundu in Angola. He spent an earlier year in Africa when his father was Fulbright teacher in Sierra Leone School and Richard was the first white resident student at Fourah Bay College, where he organized first basketball team. (See article about him on next page.)
- 28—Miss Allie Gardner was appointed a missionary nurse last year. She is now undergoing language study similar to that of the Carters.

Bailundo

Mission station with church, schools, dispensary, houses for missionaries and pastors. The church, founded in 1885 when Dr. Wesley Stover baptized the first 14 Ovimbundu Christians, is the largest in the world with Congregational connections.

March

- 1—Miss Lois King supervises 500 village schools and kindergartens with more than 5000 pupils. She visits the school regularly, and teaches the teachers during vacation periods. She must prepare and mimeograph all the lesson material!
- 2—Miss Alice Moreira was born in Portugal and went to Angola as a Baptist missionary in 1939. Since 1940 she has been an associate missionary of the American Board. She is engaged in public health work, maternity, health education, and general hospital work.
- 3—Miss Harriet Summerville, African missionary since 1946, is in charge of developing a program of religious education and youth work. She must plan for recreation and handwork activities without even the basic equipment, such as string, scissors, etc. (See her picture on next page.)

Bunjei

Mission station 80 miles from a railroad supported by our Negro churches, the American Missionary Association, and the American Board.

- 4—Dr. and Mrs. Robert McGowan work to remove fear of evil spirits, improve living and health conditions, build a stronger Christian fellowship and African church, as well as doing village extension work in public health, preventative medicine, sanitation, and maternal child health. He is director of Pierce Memorial Hospital, which treats 1200 in-patients and 7,000 outpatients annually.

Place Of Missionary In Africa

Today's missionary in Africa must be willing to take the advice and leadership of his African co-workers, a young Congregational Christian career missionary has written to friends in America.

Richard S. Dole, 25, son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Dole, 14 Thomson Road, West Hartford, Conn., sailed the first of the year to begin lifetime service among the Ovimbundu people of Angola, Portuguese West Africa. He has just completed a year's study of Portuguese in Lisbon.

"I have had many opportunities here in Lisbon to speak with African students," he says. "We have, of course, discussed our particular concern of African-missionary relations. It is constantly stressed by us all that paternalism is a thing of the past.

"I have been extremely impressed by the African students here. They are a very select group of keen and alert intelligence. It will be my pleasure to work under the leadership of such as these.

"Seeing these keen African Christian students has raised other thoughts in my mind," he says. "Churches in America send missionaries and receive a wonderful spiritual blessing from this activity. A large part of the enthusiasm of American churches arises from their actually seeing the call to go realized in their midsts. Why not encourage the African church to send us preachers? Our churches need what they have to say. Already significant attempts along this line are being made, but with a real interest from American churches in prayer and financial support, a great deal more could be done. We must think of the church as a world-wide fellowship of believers, each responsible for the other's welfare."

Mr. Dole has been to Africa before. In 1955 his family spent a year in Sierra Leone, British Crown Colony and protectorate on the west coast of Africa. His father, who teaches at Hartford High, was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship as visiting teacher to the Sierra Leone schools.

Richard Dole, then a student at Bowdoin College, spent his junior year as the first white resident student at Fourah Bay College in Freetown.

"I know from experience," he says, "from working, talking, and living with Africans, that we are all one humanity, with the same native abilities, the same desires, the same sensitivities...."

"I am realizing that the same needs exist throughout the world and that our differences are but a matter of the extent of the need. There's a grave health problem in Africa but there are health problems in America also. The difference is that the problem is more widespread in Africa. There is need for education in Africa, but likewise we in America have educational problems to be solved. The difference is in the extent and severity of the need."

Mr. Dole's first job in Africa will be to learn Umbundu, the language of the Africans in the area. Fluency in both Umbundu and Portuguese is required for mission service in Angola. He will make his home with the Rev. and Mrs. Carl R. Dille, missionaries who have served there for 20 years.

A Hartford native, Richard graduated from William Hall High School, West Hartford, in 1953 and from Bowdoin College in 1957. He studied for a year at the Kennedy School of Missions in Hartford. He also studied at the Harvard Graduate School of Education and did practice teaching for a time at the Kendall School, Belmont, Massachusetts.

KNOW OUR MISSIONARIES

Our churches in the Southern Convention, while helping to support the world-wide missionary effort of the denomination, are now giving special attention to 13 missionaries of the American Board. They will be introduced to you during Lent, which is known as our "Mission Period."

MISS HARRIET SUMMERVILLE

Miss Harriet Summerville, a Congregational Christian missionary since 1946, has been developing a program of religious education and youth work in the Bailundo area of Angola, Portuguese West Africa.

She lends her leadership to the educational work of eight mission stations, including upper schools for both boys and girls, a theological seminary, a hospital and a training center. She has translated church school materials into both Portuguese and Umbundu, the former the official and the latter the native language of Angola.

A popular club she founded for African girls provides such activities as choir singing, dramatics, puppetry, sisal weaving, wood-carving and first aid. She also started a Home Economics school which teaches the African girls not only how to cook but also how to make the pots in which the food is served.

Let Us Keep Lent

By W. E. Wisseman

Lent begins with Ash Wednesday, February 15, and continues until Easter. Through the centuries, millions of Christians have found it helpful to spend the forty days of Lent as a time of preparation for a meaningful Easter.

There are many ways by which we can make this period of the church meaningful.

A church is no stronger than the spiritual character of the congregation. The extent and effectiveness of the church's outreach depends upon the strength of the home base. As we grow in Christlikeness we grow in strength. Christian growth is not possible unless we make time in our busy schedule for prayer and meditation; for a study of the life and teachings of Jesus — as Mary of old we must take time to sit at the feet of Christ and learn from Him. The Psalmist said: "Every morning and every evening I will pray."

We grow stronger as we gather with other Christians for worship and fellowship. There is a strength that comes to us as we pray together, sing together — as we share our joys and our sorrows, our deep concerns in Christian worship and fellowship. There is something else we can do that will bring to us a blessing. We can set aside some time to minister in the name of Christ to people in our church and community. One way to strengthen our faith and deepen our love is by sharing what we have with others. There are the shut-ins and sick in our own congregation and in the community — perhaps a next door neighbor.

As we grow in strength the arm of our church is strengthened and extended as it reaches out beyond the bounds of the community.

During Lent of this year, stress is placed upon "Our Christian World Mission." Our mission begins at home and extends to wherever there is need.

Through the "Church Builders' Club" we may have a part in building churches in growing communities throughout North Carolina and Virginia. Sunday, March 5, has been designated as "Builder's Club Sunday." A membership costs ten dollars — not more than two calls are made during a year. Here is an opportunity to make an investment.

Through the "One Great Hour of Sharing" — March 12 — we may have a part in ministering to the physical needs of the hungry, the naked, the homeless. And on Easter Sunday, April 2, through our "second mile" gifts, we may have a part in sharing the risen Lord with people in many countries of the world.

Let us stretch our hearts (and our pocketbooks) to include the many people in the world who are in need and are looking to us.

Do you think your church is always asking you for money? Nay, think rather that your Church is giving you an opportunity to share and to grow.

Let us keep Lent!

The New York Bible Society distributed 1,240,760 Bibles and portions of the Bible in 1960, which was 150,000 more than in the previous high year of 1959. In its 150 years it has distributed in metropolitan New York more than 43 million copies of the Bible, Testaments, Gospels and other portions of the Scriptures.

Sunday school makes and keeps America great and strong — it helps develop Christian character — helps to stimulate the spiritual life of the church community. The training a person receives in Sunday school helps him to become a better church member. — Robert Daniel, S. S. Supt., in The Road to Damascus

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

+ + +

HIS SUFFERING

“The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected... and be slain...”

Luke 9:22

This Lenten season let us pause to look at the suffering of the Lord Jesus. He told his disciples that he must suffer many things, be rejected, and be slain. He challenged them to take up their cross and follow him.

They did. But we have to have fun. The search for happiness is the tempo of our times. We must be entertained. To be sure, work has to be done; but when it is finished what then can we do? We must be entertained either at home or in the fellowship of the fellowshipping!

But there is the glorious, the truly serene, sacrificial side of life. Following Jesus the great have seen it, and have not been disobedient to the heavenly vision. Jesus was ready to do the right at the cost of Calvary, and that not for himself, but for others.

In our churches, quite in keeping with the spirit of our times we have emphasized the joy of Jesus and his concern that his disciples might have it; but too often we overlook the fact that this concern was expressed by him under the very shadow of the cross!

How fine to see Christians, especially Christian youth, looking soberly at the serious side of life and choosing the disciplines of Christ Jesus which are commensurate with today's needs.

You and I know that the above text really has a triumphant, joyous ending: “And be raised the third day”! Let the Church accept his challenge, and suffer with him that it may rejoice with him!

Youth Faces The Future

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

Ray Hall

What Is Christian Action All About?

There's a lot of misunderstanding about what Christian Action is. The Statement of Purpose of the Pilgrim Fellowship and Youth Fellowship says we're trying "to witness to the message and mission of the Church among people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice, and peace." Each phrase suggests one of the three parts of Christian action. We speak of them as mission, social service, and social action. Take a look at each:

a. Our Christian World Mission: This is the effort of our churches at home, in the state, across the nation and around the world to reach people and places in a ministry which Christ began. We try "to witness to the message and the mission of the Church among people." This is done as we try to meet the need for fellowship, food, clothing, education, training, community service, churches, leaders and literature. The mission of the church (and you're part of this!) is part of Christian action.

b. Christian social service: Whenever human need is met in the name of Christ, there is Christian social service. This is being a Good Samaritan, helping the refugee, the stranger, the lonely, the poor, "serving the world in the name of Christ."

c. Christian social action: This is the attempt to defeat the causes of human suffering and hatred. The difference between social action and social service is "best expressed in the old saying that it is good to help people when they have been run over, but it is better to try to prevent their being run over in the first place. Social service sets up a settlement house in a slum district. Social action attacks the whole social situation which produces slums. Social service may provide personal help in re-establishing a man who has been in prison. Social action goes behind the individual prisoner to the conditions in the prison, and beyond that to the environment that helps to produce crime."

"Striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice, and peace" is a pretty high goal. But nothing less than this is in keeping with the faith we profess and the Lord we serve.

"I simply argue that the Cross be raised again at the centre of the market place as well as on the steeple of the church. I am recovering the claim that Jesus was not crucified in a Church between two candles, but on a cross between two thieves; on the town garbage heap; at a cross-road so cosmopolitan that they had to write his title in Hebrew and in Latin and in Greek... at the kind of place where cynics talk smut, and thieves curse, and soldiers gamble. Because that is where He died. And that is what he died about. And that is where churchmen should be and what churchmen should be about."

This is what Christian action is all about. It is the attempt to make these words come true where you live, to add deeds to our many words, to be doers, not just hearers. Christian action grows out of what we believe about God, the world and its people.

—High Fellowship Set

The youth group at Pfafftown (near Winston-Salem) has been divided into two groups — the younger ones (first through sixth grades) meet for fun and fellowship 5:30-6:30 each Sunday, while the older ones (7th through 11th grade) meet for fellowship, worship and study and will have occasional work projects for the church.

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN ACTION?

Ray Hall

Action Commission Chairman

Picture this scene: a slum area in a large city, a group of young boys with smiles on their faces are gathered nearby, tools in their hands and hard work on their minds. This is Christian Action! A Saturday afternoon in late October, a group of young people working with singleness of purpose for our Christian World Mission. This is Christian Action! The night ghosts and goblins howl, a group of Christian youth collecting money for all the world's children. This, too, is Christian Action! Wherever Christian youth get together to improve the condition of their fellowmen, there is Christian Action.

Action is defined in the dictionary as "the doing of something." But, we ask ourselves, what is meant by the doing of something? By doing something, do we mean a bunch of boys on a Saturday night drive, a date at the drive-in, or a party at the hangout? Or do we mean Workday for Christ, cleaning up the church grounds, and helping new people get settled to live in our neighborhood? The former sometimes results in a kind of action, but the kind of action resulting from the latter is the kind of action we are interested in, and that is Christian Action.

This is briefly what Christian Action is all about. It is the attempt to make Jesus' words come true where you live, to add deeds to our many words, to be doers and not just hearers. Christian Action grows out of what we believe about God, the world, and its people.

Youth Week Observances

MT. CARMEL

UNION RIDGE

Mrs. L. L. Hooper, Reporter

Sunday, February 5, was a special day at Union Ridge United Church of Christ, when the young people took part in the service of worship as a climax of youth week. An organ and piano prelude, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," was played by Carolyn Walker and Jane Blalock, followed by the invocation given by Roy Stanley, Jr. Ronald Walker led the responsive reading, "A Challenge to Faith." The morning prayer was offered by Jimmy Starnes. During the offering an offertory solo, "Lord for Tomorrow and Its Needs," was rendered by Eloise McCauley. The offertory prayer was led by Tommy Thompson. The junior choir, directed by Mrs. Glenda Garrison, sang "Stand Up For Jesus."

Mrs. Felix Simmons, the church organist, played softly an organ interlude during a moment of quiet prayer, after which the morning anthem, "No One Like Jesus," was sung by the senior choir. Our pastor, Rev. Winfred Bray, then brought the message, "Taking Life's Greatest Test." This was an inspiring and challenging message not only to the youth of our church but to all present. Mr. Bray expressed great belief in the young people of our day. He sees in them a willingness and eagerness to do things. He sincerely feels the need of our guidance that they may take the right steps in their lives in helping to promote God's great kingdom.

HENDERSON

Josephine Langston

February 5 the Senior High Pilgrim Fellowship conducted the Sunday morning worship service in the First Congregational Christian Church, Henderson, North Carolina.

Agnes French was the organist and Larry Lassiter the candlelighter. Mary Frances Newman led the service, and Vann Langston, Nancy Jo Daniel and Rev. Joe A. French gave talks. Others participating were: Linda Sims, Judy Seaman, Anne Stegall, Billy Lester, Frank Stegall, Jr., Wesley Langston and Jimmy Daniel.

This service was the climax of Youth Week observed by the young people of First Baptist, Episcopal, First Methodist, First Presbyterian and our church, who comprise the group known as United Christian Youth Movement.

On the previous Sunday the week's activities were launched with a dinner in our church attended by about 135 young people. Rev. John Lewis, a Methodist ministerial student, gave an inspiring address which introduced the week's theme: "Into All the World Together."

Morning meditations were held during the week at the Rose Chapel, First Methodist Church. Conducted by outstanding Christian young people, three from the First Christian Church participated: Agnes French, Shannon Murphy and Vann Langston.

Due to inclement weather, the communion and invitation ceremony was postponed from February 4 until a later date.

1960 was a year to be proud of, so far as our young people are concerned. The Senior Hi PF'ers had an active part in all UCYM projects, including helping needy families and UNICEF. The adult advisers, Mrs. Gertrude Newman and Lancey Forsyth and the church feel that the work is a credit to our church. The program for 1961 includes worship and Christian training, workshops and rallies, fun and fellowship.

Youth Sunday was observed January 29 at Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth, Virginia, with Jack Dragseth speaking on "The Church" and Norman Robertson on "The Difference — Christian, Unchristian." Others sharing in the service were Jo Ann Kilham and Connie Davis. That evening the young people met for Youth Fellowship and bowling. Sunday evening, February 5, they met with the chairmen of the various church committees to discuss the program of the church.

Rev. Robert A. Knowles was the speaker on the Youth Week theme, "Into All the World Together," when the junior and senior high groups of First, Greensboro, entertained at a banquet February 18, with the young people from First E. and R. Church, Greensboro, as their guests. Counselors are Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Kent, Jr. and Miss Blanche Warren and Bob Greene.

Mrs. Robert Simmons

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Mount Carmel Congregational Christian Church, Walters, Virginia, observed February 12 as Youth Sunday.

Scotty Stephenson served as superintendent of the Sunday school, Bobby Duck as secretary, and Loyd Earl Duck, Jr. gave the prayer. Teachers were as follows: Beginners, Carolyn Lowe, Diane Duck; Nursery, Betty Lou Carr, Rhonda Beale; Primary, Jean Carr; Junior, Sue Harmon; Young Married Class, Judy Simmons, Judy Duck; Ladies Bible Class, Carol Glover; Men's Bible Class, Loyd Earl Duck, Jr.

At the morning worship service the message "Into All the World Together" was given by Dorothy Glover. "The Christian Mission is Your Mission" was presented by Sue Harmon and Carol Glover. Others participating in the service were Pam Vaughan, Betty Lou Carr, Jean Carr, Carolyn Lowe, Dianne Duck, Rhonda Beale, Judy Duck, and Judy Simmons. Ushers were Bobby Duck, Loyd Bradshaw, Herbert Taylor, Scotty Stephenson, and Larry Stephenson.

Counselors for the Pilgrim Fellowship are Mrs. Robert B. Simmons, Mrs. J. L. Rose and Mrs. Stanley Lowe.

Christian Education Day A Success

102 were registered for Christian Education Day for the Western North Carolina Conference at our Asheboro church February 12. Opening worship was led by members of the conference committee on Christian education, which sponsored the session. Classes were effectively taught by Miss Dorothy Ballinger, Rev. Winfred Bray, Miss Ruth Dunn, Professor David Fee, Martin Garren, and Rev. Robert Knowles. The closing worship centering on "Brotherhood" was planned and executed by the Pilgrim Fellowship group led by Mr. Knowles. A sandwich supper was augmented by cakes and drinks provided by the Asheboro church, for which the Conference committee is very grateful.

A children's World Day of Prayer program was held at Busick School, in which members of Apple's Chapel participated. That evening they were invited to share in a service at Monticello church.

Evening School Ten Years Old

By Luther N. Byrd

While most of the thousands of adults in Piedmont North Carolina finish their evening meal and settle down before their TV sets on these cold winter nights, over 400 others in several counties down the last gulp of their supper coffee, grab their books and sally forth into the cold for 7 o'clock classes at Elon College.

To many persons even a year or two of college work can mean a job promotion and perhaps several hundred dollars in added income per year, and a college degree can open the door to vastly wider opportunities in both job and salary.

To other adults, going back to school can mean the satisfying of long-postponed desires for additional learning; and to still others, continued study means recognition of the fact recently cited in the National Education Association Journal that "we cannot, in these times, discharge our responsibilities by educating only our children."

Night Class Opportunity

Such is the motivating background for the work of the Elon College Evening School, the growth of which has been one of the truly astounding developments in the expansion of Elon College within the past decade.

The night classes at Elon College had their beginning about 1947 or 1948, when a few professors, operating more or less on their own but with the approval of the college, began teaching a few adult classes at night, with many of the students attending without credit. In fact, about the only ones who did receive credit in those days were in-service teachers, who sought to renew their state teaching certificates.

Interest in the program grew, however, particularly among the GI's who had jobs that prevented day-time schooling, and the college's night-class schedule was gradually expanded, with more of the Elon faculty beginning to teach night classes along with their day-time duties.

Program Expands

Administrative study of the program brought the realization that the semester-type schedule in night classes would enable more of Elon's faculty to teach at night, so the Evening School switched to the semester system in 1954 while day-time classes were still on the quarter system. Two years ago the day classes were also placed on the semester-type schedule.

By the spring of 1954 there were a number of night school students who had completed enough work for graduation, and in the spring of that year diplomas and degrees were awarded to six fine students who had helped pioneer the Evening School program. With its first graduates going forth, the Elon Evening School thus came of age.

Individual Schedules

Among the more than 400 night students enrolled this year at Elon, the majority of them are pursuing degrees in mathematics, pre-engineering, physics, history and other fields. Some of them are not seeking degrees at all but are concentrating instead on courses in a special field which will help them in their work or fit with personal interests.

Although some of the students attend classes four or five nights a week and thus carry virtually a full academic load, others take as little as one class per week. The registrar of the college reports that the average student in the Elon Evening School is taking three classes weekly, which means that such students will need more than four years to obtain a degree.

A number of industrial and commercial organizations in the area encourage their employees to take advantage of the opportunity offered, and the Elon Evening School students come from such points as Asheboro, Reidsville, Greensboro, Bennett, Mebane, Hillsboro and other Piedmont North Carolina towns, along with a large group from the Burlington and Elon College area.

So strong is the interest that in recent years a substantial part of Elon's graduating classes come from the night classes. A bit of research reveals that six graduates of 1954 have increased to the point that no less than 30 members of Elon's Class of 1960 were students who had done all or most of their work in night classes, all of which means that the lamp of learning burns brightly on these cold winter nights.

PARTICIPANTS IN EVENING SCHOOL

Students who attend the Elon College Evening School have their own guidance program, operating under the direction of Prof. Jennings Berry, assistant registrar of the college. Professor Berry is pictured left above at his desk, consulting with two students slated to graduate this year. The students are Herbert A. Brooks, center, of Burlington, Route 2, a major in mathematics and physics; and Cecil W. Heldreth, right, of Elon College, a major in physics. Both of the seniors work on full-time jobs at the Burlington plant of Western Electric and are completing degree requirements in night classes.

A New Commandment

Background Scripture: John 13.

Devotional Reading: I John 2:7-11.

Memory Selection: A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. John 13:34.

A Farewell Meal

Jesus knew that the end was near. There were some things he wanted to tell the little circle of disciples before he left them. So he made plans to eat a farewell meal with them. It had a historic significance, for it was the Feast of the Passover, the family and festal meal which the devout Jew ate in the home, commemorating the deliverance of the Hebrew people from bondage in Egypt. Jesus and the Twelve gathered in "a large upper room, furnished and made ready" for this farewell meal. What a solemn and sacred and significant meal that was! There are many who recall with deep emotion and tender memories, a "farewell meal" they have eaten with loved ones who were going away; a son going into service, or a daughter for that matter; a member of the family going as a missionary to a far away land; a testimonial dinner given in honor of somebody who is retiring after many years of service, and so on. Any gaiety is tempered by the thoughts of farewell.

The disciples may not have thought anything about it, but Jesus must have associated the lamb which was sacrificed or killed for the Passover Feast, with himself, the Lamb of God, who was to be sacrificed for the sins of the world on the morrow. That meal was most meaningful for him, as in memory it later became for them. And because it was in connection with this Passover Meal, that Jesus instituted what we now call "The Last Supper" that it all has meaning for us. Strangely enough, John does not give us an account of the institution of "The Last Supper" — it remained for the other Gospel writers to do that. But John does tell us something, and many things which the other Gospels do not give.

The Son Of God

And The Servant Of Man

Palestine was either a dry and dusty land, or a wet and muddy land. And inasmuch as the people wore only sandals on their feet, a flat sole held on the foot by thongs, the feet of people became dirty and soiled when they walked abroad. It was customary for the host to have a large jar of water at hand, and in the better class home a servant to wash the feet of his guests, or lacking a servant to do the humble task himself. When the little band gathered in the upper room, there was none among them who would assume this humble task. None that is, but Jesus. That is what I said, none but Jesus! The wonder of it all is to be found in the words with which John prefaces his account of Jesus assuming this task. "Knowing that He came from God," conscious of his divine origin, knowing that all things had been given into his hands, at the time when he might have been filled with pride, supreme pride, he was filled with supreme humility. Knowing that he was going to God — he might have had a certain contempt for the world and the things of the world, knowing that he had finished his work and was on his way to God, he might well have disdained to do anything so menial.

Put in another way, feeling his special nearness to God, it brought him closer to man. It was just when God was nearest to Jesus, that Jesus went to the depths and limits of his service to man! No thought of precedence and prestige! How unlike so many people, and so many of his disciples who think only of their prestige, their place, their dignity, their rights. We need to look at this picture of the Son of God girt with a towel and kneeling at his disciples' feet! But Jesus was never greater than here.

An Example

"For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Did Jesus mean that we were to wash one another's feet? Some folks say "Yes" — they take the words literally, and practice "foot-washing" in their services of worship. Others do not take the words literally, but interpret them to mean that like the Master, we should manifest the spirit of service, that we should humble ourselves, be willing to perform even the humblest of services for men. One suspects that the latter view reflects more closely what Jesus had in mind. Here as elsewhere Jesus was saying that true greatness comes through service. True royalty is the royalty of service.

A New Commandment

"A new commandment I give unto you." Here was his farewell commandment. And what was it? It was that they should love one another, that they should love one another even as he had loved them. What did he mean? How did Jesus love his disciples? Putting it briefly he loved them: selflessly — there was nothing selfish in his love, as there is often selfishness in our love for one another; sacrificially — there was no limit to the extent to which his love would go for his disciples. Even if it meant going to the Cross, he was willing to go because he loved them; understandingly — he knew them through and through, he knew what was in them, he knew their weaknesses and their foibles. But he loved them in spite of all of this. His heart was big enough and his love was deep enough to love them just as they were. And he loves us just as we are; forgivingly — one disciple was to betray him, the leader of the group was to deny him, all of them were to forsake him and flee, but this did not affect his love for them unless it made him love them all the more. Followers of Christ need especially this kind of love for one another, the kind of love that forgives those who do us wrong, and despitefully use us. And this is a commandment, not a request. It was a new commandment too. It introduced a new dimension or element in love and life.

The Badge Of Discipleship

When I attended the Ruritan National Convention recently held at Washington I wore a simple Ruritan Badge. People who looked at me or talked with me, could see that I was a Ruritan. The same principle holds

VALUED WORKER DIES

Dear Friends:

Mr. Reynolds Perkins, an assistant houseparent at our Children's Home for about seven years, passed from this life last Wednesday evening, February 8th, at 7:05. Funeral services for him were held at the First Baptist Church, Elon College, on Friday, with the pastor, Rev. W. T. Cockman in charge, assisted by the Superintendent of the Children's Home.

"Reynolds", as he was so fondly known to the boys at Johnston Hall, will be greatly missed by them. While he assisted from time to time at the other buildings on the campus, it was with our larger boys that he spent the greater part of his time.

At the age of 39, Reynolds was taken from this life. We have never known any individual to have achieved the spirit of humility and understanding of others so completely as had this man for his age. Though he was greatly handicapped physically he had the kind of spirit that endeared him to everyone he met. He enjoyed life to its fullest. He could see the funny side of life as well as the serious. He was really a ray of sunshine wherever he went. He will be greatly missed by all of us at the Children's Home.

Reynolds was the brother of our maintenance man, Mr. Charles E. Perkins, with whom he made his home. Our staff and children extend deepest sympathy to Mr. Perkins and his family in the loss of a beloved member of their household.

"Opportunities for the Week" are the way announcements are listed on the Garner Community Church bulletin, where Rev. R. L. Clapp is pastor. For a recent week these "opportunities" included a meeting of the Churchmen's Fellowship, adult choir practice, and Fisherman's Club (men who do church visiting).

A three-fold program at Lent for United, Winston-Salem, where Rev. John Lackey is pastor: Saturday morning class in church membership for children; Sunday morning membership class for youth and adults; Sunday afternoon study group for those interested in deepening their spiritual lives.

HAIRCUTS FOR BOYS AT HOME FOR CHILDREN

Every two weeks Mr. Leary S. Riley cuts the hair of a dozen boys from our Congregational Christian Home for Children at Elon College. Mr. Riley, whose shop is in Burlington, gives this service as a member of the Beverly Hills church.

Mrs. W. B. Williams and Mrs. F. C. Lester are in Chicago this week attending sessions of the Joint Laity Committee of the United Church of Christ.

"The Teaching Aspect of Easter" was the topic discussed by Rev. Robert Knowles at Bayside, Virginia, February 15 at a Worker's Council for Bayside and Lynnhaven Colony churches.

At Shallow Well, Sanford, Rev. Max Vestal is preaching a series of sermons during Lent on passages which tell what Jesus said about himself, as "I am the door... and the way." Two church membership classes are being conducted — one on Thursday afternoons for young people and one on Sunday mornings for adults. Special services will be held March 26-29, with Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp of Garner as speaker.

The Race Problem: A Simple Solution

William T. Joyner

By now it is apparent that the 1954 Supreme Court decision regarding racial segregation has not been able to erase racial prejudice from the human heart. It has served to expose this prejudice in all of its ugliness before the world, but the question might well be raised at this point: is there a more permanent solution whereby the very roots of this "disease" might be removed? The conviction behind this article is that such a solution does exist, that its application is imperative, and that its structure is amazingly simple. The solution suggested here involves one of the most fundamental principles of our Christian religion — the principle of the "golden rule".

I know that to offer this principle as a solution for the complex problem of racial prejudice might seem naive, but it is entirely possible that in our frantic effort to produce a sophisticated answer to the problem, we have ignored the most obvious and effective answer of all. There is definitely a quality of simplicity in the admonition to "love thy neighbor as thyself," but it is the simplicity of Christian love.

What would the consistent application of this basic Christian principle in race relations mean? It would mean that before anyone gave his support to a social system which segregated other people into an out-cast group because of their color, he would first ask himself, "would I want to be treated this way myself?" It is easy to believe in segregation when you are not being segregated, when you are a member of the "in" group of society, or when your children do not have to grow up with a color problem hanging around their necks. But what if the shoe were on the other foot? What if you were the one being segregated and restricted at every point of your life. What if you were the one who had to live in the poorest housing area of a town because you were born with a dark complexion? What if you were the one who had to accept the dirtiest and lowest paying jobs available despite your qualifications? All of these questions are involved in the application of the "golden rule" in the area of race relations. If they are honestly considered, only one of two courses of action is possible: either the system of racial segregation must be thrown out or we must throw out the "golden rule".

The suggestion contained in this article is not intended for the purpose of making up anybody's mind for him. We still live in a free country — a country in which every individual has the right to be just as bigoted, narrow-minded, and prejudiced as he wants to be. It is, rather, to the individual who chooses to exercise that right, that this writer's deepest sympathy is directed. It is this individual who is so desperately possessed with the urge to hate that he has to use the color of another person's skin as an excuse to express this emotion. This person lives in a self-created prison, and the bars will never be broken in that prison until he is able to look upon all people as potential children of God, and therefore as his own brothers.

Greensboro Native Urban Leader

The Rev. J. Archie Hargraves, pastor of Nazarene Congregational Church, Brooklyn, and a leader in the development of ministers for depressed metropolitan areas, has been elected a secretary of the Board of Home Missions, Congregational Christian Churches.

While serving as the denomination's field secretary for urban church work, Mr. Hargraves will continue his pastorate in the Bedford-Stuyvesant area where he has developed a national demonstration center for inner-city parishes.

The new dual relationship, according to the Rev. Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice president of the Board, who made the announcement February 13, will enable Nazarene Church to continue "as a laboratory for new attacks upon urban church problems while enabling the creative ministries developed there to be more directly available to other churches and communities."

One of the founders of the East Harlem Protestant Parish in New York City and of a similar project, the West Side Christian Parish, in Chicago, Mr. Hargraves came to the Brooklyn church in 1956. In 1959, with the support of the Congregational Board he launched the pilot project which has pioneered in work with teenagers and with Puerto Rican families.

true of a Mason or a Rotarian, or a member of any kind of organization which has a badge as a mark of membership. Now Jesus says that his followers must wear a badge so that folks will know that they are his disciples. And that badge is love. "Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Not if you go to church, not if you say your prayers, not if you give to the church, not if you subscribe to a creed, not if you can repeat the Bible by heart! But if we love one another. Love for one's fellowmen is the distinguishing mark or badge of discipleship. These are not comforting words! What an acid test they are! The one sure way that men can know that we are the Master's disciples is that we have love one for another! "Am I a soldier of the Cross, a follower of the Lamb?"

The Brooklyn pastor will be associated with the Rev. Joseph W. Merchant, secretary of the urban church for the denomination, in the development of new types of parish and community strategy and in counseling metropolitan area churches throughout the country.

"The objective is to rekindle the life of all the churches of metropolitan areas through search of the Scriptures and their communities to discover what their contemporary mission may be," Dr. Douglass said.

Mr. Hargraves was born and brought up in Greensboro, North Carolina. He earned his B. S. degree at the Agricultural and Technical College of North Carolina in Greensboro where he also was director of public relations and assistant to the president and an instructor in the social sciences. Following his army service as information and education officer in Calcutta, India, he entered Union Theological Seminary where he was awarded the B. D. degree in 1948.

Mr. Hargraves will be a delegate of our denomination to the meeting of the World Council of Churches in New Delhi, India, in November 1961. He is a member of the Executive Board, Division of Home Missions, National Council of Churches, vice president of the Brooklyn Division of the Protestant Council of New York and chairman of its commission on racial and cultural relations.

A Litany Of The Uncrucified

By Richard K. Morton

Chaplain, Jacksonville University

Jacksonville, Florida

In an age so fruitful in its production, so strong in its defenses, so successful in finding pleasure and profit for many,

Give us the love, O God, to be crucified.

In the midst of many false philosophies of life and so many frantic attempts to cling to proud possessions and power,

Give us the wisdom, O God, to be crucified.

In the face of all those who would find security and satisfaction as they dominate and rule,

Give us the strength, O God, to be crucified.

In home and community and work, as we seek protection from what is unpleasant and hard,

Give us the faith, O God, to be crucified.

In every role and situation where we must hold to principle, stand a test, or confront suffering or loss,

Give us the courage and vision, O God, to be crucified.

From easy escape and calculating scheme that seeks to protect the benefits of the moment at the expense of the soul,

Deliver us, we pray, and make us worthy of a cross.

From any dimness of vision, any weakness of purpose, any lowness of aim, and any contentment with shallowness and wrong,

Deliver us, we pray, and help us to glory in our cross.

From all that would lead us to glorify self and to exploit the material and the temporal while great moral issues arise,

Deliver us, we pray, and make us humble to carry a cross.

From the shame of insulation from the struggles of man, the tears of the sorrowing, the anguish of the troubled,

Deliver us, we pray, and lead us, unflinching, in the path to a cross.

From all that would keep us untouched and unharmed and unharried by the throes of a world embattled with evil and pain,

Deliver us, we pray, and out of our cross shape us a crown. Amen.

THE UNTENDED GARDEN

One day a Christian and an atheist, who were neighbors with adjoining gardens, were discussing religious education. "No child," the atheist declared, "should be forced to belong to a specific church or to follow the dictates of another person's religious beliefs. When the child is grown, he can make his own, free choice." The Christian said nothing that day, but in his usually well-tended garden he planted some seeds and then ignored the plot they were in. A few weeks later the plot was thick with weeds. "Why all the weeds?" the atheist asked one day. "I'm trying your theory," the Christian replied, "trying to see if I could grow beautiful flowers by letting them alone." The atheist had to admit he was wrong, for the seed of a flower — and that of belief — both need nurturing.

ONE GREAT HOUR OF SHARING

CHRIST HAS NO HANDS BUT YOURS

Congregational Christian Service Committee

Time To SHARE

March 12 Christians Are Asked To Share Their Abundance With The Needy

Here And There Among The Churches

Morning worship services of our Albemarle church will be broadcast during March.

Mrs. David Morrow, choir director for our Albemarle church, has a daily radio program Monday through Friday, 10:30-11:00, Station WZKY, 1580 on your dial.

A new women's Bible study group is meeting weekly in homes of members of First, Burlington, with Mrs. W. F. Randolph as teacher. The life of Christ as revealed in all four Gospels is being studied.

Our Winchester, Virginia, church voted unanimously January 15 to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. Pastor Mark W. Andes seems to be pleased with this vote.

A "Living Memorial Fund" was authorized by our Tryon, N. C., church at its annual meeting in January. Trustees are to provide for receipt of funds in the form of bequests, donations as memorials, trust funds, and other contributions to further the work of the church.

Union Holy Week services will be held at Oakland, Chuckatuck, March 27-31, with Wesley Chapel Methodist Church and Whitehead's Grove Baptist Church cooperating. A candle-light communion service will be held Thursday, and on Friday "The Seven Last Words of Jesus on the Cross" will be given in song, scripture, and meditation. A union Easter sunrise service will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Warrington. Dr. W. T. Scott is pastor of our Oakland church.

Is this new, or has such happened before? "The flowers were placed in the sanctuary today in honor of our pastor, Rev. Glenn Garrett," says the February 19 bulletin of Mount Zion church.

Did you know that about two thirds — it may be more — of the people who are members of the Southern Convention churches never read this paper? This is our only publication to take to the people the message of the Church. To read or not to read, that is the question.

Passers-by on the Flint Hill road between High Point and Asheboro have noted with interest in recent weeks as a pile of blocks beside our Flint Hill church has been transformed into a fellowship hall. Much of the work is being done by members of the congregation, according to the pastor, Rev. L. M. Presnell.

Flowers at our Burlington (First) church February 19 were in memory of Dr. and Mrs. J. U. Newman and Dr. J. E. Rawls. The minister, Rev. Robert Kimball, used as his morning topic: "On Facing up to Life," and at the Wednesday evening service he continued the series on Basic Christian Beliefs and spoke on "The Priesthood of All Believers."

Rev. Joseph L. Moulton, missionary to India for 41 years, will be the guest of our Tryon church March 24-27. He will speak at a Family Night supper Friday, share in the Church School and Pilgrim Fellowship on Sunday, and speak to the Women's Fellowship on Monday. New members will be received into this church Maunday Thursday at communion.

Plans for a city-wide evangelistic series in Liberty, North Carolina, will be made when representatives from the various churches meet March 3 for a supper conference.

Rev. Harry C. Mathis, a senior at Southeastern Seminary, Wake Forest, began work as pastor of Union, Virgilina, February 3, and moves to the parsonage March 3.

Revival services will be held at Union Grove March 30-April 1 under the leadership of Rev. Billy Joe Willett assisted by Rev. William T. Joyner. Holy Communion will be observed Maunday Thursday evening.

Members of The Fellowship Bible Class of Christian Temple in Norfolk, Mrs. Morgan, teacher, visited the hospital February 22, taking gifts to the patients, and met at the home of Ray Hall for a social following the visitation. There were 53 members present February 12.

Dr. L. E. Smith was the guest speaker for the laymen of Great Bridge church when they met February 23 for supper and inspiration. Scouts assisted in the morning service of this church February 12. Our church and the Methodist church of the community are holding joint evening services.

"Preachers Airlift" to Honduras calls for nine ministers and their wives who wish to visit the Honduras Mission of the E. and R. Church, leaving Miami July 16 and returning there July 29. Approximate cost — $195 each. If interested, write Stanley Wilke, 1720 Chouteau Avenue, St. Louis 3, Missouri.

Cooperation of our churches and the Evangelical and Reformed churches in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, twenty in each group, is moving forward rapidly. Leadership training schools have been held recently in Harrisonburg and Woodstock, with an average of about 65 persons in attendance despite the snow and cold. The next planned cooperative effort will be the camp at Powell's Fort for juniors and junior highs.

The February issue of The Southeast News lists 26 churches that have voted on the constitution of the United Church of Christ. One abstained, two opposed, and 23 approved. Many of these churches now members of the Southeast Convention were formerly members of the Southern Christian Convention before the merger of Congregational and Christian churches.

We do not serve God exclusively in church work — although we can, and must serve God in necessary ways in our churches. But our primary opportunity, our primary place for serving God is our daily work and daily life. "The place of primary holiness is not where men worship but where men work." The place where God is first of all to be looked for, to be encountered is not in church on Sunday, but in the plant or office on Monday. And what does this mean but that our office desk can be a Communion Table, the kitchen sink can be a sacristy, the lathe can be an altar, the living room in our home can be the sanctuary.

—W. R. Stevenson of Tryon

A change in morning schedule at our Asheville church makes a two-hour nursery with an employed experienced person to care for the nursery; a two-hour period for the kindergarten which includes arts, crafts, music, a snack period and an instruction period; adults may choose between a Bible course taught by the minister, Rev. Frank E. Ratzell, or a course on family life for parents taught by Dr. and Mrs. William Morgan and Miss Mary Porter. Mr. Morgan has been a professor at Appalachian State Teachers College and Mrs. (also Dr.) Morgan at Florida State University, while Miss Porter has done psychiatric social work in Asheville. All three are members of our Asheville church.

The story of the passion, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ has been produced by the American Bible Society in a small 50-page booklet entitled, "He Is Risen." Available in either the King James or Revised Standard Version, they are $3.00 per hundred. It is suggested that local churches get them for their members to use between now and Easter. Order from American Bible Society, 450 Park Ave., New York 22, New York.

More than $10,000 has been received during the past six years by the Washington-Northern Idaho Council of Churches from the collection and sale of postage stamps. This money has purchased and sent overseas $335,000 worth of food for the hungry. Church World Service is the agency for the distribution of surplus foods, and states that for every dollar received 300 pounds of surplus food is sent to the needy. Think of this when you contribute in the One Great Hour of Sharing March 12.

Dr. Lucy Eldredge, long-time Christian education leader of the Christian denomination and more recently associated with Friendship Press, left January 27 to teach for four months in a writers' workshop at the Africa Literacy and Writing Centre, Box 1319, Kitwe, Northern Rhodesia. Miss Eldredge, who received an honorary degree from Elon College last spring, is doing this under the auspices of the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature of the National Council of Churches.

PROGRESS AT HAW RIVER

By Ione Coffin, Reporter

The Haw River Christian Church ended 1960 with a feeling that we had accomplished much. We received 33 new members. The Women's Fellowship met their goals. Our budget was met, and the building fund goal of $5,000 was reached with $100 to spare. Church attendance has been good although the weather has been bad. Our young people have been active with their work and have helped with several church services.

Our aim for the new year is much higher. Our building fund goal is $7,000 and our operating budget is higher. The spring revival is planned. We have started a nursery so our young mothers can attend church. We are hoping for a bright future in the months to come.

FAMILY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AT LIBERTY (VANCE)

By Mrs. Fletcher Fuller

Mrs. Osman Garrard, missionary education chairman for the Women's Fellowship of Liberty (Vance) church, supervised a Family School of Missions four Sunday evenings beginning January 15. Laymen's Fellowship and the Pilgrim Fellowship were invited to share in the school.

Each session was opened by the group singing "Forward Through the Ages." Worship services were planned as family devotions. January 15 the F. B. Fuller, Jr., family led the service, the 22nd the B. M. Newmans, the 29th the W. D. Fosters, and February 5 the J. S. Journigan family were in charge of the devotions. Each service was well planned, inspirational, and was enjoyed by all.

After the worship service the group divided into classes to study "Heritage and Horizon in Home Missions" and "Into All the World Together." The pre-school class was led by Mrs. Russell Eaves who used "Children of North America" and "Children Pray in Many Lands." The 6-12 year old age group was led by Mrs. Henry Mitchell who used "In Unbroken Line" and "When We Pray."

The Pilgrim Fellowship group was led by Osman Garrard and the discussion centered on "In Step With Time" and "One World One Mission." Adults were led by Betty Garrard and the study centered on "Safe in Bondage" "One World One Mission." The idea of "My church in our Christian world mission" was stressed.

After class period the group re-assembled for a film or film-strip with record. "New Frontiers of Faith," "On the Threshold," and "The Procession" were seen in succession. The last evening there was a double header — "The World in a Word" and "The Church Is There."

Although the weather was inclement, the attendance was good for this new feature of our church work. We pray to see future results.

March 7 is the date for a "One World" dinner at Whitten Hall (Winchester) with Mrs. Guy Benchoff as speaker. Food, fellowship, and a fine speech are offered for $1.00. Mrs. Benchoff was the speaker at the World Day of Prayer service in the Evangelical and Reformed church of Winchester.

Dangerous Days

These are dangerous days through which we are passing.

Such a statement brings to mind a scene in the United Nations recently when a mob rushed in and started a riot. Proceedings of this great international instrument for peace were interrupted while some "hired hands" yelled about a dead leader in the Congo. Some of those interviewed on television soon afterwards seemed to have little idea why they were demonstrating, while others said they were mad and that the United Nations should be destroyed.

Similar riot scenes were enacted around the world at almost the same time. Government property was destroyed. Friendly nations were insulted by rioting mobs.

One of the dangerous features of the whole disturbed world scene is that so very often students are the leaders in the demonstrations and riots. Party raids and riots seem to come close together and are of similar intellectual caliber. A serious search for knowledge, an intelligent expression of affection, a helpful approach to better human relations — none of these are found in these social upheavals being demonstrated in so many places.

Most Americans were doubtless pleased when they heard their young President say in chaste English that the United States will continue to support the United Nations, and that unilateral action in the Congo would be opposed. But in those quiet words there was glistening steel, rumbling tanks, atomic bombs, and all the things now ready for warfare. Leaders of the world heard the words, and they caught the idea. Little nations represented in the United Nations came to their own defense and voted for continued cooperative efforts to bring peace in the Congo.

In these days of Lent we remember a man of thirty-three who walked straight to Jerusalem one spring day in the long ago knowing full well that a cross awaited him there. He might have stayed near the beautiful Lake of Galilee where there were friends, or he could have gone to a desert or mountain for meditation and missed the Passover Feast just this once. Or he could have contented himself with quietly slipping into the temple for the Feast without discussion with the Scribes and Pharisees. Tables of the money-changers could have been left standing while cattle for the burnt offering were herded conveniently near the altar.

But such cowardly conduct did not enter the life of Jesus of Nazareth. He faced the cross with a steadfast tread — and his disciples followed.

Missionary Legacies

On another page of this paper is the account of money received by our Mission Board from the estate of an humble man who lived near Wakefield, Virginia. He attended one of our small churches and was never known for any large charities.

After he was dead his Will stated that part of his estate should go for missionary work in the denomination he had loved and served. His after-death gift is doubtless more than he had given in a lifetime. It is the expression of a continuing desire to serve his Lord. In this gift he could see churches being built in needy places, pastors receiving adequate salaries, the Gospel being preached and practiced, a portion of the world becoming the kingdom of Christ with children, young people and adults singing the praises of the Man on the Cross.

This gift can be the beginning of a long list of similar gifts to missions. In our area there has not been much property left when our church members were buried. The Civil War destroyed our wealth. That situation has changed in recent years. Our people are not poverty stricken now. They have enough and to spare. It is time for us to plan not only for the days of our earthly living but for what will be left when we are gone. Of course other members of the family should be considered when a Will is being made, but so should the Church. It is difficult to know just what will be needed to complete life's activities, and it is easy to plan for the distribution of whatever may be left when money is no longer needed. Missionary activity is a continuing necessity, and for that we should plan to have a share far into the future.

We Could

Membership in our Convention churches has stood near the same number for several years. We could grow. There is an ever increasing number of people in our two states. Eastern and western North Carolina and central and western Virginia have few churches of our faith and order. We could enter these areas with the enthusiasm of the White Pilgrim of distant fame, or the determination of Baptists and Methodists of our day. We could, you know.

Last year the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions received the same number of dollars it received in 1930. We could change that in 1961. The dangerous days in which we live are also the days of opportunity for the Christian Church, and we could accept the challenge to "evangelize the world in this generation" if we really wanted to do so.

The expensive programs of churches, organizations and institutions could be reduced in comparison with our missionary endeavor. "Serving the saints" is a noble thing, of course, but so is winning the world. We could make an honest attempt to win the world — and in so doing we might save our own souls, churches and other organizations.

Easter this year could be the harvest time for members, and it could bring the largest offering for missions ever experienced by our churches. Non-members live near us, and we have good incomes. We could win people and give money. Yes, we could. But who can say We Will?

In the town of Bruceville, Texas, is a cemetery which contains what is believed to be the only grave-marker in the United States that bears a union label. Certainly the monument, carved from Vermont marble, came from the only union quarry in this country.

Back of these two things lies the story of perhaps hundreds of pioneers who made history unconsciously, but who were not recognized until many years after their passing. The name of Martin Irons is typical, and the monument on which is chiseled the union label is a fitting tribute to his conception of the workingman's position.

Martin Irons was born in Dundee, Scotland, March 1, 1833. He came to the United States at the age of 14, landing in New York City, and became a machinist apprentice. Among other things, he saw how needlewomen of the now big city went from store to store begging for the privilege of making shirts at five cents each. Seeing this and other instances of unfairness to the working class, Irons decided to help improve their working conditions.

Irons went among workers of all classes and learned of their difficulties by listening to their stories and personally investigating complaints. Upon obtaining proof that an injustice had been done a worker, Irons would employ an attorney and enter suit in behalf of the employee. This had widespread effects and resulted in one of the first steps not only in New York City, but in the entire Empire State, to give the working classes an adequate compensation for their services.

Meantime, Irons had completed his apprenticeship and went to New Orleans to accept a position as a full-fledged machinist. Later he moved to Lexington, Kentucky, and still later to Sedalia, Missouri. In each city he pioneered in the interest of the working class. He rocketed to fame in working circles in his handling of the strike against pay cuts on the Gould railroad lines in 1885. His procedures startled his followers and dumbfounded his enemies.

But Martin Irons was not a demagogue. He believed in the right of investor and management, but held unequivocally to the doctrine that in the final analysis labor produces all values, and that labor should be so regarded and treated.

Like most labor leaders, the time came when Iron's efforts failed in behalf of workers, although through no fault of his own. He was made an outcast by those for whom he had labored, and obtained employment only by changing his name. Misfortune fell upon him in rapid succession, including the loss of his wife.

In the autumn of 1900, disappointed, sick, and unable to work, Martin Irons went to the home of a last friend, a Dr. Harris in Bruceville, and there died penniless. Seven years later labor leaders decided that Irons had accomplished far more than they had realized, and started a fund to erect a marker to his memory. The marker that bears the union label was placed at the head of his grave in 1911.

FEAR NOT

By K. Stevenson Shaffer

"Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things." — Joel 2:21

Fear not, O land,
Be glad, rejoice,
Have you not heard
Jehovah's voice
Inviting you
To turn this day
With all your heart;
To kneel and pray?

Turn to the Lord
And know his love.
Seek his mercy,
His kindness prove.
For the Lord is good
He does great things,
Be not afraid —
Rejoice and sing.

A recent research report indicates that by 1965 there will be 24 million Americans between the ages of 13 and 19 with an annual purchasing power of $14 billion. Here is a golden opportunity, and responsibility, for the churches. More than 11,000 packets of materials were distributed for use during Youth Week when young people considered "Into All the World Together."

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

THE GLAD TIDINGS

"He went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God."

Luke 8:1

I like that! Preaching the glad tidings, and showing the glad tidings. Words and actions working together! Says Paul, "The kingdom of God is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost". Jesus preached the glad tidings, and Jesus showed the glad tidings.

To be sure there is sacrifice, and suffering, and deep concern — but the chance to do something about it should bring great joy! I do not subscribe to a soft and non-sacrificial following after righteousness; but when I go to church I want to find gladness and joy in the gospel of Jesus. He went preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God!

When I go out of church to put the sermon into practice, "shewing the glad tidings," I want to find joy in doing it. If I make a contribution, or a call for the church, or render any service I want to do it willingly, gladly, cheerfully lest God hand it back to me and say he doesn't want it!

Helping is happiness. "Ask", says Jesus, "and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Ah yes, ask, like a father asks for a chance to help his child, or a neighbor to help a friend, or a Christian to serve the Christ by helping the known and unknown needy. And you will receive the opportunity. Your joy will be full.

Jesus went preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. It will take prayer and consecration to do it. He wants to help us, and will!

A Story Of Two Doctors

The Congregational Church of Ferndale, California, is building a new wing to a hospital 10,000 miles away.

It all started with Dr. Clarence Crane, Jr., of Ferndale, who didn't want to throw out his old medical journals.

Dr. Crane, an active layman of the Ferndale church, decided to write to American Board headquarters in Boston to ask if they knew of a doctor in the field who might like to have his medical journals. He was given the name of Dr. Woodman. Dr. Woodman did want the journals and a correspondence started between the two men.

When Dr. Woodman came to the United States on furlough, he and Dr. Crane arranged a meeting. A remark made by the missionary doctor kept cropping up afterward in Dr. Crane's mind. He had said that "somehow somewhere" he hoped to raise the money for a maternity wing in his hospital. As things were, medical and maternity patients were all in one ward together.

Would his church be willing to take on this project, Dr. Crane wondered? "We had a beautiful church and a good parsonage," he said. "We had sacrificed much to get these things for ourselves. Now we needed to sacrifice for others in the true spirit of Christ."

He took his idea to the trustees of the 221-member church and they whole-heartedly favored raising the money for the new wing in Chilesso. The congregation and its minister, the Rev. T. K. Nace, began work immediately on the "Chilesso Safari." The men of the church canvassed from door to door. Mothers and daughters of Chilesso. Church members dug deep. Chilesso, a name scarcely known before, became a byword. Funds mounted. This October the church happily announced it had reached its goal and the check for $4350 was presented to Dr. Woodman.

Dr. Woodman, who is an ordained Congregational minister as well as a doctor, returned to Africa with his family December 29. While in the United States on furlough, he has been doing special work in surgery at Boston's City Hospital.

In 1957, three years before the Ferndale drive, Dr. Woodman arrived for the first time at the Chilesso hospital. It was a sight to discourage the most determined Schweitzer. Three years had passed since any doctor had served on its staff. Overworked African nurses could not keep up with the staggering work load. The hospital, the only one in a 15,000-square mile area, was besieged with Africans who had come on foot, ox cart or bicycle many a weary mile for treatment.

The 28-bed, two-ward building itself stood in disrepair. Doors hung askew, floors sagged.

Against almost overwhelming odds, he began his new work. He was short of help, short of equipment, short of drugs. He learned that a missionary doctor must know 101 trades besides his own. Between round at the hospital he supervised the workmen rebuilding it.

Although many Africans are eager for treatment, he found a wide segment still cling to their faith in the witch doctor. Often the witch doctor does not turn his "patient" over to him, he says, until death is certain.

Once Dr. Woodman received unexpected support from the witch doctor himself. He appeared one day in the waiting room suffering with severe cataracts, his sight almost gone. The old man's sight was restored and talk of it hummed in the villages.

One of the customs of the African mission hospital is that friends and relatives of the patients come to the hospital to help take care of him. They bring his food and cook it for him and sleep on the floor by his bed at night.

Dr. Woodman sees 50 or 60 patients a day in the hospital and out-patient clinic and performs approximately 600 operations a year, averaging one major operation every day.

Many of the diseases he treats were virtually stamped out in the United States 50 years ago. These include small pox, which is common, and typhoid fever.

About 300 babies a year are delivered at the hospital. Dr. Woodman delivers about half of these, African mid-wives the others. Since the mothers prefer to have their babies at home and only come to the hospital when something goes wrong, most of the deliveries are difficult ones. Dr. Woodman plans to train mid-wives in the villages to give competent advice to the mothers who insist on having their babies at home and to help them recognize early signs of complications. He also plans to conduct an educational program to convince the mothers to have their babies in the hospital.

Payments to the hospital by the patients are on a gift basis. It is 60¢ for consultation, laboratory work and simple treatment. It is about a dollar to have a baby — $2 for a Caesarian.

Dr. Woodman cites as one of the most urgent medical needs in Angola a long-range public health education program.

"For instance," he says, "whopping cough is rampant in this area. Small children are dying by the dozens, but very few mothers bring their children to the hospital. What we need is an educational program followed by mass vaccination of the children. But there again we are stumped — we don't have the vaccine nor can we buy it here.

"My biggest frustration is that I must try to do curative work when there is no control of the disease itself. How much can I hope to do for a young man I have treated for tuberculosis when he will soon return to his village to be exposed to the disease all over again? What can I hope to accomplish with drugs in an undernourished patient who eats only corn meal and a little dried fish? A mission hospital cannot hope to control the disease itself."

Dr. Woodman has learned two languages to carry on his work in Angola. En route to Africa he and Mrs. Woodman spent nearly a year at Lisbon studying Portuguese, the official language of the area. Arriving in Africa, he spent another year in intensive study of Umbundu, complex language of the Africans in the Chilesso area. At the hospital he takes case histories in Umbundu, translates them into Portuguese for the records.

Dr. Woodman's salary is $3400 a year.

He says, "Dr. Albert Schweitzer has long been my hero; his work and writings are an inspiration to me. In a humble way, I would like to use what skills I have to relieve some of the total of human suffering and to work with the knowledge of doing something worthwhile."

Building of the new hospital wing, which must wait for the end of the rainy season in May, will be by the men of the district. Bringing water up from the river and mixing mud with their feet, they will make the adobe bricks which will slowly rise to form the walls of the new ward. There will also be a room in the wing for a mother-and-child clinic. Dr. Woodman hopes it will be finished by September.

The one-story hospital is located on a hill surrounded by palm trees and separated from the rest of the mission station by a small river. Nearby are tiny cottages for outpatients and for those needing rest and recuperation before beginning the long trek back to their villages. Along the paths are the stick-and-mud huts of the villagers for whom life goes along much as it did a thousand years ago.

Son of a Methodist clergyman and brought up in rural parsonages of upstate New York, Berwyn Woodman was born in Oneida, N. Y., 36 years ago. He studied at St. Lawrence University, Canton, N. Y., Theological School of St. Lawrence, Canton, and the Syracuse College of Medicine, New York. His parents, the Rev. and Mrs. Howard M. Woodman, live in Hamilton, New York.

Mrs. Woodman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey R. Goodberry of Edwards, N. Y., had thought of missionary work long before she met her husband. After their marriage in 1945, she taught for three years in upstate New York so that he might finish his medical training. They were appointed career missionaries of the American Board in 1953.

Trained in music as well as in teaching, Mrs. Woodman has been active in Chilesso in training African choral groups, giving piano lessons and promoting music programs in the schools. Under her guidance the Sunday school, inactive many years, jumped in attendance from 30 to 200. Much of the time she has taught the Woodman children at home. They are: Mary Elva, 9, Charles, 7, Richard, 5, and Anthony, 3.

The Woodman family live a mile from the hospital in a mud adobe house with a tile roof and white-washed walls. They have a wood stove and recently acquired a highly prized kerosene refrigerator.

They make their own cereal out of wheat and grow and roast most of their own coffee. Ox and goat meat make up much of their diet. Orange, lemon, avocado, tangerine and guava trees grow profusely in their yard.

Says Mrs. Woodman of their trilingual children: "We hear Portuguese or Umbundu spoken from the treetops, depending on which fruit is in season."

When they get back to Africa, two of the Woodman children, Mary Elva and Charlie, will go to a school for missionary children 250 miles from Chilesso, seldom seeing their parents. Next year Richard will go, too, leaving only Anthony at home.

When night falls at Chilesso, there is no TV, no local movie theatre, for diversion. There are a handful of other missionaries — six at most. The nearest town of any size, Silva Porto, is 95 miles away over dirt roads.

Too tired to read, except those medical journals, Dr. Woodman goes to bed by 9:30.

Africa

THE ANGOLA MISSION

Bunjei

Mission station 80 miles from a railroad supported by our Negro churches, the American Missionary Association, and the American Board.

March

5—Rev. and Mrs. Richard Webb, who have been in Africa since 1929, are in charge of evangelistic work in the Bunjei station, where he counsels the three African pastors, each of whom has a village circuit, and she is in charge of the girls' boarding school and women's work. The African Umbundu church, under his leadership, is doing missionary work with a neighboring tribe.

Camundongo

6—Rev. and Mrs. Carl Dille, who were from the Christian Church, went to Angola in 1938. Now they work in the relatively new station of Camundongo, where he is in evangelistic work and she has charge of women's work. Both do medical work in the absence of any doctor. They teach in rural life school and do a variety of mission work.

Chilesso

Mission station of 500 with school, hospital, church; 60 miles from railroad.

7—Miss Florence Malcolm, who in 1938 went to Africa, in 1959 turned over to African assistants the administration and principalship of the Swanson Memorial School, which has more than 200 pupils from 10-18 years old. She is now on furlough.

8—Rev. and Mrs. Duane Wain counsel with African leaders in evangelistic programs serving 300 village churches; each village has a lay leader who, with deacons, helps the 11 ordained pastors. Mr. Wain cares for maintenance work of 30 buildings, roads, etc. Mrs. Wain is in charge of home economics school for girls and counsels women.

9—Dr. and Mrs. Berwyn Woodman were appointed in 1954, went to language school in Portugal and in Africa, served at Dondi where doctor was on furlough, and in 1957 arrived in Chilesso, where he began renovating and refurbishing the hospital which had been without a doctor for many years. (See article entitled "The Story of Two Doctors" in this issue.)

Dondi

Mission station where united work of American Board and United Church of Canada centers here with church, schools, hospital, printing press.

10—Miss Marie Crosby, a Canadian, went to Angola in 1927. Since 1948 she has been at Sara Hurd Scott Memorial Hospital, serving as treasurer and religious and social worker. She specializes in occupational therapy with tuberculosis and leprosy patients and in teaching religion to nursing students.

11—Mr. and Mrs. Robin Markham went to Africa as missionaries in 1952. He was born in Portugal where his parents were studying language in order to be missionaries. When he was ten they returned to U. S., but he decided he would some day go back as a missionary. He is in charge of industrial and trade work at Currie Institute, training boys who come from all over Angola. She is nurse and teacher.

North Carolina Church Builders Club

Membership Sunday — March 5, 1961

Kenneth D. Register, President

The purpose of the North Carolina Church Builders Club is to help build new churches. Why do these churches need our help? At the present cost of land, construction, and furnishings, it is almost impossible for the members of a new church to finance such a project unaided.

How does the Builders Club operate? The Club seeks to enlist memberships from individuals and organizations within Congregational Christian Churches in North Carolina, who will contribute $10.00 for each new church project. There will not be more than two new projects selected within any one calendar year. This money will be used to purchase land or erect new buildings only. Leadership aid will be provided by the local congregation with aid from the Mission Board. Projects of the Builders Club are selected by the executive committee, in consultation with the Southern Convention Board.

The Convention Office, Box 247, Elon College, N. C. will receive monies, send receipts and disburse funds upon the instruction of the executive board of the club.

Both individuals and groups may join this Church Builder Club. How? Simply by asking your minister for an application card or by filling out the application at the end of this article and sending it, with your check, to the address listed above or give it to your minister.

Jesus said: "By their fruits ye shall know them." This Club has already helped to build two new churches and has already selected another project for its third "call."

First Call

Our first "call" was for Northview Church, near Sanford, N. C. This church was built at an estimated cost of $20,000. The Builders Club gave something over $4,000 toward the erection of this new church. This is a lovely little church built on a most attractive lot and is now serving the spiritual needs of many people in the Northview community. We are happy to have had a part in the building of this new church.

Second Call

Our second "call" was for Edgewood United Church of Christ in Burlington, N. C. The first unit of this plant was constructed at an estimated cost of $60,000. This was our first joint project with the Evangelical and Reformed church. The Builders Club gave something over $3,000 toward the erection of this building. This church is located in one of the most progressive and fastest growing sections in Burlington. It already has a membership of over 100. We rejoice in the fact that we were privileged to share in this project.

Third Call

The third "call" now in effect is for St. Peter's United Church in Greensboro, N. C. The cost of the proposed first unit of this church will be something over $65,000. We hope to be able to contribute at least $5,000 toward this project. This church, now meeting in a school building, has 89 members with some 125 enrolled in the church school.

The Builders Club is one of the arms of Church Extension here in the Southern Convention. Builders Club Membership Sunday March 5 will be a part of Our Christian World Mission Lenten Emphases for February, March and April.

It is our hope and prayer that every minister and every church member of our fellowship, will do their very best in promoting Builders Club Membership Sunday, and will go all out in trying to secure at least five new Church Builders Club memberships per church. Let's make our contribution to the St. Peter's church the largest yet! Help others to build and your own church life will take on greater meaning.

Make Church Builders Club Membership Sunday, March 5 a red letter day in your church. Have your minister send to the Convention Office both your present memberships in the Club and your new memberships enlisted on Membership Sunday. A list of the churches participating in this program and the number of memberships will be printed in The Christian Sun in the near future.

God builds no new churches, He has left this work to man. Be a Church Builder by joining the North Carolina Church Builders Club today!

HYMN OF MONTH

"Lord God of Hosts, Whose Purpose" is the Hymn of the Month for February at Tryon, North Carolina. "This hymn was written for a meeting of the men's association at the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, in 1907. The author, Shepherd Knapp (1873-1946) was then the assistant minister. He was later minister of the Central Congregational Church, Worcester, Massachusetts. The inspiration for the hymn is I Corinthians 15:58. It breathes courage, confidence, and gladness." So says the church bulletin for February 19. Here are some lines:

Lord God of hosts, whose purpose never swerving,

Leads towards the day of Jesus Christ thy Son,

Grant us to march among thy faithful legions,

Armed with thy courage, till the world is won.

The remaining stanzas are found in the Pilgrim Hymnal, number 411.

NORTH CAROLINA CHURCH BUILDERS CLUB of the CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

Box 247, Elon College, N. C.

I believe new churches are needed and I wish to have a share in building them. Therefore, I desire to enroll as a member of the North Carolina Church Builders Club, and promise to give $10.00 whenever called on to do so, to help build a new church within the bounds of North Carolina; provided that no more than two calls shall be made in any one year.

HELP THE HISTORY ROOM

Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, curator of the Church History Room, reports that progress is being made in checking, cataloging, and making available the history of our churches. She reminds that church people can be helpful in this process.

The Pilgrim High Road, a publication of Congregational Christian Churches for young people, was published from 1933 to 1947. The History Room has most of the copies of this paper, and is eager to get them bound so they can be kept and used. However, a few numbers are absent. If any reader has one of these missing copies that you are willing to spare for this good cause, please send it, or them, to Mrs. Johnson at Post Office Box 232, Elon College, North Carolina.

The needed numbers are for February, June and July 1933; August 1937; May, July, August, September, November and December 1938; July and December 1939; January 1940; May 1941; March, June and November 1943; January, July, August and December 1944; May and July 1946; and February and May 1947. Mrs. Johnson thinks the magazine was discontinued with the May issue of 1947. If there were later issues, they, too, will be appreciated.

If you can help to complete this fine chapter in our church history, it is believed that you will be glad to do it. Now, while you think of it, is the best time. Thanks.

NEEDS OF NEW CHARLOTTE CHURCH

By Jim Jackson, Minister

For the past four months we have been holding worship services in the living room of the big house in Clanton Park, Charlotte, North Carolina, which we have been using for church, Sunday school, recreation center, and living quarters. This has been a very useful building but all of us have longed for something else which would be more conducive for worship. Our eyes have been on the 4-car garage (concrete block building) which is about 50 feet from the house. February 1 (with the assistance of the mission board plus our own giving) renovation was begun to convert this garage into a place for worship. There has been more interest in the conversion of this building than there could have been in putting up a brand new building.

With the efforts of our people in the community, we can raise the necessary money for the building. But our problem now is that we will soon (very soon) need furnishings inside the building. It has been suggested that some churches may want to help furnish our new chapel. Rather than just say, "We need help", we are listing the basic items that we need so a church might give the money for something specific.

Our basic needs are:

100 chairs ($4 each)	$400
Pulpit	100
Lectern	50
Communion table	35
2 Offering plates ($10 each)	20

There are a few other things that we will be needing — we will be wanting a piano — but these are our basic needs.

POOR YET MAKING MANY RICH

II Cor. 6:10

They called him poor,
But I'd be glad To have such riches
As those he had.

The kind he had
Was of the mind,
And humbly spent
In being kind.

Though poor himself
He had that which Blessed other lives
And made them rich!

KNOW OUR MISSIONARIES

Our churches in the Southern Convention, while helping to support the world-wide missionary effort of the denomination, are now giving special attention to 13 missionaries of the American Board. They will be introduced to you during Lent, which is known as our "Mission Period."

Dr. James F. McKinley

DR. AND MRS. JAMES McKINLEY

The Rev. Dr. James F. McKinley, a missionary in the Philippines for three decades, is director of the Internship Ministerial Student Program of the United Church of Christ in the Philippines. For many years, before assuming his present post, he was dean of Silliman University College of Theology. Mrs. McKinley taught Church Music at the college.

Dr. McKinley's appointment to the internship program of the United Church grew out of his own successful pioneering in this field at Silliman. He and his wife now reside in Cebu City on Cebu Island.

Youth Faces The Future

Jerry Stone

"We are united in the purpose . . .
 "To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.
 "To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.
 "To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

Psalm 23 Interpreted

By Jerry Stone
 Fellowship Co-Chairman

I wonder how often we are prone to look at words, phrases, and sentences, without fully realizing their meanings. In this "modern" age in which we live today, there is a tendency not to read, but to scan the material available for our use. When we allow ourselves to be caught in this haphazard way of reading, we also tend to allow our thinking and reasoning powers to slip from our grasp — for surely no one can read or scan something without using the intellect they possess to understand it. For this reason, I thought it would be interesting to look at a very familiar passage of scripture, and to see if we might learn some even greater truths from it.

The Twenty-Third Psalm is one of the most interesting and inspiring passages found in the Bible. In these few verses, we see God as the Great Shepherd, the Great Comforter — one who knows the trials and tribulations of man, and how to console and comfort these men in an inexpressible fashion.

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want."

Even in the opening words of this great psalm, David conveys the idea that all wants and needs are supplied by God. How unlike David are we today in wanting various things in life instead of waiting on God to supply all our needs. To me, this verse demonstrates the simple fact that David knew he already had the priceless possession.

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters."

This verse seems to demonstrate the fact that God gives peace to all who come unto him. And in turn, he supplies the necessities of life for his sheep. He is the Great Shepherd, who gave his life for the sheep.

"He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake."

This verse is a sermon in itself. Being in the state of spiritual death, we are now restored to life everlasting with a new birth and a restored soul. Now we are to walk down the paths of righteousness for his name's sake — to glorify our Savior and to carry his name to the distant corners of the globe.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

In this passage, the psalmist manifests the comparison between death and a dark valley. It is a very simple, yet profound comparison of the elements of a valley — dark shadows, creeping vines, wild beasts, poor paths, and hideous sounds, with those of death — fear, remorse, sadness, and melancholy. In our periods of trial, it is necessary for us to remember that we are not alone, and that God drives away the evil that might engulf us. With the staff of the Great Shepherd, our feet are guided into life everlasting, full of joy and away from the pitfalls of everyday life.

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil: my cup runneth over."

God is preparing the Great Supper for his Bride. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to Him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. . . ." Everyone should constantly be searching their own hearts to see if they are to be accepted at this Feast.

It seems to me that the most inspiring words in the entire psalm are, "My cup runneth over." These four words contain an entire volume of truth, for surely we must agree that our cups are running over. God has been so generous and kind to each of us, giving us life, but not just physical life, but life everlasting.

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

This verse solves all our problems. There is no reason to worry about the future. The goodness and mercy of Christ shall carry us through tomorrow, after that, we shall dwell in his house forever.

January 29 was youth Sunday in our church and all the young people were great. We were so proud of them. They led the service with poise and dignity and we are very fortunate to have such fine young people in our church.

The North American Ecumenical Youth Assembly will meet in Ann Arbor, Michigan, August 16-23 with 2,000 Christian people coming from every part of the world. The United Christian Youth Movement General Council will follow at the same place August 24-27 to consider how American youth can respond helpfully to the times in which they live.

Friday evening, February 24, the Junior High Fellowship of Christian Temple held an Increase-in-Membership Party. Sounds like a good idea, and reminds oldsters of the Christian Endeavor slogan, Socials That Save.

YOUTH SUNDAY AT HAYES CHAPEL

By Dollie S. Stirewalt, Reporter

"Youth Sunday" at Hayes Chapel Church, Garner, N. C. was a memorable occasion. We are very proud of the youth of our church and want to express our appreciation to them.

The "Youth Day" was planned by Jerry Stone, who did an excellent work in distributing various responsibilities to a goodly number of our youth. The Sunday school hour responsibility was as follows: Pianist, Ginny Lee Carroll; Song Leader, Billy Walker; Superintendent, Jerry Perry; Prayer, Susan Carr; Cradle Roll, Judy Goss; Beginners, Jackie Evans; Primaries, Susan Carr; Juniors, Frank Sandy; Intermediates, Elsie Walker; Young People, Brenda Parrish; Gleaners, Joyce Beasley; Willing Workers, Judy Stone; Men, Felton Goss. Leading the little folks in their singing was Jackie Evans accompanied by our latest piano student, Debrah Young.

Following this Sunday school hour, with no adult assistance, the young people led us into the worship service, using the youth choir for the special music. The pianist for the worship hour was Judy Stone, with Larry Parrish leading singing. Larry Duke and Jamie Perry were our ushers. Jerry Stone led the responsive reading and also the scripture reading, followed with prayer by Joyce Beasley. The climactic part of our service was the message entitled "Patriotism" delivered by Dwight Moss. Following his message and prayer an invitation was extended and five or six answered for rededication and one for a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Yes, we are happy to say this profession of faith was made by one of our young people — Miss Linda Williford, 15 years of age.

We are very pleased with the "Youth Day" at Hayes Chapel and taking liberty with terminology we say "and a little child shall lead them."

The current membership of the United States Senate consists of 87 Protestants, 11 Roman Catholics and 2 Jews. The House of Representatives includes 335 members of 21 Protestant denominations (including 4 clergymen), 86 Roman Catholics, 11 Jews and 1 Sikh. These are the people who will make our national laws.

Mission Board Receives Legacy

By Supt. Clyde L. Fields

The members of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention in Annual Session in January of 1961 were informed that the Mission Board had been remembered generously in the Will of the late Floyd F. Faison. Mr. Faison was a prominent farmer of the Wakefield Church and Community in Surry County, Virginia. He had been active in the work of the Wakefield Church and at his death was laid to rest beside his sister, Maude Faison.

The will of Mr. Faison stated that one half of his "remaining estate" be given for the work of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. This amount proved to be $54,470.84. The Mission Board has received the money and has invested it at interest until final decision is made with regard to its best use. The Mission Board felt that it should be a careful steward of these sacred funds and should not dissipate this money unwisely. A Committee will make long and careful study as to the better use of the money in keeping with the provisions of Mr. Faison's will.

The will of Mr. Faison further provided that one eighth of the other half of "the remaining estate" be given for Foreign Missions in the event of the death of a sister, Maude Faison. This share amounting to $6,808.86 was also given to the Mission Board of the Southern Convention for Foreign Missions. The Mission Board voted to make this money available to the American Board for foreign mission work as a memorial gift from the late Maude Faison. The Board felt that this was the spirit of Maude Faison and the will.

"He being dead, yet speaketh." How true this can be if one wishes to perpetuate the ongoing work of the Church through a Will. Perhaps other members of churches in the Southern Convention would like to remember the Church, Institutions, and Our Christian World Mission in the Convention and around the world.

CHURCH HISTORY ROOM AND CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

Copies of Church Newsletters and Church Publications should be made available to the Church History Room at Elon College, N. C.

Please put the Church History Room on the mailing list for newsletters and periodicals from local churches of the Southern Convention. Please be sure to have material dated and name of church properly registered so as to date and mark publication properly for historical purposes.

A SENIOR HIGH MEMBER SPEAKS

My Ideal Teacher

My ideal teacher prepares his lesson so thoroughly that he is able to make it interesting. He delivers it as though he were talking to us instead of reading stuff that neither of us understands. He has a pleasing voice and is loud enough to be heard by everyone in the class.

My ideal teacher attends regularly and supplies a good substitute when he really just has to be away. However, this is not very often.

He tries to understand young people and is a person with sincere Christian aspirations who can talk to us about God leading our lives, because we can certainly see God in his own life. He seems to have a broad knowledge of young people. We often say that we know he reads many books on youth work or he could not be prepared so well to lead us. Our teacher knows all of us by the first name and is always doing something special for us.

Boy, his teaching and his life are really an inspiration to our class. Too, I like him because he doesn't just "preach at us," but lets us take part in our class work. I'm thankful for my teacher, and the rest of the class loves him, too.

He is my ideal teacher.

(The above was written by Rev. Winfred Bray in preparation for teaching a class of young people's church school teachers in the Western North Carolina Conference.)

Dean's List At Elon College

Eighty-nine Elon College students have been placed on the dean's list after achieving honor grades on their courses during the recent fall semester, according to an announcement from the office of Dr. H. H. Cunningham, dean of the college.

Three of the group made no grade less than "A" on any subject: Dean Coleman, of Burlington; Helen Misenhimer, of Conway, Va.; and Carol Tragesor, of Arnold, Maryland.

Seventy-six others in regular academic courses had an average of "B" on their courses, among them Nabil Abu-Aitah, Beit Rahar, Jordan (being sponsored by Women's Fellowship of the Southern Convention); Feberee Allen, Henderson; Gerald Allen, Winston-Salem; Richard Apperson, Newport News, Va.; Carolyn Apple, Gibsonville; William Ausley, Graham;

Helen Baker, Elkridge, Md.; Glenda Bumgarner, Burlington; Raymond Bell, Burlington; Barbara Blackwelder, Southern Pines; Ruby Botty, Burlington; Thomas Brady, Elon College; Carolyn Brown, Troy; James Buie, Darlington, S. C.; Ellen Burke, Graham; Peggy Burke, Burlington; Edward Campbell, Elon College;

Merritt Cheek, Mebane; Barbaros Celikkol, Adana, Turkey; Stephen Cobb, Gibsonville; Barbara Day, South Boston, Va.; Annie Edwards, Gibsonville; Earl Fogleman, Liberty; Sara Lou Foley, Stoneville; Carolyn French, Henderson; Daniel Gee, Burlington; C. G. Hall, Stoneville; Herbert Hawks, Louisville, Ky.;

William Whitley, Tarboro; William Wilkerson, Reidsville; Robert Willis, Beaufort; Cecil Wright, Newport News, Va.; and Helen Wright, Greenville, S. C.

Ten students in the commercial department of the college also had an average of "B" for the fall term: Linda Bennett, Burlington; Deanna Braxton, Elon College; Patsy Cole, South Boston, Va.; Linda Riddle, Whitsett; Doris Haislip, Altamahaw; Connie Hudson, Altamahaw; Judy Jones, Burlington; Marsha Jordan, Henderson; Sarah Lackey, Burlington; and Nancy Wyrick, Greensboro.

DENOMINATIONAL CHURCH BULLETINS

Many of our churches are now using the denominational church bulletins. The First, Norfolk, bulletin for January 22 had this to say about them: "The information about the church around the world provided for us each Sunday on the cover of our church bulletin will help us grow tremendously in churchmanship. We shall want to take our bulletins home and take time to become acquainted with the material our United Church provides for us each week.

ECUMENICAL ESSAY CONTEST

Ministers under forty years of age are invited to participate in the third ecumenical prize essay contest, sponsored by the World Council of Churches. The theme is: "What does it mean for the local congregation to say: I Believe in the Holy Catholic Church?"

Essays should be between 5000-8000 words in length, typewritten double-spaced, and submitted in three copies. A pen-name should be used on the manuscript and a letter should be enclosed to the scholarship committee, giving true name, date of birth and present work. The essays must be postmarked not later than December 31, 1961, and sent by registered mail to World Council of Churches, Scholarship Committee, 17 route de Malagnou, Geneva, Switzerland.

The purpose is to encourage young ministers in the study of some of the central Biblical and theological issues under current discussion.

Revival services will begin at Apple's Chapel March 19 with Rev. Charles Bell of Bethlehem church, Altamahaw, as visiting speaker.

Is Your Child College Material?

That depends. By today's standards, he probably is. By standards ten years from now, perhaps not. How can that be? Is his I. Q. likely to change? No. But conditions are.

Many college classrooms are crowded today. By 1967, applications are expected to double. Low salaries are driving too many qualified teachers into other fields.

By the time your child reaches eighteen, there may not be any room for him in any college.

This is a frightening situation. Now is the time to put a stop to it. Help the college or university of your choice now. The rewards will be greater than you think.

If you want to know more about what the college crisis means to you, write for a free booklet to: HIGHER EDUCATION, Box 36, Times Square Station, New York 36, New York.

A Promise Of The Spirit

Background Scripture: John 14-16.

Devotional Reading: John 16: 1-15.

Memory Selection: If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.
John 14:23.

The world was about to come tumbling down on the heads of the disciples. Life was about to fall in on them. And Jesus wanted to prepare them for the tragic hour. So as he sat with them around the table from which they had eaten the Passover Meal, and partaken of the after-meal which we now call the Lord's Supper, he spoke out of his heart and into their hearts some of the best-known and best-beloved words in the Bible. Not only can we not cover the three chapters assigned to today's lesson — chapters 14-16; we cannot cover in detail even the part of one chapter printed in the Lesson Text — Chapter 14.

The Cure For A Troubled Heart

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." Faith in God, and faith in Christ, is the formula for an untroubled heart, amid all the ills and the evils of the world. To be sure there come times when we have to believe where we cannot prove, and accept what we cannot understand or explain. But if in such dark hours, we believe that somehow there is purpose in life, and that somehow in that purpose there is love, then even that purpose there is love, then even the otherwise unbearable becomes bearable, and even in the darkness there is always a glimmer of light. Jesus significantly says, "Believe also in me."

Room For All

In my Father's house are many mansions or rooms or abiding places — it makes little difference how the word is interpreted. Three ideas may be involved or meant: different ranks of blessedness, different rooms to which men will be assigned; different stages of development, or stages on the way, implying that there is progress and growth in heaven; and, finally, that there is plenty of room for all in heaven. Jesus is saying in simple language something like this: "Don't be afraid, there is room in heaven for all of God's or the Father's children." He goes on to say, "If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye shall be also." We have his word for it, the word of God's Gentleman, so that we can depend upon it. And whatever else heaven is, Jesus will be there. And for the Christian that will be heaven — to be with Jesus, from whom nothing can separate us.

Seeing God

"No man hath seen God at any time." God is a Spirit and people cannot see a spirit. But Jesus was so closely identified with God, and God so filled his life, that he said "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." "Do you want to know what God is like? Look at Jesus Christ. In him we see some wonderful things about God. a. God entered an ordinary home and into an ordinary family, and into the common life of man. b. God was not ashamed of work or to work — Jesus who was God in the flesh was a carpenter. c. God knows what it is to be tempted — Jesus was tempted, and this shows us that God goes through the eternal struggle through which we must pass. d. God loves. In the care and concern and compassion of Jesus, in his yearning for men, in the intensity of his love for men, we see how God feels toward his children. e. God suffers. Jesus on the Cross shows God suffering for the sins of men, and the limit to which God will go to show men that love, and the vicarious suffering he will bear to redeem them from their sins through love. Jesus showed men a God they could not see, and that revelation awakens us, or should awaken us, to wonder, love and praise.

Love And Obedience

Jesus bluntly states that obedience is the test of love. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." It is idle talk and hypocrisy and blasphemy to say that we love God and Christ, and deliberately break his commandments. It is quite evident that Jesus is saying being a Christian is not an easy thing. One must put God's demands before one's desires. Real love for God is not an easy thing. Much of what we call the love of God is not love at all. Indeed much of what we call love is not love at all. Children say they love their parents and break their hearts by what they do. Husbands and wives say they love each other, and almost break one another's hearts by inconsiderateness and irritability and unkindness. Outward protestations of love must be shown by practical expressions of love.

Jesus goes on to say that to those who love God, God makes himself known. "My Father will love him, and will come unto him, and we will make our abode with him." The more one loves the more he knows God. The more one loves God the more God reveals himself to that man. Jesus made it plain that love is more than mere sentiment or emotion.

The Comforter, The Advocate, The Helper, The Counselor

"I will not leave you comfortless." When the Comforter, who is the Holy Spirit. . . For many people, perhaps most people, the word "comfort" means a sort of consolation, or sympathy, for those in trouble. The real meaning of the word, however, is to make strong, to enable one to cope with circumstances. The root of the word comfort is "fort" or "fortress." The word also means "One who is called to one's side or called in"; again it means an advocate, somebody to plead one's case, or to defend one against a charge. Jesus here promised that he would send his Spirit to stand by his followers, to make them strong, to vindicate them, to enable them to cope with things.

I'll Be Back

"I will come to you." Jesus is here referring, not to his Second Coming — he does that in another place — but to his resurrection and living presence. He assures them that death

Payments On Improvements

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

This week we are making a report on the giving of our churches to The Children's Home Improvement Plan. We are very happy to report that 19 churches have already paid in full their pledge. A number of other churches have paid a substantial amount on their pledge. Some churches are yet to begin making payments on their pledge. There are a few churches in the Convention that still have not made a pledge to this Improvement Program. We wish very much that they would make their pledges, then the churches of the Southern Convention would be 100% in their support of this program.

We are very grateful to those churches that have made an extra effort to bring their pledges up to date and even some have paid in full. This is a big help to us. For the more money we receive before the completion of the cottages this spring that is that much less we will have to borrow from the bank.

Work on the cottages continues to go forward. We are still hoping to be in the two new cottages by late spring. The weather will continue to be a factor in whether or not we will be able to do this.

If your church is not listed in this issue among those who have contributed to CHIP make sure that when the next list is printed in May that your church will be among those that have contributed.

This list includes only those that have contributed on their pledges — and is as of February 20, 1961. There are a number of churches which have pledged, but have not as yet made a payment.

The total amount collected to this date on CHIP from individuals, businesses and industry is $80,891.36. This amount includes the $24,483.79 from the churches which are listed in our report this week.

The contributions to CHIP have been coming along very well and we hope they will continue to do so. In this way we can pay for the cottages with a smaller loan from the bank.

Space does not permit us to list each gift from individuals and businesses. However, we had received inquiries from some churches about payments on their pledges and we thought it would be interesting to all churches to see how they stood on this.

will have no ultimate power over him, that he will conquer it, that they will see him again because he will be alive. And they will see him because they have become spiritually alive. After he is risen their minds will understand, their eyes will be opened, their hearts will be kindled. Thus would he change despair into hope, and defeat into victory.

His Last Will And Testament

"My peace I give unto you. Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Not the peace of ignorance, or of escape by much activity, or of anesthesia by dulling one's self by dope, liquor or pleasure, but the peace of conquest and power.

Nine new members joined the Mt. Pleasant Women's Fellowship when it met February 12 in the home of Mesdames Eva and Annie Womack. Plans were made for a fish fry at the church March 25. The spring revival will begin in this church April 2 under the leadership of Rev. Ronald Nichols, pastor.

If you are a minister, doctor, nurse, laboratory technician, teacher, social worker, librarian, business manager, secretary-bookkeeper, or just a plain housewife who wants to invest your life in the missionary work of the Church, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions may be looking for you. People are needed to work in Angola, Southern Rhodesia, South Africa, India, Japan, The Philippines, Micronesia, Syria, Greece, Turkey, Honduras, Hong Kong, Ghana, and Iraq.

Ministers have recently received a copy of the current Directory and Calendar of Prayer for the overseas missions of our fellowship. This will answer many questions, as to how many missionaries we have, where they are located, and their mailing addresses. The Annual Report of the American Board, which contains further information about our overseas mission work, may be obtained free by writing The American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

Dr. Mackey Heads Stewardship Council

Dr. Sheldon E. Mackey, Philadelphia, secretary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, has been named to head the newly organized Stewardship Council of the United Church of Christ.

The Stewardship Council will be one of the major organizations of the United Church. It will be responsible for fund raising, and for stewardship and missionary education. The Council will also assist local churches in their regular every-member canvass fund raising.

The Stewardship Council will combine the work of the Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church Department of United Promotion and Commission on Stewardship.

Dr. Mackey has been secretary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church since 1956 and co-secretary of the United Church of Christ since 1957. He will continue to devote part-time service to these offices until the program and the staff of the Stewardship Council have been organized and require his full-time service.

From 1954 until his election as secretary in 1956 Dr. Mackey served as administrative assistant to the president of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

Ordained in 1939, Dr. Mackey has held three pastorates in Pennsylvania: St. John's Evangelical and Reformed Church, Orwigsburg, from 1939 to 1944; Second Evangelical and Reformed Church, Reading, 1944-50, and First Evangelical and Reformed Church, Sunbury, 1950-54.

Dr. Mackey received his A. B. degree from Moravian College in 1936 and his B. D. degree from Lancaster Theological Seminary in 1939. He also did graduate study in the New Testament at Union Theological Seminary. In 1954 Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, conferred on him its honorary D. D. degree. In 1958 Ursinus College, Collegeville, Pa., conferred on him the honorary LL.D.

Dr. Mackey was born November 20, 1913, in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. He was married in 1939 to the former Marie Dillinger of Bethlehem and they have five children: Peter D., John H., Mary Susan, Timothy A., and Philip J. The Mackeys live in Glenside, Pa.

LENT

Lent is sometimes called the springtime of the soul. It can be just that to each of us this year if we would let it.

In the spring the warmth of the earth and the small seeds seem to once more work in a heavenly harmony and there is growth.

In the season of Lent, the warmth in our hearts and the Spirit of Christ is calling for a heavenly harmony so that there can be growth in you.

Here And There Among The Churches

Those interested in a "Community Development Organization" in the Pleasant Hill area near Liberty met in our church hut there February 17.

Rev. Kenneth Register began a pastor's class for those 10 years of age and older February 19 at Beverly Hills, Burlington. These classes are being held for six Sundays during the church school hour.

Mrs. W. Walter Hall of Asheboro taught the Bible study, "Luke's Portrait of Christ" at a joint meeting of the circles of our Albemarle Women's Fellowship February 27. Mrs. Hall is the wife of a former pastor of the Albemarle church.

Rev. Richard L. Jackson, St. Paul United Church of Christ, Cincinnati, Ohio (formerly pastor of our Waverly and Chapel Hill churches) is preaching a series of sermons during Lent on "What We Believe," using the new Statement of Faith of the United Church as a basis.

Mrs. John Robert Kernodle, social action chairman for the Women's Fellowship of the Southern Convention and member of First, Burlington, was elected chairman of District 2 of the N. C. Council of United Church Women at the annual meeting of the last week in January.

Rev. James Porter began work as pastor of Turner's Chapel, Sanford, February 12. Following the morning service, Mr. and Mrs. Porter and family were guests of honor at a covered dish luncheon at the Colon Community House. They are living in the Turner's Chapel parsonage on the Colon Road.

Rev. W. W. Snyder of our Home For Children will be the guest speaker at the morning worship service at Garner Community Church March 19.

An area church school worker's conference is being held this evening (March 7) at Amelia church in the Eastern N. C. Conference with Rev. Robert Knowles as leader.

Mrs. Robert Kimball of First, Burlington reviewed "One World, One Mission" for the Women's Fellowship of Union Ridge following a covered dish supper February 27.

Pilgrim Memorial Church (Congregational) in Sacramento, California, has given 85 copies of The Pilgrim Hymnal to the new Garner Community Church. They were channeled to the Garner church through the Southern Convention.

Rev. Reuben Askew is conducting a pastor's class in church membership during the usual Christian Endeavor meeting period each Sunday evening during Lent at Pleasant Hill, Liberty.

The following people attended the Southeast Regional Meeting at Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama, February 28 - March 2, 1961:

Rev. and Mrs. Clyde L. Fields, Rev. W. Walter Hall, Rev. F. C. Lester, Rev. and Mrs. Lacy M. Presnell, Rev. Kenneth D. Register, Rev. Wm. A. Rich, Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Jr. Rev. Collie Seymour, Rev. Lowell A. Smoot, Rev. W. W. Snyder, Rev. Richard Petersen and Rev. Carl E. Wallace.

The Fields and the Presnells will spend a few days in Florida following the Southeast Regional Meeting.

Rev. Aubrey Todd was the speaker at First, Norfolk, February 12, when the pastor, Rev. Olin B. Pendleton, his Chicago Theological Seminary classmate, was in Boston for tests at the Lahey Clinic.

The women of First, Norfolk, met Tuesday morning, February 28, to summarize study on Luke given by Dr. Sheldon Mackey at the Norfolk Preaching Mission the preceding week.

The mid-year session of the Western N. C. Conference will be held Wednesday, March 15, at the Asheboro church beginning at 10:00 a.m. Each local church should be represented for this educational session.

Dr. Arthur Flemming, former secretary of health, education and welfare for the U. S., will be the speaker at annual Founders' Day exercises Thursday at Elon College. This is also Dr. Danieley's third anniversary as president.

Installation service for Rev. W. W. Hall at Asheboro will be held Sunday evening, March 12, with Supt. Clyde Fields, preaching.

Rev. Robert Knowles visited our new Garner Community Church February 26, observing several classes during the church school hour, bringing the morning message, and meeting with church school workers in the afternoon. Judy and Jerry Stone, members of Hayes Chapel, rendered special music for the worship service. The choir used their new robes for the first time.

Man Of The Year

Richmond Honors Cofers

By Dr. Wm. H. Gatten

Mr. and Mrs. Dennis F. Cofer, long time members and active workers in the First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond, Virginia, were honored at a tea in the Fellowship Center of the church Sunday, February 19, 4 to 6 p.m. The Cofers are retiring and moving to their farm near Surry. Mr. Cofer has been with Miller & Rhoads Department Store for twenty years and Mrs. Cofer has been with the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company for the same period of time, having risen from a telephone operator to the Director of Personnel.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cofer have made significant contributions to the work of their Church, having served in many offices and on various boards. At the time of their retirement Mrs. Cofer was serving as president of the Woman's Fellowship, teacher of the Junior High Sunday school class and a member of the Official Board. Mr. Cofer served as chairman of the Official Board last year and is a member of it this year, chairman of the Board of Deacons, the chairman of the Board of Ushers. Both of these friends have unlimited capabilities and have given their time, talent and treasure to their church and their Christ.

They were also honored February 14 at the supper meeting of the T-R-M Club of the church and were honored by the Pilgrim Fellowship Sunday evening February 26. Blanche and Dennis will be missed very much.

PLYMOUTH LAYMEN ENTERTAIN

By Susan Ferrell and Sandra Ogburn

Ladies, relax! The men can cook. Never let a man tell you he has no reason to be in the kitchen, because he can take over.

The laymen of Plymouth Church have proved this by cooking and serving supper to the church members at the McCullers Ruritan Building, Saturday evening, February 18.

Everyone really enjoyed this delicious meal, along with the good fellowship. A series of films was shown after the meal.

You can imagine how odd the ladies felt, relaxing while the men washed all the dishes.

We really did enjoy this social event of fellowship and good food, but most of all we were pleased to know how well the man can cook. Our congratulations to all of them!

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

+ + +

"Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven."

Luke 6:37

At first I meant to call this little Lenten meditation: Forgiveness. When I looked at it again I said: Forgive, is the command; the remainder of the text is thrown in for good measure. In Lent we should have a heart house-cleaning! We should throw out the ugly, unneeded, self-kept, damaging debris.

What we need, what we would like to have, is forgiveness. Forgiveness is a two-way street. Jesus has done his part to make it possible, so kind and good is he! The price of forgiveness comes high; remember Calvary.

There is a certain renouncing of self in forgiving. He did me wrong. Yes, to be sure, but your holding of hate in your heart — some of us do not call it hate, we call it "hurt." There is an over-worked word, believe me. What we say is: He hurt me so much, which being interpreted means, He made me so angry. But as I was saying, he did me wrong; but the holding of hate in your heart will do you far more wrong than ever he could do to you.

There is a denying of self in forgiving another. The laying aside of anger, resentment, suspicion; and the throwing out of pride. Whoever would walk in the ways of Jesus let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow him.

"Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven". The results are sublime. The air is clear, and fresh, and sweet! Then the cleansed heart will not be empty, but full of kindness and love, and good works. Life is short at best, but it grows shorter all the time, if we hold any of the unforgiving spirit in our hearts. "Ye shall love one another," says Jesus, "as I have loved you."

DONALD R. TAYLOR

Donald R. Taylor, active layman in our Newport News church, was honored by the Hampton Roads Junior Chamber of Commerce as the "Young Man of the Year" for 1960.

Mr. Taylor, who has taught history for nine years at Hampton high school where he graduated, was coordinator for the 350th anniversary celebration of the city of Hampton, setting up displays, assisting in pageant plans, writing a history of the city, and working out the calendar of events for the celebration.

At present Mr. Taylor is serving as president of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention. He has been superintendent of the church school at First Congregational Christian, Newport News, attending the National Conference on Christian Education at Purdue during that time. He has also served as a deacon and has supplied the pulpit at Newport News and at Warwick on numerous occasions.

Congratulations to this civic-minded 30-year-old layman!

Rev. G. Harold Myers, pastor of Edgewood United Church, Burlington, will be the guest speaker for the laymen's fellowship supper meeting at First, Burlington, March 10.

What Is Christian Social Action?

Since 1934 Congregational Christian Churches have had an organization that constantly reminds members that to be Christian means more than just to profess some belief — it means putting that faith into action. Evangelical and Reformed Church people have had such a reminder by an organization of their own. Now the two groups are united in a Council for Christian Social Action, which is an organic part of the United Church of Christ.

In Christian Community (a publication of this organization) for February there is a two-page spread that tells what Christian Social Action undertakes.

In the World of Nations it supports the United Nations; seeks the advancement of human rights; advocates the control and reduction of all armaments (nuclear, chemical, bacteriological, conventional); seeks greater use of our resources for international economic development; promotes reciprocal trade policies; works for negotiations to relieve international tensions; and shares in the extension of the world-wide Christian community.

In Race Relations Christian Social Action undertakes the protection of the political rights of all citizens; the completion of desegregation in education and public services; elimination of discrimination in housing; and the development of a Church that welcomes members from every social and cultural group.

In American Culture Christian Social Action envisages and works for acceptance of Christian responsibility in labor, management and other vocations; conservation and development of natural resources for the benefit of all; agricultural policies that protect both farmers and public; the extension of health programs and other public services; increased educational opportunities for all; the protection of migrant workers and their families; and social services for the aging, mentally ill and others with special needs.

In Political Life Christian Social Action means the support of effective, representative, responsible government; participation of Christians as voters, party workers, candidates and holders of public office; critical evaluation of policies, candidates and parties; and both study and action on Christian responsibility for freedom.

The concluding paragraph has this dedication:

"To these tasks we dedicate ourselves in the name of God who calls us to seek justice for all His children and to love our neighbor not only in word but in deed. In Him is our confidence and our trust."

The General Synod of the United Church of Christ, meeting July 8, 1959, adopted the following in its "Call to Christian Action in Society:"

My Happiest Experience

By Roy C. Helfenstein
Ormond Beach, Florida

If I had a dozen lives to live, I should want to live them all in the ministry of Jesus Christ.

Though one's ministry is all an experience, we might better think of it as a series of experiences. Naturally every minister has had some one experience which stands out like a mountain peak above all others. The happiest experience of my ministry of fifty years was the privilege of winning a certain prominent business man to Christ and Christ's program of life. It has been my privilege to win more than a thousand men and women and youths to Christ and the church as a result of personal interviews, but because of the prominence this particular man held in the business world and in the social and political life of his city; the fact that for forty years he had not attended church, being absolutely indifferent to religion all those years, and the enthusiastic interest he expressed in the cause of religion after his conversion made the experience of leading him into the Christian way of life one of unique joy.

Commenting upon his experience, he said, "I can't explain it to this day, but somehow as I was going down the aisle with a group of others, some who were going to the altar, and some who were leaving the church, I was jostled past the altar to the door, and found myself outside the church with a crowd of young fellows who were making light of the whole affair. I didn't go back into the church. The crowd of us later started home. I felt miserable. I presume I was under conviction, but I was unwilling to acknowledge to the fellows that I was considering in any way the question of becoming a Christian. So I began to sing one of the hymns in jest, making fun of the way they sang it in the church. One of the fellows said, "What's the matter _____?" — but I was only making fun. It was blasphemy."

"The Gospel is the Good News of what God has done and is doing in the world. In Jesus Christ God entered the area of human history, grappled with the principalities and powers of evil, won a victory over those powers, and made manifest his love and gracious purpose toward all men. . . The Church responds to God's saving act by seeking His will in all human relationships."

If there ever was a time when Christians needed to make their influence effective in the world, that time is now. Righting the wrongs done to people is good evangelism when done in the spirit of Christ.

"I was always whistling and singing. But when I gave that answer, I did not sing anymore on the way home. And more than that, I never sang a song nor whistled a tune from that night until yesterday after your visit. And it was so strange that after we prayed yesterday, the old songs my mother used to sing kept ringing in my ears, and I have been singing those songs almost continually since. And to think that for forty years I haven't even felt like singing."

For forty years he had crowded music out of his life, because of rejecting Jesus Christ.

To be able to bring music back into his life, to be able to enlist a personality of such power on the side of Christ, to hear his enthusiastic appreciation of the service I had rendered him — all this in the light of the background of the whole experience, made it the happiest experience of my ministry thus far. And the happiest experience in every minister's life is the experience of enlisting forceful personalities for Christ and the Kingdom.

When certain nations cease their self-serving quarrels and desist from making threats of war and begin to develop sane policies — as they must if civilization is to endure — effort should be made to widen the use of science by a better understanding of its purpose.

The submarine, the airplane, the bomber, long-range guns, rockets, missiles, and all the other inventions that have helped to make war possible and inflict injury or death upon military personnel and civilian populations are major accomplishments of science. But science was never intended to be a destroyer, except as an avenue to conservation.

But the great need is to change the pattern of science from the field of destruction to one where the results are constructive. Such a change has been in the making in the United States for several years, the strongest evidence being this country's proposal and demonstration to use nuclear power for peaceful purposes only.

Of the smaller, less glamorous, yet far-reaching results of scientific accomplishments in the United States, its machines and machine-made goods and gadgets are available in almost every land. Even in most of the remote corners of the earth there is scarcely a person whose life has not been touched in some way by something labeled "Made in the U. S. A."

Many scientists are of the opinion that one of the first things to be undertaken to change the attitude of world society toward the primary purpose of science is to change the pattern of thinking. As an illustration, they pose this question: Shall chosen and prospective leaders be the ones who make the most passionate appeal to emotions, or those who are able to demonstrate truth from fact and logic? And they point out that wars are often waged on the ability of a reckless leader to influence his people by making appeals that have no logic. Since pure science is truth, other forms of thinking would be changed to reason and truth-patterns to offset propaganda which is so widely and effectively used by the advocates of communism.

Then there would be a change of attitude toward conservation of natural resources, and everything would be scientifically and economically used. Instead of scattering oil, gas, coal, metals, and other minerals where they cannot be recovered, the more abundant economic life would be achieved by the proper use of these things, not by their waste.

In whatever ways and on whatever subjects there may be differences of opinion, there is convincing evidence of great and urgent need for a complete revamping of national and international policies and the introduction of more constructive ones.

If science can swing the thinking of national leaders in such a direction, a brighter day will come to a war-threatened world where the shadow of death often obscures the hope of a peaceful and happy life.

C. B. Riddle

I wish there were some wonderful place,
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches,
And all of our selfish grief,
Could be dropped like a shabby old coat at the door
And never put on again.

It couldn't be possible not to be kind
In the Land of Beginning Again,
And the ones we misjudged, and the ones we begrudged,
Their moments of victory here,
Would find in the grasp of our loving clasp
More than penitent lips could explain.

For what had been hardest, we'd know had been best,
And what had seemed loss would be gain,
And there isn't a sting that would not take wing
In a Land of Beginning Again.

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

You need to know, as a member of our denomination, what national boards we have, how they are organized, what they do, what they list as their specific needs, and today's challenge for increased giving outside our local churches. This information — and more — I was interested to find in the 32 pages of easy reading in the booklet entitled, "The Stewardship of Our National Boards." A copy has gone to every minister, and you may secure one free of charge by writing to Missions Council, 287 Park Avenue South, New York 10, New York.

One very "mean" thought (and not one I was supposed to get from reading this good church material!) came to me as I reflected on the information therein: Do you suppose one reason some people are opposed to the merger is because they think they will have to give more? Are some of the strongest defenders of "the Congregational Way" afraid of the better record of benevolent giving of the Evangelical and Reformed Church?

In a recent issue of "The Congregationalist" (anti-merger publication) reference was made to The United Church of Canada as an argument against merger, indicating that one was ineffective. Well, "The Stewardship of Our National Boards" says, "Practically all the Lutheran groups, United Presbyterians USA, Presbyterian Church US, Protestant Episcopal Church, Reformed Church, United Brethren, Southern Baptists and the United Church of Canada now give more per capita than would be required of us to meet the $11,500,000 goal suggested by the end of 1962 — which means an increase of nearly 60% in our benevolent giving!"

A chart showing comparisons of per capita giving for benevolences from 1948-58 lists Presbyterians, Evangelical and Reformed and American Baptists all far above Congregational Christians.

Perhaps "the Congregational Way" is not something to be so proud of! Perhaps those who oppose merger want to spend more and more to maintain themselves and less and less in gifts for others... unfair judgment? Maybe so, but that was the "interesting" thought which came to me as I finished reading "Stewardship of Our National Boards."

Christ As The World's Light

by Paul S. Minear

We have all read in the Bible numerous stories of God's visits to his people. We recall how often He comes to them at the most surprising times and places. Always He comes with a message which is unexpected. His presence startles and even alarms them. His quiet questions, although detected only by the inner ear, become loud enough to drown their noisy chatter, loud enough even to displace those questions for which they have been petulantly demanding answers from Him. Whenever He speaks, they must give a reply to His inquiry.

The situation is no different with us in 1961 as we begin studying Christ as the world's light, the theme for the Third Assembly of the World Council of Churches. The inner ear must be alert to hear His startling queries. Our glib words may sound as if we already knew what His light means for ourselves and our world. But should He speak, He may say what He said in the days of Amos: "Woe to you who desire the day of the Lord!... It is darkness and not light, as if a man fled from a lion and a bear met him... Is not the day of the Lord darkness, and not light, and gloom with no brightness in it" (Amos 5:18-20)...

If we assume that we are able to hail the dawning of this strange Day, and that our world will welcome it if only we describe it aright, that Day may dawn again as in the days of Jesus. How did it dawn then? In the midst of the most terrifying night: "And when the sixth hour had come, there was darkness over the whole earth until the ninth hour" (Mark 15:33). God's Day dawned when the Savior of all was crucified by all...

It is easy for us to talk as those who have been commissioned to witness to His light, as those who serve as "a light to those who are in darkness". To us as witnesses, God may speak as he spoke in the days of Paul: "You then who teach others, will you not first of all teach yourselves?" (Rom. 2:17-21)... How is it that we can teach ourselves first of all? If we are like the men in the days of Paul, the veil must first be lifted from our faces, and in our hearts must shine the light of God's glory in the face of Christ (II Cor. 3, 4).

God's Questions

As we begin, then, the discussions of our theme, we can be sure of one thing. If God chooses to visit us in the midst of our discussions, He will raise questions of us all which are far more difficult to answer than those which we ask. His questions will immediately place us all under His fearful judgment and thereby include us all within His majestic mercy (Rom. 11:32). There will of course be differences among us, differences between one man's faith and another's anxiety, between one man's training and another's ignorance. But all these distances among us will be dwarfed by the common distance between our darkness and His light.

Recognizing as we must the mysterious distance between our questions and His, we must nevertheless study our theme with whatever measure of grace He has given to us (Rom. 12:6). And perhaps the best place to begin is with the statement of the theme itself. What basic assertions are fused together in the formula: "Christ, the Light of the World?" There are three such assertions:

The theme makes an assertion about the world. This world now

JESUS CHRIST, THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

The General Council has sent to each minister a copy of the Bible study booklet by Dr. Paul Minear entitled, "Jesus Christ, the Light of the World." Every congregation is asked to use this for serious study between now and the World Council of Churches meeting in New Delhi, India.

It has been suggested by our Missions Council that our churches study this during Lent, and some of them are doing so. However, it is urgently hoped that the book will be kept for later use, if it is not used during Lent. Additional copies may be ordered for 50¢ from The Missions Council, 287 Park Avenue, South, New York 10, New York.

moves within the orbit of Christ's light, it stands under the power of His life. Through Him something has happened to the world which has changed its structure and destiny. Looking at all things in His light we discern everything becoming new (II Cor. 5:14-17). Only through understanding what he does can we comprehend what the world is.

The theme makes an assertion about Jesus Christ. He is nothing less than the light which gives life to men, nothing less than the Lord of the world who has transformed the world through overcoming its darkness. Apart from recognizing his powerful work in making all things new, we do not truly comprehend who He is.

The theme makes an assertion about light. Light is a word which describes the new life-giving link between Christ and the world. If we would understand what this light is (and its opposing darkness) we must first comprehend the power and authority by which Jesus Christ lives and rules. All other notions of light and darkness are deceptive or false. We may begin to think rightly about this light when we reflect the darkness of Good Friday and the bewildering message of the Easter angels.

Our Questions

Thus the theme welds these three nouns together and makes them interdependent. None of the three can be separated from the other two. Not one of them can be understood aright apart from its connections with the others. This, at least, is the intent of the theme, and the intent of that text to which the theme points (John 8:12). But we must now ask ourselves: do we really understand this triple assertion? If we are absolutely honest — and such honesty is the initial requirement for all study — must we not confess that each assertion triggers an underground explosion in our minds and hearts. Fragments of ideas fly in all directions. Habitual ways of dealing with things are dissolved. The maps by which we have plotted our worlds are destroyed. Broken questions are strewn like rubble on the streets of our lives. When we piece these questions together, they seem to correspond roughly to the three assertions:

Do I see my world of 1961, my smaller world of Calcutta or Capetown, or my larger world of the United Nations and the power-blocs, as a realm ruled by Christ's light? How has he transformed this world where I live? If I can give no answer, none at all, then the assertion would appear to be either meaningless or false, at least to me.

Do I actually recognize in the living Christ the only one who serves as the light for this world? How has He overcome its darkness? How has He transformed everything into a new creation? How is He present in this world as the power of God for its salvation? Again the sense of the assertion would appear to be nonsense, at least for me and my world, unless some answer can be given.

Do I define the presence of light and darkness in my home and my town by reference to the living link between Jesus Christ and the world? Do I measure the day in terms of His presence and His purpose? Do I measure the night by reference to the resistance offered to His mercy and His judgments? Do the hopes and despairs in my heart depend upon the progress of His work or upon the prospect for my own plans? Answers to such questions are involved in any assertion that Christ is the Light. And these answers are valid to the degree that they are localized where we live and work.

Our Predicament

The theme thus places us in a strange predicament both as Christians and as churches. On one hand, we want to make the assertions because we do believe them — broken beliefs and stubborn doubts notwithstanding. Our living Lord, Jesus Christ is Himself the world's light, though the darkness in our hearts be ever so deep. Yet, on the other hand, our confession of faith (a much better word than assertion) uncovers that very darkness. It raises questions which we cannot answer. They place a painful accent upon our ignorance, our doubts, our helplessness, our resistance.

Having placed us in this predicament, however, the theme invites us to do three things which may prove extraordinarily helpful. It invites us to meet regularly with a community of those who are bound by the same confession, there to share our ignorances and our insights with one another. It invites this community of comrades to look again at the world where we have been placed as Christ's servants and witnesses — at the world in our village or town or factory or school — and to study the ways in which Christ seeks to serve this world through us, as well as the ways in which the illness of this world is submitted in us to Christ for healing.

Finally, the theme invites us to listen together to the pluriform message of the Bible, that book where believers first made the confession and where the dilemmas of believing were as difficult as in any later period. When in the churches we open the Bible in a common desire to understand how our world has been enlightened by Christ, we will find that our world is still the same world, that Christ is the same Lord, and that the boundary between darkness and light follows the same frontiers. We will even find that our own city is still a part of Corinth and Ephesus, Babylon and Jerusalem.

Looking To New Delhi

"So there is to be another big meeting of the World Council of Churches in New Delhi in November, 1961. That will be the third in 14 years, won't it? Wasn't there one in Amsterdam, and one in the United States at Evanston?... I suppose the meetings do some good, but I can't see that they help us very much in our job here with this struggling congregation."

We have all heard the voice before, says the anonymous author of the pre-assembly study booklet. "Who will be at the Third Assembly of the WCC in Delhi? The trusted leaders of the churches, archbishops, bishops, moderators, denominational secretaries and superintendents — theologians and scholars who are expert in various fields of study and research — and members of the WCC staff. But many will be pastors, laymen and women," the booklet answers. All of them, including the church leaders, will be there by vote and resolution of the appropriate authorities of the legislative assemblies of their churches.

"There is a very real sense in which each local congregation may truly say not 'they will be there', implying people from Geneva, or even

And we will find that the same call comes from the same Lord to follow Him. It is to those who follow that He promises "the light of life". Perhaps in our very studies into the meanings of the confession, this Light may surprise us with His presence.

WORLD COUNCIL RELIEF WORK

The World Council of Churches is asking its 178 member churches to give a million dollars for relief work in the Congo. The National Council of Churches in America is asking for $500,000 as its share in this undertaking. Reports indicate that 80% of church property in areas where there has been fighting has been destroyed. Since it is forbidden to live in the bush, new villages are arising along main roads. New churches, schools and hospitals are needed. Native ministers receive $28.00 per month, and many receive that amount only every other month.

from their denominational headquarters, but 'we shall be there.'

This is true of the Third Assembly to be held in New Delhi in a more specific local way than in the case of the two previous assemblies. For throughout the world millions of Christians will be engaged in the study of the Assembly theme "Jesus Christ, the Light of the World" Early in 1961, ministers are receiving the study book from their churches and already small groups of Christians are gathering together to find out for themselves the significance of this theme. (A copy of the study book with its discussion of the theme and eight related Bible Studies may be had from the New York office of the World Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, N. Y., single copies are 50c each.)

The World Council of Churches has invited Dr. Paul S. Minear, an American theologian who teaches at Yale Divinity School to discuss and explain the choice of the theme and tell of the effects it may have for those who take it seriously. As chairman of the commission on the main theme, Dr. Minear writes from his experience as a scholar working with other scholars to understand how Christ's light is perceived by men in 1961.

Letter Pictures Work In Angola

Dear Friends:

Africa is awakening and many of its people are demanding the right to rule themselves. Some of them, who have received proper training, are succeeding very well in handling their own affairs, but others are only involving their country in tribal warfare and anarchy. Christian statesmanship is more needed today than ever before.

In August we had a unique experience. With air travel making it possible to visit far away places in a short time, many people are including Africa in their plans. About a year ago, some doctors in one of the churches in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, conceived the idea of making up a party to visit our Mission and to give of their talents while here. The United Church of Canada, and the American Board share jointly the work in our Mission in Angola. They began having weekly meetings reading up on Africa and Angola, so as to be well informed when they arrived. They planned to make short stops in Daka, Ghana and the Rhodesias, but to spend about two weeks in Angola. By the time the year was up there were 19 in the party, most of whom were eminent doctors, and their wives, many of them specialists in various lines. The minister of the church and his wife, the wife of one of the national church leaders, a school teacher and a Negro lawyer and his wife made up the party. When they arrived in Nova Lisboa, they were divided into three groups, each with a different itinerary, which took each of them to several of our Mission Stations and to the Central Institutions in Dondi. We were fortunate in having two of the groups visit us for about two days each. We not only showed them the work on the Mission Station but took them to some of the pastoral centers that were not too far away. We enjoyed it and I think that they did too. Then they and most of the medical staff on the field were to go to Chissambe where there is a fine Mission Hospital, for intensive medical work. Hundreds came from far and near for consultations, and many operations were performed, each specialist taking charge of the cases for which he was especially trained. About a week before the guests arrived I had broken off a front tooth that held my plate. There was a dentist in the party but he was not among those who came to Elende. As Mary McDougall and Mrs. MacInnes, who was a dental nurse before her marriage, were going, and as we had several patients to take, I decided to go with them and so we took my car, as it would take the group as well as our camp beds and other luggage. There I had the privilege of meeting the rest of the party, and was able to help out in taking some of them to Chillesso. Mr. Alexander, the lawyer, had a wonderful bass voice, and he thrilled us all with his singing. He kept the Africans spellbound and even sang some songs in Umbundu, much to their surprise and joy. It was a thrilling experience for all of us and we hope that it will be repeated.

Almost as soon as they left, we had to begin getting things ready for

THE ANGOLA MISSION

Dondi

Mission station where united work of American Board and United Church of Canada centers here with church, schools, hospital, printing press.

March

12—Miss Margaret Neumann went to Africa in 1953 after 24 years as a school teacher in California to teach missionaries' children. First appointed for 3 years, she is now on permanent appointment. She teaches grades one to eight.

13—Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Oguma both went to Berea College (he had already attended the University of Hawaii). They went to Africa in 1949 where he is treasurer of the Church Council, which handles funds for three boards and also supervises buildings for the station.

Elende

Mission station about the size of the state of Connecticut; 12 miles from railroad; has schools, hospital, dispensary, church.

14—Miss Mary Hurlbut, who went to Africa in 1923, supervises rural district education and religious work for the entire station; this includes a central school for 400 boys and girls, and 350 outstation schools. Since the McDowells left she has also taken charge of medical work, kindergarten and domestic science school. A side interest is music! (See letter on this page.)

15—Rev. and Mrs. Henry McDowell are living in Miami Beach, Florida, where he is pastor of a new church. Dr. McDowell went to Africa in 1919, explored area, picked Galangue (Benjei) for station site and helped erect buildings and establish church. His wife became ill and they returned to N. C., where he was principal of Lincoln Academy, Kings Mountain. In 1947 he returned to Africa with his second wife. On furlough 1952-53 he occupied the Africa Chair at Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford Seminary. He helped mission to come to self-support through his counsel and guidance.

Lobito

One of the best equipped seaports in West Africa with a population of 30,000.

16—Rev. and Mrs. Lawrence Henderson worked in migrant camps in U. S. before going to Africa in 1947. Besides a full load of general missionary work they run a hostel for all missionaries who come and go through this busy port city — about 200 a year. They have developed a church for Portuguese Protestants, which is interracial.

17—Rev. and Mrs. William P. Tolley are of special interest to us, for he was a product of our church in Lynchburg, and worked in the Southern Convention summer camping program while a student at Elon and Hartford. They have completed language study in Portugal and Africa, and are now located in Lobito where they work with both Portuguese and African churches.

Nova Lisboa

Motor roads and air routes converge in this busy city of 50,000 about 260 miles from Lobito by railroad.

18—Rev. and Mrs. Gladwyn Childs have been in Africa for nearly 40 years, most of which was spent at Dondi where he was principal of Currie Institute and she was nurse. Now he is official mission representative to the government of Angola, and does church work with Europeans and Africans. He has M.A. and Ph.D. from Columbia and B.D. from Union Seminary.

Youth Faces The Future

YOUTH EVANGELISM

By Becky Harward, Faith Chairman

When a person has committed himself to God, his responsibility as a Christian is just beginning. The word evangelism means "sharing the good news." The Faith Commission chose "Youth Evangelism" as an emphasis for 1960-62 because "we need to share what we have come to believe and to know; our commitment demands expression. One kind of response is evangelism. Through evangelism Christian youth respond to the call of God by witnessing daily in personal contacts and group effort." (Program Hints 1960-62.)

There are two phases of evangelism — exploration and encounter. Exploration requires much study. To explore the what, why, and how of evangelism, the local P. F. group could study the biblical basis of evangelism (John 3: 16-21; Matthew 28: 16-20; Romans 12). Also it could study the ways of approaching evangelism by examining the booklet A Strategy of Evangelism by Robert Spike, and other material available from the Commission on Evangelism, 2969 W. 25th Street, Cleveland 13, Ohio. The filmstrip "Members of One Another" (Christian Education Press) would be excellent to use at a P. F. meeting.

The real work of evangelism comes through encounter, which means to meet with or to face. "God has invited me to walk in His world; I should invite others to walk in my world and expect to be invited into theirs — just to walk around, to visit." (From the filmstrip, Members One of Another.) Members of the local group should invite young people who do not attend youth meetings to come to P. F. As a project, the group could tape record Sunday morning services and take them to community shut-ins so that

FEBRUARY ACTIVITIES AT HOLLAND

By John Dollar, Reporter

On Sunday, February 5, the youth of the Holland church had charge of the morning worship service. Those taking part in the service were Loren Waldo, Mary Dixon Rawles, Jean Powell, and Lawrie Miller. Lawrie gave the sermon. A youth choir furnished the music under the direction of Mrs. John Henry Powell, and young men acted as ushers. Everyone expressed satisfaction with the service.

Mrs. Loren Waldo, Jr. and Mrs. Carl Dollar are our adult advisors.

On February 12 we were visited by a P. F. caravan consisting of Hubie Young, vice president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, Pat Hayes, Alex Oliver, and Dorothy Wilkins, respectively president, corresponding secretary, and pianist of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship. Our own Lorden Waldo III is the vice president of the Eastern Virginia P. F. These young people presented the program for the evening. Hubie Young spoke on the importance of young people having a right philosophy of life. Pat Hayes read a thought-provoking poem, Alex Oliver led the group in singing, and Dorothy Wilkins played the piano. They were accompanied by Mrs. E. C. Wilkins, director of religious education in the Suffolk church and one of the advisors to the Eastern Virginia P. F.

Cookies and cokes were served at the close of the meeting, and the evening's activities ended with a friendship circle. We were happy to have these young people visit us.

Twelve young people, ages 12-15, are enrolled in the pastor's class being taught by Rev. Dwight Moore at Center, Halifax, each Saturday morning during Lent.

BAYSIDE P.F. ANNUAL REPORT

By Barbara Messick, Reporter

Our Pilgrim Fellowship actively participated in "Youth Week" in January of 1960. We led the service and also enjoyed recreation during the week.

In the spring we were honored that three members of our church were nominated and approved for offices in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Pay Hayes, Barbara Smith, and Reverend Mr. Rice are president, member-at-large, and advisor, respectively.

We bought our second ping-pong table this spring, after making the money through our "Easter Breakfast" project. Since then we have acquired many games for P. F. use.

During the summer we sold 100 boxes of toothbrushes in order to pay our yearly apportionment.

On the basis of their work, interest, ability and willingness three of our members were chosen this summer by the Women's Fellowship and $10.00 was paid toward their fee for a week at Camp Moonelon.

In August we invited the Lynnhaven Christian Church to a Candlelight Vesper Service and tried to assist in their organization of a P. F. group by answering pertinent questions.

We washed cars at the "Flying-A" Service Station on Shore Drive on October 15 as our "Workday for Christ" project.

With the combined efforts of the Junior and Senior High groups $60.10 was collected for UNICEF on Halloween night. A party was held afterwards in the social hall.

We attended the showing of a film on Protestant missionaries in Africa at McKendree Methodist Church and returned to our church for refreshments and recreation.

In November we held a covered-dish supper for the parents and youth with Mr. Bill Ginn, Admissions Counselor at Elon College, as our guest. He showed slides of the college, told us about it, and answered our many questions.

We also invited the Pilgrim Fellowship of the First Church to our church during November. After our meeting we viewed the film strips, "Boy Dates Girl" and "Boy Marries Girl."

In December we held a Christmas social at which we exchanged gifts. We also bought gifts for all of the children at the Welfare Home in Princess Anne County and fifteen of us delivered them the day after Christmas.

We have one social a month, either at the church, or an outside activity such as skating, bowling, etc. We send articles to The Christian Sun as often as possible and always have representatives at all summer camps, conferences, and rallies. One of our commission chairmen (faith, fellowship and action) has a program once a month.

As you can see, we are a very active group and with God's help we hope to do better things in the future.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP AT LEBANON

By Mrs. Carlton Scott

The Youth Fellowship of Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C., had their regular meeting February 5 at the church. Our pastor, Rev. Lafayette T. Wilkins, met with them and presented a movie entitled "A Job for Bob." Following the movie, Mr. Wilkins made an inspiring talk to the young people about their future, closing with prayer. Miss Martha Brittle, a student at Elon College, led the recreation, which everyone enjoyed.

YOUNG PEOPLE BEAUTIFY PARSONAGE

By Mrs. John A. Redding

The Youth Fellowship of Turner's Chapel (Sanford, N. C.) has completed another worthwhile project. They recently bought drapery material and made beautiful draperies for the living room and dining room of the parsonage.

The group, along with their advisers, Mr. and Mrs. Jake Gunter and Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Wicker, hope that their new pastor, Rev. James Porter, and Mrs. Porter and their daughters will like these new draperies. The same group bought venetian blinds for the parsonage when they were under the leadership of Mrs. C. C. Spivey and Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Wicker.

Vocational Guidance is being considered by Senior High P. F. at First, Burlington. March 5 — Business, John Williams and Education, Miss Carrie Taylor; March 12 — Law, Eugene Gordon and Social Work, Mrs. Allen Iseley; March 19, Medicine, Dr. Harold Kernodle and Christian Vocations, Mrs. W. F. Randolph.

Plans To Enter Ministry

Jerry Moore

A stirring conclusion was given to Youth Week at the close of the morning worship service in Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church in Altamahaw, N. C., Sunday, February 5, as one of the participants made known to the congregation his decision to enter into full-time Christian service.

Presenting himself to the congregation as one of our future ministers was Jerry Wayne Moore, 16, son of Mrs. Alma Moore of Route 1, Elon College. Jerry plans to begin his study for the ministry at Elon College upon his graduation from Altamahaw-Ossippee High School in 1962.

Moore is very active in both his church and school work. In his church, he is a member of the Pilgrim Fellowship, sings in the church choir, and is a regular attendant at the other services of the church. In school, Jerry is a member of the varsity basketball team, associate editor of the school year book, treasurer of the National Honor Society, and president of his junior class. He is also the recipient of the Citizenship Award for 1959-60. The award is based on scholarship and character.

A Junior Pilgrim Fellowship for those aged 9-11 was organized in our Albemarle church February 19 with Mrs. Lilly White and Mrs. Doris Deese as leaders.

Elon's Self-Study Program Ends

By Luther N. Byrd

The visiting committee of the Commission of Colleges and Universities, representing the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, was on the campus of Elon College the week of February 27 to consult with the Elon College administrative officials and faculty in the final stage of an Elon self-study program that was begun in the winter of 1958.

The visiting group, composed of faculty representatives from four other member colleges of the Southern Association, included Dr. G. E. Metz, assistant to the president of Clemson College, Clemson, S. C.; Dr. Cornwell Anderson, president of Judson College, Marion, Ala.; Dr. Ralph Lyon, dean of Livingston State College, Livingston, Ala.; and Dr. Wright Spears, president of Columbia College, Columbia, S. C.

The visiting educators arrived at Elon on Sunday night, February 26, and spent several days in reviewing with the Elon administrators and faculty the results of the Elon College self-study, which was begun two years ago with the idea of planning the Elon program for advancement in higher education during the coming years.

Dr. J. E. Danieley, president of Elon College, set the stage for the visit by the Southern Association committee when he spoke to the faculty and students of the college in a chapel convocation, at which time he paid tribute to the members of the Elon faculty for their cooperation in the two-year self-study program.

Dr. Danieley, while stating that the continued accreditation of Elon by the Southern Association depended upon the results of self-study, stressed the fact that the lengthy study had brought a new evaluation of Elon's present position in the educational world and had furnished a springboard from which Elon can plan and project its program for the years ahead.

Citing the fact that the self-study idea is new in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Dr. Danieley pointed out that Elon is one of the first colleges to complete such a project, and he paid tribute to administrative officials, faculty members, alumni, students and friends of the college who have cooperated in the study project.

He further expressed the opinion that the self-study project, which reached its climax last week, will be valuable in determining Elon's financial resources and needs, determining just what changes and additions are most needed in the physical plant of the college and additions to the administrative and faculty personnel which will most enhance the Elon program of the future.

In connection with the Elon self-study, President Danieley admitted certain frustrations which he had felt during his three years as president in regard to Elon's physical plant, student body and faculty, but he also declared his satisfactions with the cooperative spirit of students, faculty and administration, with the students who have done outstanding academic work, and with the progress made in improvement of the Elon physical plant. He also expressed his high hopes for the future of the college.

The office of "vice president" seems to attract Elon faculty members: President J. E. Danieley is a vice president of the N. C. Council of Church-Related Colleges; Dean H. H. Cunningham is vice president of the Association of Academic Deans of N. C.; and Registrar Alfred Hassell is vice president of the N. C. Association of Collegiate Registrars! These honors came during meetings of the respective associations last November, according to the February issue of the Elon Alumni News.

Elon Music Students Win Honors

Dick Apperson

Richard Apperson, Elon College sophomore from Newport News, Va., won first place in North Carolina's annual statewide contest for organists of college age, which was held in historic St. John's Lutheran Church in Salisbury under the auspices of the department of music of Catawba College.

For winning the contest, which is part of the program of the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs, Apperson will receive a cash award and will represent North Carolina colleges late in March at the southeastern contest to be held at the University of Jacksonville at Jacksonville, Fla. There he will compete with winners from South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Apperson won his statewide title in competition with student organists from a number of North Carolina colleges, with the program featuring the works of Bach, Mendelssohn and Messiaen. The young organists performed on the new three-manual organ in the Salisbury church, one of the oldest churches in Piedmont North Carolina.

Three Elon College students have just been awarded scholarships for musical study, according to an announcement from Prof. Fletcher Moore, chairman of Elon's department of music.

Richard Apperson, sophomore from Newport News, Va., and Hinson Mikell, freshman from Charleston, S. C., have been awarded scholarships, which were granted by the Presser Foundation of Philadelphia, Pa., for students preparing to become teachers of music; and Eleanor Smith, of Winston-Salem, another first-year music major, received a tuition grant from the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs, following her selection as "Queen of Music" for North Carolina.

Apperson, who has just won the annual statewide organ contest for North Carolina college students, serves as student accompanist for the Elon College Choir and is also organist for the Davis Street Methodist Church in Burlington. Mikell, in addition to his college work, is organist for the Hocutt Memorial Baptist Church in Burlington.

Miss Smith won her statewide "Queen of Music" Title and the Federation scholarship when she was chosen by votes of high school senior girls in schools of North Carolina.

Jesus Prays For His Own (Temperance)

Background Scripture: John 17.

Devotional Reading: John 17:1-11.

Memory Verse: I do not pray that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil one. John 17:15.

The Gospel writers give many instances of Jesus at prayer, but they tell us but little about what Jesus said or did in prayer. To be sure there are exceptions to this statement — for example Christ's prayer in Gethsemane. That he prayed, when he prayed, sometimes his posture while at prayer, where he prayed — these things are recounted. But little of what he said in prayer.

But John gives us here a full account of Jesus at prayer, a full detail of what he said in his "intercessory prayer." It was all so vivid and vital that John remembered it and embodied it in the story of the life of his Lord. Here is a priceless picture — our Lord at prayer. We should approach it in the spirit of awe and reverence. We are on holy ground. Let us listen to what Jesus says in this prayer.

His Prayer For Himself

It is not wrong to pray for one's self, although it is wrong to pray only for one's self. Jesus prayed for himself. He prayed that he might glorify the Father, that God would glorify him with the glory that he had with the Father before the world began. "Glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee." "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self in glory with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Jesus prayed that when the supreme test came — when the opportunity to glorify the Father through obedience even to the death on the Cross — that he might face and handle the thing in such a way that he would glorify God. How we need to pray that prayer! How often, in the time of trial and trouble and testing and temptation, in sorrow and suffering, do we fail to glorify God, do we act in a way that does anything but glorify God. Jesus did not ask for an easy way out; he asked for strength to deal with the hard way. He did not pray for easy tasks, but for strength for hard tasks. Jesus did not ask for things; he asked for fortitude and faith. In asking God to glorify him, Jesus was asking God to glorify him in such a way that God himself would be glorified. We should all try to live to the glory of God, no matter where we live or what we do. Herein is my Father glorified, said Jesus on one occasion, that we love one another, that we bear fruit and much fruit. "I am glorified in them."

His Prayer For His Disciples

"I pray for them . . . for them which thou hast given me." Having loved his own, He loved them unto the end, and here he prays earnestly and lovingly for them. He asks several things concerning them.

a. That God would keep them through his own name . . . that none of them might be lost. As the Good Shepherd Jesus did not want to lose even one sheep. It broke his heart that Judas, one of the twelve, was "lost." He had done his best to see that none of them was lost — "while I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name." Let every man realize that Jesus yearns that all men may be saved.

b. He prayed that his joy might be fulfilled in them. . . that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." The idea of such a thing — here was a man actually under the shadow of a cross, and yet talking about his joy, and praying that his followers might have his joy fulfilled in their lives. Plainly enough it was not any joy that came from earthly possessions, or ease of life, or freedom from suffering and shame. It was the joy which he said the world could neither give nor take away.

c. He prayed, not that the Father should take them out of the world, but that he would keep them from the evil. People do almost anything, even commit suicide, to escape from reality and the world of evil. The classic example, of course, is the custom of the monks in withdrawing from the world in order to escape the evil in the world. (They did not realize that wherever they went they took evil with them in their own hearts, even if they did escape some of the temptations of the world.) But even so, the world is not to be saved by people who withdraw from the world, but by people who, although not of the world, are in the world. While it is true that men are to enter the church to worship, they are to leave the church to serve. Suppose that little band of eleven disciples had withdrawn from the world instead of going into the world! Religion is not much good if it stays in a man; it comes alive only as it gets out of a man.

d. He prayed that they might be "sanctified." "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Jesus was not praying that his disciples should be perfect, that they should be so holy that they could not and would not sin. He prayed that they might be "sanctified" in the sense that they "were set apart" — that is what the word means literally — that they were to be set apart as his ambassadors, his witnesses to truth, his messengers. They were to live in the world in such a way as to make the world see the truth. He is saying in so many words, "Don't make it easy for them; make them strong to bear whatever they may have to suffer in spreading the truth." There is a great deal of confusion in this matter of "sanctification." And there is a certain type of "sanctified person" who is not easy to live with, a "holier than thou" guy, a fellow who is so pious that he hurts. Jesus was talking about folks who "were set apart," committed to God's service.

His Prayer For The Church

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." That means he was praying for his church, for you and for me. See the ever-widening circles of his prayers — for himself, for the inner band, for the world wide fellowship of believers. And for what did he pray concerning "those who should believe on him" through their word? HE PRAYED THAT THEY MIGHT BE ONE, even that THEY MAY BE ONE EVEN AS HE AND THE FATHER WERE ONE. Get this straight — he was not praying for uniformity; he was and I am sure that he would be glad to have mail from friends here at home. I imagine it is lonely for a boy to be so far from home, but his letter sounds as if he is keeping busy with his art and making friends. It is good for boys to have this opportunity of travel and meeting new people and making new friends. Our best wishes to Billy.

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Here is our financial report for two weeks. Because last week we listed the contributions to the Children's Home Improvement Program we did not have our regular weekly financial report. This total of $1,020.18 is actually less than it takes to operate our Home for one week, so we are running behind schedule in our income. We hope that it will begin to pick up as we do not want our bills to begin to mount up unpaid. And with Easter just the first of next month our children will be needing shoes and spring clothing. We hope you will remember our Home and the boys and girls here.

Our good neighbor, Miss Lila Newman, recently handed me a letter which she had received from Billy Burgess. You probably will remember that Billy was the young artist who graduated from high school last spring. For about two years he had been studying with Miss Lila, art professor at Elon College. Miss Lila had become interested in Billy's art work and encouraged and trained him to improve his talent. Billy is now with the United States Army in Germany. He writes:

"Dear Miss Lila,

I received the letter from you some time ago. I was glad to hear from you...I hope this letter will find you well. How is your Class this year?...I have started art classes in Germany.

I haven't painted any pictures, but I have drawn several charcoal pictures...You can expect them through the mail some time later on.

Do you do much painting and drawing or do you have much time to do so?

I've got a lot to learn in art and the more I learn the more I find that I don't know. I have started trying to learn the German language. I have made a friend who is interested in art and he knows more than I do, but I am learning.

Are you having much cold weather and snow?

The German people are almost like the Americans... Men and women up to the age of about 65 years old ride bicycles and motorcycles here in large and busy towns. I guess that seems strange, but it doesn't after you stay over here for a while. I am supposed to come back home in October, 1962. Time seems like it is passing fast but I am still anxious to come back home to see you all again.

I guess it is time to close. God bless you.

Billy"

Supt. Clyde Fields accompanied the pastor, Rev. Lafayette T. Wilkins, to Lebanon church, Semora, N. C. for a meeting February 14, during which Mr. Fields explained about the United Church of Christ. The church expects to vote on the constitution at its next business session.

A Workshop on Day Camping, held February 1-3 near Richmond, Virginia, was attended by Rev. Reuben Askew, whose church (Pleasant Hill, near Liberty, North Carolina) is planning a day camp for Juniors next summer — the first, they believe, in the Southern Convention.

Southern Convention Vote On Constitution

EASTERN VIRGINIA C. M. A.

The Christian Missionary Association of Eastern Virginia has entered the church extension campaign with a vigor that should bring fine results in our conference. The Executive Board met on January 29, and under the enthusiastic leadership of our able president, Rev. William Simmons of Great Bridge, it mapped the campaign for the following months. A letter has been sent from the president to each minister in our conference explaining our plans and asking for the name and address of a key worker for Church Extension Sunday, March 5. Addresses of the present members of the C. M. A. in each church were also requested. A second letter from the president was sent, this time to these key persons inviting them to a planning session to be held on February 12, at Bethlehem (Nans).

Although only ten of the churches had representatives there, the group was enthusiastic and offered many suggestions on how best to carry out our campaign. It is the plan of the Convention on March 5, to secure a pledge for renewal of membership by the present C. M. A. members and to secure five additional new memberships in each church. Printed program covers and an insert page explaining the "whys and wherefores" of C. M. A. were distributed.

The fruits of this campaign have not yet been calculated, but it is the hope the renewed interest and participation in church extension will prevail throughout our churches in Eastern Virginia. As it is so aptly phrased on the back of our church extension bulletins, "God builds no churches; He has left this work to man."

praying for unity. What a drab, dull world this would be if everybody thought alike, if there were uniformity in everything! It would indeed be a dead world. And what a dull, drab, dead world it would be if we had uniformity in religion! Jesus was not praying for a world or for a Church in which there was uniformity. He was praying for a Church in which there was "the unity of the Spirit, and the bonds of peace." There has been a great deal of confusion and confounding in this matter. It has been thought that the Early Church was one. Let one read the New Testament and he will find that the Early Church was not a church which was "happily united" in which all the members were in perfect accord. There never was such a church! The primitive Church was a divided church. But Jesus was praying for a vital unity among all Christians. He was saying as someone has put it "We may not see eye to eye, but we can walk arm in arm." We may never have "one big Church" — it is a question whether we want such a Church. But we can have one mind and one heart in Christ.

"Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace" — that is the thing for which our Lord prayed. And he went on to say that it was this kind of unity which would help the world to know "that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." Love, and a spirit of spiritual unity, are the bonds and badges of Christian discipleship.

Education For Mission

By Mrs. John H. Sargent

A Litany — adapted from material in the special May issue — “Education for Mission” of the International Journal of Religious Education.

- Leader: “What I tell you in the dark, utter in the light; and what you hear whispered, proclaim upon the housetops.” Matthew 10:27. Everyone who follows Jesus Christ must proclaim his message.
- All: This proclaiming is done by word, by sign, by gift, by deed of hand. This proclaiming is the mission of the church, and education for mission is education for proclamation.
- First Voice: We must know what we proclaim.
- Second Voice: We must know those to whom we proclaim, and those with whom we proclaim.
- Third Voice: We must know how to proclaim.
- Leader: Education for mission involves us in a search for understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ.
- All: Education for mission leads us to acquaintance with other people, and their needs for the gospel, for food and clothing and shelter, for schooling and healing, for encouragement, for comfort. It demands of us recognition of our responsibilities for other people.
- Leader: It reveals to us ways of meeting our responsibilities to God and to others — ways that we may use as individuals, ways that require us to work together in a church, ways that require agents such as missionaries.
- All: Education for mission responds to our own needs.
- First Voice: For there are other Christians in other places, and they too proclaim the gospel.
- Second Voice: Sometimes we learn from them new and better ways of proclamation.
- Third Voice: Sometimes they and we together proclaim the gospel, and there is benefit for both of us in working together.
- All: The more we work together the more we realize that we belong together.
- Leader: And we, as we come to understand others, develop new understandings of ourselves.
- All: As we discover, with others, what the gospel means to them, we discover new meanings for ourselves. We learn that in proclaiming the gospel to others and with others, we proclaim it to ourselves.

HAD YOU THOUGHT?

How welcome do you make visitors? Have you noticed the streams of people leaving a church? They greet the pastor — stop for a moment to greet old friends — and then stalk out to their cars.

Is that all of yourself you give? Are you genuinely interested, perhaps, in making some newcomer feel at home? Does it occur to you that a friendly greeting, a handshake, a hope to see them next Sunday — perhaps a discreet inquiry to show you are interested in them, may make all the difference? Some people need a bit of extra attention — but once they feel welcome, needed and at home, it is quite wonderful how they unfold and blossom. They often become the backbone of all the work the church requires.

Try this experiment each Sunday. The results may surprise you!

“They Shall Inherit The Earth”

“Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.”

Already our kingdoms are beginning to totter.
Possess the earth?

Why, we have lost it! We never did possess it!
We have lost both the earth and our own souls
In trying to possess it!

For the soul of the earth is man and the love of man,
And of them both we have made a despair and a desolation!

I tell you, my good woman, this dead son of yours,
Disfigured, shamed, spat upon,
Has built a kingdom this day that shall never die.
The living glory of him will forever rule it.
The earth is his and he made it.
He and his brothers have been molding and making it
Through all the long ages.
They are the only ones
Who ever really can possess it.

Not the proud, not the idle, not the wealthy,
Not the vaunted empires of this world... No!
Something has happened here upon his hill today,
Something that will shake all the empires and kingdoms
Of this world into the dust.
The earth is his, the earth is theirs, and they made it!
The meek, the terrible meek,
Are about to come into their inheritance!

Here And There Among The Churches

Reverend and Mrs. O. D. Poythress are vacationing in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, visiting Mr. Poythress' brother, Leary, and his wife.

Young people of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, between the ages of 9-18 are to use the social hall two Friday evenings each month for a supervised program of recreation.

Forty young people are members of the church membership class at First, Fairfield, Connecticut, where Dr. Henry Robinson is pastor. The group is meeting Sunday evenings during Lent.

The 50th anniversary of the Lila B. Sellars Bible Class of First, Burlington will be held in the form of a banquet in the fellowship hall of the church March 16. The pastor's wife, Mrs. Robert Kimball, will be the speaker.

Membership of Pfafftown church, Winston-Salem, has been divided into three districts. These groups will meet once every three weeks on Saturday night for the purpose of "getting to know ourselves, others, and God better." There will be fellowship, prayer and study.

"A church building which is only used on Sundays is a poor investment." Evidently First, Norfolk, believes this and plans to have its building in use throughout the week. Recent bulletins list Alcoholics Anonymous; Brownie and Girl Scouts; cherub, junior, Pilgrim, and chancel choirs; garden club; church P.T.A.; women's study session on Tuesday mornings; men's visitation evening; and other groups using the church.

Rev. and Mrs. Worden J. Updyke, Jr., both of whom graduated from Elon College in the class of 1959, are now living in Ticonderoga, New York, where he is minister of the Congregational church. They have two children, Janie and Worden.

Rev. Grant J. Burns has resigned at Carolina church, near Burlington, effective June 1, in order to become pastor of First United Church of Christ, Randleman, N. C. Mrs. Burns was formerly Patricia Coghill.

A good comparison: Union Ridge, Burlington, keeps an accurate record of its attendance and finds that in January, 1961, they averaged 208 for church school as against 182 in 1960, while they averaged 268 per Sunday in January, 1961, for morning worship and 227 in 1960.

Dr. Ed Riggs, medical missionary to India in whom the Southern Convention is especially interested, will be the guest of the Women's Fellowship of our Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, April 28 and will speak at the morning worship service April 30.

Rev. W. Judson King of Franklinton Center tells us that 28 ministers attended the recent pre-lenten convocation sponsored by the United Church of Christ with national denominational leadership. These were about equally divided between the Convention of the South and the Southern Convention. One minister was present from the Southern Synod. Snow and flu apparently cut the attendance from the expected 50-60.

February 26 our Albemarle church took two important actions: Voted to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, and voted to construct an educational building at the back of the present church. Both actions were without a dissenting vote.

The Deacons of the South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church are conducting the Sunday evening worship services and the mid-week prayer services while the church is without a pastor. Chaplain Dumstrey delivered the sermon Sunday morning March 5 and conducted the communion service.

Rev. Paul R. Gregory, secretary for Japan for our American Board, left February 23 for a two-month trip to Japan, where he will visit the mission stations of both Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed origin. Eighty missionaries of the two groups are now serving there. He will attend the annual conference of the 400 Protestant missionaries, representing eight denominations of the U. S. and Canada, who serve under the United Church of Christ in Japan.

SUNS NEEDED

Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, curator of the History Room at Elon College, needs the following issues of The Christian Sun to complete files there:

- 1922—December 21 and 28
- 1934—November 1
- 1935—April 18

She will greatly appreciate it if anyone having these copies will send them to her at Elon College, North Carolina.

A plate glass mirror has been installed in the chancel of Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, for the use of the choirs. It was given by friends as a memorial to Mrs. Mabel McDonald, organist and director of music there for many years.

St. Peter's United Church, Greensboro, was host for the Bessemer community World Day of Prayer service at the Methodist church, with members of that church and the Presbyterian church participating.

Ed Metcalf, chief usher at St. Peter's, Greensboro, conducted a training session in the work of ushers for all men of the church Sunday afternoon, February 26.

NEW MINISTERS IN THE CONVENTION

(From Convention Office)

Rev. James E. Porter at Moore Union, Turner's Chapel, and Zion.

Rev. A. M. Campbell at Eutaw Community Church, Fayetteville.

Rev. Harry Mathis, at Union, Virginia, and Hebron.

Rev. Carroll W. Lewis at Rosemont, South Norfolk.

CENTER CHURCH IN JOINT SERVICE

By Mrs. Woody Bane

Center Congregational Christian Church cooperated with the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches in the town of Halifax, Virginia, in the observance of the World Day of Prayer.

The impressive program of worship was held Friday, February 17 at 8:00 p.m. at St. John's Episcopal Church. Representing Center Church on the program was our pastor's wife, Mrs. Dwight Moore, and Mrs. Jack West.

UNIQUE METHOD OF APPROVING CONSTITUTION

A copy of the proposed constitution of the Pfafftown church has been sent to each family. Adult members are asked to sign it, if they approve of it, and return it to the minister, Rev. Kieth Wright. By this act members approve of joining the United Church of Christ, certify that they believe in the objectives and purposes of that local church, state that they understand the duties and responsibilities of the various church offices and boards, and agree that their church will not violate the constitution and by-laws of the United Church of Christ.

Dr. A. Odell Leonard, for 37 years the pastor of Second Evangelical and Reformed Church, Lexington, North Carolina, is speaking each evening at First Christian, Burlington, from March 19 through 23 at 7:30. Cottage prayer meetings are preceding this lenten series of sermons on March 13, 14 and 15. Each of the six groups has designated a host, a leader and a speaker. These prayer meetings are sponsored by the board of deacons and deaconesses.

FIELDS SPEAKS AT PROVIDENCE

By John L. Stone

On the national average, one percent of the family dollar goes to charity. This one percent was the topic of a talk entitled "Stewardship of the Apportionment Dollar" which was delivered to the Laymen's Fellowship of Providence Christian Church, Graham, North Carolina.

Two hundred and eight churches with a total of thirty-seven thousand members in North Carolina and Virginia contribute a portion of the local church dollar to the Convention.

In explaining the distribution of the apportionment dollar by the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Rev. Clyde Fields, Superintendent of the Convention, pointed out the percentage allotted to each group. The groups, either in part or wholly, dependent upon the Convention for operating funds are, to name a few, The Christian Home for Children, The Christian Sun, Elon College, the Ministerial Scholarship Fund and the home and foreign mission program.

A question and answer period followed the talk in which Rev. Mr. Fields answered specific questions involving his work. In closing the Superintendent stated, "I feel I have a mandate to explain to the local churches in our Convention the distribution of the apportionment dollar. We must move forward, and to do so, we must make each church member aware of the varied and important work done by his contribution."

The joint Sunday night meeting of the Layman's Fellowship and Men's Bible Class assembled for devotions and dinner prior to hearing the evening speaker. Mr. Kendal Rich presided over the group and introduced Mr. Fields. The devotions were under the direction of Mr. Hugh McMullan.

DR. BOYD SPEAKS AT WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

By Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes

Friday evening February 17 the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington was host to a city wide observance of "World Day of Prayer." The guest speaker was Dr. Bernard H. Boyd, professor of Biblical Literature at the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Boyd based his talk on "The Experience of Prayer," making the statement that he could not tell anyone how to pray, nor was he an authority on it. He stated that he could only speak of his own personal experience of prayer.

At the beginning Dr. Boyd made the statement that "We live in one of the most critical eras of history. It is a time when man, though moving ahead in other areas, has been unable to keep up spiritually." Dr. Boyd spoke of the oneness of the universe and the reality of God. He asked the question — "What kind of God is God? Does he care for me? Believing in God; do we believe that he listens to our prayers?" Dr. Boyd made the statement that God is a searching God, ever seeking man. God yearns for man to respond. God is a God who calls man. That is the message of the Bible. Prayer must be man's own personal experience of the presence of God.

Dr. Boyd went on to say that because of the experience of the reality of God, man becomes concerned for his fellowmen. All sorrow becomes his. The same God who seeks us seeks our fellowman.

In speaking of prayer, Dr. Boyd said that each person must have a secret place of prayer, a sacred spot, a place of solitude where he could commune with God. Man should seek the presence of God, and approach God with awe and reverence. Dr. Boyd told of his own wonderful experience in answered prayer.

In closing, Dr. Boyd said that God has not abdicated. He works out his appointed time.

The World Day of Prayer was sponsored by the Burlington Council of Church Women, with Mrs. H. C. Pollard, Sr., as chairman. Dr. Boyd was introduced by Mrs. R. W. Barnwell. Organist was Mr. Laurence Hedgepeth of the First Presbyterian Church, and the choir was composed of members from the various churches in the area.

A Convention On A College Campus

In the little Alabama town of Talladega stands the first school for Negroes in that county. For nearly a century it has been a college offering high-grade education to students in search of knowledge. Its doors are open to all who wish to study, and there are students from many countries who make this the Mecca of their educational search.

Near the center of this lovely campus, surrounded by towering trees, stands the original building erected in 1852 by slave labor. Walls are thick, ceilings are high, a double winding stairway in a massive hall leads from the main floor to the two stories above, and tremendous (white) columns adorn the front porch.

It is said that during the construction of this school building for white boys some of the slave laborers inquired why they could not have a school for their children, and that they were told that Negroes could not learn. One of them replied: "Leave me free in a forest alone, stripped of all my clothing, and in ten years I will have an education." A bronze tablet in the beautiful new library nearby tells his story in these words: "This building is named in honor of WILLIAM SAVERY, 1852 — a carpenter in bondage he labored to build old Swayne Hall. 1865 — a freedman, he organized the first school for Negroes in this county. 1867 — a man of faith, he led the Freedman's Bureau and the American Missionary Association in the purchase of old Swayne and the founding of Talladega College. 1869 — an incorporator and original trustee of the college he builded well for the generation to come." "His book of toil is read."

As February faded into March of this year representatives of white Congregational Christian churches from Virginia to Florida met with Negroes of the same denomination with churches from New York to Texas at Talladega College for consultation concerning Our Christian World Mission. Two representatives of the Missions Council, Dr. Alford Carleton and a secretary of the American Board, and several other valued leaders were there to guide the thinking of those who are primarily responsible for the ongoing of the Congregational Christian churches in the southeast. A serious effort was made to analyze the world situation we face, and to find ways to make our churches effective in changing present conditions until people everywhere become Christian in reality.

The mood of the conference was well expressed in a closing evening prayer by Supt. Robbins Ralph of Florida in these words:

For the quiet beauty of this campus, richness of its heritage;
For the joy of fellowship free of artificial restrictions—
sobering responsibility of discipleship;
For the challenge of pioneering spirits—lift of thy call to duty—

THANKS, LORD GOD.

Now for rest, renewal of the night, in preparation for our part in the dawning of a new day,
THY BLESSINGS, O LORD
Amen.

Have You Voted?

Many of our churches have already decided what their relationship to the United Church of Christ is to be. Nearly all of those reported have cast their ballots in favor of the Constitution of the United Church, and expect to be workers in this combination of four former denominations.

Still there are a few who hesitate. Little wonder, for the few Congregational Christian dissidents who are unwilling to go with the majority into the new Church have filled the mails with mimeographed and printed matter urging all kinds of delays, filling minds with doubts, and even questioning the integrity of those who have sought that unity of the Church for which Christ prayed.

As one who has attended nearly all the national meetings of our Church during the decade and more that the matter of union has been discussed, it is a joy for this writer to say without any hesitation whatever that he fully believes the merger is a good thing; that there are no hidden pitfalls for ministers, members or churches; that the Constitution and the leadership can be trusted to mean what they say; that there will be freedom for churches, associations, conferences and conventions as there has always been; that both merging groups are closely related in ideas, ideals and spirit; that experience in working together has already benefitted both groups and will continue to deepen the religious life of the churches; that in seeking the fellowship of each other we have found fellowship with Christ; that the union opens new doors of opportunity around the world; and that the new ideas gained from each other will strengthen the churches which will make the United Church of Christ.

It is the hope of your editor, therefore, that all the churches will vote on the Constitution, and that in the Southern Convention area the vote will un-animously favor the union. A negative vote could be reconsidered and made affirmative. Little children sometimes say: "I won't play." Perhaps such declaration of independence is a step towards adulthood for children, but it is not a very desirable quality for a church. Please be sure that your church casts its vote, and, if reasonably possible, for the merger that has made the world believe that there can be a united rather than a divided Church in our world.

Much is known about the Great Wall of China, and Hadrian's Wall in England, but little is known about the Great Wall of Peru. This wall was not discovered until 29 years ago.

Historians and geologists have been unable to decide completely when and why the Great Wall of Peru was built. There is almost complete agreement that it was built by the Chimu Indians, but beyond that this bulwark of protection remains shrouded in mystery.

It was in March, 1932, that George R. Johnson and Robert Shippe flew over the foothills of the Andes — that vast mountain chain crossing Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile and Argentina. In Peru the mountains at one point reach a height of 22,900 feet. The flyers, for the first time in known history, were able to rise above this mighty skyward peak and get a view of the whole range, that is so far as their eyes could see.

Coming down out of the clouds in the direction of Peru's Pacific coast — which is a desert strip of sand 50 miles wide and cut across by a number of rivers — the flyers sighted a great barricade beginning at the edge of this region and rising into the foothills. Johnson and Shippe decided to follow the wall's course, making photographs of their find.

Thus was discovered Peru's Great Wall.

After the flyers followed the wall into the Andes, at an elevation of 10,000 feet, they lost the trail because weather conditions were unfavorable and light was failing. Still interested and intrigued, they set out in an automobile and then on foot to examine the wall at close range. They found a tall, crumbling rampart of mud-cemented boulders.

The Great Wall of Peru is known to be 40 miles long and may be longer, may have been built as early as A.D. 300, has an average height equal to that of the Chinese Wall, is strengthened by 14 forts, and is from 12 to 15 feet thick.

The Great Wall of China, built about 240 B. C., is 2,500 miles long, has 25,000 towers for forts, rises from 15 to 30 feet, and is 25 feet thick at the base.

Hadrian's Wall was built in A. D. 150, is 73 miles long, has 14 large forts and 80 small ones, stands nearly 20 feet high and is eight feet thick.

Through the centuries, from building of walls and other protective devices, man has tried to shield himself from enemies. But all efforts have failed and the conference table and reason seem to be the last resort if nations are to live in peace.

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

ANY APPLES TODAY?

"Every tree is known by his fruit".

Luke 6:44

A load of luscious white mountain apples in the winter-time was a wonderful sight for little lads of long ago. The huckster's cry, "Any apples today"? was a signal for hustling to the wagon with an enthusiastic answer.

Isn't it wonderful how Jesus used simple beautiful picture language to portray the great truths which he preached! "A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit; for every tree is known by his own fruit."

In this Lenten season let us ask what sort of tree we are. Are you a good tree? What about the fruit? Are you a corrupt tree? What about the fruit?

Or are you just a tree! Isn't it funny that in the continuing of this talk Jesus should have brought up the matter of figs! Said he, "For of thorns men do not gather figs". Remember the barren fig tree. "Three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none".

Daily how are you known? What sort of fruit is yours? It is our daily witness that is worth most. There are no trees fig-less for six days of the week and full of fruit on Sunday!

Do you notice that this text says: "Every tree is known by his fruit"? Is it just a Greek idiom, or a swift personal challenge? Our Lord, who gave his life for us, looks to us for devotion and deeds up to our best in helping to bring in his kingdom of love.

Any apples today? Or am I just a tree!

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

Many ideas heard at the Midwinter Meeting of the Missions Council in Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania, interested me. But one in particular fastened itself in my mind.

"An increase to $11,500,000 for benevolences from our denomination," mused Mildred Walker of our National Women's Fellowship staff, "what does that mean to each member?"

"Figure it out," encouraged Lillian Gregory, associate secretary of the Mission Council and executive of our National Women's Fellowship.

The result: A statement which Miss Gregory made to Women's state presidents and to the conference superintendents, and which was repeated to the entire Missions Council group.

HOLD THE ENTIRE MISSION OF OUR CHURCH IN YOUR HAND for

One Day by giving $31,506

One Hour by giving $1,313

One Minute by giving $22

Or, in other words, for as long as a heart-throb, hold it in your hand for thirty cents.

This makes it possible for us to think of our church, or of our women's or laymen's organization, or of ourselves as paying for the entire benevolence program of our Church, from our state conference to "the ends of the earth" for a certain period of time.

What will YOU do about it? How long can you support it?

How A Witchdoctor Works

By Rev. and Mrs. Duane V. Wain
Missao do Chilessso, Andulo
Angola, Portuguese West Africa
November 20, 1960

Dear Friends at Home:

Spiritual needs are as great, or greater, than the physical. It is not easy to describe spiritual suffering and need, nevertheless it is just as real. The following very well illustrates the spiritual need, as well as the physical: while in a village called Cambongue, Pastor Carlos went to talk to a witchdoctor, whom he brought to the house where I was staying. They brought the witchdoctor's divining basket and the objects used in his divination. These latter completely filled a basket about 9 or 10 inches in diameter and 9 or 10 inches high. (Pastor Carlos told me that since the beginning of his pastoral work he had persuaded six of these witchdoctors to give up their business and to become Christians.) The basket was filled with a miscellaneous assortment of small antelope horns, a tail of horsehair, small mirrors, various kinds of small pieces of wood, a turtle shell, small carved wooden idols, a great assortment of pieces of bones of almost every kind of animal found here in Angola: lion, leopard, hyena, crocodile, goat, ox, chicken, etc., etc.; a small bell, a piece of lime and some pieces of red stone, some human hair, a piece of crocodile skin, a small carved boat with a person in it, pieces of cloth, (one from the cloth of each woman "healed"), rattles, etc., etc.

Now to describe a few of the methods the witchdoctor used in "curing" his patients. (We spent some two hours in taking notes on the various things he did to "cure" disease). If a person has a headache, the witchdoctor takes some black "medicine" from a turtle shell and rubs the sides of his head with it. This "medicine" is made from the ashes or scrapings of certain kinds of trees and mixed with goat grease, or a similar grease. If a person has worms, the same "medicine" is used: water is put into the turtle shell to dissolve some of the "medicine" and he drinks it, which acts as a purgative. Indeed, any internal disorder may be cured, they think, by the use of a purgative, along with other things. As: a person having pains in his stomach is "cured" by rubbing a wooden idol or fetish on his abdomen and is given some medicine to act as a purge. For them the act of rubbing the abdomen with the fetish is as important as the medicine, if not more so.

This particular witchdoctor "specialized" in treating women who could not bear children and claimed he had enabled 24 women to bear children normally. One of the remedies used was the purgative (sometimes these are very violent), another the use of medicine made from the scrapings of the roots of a certain kind of tree (he gave me the names of these various trees in Umbundu, the native language). These scrapings were mixed with goat grease and then the medicine was thrown on a fire and the woman allowed the smoke to envelop her body. They think the smoke kills the "crocodile" in the woman's body which is preventing her from having her child. If anyone thinks I am describing something that is rarely used or that is a thing of the past, he is mistaken; even our Christian leaders, now and again, become involved in these things. If the Christian leaders use them, what about the common church member, or the non-Christian?

This letter has already grown long, and there is no time or space to tell of our building program during the year, when our new Domestic Science

GHANA AND TOGO

The work in Ghana and the Republic of Togo was begun by the Bremen (German) Mission in 1847. Orphaned after World War I, the Scottish Presbyterians came to the rescue. In 1945 the Evangelical and Reformed Church in America was asked to help. Now they have 35 missionaries there.

- 20—Miss Joyce Erdman is a new missionary appointee to Ghana. From Weatherly, Pennsylvania, she finished her nurses' training in 1959 and was accepted as a missionary candidate.
- 21—Dr. and Mrs. John Siegfried are recent medical appointees. He is from Allentown, Pennsylvania; she from Coolidge, Georgia. He has worked with the Division of Indian Health in our U. S. Public Health Service, and she has been a home demonstration agent.
- 22—Mr. and Mrs. George Sturgen, Sr. have recently been appointed to work with the business side of the mission. He has had experience in maintenance, construction, cost accounting; she as a secretary.

Accra

Capital of Ghana on Atlantic seacoast with 100,000 people. Modern facilities and educational institutions and churches of various denominations.

- 23—Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bickham established and now operate a hostel for children of E. and R. missionaries in Ghana. They thus make it possible for the children to go to school at Ghana International School. They worked at Winnebago Indian School in U. S. and she was a missionary to China.

Adidome

Rural village on the Volta River, about 65 miles from Accra. Funds for new hospital there came from Trans-Volta Government.

- 24—Dr. and Mrs. Richard Bick form medical team of doctor and nurse at Evangelical Presbyterian Hospital, where they supervise the entire program of medical work. Recently the senior class of the high school in Dr. Bick's home town of Barrington, Illinois, voted to give $400 to the Board of International Missions to support the work of the Bicks in Ghana.
- 25—Miss Margaret Darrow graduated from Guilford College in 1955, took training as a laboratory technician at St. Luke's Hospital in Kansas City, and arrived in Ghana in August, 1958, where she works at the Adidome hospital.

An Opportunity To Learn

By Mrs. John R. Kernodle
Social Action Chairman

Barbaros Chelikkol, pictured here, is from Adana, Turkey. Although he is a Moslem, he attended our mission schools in Talas and Tarsus. His mother is an assistant director in an archaeological museum.

Carey Andes, in her article in the January 24 issue of The Christian Sun, introduced him to us and explained that the Southern Convention Women's Fellowship is helping sponsor him at Elon College by paying $500 annually on his expenses. This money is taken from the balance of the Timothy Chang Fund.

Barbaros, a freshman at Elon, is nearly 19 years old. He speaks English fluently and is a good student, having made the Dean's List for the fall semester. He has adapted himself to his new surroundings and made friends with his fellow students.

Spring vacation dates at the college are from March 29 until April 6. The time between spring semester and the first summer school session is from May 27 to June 6. It is hoped that our women will invite Barbaros into their homes for weekends or school vacations and avail themselves of the opportunity to hear first-hand of his country — its history, culture, and place in our world civilization. We feel certain you will count it a privilege to know him.

Contact Mrs. W. W. Sloan, chairman of foreign students at Elon College, if you wish to have Barbaros as your guest.

NORTHVIEW WOMEN'S FELLOWSHIP

By Mrs. H. S. Clark

February 19 the Women's Fellowship of Northview Community Church, Sanford, gave a program in observance of the World Day of Prayer. Following the singing of "Sweet Hour of Prayer," Mrs. L. C. Wicker, Fellowship president, led the opening prayer. A quartet, composed of Mrs. J. B. Clifton, Mrs. W. A. Rogers, Miss Judy Clifton and Miss Phyllis Rogers, sang "Did You Think to Pray?" A reading on the prayer life of Jesus, taken from the book "Luke's Portrait of Christ," was given by Mrs. H. S. Clark, Mrs. C. M. Wicker and Mrs. John Clark. Mrs. Annie Ruth Millikin closed the program with a prayer of praise and thanksgiving for the blessed privilege of prayer.

The regular February meeting was held in the home of Mrs. Arthur High. Mrs. B. C. Christian had charge of the program, "Witnessing for the Church Through My Vocation." Mrs. Arthur High read the scripture lesson. Mrs. H. S. Clark gave the Bible study from "Luke's Portrait of Christ." All the women took part in the discussion. Mrs. Sam Johnson closed the meeting with prayer. Twelve members were present.

The Young Adult Class of Great Bridge church, Hickory, Virginia, is taking orders for "money corsages" to be worn on Easter Sunday and then turned in to the building fund.

The Christian Meaning Of Scouting

By Jimmy Newman

My Topic for this morning is based on the 12 points of the Scout Law.

We have had laws since the beginning of time. The Jews, Pharisees and Sadducees were great law-abiders. They were so law-abiding that (in terms of today) they would "let the cow stay in the corn until Monday morning." Yet with all this law-abiding they weren't true Christians for they did not help their fellow man. For example, we are all familiar with the story of the "Good Samaritan." The others passed by the beaten and robbed man but a Samaritan, who was usually unfriendly toward the Jews, stopped and gave the poor man help and carried him to an Inn where he cared for him. God handed down the "Ten Commandments" to Moses on Mount Sinai and even today all of our laws are based on the "Ten Commandments."

The whole Scouting movement is based on the 12 points of the Scout Law. These points have always been written and unwritten laws by which men have tried to live. In the Scout Law they express the ideals that a Scout tries to live by. Most other laws start with do's and don'ts, but the Scout Law is a simple statement of facts. A Scout is trustworthy... loyal... helpful... friendly... courteous... kind... obedient... cheerful... thrifty... brave... clean... reverent. It is only by striving toward high ideals and keeping faith in them that you can grow up to be the man that you want to be.

A Scout Is Trustworthy. His honor is to be trusted just as you trust the mailman to carry your letter to its destination when you drop it in your mailbox. And if you can't trust a Scout you can't trust anyone. If you make a mistake as we all do (perhaps by breaking a window when playing baseball) own up to it and be able to look people straight in the eye.

A Scout Is Loyal. He is loyal to all to whom loyalty is due, his Scoutmaster, his home, his parents, and country. Loyalty begins at home with telling people of your home and by making your parents feel that they are appreciated. Hundreds of thousands of Americans have proved loyalty to our country by giving their blood for it. But you can be loyal by helping in community projects and obeying our country's laws.

A Scout Is Helpful. He must be prepared at any time to save a life or to help injured persons, or even to share home chores. He must do at least one good turn to someone each day. If you can't swim you have little chance of saving a drowning person's life. As a Scout you know what to do and when to do it. You can be helpful by helping a motorist change a tire or even by feeding birds during the winter. Work, for which you are paid, and help you give a person, for which you are not paid, are two different things, and for a good turn a Scout receives no tip. When William D. Boyce, from Chicago, was in London he was having trouble finding an office address. He had stopped under a street lamp to locate himself when out of the fog a boy appeared. The boy asked if he could be of any help. "You most certainly can," said Boyce, "I wish you'd tell me how to get to this address." The boy took him there and when offered a tip he snapped a salute and turned it down. He was a Scout and couldn't accept it.

A Scout Is Friendly. He is a friend to all and a brother of all Scouts. Friendship is like a mirror. When you meet a person with a smile and a helping hand extended, your smile will be returned and you will receive help when you need it. Some people to whom you show friendliness will become a lifelong friend.

A Scout Is Courteous. He is polite to all, especially to women, children, aged people, and to the disabled. This is just another way of saying that a Scout is a gentleman. A "please" and a "thank you" are easily said, and a little helpful thing easily done, yet they make people feel that you appreciate what they do for you. Good manners always please and attract people. The courtesy you practice as a boy will make you a finer man.

A Scout Is Kind. He is a friend to animals. He will not kill nor hurt any animal needlessly. He will strive to save and protect all harmless life.

A Scout Is Obedient. He obeys his parents, Scoutmaster, patrol leader, and all other duly constituted authorities. Obedience begins with your parents: if they ask you to do something, do it right then even if you are in the middle of an exciting game or television show. Soldiers don't enjoy going into battle, but they obey orders. A Scout is obedient to his country's laws, here is where obedience works for your own good.

A Scout Is Cheerful. He smiles whenever he can. His obedience to orders is prompt and cheery. He never shirks nor grumbles at hardships. There's an old saying that goes, "laugh and the world laughs with you, weep and your weep alone". Some people always look at the dark side of things. If the sun shines they are dissatisfied because it hurts their eyes and it is too hot. If it doesn't shine they are dissatisfied because it is too cold and dark. A Scout always tries to see the bright side of things.

A Scout Is Thrifty. He doesn't willfully destroy property. He makes the best use of his opportunities. He saves his money so that he may pay his own way, he is generous to those in need, and quick to help worthy objects. He may work for pay but doesn't receive a tip for a "Good Turn." He knows how to spend his money wisely and to take care of clothes, home, school, books, forests and wildlife. When you realize that waste is the worst enemy of thrift and act accordingly, you do your part to keep America beautiful.

A Scout Is Brave. He has the courage to face danger in spite of fear and to stand up for the right against the coaxings of friends or the jeers or threats of enemies, and defeat doesn't down him. The highest award a Scout can receive is the Honor

Medal for saving a life. It is given for saving a life only if the deed required real heroism and was done at the risk of the Scout's own life. There is an incident when five Scouts and their leader were returning from a tree-planting project. Suddenly their car swerved off the road when rounding a curve and plunged down a 150 foot cliff. Scout Robert Biffle, who was sitting in the front seat, was thrown out of the car. The others were badly injured, unconscious, and pinned inside of the car. Robert, who was suffering from a fractured skull and severe head lacerations climbed to the top of the cliff and flagged down a passing truck. He managed to remain conscious until the State Police were notified and an ambulance had sped to the scene. Not until he knew that his buddies were on the way to the hospital and in good care would he receive medical aid himself. He was awarded the certificate for heroism by the National Court of Honor, B. S. A. There is another kind of bravery. It takes bravery to stand up for what you think is right when others try to make you do what you know is wrong.

A Scout Is Clean. He keeps clean in body and thought, stands for clean speech, sport, habits, and travels with a clean crowd. You never need be ashamed of the dirt you get on you when working or playing for that will wash off with soap and water. But there is another kind of dirt that won't come off by washing. That is the dirt that enters your mind. You will have a hard struggle fighting that kind of dirt but if you really try you'll win. Get in with a clean crowd where you will hear clean speech, learn clean sportsmanship, and get a clean outlook.

A Scout Is Reverent. He is reverent toward God. He is faithful in his religious duties, and respects the convictions of others in matters of custom and religion. Take a penny out of your pocket, look above Lincoln's head, what do you see? You see the words "In God We Trust." Twelve little letters on our humblest coin. Not only as persons but as a whole nation, too, we are committed to live and work in harmony with God and with his plan. Most of our great men were men of deep religious faith who have shown their faith in deeds. Washington knelt to pray in the snow of Valley Forge. Lincoln always sought divine guidance before making an important decision. Eisenhower prayed to God before taking his oath of office as President of the United States. These men had these things in common; love of the out of doors, love of God, and love of their fellow man. In America we believe in freedom of religion. That is why we respect those whose religions may differ from ours although for some reason we don't agree with them.

Now listen again to the twelve points of the Scout Law. A Scout is trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean, and reverent. Are these twelve points in any relationship to the life of a Christian? Yes indeed, A Christian, too, must be trustworthy, loyal, helpful, and so on in order to be a true Christian.

In the early years of Christianity, before the Church as we know it was founded, the early church had to meet as a secret order in the cities of Palestine. They had signs and symbols that only the members could interpret. It was necessary for all members to be trustworthy or else the whole early Christian Church would be destroyed, for the Roman government was against the Christian Church and was out to banish it. If any of the early members were captured they were thrown into the lion's den. Here are two Bible passages about trustworthiness, first, Job 13:15: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him: but I will maintain mine own ways before him," and, second, from Psalms 25:2: "O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me." Even today Christians are bound together with the bond of trustworthiness. Trusting first in Almighty God and his Son Jesus Christ, and trusting, second, in their fellow man. Can you imagine what a world this would be if we couldn't trust anyone with anything. You couldn't even trust the mailman to carry your letter to the right person.

Just as a Christian is trustworthy in his relationships with God and his fellowman, he is loyal in the sense that he can be depended upon by God and his fellow man to do his best. Loyalty is more than a word, just as trustworthiness is more than a word. In fact the whole twelve points of our theme today are more than words. They are actions and characteristics to be applied in our everyday life and not just spoken.

As Scouts are helpful so are Christians helpful. In the time of trouble Christians always seek to share the burdens of those who have met misfortune. For example, in a case of severe illness we as Christians visit to help the sick, if at all possible, but mainly to share the burdens of the sick's loved ones. There is also a Bible passage for helpful. From Luke 6:31: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Christians are helpful in every way and in all aspects of life.

We have said that a Scout is friendly, courteous and kind. It is hard to conceive or imagine real Christian people not being friendly. For friendliness is a necessity for Christianity. These three words, friendly, courteous and kind, are characteristics of Christians, that need not be spoken. They are Characteristics that make lifelong impressions on people.

As a Scout is obedient a Christian is also obedient. Scouts are obedient to their Scoutmaster, parents, and all other duly constituted authorities. Christians are obedient to the word and will of God. From Romans 6:16 we have a passage about obedience: "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness."

Christians are cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent just as Scouts are. Let us listen to some Bible passages on these. From Proverbs 20:9 we have a passage for clean. "Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?" I doubt that any of us can for sometimes we make very small sins but still they are sins. From Hebrews 12:28 we have a passage for reverent. "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and Godly fear."

So you see, the rules set forth in the Scout law are also related in many ways to the parents and members of the Christian community as well as the members of the Boy Scouts of America. Christians should follow these rules just as closely and carefully as Scouts. These rules apply to everyone, no matter what age. We believe in these principles of laws for life; trustworthiness, loyalty, obedience, reverence and so on. We believe they are principles by which all peoples ought to live. And may God give us grace to make them the rules for our living both as Boy Scouts of America and also as members of the Church of Jesus Christ.

Youth Faces The Future

"We are united in the purpose . . .
 "To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.
 "To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.
 "To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

WHAT'S AHEAD FOR YOUTH IN THE UNITED CHURCH?

These are exciting and historic times for members of both constituencies of the United Church of Christ. Churches and synods are voting. Many history-making meetings have been held. More are to come in the months ahead. A Statement of Faith has been approved. Agencies from the merging groups have been joining in their efforts in social action. Christian education, missions, and the rest.

But what does all this have to do with teenagers in the local church? What is happening today among our church's youth — leaders of tomorrow? What's new in the youth organization? Will the United Church continue to present Pilgrim Fellowship (PF) and the Youth Fellowship (YF) as we know them now? Or will there be a new merged youth organization?

To prepare for the future, a committee of 12 youths and adults had been at work for several years. Last summer, these committee members reported the results of their study to state and synod delegates attending the Joint National Youth Council at Elmhurst College. What are the major features of the committee's proposed Plan of Organization? What are they recommending for the future?

First, there is hope that young people in our churches of tomorrow will feel a sense of belonging to the total church, and not just belonging to a youth group shunted aside from full participation and responsibility. This means that church membership must be made more active and meaningful for teens in the local church.

Many teenagers know the church in pieces only. There are Sunday church school classes, youth choir, summer camps, vacation church school, confirmation and church membership classes, PF or YF, and the Sunday morning worship. The new plan stresses the unity, the one-ness of all these activities. Under the new stress of "integration" membership in the church as a whole should become more important than membership in a separate youth organization.

If youth are to take part more fully in the total work of the church, this means that youth and adults will need to get to know each other better and learn to work together. Youth will get the idea of what the church is, and what makes it run. The joint effort of adults and youth, or "mutuality," should help make the "church's youth ministry" more fruitful.

In the past, young people between the ages of 12 to 24 were considered eligible for PF and YF. The proposed plan now calls for a separate junior high program (for 7th and 8th graders), a senior high grouping (for 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th graders), and a young adult program and campus Christian ministry (for those beyond high school). Only senior high youth will take part in the proposed Plan of Organization.

To provide a unifying focus for the senior highs in the United Church, a covenant has been proposed. The idea of a covenant comes from the Old Testament times, when God made a covenant with Moses, and Moses in turn made a covenant with God and the Jewish people to be faithful. The United Church youth covenant restates our relationship to God and to each other. The new covenant takes some words from the Statement of Faith of our United Church of Christ, as well as a major section from the existing PF/YF statement of purpose.

The 12-member Plan of Organization Committee also studied our present three-commission plan of Faith, Action, and Fellowship. The several proposals for the future include a variety of groupings of two, three, four, or five "program areas" in the United Church's youth ministry.

In the United Church, present states and regions will be classified as conferences (states) and association (regions). Youth organizations on these two levels will meet such needs of a local youth group as program planning, a sense of belonging to a denomination, and experiences in a wider realm.

At the national level, a new representative body (called the United Church Youth Forum) will meet each year. Unlike the present National Councils of PF and YF, the United Church Youth Forum will not be a legislative body with executive officers nor will it plan programs. Instead, a "sounding board" (or forum) of youth, adults, and denominational leaders will meet each year to develop program ideas, establish policies and objectives, and provide an exchange of views by representative youth and denominational strategy-makers.

This then, in a nutshell, is what is being suggested for the future youth program of the United Church of Christ. At present, PF and YF leaders in state conferences and synods are leading discussions on the good and bad of this plan. All comments, requests for changes and clarifications are to be submitted by April 1. Late comments are welcomed, too.

Then this summer, in August, this plan will be further studied by a special meeting of one representative from each state (PF) and synod (YF) in Ann Arbor, Michigan. All communications on the plan will be reviewed and debated and a final document will be submitted for study. Finally, at the 1962 meeting of the Joint National Council of PF and YF, the plan will be submitted for vote. If it is then adopted, the plan will go into force with the 1963 meeting of the United Church Youth Forum.

NEW P. F. OFFICERS AT PLYMOUTH

By Susan Ferrell, Reporter

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Plymouth Church (E. N. C. Conference) recently installed officers for 1961. They were installed by the Rev. Robert Bennett and include: Royal Soward, president; Susan Ferrell, vice president; Linda King, secretary; Elouise Stancil, treasurer; Barbara Ross, pianist; Betty Ross, song leader; and George Soward, sergeant-at-arms. Our counselors are Mrs. DeWitt King, Mrs. R. D. Soward, Mrs. Lib Ross, Mr. Charles Walton and Mr. Billy Murray.

We have just begun selling candy for our new project for the church, which is a secret.

NORTHVIEW P. F. REPORTS FEBRUARY ACTIVITIES

By Sandra Clifton

The Senior Pilgrim Fellowship at Northview has been very busy this month.

Sunday, February 12 was Youth Sunday at our church. The Pilgrim Fellowship was in charge of the Sunday school and the morning worship service. Jerry Cameron was superintendent, Paulette Mitchell, song leader. Serving as teachers were: Carolyn High, Carolyn Cameron, Ava Rogers, Phyllis Rogers, Judy Clifton, Barbara Christian, Johnny Smith, Linda Campbell, and Sandra Clifton. Leslie Wicker delivered the morning message.

The Shallow Well Pilgrim Fellowship invited our group to a workshop at their church on February 11-12. Eleven students from Elon College were there to direct us. We really enjoyed the fellowship and gained much from it. Also, we were invited to a spaghetti supper. Afterward we had a very impressive candlelight service. We all returned home happy to have been a part of such an enjoyable occasion.

For our recreation night this month we enjoyed games and refreshments at the community building.

We also sponsored a supper to raise funds for our projects.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY AT LYNNHAVEN COLONY

By Mrs. R. Edward Morse, Reporter

March 1, 1961, marked the first anniversary of the Sam D. Nelsons among us and the whole family, Rev. Mr. Nelson, his lovely wife, Diane, and their son, David, have endeared themselves to our congregation and the area surrounding our church. A family night in the form of a covered-dish supper was held at the church in honor of this occasion and the Women's Fellowship presented Mr. Nelson with a pocket size silver communion service so useful in his pastoral calls on the sick and shut-in members.

Much has been accomplished in our church during the past year to establish a firm foundation for future growth. Our very capable choir raised the funds and presented the church with a Baldwin Organ, adding a great deal to the beauty and effectiveness of our services.

Our Sunday school attendance has increased and our worship service congregation has grown so we are now "getting out the chairs" at times.

The young people are active and interested in all phases of their Pilgrim Fellowship work and participate in the services as ushers and all other ways they can.

"Watch out for your spectacles! He once broke a drinking glass from six feet!"

Let us (or some of us) hope the Lord judges our singing by its quantity rather than its quality. For a song on the lips is the sign of a joyous heart. And who has better cause to feel joyful than the man or woman who has surrendered to Christ?

Both adult Fellowship groups are active and are making a real contribution to the furtherance of the church. During the winter the Fellowship groups combined in paneling the walls and furnishing the pastor's study. Presently the Women's Fellowship is undertaking the painting of the interior of the educational building and the furnishing of the nursery and some of the Sunday school rooms. The Men's Fellowship is fixing cement walks around the church yard and enlarging the gravelled parking area.

Sixty-eight members have been added to the church roll and we are keenly anticipating the time when we can build our new church with larger quarters. We have purchased our parsonage and the lots on which to build our future church, and the membership was interested to undertake in 1961 a budget much greater than last year. This is encouraging.

VIRGINIA CHURCH—FAMILY CONFERENCE

A Regional Conference of The Church and The Family will be held at Asbury Memorial Methodist Church, Harrisonburg, Thursday, April 6, from 9:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The conference has been planned by the Committee on Family Life of the Virginia Council of Churches. The Rev. Gilbert Cofer, Director of Adult Work, Methodist Virginia Conference, is chairman.

The conference is planned especially for church leaders who are responsible for the program and activities of the church. Problems to be discussed will include: sociological and psychological factors affecting the family today; the responsibility of the church for family life; the place of the family in the Christian fellowship; developing a church program that will strengthen the family.

The leaders will be Dr. Mildred Tate, Specialist on Family Life, Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Dr. Charles G. Caldwell, Director of Teacher Training, Madison College; Mrs. John D. Myers, former national Director of Children's Work, Church of the Brethren; and the Rev. James P. Lincoln, Executive Secretary, Department of Christian Education, Episcopal Diocese of Virginia.

Responsibilities Of Adults

By Walter D. Graham

(Mr. Graham is a graduate of Elon College, 1951, and is a layman in Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, Suffolk, Virginia. The following is the gist of an address to the church on Layman's Sunday.)

America is a great and beautiful land of opportunity, with a philosophy of the dignity of the individual, and with freedom of worship, speech, assembly, and, generally, freedom from want and fear. Now we are feeling growing pains. In our haste to win material things we sometimes forget to pass on our heritage from the founding fathers of America to the children of our homes and churches. We do not hesitate to spend time and money to develop the wealth hidden in the earth, but often fail to do as well by our greatest asset — the youth of our land.

The character of young people is the most pliable raw material that we know, and yet we too often leave young people to mold their own character and reach maturity of their own making. They have a passionate drive to become successful, with only a partial understanding of the meaning of success. Coming up under a more or less Godless educational system, if they develop ideals and hold to Christian faith it is because the home and Church help them. They are very susceptible to influence, and in the spring of life form habits, hopes and faith. The dominant influences in a community largely determines the goals and purposes of the new generation.

Left alone, young people do not know what their role in life should be, but as adults we need to realize that the future is only a continuation of the present, and that the present is in OUR hands.

Teen-agers receive much criticism because of the conduct of a minority, but most of them are decent, law-abiding citizens. This is in spite of the fact that less than 30 per cent of children are in Sunday school, and more than 300,000 homes are broken by divorce. The family is the most influential group in the world, and it is the duty of parents to instil in their children a sense of moral and spiritual values. But the average family of today has other values at the top of the list. Parents are concerned with material values and with pushing their children towards social acceptance, and sometimes they ignore or encourage questionable activities in achieving those ends. All too often parents have turned over to the church the total responsibility of instilling spiritual values in their children. Both home and church are needed to work together.

What of the church? Let's bring our problem to Bethlehem church, and to the homes represented here. What are our responsibilities towards our own children and all young people who will observe our lives?

In my opinion we have three basic duties — to share, to inspire, and to elevate.

Before we can assume these duties, we must return to reality and place at the top of the list of values those things which are spiritual. We must take the work of the church seriously. We must seek inspiration ourselves. Often the way we live even contradicts the hymns we sing.

We sing "Sweet Hour of Prayer" and content ourselves with five minutes a day. We sing "Onward Christian Soldiers" and wait to be drafted into his service. We sing "Hiding in Thee" and try to hide from him. We sing "We'er Marching to Zion" and often fail to march to Sunday school and church. We sing "I Love to Tell the Story" and fail to tell it to our children. We sing "Cast Thy Burdens on the Lord" and then worry ourselves into a nervous breakdown. We sing "The Whole World for Jesus" and never mention it to our neighbor. We sing "O Day of Rest and Gladness" and wear ourselves out cutting grass or playing golf. We sing "Throw Out the Lifeline" and content ourselves with throwing out the fishing line. (These quotes are from the Virginian-Pilot.)

Fellow-Christians, we must first seek to know God and place our own thoughts and lives in proper perspective concerning true values, then we may fulfill our responsibilities to youth. Then we can share knowledge, wisdom, and material goods.

Men, what are our duties to our children? Are we merely providers of material necessities and luxuries, and then leave the spiritual matters to the women? Men sometimes seem to feel that the moral code is for women only. I firmly believe that if the young people of our community fail to find the way to Christ it will be because of us laymen whose examples fail to point in that direction. How much do we really care?

In America there are 250,000 church buildings, and 450,000 liquor joints. Do we care? More Americans are killed in three years by criminals than in all of World War II. Do we care? The percentage of criminal arrests rises 20 to 25 per cent annually. Do we care? Forty seven per cent of Americans under 24 years of age receive no religious training. Do we care? J. Edgar Hoover warns that juvenile delinquents are spearheading an army of eleven million law-breakers. Are we concerned? The Bible is the forgotten book in most homes while best-selling novels — often cesspools of filth — are read avidly by children and adults alike. Are we guilty? Are we really concerned that what has been for so long the American dream may become the "American nightmare?"

Fellow Christians, we MUST care. We must develop a concern. Each of us has dreams concerning the development of our children, and we must work towards making those dreams become realities. By instilling in them the real values of life, and by helping them to develop faith in those values, in themselves, and in God, we will enable them to move forward when difficulties arise and the way is not clear.

SAY IT RIGHT . . . WRITE IT RIGHT

The word valuable is frequently misused in referring to persons. Things that possess value or have qualities of worth are valuable, but persons are valued. For example: He is a valued man, not a valuable man.

Utter as an adjective, and utterly, as an adverb, should be used only in an unfavorable sense. Thus a person may be utterly wrong, but not utterly right. There can be utter foolishness, but not utter sense.

Compared to and compared with are often confusing. If one thing has a similarity to something else, to should be used. If points of difference or resemblance are sought, use with.

Practically all compounds made up of the prefix sub are one-word forms, such as subcommittee, subdivision, subnormal, submachine gun and subzero. When the "b" is doubled, as in sub-basement, the hyphen should be used.

Jesus Gives His Life

Background Scripture: John 18 and 19.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 22:1-8, 19.

Memory Selection: I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. John 10:11.

"When I survey the wondrous Cross, On Which the Prince of Glory died; My richest gain, I count but loss; And pour contempt on all my pride."

The writer of this great hymn thus describes the mood or emotion in which we ought to approach any discussion of the Cross of Christ. It is a sobering, humbling experience to stand before the Cross of Jesus Christ. The place whereon we stand is holy ground.

The Callous Cruelty

There was no more terrible death than death by crucifixion. Even the Romans, accustomed to brutality as they were, regarded it with a shudder of horror. And it was unthinkable that a Roman citizen should die by such a death. But it was this death, the most dreaded by the ancient world, the death reserved for slaves and criminals that Jesus died. Jesus knew the horror and the suffering of the Cross. But He went to it voluntarily — He himself said about his life, "No man taketh it from me" — because He loved us and was willing to give himself for us. "For the joy that was set before him, He endured the Cross, despising the shame" as Paul wrote later.

The Crowning Indignity

"And with him they crucified two others, one on either side, and Jesus in the middle." That was adding insult to shame. Here was the sinless Son of God, crucified with common criminals. Matthew and Mark tell us that they were robbers. He who accompanied with publicans and sinners in his life, also was consigned to die with them on the Cross. He was indeed numbered with the transgressors, He who knew no sin was made sin for our sakes. As He identified himself with sinful humanity at his baptism, so did He identify himself with sinners at his death. Here was the ultimate in shame and abasement. Here was the depths to which the Master in his humiliation, in humbling himself and taking upon himself the Cross.

The Cynical Caption

Pilate had sweated it out during the trial of Jesus. He had been on the "hot spot" for a long time. And he had come out the loser in one sense. He evidently did not feel very happy about the whole thing. But he saw a chance to turn the trick on the Jewish leaders who had put him on the spot. So he had an inscription or caption printed and hung on the Cross above the head of Jesus. It was written in Hebrew and Latin and Greek, so that all could read and understand it. "The writing was JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS." It was a cynical thing — the idea of a King hanging on a Cross, and among thieves and robbers. The King of the Jews — that was indeed the crowning irony. That really "burned the Jews up." They just could not take that, and they repeatedly asked him to take that inscription down. But Pilate refused. He said that what he had written, he had written. Let them stew in their own juice.

Well in this bitter irony and stark cynicism, Pilate unwittingly paid the highest tribute to Jesus. The very title in itself was a tribute to the universal character of this Man whom he ridiculed as a king. These three languages were the great languages of the ancient world, and they stood for three great nations — Greece, Rome, the Hebrew nation. And like all nations, in the economy of God, each had some unique contribution to make to the world and to world history. Greece — from her came beauty of form and beauty of thought; Rome — from her came world law and good government; Israel — from her came religion and the worship of the One True God. And the consummation of all these things is seen in Jesus. In him were embodied all these — the highest thought of God and the supreme beauty of God; the law of God and the Kingdom of God; the picture and image of God. All the world's seekings and strivings found their consummation in him. How symbolic that in the three great languages of the world, men called him KING!

There is one point in this section of Scripture that is a commentary on human nature. Pilate who was so vacillating and spineless during the trial of Jesus, allowing himself to be coerced and blackmailed by the Jewish leaders and the mob, now being so adamant and inflexible. It is a commentary on human nature: how often are we weak about things of supreme importance, and so stubborn about things that do not count! Alas, like Pilate, we so often take a stand, but on the wrong things, and too late.

The Crap Shooters

Here was a man dying a slow, painful death on the Cross. And here were four men at the foot of that Cross, throwing dice for his garments! It was the custom in those days to give the personal effects of the criminal to the soldiers who escorted him to the Cross and nailed him to it and watched him until he was dead. Usually a man wore five articles of apparel — shoes or sandals, a girdle, a turban, a tunic, and an outer garment. These men threw dice for all the articles but the outer robe. It was a woven garment — tradition has it that Jesus' mother had woven it for him — seamless, woven all in one piece. So instead of tearing it up and dividing it up among themselves, they threw again for that. Here is illustrated the tragedy of the world's indifference to the love of God. But there is more in the reference to the outer robe than that. That kind of robe was worn by the priest, whose function it was to "build a bridge" — that is what the word priest means in Latin, a bridge-builder. And more than any other man, Jesus Christ built a bridge between God and man, He was the perfect priest, opening the way, the perfect way for all men into the presence of God.

The Completed Task

"When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar — a kind of sour wine — he said 'It is finished'; and He bowed his head and gave up the ghost." John's reference to the fact that Jesus suffered from thirst — and the other writers record the same

Spring And Summer Plans At Our Home For Children

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

The planting season is just about here. Mr. C. E. Perkins, our maintenance man who is also in charge of our truck patch farming, is quite busy now with plans for the coming growing season. Some items have already been planted, while ground has been broken for later plantings.

As you perhaps know, we farm here at the Children's Home to the extent of our needs. Truck patches will be planted in sufficient amount to meet our needs during the summer months and enough for use during the coming winter months. Our older boys and girls with adult help and supervision freeze and can the various vegetables that are available during the summer months.

This summer we are planning a recreational schedule as well as a work schedule for we believe that both such programs are necessary for the children we have under our care.

During the winter months the boys and girls have been very busy with their school work and extra curricular activities at school. Even during these months they have responsibilities around the Home that they must accept. For instance, some of our older boys under the supervision of Mr. Perkins take care of the live stock, which includes 24 head of beef cattle and 14 head of hogs.

The unusually warm weather for the past week has caused our children to begin to talk of summer and their possible summer vacations. All of our boys and girls get two weeks vacation during the summer if there is somewhere for them to go. Usually, I understand, it works out so that all get to go sometime during the summer. They visit relatives, sponsors and other interested individuals who want to make sure that each child has some kind of a vacation.

Thus, you see, with seventy boys and girls you have to make plans in advance as to how they shall all get their vacations and at the same time take care of the various vegetables that will be coming in for processing from time to time. We are very fortunate here at the Home in that we have a fine staff which helps to make this not too great a problem.

As the spring months open up plan to bring a group from your church, Sunday School, or any other group from within your church to visit us on some Sunday afternoon. We would be most happy to have you.

Year Of Decision — 1961

There are times in the life of the church that call us to new ventures with inescapable urgency. Needs and demands seem to converge on a particular year. God seems to cry out, "Now, now is the acceptable time! Arise, go, . . . proclaim!" Such a year is 1962 for us. The call is for a sixty percent increase in giving to Our Christian World Missions by that year. This means a gain from our present level of $7,000,000 to $11,500,000.

The mission must be seen now as one mission. The distinction between home and foreign missions is no longer valid. Every community in America must be seen as a characteristically mission situation. The mission is very close and intimate. But that is true in another sense. The vast social and political upheavals taking place in distant lands will have a profound effect upon our lives. What happens today in Johannesburg, Leopoldville, or New Delhi may affect how our children live twenty-five years from now far more than the latest American election.

In all of our planning time intrudes rudely. How long do we have? Bishop Otto Dibelius in a farewell address recently to a group of American churchmen recalled that great Christian centers have sometimes in the past been silenced for centuries. Ephesus was silenced and had not a single Christian voice for a thousand years. Some great Reformation centers are imperiled today. Wittenberg is now behind the Iron Curtain. What will the new vitality and rapid expansion of Islam mean? What of the rising nationalist fervor throughout Africa and Asia? How long do we have?

It is not a time for panic. But certainly it is not a time for complacency. We know God is mightily at work in the midst of these historical crises. We know, too, that he needs informed and obedient Christian communities, disciplined men and women. With new vision, vigor, and faith, let us "arise, go, . . . proclaim" now while there is time. Tomorrow may be too late.

VISITING SPEAKER AT ALBEMARLE

By Mrs. Pauline Freeman

The Women's Fellowship of the Albemarle Congregational Christian Church met Monday night, February 27 at the church. The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. M. H. Troutman. The group sang "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" as the opening hymn. After a short business session Mrs. Carleen Russell conducted the devotional. Mesdames Mickey Thompson and Mary Belle Pennington sang a special number and Mrs. Collie Seymour led in prayer.

Mrs. Troutman introduced the Superintendent of the Asheboro District, Mrs. Vivian Pell, who gave a brief talk on the plans for the spring rally to be held in April.

Mrs. Walter Hall of Asheboro gave a very interesting talk on our Bible Study, the title of which is "Luke's Portrait of Christ."

After the benediction a fellowship hour was enjoyed. Coffee and doughnuts were served to the thirty-four people present.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

thing — was designed to show that Jesus was intensely human as well as supremely divine. If He were to redeem man, He had to become man. John takes great pains throughout his gospel to show that Jesus was truly man as well as truly God.

Having received the wine or vinegar, Jesus said "It is finished." The redemptive work was done. The atoning sacrifice had been made. There had been opened up a new and living way. It should be noted that these words were a shout of triumph, a clarion call of victory. Jesus did not die with weary words of defeat on his lips, but with a joyous shout of victory.

Dr. Barclay adds one fine touch to the comment on this scene. He suggests that the fact that a hyssop reed was used in giving Jesus the drink to quench his thirst, was symbolic. For hyssop was what was used by the Hebrews on that first Passover night when they were delivered from bondage from Egypt. The people took a bunch of hyssop, and dipped it in the blood of the sacrifice, and with that sprinkled the blood on the door of their homes, so that the avenging angel of death would "pass over" their homes. And as the blood of the Passover lamb saved the people of that day from death, so does the blood of Jesus the Passover Lamb of God save the world from its sin. He was indeed the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

SOUTH NORFOLK STUDIES WOMEN OF BIBLE

By Beatrice George

The Women's Fellowship of the South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church held a covered dish supper in the social hall February 23. After the regular order of business Mrs. Clarence Harris 1st Vice President, conducted a program entitled "Momentous Decisions."

A short sketch was given on five women in the Bible who had to make decisions: Hannah, by Beatrice George; Mary and Martha by Connie Lingo; Lydia by Fannie Rawls; Naomi by Ethel Smith. Mrs. Harris correlated these beginnings and decisions with great men and women in our history, artists and others who have stepped out and made proper decisions for the right. Elva Hanbury and Lois Tegerides sang "What will you do with Jesus?"

The closing thought to take home was "A house is for protection. A home is for affection." All the circles were represented. The meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

In Memoriam

HOWELL

Dewey Hobson Howell, ordained as a Deacon of the Suffolk Christian Church in January of 1951 and elected to his third term as a member of the Board last fall, departed this life on Saturday, February 18, 1961. His passing represents a genuine loss to the entire community, but most especially to those of us who knew him the more intimately for having been privileged to serve with him in the church.

His life among us was characterized by a quiet dignity. He was a man of great personal integrity and all who knew him were easily impressed by his sincerity, loyalty, devotion, and faithfulness. Never self-seeking, he exemplified the qualities of a Christian gentleman in ways which all of us might well hope to emulate.

This splendid spirit found expression in his relationship to his family, his work, and his church — always these above self. Indeed, we know that his whole life was bound up in such primary associations, to each of which he gave a concentrated measure of his personal attention and service. No man ever merited more fully the outstanding tribute of his friends and associates paid him in the service on Sunday afternoon, February 19.

While deeply conscious of our personal loss and sadness, we know that each of us were blessed through his life and our friendship with him. We join in this unanimous expression of our sincere sympathy to the members of his family, with the prayer that they may experience the Divine Presence in the hours of their bereavement and that they may know the continuing comfort of God's spirit throughout all of the days ahead.

What Price Freedom? By REV. WILLIS E. JOINER

(Excerpts from a sermon preached in Shelton Memorial church, Portsmouth, Virginia, September 30, 1960.)

"You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

John 8:32

These words of Jesus sound a patriotic note that appeals to the American mind. America loves freedom and this is the thing that has made her the great nation that she is.

There have been occasions when these words have been used in political campaigns. About two years ago in the gubernatorial race in the state of Georgia one of the candidates, a pastor of a local church, had large billboards along the highways with these words of Jesus blazoned across the bottom of the sign. "You shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free." Certainly this is foreign to anything that Jesus meant in these great words.

What Jesus said in this great statement had nothing to do with political issues as such. The Jews boasted they were the sons of Abraham and had never been in bondage to any man while even then they were slaves of Rome. However Jesus was pointing out another captivity or bondage that is far worse than the yoke of political bondage. Civil bondage has only a temporal effect while the bondage of which Jesus spoke binds and enslaves the souls of men. Freedom from spiritual bondage is that which Jesus came to bring.

But let us look at the real issue today. We are concerned about the souls of men. In 1517 Martin Luther rebelled against the force that imprisoned the minds and spirits of men. Long had the Hierarchy held in slavery the souls of men. Those who controlled the church held control over the souls of men. Freedom from sin had to be purchased and if a man was unable to buy forgiveness he was forced to die in his sin. Forgiveness became a pawn to be purchased and those who had, received while those who had not were forbidden. To Luther these indulgences were unjust as well as unscriptural. It was this slavery of the souls of men against which he rebelled.

Great cathedrals were built out of the fear which haunted the poor. Coins needed to buy bread for hungry and ragged children were used to enlay gold around the door posts of the cathedrals. Visit the old countries where these cathedrals stand and see the poverty and squalor that surround them. Imprisoned minds and souls built these out of fear lest the disfavor of the Hierarchy condemn them to eternal darkness.

The love and grace of God came forward in Luther's breast. He dared proclaim the freedom of all souls in the face of death itself. This love and grace drove out fear and planted a new assurance that could not be destroyed. His soul basked in the sunlight of this freedom even as his heart pained for those who were bound by the chains of fear. He had found the freedom that Jesus came to bring.

In the light of this we may see ourselves, often bound by our own creed or dogmas. To deny another the right to seek God in his own way is to act as wickedly as any pope has ever acted. We must learn that it isn't the keeping of some handed down ideas that save the soul but a living faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. "By grace are you saved through faith" are the words of the Scripture and how one arrives there has nothing to do with the fact he has arrived. This is our concern, that men come to know Him.

The Jews were bound and imprisoned in self imposed spiritual bondage. They believed themselves right because the fathers had so declared, but Jesus pointed out a longing for something far superior to a creed or dogma. He implied they were unhappy and imprisoned. He said "when you find me you will know the truth and the truth will make you free." Freedom from spiritual bondage which brings fear and unhappiness. If we haven't found that freedom in Christ we are unhappy. We may not recognize that unhappiness or longing within but if we look deeply enough we will find it and recognize it. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Which way are you going? On which door are you knocking?

Here And There Among The Churches

A covered dish supper was held at Bayside, Norfolk, March 10 for families of the church. The film "Split Level Family" was shown.

Members will be received in connection with the Maundy Thursday communion service at Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines.

Rev. Edward A. Powers, general secretary of the Division of Christian Education of our denomination, suggests that it would be fine for each church to give a subscription to YOUTH magazine to each young person joining the church.

Lenten Wednesday evening services are being held at First, Portsmouth, by Rev. Calvin Felton, interim pastor. A service of Holy Communion will be held Maundy Thursday at 8:00 p.m.

Rev. Winfred Bray, pastor of Union Ridge, ordained deacons at Carolina church, near Burlington, Sunday evening, March 5. New deacons are Hillary Jones, Thomas Murray and Johnny Smith.

Our Franklin, Virginia, church has been having a series of Wednesday evening Lenten services on the theme "I Believe in the Church." Rev. Raymond Grissom is the speaker March 22.

Rev. Lynwood Hubbard, pastor of Pleasant Ridge and Spoon's Chapel, will be the speaker for special services each evening from Easter Sunday through Friday, April 7, at Concord, near Elon College. Mr. Clyde Simons will direct the singing. Services are to be at 7:30.

Young people of Elon College Community Church will meet each morning of Holy Week (March 27-31) for meditation at 7:45.

At a called meeting of the church Sunday morning, February 12, our First, Richmond, voted unanimously in favor of approving the Constitution of the United Church of Christ.

Mt. Zion church, near Mebane, N. C., is having special services each evening next week with Rev. Reuben Askew as guest speaker. Holy Communion will be observed Maundy Thursday.

One Great Hour of Sharing was observed at Lakeview, Burlington, March 12. This church has been invited to share in an Easter sunrise service at Union Ridge.

Holy Week services at Newport News will be sponsored by various groups: Palm Sunday, Deacons; Monday, Dollar and Hardcastle classes, Guest Night; Tuesday, sponsored by R. L. House and Pearl Baker classes, Family Night; Wednesday, Golden Rule and Progressive classes, Guest Night; Thursday, communion; Friday, sponsored by high school classes, Youth Night.

Two churches in the Western North Carolina Conference are using the World Council of Churches' Bible study book, "Jesus Christ the Light of the World" during Lent — Albemarle on Wednesday evenings and High Point on Sunday evenings. It is hoped that churches not using this during Lent will use it before next fall when the World Council meets in New Delhi.

Mrs. Calvin J. Felton, wife of the interim minister, is leading the study of: "Luke's Portrait of Christ" First, Portsmouth Women's Fellowship.

Rev. G. H. Veazey has resigned his pastorate at Lakeview Church near Burlington to take effect May 31. He does not have definite plans for the future, but indicates that he is not ready for retirement.

Maundy Thursday at 8:00 p.m. The Christian Temple, Norfolk, will not only observe Holy Communion in a candlelight service, but the choir will sing Maundy's sacred cantata, "From Olivet to Calvary."

March 5, Dr. John G. Truitt assisted the pastor of Bethel Church (N. C. and Va. Conference), Rev. Bill J. Traylor, in baptizing four young people and conducting the Lord's Supper. He also brought the morning message.

Prayer group discussion topics at Church of Wide Fellowship Southern Pines, during March: Judas and Predestination, Facing Disappointment, The Personal Relevance of the Cross, and Resurrection: Personal and/or Universal.

This evening (March 21) Sunday school superintendents, assistant superintendents and ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference are meeting at Berea church for supper and a discussion of worship. Donald R. Taylor, president, will be in charge. Mrs. W. B. Williams and Miss Grace Spivey of Newport News will present a worship program, following which worship materials and planning of services will be discussed.

A LENTEN MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

THE PLACE OF PRAYER

"And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed."

Luke 22:41

In the awful hour of Gethsemane Jesus turned to an accustomed place of prayer. Luke in his inimitable way points his finger at the very spot: "And when he was at the place!"

His disciples had gone with him sensing something beyond their ken. He had taken the three with him to the very place, and he went on "about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed." Notice the language, "a stone's cast", — remember how Jesus said: "But thou, when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seest in secret shall reward thee openly." The dark night and the low-hanging branches of the olive trees closed the door! And "he kneeled down, and prayed."

Back there in the dark streets of old Jerusalem low whispered plans were being made! And here Jesus, who had gone about doing good and good only was saying, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."

The apostle Paul writes: "Being in the form of God... took upon himself the form of a servant... humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

At our own place of prayer let us kneel in secret and give him our renewed allegiance and love. Let us remember wherein we have failed him who said on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And may his Spirit speak to us! Amen.

NEWS FROM PLEASANT GROVE

By Mrs. Dolan Talbert

The Pleasant Grove Christian Church (near Bennett, North Carolina) held its annual harvest festival in November with fine results. A ham supper was served by the ladies early in the evening, after which an auction was held. Many items were sold, such as pigs, feed, home grown, and home canned foods, furniture and many homemade items such as quilts.

The various committees were very grateful and appreciative of the co-operation of everyone who helped, from the young people selling tickets, to donations and work on the part of many adults, which all added up to a big success. The proceeds, which amounted to $566.70, were added to the building fund for a new church.

* * *

The Women's Fellowship of Pleasant Grove started off their new year by providing the ham supper in connection with the church Harvest Festival.

Family devotional books have been provided for each family in the church and additional copies for the pastor to give to sick and shut-ins in the community.

A committee is selected each month to make contacts with all visitors to our services. This committee is also in charge of flowers to be placed in the church each Sunday.

For their Christmas project they selected a family in the community with five children and sponsored gifts for each child.

Arrangements are being made to show the film series, "The Life of Christ."

* * *

The Fellowship Hall at Pleasant Grove (near Bennett, N. C.) is getting a new "face lifting." The men are painting and the ladies are buying material and making new curtains for the windows. A partition is planned to close the kitchen off from the rest of the building. It is hoped to have this completed when the Western N. C. Laymen's Rally meets there in April.

Franklin, Virginia, has community Holy Week services. The pastor of our church, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, will speak at the Good Friday service at the Baptist church. Following the community sunrise service, our Pilgrim Fellowship will sponsor an Easter Breakfast at the church.

NEW MINISTER AT ROSEMONT

By Ellen M. Hewitt, Reporter

A get-acquainted buffet supper was held for Rev. Carroll W. Lewis and his family on Monday evening, March 13. About 250 attended to welcome the new minister, and each family contributed to the meal. It was a very good opportunity for informal visitation among the members, and everyone enjoyed the good fellowship. Following the meal there was a "song-fest."

Our new pastor, Rev. Carroll W. Lewis, has resumed our Sunday evening services. They have been very well attended and are enjoyed by all. Their informal atmosphere is the perfect closing to a Sunday of worship.

Rosemont will hold a Maundy Thursday Communion service as part of our Easter services. This communion service is planned to observe the night of the Last Supper to give emphasis to the meaning of Easter.

WOMEN HONOR RETIRING PRESIDENT

At a recent Sunday morning service at First, Church, Richmond, Mrs. J. Everette Neese presented a Life Membership Certificate to Mrs. Dennis F. Cofer, retiring president of the local Women's Fellowship. Mrs. Cofer has served the Woman's Fellowship for many years as its president and under her leadership it has made significant contributions both to the local church and Our Christian World Mission.

At a social given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Cofer, the Woman's Fellowship gave them a beautiful brass lamp for their country home. The women regret their loss in the retirement of Mrs. Cofer. Due to the illness of the first vice president, Mrs. Neese is serving as president until June.

"The Man Who Captured the Multitude" will be the Palm Sunday sermon theme of Rev. J. E. Neese at First, Richmond, when children will be christened and members received. Holy communion will be observed on Maundy Thursday.

During Lent attendance at worship services at Franklin have increased because the Women's Fellowship was responsible for attendance the first two Sundays, the Men's Fellowship the next two, and then the Pilgrim Fellowship.

Time For Decision

This week and next is the time for us to fall into step, as did the Disciples in the long ago, with the Good Master who walked with steady tread towards the Holy City and the Heavenly Kingdom.

It will be easy for us to consider the difficulties involved, and the risks to be run. We know that Jesus met opposition in Jerusalem, and that his approach to the Heavenly Kingdom led through the Garden of Gethsemane and across the hill called a skull — that on a cross he gave up his spirit to the divine Father. This knowledge sometimes frightens us, especially if our path seems to lead in such direction.

But we need not be afraid. Next Sunday is known as Palm Sunday, a reminder of the time when multitudes followed Jesus, sang his praise, and even wanted to crown him king. The music of those faithful Jews who were going to Jerusalem for the Passover has sung down the corridors of centuries and great choirs in our time sing with delight: "I know that my Redeemer lives." The greatest music of all ages centers in Holy Week and Easter. It is music — filled with unspeakable joy.

When you enter church next Sunday, remember Jesus in the temple. It is said that he looked around, and did not like what he saw. Hucksters selling doves, sheep and cattle were not inducing people to pray. Money changers were not teaching honesty in exchange, and the temple was not made to appear a place of solemn sacrifice by the people who were getting rich by furnishing, at a price, the kind of money acceptable as an offering in the Holy Place. We know they were wrong — those salesmen and money-changers. But what of us? Are the songs we sing in keeping with our real desires? Do our actions square with the words we speak and the prayers we say? Remember: Jesus knows what is in the heart. The offering we make may be the best we can do, or it may be just a hand-out, perhaps less than we would offer the girl who served us a meal in a hotel. Yet we would "kid" ourselves into believing that ours is a sacrificial gift worthy to be offered to the God of all the earth and to his Son who died on Calvary.

Suppose a Jew were to enter church and sit beside you next Sunday. Would that disturb you in any sense? Or it might be a neighbor of another social strata, or the Negro who works with you through the week. Or perhaps someone from another nation could share your hymnbook. Would that delight your soul, or would you be a little uneasy because of the stranger in the midst? Well, such things are worth thinking about when we are all "het up" and ready to criticize and condemn those who defiled the temple that Sunday when Jesus looked about and found it disturbing to his honest heart and pure soul.

The Monday story of the withered fig tree is strange to us. Jesus never destroyed property or people. We may not understand this story. But we certainly can look into our own experience to see if we are really bearing the fruits of righteousness. Saint Paul told the people of Galatia that among the fruits of the Spirit are "love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control." Look again: can you and I find such fruits in the lives we live? If not, there is only one certain end. We are worthless, and will ultimately be destroyed.

Monday and Tuesday we may well read again carefully the record of discussions held by Jesus in the temple. A wide variety of people questioned him. His answers were clear and concise. Wisdom and right were on his side, and he put his enemies to shame. Will we also be put to shame when we read what he said and measure it alongside of the lives we live daily?

Wednesday was a good day. There is no record of activity. It is likely that Jesus rested in the home of friends in Bethany. Martha and Mary lived there with their brother Lazarus. So did other friends. A quiet day with Jesus is the "better part" which enriches the life of every Mary who seeks it. Let's leave Him there in Bethany, in the quiet and affection of those who meant so much to him. Let him draw from them the courage, faith, and devotion needed for the days to come. No words need be spoken between friends like Jesus and those in Bethany, so there is no record of the day. Mary never forgot it. Neither will we forget those delightful moments when the currents of our souls are entwined about the spirit of Jesus.

Yes, this is the time for our decisions. It is only fair for Jesus to know whether we are with him or against him. For those who have never decided to follow the Master, it is time to arise and go with him. For those who have promised, it is time to check on conduct to see if promises and actions coincide.

Let's put it this way. What are we doing to win the world to Christ? How long has it been since we asked anyone to come to church, or to become a Christian? How much money have we given during the past year for overseas missions? If you are a member of the Southern Convention and gave your share of the Apportionment last year, the answer to your question is that you gave slightly less than fifty cents during the whole year. This year the asking is a bit more, but not enough to get a steak dinner. Oh yes, we give to a lot of other things. But the world is cracking up while we eat steak dinners, ride in fine cars, and fly through the air at remarkable speed. Isn't this a good time to consider our stewardship to the Man on the Cross?

"Love your enemies," said Jesus to people who had fiery tempers. That is what he did. For almost twenty centuries people have loved him. Nobody cares about Pilate, or the Caesars who strutted and killed in their time. It is harder to love than it is to hate, but it works much better. Brutality in the Congo — missionaries mistreated, etc. — makes our blood boil, but one of our retired missionary Negroes is eager to get back to Africa to bring strength and courage to his friends of other years. He loves them, and it is love that wins in the long run, not hate.

Those who walk through these solemn days with Jesus will doubtless find a glorious Easter dawn.

(A Chat with Children)

More mystery and possibly more misinformation surrounds the camel than any other animal. Always associated with the old world, the camel is not, so far as known, originally of that part of the earth, but of the new world. The earliest camel was found in Mexico.

Scientists have produced no satisfactory link connecting the camel with his original abode, and because of this he is listed with the Llama family. Biblical recollections are possibly the means of associating the camel with portions of Africa. The truth is that in Asia there are many more thousands of camels than there are in Africa.

There are two types of camel — dromedary and bactrian. The dromedary is the one-hump and the bactrian the two-hump species. The dromedary is slender, and because of this and the prominence of the hump, is thought to be larger than the bactrian. This is not the case, for the bactrian camel is ponderous, a much heavier animal, possessing a thick body, short legs, and long, thick hair.

The bactrian camel is of a single type and may be found in nearly all parts of Asia. This camel is used principally for heavy transportation and travels at the rate of three to four miles an hour. His record for endurance is rarely ever surpassed.

In the sandy deserts of many parts of Asia the only mode of travel and the transportation of goods is the camel caravan — hence ships of the desert. Through many centuries the camel has filled this important place in the lives of the natives. The ability to travel for days without food or water is not surpassed by any other animal. Neither is the camel's ugliness.

The camel has three stomachs. In 30 or more rounded cells in the first stomach water is stored for a long journey. Before the march is started the camel is fed and much salt added to the food so as to create a thirst, causing the animal to take on an extra amount of water. During the journey water stored in the stomach cells is emptied into the other two stomachs.

The automobile has largely displaced the horse in the United States, and in many other parts of the world, but there is no land mode of transportation to supplant the camel in the sandy, wind-swept deserts of Asia.

A Look At Ourselves

By George D. Alley

What could possibly be of greater concern to the sincere Christian, as he seeks to make individual preparation for the celebration of Easter, than to take a long, careful look at himself? Is it not the very thing we need to do if we would set our spiritual selves aright? Is it not our whole purpose to eliminate from our usual way of life those attitudes and habits which deter us in our reasonable service, and to substitute for them those virtues which are the essence of Christian character?

This we cannot do alone. But, with God's help, we may make a sincere attempt at a renewal of our best selves. The wisdom of our spiritual heritage would insist that we may do this only as we become less and less concerned with self and more and more obedient to the purposes of God! The best Christian, then, is obviously the person who thinks of self not at all, but is too busy doing God's will to ever question His plans or the reasons for them. Few of us can hope to succeed in moving from where we are, in the realm of the spirit, to where we ought to be in the few short weeks which remain before Easter Day this year — but we can begin! And if the Gospel record is as clear about such matters as it seems to be, then we may be sure that God is more concerned with the direction in which we are going than the distance we have already come along the right way.

A BETTER IDEA

By Rev. Robbins Ralph, Supt. Florida Conference

"Buying book is good idea," said bright and attractive Indian Christian minister addressing American audience. "Buying book is good idea. But" he added, "reading book is better."

Very practical idea from Oriental man, background of mystical other-worldliness, maybe. American audience smiled, saw point of better idea. Some in audience bought book or two, perhaps a few read same. This listener did not buy or read — only pondered better idea.

Better Bible Idea

Having Bible in house good idea, too. If no Bible, buy one. If no money, maybe Gideons supply guest room. But reading Bible is better idea, no? So simple! Reading Bible before breakfast, after dinner. Reading out loud in family, reading silently by self. Very good idea. Why have Bible unless read same?

Best Idea

Read Bible to find Word of God. Go to church to hear word of God. Very good idea, none better. None? Well, one, maybe.

Hearing will of God is good idea, surely. But doing it, living it, is better. Bible says it best. "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only (James 1:22). How to check best idea? Try same.

"MISSIONARIES"

Our Bayside church in its NEWS refers to members who have moved away as their "missionaries." Reports were given in the February 8 issue of the John Hestads at Fort Richardson in Alaska; the Peronis in San Juan, Puerto Rico; the Jacob Millers in France; Walter Arnold in Roanoke, Virginia, who had been chairman of the church finance committee; and the Cummings in Richmond, (Mrs. Iris Cummings served as church clerk from the organization in 1954 until they moved in 1958). The church now has 406 members, several of them scattered around the world.

MRS. KIMBALL LEADS STUDY AT ELON

By Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, Sr.

Under the leadership of Mrs. W. J. Andes, president of the Woman's Fellowship at Elon College, the organization is apparently having progressive meetings at the home when each circle meets once each month and at the general meeting held quarterly at the church Parish House.

Monday evening, 7:30 o'clock, March 13, a splendid attendance was present for the general meeting and a book review.

Mrs. J. G. Truitt presented the devotional: "Prayer In The Life of Christ." Following this Prof. Charles Lynam, head of the voice department of music at Elon College, sang "The Lord's Prayer," accompanied by Mrs. Alfred Hassell.

Mrs. Robert Knowles introduced Mrs. Robert Kimball of Burlington who in a most charming manner gave the foreign mission study book review: "Into All The World Together."

A number of short reports were made. Officers of the organization other than Mrs. Andes are: Mrs. Robert Knowles, vice-president; Mrs. W. E. Burke, secretary; Mrs. Earl Danieley, treasurer; Mrs. L. D. Martin, historian; and Mrs. A. L. Hassell, pianist. The department chairmen consist of seventeen members of the Fellowship. There are seven circle leaders.

Hostesses for the above meeting were representatives from the circles. They were: Mesdames G. O. Lankford, T. A. Boland, J. B. Long, N. R. Franks, J. T. McLoud and Miss Virginia Bradshaw. Mrs. Leroy Hughes served as chairman. A social hour with refreshments was enjoyed.

ACTIVITIES AT SHELTON MEMORIAL

By Mrs. Isabelle Lewis

The Women's Fellowship of Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth, Virginia, served Sunday evening refreshments and provided a pianist for a songfest at the USO in January. More than 100 servicemen attended. Recently they served a spaghetti supper to the young people in appreciation of their help in Sunday school and choir.

"Choir Appreciation Sunday" was observed March 19. March 22 the teachers meet to plan for Vacation Bible School.

The women prepared layettes for North Dakota and have sent materials to Micronesia. The layettes were dedicated Sunday, March 5.

The young women are preparing some 300 Easter eggs, proceeds from which are going to new parsonage fund. The senior women's group had a successful barbecue supper March 8.

March 26-April 2 special Holy Week services will be conducted nightly by our pastor, Rev. Willis E. Joiner. There will be a candlelight communion service Maundy Thursday.

A young girl in the Orthopedic Hospital at Gastonia, North Carolina, was made very happy and appreciative on Valentine's Day with a surprise gift of a dozen red roses. They came to her because Mrs. Grant Burns, wife of our pastor, had a loving thought and shared her thoughtfulness with the Women's Fellowship and other women of Carolina Church.

Laura Jane Murray has been a patient at the hospital for several months. Even though "Janie" is away from her friends, she is not forgotten. We miss her sweet and cheerful smile, and the courage which is outstanding in one so young, but most of all we miss her faithful attendance at the church she loves.

We are sure "Janie" and her mother, Mrs. Ealer Murray, desire and would appreciate your prayers for her recovery.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS AT LEBANON

By Mrs. Carlton Scott

Since our pastor, the Rev. Lafayette T. Wilkins, encouraged more of the members of Lebanon Church, Semora, N. C., to subscribe to The Christian Sun, our Sun agent, Mrs. Ezra Stowe, proudly reports that we now have 15 new subscribers in addition to our former ones. We hope that in time all of our members will take their church paper.

Valued Member Of Mt. Zion

Miss Georgia Bradley (born March 10, 1882) has played a very important part in the history of Mt. Zion United Church of Christ, Route 3, Mebane, North Carolina. She united with the church by profession of faith in August 1896 at the age of 14 years, and she is the oldest member of the church from the standpoint of membership.

When the Women's Fellowship (Missionary Society at that time) was organized in 1916, Miss Georgia became the first president of the organization. She is still active in the Women's Fellowship, church, and Sunday school.

She was treasurer of the Tinnin Endowment Fund of the church from 1932 to 1953 (21 years), and also served as treasurer and missions treasurer of the church for a good many years.

In August 1958 she gave the church one and one-half acres of land as a site for the parsonage.

Miss Georgia is very much interested in the Children's Home at Elon College and contributes to this very worthy cause. Due to her health and age she doesn't get to attend the services of the church as she would like to do.

"A Cedar Of Lebanon"

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Bliss, West Newton, Massachusetts, chairman of the Board of Trustees of International College, Beirut, Lebanon, is showing friends an unusual Christmas gift he received from the First Congregational Church of Amherst, Massachusetts. It is a small cross fashioned out of cedar wood which his grandfather sent to the Amherst Church from Lebanon 91 years ago for a new pulpit.

The story of Dr. Bliss' Christmas gift begins in 1867 when there appeared in a religious magazine, Hours at Home, a story about a pulpit desk in a little country church in northern Pennsylvania, veneered with cedar wood taken from a branch of the largest tree in the forests of Mount Lebanon. Among the interested readers were members of the First Congregational Church of Amherst, who were busy building a new sanctuary. They thought it would be nice to have a new pulpit made from a cedar of Lebanon.

Their wish was conveyed to the Rev. Dr. Daniel Bliss, a member of the church, who was serving the Board in Beirut. In an exchange of letters Dr. Bliss wrote that "without attaching any sacredness to timber that grows on Mount Lebanon, we are pleased with the thought of sending a good log of the same wood that King Hiram so many centuries ago sent to King Solomon."

First Attempts Failed

The first summer Dr. Bliss tried to get a log, he failed. Twice sickness prevented him from even reaching the mountains. Finally, in November he succeeded in climbing to the forest on the slope of Mount Lebanon.

"I started at half past two o'clock in the morning, rode twenty-five miles on horseback, changed horses and rode five miles more on to the summit of the mountain," he related in a letter home. But before he and his three helpers could fell the tree they had selected, a storm arose and forced them to descend, and they returned to Beirut. There they found the vessel which was to have taken the cedar log to Boston grounded and a total wreck.

Dr. Bliss wrote that he was "inclined to give it up as a bad job." But a young Amherst woman, whose identity remains a mystery. persued him to make another attempt. "Your remark that you did not like to give up anything that you had undertaken," he wrote to her, "appealed to a sentiment which I have long cherished. I made up my mind at once that you should have a cedar log."

Rescued From Oblivion

Once again, Dr. Bliss and three Arab helpers ascended the mountain in the spring of 1868. They found the same tree which Dr. Bliss had selected the previous year. The winter winds had toppled the big cedar and all that remained to be done was to trim the trunk.

They worked with axes "as dull as a grub hoe" to cut off a section about seven feet long and one and a half feet thick. It took them three hours, and with grunts and groans, they succeeded in rolling the log down the mountain by late evening.

Dr. Bliss decided the easiest way to transport the cedar log from the mountain village to the sea was by camel. He found a man and sent him with his animal out of the village to pick up the piece of timber. Four days later man and camel appeared without the log. The driver declared that his camel could "do no more

THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL

We built that house and watched each beam

That brought fulfilment to our dream;

On spacious ground we watched it rise,

A picture house before our eyes.

And when at last the house was done,

We made it home, and had such fun
In planting grass, and shrubs and trees,

And thanking God on bended knees.

And from that house by day and night,

We sought to serve with all our might

A host of homeless girls and boys,

And make a home, with all its joys.

And, ah, how quickly years have past,

The time to go has come at last;

We've wrapped that house in love and prayer

And left it to another's care!

SOMETHING

I am not doing anything of myself. I am merely a channel for . . . something.

What is this something? I cannot define it fully. It is the force in the universe that makes men love goodness, even when they turn away from it. It is the power that holds the stars in their orbits, but allows the wind to bend a blade of grass. It is the wisper in the heart that urges each one to be better than he is. It is mankind's wistful yearning for a world of justice and peace.

work for a month."

Said Dr. Bliss, "this was his way of saying 'the log was very heavy and please give me a little more money'." The money was paid and the log delivered to a packet bound for Boston. The ship's captain was a personal friend and transported his cargo free.

When the cedar arrived in Boston, it was sawed into lumber and put to season. The pulpit was designed by a cabinetmaker in Amherst and installed in 1869.

Success At Last

By 1946, when renovations were being made in the sanctuary, the pulpit was showing its age, and it was decided to replace it. Until early this year it was stored in the church basement.

Three years ago it occurred to Mrs. Charles E. Stebbins, the church secretary, that it would be nice if the old cedar pulpit could be enjoyed once again in some way by the congregation. She hit upon the idea of making little crosses out of the wood. Each member could carry home a bit of the tradition and sentiment of the church.

It took thirty hours to dismantle the pulpit. With the help of a band saw a small group of men of the church sawed out the tiny crosses and applied a hand rubbed finish to each one.

The crosses were sold at the church's annual fair held in December. As a gesture of appreciation to the man who had sent the cedar 91 years ago, Mrs. Stebbins sent a cross to his grandson in Boston.

Eastern Virginia Women's Rallies

Mary H. Booth, President
E. Virginia Women's Fellowship

If Eastern Virginia Women are confused because of reports of conflicting dates and places regarding Spring District Rallies, please forget everything else you have heard and read and remember:

Norfolk District will meet at Bayside on April 5.

Suffolk and Waverly Districts will meet at Cypress Chapel on April 6.

It became necessary to make changes when we learned that our speaker could be in Eastern Virginia for only two days because of her heavy speaking schedule. We feel fortunate to have Mrs. L. T. Schoen, Chairman of Stewardship of National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women, as our guest speaker. Her topic is "Opening Doors."

Suffolk and Waverly Districts will each hold its own business session in the afternoon. Mrs. George D. Underwood, Jr., will preside at the Suffolk District and Mrs. J. Franklin White will preside at Waverly District meeting. Mrs. Mahlon K. Hassell will preside at Norfolk District Rally and business session.

TO REACH CYPRESS CHAPEL

Because members of the Waverly District may not know how to reach Cypress Chapel, where they are to hold a joint rally with the Suffolk District, the pastor, Rev. Ellis N. Clark, sends the following directions:

From Waverly, take Route 460 to Suffolk; in Suffolk take Route 13 and 32; follow Route 32 for eight miles south, where there is a large sign "Cypress Chapel" pointing to the left at Knight and Brinkley Grocery Store. It is then only about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile to the church.

Mr. Clark adds: "We hope they find the way. We are looking forward to having a good number present from the Waverly District."

mission enterprise. This is obviously not a philosophy for immature Christian church members who find it hard to see beyond their own doors. Money, members, time and concern must be diverted and these are too often felt to be indispensable. Here, however, one must face up to the purpose of the church and the ultimate challenge of the individual church member. We are called into the Christian Community to fulfill the mission of Jesus, the Christ. Where is the mission fulfilled greater than in the realization of a new mission group in a new community?

Another more practical aspect of this concern grows out of the fact that many of our established churches are located in old communities with little hope of growing in the decades ahead. They will do well to hold their own. Here then is a way that a fellowship may extend itself into new areas and gain new life through extension, thus fulfilling the Christian mission responsibility locally and also keeping the trust of the founding fathers.

The Southern Convention needs more established churches with vision and mission concern to go literally "into the highways and hedges" with new work.

Church Extension:

A RESPONSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHED CHURCHES

By Carl Wallace

Expanding suburbs of our cities and towns are no longer mere probabilities. They are easily discernible to the casual Sunday afternoon viewer. Whose responsibility is it to plan for and help in the birth of new churches in these exploding situations?

The first answer, no doubt, would be the mission boards but this is only part of the truth. An established church in a particular community has tremendous advantage over a state or national board. Proximity means knowledge of the area, possible interest in the area, possible families of an established church in the area, and a mission outreach that is near enough to be understandable and appealing. If our mission boards could be looked to for secondary support by established churches in the venture of mission enterprises in new communities, then the project would undoubtedly have far greater chance of success. Also, the boards could devote their limited resources to work in areas where we have no churches at all. This procedure has prevailed in some places in the past to the credit of the established churches. In other places this has not been the case and our extension work has suffered.

Forces within the established church often tend to war against a

MISSION STUDY AT ROSEMONT

By Mrs. Dewey Jones

The Women's Fellowship of Rosemont Christian Church, South Norfolk, Virginia, enjoyed an evening of fellowship and a delightful covered dish supper February 6.

The theme of Worship, "Into All The World Together," was carried out with the decorations of the tables and bulletin boards. Place mats were maps stressing Goodwill, Witness, selflessness and Missions; also on each table was a lighted world globe surrounded by miniature replicas of the people of the world. World Fellowship napkins tied over oranges to represent the world were used as favors.

After the supper, Mrs. H. C. Davis, a former principal of Princess Anne Courthouse School, gave a most inspiring and revealing review of the foreign mission study book, "One World, One Mission."

Following the book review we returned to the social hall for coffee and cake and more friendly Christian fellowship.

Africa Opportunity Fund

A Project For Children And Youth

The biggest news of 1961 will probably be about Africa. The "dark continent" is lighting up with fires of discontent and race conflict, and also with beacons of progress and new liberty. What is happening in Africa will change our world, for better or for worse.

We have an opportunity to do something about these great events in Africa. This chance is ours through the Africa Opportunity Fund sponsored by two great agencies of our church: The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the American Missionary Association.

The Africa Opportunity Fund was started with a gift of $65,000 from the American Board, but it needs a great deal more help from people all over America in order to do the big job which Christians have on their hands in Africa. Here are some of the things the Africa Opportunity Fund will accomplish with your help:

Give special training, on the job, to African pastors who have had too little schooling and too narrow an experience to lead their churches effectively in these critical days.

Enlarge facilities for theological education to five times their present limited capacity.

Stimulate a crash program to train school teachers and administrators here and in Africa, and to expand high school facilities.

Recruit and send skilled American teachers for emergency short-term service while Africans are educated.

Assistance to persons deprived of liberty, jobs and property because they have championed human freedom.

Food, clothing and shelter where emergency relief is needed.

Provision of administrators and technicians for posts of critical responsibility in churches and public agencies while Africans are being trained for these positions.

Contributions to make this program possible should be sent to Africa Opportunity Fund, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts. Since this is a project over and above regular Our Christian World Mission efforts, no apportionment credit can be allowed for gifts to this Fund.

An attractive poster describing the Africa Opportunity Fund is available on request from the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

This project is planned for church schools using closely graded, elective or other materials, or for church schools and other church groups desiring additional giving suggestions. Church schools using Pilgrim Series materials will find missionary giving suggestions in their regular curriculum courses.

More than 100 were in attendance for the supper and mission evening at Oakland church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, March 1. The theme was "One World for Christ." Sponsored by the Women's Fellowship, arrangements were under the direction of Mrs. P. D. Howell, Jr. and Mrs. R. V. Knight.

A candlelight communion service will be held at First, Burlington Thursday evening, March 30. At this time members of the pastor's class on church membership, which has been meeting Friday afternoons, will join the church.

Adidome

- 26—Miss Dorothy Williams, a British subject born in South Wales, is registered nurse and midwife who served 15 years as a missionary in the Belgian Congo before going to Adidome. After a day in the hospital wards, she returns in the evening to tell Bible stories and sing hymns to her patients.
- 27—Dr. Margot Windisch was born and raised in Germany. After her husband's death (when she was 35) she studied to be a medical doctor. Since 1951 she has been on mission staff; she is one of the busiest doctors in Ghana, supervising several clinics.

Atakpame

In the Republic of Togo, which is a small country on east side of Ghana.

- 28—Rev. and Mrs. Charles Hein are an interesting couple — she was a member of the French Reformed Church; he went to Europe as president of the United Student Fellowship and later as secretary of the ecumenical work camp program of the World Council of Churches. They met in 1950 at Ecumenical Institute at Geneva, Switzerland. Since 1955 they have been missionaries to the Evangelical Church of Togo, directing the training school for Bible teachers and providing literature for the churches.

Ho

A city of 35,000 which is 100 miles north of capital of Accra; government center; Mawuli Secondary School located here.

- 29—Mr. and Mrs. David Desmond arrived in Ho in 1952 and began work in school with 90 students — today enrollment is 400. He is head of the science department and supervises electrical supply to campus and water purification equipment, as well as audio-visual aids. She is school nurse and mother of four young children.
- 30—Mrs. Vivian Hazel went to Ho in 1955 with two small daughters, following the death of her husband, a Congregational Christian minister. She is head of home economics department of Mawuli School, plans menus and buys food for 400, and is housemother to 60 girls.
- 31—Mr. and Mrs. Willis Kaufman went to Ho in 1959 — before that he was a research engineer for Shell Oil Company! He now teaches science at Mawuli. He received his M.A. from Duke University in 1952.

April

- 1—Mr. and Mrs. Albert Schwenke went to Ho in 1953 — before this he was an accountant. He is treasurer and accountant of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church in West Africa. His hobby is developing new breeds of fowls to aid African farmers. She works with Women's Bible Class and sewing classes.

Youth Faces The Future

"We are united in the purpose . . .
 "To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.
 "To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.
 "To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

Pilgrim Fellowship Program At Asheboro

To start off a good year at the Asheboro Church last spring we had a called meeting of the officers of the Pilgrim Fellowship. We wanted to plan a well-rounded program for several months in advance. The schedule was planned by the officers and approved by the members and advisors.

We began our program by studying, "What Is Pilgrim Fellowship?" After a short talk from one of our members, we divided into groups and discussed the topic. Discussions, we feel, will help us to express ourselves as well as help us to get more from our study. In November we began a study of world problems. By request of the members our advisors reported on the development and origin of the integration problem as they understood it. The members felt that a study was necessary before we began discussing it. Each member expressed his own opinion. Naturally the opinions varied. However, all agreed to pray about the situation and hope to find the much-needed Christian answer through prayer and seeking the mind of God. Our study was very informative as far as the young people were concerned and we feel we were helped by it.

In December we learned the use of parliamentary procedure. This study has added a very important element to our meetings. We observed the church's Annual Meeting, and afterwards we expressed our opinions about the procedure the church had used. We not only get more accomplished at our meetings, but we also know that we will be better prepared to be the future leaders of our church.

During January we learned about other religions of the world. Part of a Christian's duty is the understanding of other people's beliefs.

America was our topic for February this year. We began by discussing the opinions that foreigners have of American tourists. Our second discussion was the government of our own United States — how it began, and how it works today. It is necessary for a good follower of Christ to understand His way of life in order to fulfill one's duties as a citizen, and to be called a Christian.

Future plans include similar studies on the government and studies of world missions. Our discussions prove to be more effective than reports alone. In the Asheboro church we believe that we share a true bond of fellowship in recreation and in learning and worshipping together.

ALL ABOUT CAMP MOONELON

The following poem was written by Janice Earp, age ten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Earp, South Boston, Virginia. She is in the junior class at Center Church, and her teacher sent in this poem which Janice wrote following attendance at Moonelon last summer.

Going to camp is a wonderful thing
 To happen to anyone.
 You help in the kitchen, and in other work,
 But everything's filled with fun.
 While I was at camp, the rain was plenty,
 But a little rain hurts no one.
 We saw slides and had the "Camp Olympics,"
 But we were glad to see the sun.
 Every night we had vespers in our outdoor church,
 Up on Vesper Hill.
 Where everything is so beautiful,
 And God's word is no near and real.
 So if you enjoy swimming and playing ball,
 Go to Camp Moonelon,
 It's not bad at all!

ASHEBORO YOUTH VISIT HOME FOR CHILDREN

By Margaret Hall

Sunday, March 12, the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Asheboro church went to Elon College. Twenty of our P. F.'s left Asheboro at 9:30 a.m. We attended the morning worship service at the Elon Community Church, where we were given a cordial welcome by the minister.

After church we went to Moonelon where we spread our picnic dinner. Each member had brought a part of the meal. During the afternoon we visited the Elon Orphanage, where a gift of money was presented by our Pilgrim Fellowship President, Tommy Hodgin, to the Rev. W. W. Snyder to be used for the new building program.

When the buildings at the orphanage are completed, we can then feel that we had a part in their erection through our gift.

We returned home in time to attend the special installation service for the Rev. W. Walter Hall as pastor of the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church.

Youth Sunday was observed at Pleasant Grove (near Bennett, N. C.) the first Sunday in February. Speakers for the morning service were Levan Brady, Recil Leonard and Quayne Chilton. Others participating in the service were Edward Caviness, "Butch" Brady, Raeford Brady, Patsy Brown and Nancy Brown and the Youth Choir.

Sunday afternoon, March 12, 600 young people, all members of confirmation classes (church membership) of United Churches of Christ in the Cincinnati, Ohio, area shared in a convocation in Taft Auditorium. Fifteen young people from Rev. Richard Jackson's church shared in this inspiring service.

From Asia To Europe Often

Jacklyn Blake goes to Europe three or four times a week.

She goes by ferry from Asia and the trip takes 30 minutes.

Jacklyn, 22, granddaughter of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Fred Field Goodsell of Waban, Massachusetts (he taught at School of Missions several years ago), is teaching at the American Academy for Girls at Uskudar, a suburb of Istanbul, in Turkey.

"Though we live on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus Strait," Jackie writes, "our trips to Europe number three or four times per week."

Part of Turkey is on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus Strait and part of it is on the European side.

Jackie went to Turkey last summer with 28 other young men and women to begin three-year teaching terms under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

The Near East is not new to Jackie. She was born in Merzifon, Turkey, where her parents, the Rev. and Mrs. Everett C. Blake, were then teaching and has lived in that country for 13 of her 22 years. She speaks Turkish fluently.

Her parents now head the American Collegiate Institute in Izmir, Turkey. Her grandfather, Dr. Goodsell, served in the Near East for 23 years and later became the first executive vice president of the American Board's headquarters in Boston.

"Life is so stimulating, challenging, and enjoyable as I get reacquainted with the country and people that have been my home for so long," Jackie writes, "and as I adventure in a field which with its moments of discouragement has moments of deep joy."

Jackie teaches English and Music at the American Academy. Even though the students, aged 11 to 21, take an average of 13 subjects at a time, she says their enthusiasm is "boundless."

"They are enthusiastic, eager and very mischievous, all of which makes me love them dearly. This eagerness to learn presents me with a stormy and wavy sea of hands when I ask a question about the lesson and also keeps me hopping."

Jackie lives in a dormitory on the campus with the seventh and eighth graders. "The day of a dorm teacher never ends!" she says. "There are always little problems to be solved, hearts to be mended, noisy girls to be quieted and friendships to be shared."

The school, with an enrollment of more than 500 girls, has a Turkish and American faculty.

"It is thrilling to be here," Jackie writes, "and watch the birth of the Second Turkish Republic, the writing of the constitution, the trials of the members of the old regime, the struggles and successes of the military government in trying to lay the foundations of a new bi-partisan government. One is quite aware of a constant reaching out, a growth, a change — traits that are so characteristic of our world today."

Contrasts between the old and the new are evident everywhere, she points out. "Jets over Saint Sophia, smartly dressed women mingling with gaily costumed villagers, men in coffee houses watching opera-goers, horse-drawn carts and 1960 Oldsmobiles inching alone in the five o'clock jam all remind one of the ebb and flow of history in this city and this country."

Jackie attended Northfield School for Girls in Northfield, Massachusetts, and last June graduated from Oberlin College, Ohio.

Stewardship In India

By Mr. Sakharam R. Pandit
Bombay, India

Stewardship has become a vital aspect of the Church's program in the United States. The outreach of the Church primarily depends upon the commitment by individual members, in giving of their time, talent and money for extending the program. A pre-requisite of this commitment is the sense of expressing gratitude to God for all his blessings which are bestowed upon us freely and indiscriminately. The situation in India is different. As a result of missionary activity which is an extended arm of the Church in the West, the Church has been established in the country, and it has taken firm roots in the soil. But it still has to grow into a 'self-supporting and self-propagating Church.' That awareness is becoming increasingly evident now.

The National Christian Council of India is emphasizing 'stewardship' in the current triennium. A special portfolio has been established and a Secretary appointed for the purpose. Some basic material also has been published. But there are some inherent difficulties which will tend to obstruct if not prevent, any uniform method of approach. Some of these are:

1. Most of the Churches are in rural areas where there are restricted means of communication, and people with modest means.
2. About 80% of the Church membership is either illiterate or semi-literate.
3. There are varying shades of differences in cultural backgrounds.
4. The problem of languages is not insignificant. We have too many of them.
5. For any aggressive type of promotional work the leadership is far too limited.

And yet, the situation is challenging, and calls for systematic planning and presentation. Any program will necessarily have to be adapted to suit local conditions prevailing in different areas. The N.C.C. has also planned to hold a conference, early next year, to which will be invited stewardship leaders from different geographical areas, when some of these problems will be discussed and methods of approach will be determined.

I have started my preliminary investigation in my own language area, Marathi, in West India. At present I am collecting data to find out what the present per capita giving has been in rural and urban areas. I am greatly encouraged by the response, and particularly by the willing cooperation of missionary colleagues and national leaders. In Bombay, we have launched the 'every member canvass', in our Church. The members of the Church Session have taken up the program in all earnestness. I feel that it is going to be a fascinating experience for me, as I make progress in the study.

Youth work: with my background of educational work I have always enjoyed working with young people. Youth activity is organized to some extent in large cities and towns; and the movement is gathering momentum in villages also. Youthful energy and aggressive enthusiasm only need a touch of proper planning and direction. I am hoping that I shall be able to use the Audio Visual equipment which I have brought with me from the United States, to promote these activities, more effectively than I have done so far.

Elon Seniors Score High On Exams

By Luther Byrd

There were a number of Elon College seniors who scored high on the recent Graduate Record Examinations, which were administered here and at universities and colleges throughout the United States and which furnish a basis for comparing Elon students with those of other institutions of higher learning in various parts of the nation.

Three of the Elon seniors stood out in the Social Science Division, among them being Barnard Burgess, of Elon College, who is majoring in history, and Herbert Hawks, of Louisville, Ky., a physical education major, each of whom had a score of 610 on the test, high enough to rate them in the top 15 per cent in the nation; and Randolph Williams, of Burlington, a mathematics major, who had a score of 590, enough to rate in the top 20 per cent nationally.

Burgess also scored well enough in the Humanities Division to tie with John Williams, of Virginia Beach, Va., an English major, for the top score of 510, a score which placed them in the highest 11 per cent in the United States. Also scoring high in the humanities was Danny Gee, of Burlington, who is a major in history and business administration, with a score of 600 and placement in the upper 13 per cent in the nation.

Completing a truly outstanding record on the series of tests, Burgess was also the highest ranking student in the Natural Science Division of the tests, making a score of 700 and gaining a place in the top 4 per cent in the nation. Kenneth Price, of Danville, Va., who is a chemistry major, was close behind in this division with a 690 score and placement in the top 5 per cent nationally.

There were also six of the Elon seniors who scored high on the advanced tests in various areas. William Parham, of Henderson, was in the upper 18 per cent in chemistry; Barnard Burgess, of Elon College, was in the upper 20 per cent in history; Herbert Hawks, of Louisville, Ky., was in the upper 20 per cent in education; Annie Edwards, of Gibsonville, and Anne Vickers, of Ridgeway, Va., were both in the upper 24 per cent in education; and Kenneth Price, of Danville, Va., was in the upper 27 per cent in chemistry.

The statistics were compiled and released from the office of Dr. H. H. Cunningham, dean of the college, under whose direction the examinations were administered on the Elon campus. Following a policy adopted several years ago, all members of the senior class at Elon are required to take the Graduate Record Examination each year.

ARE WE PLAYING AROUND WITH GOD?

By William T. Joyner

It is a sad fact that many people have forgotten to take God seriously any longer. So many reveal by their actions that, to them, the church is of no importance whatever. For instance, if a person spends Sunday morning in bed rather than in church, he is saying in effect; "My sleep is more important than God." If he carries on his work on Sunday rather than God's work, he is saying: "My job is more important than my church."

In these and so many other ways we try to play around with God, but we must be reminded that the Kingdom of God is not to be taken lightly and that GOD WILL NOT BE MOCKED!

Elon College Community Church was blessed with special groups of visitors March 12: Fraternities, sororities, Girl Scouts and Brownies. Two Girls Scout troops and one Brownie troop meet in our parish house.

The Elon College Choir will present Bach's "Christ Lay in the Bonds of Death" next Sunday afternoon, March 26, at 4:30 in Whitley Auditorium.

KNOW OUR MISSIONARIES

Our churches in the Southern Convention, while helping to support the world-wide missionary effort of the denomination, are now giving special attention to 13 missionaries of the American Board. They will be introduced to you during Lent, which is known as our "Mission Period."

ISABEL HEMINGWAY, R. N.

Isabel Hemingway, R. N., has seen service as a nurse in both North China and the Near East. She is now on the staff of the Gaziantep Hospital, Gaziantep, Turkey, teaching in the School of Nursing.

Miss Hemingway, a fourth generation missionary, was born in Taiku, Shansi, North China, and her first assignment under the American Board was at Taiku. When the Japanese occupied the city in World War II, she surmounted every obstacle to keep the Nurse Training School there in operation. Finally recalled to the United States, she later returned to China under UNRRA and ultimately found herself in Taiku again.

In 1952 she was transferred to the Near East Mission, working with the American Board clinic there and serving as nurse at the American Boys School at Talas.

Christ, Our Living Lord

Background Scripture: John 20:11-22.

Devotional Reading: I Corinthians 15:14-22.

Memory Selection: Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. John 20:21.

The Lesson for today has a dual background — AN EMPTY TOMB and A LOCKED ROOM. Significant events took place in both places.

An Empty Tomb

According to John's story, Mary Magdalene was the first person to come to the tomb of our Lord. She loved Jesus much, for he had done much for her — he had cast "seven devils" out of her. And she could not wait for the dawn to come — she came to the tomb sometime between three and six o'clock in the morning. Only a great love would prompt a lone woman to go at that hour to a grave! And especially when she knew that the grave was guarded by a squad of rough, rude, raucous soldiers. But because she loved much, she ventured much.

When she arrived at the tomb, she got the surprise of her life. The great stone which had been placed at the door of the grave on Friday night was moved back, and the body of her beloved Master was not in the grave. It was too much for a lone woman to handle, so she ran into the city, looked up Peter and John and told them her strange story. And off they went. John, the younger of the two, outran Peter and arrived first at the Tomb. Looking in he saw the orderly arrangement of the burial clothes, and he realized what had happened. Not what he had read in the Scripture convinced him, but what he saw. Peter, always impulsive and impetuous, went into the Tomb and he too was convinced that Jesus had risen. And back they went to their homes. It is to be noted that neither of them saw the Risen Lord.

It belonged to Mary Magdalene, according to John's gospel, to be the first person to see the Risen Christ! The disciples might go back to their homes, but not she. She stood there weeping, as if her heart would break, indeed it was breaking, when a strange thing happened. There appeared unto her two angels who asked her why she was weeping. "Why am I weeping?" she might have asked in shocked surprise. "I am weeping because somebody has taken away the body of my Lord, and I do not have any idea where I can find him!" Turning around, and seeing somebody whom she thought might be the caretaker of the garden, she poured out her woes to him. And then there came the magic word "Mary!" It was her Lord, risen and alive! "Master," she exclaimed. The stars all came back into her sky when she saw and recognized her Master alive again. And obeying his command, she hastened to go back to tell the disciples that she had seen the Lord!

Why did Mary not recognize Jesus? For two reasons. Because her tears had blinded her eyes so that she could not see. We need to be reminded that in times of sorrow and bereavement, much of our sorrow is selfish. It is of our loneliness and loss and desolation that we are thinking, and we overlook the fact that our loved ones have gone to be the guests of God. This is natural and inevitable, but we must never allow our tears to blind us to the glory of heaven and of eternal life. Tears there must be, but through the tears we must glimpse the glory. Once again, Mary did not recognize Jesus because she was looking in the wrong direction. She was looking at the empty tomb, and not at Jesus. When we stop to think of it, our loved ones are not in the grave. What we put in the grave is only the worn-out bodies of our loved ones. The real person is not there; the real person is in the heavenly places in the fellowship of Jesus face to face, and in the glory of God. Alan Walker tells about a remark which a young woman made at a funeral which for the people for which it was held, was simply a mere form — they had no Christian connection or Christian faith. After the service was over, the young woman looked into the grave and said "Good-bye, father!" Well that may be all right for people who have no Christian faith and hope. The Christian can say it, but he can also add "Until we meet again!"

This section ought not to be concluded without calling attention to the fact that the Master's first words to Mary was a command to "share the good news." She was to tell the other disciples. There are many occasions where an offering for missions is in order, but none more appropriate than at Easter. We Christians do have good news of great joy for all peoples — Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world, is alive and alive forevermore.

The Locked Room

Just as the grave could not hold our Risen Lord, so neither could a locked door keep him out. In fact it is impossible to keep Jesus Christ out of any situation. This is strikingly shown in the incident which happened on the first Easter evening. The disciples, still shocked by the tragic events of Good Friday, and stunned by the strange events of that Easter Sunday, were gathered together in a home somewhere in Jerusalem. They had locked the door, "for fear of the Jews." They knew the bitterness and the vindictiveness of the Jews, and they were afraid that their turn might come next. And suddenly Jesus came and stood in their midst. He greeted them with the words "Peace be unto you" and repeated it further to reassure them. He showed them his hands and his side — he gave them positive marks of identification. "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." That is putting it mildly to say the least. We can hardly imagine how they did feel.

And then he gave them a commission which the Church must never forget. One writer calls it "The Charter of the Church." It means three things: a. It means that Jesus Christ needs the Church — he is dependent upon the Church to get his work done. b. It means the Church needs Jesus — the Church is absolutely dependent on Jesus. c. It means that the Church is fit to be the messenger and instrument of Christ only when she loves him and obeys him. The Church is the body of Christ, and He is the Head of the Church. She must follow the will of Christ.

And then "He breathed upon them, and said 'Receive ye the Holy Spirit!'"

Varied Events At Home For Children The Promised Peace

By J. Everette Neese

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Work continues to move along with our new cottages. Today (March 14) they started assembling the steel for the roof. Soon both cottages will be under roof. Tomorrow afternoon several members of the Board of Trustees will meet with several members of the staff in selecting color schemes for the ceramic tile, painting and the soft tile for the floor. We are hoping very much that by the last of May or first of June we will be able to occupy these buildings. March 26, at 2:30 in the afternoon, the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association will meet to make plans for the next meeting of this group. We plan to have open house for our new buildings the day the Alumni Association decides to meet. We hope you can be with us on that day for we know it will be a great one for all of us who have an interest in our Children's Home.

Dear Friends:

Should you happen to visit our older girls' dormitory anytime between now and Easter you would find much activity going on. Like any teen-age girls, they are getting ready for Easter. Those who can sew are making their own outfits. Others with the help of the seamstress, Mrs. Sykes, are getting their outfits ready. Several weeks ago we carried them to the Haw River Remnant Shop operated by Mr. Hugh Cummings of Burlington, where they picked out their material and necessary accessories for their outfits. Mr. Cummings is very kind to give these girls the material for their Easter outfits.

Easter is now less than two weeks away. We are not only anxious for all our boys and girls to be adequately clothed for this particular occasion, but also for the spring and summer season that is to follow. We have already heard from several sponsors who want to share in this responsibility. This is in particular appreciated when we have a week like this one when we can report only $960.75 for the entire week when we need a minimum of $1,700.00 to operate per week. For almost a month now we have been well below the $1,700.00 per week we need to receive to operate our Home successfully.

Sunday, March 12, a group of young people from the Asheboro Church Pilgrim Fellowship, along with their counselors, visited our campus. They came to Elon College for the day, attending morning worship at the Elon College Community Church, enjoying a picnic lunch at Moonelon and then making a tour of the college and our Home for Children. We were happy to welcome this group to visit our Home, meet our children and staff and see first-hand some of the work we are doing. During the coming spring and summer months we hope that many such groups will visit us as we are always glad to have you.

On the last Sunday in this month we will again recall Christ's entry into the Holy City. Palm Sunday is a day of triumph. It celebrates a victory not of war but of peace. The King of Peace entered the Holy City amid the shouts of the multitude, "Hosanna to the King of Glory!" The same city that acclaimed him wildly was to be the place of his crucifixion only five days later.

Everything about this triumphal entry proclaimed that it was a mission of Peace. In his characteristic modesty, Jesus did not plan any fanfare. He simply and quietly rode into the city on a donkey. The enthusiastic multitude soon took up the shouts of praise, and Jesus allowed them to do it. But worldly applause was never his purpose.

He calls us to peace. We are to have inner peace that is far deeper than a superficial "peace of mind" that refuses to face facts. Our religion is no escape from reality, but rather a facing of it at its most meaningful points. Inner peace comes when our hearts are fixed on God.

Let us also be at peace with our fellowmen. Well do we know the tragic results of conflict, misery, violence and destruction; and yet we go on our ways or think we can escape the consequences. Whatsoever we sow, however, that shall we also surely reap. The only answer is the way of Christ, the King of Peace.

We should and can be at peace with God. Let us listen to his word, obey his commandments, and yield our hearts in faith to his leading.

"Peace" with God may mean that we shall become deeply disturbed about injustices in the world of our day. The Christian conscience is a sensitized, not an aesthetized one. The poverty, distress and hunger of people in needy areas of the world will claim our attention. The "Peace" of God will not lull us to sleep, but will keep us gloriously awake.

Lebanon representatives at the district laymen's meeting at Ingram church recently were H. G. Earp, E. M. Wells, Sr., E. M. Wells, Jr. and the pastor, Rev. Lafayette T. Wilkins who introduced Superintendent Clyde L. Fields, who was the speaker of the evening. The next meeting will be at Lebanon in June.

In Memoriam

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

BOYETTE

We, the members of the Men's Bible Class of the First Congregational Christian Church of Hopewell, Virginia, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Walter L. Boyette who passed away June 26, 1960.

He was a faithful member of our class, having a perfect attendance for seven years although he lived ten miles from the church, and many times he attended under adverse weather conditions. He was loyal to his church.

We miss his presence among us. Our deepest sympathy goes out to his family; we commend them to the care of our Heavenly Father.

Be it resolved that a copy of this letter be given to his family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Members of the Men's Class,
Hopewell, Virginia

HOLLAND

We, the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, Holland, Virginia, wish to express our deep sense of loss in the passing of Mrs. Annie Holland on January 25, 1961. She was a most beloved and faithful member, a woman with simple tastes, friendly spirit, and loving character. To know her was to love her.

At all times she was faithful in her service to her church and her Lord. For several years she was unable to attend the services or other organizations of the church, but she never forgot to send her contributions for the advancements of God's kingdom.

Because of our love and appreciation for one so faithful, we offer these resolutions:

First: That we extend to her loved ones our sympathy.

Second: That we keep in our hearts the memory of her beautiful life.

Third: That a copy of this memoriam be sent to her family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be kept in our church records.

Mrs. C. A. Saunders
Mrs. C. R. Howell
Mrs. Mills March

MORGAN

We, the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay a tribute of love and respect to the memory of Thomas William Morgan, who passed from this life on February 13, 1961, at the age of 72 years.

Mr. Morgan was a life-long member of the church. He was a faithful husband and devoted father. He was quiet and unassuming in his manner, and a sincere friend to all who knew him.

The community in which he lived has lost a faithful and loyal citizen. His passing has left a feeling of sadness among his friends and loved ones that only time and God's grace can lessen.

The church extends to his family love and sympathy and commends them to the love of our Heavenly Father.

Mrs. Carrol Howell
Mrs. Mills March
Mrs. Clarence Saunders

HARRELL

We, the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Mr. Jobie Thurston Harrell, who passed away February 15, 1961.

In the community there is a deep sense of the loss of a neighbor and friend who was always ready to help in all undertakings.

He was a loyal and devoted member of his church and Sunday school class.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First: That we bow in humble submission to his will and look forward to the resurrection.

Second: That we extend our deepest sympathy to the family in their sorrow and bereavement and point them to the Lamb of God who can dry our tears and heal our broken hearts.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun, and a copy be entered upon the church records.

Mrs. Mills March

An unusual announcement on a church bulletin: "The Church Athletic Committee will meet March 15. Mr. Hubert Henderson, assistant director of the N. C. Recreation Commission and Joe Davidson, director of the Burlington Recreation Commission, will meet with our committee. Final plans for our grounds will be made at this time." The church? Union Ridge, where Rev. Winfred Bray is pastor.

Whom God sends, he empowers. With the task there comes strength for the task. When the Holy Spirit comes upon a person or on the Church, each is reawakened and recreated for the task.

It will be noted that no arguments have been given in these Notes in behalf of the Resurrection. The background of what has been written is the assurance of the fact that Jesus Christ did rise from the dead. These Notes have been written with the purpose of showing the implications of that fact. The Resurrection as a historic fact has little significance. The Resurrection as a personal experience has great significance. It is one thing to believe that Jesus rose from the dead. It is quite another thing to have an experience of the Living Christ.

A testimonial dinner in honor of the Rev. William P. Smith's fifth anniversary as pastor of Richfield United Church of Christ, West Richfield, Ohio, was held March 10. An interesting feature: Tickets were offered on a "family plan," with the price of each ticket decreasing as the family size increased! Mr. Smith went to Ohio from the Southern Convention.

No Longer I

By Robert V. Moss, Jr.

"...let him deny himself." Mark 8:34.

Aha! we say. So this is where the church gets the idea of self-denial for Lent. Jesus himself, it appears, demands of his disciples that they practice self-denial. And so what are we denying ourselves for Lent? Cigarettes? Movies? Candy? Television?

But notice that Jesus does not say, "Let him deny himself something he enjoys." The clause stops with the word "himself." We are called to deny ourselves. Nothing less. The same word "deny" is used to speak of Peter's denial of Jesus. And it really means to ignore or renounce. Let him renounce self. Let him refuse to make self the center of his life.

This is what Christian self-denial really means, and our puny Lenten "sacrifices" make a mockery of the summons of Jesus. In fact, we sometimes hide behind this kind of isolated self-denial in order that we may not have to face up to the demand for radical denial of self.

It is Paul who clearly interprets the meaning of these words of Jesus when he writes, "It is no longer I who live, but Christ who lives in me" (Galatians 2:20). But perhaps he interprets the words even more clearly with his life. It is in the glad self-renunciation of a man like Francis of Assisi or Albert Schweitzer that we see most vividly what Jesus means.

(The above quotation from "Lenten Devotions" was quoted in several church newsletters.)

A Litany Of Love And Service

(Used at Sunday morning worship service at Midwinter Meeting.)

O God who art eternal love, and whose tender mercies are over all thy works:

Our hope and our salvation are in thee.

O God who hatest nothing that thou hast made, and art not willing that any man should perish, but that all should come to repentance:

Our hope and our salvation are in thee.

O God who didst so love the world that thou gavest thine only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life:

Our hope and our salvation are in thee.

Thy love is wise and holy; and thy justice is kind; and the wideness of thy mercy is like the wideness of the sea:

Enlarge our love, we pray thee.

Thou hast taught us in Christ not to seek vengeance, but to love our enemies, and to pray for them that despitefully use us:

Enlarge our love, we pray thee.

O Thou of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, we give thanks for all thy fatherly gifts, for the sweet bonds of kindred and friendship, for those whom we love and for those who love us:

Increase our desire to give and to bless.

Teach us how to promote peace on earth by good will and fair dealing among the nations, and make our land a strong pillar of that kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit:

Increase our desire to give and to bless.

Thou seest how far we fail and come short of living in thy great love; thou knowest our weak will, and the infirmity of a selfish heart:

Forgive us and help us, O living Lord.

As thy love was incarnate for us, so may thy love dwell in us and rule over us evermore in Christ:

Enter our hearts, O loving Lord.

Now unto him that loved us and gave himself for us, be all glory and praise and blessing, for ever and ever.

Amen.

Sing, Sing Glad Easter Carols

"Joyful, joyful, we adore thee, God of glory, Lord of Love; Hearts unfold like flowers before thee, opening to the sun above."

With such exultant joy as expressed by Henry van Dyke in these words millions of people will sing God's praises at this Easter. And surely they should, for Easter is the open door to life that is good, true, beautiful, everlasting. Join your neighbors, will you please, in the finest Easter service your church has ever had. Sing the anthems and hymns and make such gifts for missions as will show your deep loyalty to the God of Life. The first Easter made a difference. This one should, also. It will if you help.

The above picture was made last Christmas when this children's choir of Center church (South Boston, Virginia) sang for the first time dressed in lovely robes. Doubtless it will be singing at Easter, also, as it does from Sunday to Sunday under the direction of Mrs. Dwight Moore, the minister's wife. This picture is symbolic of the millions of children, young people, and adults around the world who will be singing joyfully at Easter: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Come to Church

The senior choir of Rosemont church, South Norfolk, Virginia, will present a cantata on Easter Sunday evening.

"The Power of the Cross" was the theme of Sunday morning services during Lent at Edgewood, Burlington. "Were You There?" was the theme of the Wednesday evening services. Communion will be observed Maundy Thursday evening and Easter Sunday morning. "The King of Kings" will be shown Friday evening, March 31.

"Easter, the Awakening," being presented for the 12th consecutive year at the Morehead Planetarium, Chapel Hill, may be seen through April 10. Nightly performances are given at 8:30 and matinees on Saturdays at 11:00 a.m., 3:00 and 4:00 p.m. and on Sundays at 2:00, 3:00, and 4:00 p.m.

Union Grove church, near Asheboro, is having special services March 30, 31 and April 1 at 7:30 p.m. with a former pastor, Rev. Bili Joyner, as guest speaker, according to announcement by the pastor, Rev. Billy Joe Willett. An unusual Maundy Thursday communion service is planned, following the preaching service. Groups of twelve will go to a special room and sit around a table much as did the disciples in an upper room long ago.

Rev. Collins Kilburn, new minister of our Raleigh church, will be one of the seven ministers speaking at the traditional Good Friday service to be held from 11:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m. at First Baptist Church.

Easter program at First, Richmond: Sunrise service at 6:00 a.m., led by the Pilgrim Fellowship; breakfast at 7:00 a.m. sponsored by the Pilgrim Fellowship; and morning worship at 11:00 a.m. with the topic "The Question About Immortality."

Our Asheville church will have services at 9:30 and at 11:00 on Easter. The women of the church will serve coffee following the first service. The services will not be identical — different music, and two different sermons by the pastor, Rev. Frank E. Ratzell.

VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL WORKSHOP

Rev. G. Julius Rice, chairman of the Eastern Virginia committee on Christian education, reminds churches in that area of the vacation church school workshop to be held at Bethlehem, Suffolk, Tuesday, April 4 from 10:00-3:00.

Leaders include Miss Martha Brittle, Christian education major at Elon College, Mrs. George Parker, and Mrs. Marin Underwood. "Baby sitters" will be furnished by the host church.

At the Palm Sunday service our Asheville church received "the largest class of confirmants we have ever had. These young people will have been in training for two months and will be well prepared for this most vital step in their lives." Adult members will be received at the Maundy Thursday service.

The Rosemont Laymen's Fellowship will have a dinner meeting April 3. Mr. William J. Story, Jr., superintendent of the schools of South Norfolk, will be the speaker. "He will be leaving the area soon, and this will be a good opportunity for laymen to hear him speak one more time," says Ellen M. Hewitt, Christian Sun reporter for Rosemont.

Senior High Pilgrim Fellowship at First, Greensboro, will meet Thursday morning at 7:30 at the church for breakfast and a brief worship service led by the pastor, Dr. W. E. Wisseman. Upper Junior class members and Pastor's Class members and their parents will have a Passover Supper in the Fellowship Hall at 6:30 Thursday, served by the deaconesses. A service of Holy Communion will follow, with members of the Pastor's Class being received into the membership of the church. Last Sunday afternoon the Junior High P. F. group shared an Easter program with men and women from the Masonic Home.

The young people of First, Newport News, will lead a worship service with communion on Easter Sunday at 7.30 a.m. The Women's Fellowship will serve breakfast to the young people immediately following.

First Church, Winchester, Virginia, is having a joint sunrise service Easter morning at 6:00 a.m. with Centenary Evangelical and Reformed Church. The service will be held in our sanctuary and followed with a fellowship hour in Whitten Hall. Our church will cooperate in the community Good Friday service 12:00-3:00 p.m.

A sunrise service will be held at 6:30 a.m. Easter in the outdoor worship area of our new Winston-Salem church, corner of Link Road and Irving Street. Breakfast will follow in the social room, "remembering the joy and awe with which the first disciples came together in fellowship following the discovery of the empty tomb." The pastor, Rev. John Lackey, suggests that some may wish to follow this by a walk through "God's Acre."

Rev. Frank E. Ratzell, pastor of our Asheville church, will be the speaker for the community Easter sunrise service, which is sponsored by the Central YMCA and held in the city auditorium. He is also the Wednesday evening speaker in Central Methodist church in one of the community Holy Week services.

APPLE'S CHAPEL

By Z. H. Thompson

The annual Sunrise Service will be held at Apple's Chapel on Easter morning at 5:15. It is entirely an outdoor service depicting the death, burial and resurrection of Our Lord. The program consists of readings, music, and action.

We give a cordial invitation to anyone from our neighboring communities to visit with us for this service. After the service we will serve a fellowship breakfast to everybody. We hope a lot of our friends will visit us for this special service.

A sunrise service will be held on the lawn at Great Bridge, Norfolk, Easter morning at 5:30 a.m. The Lillian Hall circle will serve doughnuts and coffee following the service.

"When History Held Its Breath" is the Easter sermon topic for Rev. Bill Simmons at Great Bridge. Palm Sunday evening our Great Bridge church and the Oak Grove Methodist Church had a joint candlelight communion service.

Members of St. Peter's have been given a special invitation to join members of First, Greensboro, in a sunrise service (6:00 a.m.) in the latter's church sanctuary Easter morning. Rev. Carl T. Daye, pastor of the new St. Peter's, will be the speaker. H. H. Jordan will preside and Donald Trexler will direct the senior choir in singing "Early in the Morning" and "In Joseph's Lovely Garden." Dalton Harper and two members from each of the four adult classes planned this service.

Community Good Friday service for Tryon, North Carolina, will be held in our church Friday from 12:30-1:00 with Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches cooperating.

Dr. William T. Scott will meet with the Franklin church to answer questions about the Constitution of the United Church of Christ April 5 when the church has its quarterly business meeting. This will be preceded by supper.

GOOD FRIDAY

Their shouts prevailed and Pilate decided they should have their way... They led him away to execution... Great numbers of people followed.

There were two others with him, criminals who were being led away to execution; and when they reached the place called The Skull, they crucified him there and the criminals with him... Jesus said, "Father, forgive them; they do not know what they are doing."

"Today you shall be with me in Paradise."

"Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit."

— St. Luke

This Is Holy Week

Farmers rushing to get land ready for planting, business men concerned with profitable transactions, sportsmen searching for another thrill, and all of us who are more concerned with the present panorama of events than with historic movements may forget, or never be aware of it, but this is the week remembered by followers of Jesus as the time when he established Communion, died on a cross, and arose from the grave. Christians call this Holy Week, for it is the sacred season when they remember the tragic crucifixion of the best Man who ever lived and the resurrection of the One who brought immortality to light. Christians would walk gently through these days, while the heart listens to the whisperings of him who faced death without fear and arose from the grave on a beautiful Sunday morning. In some lovely garden it may be that they, too, will hear the Master calling their names and sending them on some mission of delight.

Last week we left Jesus resting quietly in the home of friends in Bethany. Thursday was the time for the Passover Feast, which two of the disciples prepared in a large upper room in the home of Jerusalem friends. When evening came Jesus shared the feast with the Twelve. But, as so often happened, he added something new by asking the disciples to eat broken bread in memory of his broken body and to drink from a cup that would say in unforgettable action that they were bound to him in a new covenant sealed in his own blood.

The table talk as recorded in the Gospel of John (with shorter items in the other Gospels) makes home-life beautiful. The family that practices conversations at the end of meals will doubtless feel the nearness of him who said on such an occasion, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he give his life for his friends... You are my friends... I will not leave you lonely... I will come and receive you..."

After the Communion Hymn — Gethsemane. Who can tell that story? A garden, old olive trees, shadows of night, sleeping disciples, an agony of prayer, betrayal with a kiss, flashing sword, fleeing disciples, a good man captured by bad men — all this and much more in the symphony of human deeds that turned beauty into ashes, and life into death — music that is more than a dirge because it never ends until the Easter dawn.

Pilate, Herod, and the centurian could find no fault in the Man, but priests, rulers of the religion of the day, and those responsible for Jewish law could not be content until they saw blood trickling down from a cross where the good man died. Right they were: he had saved others, but himself he would not save. They could put him to death on a cross with all its disgrace, and fix a guard at his grave, but his character they could not sully, and his life they could not destroy. The body Joseph of Arimathea took down from the cross and laid in his new tomb waited only to the third day until it became active again. The disgraceful cross on which they crucified him in a fit of rage changed to a thing of beauty to be found in replica in a multitude of churches and hung about the neck of millions of devotees. Those who crucify seldom win.

Then Comes Easter

I must needs go home by the way of the cross,
There's no other way but this;
I shall ne'er get sight of the Gates of Light,
If the way of the cross I miss.

These words of Jessie Pound, sung for half a century, are more than poetic sentiment set to music arranged by Charles Gabriel. They point out the path that leads to something eternally important. Do not get stopped, even to gaze in awe and admiration at the scene on Calvary, and fail to arrive at Easter. The Gates of Light await us.

On that first Easter morning the men were absorbed with their worries, and were late about stirring out. Their Leader was dead; perhaps it was time to return to the fishing nets, and business as usual. But the women, and especially those who had been really bad, were up early to take sweet spices to anoint the one who had made life sweet and beautiful. Not much they could do, but what they could, they would.

It was still dark in the valley, but light streaked the sky beyond the eastern hills of Moab, when Mary of Magdala, the one out of whom Jesus had cast seven devils, and a few of her friends sought the burying ground in the garden of Joseph that Sunday morning. By the time they had found the place the sun appeared, round and red and beautiful, just over the mountains far beyond the Jordan. Birds sang among the blooming flowers, and the fragrance of the garden was sweeter than the perfume they had brought. A song struggled in their hearts for expression on their lips, a song of praise and gladness for the beauty of the day which the Lord had made. But how could they sing in the garden of death?

And then — "Why seek you the living among the dead?" The voice was angelic, and the question unanswerable. But they had seen him dead, and were willing to care for the corpse. What marvelous and stunning words: "He is risen." "Go, tell his disciples." "Mary." It is no marvel that they ran, not because they were afraid but because they were the first to know of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. They knew something that made them forget themselves, something that would change the currents of history. There was no time to loiter; no time to debate; no time to doubt. Easter had dawned; Jesus was alive; the world was new; life could last; the one they had loved was the Lord of Life.

"The way of the cross leads Home." Easter opens the door to the Homeland of the Soul. Wear, then, the flowers of springtime; sing the anthems of the church; make known to your neighbors that beyond darkness there is light, beyond death there is life; use all the media of modern communication to tell our troubled world that Christ is risen and in him we can have life abundant and eternal; tell all the little demigods who strut and boast that unless they can lead their followers through the grave to life everlasting their days are numbered and their best hope is in Jesus of Nazareth; let the message of Easter ring around the world on this Holiest of Holy Days. It is Easter; rejoice and be exceeding glad!

Of the many pioneer explorers of the vast Southwest portion of the United States, the one who did more than any other to open avenues for its early settlement was Francisco Garces, a Spanish missionary frontiersman. Little known to history, his achievements mark many historical milestones of the great Southwest.

Garces was born in old Spain, April 12, 1738, and received his higher education in Mexico. He was sent to the province of Sonora to open routes of communication between Santa Fe, then hub of Spain's northern frontier, and other portions of the unexplored wilderness out of which many future States of the Union were to be carved.

Joining the explorer, Anza, and later assisted by friendly Indians, Garces set out on horseback and first discovered an overland route from Sonora to California. Next he ascended the Colorado River from Yuma to Needles, Arizona, struck across the Mojave Desert, swung south, then north, and marked a trail to Monterey, California.

Retracing his steps to the Colorado River, Garces explored and marked other routes of communication. He reached his mission near Tucson, Arizona, after having been in the wilderness almost continuously for a year, and having traveled thousands of miles through territory never before touched by white men.

After extensive journeys, Garces and other missionaries established missions among the Indians by the consent of Salvador Palma, an important tribal chief. Gifts which Palma expected from the religious workers were not made and Garces and his associates were put to death on Palma's orders July 18, 1781.

However, the dauntless Garces had opened long trails that helped to spread human habitation over the broad expanses of the Southwest. The trails and the roads he blazed and marked for others are now a part of the nation's link of modern highways.

THE ETERNAL LIFE

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
God's mercy underlies.

And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar:
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

—John G. Whittier

Easter

Easter is here and blossom time; the music of young leaves, the unheard melodies of daisies in the grass where the footsteps of spring have found a resting place!

It seems so short a while since we gazed from our windows at the bare, sodden earth, where the small brown bulbs were still asleep, waiting... waiting...

During the last month we have caught the first notes of that wild music which has been gathering through the dark days of winter, and now the garden is full of sweet singing. Each blade of grass, each tiny drop of dew, holds a note of music; with the winter past, and the summer all before, even the rain has the sound of a song.

Today the great miracle of spring — old as the hills yet ever new — comes with a rush of joy to gladden the heart of the world.

Soft, pink bud, and every young and happy thing: we add it to our prayers that this rare loveliness may linger long for our delight.

Song and scent and blossom time: the Easter Resurrection is complete.

A LENTEN MEDITATION

EYE-WITNESSES

"Go your way, tell John what things ye have seen and heard."
Luke 7:22

I like that: Tell John what things ye have seen and heard! He will not be surprised. He will just be reassured. He heard the voice from heaven at the baptism saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased!

Perhaps we cannot be too certain just why John the Baptist sent two of his disciples to ask Jesus if he were the Christ, or must we look for another. Maybe he wanted the disciples to see him face to face. Maybe he wanted them to be witnesses to his works and words. Or perhaps John was frustrated, times were difficult then even as they are today.

Whatever John wanted he evidently was about to get it! Go tell him! Tell him what you have seen — the blind are given sight, the lame and cripple walk unhampered, even lepers are cleansed and healed, deaf ears are opened and the dead are raised! And if that is not enough tell him what you heard — the gospel being preached to the poor!

Upon that method the early Church was to move. Eye-witnesses were to go tell what they had seen and heard! They would be humble and wait for the power of the Holy Spirit — not procrastinate — but wait in prayer until power from on high be given them.

Ah, blessed are the eyes that see today, and the ears that hear today; and witness for him today with the beautiful abandon of those days. They went with the cross in their hearts, and his words still ringing in their ears. "Ye are my witnesses." Go tell what you have seen and heard.

Churches Feed The Hungry

By Geoffrey Murray
WCC Staff Writer

For the Rev. Archie Graber, Protestant missionary in war-torn Bakwanga Province, Congo, Christmas was no time of feasting, decorated trees, and merry-making.

Instead, he led the first United Nations trucks to bring food into an area devastated by tribal warfare and a policy of "scorched earth".

It was a dangerous operation because of the resentment felt by these African tribesmen for the United Nations. The trucks might have been captured by warring Balubas or Lulus and the men who drove them on what was an errand of signal mercy, imprisoned or killed.

But Archie Graber did not hesitate. Others might flock into Leopoldville to celebrate Christmas as best they may, but the star he followed led him from the capital to the Bakwanga.

The need was great and he was the one man capable of getting help started because he was equally trusted by both the tribesmen and United Nations officials.

His faith and courage were justifiable. The trucks went through without incident, and a beginning was made of providing emergency relief measures in the Bakwanga.

Those measures are most urgently needed. It is estimated by FAO officials that 20,000 children are starving in Kasai Province and that 200 are dying every day. Before the UN trucks got through, one of Graber's most horrifying tasks had been to bury many of those children. The FAO experts believe that one-third of them in the Province will starve to death during the next six months unless adequate food and medicines are forthcoming.

An outbreak of kwashiorkor, a deficiency disease — it is known locally as "the red-hair sickness" — has recently increased the emergency and complicated the task of giving relief. Kwashiorkor causes the body to swell and grotesquely lose its color. Altogether, there are 300,000 refugees in the Congo who need desperately to be fed.

On-the-spot officials of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations estimate that a sum of money equivalent to three million U. S. dollars ($3,000,000) is needed to alleviate famine in the Congo.

The World Council has appealed to its member churches for one million dollars for a broad program of aid ranging from immediate material relief to the establishment of secondary school training. These funds are channeled through the Congo Protestant Relief Agency (CPRA). Church World Service of the National Council of Churches in the U.S.A. has undertaken to raise $500,000 of this sum from U. S. churches.

But besides money, Christians have already sent goods or are giving their services and skills to the Congolese.

For example, the German churches have sent, in response to the World

First mission station of the Bremen Mission, now the national Evangelical Presbyterian Church, which the Board of International Missions of Evangelical and Reformed Church helps.

- 4—Rev. and Mrs. Eugene Grau were the first E. and R. missionaries in Ghana — 1946. He is president of the mission conference and principal of Seminary and holds many offices in interdenominational organizations. She is active in women's work.
- 5—Miss Esther Reimold goes from Peki Blengo over a wide area doing Sunday school and youth work. She graduated from Schauffler College in 1949 and went to Ghana the next year. She received her Master's Degree from Eden Theological Seminary in 1959.
- 6—Rev. and Mrs. George Snyder went to Ghana after 32 years as missionaries to China. He teaches in the seminary, serves as mission treasurer, is headmaster of a locally sponsored secondary school, preaches on Sundays, and gives organ lessons on the side. She teaches in the seminary and occasionally preaches.

Worawora

Town of 20,000 where government provided most of the funds for hospital and nurses' training school.

- 7—Dr. and Mrs. Richard Braun reached Ghana March 6, 1957 — Independence Day! They work as a doctor and nurse team, and care for three young sons — 6, 4, and 2 years of age. At present they are in the U. S., but expect to return to Ghana next summer. "Letters from Ghana," one of the interesting mission study books for this year is from their pens. His father is co-editor of United Church Herald.
- 8—Miss Elfriede Bubigkeit is a native of Germany where she received her diploma in nursing and midwifery. She works all day as midwife in Worawora hospital and is on call every night for obstetrical work. She manages to supervise the children's home, the laundry, and the sewing room, too.

Council's appeal, nearly one thousand tents. These arrived just before Christmas. Five hundred were immediately sent by air-lift direct to Bakwanga where the Congo Protestant Relief Agency is erecting them in the most suitable places.

The tents are being used as special feeding and first-aid stations at which refugees who are too weak to walk long distances to receive their rations will be fed and given whatever medical attention is possible under these conditions.

The tents were admitted free of customs duty and are described by the Rev. R. D. Bontrager, of the CPRA, as "the best Christmas present we could desire."

Again, two doctors, both former missionaries of the American Baptist Church, one of them a woman, have already arrived to work in the Congo. They have been recruited by the CPRA under what that agency has called "Operation Doctor". More doctors and many nurses will, it is hoped, be brought out under the scheme.

Of the two first arrivals, Dr. Dorothea Witt is serving at Lubondai, the Presbyterian Mission Hospital in the Kasai. The other, Dr. Oliver W. Hasselblad, will work at the Methodist Hospital at Wembo Nyama, also in Kasai. Both these doctors are now at their posts. They are rendering a priceless service in the promotion and organization of the medical program.

One of the handicaps under which church workers in the Congo are laboring in their task of bringing relief to the starving and the suffering is the exorbitant cost of transporting food. They will, therefore, be greatly cheered by the news that Norwegian Lines are giving free freight to shipments of milk powder, margarine, cod-liver oil capsules, flour, canned goods, and soap of all kinds for hospitals.

They will also be encouraged by the offers of all kinds. These include contributions from the Norwegian Students Association and the gifts of $14,010 from the people of Oslo and $35,025 from the Norwegian Government with the possibility of more to come when the situation in the Congo has been further discussed.

Until recently, the churches in the Congo were greatly handicapped by a serious shortage of manpower which

In the Cross of Christ I glory,
Towering O'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.

—Bowring

arose when so many missionaries were evacuated when the crisis first developed.

Now, however, about two-thirds of them have returned and are at their posts, so that currently about 800 Protestant missionaries are helping to fight famine and disease, to strengthen the churches, and to help in running schools.

One of these missionaries, the Rev. Glenn Rocke, who had previously served among the Balubas, has now joined the Rev. Archie Graber in the Bakwanga.

Graber's contribution to helping ease the Bakwanga situation has been outstanding. UN officials have turned to him for assistance and advice, and he is free to move and work among the tribesmen.

Too, the role of the Congo Protestant Relief Agency is of great significance. CPRA leaders, representing many denominations, began work so early in the troubled areas that they have gained experience that no other group has yet developed.

Consequently, the United Nations has delegated to them work of vital importance.

For example, they have now been given charge of three major hospitals and 33 clinics within the UN set-up. The UN also transports the food which the CPRA has collected, and takes charge of CPRA shipments from Matadi onwards.

This means that the cost of inland freight will be taken care of and the Congo Protestant Relief Agency will no longer have a difficult and wasteful problem of finding funds for this purpose. It can now use its money for other purposes.

The need now is for such supplementary food items as canned beef which can be imported duty free and transported to Bakwanga by the United Nations. This food will help to feed the children, the old, and the starving. The Congo Protestant Relief Agency considers that instead of its using the funds it has to buy goods of this kind, it would be better if relief agencies outside the Congo were now to ship these items for it to distribute.

Once the hunger problem has been conquered, the missionaries will be able to set about extending hospitals and opening schools to give the Congolese the education they need and so greatly desire.

The churches in the Congo have seen the need and are struggling, in the face of extraordinary difficulties, to meet it. In their extremity they are appealing to their fellow Christians throughout the world to help them, confident that they will not forget the words of their Lord and Saviour, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

THE PHARISEES

By L. B. Simmons

Repeatedly in the Gospel story, we are told about the Pharisees. Their names occur again and again. We read, for instance, that when our Lord went into the home of one of them to eat bread, "They watched Him." That seemed to be one of their favorite pastimes — watching others. The word "Pharisee" is a Hebrew word which means "Separated" or "chosen." They were the professional holy people. They were probably the most law-abiding people who ever lived. They kept all the laws most exactly — except one. They did not really love God. As a result, they distorted the idea of religion into slavish observance of all kinds of ceremonials, without directing them to the love of God and their neighbor. They watched their neighbors to find their faults. And so it was they were engaged in their favorite pastime of spying when they watched Christ. Their faultfinding put our Lord on the cross.

Important Meetings To Attend

VIRGINIA SUMMER SCHOOL FOR RURAL MINISTERS

N. C. WOMEN'S RALLIES

BURLINGTON DISTRICT

The Burlington District Rally will be entertained by the Elon College Community Church, April 12. However, because of a conflict in dates, the women of the church will be unable to provide the noon meal. Luncheon will be served in the Elon College dining hall, and it is absolutely imperative for everyone expecting lunch on this date to make a reservation. Mrs. William J. Andes, President of the Women's Fellowship at Elon, is taking reservations for the lunch, and they must be in to her no later than Friday, April 7. Each Women's Fellowship President in the Burlington District is requested to give reservations for her church women to Mrs. Andes, either by mail or by telephone. Those who make reservations will be responsible for them, and those who do not make reservations may have to eat elsewhere.

UNION HOLY WEEK SERVICES AT CHUCKATUCK

By William T. Scott

Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, is the scene of Union Holy Week Services Monday through Friday, March 27-31 at 7:45 each evening. Uniting in the services will be Whitehead's Grove Baptist Church, Wesley Chapel Methodist Church, and Oakland Christian Church.

The theme for the week of services will be "Going up with Christ to be Crucified." The pastors and choirs of the co-operating churches are each responsible for one of the services as follows:

Monday: Rev. B. V. Madison, of Whitehead's Grove Church, "Glorying in the Cross," special music by Oakland Church choir.

Tuesday: Rev. B. W. Coe, of Wesley Chapel Church, "People Jesus met on the way to Calvary," special music by the Whitehead's Grove Church choir.

Wednesday: Rev. William T. Scott, of Oakland Church, "Lessons from the Cross," special music by Wesley Chapel Church choir.

Thursday night there will be a Candle Light Communion Service, with brief messages by the pastors, the litany being read by the congregation, and the Bread and Cup will be served by two laymen from each church. Special music will be provided by a combined choir.

At the concluding service on Friday night, "The Seven Last Words of Jesus from the Cross" will be given in scripture, song, and story, with music by the combined choir.

This is the first year of union services by the three churches of the Chuckatuck area, and much interest is being manifested. The Chuckatuck Ruritan Club members are attending the Tuesday night service in a body.

RACE RELATIONS INSTITUTE

The 18th annual Race Relations Institute at Fisk University will be held June 19-July 1. Theme is "Human Values and Public Policy." Sponsored by the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council and our Council for Christian Social Action, the cost is $80 for the two weeks. Half scholarships are available. Write to Rev. Galen Weaver, 289 Park Avenue South, New York, for further information.

A PLEASANT TASK

The Finance Committee of Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, North Carolina, had a very pleasant task recently — the joy of allocating the $1200 given for "Our Christian World Mission" during 1960 which was over and above the apportionment.

They decided to give $500 to Elon College for Carolina Hall; and $100 to each of the following — new Garner church; ministerial students, Japan; multi-purpose food to be used by Dr. Ed Riggs in India; ministerial students, Bangalore, India; ministerial students, Silliman University, Philippine Islands; medical equipment, Wai Hospital, Marathi Mission, India; and Hino Rural Workers School, Japan.

Congratulations to Wake Chapel on such a fine record of giving! May other churches in the Southern Convention learn the joy of similar sharing!

PALM STREET CHURCH NEWS

By Mrs. James T. Winslow

There is a new tone in our services at Palm Street Church in Greensboro. We have a new organ which adds much to our services. We voted in our February business meeting to purchase an organ as soon as possible. The following Sunday we had the organ for trial. The true test came the third Sunday night in February when we had a candle-light communion service. There was no preaching or singing. People came and went between 7:30 and 8:30 to meditate and pray and then went to the altar for communion. Mrs. Odell Powell, our minister's wife, played the organ during the entire service, and the music was simply beautiful. Most of the congregation stayed the entire hour, just listening to the music. It was a most impressive service. Rev. Powell read scripture and served communion to three groups.

The Women's Fellowship will meet Saturday night, March 25 at the home of Mrs. James Hicks for our home book review.

The foreign book was given in January by Mrs. Tommy Hopkins at the church following a covered dish supper. The families of the church were invited to the supper, after which, the men washed the dishes while the ladies heard the book review. The men didn't know why they were invited.

Also, a word about our prayer meetings. We are having a contest in attendance between the men and the ladies, each Wednesday night. Of course, the ladies are ahead. But we are having good attendance, usually in the fifties.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY

This year the theme for May Fellowship Day (Friday, May 5) is The Churches: Free and Responsible. This is one of the three days in the year which church women are asked to observe with interdenominational services and is sponsored by United Church Women.

A complete packet of material is available from Office of P & D, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, New York for 50¢. Three or more packets to one address, 40¢ each. If you send payment with order, the postage will be paid. Orders must be in by April 21, or they may not be able to be filled.

ECUMENICAL INSTITUTE FOR LEADERS

"Our Unity in the Holy Spirit" will be the theme of the Sixth Ecumenical Institute for Christian Leaders sponsored by the southern office of the National Council of Churches. This will be held at Blue Ridge Assembly, Black Mountain, North Carolina, June 11-16.

The purpose of the Institute is to provide an opportunity for church people to study and worship together on an interdenominational basis and thereby have an ecumenical experience.

The Book of Acts will be the basis for Bible study, which will be led by Professor J. Howard Rhys, who is professor of New Testament, University of the South. There will be Workshops on various church concerns.

The registration fee is $6.00, which should be sent to Rev. J. Edward Lantz, Ecumenical Institute, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia. Room and board will be paid to the Blue Ridge Assembly. Write Mrs. H. H. Triplett, Corbin, Kentucky, for room reservations and family accommodations.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

SUFFOLK P. F.

Brenda Darden, Reporter

On February 11, 1961, the junior and senior high Pilgrim Fellowships of the Suffolk Christian Church jointly sponsored a barbeque supper. Because of the hard work and co-operation of the young people and their counselors, the supper was a success. The proceeds of the project will be used to pay each groups' apportionments to the Southern Convention.

On Sunday, February 12, 1961, a group of young people from the senior high Pilgrim Fellowship visited the historic site of Jamestown, Virginia. The trip was very interesting and was greatly enjoyed by all.

HOLY NECK P. F. REPORT

Trudy Fowler, Reporter

The Holy Neck Pilgrim Fellowship met in its regular bi-weekly meeting on February 26, 1961. The meeting was called to order by our president, Oscar Fowler, Jr., who welcomed the Whaleyville Methodist Youth Fellowship as our guests. We then played some get-acquainted games led by Paige March.

The game session was followed by a business meeting. A committee was appointed to look into several money-making projects which were discussed at some length during the meeting. We were told that we were to feed the laymen in March and the Ruritans in April.

Lenten devotional books were distributed, and we were urged to study them carefully.

The group was then divided into three commission groups for study and discussion.

We decided to have a scavenger hunt at our next meeting. Mrs. James Jones gave a program concerning prayer.

Refreshments were served, and the meeting was adjourned.

I am the resurrection and the life.

*He that believeth in me,
though he were dead,
yet shall he live.*

Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.

St. John 11:25,26

GETTING ALONG WITH OTHERS

How well you get along with others is largely dependent on how well you can relate yourself to people. This simply means being able to understand and accept people even though they are different from you. But you do not have to agree with others or even approve of some of their actions in order to respect them. What you do need is to identify with others — not for the sake of being liked by them — but in order to understand them. People who look down on those of a different social, racial, or economic group have not fully developed their ability to relate themselves to others. The kind of person whom others instinctively like and trust is sincere, dependable, honest, modest, with a sense of humor and the ability to accept criticism. The mature person can give himself to others, rather than demand from them. Ideally, the mature person can get along with practically anybody.

Yet some people have special difficulties with certain groups — little children, older persons, perhaps the opposite sex. If you acknowledge your problem and honestly try to put yourself in the other person's shoes, you'll take a long step toward maturity. We need to think more often of the other person. What can we do for others? How can we best express our appreciation for a favor done or an act of friendship? Do we see the many "good turns" we could do for others? How can we be helpful? When such thoughts become a part of our everyday living, and when the acts which stem from such thinking have become almost automatic, then we have reached a high point of maturity.

NORTH CAROLINA YOUTH WORKERS CONFERENCE

Adult workers with young people in our North Carolina churches are urged to take advantage of the Youth Workers Conference sponsored by the N. C. Council of Churches to be held at Camp New Hope, near Chapel Hill, Saturday, April 8. It is being directed by Rev. Robert Knowles. The total cost for the day including the noon meal is 2.50, $1.00 of which should be sent immediately to N. C. Council, Box 6637, College Station, Durham, N. C.

"Who Are the Youth with Whom We Work?" will be led by Rev. Bernard Meece, director of Christian education for Disciples of Christ; "What Are We Trying to Do in Our Work with Youth?" will be discussed by Rev. William McElveen, Moravian youth worker; and "What Does It Take to Work Effectively with Youth?" led by Mrs. Jefferson Campbell, Presbyterian of Durham.

The conference will last from 10:00-5:00. Camp New Hope is situated between Chapel Hill and Hillsboro on N. C. 86.

KNOW OUR MISSIONARIES

Our churches in the Southern Convention, while helping to support the world-wide missionary effort of the denomination, are now giving special attention to 13 missionaries of the American Board. They will be introduced to you during Lent, which is known as our "Mission Period."

MR. AND MRS. OTIS CARY

Mr. and Mrs. Otis Cary, third and fourth generation missionaries, respectively, in Japan, are well known to millions of Japanese.

Now professor of American History at Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan, Mr. Cary won the admiration of the Japanese through two books based upon his experiences in World War II. Serving with U. S. Naval Intelligence, he carried for a time the chief responsibility for the prisoner-of-war camps in Honolulu.

Said Prince Takamatsu, brother of Emperor Hirohito: "Of all the Americans I have known, my greatest admiration is reserved for Mr. Cary and the way he devoted himself to the prisoners-of-war."

In addition to teaching at the University, Mr. Cary is director of activities at Amherst House, a center of American Christian influence maintained by Amherst College.

Mrs. Cary — Alice Shepard Cary, M.D. — is chairman of the Interboard Medical Committee and medical supervisor of the 400 Interboard missionaries serving in that country.

DR. AND MRS. WILLIAM P. TOLLEY

Dr. and Mrs. William P. Tolley, evangelistic missionaries in Angola, Portuguese West Africa, are now working with the Portuguese and African churches in the Lobito area.

Dr. Tolley was educated at Elon College, North Carolina and Hartford Seminary Foundation, Connecticut.

A second son was born to the couple while they were engaged in language study in the village of Galamares, Portugal, in 1958. Their oldest son was born in Hartford, Connecticut, after their appointment as missionaries.

LOUIS BAILEY WILKINS

Louis Bailey Wilkins of Lennig, Virginia, is a teacher of English in the American College at Tarsus, Turkey. He is also serving as associate director of the college.

He is a graduate of Elon College, North Carolina, and during his high school and college years was active in the National Pilgrim Fellowship.

REV. AND MRS. ROBERT W. FAIRBANK

Rev. Robert W. Fairbank, a fourth generation missionary, and Mrs. Fairbank are now engaged in a city work program in India which includes the operation of a hostel for Indian boys who are learning trades in the mills of Sholapur. Mr. Fairbank is also in charge of rural work around Omanabad.

Mrs. Fairbank, the former Marie Lively of Oklahoma, directs a popular social center, the Gates Memorial Christa Seva Mandir. She has established a small doll industry that provides a livelihood for 18 Indian women. She is also giving much time to religious education.

MONTANA CHURCHES SHARE WITH ONE ANOTHER

An interesting story in sharing among churches is related in the February issue of Congregational Montana:

When Rev. Del Achuff came from First, Washington, D. C. to be pastor of the new Mayflower Church, Billings, Montana, he brought a pulpit Bible and marker and four offering plates from First, Washington. His home church in Brooklyn (which had disbanded) gave him brass offering plates, a large communion set, and Pilgrim Hymnals.

Then a new church was organized in Bozeman. Rev. Leonard Kover was happy to receive a communion service and Pilgrim Hymnals from a former parish, Hardin. The Mayflower church gave two of its offering plates from First, Washington.

Then a church was started in Helena. The Great Falls church sent Pilgrim Hymnals and church school supplies. Mayflower gave the other two offering plates from First, Washington and part of the communion set from Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, as well as some of the hymnals from there.

Sounds as though our churches in Montana know how to share when new ones are organized. Wonder if Southern Convention churches do the same, and we just haven't heard about it?

THEY LIVED THEIR FAITH

The above is the title of a new book by Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, following his history of the work of the American Board ("You Shall Be My Witnesses") which was published in 1959. "They Lived Their Faith" is a collection of stories of men, women, children and institutions which dramatize the work of the Church around the world.

It is a good book to add to any church library. The paper back edition is $2.50, while the hard cover is $5.50. Either is available from the American Board, Room 102, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

Rev. W. T. Scott, Jr., of Durham is member-at-large, class of 1963, of the executive board of the North Carolina Council of Churches. Chairman of the Commission on Ecumenical Relations for the Council is Rev. W. J. Andes, Elon College.

Easter Song

The world becomes a song of joy
At Eastertide, with melodies
Of singing birds and sparkling streams
And south wind strumming through green trees.

The world becomes a song of faith
At Eastertide, when flowers bloom
Like bits of rainbow on the earth
To banish winter's sullen gloom

The world becomes a song of hope
At Eastertide, when life revives
In blade and bough, and stifled dreams
Awake to challenge dormant lives.

The world becomes a song of trust
At Eastertide, when days afford
The joyous certainty we share...
The victory of the Risen Lord.

PLAY AT CATAWBA COLLEGE

Catawba College, the Evangelical and Reformed institution of higher learning at Salisbury, North Carolina, is producing a new contemporary drama, "Murder in the City," in collaboration with the Office of Communication of the United Church of Christ. The playwright is brought to the campus to observe and work in the production. This will be premiered in the college Blue Masque Theatre, April 20-22. Other news from Catawba is that the trustees have approved a plan to raise three million dollars to expand the college physical plant and endowment.

SERMON DISCUSSED

In "Congregational Montana" we read about the new Mayflower church in Billings which has divided its parish into seven area groups. The groups meet in the home of members on an evening the group chooses, to discuss the previous Sunday's sermon, copies of which are available after the Sunday service. Notes are to be sent to the pastor indicating where the group thought the sermon particularly helpful, puzzling, words that seemed unclear, the meaning of the sermon for them. As the superintendent of Montana, Rev. George Stickney, puts it, "This truly is an interesting experiment in communication."

"PEN PALS" DESIRED

The editor of The Sun has received a letter from Nigeria, Africa, saying that two African boys, twenty years of age, would like "Pen Friends" from America. Their hobbies are swimming, dancing, playing table tennis, singing and exchanging African items for American items.

The addresses are:

Ligus Joy, 7 Carr Lane, Lagos, Nigeria, Africa.

Richard Ola, 3 Carr Lane, Lagos, Nigeria, Africa.

SERMON QUOTES

"God help and God pity the man or woman who has everything to live with and nothing to live for."

"Every person who claims the name of Christian and wears the sign of the cross must know that it is his bounden duty and service to win someone for Christ. Just as much so as any man who has received the laying on of hands in the act of ordination."

"Where will you spend eternity is not a question to be taken lightly or brushed off quickly. Where will you spend eternity? Happy indeed is the man who knows the answer."

"I know of no blacker hell than to have everything to live with and nothing to live for."

The Source Of True Wisdom

The Source of Wisdom

Background Scripture: Job 28: 12-28; Proverbs 1:2-7; Ecclesiastes 2:13,14; James 1:8.

Memory Selection: If any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask God who gives to all men generously, and without reproaching, and it will be given him. James 1:5 (RSV).

We begin today a series of lessons, taken largely from the Book of Proverbs and from Job, with an occasional reference to the New Testament, especially the book of James. They deal with very practical matters, down-to-earth things. They represent the distilled wisdom of the ages. They are not going to be easy lessons to teach. Or for that matter to write about. Perhaps the best that one can do is to take a verse here and there, and expound it. Or to give a general exposition of the whole passage.

Wisdom and Knowledge

The writer makes a difference between wisdom and knowledge, or at least he calls attention to the difference, for the difference is already there. One may have a great deal of knowledge, and still not have much, if any wisdom. A man might well be a college or university graduate, and still not be a wise man. On the other hand, some unlettered and uneducated men and women are truly wise. They could not pass an elementary test concerning facts and dates and information. But they have wisdom and understanding far beyond more talented and educated people. Some of the most brilliant people in the world lack common sense and true wisdom. The wise man who wrote or collected what we call these "Proverbs" understood all this and underscored it when he wrote, "Get wisdom, but in all thy getting, get understanding." Knowledge deals with facts; wisdom is concerned with the meaning of those facts. Someone has pointed up this matter as follows: "Russia shoots rockets to the moon and photographs its far side, and yet will not believe in the God who made the universe. Russia has scientific knowledge — but does Russia have wisdom?"

Knowledge and Understanding

Another writer — Dr. Julius Mark — puts it thus: "Our major need today is not for more knowledge of how to fly thru the stratosphere, but more understanding of how to walk upright on the face of the earth like human beings created in the image of God. Not more science do we require, but more of the milk of human kindness. Not more bombs to destroy should be our aim, but more of the balm of healing and binding up the wounds of mankind fallen into disunion. Not more 'know how' but more 'know why.' Not more knowledge is our greatest need, but more wisdom."

Knowledge and Doing

One gets the impression in reading the opening words of Proverbs that if one has knowledge, if he knows, he will be a good man. Knowing was enough; if a man knows what is right he will do what is right. If men know collectively right from wrong, if they have wisdom and understanding, then they will live peacefully and happily together. It was as simple and easy as that! But it is not as simple as that. True wisdom may insure good conduct, but mere knowledge will not insure good conduct. The story is told about a minister who met a boy on the street one morning and invited him to his Sunday school, remarking "If you come to my Sunday school, I will tell you what is right." "Heck," said the boy, "I already know what is right." Our central problem in life is not knowing what is right — most of us know that; it is in not doing the right. We know, but we do not do!

This is not to minimize knowledge. Children and young people need a knowledge of right and wrong. But they need more than mere knowledge — they need motivation and power. There is a certain kind of knowledge which is power, e. g. scientific knowledge. But moral and spiritual power is a different thing.

The question which confronted the men who wrote the words which form today's lesson was "What is the source of true wisdom?" "From whence does it come?" "How does one get it?"

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," answers the wise man. The word "fear" as used here, does not mean to be afraid of. It means respect for, reverence for, humility toward. As Dr. McCracken translates these words, "Reverence for the Eternal is the first thing in knowledge." On one occasion the religious leaders of Israel were astounded at the wisdom of Jesus. "Whence hath this man this wisdom? Whence hath this man all these things?" Now Jesus had not had technical theological training. He never went to a Jewish Seminary or Divinity School. But he had wisdom, a profound wisdom, more profound than any man who ever lived. Through meditation, and profound thought, and an humble spirit, through obedience to the truth as it came to him, "He grew in wisdom" even as he grew in stature and in favor with God and with man. The truly wise man knows how little he knows. The truly wise man is humble. The truly wise man realizes that God is the source of all true wisdom. The fear of the Lord is truly the beginning of wisdom.

"If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God... and it shall be given unto him," wrote the brother of our Lord. And let him ask in faith, nothing doubting! Here is a wisdom, not of this world, available to all. It is not given to all men to have a large and wide store of knowledge. But even the humblest can have the true wisdom which comes from above, the wisdom born of reverence for God and given through sincere faith.

"And unto man he said, Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." — Job 28:28.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

APRIL 9, 1961

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, D. D.
Pastor of Berea Congregational
Christian Church,
Driver, Virginia

The Congregational Christian Service Committee maintains a hostel in its headquarters in New York, where overnight entertainment for church groups may be secured at a very moderate rate. Hostess is Mrs. Grace Riggs, former missionary. In 1960 4529 "bed nights" included 219 guests from overseas and 394 in youth groups.

Easter Activities Anticipated

Rev. W. W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our boys and girls at the Children's Home are anxiously looking forward to Easter Sunday. Some of them will be visiting sponsors and friends while others will be visiting relatives. This year their Easter holidays will be short because of Elon High School having missed some days because of snow during the winter. This year they will get only Easter Monday off.

As in other years our children and staff will share in the special religious services of Holy Week planned by our Elon Community Church. Palm Sunday evening some of our staff members will attend a pot-luck supper for prospective members. Also on that same evening our Junior High and Senior High boys and girls will take part in a special service climaxed with Holy Communion. Each morning during the week they will gather at the church at 7:45 o'clock for morning devotions. Then on Wednesday night all of our children, young people, and staff will go to the Community Church for a special mid-week service with the people of the community. Ordinarily we have our own mid-week service at Holt Chapel.

This week (week of March 19) has been a most interesting one for me. It was on a third Sunday in March 1942 that I preached my first sermon as a pastor at Mt. Bethel out from Reidsville, N. C. I was then a freshman at Elon College and under the care of Dr. F. C. Lester who was the Promotional Secretary of the Convention. This office is now known as the Superintendent of the Convention. You will be interested to know, I am sure, that Mt. Bethel was not only Dr. Lester's home church but also Dr. John G. Truitt's as well. On this third Sunday morning I had the privilege of visiting our new church in Garner where Rosser Lee Clapp is minister and doing an excellent work. Then on that night I began a series of services with Rev. Lacy Presnell at our Sophia church near Randleman. Rev. Mr. Presnell is also pastor-at-large of the Western North Carolina Conference. This week I have not only gotten acquainted with the people of our Sophia church but I have been able to visit a number of our ministers and churches in the Western Conference. Since I did not know this conference too well, this has been both interesting and enjoyable. We have been much impressed with the enthusiasm we have seen as we visited these various ministers.

We are also happy to announce that beginning with the month of April, Radio Station W. G. W. R. of Ashboro will join W. B. A. G. and W. B. B. B. both of Burlington in carrying our monthly Children's Home Program. The addition of this station will make it possible for most of our churches in the Western North Carolina Conference to hear our program each month. It tells of some phase of the work at the Home. We are hoping in the near future to add radio stations in other areas of North Carolina and Virginia where our churches are located.

Since Miss Melva Foster, secretary and book-keeper for the Home, is visiting her parents and sister in Birmingham, Alabama, there is no financial report. A full report will be given next week.

Carolina Reports Progress

By Doris Pender, Secretary

As we look back over 1960 in our church, we think that it was a good year. In the field of leadership, especially, were we blessed. Our pastor, Grant Burns, and his wife, Patricia, who have recently become the proud parents of a son, Daniel, make a team that is second to none. We feel that as surely as God called Grant to be a minister, He also called Pat to be a minister's wife. They are loved by our church and community. Our church has grown spiritually under his ministry.

Last year was also a good year financially. The church offerings were more than any other previous year. The church purchased adjacent property and removed from it a house that was an eyesore, landscaped the lot and sowed it in grass. The educational building was painted, and two rest rooms were added. Two classrooms in the church were refinished to match the sanctuary.

In our Sunday school we were fortunate to have Mr. Royal Councilman as our superintendent. He is a dedicated man who put forth every effort to see that our church school did effective work. He was also the president of the laymen of the church. This group has grown and done good work under his leadership.

No better leader could be found than Mrs. Hillary Jones as president of the Women's Fellowship. She is one who believes and practices in her own life that God and his work must come first. Our group has grown until it will soon be necessary to have two circles.

At the beginning of 1961, following our pastor's suggestion, the church created a new committee on stewardship and evangelism, which meets monthly. Mr. Councilman has had a meeting of the teachers and officers planning for increasing church school attendance.

If we, the members of Carolina United Church of Christ, do our part this year we will do a greater work for Christ than ever before.

Henderson Area Training School

A leadership training school is planned for April 16, 23, 30 at First Church, Henderson, with Antioch, Bethlehem, Beulah, Fuller's Chapel, Good Hope, Mt. Auburn, Mt. Carmel, Oak Level, Mt. Gilead, New Hope, Pope's Chapel, and Youngsville churches cooperating.

Classes are to be as follows:

Our Christian World Mission — Rev. Joe A. French

Teaching Children in the Church — Miss Ann Spain, teacher in Middleburg School

Understanding Youth — Charles Mason, principal, North Henderson Elementary School

Young Adult Work in the Church — Rev. Gale Brady

Sessions will begin at 7:00 each evening with a devotional service. Then there will be a class session, refreshments, and a second class session, which will end at 9:00. Each pupil is expected to buy a textbook, but there will no registration fee.

In Memoriam

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

EASTERN VIRGINIA TREASURER DIES

Sympathy of the Southern Convention goes to the family of G. Chapman White of Waverly, Virginia, who died March 21 following a heart attack.

Mr. White was a member of Spring Hill church, where he was a deacon and had been Sunday school superintendent for 25 years. He had served as treasurer of the Eastern Virginia Conference for a number of years, and had been clerk of Waverly Post Office for 29 years.

A graduate of Elon College, Mr. White was married to the former Judith Black. One daughter, Mrs. John Guy, one granddaughter, and a brother also survive.

Dr. Frederick K. Stamm, pioneer user of radio for religious purposes, died February 23 in Pennsylvania at the age of 77. He served three successive winters as an interim pastor at Congregational Christian churches in Florida following his retirement.

Mrs. Susie Howell Gregory, president of the Eastern Virginia Home and Foreign Missionary Convention of the Convention of the South and secretary of the Women's Fellowship of the Convention of the South, died March 8, 1961. Many of our Southern Convention women's leaders knew her. She was a member of Wesley Grove church, Newport News, and an associate member of Mt. Ararat church, Suffolk.

Rev. J. Frank Apple of Henderson sends us the bulletin from the funeral service for Rev. James Arthur Henderson, Sr., which was held March 4 at Antioch Congregational Christian Church, Townsville, North Carolina. One of the outstanding Negro ministers of our area, Mr. Henderson was for many years president of Franklinton Christian College. He taught school in Vance and Warren Counties as well as serving churches.

Presiding at the funeral was W. R. Collins, principal of Johnson County Training School. Participating in addition to Mr. Apple were Rev. T. H. Pettway, Rev. J. P. Mangrum and several laymen. Rev. F. A. Hargett of Greensboro gave the eulogy.

March 28, 1961

Rev. Riccardo Santi, Methodist minister in Naples, Italy, since 1898, passed away there at the age of 90. He was the founder of Casa Materna, where he has welcomed over 9000 abandoned children. His son, Dr. Teofilo Santi, was the founder of Casa Mia, our settlement house in Naples, and is its guiding genius.

Dr. Frank H. Peters died in Defiance, Ohio, February 19, at the age of 88. He was college minister at Defiance College 1920-29, the only full-time pastor in the history of College Christian Church. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Defiance 1918-1942. Following retirement in 1947 Dr. and Mrs. Peters returned to Defiance from Strongsville, Ohio. He had been an ordained minister 68 years and had held pastorates in Ohio, Iowa, Massachusetts and Virginia.

E. N. C. LAYMEN TO MEET

Eastern North Carolina Laymen's Fellowship will hold a rally Sunday, April 9, at McCuller's Ruritan Building near Saul's Barbecue south of Raleigh. The supper meeting will begin at 6:00 and reservations should be sent by April 5 to S. H. Ball, Route 3, Raleigh, according to the president, Joseph F. Ayscue.

Ed Langston, vice president, will lead the devotional service. Guest speaker will be Dr. Earl Danieley, president of Elon College.

A joyous Easter season is being observed at United, Winston-Salem, which held its first service in the new church building Palm Sunday. That evening a pot-luck family night supper was held in the social room with Miss Erika Arndt, an exchange student, speaking on "Religion in Today's Germany." Maundy Thursday communion service will also be held in the social room. Those in the membership class will be received into the church Easter Sunday morning at the 11:00 service.

My Thoughts At Easter

By Clair Wilkins

Liberty Church, Nathalie, Virginia

As we are permitted to marvel at the canopy of God's magnificent skies, and the earth all around is cloaked in beauty and warmth, may we search our hearts to see just what Easter means to us.

When the word Easter is mentioned to you of what are you reminded? Do your mental processes quickly picture clothes in the latest fashion, or do you visualize a day of fishing or some other diversion?

Is it only after these we may happen to remember our risen Lord, through whom we received the unquestionable and perfect proof of eternal life?

After the bleak, despairing period of Christ's crucifixion had been accomplished we have the marvelous, jubilant event — the resurrection. That's when the weeping Mary's tears were wiped dry, the frightened, depressed disciples strengthened and united, the doubting Thomas' questions answered and faith renewed. Even the Roman soldiers said surely this was the Son of God.

Easter isn't just a holiday. It isn't just a convenient weekend to mark the end of winter and the beginning of spring. It does seem significant to me that it falls at this time of year, when the cold, bare, deathlike season is just past and bursting forth is the warm, productive, life-giving period, when every creature seems to receive new life and beauty surrounds us everywhere. But Easter is, actually, a commemoration of a certain fact of history.

What happened was that a man became alive after he had died. There wasn't any doubt about the fact of his death. It was all quite public. His enemies (who didn't like his way of plain speaking about their character) engineered his death in a way which today we would call judicial murder.

It therefore came as a terrific shock to his friends and followers to find that as he had promised, he walked right through death. It certainly shook those men and women to see this demonstration, this parade of Life conquering Death.

In a flash they saw that this demonstration proved to the hilt the truth of all his claims.

What a magnificent person God is. He proved by this practical demonstration that he loved men enough to go through death for them and, best of all, conquer and liquidate death.

This was the first Easter parade, the parade of the power of God over the evil of death.

The man, of course, was Jesus Christ. Anyone can find it plainly recorded in the New Testament. But this is far from being an old, dead story with the dust of centuries thick upon it. Anybody who opens his personality to that Man will find that he is alive today. Quietly and simply he came down to where we are, so that he might help us rise to where he is. He can still transform a man's life. He can not only give him the directions for living, but also the power to live, and at last carry him through death without tremor.

Easter Day more people will be attending worship services than, perhaps, since last Easter. As we do, may these same things happen in our hearts as they did the first Easter.

Leaders of Women's Convention

Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood,
For the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah,
Offering each the bloom or blight,
And the choice goes by forever
Twixt that darkness and that light.

By the light of burning martyrs.
Christ, thy bleeding feet we track,
Toiling up new Calvaries ever
With the cross that turns not back;
New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth.

Mrs. Ray Gordon

Miss Frances Kapitzky

When the twenty-fifth biennial session of the women of the Southern Convention is held in Suffolk April 18-19 Mrs. Ray Gordon of that city will be the presiding officer.

Miss Frances Kapitzky, who will speak Tuesday evening and give the closing meditation Wednesday morning, is president of The Women's Guild and first woman Moderator of the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and thereby co-Moderator of the United Church of Christ. An active civic leader in her home-town, Strasburg, Ohio, she is president of the Citizens State Bank.

We welcome Frances Kapitzky — business woman and church woman extraordinary — to the Southern Convention.

Here And There Among The Churches

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Bethel, near Burlington, conducted the worship service at the quarterly business meeting of the church March 31.

A Brownie Scout program has been started at Beverly Hills, Burlington. The troop will first be open to girls 7-9 years old from the church; if the quota is not reached, opportunity will be given to others from the community to join.

Rev. Arthur M. Brown, one of the ministers of our Tryon church, resigned March 19 to accept a call to Bethany Congregational, Montpelier, Vermont. In accordance with the terms of the call of the other minister, Rev. W. R. Stevenson, he also resigned. The church is meeting in special session April 5 to take action on these two resignations.

The congregation of Edgewood, Burlington, has been divided into 9 geographical areas, with one family to act as "Undershepherds" in each area — to help promote acquaintance and fellowship, to learn of new families moving into the area, and to acquaint the minister of illness or other concerns of members in the area. The church membership now numbers 114.

Special services last week at Carolina, near Burlington, included a candlelight communion Thursday evening; a worship service on the theme, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit," Saturday evening; and an Easter sunrise service beginning in the church at 5:30 and concluding in the cemetery. Breakfast was served in the fellowship hall following the service.

Women's Fellowship at Union Ridge will have three sessions of Bible study at 7:30 p.m. — April 16, 23, 30.

The last union service for our churches in the South Norfolk area until fall will be held Sunday evening, April 30, at Rosemont.

March 26 all high school students at Apple's Chapel were invited to meet at 7:00 p.m. to hear the admissions counselor of Elon College tell about our college and show slides.

March 19 Rev. Arthur Mason Brown of our Tryon church baptized Maria and Christopher Ballantyne, using water from the Jordan River. Mr. Brown married their parents in Egypt.

Refugees sponsored for resettlement in the U. S. under Congregational Christian auspices now number 7,028, reports our Service Committee. It also reports that they have an amazingly high record of successful adjustment.

Rev. Lynwood Hubbard is the guest speaker at services each evening this week at Bethel church, Route 3, Burlington, rather than at Concord as was announced recently in The Sun. Rev. Bill Traylor is pastor of both churches.

Lacy Presnell, Jr., assistant superintendent of Randolph County schools and clerk of our Asheboro church, was the speaker at Sophia, March 5, when his father, who is pastor of the church, was attending the Southeast Regional Meeting. Rev. Walstein Snyder held special services March 19-24 at the Sophia church.

The Vacation Bible School at Elon College will be held June 12-16 with Mrs. Robert Knowles and Mrs. Clyde Fields as directors.

Supt. Clyde Fields was the speaker for the sunrise service at Union Ridge, near Burlington. The Women's Fellowship and Laymen's Fellowship served breakfast following the service.

A new way to figure members of a young adult class: Eutaw Community is beginning a class for those who are high school graduates through age 25, or married couples whose combined age is 50 or under!

Rev. "Bones" McKinney, Wake Forest basketball coach, spoke at the "Biddy Basketball Banquet" in McEwen dining room at Elon College Thursday, March 30. Charlie Harville of WFMY-TV was Master of Ceremonies.

A monthly mimeographed news bulletin "Eutaw Tidings" is being published by the Board of Education of Eutaw Community Church, Fayetteville, North Carolina. Dr. Norman Davis is the editor. This church recently voted to accept the constitution of the United Church of Christ.

Rev. and Mrs. A. M. Campbell are installed in the Eutaw Community parsonage, Fayetteville. A nice supply of groceries was ready for them. The trustees, Alton Medlin, Bill Dept and Dan Stout, had re-finished the floors and painted the parsonage and the Women's Fellowship had purchased a stove and refrigerator. Buck McLean made the moving arrangements. Sounds like good cooperation!

Why A Local Church Should Vote On Constitution

Rev. Harry Ray Mathis

NEW PASTOR AT UNION AND HEBRON

Rev. Harry Ray Mathis is the new pastor at Union, Virgilina, Virginia, and Hebron churches, having begun February 12.

Mr. Mathis is a native of Wilmington, N. C., where he graduated from New Hanover High, Wilmington, N. C., attended Worth Business College, Fayetteville, Presbyterian Junior College, Maxton, and received his B. S. degree from Pembroke State College in 1959. In May, 1961, he expects to graduate from Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, N. C., with the B. D. degree.

Mr. Mathis has had six years of service in the U. S. Army, three years experience with a Certified Public Accountant, and three years as independent public accountant. He was mission pastor of Southside Baptist Mission in Lumberton for about two years, and has been doing pulpit supply work in Congregational Christian Churches since June, 1960.

Mrs. Mathis is the former Thelma Laws of Greensboro. They have three children: Harry Ray, Jr., 7; David Wayne, 3; and James Philip, 3 months. Mr. and Mrs. Mathis and their family are now living in the parsonage at Virgilina.

Rev. W. J. Andes will speak to the Senior High P. F. of First, Burlington, April 9 on the United Church of Christ.

1. A local Congregational Christian church's vote on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ has two results:

It counts in the final determination of whether or not the presently proposed Constitution may be declared in force by the General Synod at its meeting in Philadelphia in July of 1961.

It determines whether or not the particular Congregational Christian church will or will not be a part of the United Church of Christ.

For this reason, even if for no other, a local Congregational Christian church should take its stand.

2. Only after years of discussion and study and gathering advice from local churches, associations and conferences did the General Council conclude to proceed with the Union. It then agreed to the Basis of Union with The Interpretations in complete good faith. The Basis of Union with The Interpretations calls for the adoption of a constitution with the approval by at least two-thirds of the Evangelical and Reformed Synods and at least two-thirds of the Congregational Christian churches voting. As a part of the whole Congregational Christian fellowship a local church should for this reason, even if for no other, take its stand.

3. For the members of a particular Congregational Christian church to be qualified for office and other leadership opportunities in the United Church of Christ and to have a voice in its administration, it is necessary for their church to be part of the United Church of Christ. For this reason, even if for no other, a local church should take its stand.

4. Future new members will insist upon knowing what the position of a church is with regard to the first major effort in America to break through the separating walls of denominationalism. For this reason, even if for no other, a church should vote on the Constitution.

5. New ministers and other staff personnel will have clear cut convictions about the ecumenical movement in general and about the United Church of Christ in particular. Such will insist upon knowing what position the church has taken with reference to the United Church of Christ. For this reason, even if for no other, a local Congregational Christian church should take its stand.

6. Local churches are part of a fellowship which from the uniting of the Pilgrims and Puritans in the early 17th Century has been a uniting religious body. The present union is but the last in an impressive series. To labor for the further unity of Christ's Church is characteristic of both the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian churches. For this reason, even if for no other, a local church should take its stand.

7. No Congregational Christian church will be added to the roll of local churches of the United Church of Christ until it has acted, in a way satisfactory to itself, to declare its desire to be a part of the United Church of Christ. (It may become a part of the United Church of Christ by voting approval of the United Church Constitution.) For this reason, even if for no other, a local church should take its stand.

8. There are many ways to give clear expression to the essential oneness of Christ's Church. The United Church of Christ is one dramatic and effective method offered to every local Congregational Christian church to participate significantly in the total mission of Christ's Church, which, among other things, includes unity. For this reason, even if for no other, a local church should take its stand.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS SCHOOL AT SANFORD

Members of eleven of our churches in the Sanford, North Carolina, area will participate in a Christian Workers School to be held at our Sanford church. Sessions are scheduled as follows: Monday, April 10, 7:30 p.m.; Sunday, April 16, 3:00 p.m.; Monday, April 17, 7:30 p.m.

According to the "Eutaw Tidings," subjects will be of interest to every church member: "Missions" led by Rev. Carl Wallace; "Superintendents and Officers" led by Rev. Clay Ferrell; "Church and Home with Children" led by Rev. Robert Knowles; "Teaching for Maximum Effect" led by Rev. Bill Joyner; and "Jesus and His Teachings" led by Rev. David Shepherd.

Easter: Dawn Or Twilight?

Much is said about Easter Dawn. It is represented as the beginning of a beautiful day. Sunrise gives promise; and so did the resurrection of Jesus. The large Easter audiences in churches, the beautiful display of clothing, the inspiring services and sermons at sunrise, mid-day and evening, the glorious singing of congregations and choirs and organs, and the many new members added to the churches — all this looked like the beginning of a new day for the Church which bears the name of Christ.

That was two days ago. Now is the time for disillusion, of discouragement, and perchance of doubt. Read again the words of two disciples who trudged the seven miles from Jerusalem to Emmaus that first Easter afternoon. Hear them: "a prophet powerful in speech and action . . . sentenced to death, and crucified . . . but we had hoped . . . this is the third day since it happened, some women of our company astounded us . . ." They didn't, but they could have said: "We quit. We are going back home. We are disappointed. All is lost."

Those who have worked real hard preparing for wonderful Easter programs — including some ministers — may have this "let down" feeling after Easter. Was it just a parade? Did the message of the resurrection register in the minds of the people? Will the crowd return to church next Sunday? Really, can we expect to see in church during the coming months those who joined at Easter? Is religion so shallow that it does not strike deep into the hearts of people? Is the Spirit of Christ really living in the hearts of those who profess faith in him?

The best answer to such questioning is to rest a bit, and start to work again. Hash is not especially attractive even when served to a congregation the next Sunday after Easter. Choirs and ministers do well when they bring something fresh, interesting, thrilling and helpful right after the "big days" in the church calendar. Sunday school and church officials should not desert within a week the "babes in Christ" they worked so hard to bring into church. Church organization and training are tremendously important in the month of April this year. The new members need to experience the joy of being received into a working unit of the Kingdom of God.

Easter can be the beginning of a new, bright day for the Church, or it can be the twilight following a long day of planning, activity, prayer and successful attainment. Which will you help to make it?

Women At Work

If grand old St. Paul could visit the Spring Rallies and the Convention of the women of the Southern Convention during the next few weeks, he would probably change his mind about women speaking in public (1 Tim. 2:12), and would give a different story to young ministers concerning the greater half of their adult congregations. Carolina and Virginia women, in fact most of the women of this generation, are a far cry from those about whom the first Christian missionary wrote. These women are cultured, educated, sensible, interested in the welfare of our world, and are diligently seeking for more effective ways in which to make Christianity available to all people.

Men will find it very profitable to attend the meetings. While they are not especially invited to these meetings of women — and some of the churches may have standing room only for them — yet the only ones not welcome (so far as this writer has ever heard) are ministers who need to stay home with children while their wives go in search of greater knowledge and to share in a fellowship that is inspiring. It is sometimes amazing to witness the wisdom displayed, the amount of work reported and planned, and the dispatch and decorum with which business is transacted by these devotees of missions.

Springtime Joy

The equinoxial storms have passed. Westerly winds bring balmy air that whispers to sleeping flowers and fields and forests that it is time to awake, put on the new robes of beauty and fragrance, take a new turn in bringing delight to birds, beasts and human kind, and show again "that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof."

It is resurrection time. Bulbs, seeds, and even trees, that have appeared to be dead as they endured the cold of winter, are now demonstrating the power of the resurrection; they are bursting forth in a newness that did not appear to be present, with a life that seemingly had disappeared.

Springtime noises can be heard. The dormant critters hidden away for the winter are giving voice to their joy in living again. Migrating birds are returning from the sunny far south and pay us the compliment of their delightful music as farmers feed them in the newly turned soil.

Why all those bright costumes we saw at Easter? They were the unspoken joy of men and women who feel rebirth when the earth turns us a little nearer the sun from which we get our heat and light. Why does a boy whistle as he marches off to the creek with a hook and line (the hook may be nothing better than a bent pin) and his hat stuck far back on his head? He knows that it is springtime, and if he catches no fish he will have had the joy of revelling in nature's loveliness, a part of which he himself is Spring is the time for singing, for beauty, for joy. It is the time the Lord has made, we will rejoice and be glad in it.

After every political, economic or social upheaval, or war, several organizations come into being. Some of these are of little value and short-lived; others are useful and become permanent.

Among the many organizations that were fostered during the adjustment years following World War I and became useful was the English-Speaking Union, founded in 1918 as a channel for social educational fostering in Great Britain, the United States and Canada.

Since the organization has as its aim one of the cardinal principles of the United Nations, that of mutual understanding through the process of education, future of the union seems greater than its founders anticipated.

Its very name — English-Speaking Union — would indicate that its efforts would be confined to peoples with the same similarity of tongue. But the union means more, for its broad program and high-born principles embrace all free people and free institutions that cherish and uphold these things.

Although the English-Speaking Union was founded by the English, and has its headquarters in London, it is more than a local organization, for there are 84 chapters in the United States with a membership of 30,000. In the British Isles there are 63 branches with a total of 11,000 members. The Washington, D. C., branch has 1,500 members against three members when the chapter was organized in 1940.

Perhaps the most constructive part of the English-Speaking Union program is the international work sponsored by its committee on education, which concerns itself, first, with the exchange of teachers and, second, with traveling scholarships. The exchange of American and British school teachers in secondary schools has increased in scope and usefulness since the union was founded.

The direct results of these exchanges are of great value to those participating in them through the challenge of a new environment and personal contact with new educational systems. The indirect results are equally beneficial, since hundreds of school children, their families and communities concerned, are brought into intimate contact with the specially selected personnel from other countries.

Aside from this exchange of teachers, the union administers traveling scholarships in honor of Walter Hines Page, born in Cary, North Carolina, and United States Ambassador to Great Britain during World War I. Operation of this part of the movement's program enables about 100 teachers from high schools and colleges in Great Britain to spend a month or more in the United States each year, adding to their educational knowledge and promoting a better understanding between the two countries.

Promoters of the English-Speaking Union consider it an avenue through which any nation may work to help preserve these fundamentals of civilization.

PEACE IN SPRING

I like the way the sun breaks through the clouds in April,
The way the winds decide to quit awhile,
I like to watch the burst of spring
on hill and valley,
The busy robin stop his bounce to listen on my lawn;
There is a bouyant peace
deep within me,
As I sense the certainty and order of it all,
Lifts my heart to Him
like the daffodils about me —
Would I were as true and worthy as are they!

Hidden Splendor

By W. E. Wisseman

From my kitchen window I can look across the street and see my neighbor's rose garden. At this time of the year the rose bushes look rather cold and bare yet I know that they have within them a splendor that is hidden. In not too many weeks from now that rose garden will be a thing of beauty. Months ago many of us held in our hands some bulbs — rough and ugly — we looked at them, prepared the ground and carefully placed them and covered them with soil.

Why did we not throw them away? We knew that hidden in these bulbs was beauty — we could see a beautiful bed or border in the not too distant future.

As the bushes, the bulbs, the trees yield to the powers of nature the hidden splendor gradually emerges. These are invisible forces that work all about us. Spring is a time for renewal. There is something in the seed, the bulb, the tree that responds to forces that surround them.

Augustine said: "Dig deep enough in any man and you will find something divine."

This season of the year can be for all of us a time of renewal. It is a time when we should draw near to Christ and as we do we find that there is something within us that responds to him.

To discover this hidden splendor, to find God for ourselves so that we could say as John said, "We have beheld His glory," is man's highest undertaking. And nobody else's discovery can ever be a substitute for our own.

Rufus Jones has said: "It may begin, as in St. Augustine's case with the discovery that our hearts are restless and that only one reality in the universe will still that restlessness.

"It may appear as an exalted aspiration for personal contact with God as in the cry of the Psalmist: 'As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God, My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God.'

"Or it may be the quiet discovery that one does not need to go somewhere since God is more truly like our spirits than like anything else in the universe, not remote, but close as breathing."

At this Easter season as we meditate on Jesus who has revealed the Heart of God to us, may each one of us discover for ourselves this hidden splendor.

My 90th Year My Best

By S. L. Morgan, Sr.
Wake Forest, N. C.

Now well into my 90th year, I find it thus far the best year of my life. I list a few of the events that make it memorable: The year began Sep. 23, my 89th birthday. In April before, my once-brilliant wife and equal partner for over 50 years entered an institution never to return, leaving me desolate. By God's grace I rallied, highly resolved on living creatively the time remaining.

Forseeing this tragic event, I had spent several months disposing of my small estate. Through 50 years we had economized to the limit, had helped our four children through college and built a modest home. We had always regarded our income and savings as God's, we his stewards. Accordingly all remaining above a very moderate security I gave to worthy causes, or bequeathed in my will. I testify that this has been one of the most satisfying acts of my life. All has been given "in perpetuity", to go on forever doing good: to Foreign Missions, to aid needy students in college and seminary, to aid old ministers, to endow a room in a home for the aged.

Meanwhile I've seen some joyous returns: a friend's gift of $1000 to endow a room in my name in the Baptist Home for the Aged, and the same amount by another friend in my name to endow a book-shelf in Southeastern Seminary — a gift I heartily commend to others.

I Plan My Funeral

Another major act of my 90th year is planning the funerals of my wife and me. For many years by voice and pen I've been a crusader against costly funerals. A funeral in a poor family many years ago mightily influenced me. A tenant farmer, owning only two mules mortgaged his mules to bury his wife in a costly casket and vault costing about $750, sorely needed by his three motherless little children! "Fashion in funerals" drove him to it. My wife and I resolved to make our funerals cheap as part of our crusade against costly funerals.

So one of the most satisfying acts of my 90th year has been selecting my casket for a funeral to cost $153, with "no Flowers," my grave to have no monument, but only a simple marker. I leave my children liberty to choose for their mother within limits. Costly funerals and monuments I regard as pagan; Christians should put emphasis on the immortal spirit, not on the body, doomed to dust.

This disposal of my property and of my body I regard as the greatest acts of my 90th year, giving me great satisfaction. I pray my example may influence others touching money and funerals.

Joys of My 90th Year

I name certain solid joys of my 90th year: A visit to my preacher son in Washington, D. C., and hearing his 11th anniversary sermon as pastor of a Baptist church — a passionate appeal to save the most strategic city in the world; a visit to my daughter in Georgia, wife of a Baptist pastor, both struggling to hold their people to a sane, friendly attitude in the midst of race tension. The father heart finds joy also in the two younger sons, one a columnist in San Diego, now under contract to write a

THE WONDERS OF THE DAY

Is it not a thing of wonder that this small sphere on which we live and move and have our being is in fact a "visited planet?" The creator of the vast universe slipped quietly into the stream of human life in the person of the Christ Child. This is the truth that vibrates through the Bible and sustains us in our faith in God's love for humanity.

In Palestine when a son was born, musicians congregated at the house to greet the child with simple music. At Jesus' birth in a stable away from home this ceremony could not be carried out; but oh, the wonder of the minstrelsy of angels that took the place of the minstrels of earth and sang the songs of this Child — the "Hope of Earth, and Joy of Heaven!"

Is it not wonderful that the first announcement of his birth should come to the lowly shepherds, those simple men of the fields upon whom the flocks made such constant demands that they were unable to keep the details of ceremonial laws. How wonderful also that those who were looking after the helpless lambs should be the first to see the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world!

book by October for Random House on our Great West; the other son and his wife striving to make my home for me seem home in place of her who for so many years was my light and life.

My Joy as a Writer

In retirement my pen now for years has been life and joy to me. I have been an avowed crusader for old people, millions of them without jobs and income, pining in their rejection and loneliness. My articles in their behalf have brought me hundreds of letters from across the continent. They give me a sense of mission in my 90th year. The Baptist editor of a leading paper in the Middle West has repeatedly thanked me for articles, his recent letter saying, "We consider your articles among the best we receive, and we are honored to use them from time to time... You have something to say and know how to say it." Numerous readers, lonely or bereaved, write me warmly of the help I give them.

The burdened wife of a Mississippi minister, anxious about her afflicted husband, writes, "In my distress it seems strange that God sends me to you for comfort," referring to my articles... A woman in Arkansas in her beautiful script says, "Your article on death has helped me more than anything any one could do or say; I read it ever so often." Lonely souls in Texas, Missouri, California, even Canada, write me just because my articles show that I seem to care.

And so in my 90th year needy souls still give me a sense of mission. I pray to live only so long as I can be useful, also to see my helpless wife reach her coronation. I can welcome death any time, sure it will be but the peaceful, painless, beautiful translation of the soul into its next higher state of being, even as the caterpillar falls into a torpid state to sprout wings — then a lovely butterfly.

A unique joy was the recent Sunday set apart in my honor by the First Baptist Church of Henderson, N. C., called "S. L. Morgan Day", I the preacher to a great congregation, many standing to say I baptized them or married them in the years 1912-22. It seems indeed unique to call a former pastor out of 30 years retirement to preach on a great occasion. I commend it as an act both humane and gracious to one in his 90th year, an act worthy of emulation. To preach was long his delight, and never more than in his 90th year.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT LIBERTY VANCE

By Mrs. Fletcher Fuller

Revival services were held at Liberty Vance, near Henderson, North Carolina, the week of March 19-26 with the Rev. Max Vestal, pastor of Shallow Well church, Sanford, as guest minister.

Unfortunately, Mr. Vestal was called home Friday morning because of the death of his wife's father, Mr. Fred McPherson of Asheboro. The series of topics being used and which had already been announced for the Friday service was carried out by the pastor, Rev. Gale Brady. The topic was "What Think Ye of Christ?" All services were inspiring and helpful and much enjoyed by all attending.

Thursday evening immediately following the worship service everyone was invited into the church annex for a fellowship hour honoring the visiting minister, the choir, and visitors. Refreshments were served and enjoyed by all. This fellowship hour was sponsored by the laymen of the church and seemed to be a wonderful idea. Members of the church were given an opportunity to chat with visitors and welcome them to the services.

I Was Just Thinking. . .

In a dream were we created and in a dream shall we live our days.

For all of us are always children seeking the warm womb of safety. The symbol of our sanctuary is the roof above us, the carpet under our feet, a hand to touch, possession.

The few bulwarks against the great gray cold are our hearth, our mate, our progeny, the fruits of our toil. Yet, even if we are kings or heroes, we own nothing.

We plant a tree, but the sun and rain and the mysterious earth give it life. We love and are loved, yet we cannot own the beloved nor he us. We create a child, but it is ours only by birthright. The house we build, the work we do, the owning is all a part of the whole and the whole is not ours.

We long for the shelter against wind and rain, the fire against cold and snow. We seek, we despair, we seek again to be impervious to fear and the fear of it, to life and the living of it, to pain and the threshold. Whatever our courage, whatever our

AN OPEN SECRET

Pussy Willow has a secret
That Snowdrop whispered to her,
And she purred it to the south wind
As it stroked her velvet fur.

And the south wind hummed it softly
To the busy honeybees,
And they buzzed it to the blossoms
On the scarlet maple trees;

And they dropped it in the wood's brook
Brimming full of melted snow,
And the brook told Robin Redbreast
As it babbled to and fro.

Little Robin couldn't keep it,
So he sang it loud and clear
To the sleepy hills and meadows,
"Wake up! Cheer up! Spring is here!"

On Palm Sunday the congregation of St. Paul United Church of Christ, Cincinnati, Ohio, where Rev. Richard Jackson is minister, worshipped for the first time in its new sanctuary. Morning worship services are held at 9:15 and 10:30, with children attending the first service with their families and leaving the sanctuary after the story-sermon to attend classes.

curiosity, we are the timid traveler in the universe.

In our sleep we slay the dragons of our days. In the light we stumble from error to disaster, from quick joy to lingering sorrow. There is a time we survey the pitiful few possessions, the corner of our world. It is never enough. We are aware of this with an ache in our bones.

Then why the dream and the awakening? Why the living, not the dying? Perhaps eternal hope springing, perhaps the clinging to a tomorrow better than today. Or perhaps we are yet children learning to walk as men and there will still come a time when we shall rise with fearlessness and know this dream was not enough and this roof and hearth were not enough.

Then we will know what is: the bright flame of the spirit and the warm heart of love. And one thing more: that life itself is a prayer of glory.

In Family Week

An Easter sunrise service was held at 5:45 a.m. at Liberty church, near Henderson. Breakfast was served in the fellowship hall following the service. A Maundy Thursday communion service was also held.

A "Book of Remembrance" and a cabinet, located in the entrance tower of Oakland church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, have been presented by Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Johnson in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Pitt, Mrs. Johnson's father and mother. In this book will be listed all special gifts to the church.

Rev. Calvin J. Felton, who has been serving for some time as interim pastor at First, Portsmouth, reports that the church has called Rev. Daniel Bowers as a full-time minister to begin June 1. After that date Mr. Felton will be available as interim pastor or supply. His address is 307 Causey Avenue, Suffolk, Virginia.

The only national summer conference for Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed laymen and women will be held at La Foret Camp, near Colorado Springs, Colorado August 20-26. This eleventh annual session will have outstanding leaders from the United Church of Christ. Cost is $35.00 per person. If interested, write William E. Peterson, 10 West Lockwood Avenue, St. Louis 19, Missouri.

FEDERAL AID TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS

When Dr. Gerald Knoff, representing the National Council of Churches, appeared before the General Education Sub-Committee of the House of Representatives, in opposition to Federal aid to non-public schools, he said, in part: "Let all our schools be strengthened; the public schools by the increasing support of all our legislative units, local, state and Federal; our religious schools by those who believe in them, govern them and support them by loyalty, gifts and prayers. Let us, however, keep the two types of support, both of tremendous importance to the welfare of the nation and its free institutions, separate and uninvolved one with the other."

KNOW OUR MISSIONARIES

Our churches in the Southern Convention, while helping to support the world-wide missionary effort of the denomination, are now giving special attention to 13 missionaries of the American Board.

DR. AND MRS. EDWARD C. RIGGS

Dr. and Mrs. Edward C. Riggs, fourth generation missionaries, have done outstanding public health work in South India. They are now in this country on furlough.

Their first assignment was to a remote corner of China where they were sent in 1946 to help reopen the Shaowu Mission, closed by World War II. Civil war forced them from this inland city to the coastal city of Foochow, from where they were recalled by the American Board and reassigned to India.

They have been associated with a small hospital in the village of Kilanjunai, concentrating on ways of treating tuberculosis and leprosy through weekly clinics. They plan to resume this work when they return to India.

Dr. Edward Riggs

SOUTHERN CONVENTION WOMEN TO MEET

On the back page of this paper you will find the program for the biennial session of the Southern Convention Women's Fellowship to be held at Suffolk Christian Church, April 18-19, with the Bethlehem and Suffolk churches cooperating in entertaining.

Mrs. Ray F. Gordon, president, reminds every local Women's Fellowship that they should be represented at this meeting. Each is entitled to one delegate for each 25 members, provided no group has more than 4 delegates. All Life Members are voting delegates, also. Visitors will be welcome.

Please make overnight reservations through Mrs. J. H. McCloskey, 709 Virginia Avenue, Suffolk, Virginia. In case you need to call, her telephone number is 4843.

340 pounds of clothing was shipped from our First, Greensboro, church to the Congregational Christian Service Committee in March. Members are asked to bring good used clothing and 8¢ per pound to cover cost of getting it overseas to the church.

- 9—Miss Mabel Burket is a Registered Nurse with B.A. degree from Heidelberg College. She is in U. S. on furlough, but was in charge of T. B. ward, children's ward, and a general medical and surgical ward in new 108-bed hospital; also matron in charge of training local workers and taught anatomy and English.
- 10—Dr. and Mrs. Michael Gass both come from missionary homes. His parents are E. and R. missionaries in Vellore, India, and hers served for 14 years as E. and R. missionaries in Honduras. They are beginning work in Worawora after training in London.
- 11—Miss Dolores Harkins went to Worawora in 1954 as a missionary nurse. She was instrumental in helping the hospital grow from a small bush hospital of 50 beds to a well-established one. Over 30,000 patients received treatment the first year. She is matron in charge of all wards and hires and trains the African nursing staff. She is active in Sunday school work.
- 12—Miss Doris Justus was called by Board of International Missions in May, 1958; commissioned in August; and arrived in Ghana in September. She is a nurse who also teaches anatomy. Finding textbooks too difficult, she amplifies her notes for students to study.
- 13—Dr. and Mrs. Edward Moser are in the U. S. where he is serving a three-year residency at Williamsport Hospital, Williamsport, Pennsylvania, following a term in Ghana. He was in charge of outpatient clinic, regularly treating 75-100 patients each day. She helps as his administrative assistant. They have four young children.
- 14—Dr. and Mrs. Elmer Whitcomb went to Ghana in 1955 to start a new hospital at Adidome after 25 years of medical missionary work in India, during which time he had developed the hospital at Tilda. He not only supervises this hospital but does research in tropical diseases. His wife assists with administrative work and helps pastors and teachers in church-related schools.
- 15—Mrs. Gladys Yost served as a teacher and administrator in nursing schools in Pennsylvania while being the wife of an E. and R. minister. Following his death in 1957 in Cresco, she went to Ghana where she supervises nursing services at Worawora hospital.

Youth Faces The Future

Ray Hall

David Kimball

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

CHRISTIAN ACTION: SERVICE

By Ray Hall, Action Chairman

One of the major concerns of action is service, or trying to put our words into action. At this time of year there are numerous projects you as an individual or your group as a whole can do.

These projects can be carried on in your church by helping improve the looks of your church and the grounds around it. You can also help with vacation Bible school and in clerical capacities.

There are also various ways an individual can serve during his summers. There are numerous work camps, conferences, and camps. There are also opportunities for caravanning.

Many are the ways you can serve the world in the name of Christ. Plan to use one of them this summer.

The following is taken from booklet No. 3 of the High Fellowship Set, and it is my hope that you will be inspired to give some if not all of your summer to service.

"One of the healthiest signs of the concern of American youth in the area of Christian action is the growing importance of service in the local church, community, within the nation and around the world. This is not mere 'busyness' but the attempt to express one's convictions by an act of work.

"Some standards should be maintained in participating in voluntary projects. These projects should:

- Be aimed at a genuine need
- Be consistent with one's Christian faith
- Appeal to as widespread a group of youth as possible in order that all may feel it possible to take part

a. In your church. There are countless projects which meet the standards suggested above. Some are suggested through this booklet. These are possibilities: Work on a 'Lord's Acre' plan through your church; clean, repair or paint parts of the building; landscape or care for the lawn; assist with mimeographing the church newspaper, and clerical work; develop special equipment for drama, worship, Christian education and recreation in the church; serve on standing committees and departments of the church.

b. In your community. There are many kinds of community service which meet the standards. One of the best approaches is through week-end work camping. Types of service and procedures are suggested in a pamphlet called 'Community Service — A Guide to Week-end Work Camping' (available from P. and D., National Council of Churches, 120 E. 23rd St., New York 10, N. Y.)

c. State, national and world-wide. Typical of service opportunities on these levels are work camps and caravanning. Work camps involve physical labor on a project of social need. This is supplemented by a program of study and worship which helps the group to know itself, the community and the relation of worship and work. Workcampers volunteer their time, share living expenses, and pay their own transportation.

"Caravaners train together for a week at the beginning of the summer and then serve in teams of four or six members each in community centers, camps and local churches to help revitalize the youth program, direct recreation and do community service.

"Information on these opportunities is available from the Congregational Christian Service Committee, 110 E. 29th St., New York, and the Department of Youth Work, Evangelical and Reformed Church, 1505 Race St., Philadelphia 2, Pa."

A TEENAGER'S CODE

By David Kimball, Treasurer

Have you ever seen the little booklet entitled "How to be Young and Enjoy It" by Norman Vincent Peale? It includes for teenagers ten rules which I think are worth remembering. Following are the rules and the thoughts that came to my mind as I read them:

1. Don't let your parents down. They brought you up.

We all realize how much our parents have sacrificed and worked for us. We know that they want us to succeed and to have things they never had. It seems to me that we have a responsibility to behave at all times so that we will never embarrass or shame them because of our words or actions.

2. Stop and think before you drink.

This may not have become a problem for us yet, but most young people will have to face this temptation by the time they reach college age. We ought to have some strong convictions in connection with this matter.

3. Ditch dirty thoughts fast, or they'll ditch you.

We all realize that the way we think affects the way we act, and the way we act will determine to a large extent what our life will be like. Don't let unclean words and thoughts wreck our lives.

4. Show-off driving is juvenile. Act your age.

Tests have proven that teen-agers have the ability to be the world's best drivers, but often they are careless and reckless. Serious accidents often result. Life is too important to take any chances with reckless driving. Sometimes it pays to be "chicken" so far as reckless driving is concerned.

5. Be smart, obey. You'll give orders yourself some day.

The smartest people know how to follow directions and obey orders. We should not resent it when people who are older and wiser than we tell us what to do. Only by listening and following directions will we learn.

6. Choose your friends carefully. You are what they are.

You have often heard the quotation, "A person is judged by the company he keeps." Because this is true, we should be very careful that we select the right kind of friends.

7. Choose a date fit for a mate.

Most of us are not thinking about a mate just yet, but dates — well, that's different. It's not too soon to be setting our standards.

8. Don't go steady unless you're ready.

We've all heard the pros and cons on that rule.

9. Go to church regularly. God gives you a week. Give Him back an hour.

Most of us, I think, spend a lot more than one hour each week in church, and we're glad of it. Young people who do not go to church and who are not actively associated with a youth group really miss a lot.

10. Live carefully. The soul you save may be your own.

Sometimes we get the idea that what we do every day doesn't really matter very much, but that is wrong. A very wise man once said: "We are today the sum total of all our yesterdays." That proverb will be true all through our lives. If we want to be good, honorable, worthwhile men and women, we must watch our thoughts and words and actions today and everyday.

I hope these rules will stimulate your thinking as they did mine.

Pilgrim Fellowship members from Sophia and Flint Hill churches led the evening worship at Sophia March 12. Those sharing in the service included Ken Hollingsworth, Donald Rich, Janie Baker, Beverly Pearce, Robert Staley, Norivee Canoy, Betty Baker, Ruth Hayes, Donald Staley and the youth and junior choirs. Talks on "The Christian Community" were given by Clinton Hill, Danese Pearce, and Delta Hall.

A representative from the Pilgrim Fellowship of United, Raleigh, is invited to each monthly meeting of the church business board. The newsletter suggests, "Perhaps we are in for some uncomfortable criticism from our young people."

ROSEMONT P. F. NEWS

By Mrs. Ruby Cannon, Counselor
Rosemont Senior High P. F.

Youth Week was observed by the P. F. of the Rosemont Church. On the first Sunday of that week, Principal E. E. Brickell of Oscar Smith High School taught the Sunday School lesson to all the youth of the church. Youth Week activities consisted of the senior high group's collecting clothes for the needy, the junior high group's visiting the shut-ins, skating, bowling, and a banquet with John A. Halstead as speaker.

The young people had charge of the entire Sunday worship service on February 19. The following youth participated: Judy Halstead, Joan Stinnett, Jimmie Cannon, Ennis Hudgins, Bobby Morrison, Donnie Miller, Jimmie Hodges, Jimmie Sparkman, and Freddie Congleton.

Both junior and senior high groups have had good attendance since Christmas. The youth choir practices each week and sings once a month for a Sunday worship service.

We are very happy and thrilled to have Rev. and Mrs. Lewis with us now, and we are especially glad to have Mrs. Lewis working with the senior high group.

The Youth Fellowship groups of Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, visited Mt. Pleasant Church near Vass Palm Sunday afternoon, taking a picnic supper with them.

David Andes, son of Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Andes of Elon College and president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, has been chosen winner of the "My True Security" contest sponsored by the Burlington Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Young people in Senior P. F. at Damascus, Chapel Hill, have enjoyed films and discussions at recent meetings. "More for Peace" was the film shown on stewardship; then came a discussion on "Who Makes Up Your Mind?" and this was followed by a film, "Dig Friendship," on how to make and keep friends.

The Senior High and Junior High P. F. groups of First, Burlington, had a candlelight communion service March 26. They were seated at tables to receive the sacraments. Horace Freeman and John Williams, deacons, assisted the pastor, Rev. Robert Kimball. Mrs. J. R. Kernodle, accompanied by Miss Janet Lamm, furnished music.

CHURCHES' "PEACE CORPS" NOW VOLUNTEERING

This summer some 1,100 young people from 55 nations will be doing dirty but useful work around the world because they want to. Among them, some 250 American young men and women will be serving in Ecumenical Work Camps in 37 countries. Applications must be sent immediately to Rev. C. F. Stoerker, 475 Riverside Drive, New York 27, New York.

Most of the camps last five weeks, not including travel time, and work campers pay all of their own expenses, although some churches help them with travel costs. Age limit is 19-30. Two co-leaders are assigned to each work camp and no more than four Americans are put together in any camp. This work is sponsored by the National Council of Churches.

In this country seven programs are planned — one of them in North Carolina. They are located in St. Louis, New York, Indianapolis, New Windsor, San Francisco, Puerto Rico and Bricks, North Carolina.

This type of summer work which church young people pay to do is quite in contrast to the recent headlines in newspapers concerning college youths on the rampage in Florida during spring vacation time!

The Dilemma Of Church Related Colleges

Impressions from Southeast Regional Meeting at Talladega College
By Carl Wallace

The church-related college is faced with a multi-sided dilemma in our day. The financial situation is obvious when one compares the cost of tuition of state supported institutions with private colleges of comparable status. Church organizations and benevolent societies are being pressed hard to fill the gap created by actual cost per student over and above the tuition cost. This gap is reputed to be as much as the tuition itself in some cases. The state institutions may draw comfortably upon tax support money to fill this gap.

Another side of the dilemma is the need for a college to be free to explore all available avenues to truth unhampered by ecclesiastical control. It is, however, from this control that the church-related college most often owes its origin, identity and much of the current support. How then can a church-related college express a spiritual commitment on the one hand and at the same time be free enough to provide quality education undiluted by parochialism on the other? Some colleges, after building a sufficient endowment, have separated from the Church. This hardly seems the right answer. Other colleges have accepted the parochial influence as justifiable and their program is planned accordingly with reasonable church representation on the governing board. Still others have compounded confusion by admitting church-relatedness when money is needed and denying in effect church-relatedness when policies are made, except to allow for a lay type of church influence which seldom represents the forward look of the Christian Church.

The largest side of the dilemma is a combination of many factors found in the simple question, "What is a Church Related College?" Is it an extension of the church? Is it an evangelistic agency? Is it just a mission to an area of life for which the church is responsible, not unlike an orphanage or a home for the aged?

Christian church members must decide what they expect their college to be and to do and then set forth to help it fulfill their vision.

Rockingham parish, a closing communion service will be conducted by Rev. Edward Taylor, Harrisonburg, and Rev. S. E. Madren, Elkton.

Planning for this first retreat are Clarence A. Phillips, Broadway; R. B. Alexander, Mt. Crawford; and Norman Henry, Charles Pearman and James Lester of Richmond.

SEYMOUR ELECTED SOUTHEAST PRESIDENT

The Reverend Collie Seymour, minister of the Albemarle, N. C., Congregational Christian Church, was elected president of the Southeast Regional Meeting at the biennial sessions held recently at Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama.

More than fifty representatives of the Congregational Christian conferences and conventions in the southeast attended the sessions which were presided over by Rev. Arnold Slater, minister of Pilgrim Congregational Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Rev. Arthur C. Curtright, minister emeritus of the Congregational Christian Church, Savannah, Ga., was elected vice-president. Superintendent James H. Lightbourne Jr. is the secretary-treasurer of the group.

HOW LONG SHOULD A SERMON BE?

By John R. Lackey

It seems to me that there are two parts to the answer to the above question which must be taken together: the quality of the exposition and the listening capacity of the people in the pews.

1. So far as exposition alone is concerned, surely a great idea needs not minutes but hours for the comprehension of it, not sentences but a book.

Thus if the exposition is effective, 30 minutes would be better than 20 minutes and an hour would be better than 30 minutes. If the exposition is poor, then 20 minutes would be better than 30 minutes — and be done with it!

2. However, no matter how excellent the exposition, the listening capacity of the hearers must be considered in determining the length of the sermon. The attention span of adults is determined by many factors, not the least of which is the depth of one's love for God and his desire to learn of Him. A 30 minute sermon is shorter to the lover of God than is a 20 minute sermon to one for whom religion is something to be endured.

If the exposition is sound and interesting and if the listener is a true lover of God, then 25 or 30 minutes for a sermon is not too long.

At any rate, the sermon should not be reduced in its place in the service of worship to the point of becoming "a sermonette for Christianettes by a preacherette."

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP

The Western N. C. Laymen's Fellowship will hold its next rally at Pleasant Grove church, near Bennett, Saturday, April 29, according to announcement by Clyde Pell, president.

Supper will be served promptly at 6:30. Dr. Earl Danieley, president of Elon College and one of our outstanding laymen, will be the speaker. It is hoped that at least 175 will be present.

During April the morning service of Eutaw Community, Fayetteville, will be broadcast over WFLB (1490). The new pastor is Rev. A. M. Campbell.

CHURCHMEN'S FELLOWSHIP RETREAT

A "Churchmen's Fellowship Retreat" is being planned for men of the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed churches in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, April 29-30 at Massanetta Springs. Theme will be "Men of the Church on the Move."

Beginning at 2:00 p.m. Saturday afternoon, the session will include an address by Dr. Arthur W. Newell, Richmond, on "Men at Work." Rev. Robert Knowles will follow with an address on "Mighty Men and Mighty Movements." Following the vesper service led by Rev. Mark Andes, Winchester, Dr. Newell will speak on "What Do I Do Now?"

After morning watch and breakfast Sunday morning, Bible study will be led by Dr. Raymond Andes, professor at Bridgewater College; Dr. C. H. Huffman, member of the Synodical Council; and Harry Thompson, adult class teacher at St. John's, Richmond. Morning worship will be conducted by Mr. Knowles, whose theme will be "Men With A Mission."

Following recreation led by Rev. Robert Myers, minister of E. and R.

When The Righteous Suffer

Background Scripture: Job 1, and 2; 19:13-26; James 1: 12-15.

Devotional Reading: I Peter 5:6-11.

Memory Selection: Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. James 1:12.

The Question

"Why do the righteous suffer?" is an old, old question. Men have been asking it for a long, long time. For instance the book of Job which is an old, old book, deals with this question — men were asking it that long ago. And before that time too. And men are still asking it. And being troubled about it. For instance, only recently, a banker in Pittsburg, was greatly troubled when a lady he knew, was painfully injured in a freak accident, on the way to Church. He asked several ministers how they could take seriously a religion that couldn't even guarantee a person's safety on the way to church! And his faith went into a tail spin, because he couldn't understand it. One wonders what Bible that man had read. He could hardly have been reading the Bible which nowhere states that because a man is good, he will never have any trouble, because he is sanctified, he will never suffer. The Bible's chief concern is not with the question of why men suffer, but with showing men how to face trouble and suffering and to deal with it triumphantly.

To be sure, the Bible explicitly and repeatedly states that some suffering comes from sin. In fact, all sin involves suffering. But the Bible does not state that all suffering is due to sin. On at least one occasion Jesus himself said, "Neither did this man sin, nor his parents" in answering a question of the disciples as to why the man had been born blind.

A Drama Dealing With This Question

The book of Job is a drama — one of the greatest dramas ever written — dealing with this question of why good men suffer. The story is rather well known. Here was Job, a man of unquestioned integrity of life, solid character, religious outlook, deep loyalty, and sound faith. He was a rich man. He had a fine family. He had a good name. He was righteous in the best sense of that word. Satan suggests that Job is good because it pays, because of what he gets out of it. "Does Job fear God for nought?" he cynically asks. "Put forth thy hand now and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face," he boasts. "O. K." said God, "behold all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thy hand." Seeming disaster quickly followed. Oxen, camels, sheep, servants, sons and daughters were taken by sword, and fire, and tornado. Stunned by the multiple disaster, but strong and sturdy in faith, Job "fell down upon the ground and worshipped." Even in that far-off-day he knew that a man's life did not consist in the abundance of the things he possessed.

"The Lord had given." Could not the Lord take away! "Blessed be the name of the Lord." In all this "Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." "Now Satan, what about your proud boast" God might have said.

"Oh yeah" replied Satan. "Somewhat to my surprise, the old fellow did stand firm. But touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face," cynically replied Satan. "Skin for skin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life." In a way Satan had something there. There are those who can look unmoved upon the sufferings of others, and even upon material losses on their own part. But when it comes to seemingly undeserved suffering in their own lives, that is another matter. Their faith breaks under the strain. But here again Job stood the test. Even though he was smitten with boils which covered him from the sole of his feet unto his crown, he did not lose his faith. To make matters worse his wife, his friends, even children in the streets mocked him and derided him and abhorred him. He did not understand it all. But he trusted through it all. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him" — One of the greatest sayings in all literature.

It should be remarked in passing that the Devil was lying when he said that a man would give all that he had for his life. There have been thousands who have not counted life dear unto themselves when the question of honor or virtue or duty, or faithful witnessing for Christ were concerned. The Devil's statement is the philosophy of the cynic and the scorner. It is blasphemy against man at his best.

The Answer To The Question

The drama (or the book of Job) does not give an answer to the question as to why the righteous suffer. Nor does the Bible give an unequivocal answer. Nor can anybody give a satisfactory answer. There is no simple answer. There are some partial answers to the question. Sin causes suffering, and even the innocent suffer because of the sins of others. We are all bound up in the bundle of life, and it is inevitable that suffering will come by virtue of this fact. Then too we live in a universe of law and order. God cannot make special laws for the good man and the evil man. Fire will burn one as it burns the other. Germs will attack one as they attack another. Wind and flood will wreak their damage upon the good and on the evil.

But there is suffering which is disciplinary rather than punitive. Some suffering is God's appointed means of developing character and greatness of spirit. The Captain of our Salvation was made perfect through suffering. Suffering can be and often is a refining fire which burns the dross out of life and reveals the real gold of character. Some suffering comes from God's wisdom as well as from man's error.

After all, the crucial question or issue concerning suffering, is not why it comes, but how one handles it; not what suffering does to us, but what we do with suffering. Among the students in a well-known college was a young man on crutches, homely, ungainly, but with a talent for friendliness and optimism. He won many scholastic honors and had the respect of his classmates. When asked the cause of his deformity, he replied "Infantile Paralysis." The friend asked him further "With a misfortune like that, how can you face the world so cheerfully and confidently?" Smilingly he replied "Oh, the disease never touched my heart."

Meet Our High School Seniors

Dear Friends:

This week, March 29, our four seniors will leave with their class for the spring senior trip to Washington, Philadelphia, New York and other points north. We wish them a very pleasant journey and know the trip will be most enjoyable to them.

We are very proud of our four seniors and we believe friends of the Home would like to know more about them. Therefore, we would like to present a brief sketch of each one.

Bobby Burgess, who has been at the Home since December 10, 1949, was born May 22, 1941. He is a half-orphan, his father is deceased. He enjoys basketball and baseball. Bobby will be looking for employment after graduation or, perhaps, will join some branch of the armed services.

Kenneth Ferrell, also a half-orphan whose father is deceased, has been with us since May 28, 1952. He was born February 23, 1943. Kenneth is very active in high school and his qualities of leadership are shown in the fact that he is president of the senior class. He plays forward on the varsity basketball team. He is planning to enter college next fall and has hopes of eventually obtaining a position with the State Highway Patrol.

Our girl senior is Sue Johnson, who is a full orphan. She was born July 9, 1942, and has been at the Home since January 9, 1956. She enjoys basketball and bowling and likes to sew. In fact, Sue is a very good seamstress. During her senior year she has been working after school in the Home office. She is interested in becoming a beautician and plans to enter training for this work when she has completed high school.

George Morningstar, who has been at the Home since September 30, 1950, was born November 23, 1942. His father is deceased. George is co-captain and plays forward on the varsity basketball team of the Elon College High School. He also is president of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Elon College Community Church. George hopes to enter college after graduation from high school and has given some consideration to studying law.

There are many expenses in connection with graduation from high school. Some of these young people have assistance in a financial way — others do not. Any help which can be given our seniors in these last months here, in finding work after graduation, or toward their college expenses will be greatly appreciated. Both George and Kenneth will probably be looking for summer jobs to help them earn money for college.

SERVICE COMMITTEE AIDS WORK IN KOREA

Edith Galt, R. N., is in Pusan, Korea, where she is loaned by the Congregational Christian Service Committee to the Australian Presbyterian Mission Hospital. Among other duties she conducts a midwifery school which has graduated 293.

Our Congregational Christian Service Committee has granted $10,000 toward an essential building to house staff and other facilities. "Nurses sleeping in cots so close together there is not standing room between have been encouraged to hope for better days."

In the women's hospital there are usually more patients (101 by mid-night count) than beds (75). Out-patients average a daily 115, not counting 600 babies receiving milk through the generosity of Church World Service.

Miss Galt writes gratefully of bales of clothing received and toys, school kits, hygiene kits, etc. "People are very generous," she says.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

By William T. Joyner

Someone has said that, "a man without a country is not as bad off as a man without a church." Why? Because it is only through active membership in the Christian Church that man's deepest needs are met. It is here, and only here, that he finds sufficient guidance and strength to carry on with the business of living. It is here that he finds the source of meaning in an otherwise senseless world. It is here that he truly discovers God, his neighbor and himself. Such needs cannot be met in either a country or any other human institution. They can be met only in the Church.

The Church can meet such needs, that is, if allowed to do so. The Church cannot be expected to benefit anyone who refuses to come near it. Many scoff at the Church. Many ignore it. Many say that they will not join it until they are good enough. But those who scoff at the Church only laugh at their own sickness. Those who ignore it deny that they are sick. Those who refuse to join it until they are good enough are most pitiful of all. They don't think they should have themselves admitted to a hospital until their disease is cured. All of these fail to see the real meaning of Church membership. They have not understood the words of the Master: "They that be whole need no physician, but those that are sick." When a person presents himself for membership in a local congregation of growing disciples, he is coming to the Great Physician — imperfect, yes; sick, yes — but desiring to be made well. This is what the Church is for. Those who are perfect need not bother with joining it. All others are eligible.

NEW MANUAL FOR YOUNG ADULTS

How's the young adult program in your church? Good? Not so good? Non-existent? Here is a spritely new manual on young adult work that can spark the good and indifferent programs and make your young adults just itch to start an active group where none now exists.

The result of more than ten years of study and research, the brand new A Manual for Young Adults is a comprehensive guide to program planning for older youth and young adults in the church.

Written in a light, witty style, the manual has chapters on the older youth and young adult in and out of the church, koinonia, organization, approaches to program, leadership development, and Christian education as applied to the young adult. An excellent appendix gives several specific suggestions on programming plus other helps.

The book is illustrated with delightful cartoons. Containing 64 pages plus cover, the manual sells for 85¢ a copy.

What your conscience knows about you is more important than what your neighbors say about you.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman left Easter Monday for a three weeks' trip to Washington, Oregon and Utah. She will be speaking to women's groups.

WHAT IS THE PRELUDE FOR?

Preludes are for prayer. Usually we come to the house of the Lord to worship. There has been, perhaps, much hurrying and scurrying to get ready for church — our children are tired — our tempers on edge — the traffic was heavy. As we enter the church we first have the prelude on the program. It is a quiet time. It is not meant to be a background of music against which we can chat with our friends. If we let it, it helps create an attitude of prayer — a feeling of peace — a sense of earnestness to God. If you must whisper, whisper a prayer, for preludes are for prayer.

Church Honors Faithful Workers

Mr. and Mrs. Caleb D. West

Pictured above are Mr. and Mrs. Caleb D. West of Newport News, Virginia. March 12 the church he has served effectively in choir, as treasurer, deacon, and in many ways since its organization sixty years ago received and dedicated Maas Cathedral Chimes in honor of Mr. West, a gift from his wife, and a complete surprise to the man thus honored by his family and church.

Spring Hill Christian Church nurtured the famous West family that included Jesse, a member of the Supreme Court of Virginia, Junius E., Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, Robert, secretary of Waverly Christian Church for many, many years, John, treasurer of the Waverly church and leading citizen of the Waverly community, and Caleb who helped to start a new church in Newport News and who moved into the affections of a generation in that church and city.

Here And There Among The Churches

Standing committees of the Eastern Virginia Conference will hold a planning session Sunday afternoon, April 28, in the Suffolk church.

Easter Sunday seven people united with our High Point church. Sixty-two people attended the morning service. The regular offering was $112.88 and the special offering for foreign missions amounted to $205.35.

The Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines received 23 members on Palm Sunday, and 15 members participated in visitation that afternoon. The Easter service featured Easter music.

The offering for One Great Hour of Sharing in our Tryon church amounted to $673.49. Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Brown, who will soon be leaving this church to go to Vermont, held open house last Sunday afternoon.

Great Bridge reports: "During the weeks of Lent this church had 1,847 persons to attend the morning worship services. During the same period we had 1,527 to attend the evening services. Our total church attendance, including both morning and evening, was 3,274. Not bad for a country church!"

The congregation of the Christian Temple in Norfolk shared in a Candlelight Communion-Choral service Maundy Thursday. The sacred cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," was presented by the Temple Choir composed of twenty-one persons. Easter Sunday the minister, Dr. Frank Hamilton, exhorted his people to "Lay Hold on Life."

Rev. Bland Leebrick, minister at Apple's Chapel, talked to his large rural congregation Easter Sunday about "The Greatest Day in History."

The chancel choir of our Tryon church will present Faurer's "Requiem" Sunday afternoon, April 16, at 4:00 o'clock. They will be assisted by Dr. Robert Snyder, violinist.

Twenty-four members were received by Beverly Hills church, Burlington, on Palm Sunday — twenty-two by profession of faith and two by letter of transfer. Sounds as though the pastor, Rev. Kenneth Register, and the church had been at work!

Mr. Cyrus Shoffner, long-time member of Liberty Congregational Christian Church, Liberty, North Carolina, reports that the church has voted to approve the proposed constitution of the United Church of Christ. He adds, "I am gratified to see in United Church Herald that the vote is going strong for uniting."

Seventeen young people who had been members of the pastor's training class united with the Suffolk Christian Church Maundy Thursday evening. They and their parents were served a meal, and holy Communion was administered by the minister, Dr. George D. Alley.

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention will meet at Elon College April 27-28. Opening session begins at two o'clock Thursday afternoon, and it is anticipated that the work will be completed about that same time Friday. Note that this is a change of date. Full attendance is needed.

The Bible study planned for Women's Fellowship is being taught by Mrs. Everette Neese on three consecutive Sundays during Sunday school at First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond.

Rev. Sam Nelson, pastor of Lynn haven Colony, and Rev. Bill Simmons, pastor of Great Bridge, will exchange pulpits April 30. Mr. E. E. Waterfield of Great Bridge will be the lay speaker at Spring Hill that Sunday.

Holy Week services were observed in the Dendron Christian Church with Rev. Julius Rice of Bayside assisting the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield. A Candlelight Holy Communion Service was held Thursday evening. The concluding service was Easter Sunday evening.

Blind friends may be interested in the National Church Conference for the Blind to be held at St. Louis, Missouri, July 24-27. The Conference is a gathering of blind people in the interest of Bible study, sacred music, Christian vocations, and other Christian life interests. Information may be secured by writing: National Church Conference for the Blind, P. O. Box 6999, Fort Worth 15, Texas.

Ground-breaking service for the first unit of St. Peter's United Church of Christ, Greensboro, was held Easter Sunday afternoon. Participating, in addition to the pastor, Rev. Carl Daye, were Rev. J. L. Levens representing the Southern Synod; Mr. Martin Garren, representing the Southern Convention; Rev. W. E. Wisseman, First Congregational Christian, Greensboro; and Rev. Melvin Palmer, First Evangelical and Reformed, Greensboro.

EASTER AT FIRST, RICHMOND

By Mrs. C. W. Sprenkle

An early morning service was held at the First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond, Virginia, at 7:30 on Easter Sunday. The services were conducted by the Pilgrim Fellowship, led by Clyde Parsons, president.

Presenting the service based on the theme, "The Seven Last Words of Christ from the Cross" was Jean Blackburn, Kathryn Deatherage, Barbara and Carolyn Fussell, Carole Prim, Keith McManaway, Jr. and Jimmy Neese. Breakfast was served by the Fellowship at 8:30 a.m. in the Fellowship Center.

The young people sold sixty Easter lilies to adorn the sanctuary and to underwrite the cost of the breakfast. This project, along with the early morning service, has become a tradition for our young people.

The 11 o'clock service was taped so that the visiting committee could take the Easter Message to our shut-ins.

The mid-year session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference will be held Sunday, April 23, in the Community Church, Chapel Hill, from 3:00-7:30 p.m.

The theme is "Called to be Sent." Dr. W. E. Wisseman will address the afternoon session on "Heeding the Call." Supt. Clyde Fields will address the evening session on "Responding to the Call."

Each church is asked to bring picnic baskets so that supper may be shared. The Women's Fellowship of the United Church of Chapel Hill will provide the beverages.

The Community Church is located on Purefoy Road, just off Mason Farm Road.

HOLY WEEK AT MT. ZION

By Myrtle Shepherd, Reporter

The congregation of Mt. Zion United Church of Christ, Mebane, N. C., had the privilege of hearing the Rev. Reuben Askew, pastor of Pleasant Hill church, the week of March 26-31.

The Maundy Thursday service was a most inspiring communion service with twelve persons sitting around the table. The pastor, Rev. Glenn Garrett, led a "Litany of Beatitude" and read Luke 22:1-20 and had a prayer for the church. Then the Last Supper was re-enacted by the following:

Luke 22:7-16 — Jerry Blalock; Mark 14:18-21 — Gorman Wilkerson; Matthew 14:16-21 — Hubert Walker; John 15:1-7 — W. C. Riley; John 6:32-37 — Mrs. Lorene Warren and Mrs. Hazel Newlin; Psalm 4:4-5 — Gattis Carden; Matthew 26:26-30 — Rev. Reuben Askew; Acts 2:41-43 — Mrs. Robert Coble; II Cor. 6:14 — Mrs. Margaret Richmond; Ephesians 5:10-13 — Bill Tate; I Cor. 11:23-26 — Billy Walker.

Miss Judy Crutchfield sang, "Were You There?" Mr. Askew gave a short interpretation of the bread and Mr. Garrett of the wine; then they led prayers of confession and consecration, after which communion was served to the congregation.

There were about fifty at the sunrise service. Part of this was held in the church. The conclusion was held in the cemetery, with scripture reading by our pastor, a song "Sunrise Tomorrow," and prayer by Hubert Walker. Breakfast was served in the hut by some of the men of the church, who proved to be good cooks.

There was good attendance at Sunday school and morning worship. Mr. Garrett's sermon topic was "Christ, The Hope of the World." The youth choir sang "In the Garden" and the adult choir "Were You There?"

This week of services, climaxed by the Easter message on Sunday morning, brought back to everyone the full significance of Christ's death, burial, and resurrection.

ELECTED TRUSTEE OF ELON COLLEGE

Martin T. Garren, former president of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, has been named as a new member of the Elon College board of trustees.

Garren, who is chief personnel officer for the Greensboro post office, is a graduate of Duke University and had additional study at both Duke and North Carolina State College. A member of Greensboro's First Congregational Christian Church, he has been very active in the church affairs and was the first layman to be elected president of the Southern Convention in more than a century.

In addition to his church affiliations and interests, Mr. Garren is active in professional and civic organizations. He is president of the Greensboro branch of the National Postal Transport Association and is a member of the Gate City's Civitan Club, Industrial Management Club and the Southeastern Safety Association.

He is married to the former Miss Birdie Mary Rowland, who is an alumna of Elon College. They have two teen-age sons.

DANIELEY SHARES CAMPUS MINISTRY

Dr. J. E. Danieley, president of Elon College, attended a meeting of a special committee in Nashville, Tenn., Tuesday, March 28, to help plan a nationwide Consultation on Campus Ministry in the Church-Related Colleges.

The national conference, which is to be held at a later date, will pertain to colleges which are related to the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, and it will be sponsored jointly by those groups.

The planning committee, which gathered in Nashville, was named by the national advisory council on campus ministry of the United Church of Christ, and Dr. Danieley was named to represent the presidents of the denominational colleges.

A Southern Convention Pilgrimage to Old Lebanon Church site, Surry County, Virginia, May 7 is planned by the Historical Society under the direction of Dr. W. T. Scott, Dr. L. E. Smith, and Mr. A. T. Sowder.

The Old Lebanon Church site is located about 2 miles from Surry Court House, Surry County, Virginia, on state highway No. 10. It was here that Rev. James O'Kelly and his associates met in August 1794, organized the denomination known as "Christian Church," and adopted its "Cardinal Principles."

The program is planned for one hour (3:00-4:00 p.m.). Those invited to participate include Dr. H. H. Cunningham, Dr. George D. Alley, Supt. Clyde Fields, Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, Rev. A. L. Granger, Rev. J. E. McCauley, Rev. O. D. Poythress, and Rev. F. C. Lester.

It is hoped that many members of our churches will participate in this pilgrimage to this historic spot.

The annual banquet for the Suffolk district of the Elon College Alumni Association will be held in the fellowship hall of Suffolk Christian Church at seven o'clock Friday evening, April 21. Mr. W. M. Saecker, member of the Suffolk church, is president of the organization.

Christian College Day

Next Sunday is known in American Protestantism as National Christian College Day. It is the time for churches to consider their responsibility concerning the education of their youth.

A casual glance at the educational situation in America today might easily make one conclude that Christian College Day has passed. Of course there are many colleges related to churches, some of them owned and controlled by some denomination. A first impression of many of them would indicate that athletics is the most important part of the curriculum, and that only a choice few of the enrolled "students" are of great importance. A second impression is that religion has been relegated to the background while science takes precedence over all other studies. A casual glance might indicate that the stadium is the place of worship rather than the chapel, and that the golden calf to which deeper homage must be paid resides in the science laboratory.

But Christians must not be content with a casual glance at education. Things are not always what they seem to be now any more than they were that day on Calvary when friends took the broken body of Jesus from a cross and laid it in a tomb. There is much more to college than the rip-roaring returning alumni and the yelling student body at the Home-Coming games.

They are not often put on public display, but in every college there are devoted scholars guiding young people in the search for knowledge. Though there may never be any college yells in their honor, they are the heart of the institution. Without them a college would be dead.

It is in the class room that a college is Christian or heathen, and the teacher makes the difference. Two people look at a beautiful sunset. One sees rays of light coming from the sun so many million light years from earth as they mingle with dust particles that reflect certain colors. Another sees "the Great High Priest of Nature . . . going forth to the evening sacrifice." During World War I two Randolph brothers were teachers of science at Elon College. They opened class with a prayer that teacher and pupils might discover truth, and refrain from hate. But this was not the custom of all college professors. One of the world's four most famous paleontologists of the mid-20's led a class of Yale students through a course in organic evolution, tracing the history of life from modern man back to its beginning. "What was the origin of life?" he asked, and answered his own question in these words: "Concerning the origin of life, as a scientist I know as much as anyone, that is, nothing at all. As a Christian, I believe what is recorded in Genesis 1—in the beginning God created." It is in the intimate contacts of teachers and pupils that a Christian college aids growing persons to stand in reverence before "whatsoever things are true."

Christian teachers are found in many kinds of colleges. Of course they are in church related colleges; and some of them are in state institutions. It is the business of the church college authorities to see that the teachers selected have the caliber to acknowledge allegiance to something bigger and better than themselves and the courses they are to teach. They need to know God in their own experience, and to be growing persons searching for whatever of truth the Divine Father may be pleased to reveal to those who seek. Then it is the business of the churches to see to it that their institutions are supported adequately so the young people who enter church related colleges will have equal intellectual advantage with all other students in whatever kind of college they may study, and will get the Christian interpretation and appreciation of life as an added blessing from the Church which holds in its hands the keys to the Kingdom of God.

This Is April

Once upon a time April was the first month of the year. A change in the calendar gave it fourth place, and left a vacancy in April 1 which has now become April Fool's Day. (There is no need to comment that there are many other vacancies which have been filled with nothing better.)

The word April seems to have come from an old Latin word which means "to open." In the long ago April opened the new year. That service is no longer its glory, but the significance of the word remains.

In the northern hemisphere, and particularly in our latitude, April opens the door to spring which is followed by summer. The cold of winter is driven away by the March winds, and the April showers and balmy breezes bring spring flowers.

Imagine, if you will, the Twelve Months meeting in convention to decide which month should be crowned king, or queen, because of its greater blessing to humanity. January could say: "I am first. You could not get along without me." February could boast of its brevity and quiet peace. March could roar like a lion or be as gentle as a lamb. May could claim the honor of flowers and fragrance. June could present an abundance of brides, while July and August could offer fertile fields growing to harvest and pleasure places attracting people for rest. So, with all the months. They have their wonderful gifts to offer. Then arises April, timid at first, but glowing as she proceeds: "I open the beauties of spring which March has so recently bequeathed us: Slumbering flowers lift their heads from the moldy ground so you can look right into the heart of jonquil, tulip, lilac, and hyacinth. I open the buds on flowering and fruitful trees and offer to you a paradise where birds open their throats in song. I open the door for sunshine and showers so farmers can plant and harvest and the hungry be fed. And, this year at least, I invited you to an open tomb in a flowering garden, and told you of immortality. Need I say more?"

Coming

The convention of the Women's Fellowship invites you to Suffolk, Virginia, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. Two years of active service have gone since last they met, and two years more will be planned. In the midst of our revolutionary world the women of our churches challenge themselves, and all of us, to redouble our efforts to make the Christian message relevant for our time.

MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

WHEN YOU FAST

"When you fast, do not look dismal."

Matt. 6:16

Anyone good enough to fast, as a religious discipline, should be good enough not to parade his goodness. Long face, short friends. Your shining trust in God should show in your step, not your stoop.

Your witness to God's goodness, and love, and mercy will be better if you are bright and happy — beautiful, if possible, remembering that beauty is as beauty does.

To be sure the now-say-cheese grin is sickening, but the kindness and integrity seen in the countenance of one who loves God and neighbor are in themselves a blessing.

There must have been some good reason why, when Jesus uttered the above text, he added, "like the hypocrites, for they disfigure their faces, that their fasting may be seen by men."

Most of us are in too big a hurry to get credit for everything we do. Jesus has promised that in due time "he will repay every man for what he has done." The good person out of goodness of heart desires to help others for the joy of serving. Jesus calls us to follow him.

Unselfishness, kindness, honest effort at doing one's best at whatever task or work one has to do, faithfulness in sharing and self-forgetfulness in serving — these pay off in the present, and have their sufficient reward in the future.

The wise and unselfish man whom God has blessed with the ability to earn and save rejoices also in fellowship with God in dedicating his wealth to the work of helping others with as little fan-fare as possible. The nurse who has only her hand and heart to give in loving service may likewise rejoice in the divine fellowship. There is room for true dedication, and no need to look dismal! Amen.

The postal system of Mexico is the oldest mail service in North America. Starting at a date not definitely known, Mexico's mail service ranks high among others of the world. Like the postal service in other countries, it has gradually changed in form, widened its scope, and improved in efficiency.

The first postal system in Mexico existed in the time of the Aztecs. How early this began is not recorded, but there is record of how mails were carried at the time of the conquest of 1519. Couriers were used and were called correos, a derivation from the Spanish word correr which means to run. The name has remained in use and the Mexican postal service is now known as Servicio de Correos.

Different insignia were used by the couriers in accordance with the nature of the news they carried. If the Aztecs had lost a victory, the couriers let their hair loose and went direct to the Palace upon reaching Mexico City where they prostrated themselves before the king to render an account of the happenings. If they carried news of a victory, they would tie a white cloth around their heads and carry a sword in their right hand, which they would hold in an attitude of combat, thus demonstrating their joy of victory.

Because of physical endurance, the couriers were trained from early childhood for their profession, and Aztec priests would encourage them and offer prizes for proficiency. There were small towers stationed six miles apart along the route of travel where other couriers would receive the news and continue the journey. By use of this relay method, often a message was carried a distance of 300 miles in one day.

By Royal Letters Patent of the King of Spain to the Viceroy of Mexico, dated December 25, 1765, the postal service of Mexico was incorporated by the Crown of Spain. At that time, two mails carried by couriers arrived in Mexico, one on Monday and the other on Thursday. Overseas mail was dispatched once a month, if sailing vessels were available.

Although Mexico has the oldest postal system in North America, its modernization began in 1792, only two years before Congress passed, in 1794, the first law regulating handling the mail in the United States.

The Voice Of Spring

Some years the spring peepers start calling in mid-March, some years not until April, but whenever it happens the peeper chorus is the voice of eternal spring. There is nothing else quite like it. Robins sing, crocuses bloom, sap rises, but the peepers in full voice are the ancient and enduring cry of life triumphant and resurgent. The message is as unmistakable as sunrise.

It is one of the pleasant puzzles of nature why this small tree toad, Hyla crucifer, this mite of amphibian life which still hibernates as its progenitors did more than 100,000,000 years ago, should so unmistakably personify the surge of spring. Perhaps it is because spring itself is ancient beyond reckoning, or perhaps it is because all the life we know had such minute beginnings and because, so far as we know, it too originated in the warm waters of ancient time. But why this voice, this shrill proclamation from such a tiny remnant of the distant past? A dozen peepers make less than a human handful, but their voices can fill a whole evening.

The peeper is prescient of the season but only a minor weather prophet. Sometimes the peepers emerge, only to be snowed in again. They can be frosted into silence, sleeted back into the mud. But they can't be silenced for long. They are the very epitome of insistent life, making minor compromises with things as they are but never surrendering. When the equinox approaches you can be sure that the spring peepers are not far behind. And when the peepers cry, then winter is on its way out.

Dr. Reuling Honored After Africa Trip

Dr. John A. Reuling, secretary for Africa of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, was honored April 6 at a meeting at First Congregational Church, Waltham, Massachusetts, to which members of our 120 churches in the Boston area were invited.

Dr. Reuling has just returned from a two-month visit of mission stations in Ghana and Togo. In Togo Dr. Reuling narrowly escaped death in a serious automobile accident, in which one man was killed. The next day hundreds of Africans walked great distances to express gratitude that Dr. Reuling and three other men in the car had survived. Those paying tribute included an old pagan king who came with his entire retinue and many gifts, including a goat. A whole village came, bringing yams, eggs, chicken and firewood.

Dr. Reuling, in referring to this, said: "I can understand how Africans, as a result of long provocation, lack of consideration, and frustration can be roused to frenzy and do the terrible things that we have been reading about lately. But the people who showed such concern after our accident represent Africans as I have known them for nearly 35 years, in many widely separated parts, and it is a real pleasure to work at helping them to realize their true potential in these difficult and complex times."

GHANA and TOGO

Yendi

Government center for the Northern Territories, with estimated population of 10,000. Site for rural extension program of Evangelical Church.

April

16—Rev. and Mrs. David Lennington were trained at Cornell to give special help in rural and agricultural problems. The center of their work is Eden Experimental Farm in a section of West Africa few non-Africans have visited. He is one of a select group of missionaries dedicated and trained to help combat physical and spiritual hunger in overseas areas of special need. She is the daughter of medical missionaries now serving at Worawora hospital in Ghana.

THE RHODESIAN MISSION

17—Sixty-five years ago the first large group of European settlers went to Rhodesia — and 65 years ago our mission was founded. Now there is a well-rooted church, self-supporting on the local level, a Christian community that is growing, medical, agricultural and educational work.

Chikore

Mission station consisting of church, upper primary school, secondary school, cottage hospital and dispensary and 18,000 acre farm with 500 tenants. It is 140 miles from railway.

18—Rev. and Mrs. Donald Abbott work with school and mission — he is principal of rapidly growing secondary school and she is station treasurer.

19—Rev. and Mrs. Charles Blakney are in their first term as evangelistic missionaries, where he counsels African pastors over large area. He is son of American Board missionary parents.

20—Miss Theresa Buck is a nurse who served at Mt. Silinda and since 1959 has been at Chikore where she is in charge of the small hospital which is visited by a doctor once a week. The 50 patients are primitive people, often wearing witch doctor's charms; relatives come to cook for them and help with their care. She also teaches art at the secondary school and a Sunday school class there.

21—Rev. and Mrs. John Heinrich both have their B. D. from Yale Divinity School. He is the elected superintendent of the African Church, which has 60 preaching points, 10 national workers and 300 lay preachers. She is district advisor to women's and handcraft groups and cares for their three small children.

22—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lord have served one term. He supervises outstation schools which have 5400 pupils and manages 18,000 acre farm. She graduated from Guilford College in 1941, and is treasurer of primary outstation schools and supervises sewing in them.

VIRGINIA INSTITUTE ON "THE CHURCH AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS"

An Institute on "The Church and International Relations" will be held at the Ginter Park Methodist Church, Richmond on Tuesday, April 18, from 10:00 a.m., until 4:00 p.m. It will provide the opportunity for persons to better understand the factors involved in world peace and the ways that churches may work effectively for peace.

Areas to be considered are: "Major Points of Tension In The Search For Peace", "What The Church Can Contribute", and "The Local Church And The Search For Peace."

LEADERS INCLUDE: Mr. Edwin Milton Wright, director of the Department of Career Studies, Foreign Service Institute, Department of State; Dr. Ernest S. Griffith, Dean of the School of International Service, The American University, Washington; and Dr. Malcolm P. Calhoun, Secretary of the Division of Christian Action, Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.

The Institute has been planned by the Division of Life and Work of the Virginia Council of Churches. Rev. E. A. Pluckett, minister of the Chesapeake Avenue Methodist Church, Norfolk serves as chairman of the Committee on Peace and International Relations.

Persons desiring to participate should contact the Virginia Council of Churches, 109 West Grace Street, Richmond 20, Virginia.

Rev. J. Everette Neese will represent our denomination at a meeting in Richmond April 20 to discuss religious work at State Colleges in Virginia.

A Project For The Local Church

By Supt. Clyde L. Fields

Our Year of Decision program for 1961-62 recommends that each local church hold a Family School of Missions for six weekly sessions this September and October as an important and integral part of our preparation for Our Christian Enlistment in November.

The Family School of Missions consists of six weekly sessions on a week-day evening, Sunday afternoon, or Sunday evening, with graded activities for each age level on one mission study theme or another.

The United Presbyterian Church each year has between 2,000 and 3,000 local churches holding such six-session Family Schools of Missions. Out of 6,000 churches in the American Baptist Convention, 3,000 have a six-session Family School of Missions every year. Our own national Committee for Our Christian World Mission has repeatedly adopted this as one of the program objectives in missionary education in the local church.

The Family School of Missions is the best way of involving men, women, youth, children, families, in other words, the whole church membership simultaneously in a program of missionary education. Through your work with local churches and church groups, and in your own local church, will you help inaugurate this program of missionary education.

Local churches should do their planning in May and June for a School of Missions in September and October. At the local church level it will call for close cooperation between the Board for Our Christian World Mission and the Board for Christian Education. My May 1, a Manual for organizing and sponsoring the Family School of Missions will be printed and sent to all resident pastors free. Extra copies will be available in the New York and Chicago offices of the Missions Council at 20¢ a copy.

Dedication service for the new chapel at Clanton Park United Church was held last Sunday evening. Participating in addition to the pastor, Rev. James Jackson, were Supt. Clyde Fields, President Harvey Fesperman, Rev. Thomas R. Hamilton, pastor of St. Matthews E. and R. church, and chairman of the sponsoring committee; Rev. A. L. Roberts, Mecklenburg Presbytery and Rev. Kenneth R. Moore, St. Marks Methodist Church.

OUR CHRISTIAN WORLD MISSION SUNDAY APRIL 30

Churches of four of the five Conferences of the Southern Convention will join in a program of concern for the stewardship support of Our Christian World Mission April 30. The Virginia Valley Conference will join the program of concern May 7 and 14. (A Conference wide laymen's retreat prevents participation April 30.) This effort to interpret and motivate has been planned by the Stewardship Commission of the Southern Convention together with the Conference Chairmen of the several Conferences.

Visiting pastors, laymen, local pastors, and members of the Convention Staff will lead in a service of worship and present a message around the theme "Our Christian World Mission." It is hoped that local churches can arrange a luncheon or afternoon session with the officers and leaders of the church so as to allow the visiting speaker to present information and answer questions.

Schools For Ministers

This summer our Board of Home Missions, in cooperation with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, will conduct three schools for pastors of our churches, according to announcement from Dr. Stanley U. North.

Deering Conference Center, Hillsboro, New Hampshire

July 12 — August 2

Dean — Dr. Truman B. Douglass

Limited to ministers who are in new churches or ministers desiring to serve in the field of new church development.

LaForet Conference Center, Colorado Springs, Colorado

July 12 — August 9

Dean — Dr. Stanley U. North

Open to men in the east as well as those in the west this year.

Both room and board will be provided free to pastors, and transportation in excess of $15.00 will be paid by the Board of Home Missions. Wives may attend, expenses being personal.

Lancaster Seminary, Lancaster, Pennsylvania

June 19 — July 21

Designed for ministers who desire to receive academic credit.

Ten scholarships, on same basis as above, are offered to our ministers.

Application blanks for these schools may be secured from the Southern Convention Office. Those for the first two should be returned to Dr. North, and those for the Lancaster School to Dr. Nathanael Guptill, offices of both being at 287 Park Avenue South, New York 10, New York.

Local churches should encourage their pastors to take advantage of these opportunities for in-service training. Men who have attended one of the three schools in the last five years are not eligible.

Church Council Progress In Virginia

By Dr. Joseph S. Johnston

President of the Virginia Council of Churches

The Virginia Council now has behind it fifteen years of experience in serving the churches of Virginia. Its activities have been almost exclusively in areas where no church as a single denomination could operate effectively, efficiently, or economically — if indeed, as a single denomination, it could operate at all. For fifteen years the Council has been a symbol in Virginia of the essential oneness of the Church of Jesus Christ and demonstrated before men that Christians of all denominations can and do work together splendidly toward many great ends which assist mankind and advance the Kingdom of Our Lord. It has borne witness to the world that:

"We are not divided; all one body we, One in hope and doctrine, one in charity."

In each of these fifteen years we have gained strength, skill, and influence. The time has now come for us to move as a thoroughly mature organization toward the full acceptance of the large responsibilities and opportunities of our time in the areas of Council work.

Many of these responsibilities and opportunities are suggested the moment we consider what is happening in and to the state in which we live.

1. The population has been rapidly changing. In the ten years between 1950 and 1960 the population of Virginia increased 19.5 per cent or by more than 648,000 persons. The largest number of people who have moved to Virginia have settled in proximity to Virginia's largest cities so that currently one half of Virginia's total population is reportedly living within a twenty-five mile radius of Memorial Bridge in Arlington, the Zero Milestone in Richmond, and the Monticello Hotel in Norfolk. Both the rapid population increase and the phenomena of population concentrations would seem to have important implications bearing upon the financing, programming, and administration of the Council. . . .

2. There has been a rapid transition in Virginia toward an urbanized culture. Whereas Virginia from a geographical point of view is still largely rural, from a cultural point of view it has increasingly adopted the outlook, interests, and cultural patterns of an urban community. Our agricultural economy has rapidly yielded to an expanding industrial economy. These changes, too, may have significant bearing upon the program of the Council of Churches and upon the role it will play in the lives of Virginians tomorrow. These changes may vastly increase the necessity for interdenominational cooperation; the pooling of resources; and the united church-approaches to many new problems, if the Council is to be an effective instrument in God's hand.

3. Within the past decade at least there has been a lessening of loyalties to particular churches and particular denominations. Families have increasingly selected the Church to which they belong on the basis of its proximity to their residence, the attractiveness of the minister, friends already attending, and even the opportunity it will afford to meet others whose friendship will prove of social or business advantage. . . . The old ties that formerly bound people to the church of a single denomination are weakening. For this reason among some others it is today possible to secure at local church levels a far greater interdenominational interest than ever before. The task remains to secure a corresponding participation in and financial support of cooperative religious programs.

4. The requirements made by the general public of religious and charitable organizations are changing. . . . Today the American public expects the same quality and perfection of production from religious organizations that it gets from its magazine publishers, its telephone company, or its department stores. Council facilities, productions, and programs alike must increasingly possess a discernible quality, compelling respect as being worthily representative of our churches. . . . With the foregoing in mind, a committee has been appointed and is now at work in an effort to find suitable new quarters in Richmond for the Virginia Council of Churches. . . .

It has been suggested previously that at a very early date the Council seriously should consider three regional sub-offices, each directed by a full-time representative of the Council with such secretarial help as may be required. Further, that these offices be established in Roanoke, Norfolk, and Northern Virginia, in that order. Such a program is dependent upon our significantly increasing our budget. . . .

Migrant work, radio and television, lay workshops, church planning, education, evangelism, youth and women's work all figure importantly in plans of the future. Each of these will require adequate support. It would be my hope that the newly employed Associate Secretary give a major portion of his time and talent to the building of good will for the Council and to the inclusion of support for it in the budgets of local churches and businesses. . . .

The inclusion of the Council for twenty-five dollars or more per year in 500 additional local church budgets ought to be our goal and we who are representatives to the Council ought to team up with the Associate Secretary to see that under his leadership this goal is achieved within the next two years. . . .

We have scratched only the surface of possibility for making an impact upon life in Virginia through a cooperative approach to religious matters. In the past fifteen years we have made an excellent beginning. In the next fifteen years let us project these beginnings into the full development of our possibilities to the glory of Jesus Christ, The Lord of All Life.

FIVE WAYS TO HELP A REVIVAL

1. Pray every day, and many times a day, for God's blessings on the evangelist, the pastor, and the services.

2. Plan to attend every service unless providentially hindered.

3. Take part in the congregational singing and be ready and willing to follow the leadership of the Holy Spirit at all times.

4. Make it your aim to speak to at least one person about becoming a Christian and joining the church.

5. Use every possible means to secure the attendance of those who need reviving or salvation.

—First, Henderson, Bulletin

Why Become Part Of United Church?

1. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act consistently with the prayer of Christ for the oneness of His Church.

2. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act consistently with Christ's constant emphasis upon the common fatherhood of God and the common brotherhood of man.

3. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act significantly, and relevantly, to the needs of the "one world" effected by science, industry and mass media of communication.

4. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act consistently with the world wide trends toward the re-union of the Church.

5. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act consistently with Congregationalism's historic pattern of unions. Since the union of the Pilgrims and Puritans Congregationalism has been a uniting fellowship.

6. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act in a way that will help a particular local church continue in the main stream of American Congregationalism. The General Council already has entered the union. It is evident that our Associations, Conferences and instrumentalities will be part of the United Church of Christ. Further, all tests for twenty years point assuredly to the participation in the United Church of Christ by the overwhelming majority of local Congregational Christian churches.

7. To become part of the United Church of Christ a church takes a position in which it will have its spiritual sensitivities sharpened, its program enriched, its prayer life deepened and its study of the Scriptures up-graded through acquaintance, partnership, study and prayer with the brethren of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

8. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to qualify for receiving better Church School materials, better aids for Evangelism, Social Action, Church Extension, Higher Education, Youth Programs, and a host of other emphases through which a local church undertakes to discharge its divine mission.

9. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to share in an adventure in a positive demonstration that Christ's church is one. Talk about "Oneness of Spirit" does not mean anything until the oneness is a fact in the church which people can see.

10. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to be more effectively relevant to the times, the problems and the Christ-imposed duties. The terrible hazard hanging over every church is the possibility that of it men may justifiably ask: "So what?"

11. To become part of the United Church of Christ is to act consistently with the faith of countless thousands that God's hand is helping re-shape His Church the better to serve his gracious ministry of love.

THE PRODIGAL

Why feedest thou on husks so coarse and rude?

I could not be content with angel's food.

How comest thou companion to the swine?

I loathed the courts of heaven, the choir divine.

What sordid rags float round thee on the breeze?

I laid immortal robes aside for these.

An exile through the world, who bade thee roam?

None, but I wearied of a happy home.

Minister's Wife Honored

By Ida Trollinger

The Women's Fellowship of Carolina church (near Burlington) met in the Fellowship Hall March 14 for the regular monthly meeting. The president, Mrs. Edna Jones, presided. Scripture was read by Mrs. Isia Murray and prayer was led by Miss Ida Trollinger. Miss Lydia Dickens gave a talk on "The Bible and Race."

We enjoyed a covered dish supper. As it will soon be time for our pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Grant Burns, to leave to go to their new work in Randleman, each member brought a gift for Mrs. Burns.

Mrs. Jones read the following "open letter":

Dear Patricia,

Before you leave us who love you to travel on other pathways where God is leading you and your companion, we wanted to let you know we're going to miss you and the warm qualities of character that you possess which have endeared you to our hearts.

We love you for the interest you have shown in bringing to us the programs on Missionary Education, which have given to us a greater knowledge of Our Christian World Mission.

We love you for your service to the Women's Fellowship group. We know that each service you have performed within the circle has been done because of your love for God and your willingness to serve and help others. We feel that you have been instrumental in helping to cheer and encourage those of us who have needed encouragement along "the way."

But most of all we love you because of the warm quality of understanding which you possess, that has meant much to us in the months you have been with us. We feel that you always look upon the words and acts of others with love and understanding. You seem to realize that all of your many sisters in Christ have heartaches and temptations that cause us to speak or act in error sometimes. However, we've never known you to condemn or criticize — but rather with compassion and consecration you have shown to us the joy of friendship, of kind words, of faith in God, and appreciation for those around you.

We want you to know that as you and Grant press ever onward in service to God and your fellowman our thoughts and our prayers will be with you.

With love and gratefulness for having known you,

The Women's Fellowship of Carolina Church

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

LAST CALL FOR VOCATIONS RETREAT

Rev. John R. Lackey, chairman for the Vocations Retreat at Moonelon Conference Center, Elon College, North Carolina, April 14-16, reminds our young people that they need to register immediately, if they have not already done so.

Purpose

Open to juniors and seniors in high school and provided free of charge by the Southern Convention, this retreat offers the opportunity to find the meaning of vocation and how to arrive at one; explores the field of church vocations; and provides an opportunity for concentrated seeking, through prayer, meditation and study of the will of God in terms of life work.

Subjects for Consideration

Pastoral Ministry — Rev. Kenneth Register.

The Missionary — Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Sloan.

The Institutional Chaplaincies — Rev. Kieth Wright.

Christian Education.

Church Secretarial Work — Mrs. William J. Andes.

Church Music — Professor Charles Lynam.

Getting a College Education — Elon Admissions Counselor, William Giun.

What to Bring

Sheets, pillow, blankets, toothbrush, towel, soap, Bible, paper, pencils, etc. Also please bring a bag lunch for Friday supper. Registration will begin at 6:00 Friday afternoon and the program will close with lunch on Sunday. Those attending are asked to stay for the entire program, unless prevented by very exceptional circumstances. Ministers are asked to provide transportation for young people from their churches.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP RALLIES NORTH CAROLINA

All young people from our North Carolina churches are expected to meet at Moonelon Sunday afternoon, April 16. Registration begins at 2:30. Each person is asked to bring a "sack supper."

The theme will be "Christian Vocations." There will be opportunity for a business session for each of the three Conference groups, Eastern, Western, and N. C. & Va.

* * *

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA

The Western North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship Rally scheduled for April 30 is being cancelled, because of the North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship Rally to be held at Moonelon April 16.

It is planned that each Conference P. F. group will have an opportunity to meet separately at Moonelon. At this time the Western N. C. Pilgrim Fellowship will elect officers and transact other necessary business.

Dorothy Lester, President

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA

Donna Ploss
President

Valley Virginia young people are to hold their Spring Rally at Bethel church April 30. Two-thirty until five-thirty are the hours. "Everyone is asked to bring a sack supper. Drinks will be furnished by the host church," says Ann Riley, Publicity Chairman.

ELON STUDENT WINS PRIZE

Richard Apperson, Elon College sophomore from Newport News, Virginia, won first place honors in organ at a southwide music festival, which was held at Jacksonville, Fla., the weekend of March 26 under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The Elon organist, who won the right to represent North Carolina in the Jacksonville festival in an earlier contest held at Salisbury, is accompanist for the Elon College choir.

He is a member of First Congregational Christian Church, Newport News, and served as a Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship officer.

Youth Sunday was observed in the Dendron Christian Church with Wayne Morris presiding over the Sunday School. He was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Herman Trueheart Burgess, John Spratley, Rogert Ward and Mrs. Thurman Williams. Miss Kay Ward taught the Young People's class. The young people presented the opening worship for Easter Sunday.

Silver Anniversary Convocation

A two day Convocation in Greensboro, May 1-2, featuring a number of outstanding speakers, will mark the Silver Anniversary of the North Carolina Council of Churches. Billy Graham, Liston Pope, Eugene Carson Blake, Frank P. Graham, Rufus Clement, Guion G. Johnson, and H. Shelton Smith will deliver addresses during the sessions opening 3 p.m. Monday, May 1, and ending at noon the following day. The First Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, is headquarters for the meetings. All sessions will be open to any interested persons.

Highlights of the Convocation include a dinner Monday evening, addressed by Dr. Smith, at which past presidents and others who led in this movement will be especially honored; a breakfast Tuesday morning at Bennett College to which leaders of denominations in the state have been invited; a worship and communion service Monday evening, with the sermon by Dr. Blake; and a closing session addressed by Dr. Billy Graham.

The list of speakers was not chosen at random, according to the Rev. Morton R. Kurtz, Council Director. The objective was to invite back for the occasion North Carolinians who had achieved fame in different fields. All speakers, therefore, except Dr. Blake and Mrs. Johnson, are natives of this state. Kurtz explained that these two were chosen because the Council's Anniversary Committee desired an outstanding women's leader in both church, education, and civic affairs, and no one fitted this description better than Mrs. Johnson, a native Texan but a long-time resident of Chapel Hill. Dr. Blake was asked because he has been at the forefront of the ecumenical movement, having served as President of the National Council of Churches and as a member of the Central Committee of the World Council. He is also a denominational leader, being presently chief executive of the United Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

By meeting in Greensboro, the Council will be returning to the city where it was officially organized in May, 1936. Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Professor at Duke Divinity School, who speaks at the Monday dinner, was the first president. Dr. Harold J. Dudley, General Secretary of the Presbyterian Synod of N. C., is the current Council President, and will preside over the Convocation. Mr. Kurtz is the fifth Director the Council has had and has served the longest, coming to his present position in September, 1951.

The Rev. W. W. Finlator, pastor of Pullen Memorial Baptist Church, Raleigh, is Chairman of the Committee which planned this Convocation. Dr. Clyde A. Milner, President of Guilford College, and former Council President, is Chairman of the Greensboro host committee.

A new kind of minister trained especially to serve the people who cope with life in metropolitan areas will be developed by the Congregational Christian Churches.

A pilot project for the development of an urban ministry was announced recently jointly by the Congregational Board of Home Missions and the Rhode Island Congregational Conference in Providence where the project will be centered. The Rev. James S. Caskey of Chicago has been called to head the program.

As Minister of Urban Strategy to the Conference, Mr. Caskey will combine in-service training for selected students of theological seminaries with "a creative program of direct action in cooperation with the Rhode Island churches, which among them face every variety of urban problem to be found in major metropolitan areas," according to the Rev. Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice president of the Board.

Mr. Caskey, who has been minister of the Wellington Avenue Congregational Church since 1950, has been a leader in social welfare and community organization in Chicago. He is a member of the city's Commission on Youth Welfare and former chairman of the Department of Social Welfare of the Church Federation of Greater Chicago.

It is planned to invite students of New England theological seminaries to serve as part-time ministers and student assistants while participating in regular weekly seminars. They will both study and experience the problems of relating the Christian Gospel to urban society with special reference to city planning and renewal, health and welfare.

Plans call for Mr. Caskey to serve also as teacher and counselor to the pastors and churches of the area. He and his students will help the congregations carry out self-studies of their churches and communities and move in the direction of needed change.

"The functions of the Minister for Urban Strategy are not rigidly laid down, nor will he be expected to show statistical results," Dr. Douglass said. "What the Board and the Rhode Island Conference are seeking is a creative approach which will help the churches to alter the direction of their ministry to make it relevant to the conditions they face."

New Dean At Elon College

PROFESSOR FLETCHER MOORE

Prof. Fletcher Moore, newly appointed dean of Elon College, beginning with the academic year of 1961-62, brings rich experience and varied talents to his new post, which he assumes after more than twenty years as a member of the Elon faculty.

An accomplished musician and a successful teacher in that field, he has had a wide variety of other interests, for he graduated from Elon College with a triple major in music, mathematics and English, but it was to music that he devoted his attention when he went on for graduate study.

He has added to his interests the field of foreign languages, and he is one of the few persons in the nation who is recognized for his knowledge of the Arabic language. He added Arabic to his earlier knowledge of German, French and Italian as a result of his service assignment during World War II.

Native of Burlington

Professor Moore is a native of Burlington and received his early training in the Burlington city schools; going on to Elon College he graduated with the Class of 1934. He then went to Columbia University where he received the Master's Degree in music in 1935, at the same time doing special work in music at the Julliard School of Music.

He returned to Elon College and became a member of the faculty in 1937, and through the years has served as chairman of Elon's department of fine arts and music while building the department to outstanding rank among the institutions of higher learning in the state and the South.

After joining the Elon faculty, he continued his advanced work in music, spending one year in private piano study in California with Guy Maier and spending eight summers and two full years for doctoral work at Columbia University, where he is to receive the doctor's degree this year. While studying at Columbia, he was a member of that institution's faculty during several summer schools.

Military Service

While he was working with the Elon College Choir for its annual Christmas rendition of Handel's "The Messiah" in 1941, the news was flashed around the world of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, and that event was the signal for an added phase of Professor Moore's career.

When he entered military service, possibly because of his experience in other languages such as German, French, Italian and Latin, he was assigned for one year to the Institute for Asiatic Culture in New York for study of the Arabic language and subsequent assignment for duty in military intelligence.

He spent a total of two years on foreign duty, serving successively on intelligence duty in London, North Africa and in both Naples and Rome in Italy. For his services he received a direct commission as a second lieutenant and was awarded the Bronze Star medal and campaign ribbons with three battle stars for the European Theatre, the North African Theatre and the Middle Eastern Theatre actions.

Professional Interests

After resuming his faculty duties at Elon College at the conclusion of the war, he has gained recognition as one of the leaders in the field of music education in North Carolina, and his interests and activities have extended far beyond his teaching on the Elon campus.

He has done much to increase interest in music in all parts of North Carolina while serving lengthy terms as chairman of the piano division of the North Carolina Music Education Association, chairman of the North Carolina Federation Junior Music Festivals, as board member for the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs and as a member of the board of auditions of the North Carolina Symphony, while serving on the local level as president of the Alamance County Civic Music Association.

He is a member of Phi Mu Alpha, honorary music fraternity; of Phi Delta Kappa, honorary education fraternity; and of the American Musicological Society, the American Guild of Piano Teachers and the Music Teachers' National Association.

Books are the legacies that a great genius leaves to mankind, which are delivered down from generation to generation, as present to the posterity of those who are yet unborn.

When Human Wisdom Fails

Background Scripture: Job 4:1-9; 8:1-10; 11:1-20; 21; 37:14-24.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 119:33-40.

Memory Selection: Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding. Job 28:28.

The theme for today's lesson aptly describes the case of the writer of these NOTES. His wisdom fails him as he studies this lesson. And if it were not for Dr. Frank Mead's comments, he would have but little to write about on this lesson. Like him, teachers will just have to do the best they can, and look to God for the higher wisdom.

Before one goes ahead with the lesson, he ought to go back and read all of Job 21. This is necessary to get Job's perspective. For this chapter is an answer to the philosophy of one of Job's friends, Zophar. This "comforter" has asserted that suffering comes from wickedness, and that the wicked are punished terribly both in this world and in the world to come. Furthermore his children, after him, shall suffer for his iniquities. And they had some Old Testament authority for their statement. Does not Exodus 34 declare that God will visit the iniquities of the fathers "upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and fourth generations"?

These words sting Job into action, and he speaks some of the fiercest words he ever spoke during his tribulation. In effect he says "So you say that God punishes the children of the wicked. I say that God should punish the wicked themselves. Let the sinner himself suffer for what he has done; let him pay the bill in full for himself." To suggest that God punishes the child for the father's sinning is to suggest that the guilty one gets off with less than he deserves. Furthermore Job's friends are wrong in suggesting that the connection between sin and suffering is always constant, invariable, sure. Many of the wicked just do not suffer in this life. "Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them." (Verse 9) They sing and dance and prosper, and when they die they care not one whit what happens to their children. Many a modern gangster lives luxuriously, without a day in jail, apparently without a pang of conscience, while righteous men suffer and live in near-poverty, and the gangsters go to their graves leading a funeral procession a mile long — from a church.

The words of his friends sting Job to the quick. They are presumptuous, they are telling God how he ought to act. They do not face the bitter fact that often the wicked do prosper, and find no punishment in this life. And they are offering suggestions as to what God should do about it. Of course they are like so many of us, who have our theories as to how God should act, and who blame God for so many things for which we ourselves, or others, are responsible.

Job goes a little deeper than his friends. He sees and admits that the wicked often prosper while they live. But sooner or later they die, they are dead and buried. What then? Then comes judgment. Then comes the divine reward or punishment. And that is in God's hands, not in man's. Thank goodness that it is so. Man has the choice of being either wicked or righteous. God has left him free to decide which way he will live. And however men choose to live in this world, God sends his rain and even some of his blessings upon the just and the wicked alike. He gives them the same chances. And then comes death. Is God to be mocked by the wicked? Is the universe founded upon the principle that ultimately there is no difference between the fate or destiny of a good man and a bad man? Is there no difference between the eternal state of a man like Hitler and a man like Kagawa or Stephen or Paul? Does that make sense? Do we live in that kind of universe? Is any man foolish enough

APRIL 23, 1961

By Rev H. S. Hardcastle, D. D.
Pastor of Berea Congregational
Christian Church,
Driver, Virginia

to think that is all there is to it, that there is nothing more? If we believe that we are stupid and worse!

"How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falsehood?" Job 21:34. Job frankly tells his so called "comforters" that they have failed him. They have attempted to comfort him with "empty things." He must find something deeper on which to rest his faith and to explain his problem. He will be honest at all costs. He cannot understand it all, but he will trust where he cannot understand. He bows in humility before God's mysterious ways, but he grows in confidence that they are just and righteous altogether. And in this spirit of humility and reverence, he is beginning to find light in his darkness.

In all of this there is no depreciation of human knowledge or wisdom. There is no arraignment of education. There is no discounting the fact that God has given us minds, and the ability to get wisdom. And there are thousands of men and women who are wise and learned people. The emphasis here is that there is a wisdom above the wisdom of men. Human wisdom often fails. Even the wisest of men make mistakes. There is a wisdom that comes from above. And the brother of our Lord tells us that if any of us lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But he is to ask in faith, nothing doubting. Furthermore knowing is often dependent upon a willingness to do. "If any man will do, he shall know," said Jesus. He that doeth the truth cometh to the light. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge.

The plain truth is that so many of us depend upon our own wisdom. We think we know it all. We think we can get along without any guidance from God. We depend upon our own unaided wisdom. It is not enough. The flickering light of our little minds, even the best of minds, needs the illumination that comes from him who is the Light of the world, even Jesus Christ.

All this has point for our modern world. There are many who think that science can save the world. But our hope is not in science. Our hope is in God, and his grace and his goodness.

Alumni Plan Meeting For June 11

Dear Friends:

Perhaps many of you do not know that we have an Alumni Association of the Children's Home that is very active. Just recently the executive committee, made up of Mrs. Allen E. Gant, president; Paul Williams, vice president; and Clyde W. Rudd, secretary, met with the superintendent to make preparations for their meeting. This meeting is to coincide with the opening of our new cottages. June 11 has been set as our next alumni general meeting. For a number of years this group has met each first Sunday in September. Because of this being Labor Day week-end there was a growing feeling that this date should be changed. So this year we are meeting in June. If it proves to be a good meeting time we will continue to use this date in future years.

The executive committee has scheduled another meeting April 16 with the program and projects committee. At this meeting a program will be planned and various projects that this group might accept will be discussed. In the past this group has done some very interesting and helpful things for the Home. For instance, they bought the first radio for the Home. Also the walk-in freezer was purchased by this organization. This has been a tremendous help to us in having a more adequate menu the year around for our children. Too, this group had the road hardtopped that comes in on our campus up to the girls' dormitory. Those who remember the condition of this road before it was hardtopped know what a great help this has been.

Thus, you see, the alumni of the Home have been very helpful to the Home in the projects they have accepted in the past. I am sure whatever project they accept for this next year that it will be one that will be helpful to our Home for Children.

We hope that not only the alumni will be present on June 11, but as many of our church people as possible. In the afternoon a service of consecration will be held for our new cottages. Following this service these cottages will be open for inspection.

Plan now to be with us June 11.

An Important Telegram

New York, April 6

Rev. Clyde Fields
Superintendent of Southern Convention

Federal Judge Dimock has just rendered a completely favorable decision to General Council, Boards, and Evangelical Reformed Church, hereafter called defendants. He has denied key motions of plaintiffs which, if granted, would have eliminated Cadman Decision as a bar to the continued maintenance of the current action. The Court rejected each of the Plaintiff's arguments to the effect that the Cadman Decision does not bind the Federal Court. Although procedurally the plaintiffs are still entitled to offer evidence of controverting Defendant's proof as to the effect of Cadman Decision, Judge Dimock noted that Defendant's evidence is not of a nature which can be factually disputed and that it is difficult to conceive of any other form of opposition to defendant's position. We are confident that further proceedings will result in dismissal of entire suit on basis of "Res Judicata."

Fred Hoskins, Minister, General Council

*Res Judicata means "a case that has been decided".

In Memoriam

FOGLEMAN

Lawrence E. Fogleman, Sr., a member of the Elon College Community Church, died March 18, 1961. He is survived by his wife, three children, a brother and one grandchild.

A resident of Elon College for more than thirty years, he had endeared himself to neighbors and residents of the town. He was eager at all times to serve his fellowmen.

Funeral services were conducted by J. S. Graves and W. J. Andes in the Elon College Community Church on March 20, 1961.

W. J. Andes

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Great Bridge will be treated to a picnic at their Sunday evening meeting April 16. This group has an enrollment of 70. Working with it are Mrs. Nell Stuart, Mrs. June Caffee, Mrs. June Staley, Mrs. Gerry Crawford and Mrs. Romelle Simmons.

Mrs. Garland Spratley attended the annual meeting of the Virginia Council of United Church Women which met in March at the St. John's Lutheran Church, Roanoke. She served on the recommendations committee and is a member of the legislative and nominating committees.

A fellowship supper and church conference was held by the Garner Community Church at the S. and W. Cafeteria in Raleigh April 7. Rev. John Lackey of Winston-Salem is to be with this new church group May 22-28 to help with the church building fund capital drive. Rev. R. L. Clapp is the pastor.

In Defense Of Excellence

By Richard K. Morton

Excellence is the supreme goal of human thought and living. It possesses an eternal and universal quality. It is the supreme means through which evil can be overcome, ignorance removed, and weakness made strong.

It brings rewards far beyond worldly powers and possessions, beyond material rewards and privilege.

The growing mind which seeks cultivation and education has its own concept of intellectual summitry. It envisions a state of living which desires excellence not simply because there is more power, money, status, and other rewards in it, but because through it the deepest happiness, wisdom, understanding, and satisfying living are to be found.

When you travel through some sections of our country and come to the boundary line of even small communities, you will find signs like this: "American City. Elevation 513 ft. Pop. 2163." The residents feel that it is important to make known, even to strangers, the location of the community in relation to sea level. It will long remain of concern to our country to know the extent of elevation of the average mind over the level of weakness and ignorance. The strength of religion, democracy, and individual freedom lies in the organized and persistent pursuit of excellence.

When a new museum was opened, one of the wall niches was left vacant, awaiting a statue. Among the crowd first inspecting it was a small boy, who proceeded to climb up into the niche. When remonstrating adults hastened to get him down, he said: "I got up there to see how big you would have to be to be put in this place!" This nation can always use those who have the spiritual and intellectual and physical power to see how big you have to be to achieve excellence on the level which is possible for a given individual. What we need is not simply that kind of excellence possible only to the gifted few; we need, rather, that kind of excellence which comes to an individual when he does his utmost and his best.

Some students once facetiously said that they wanted to join a "Gallon Club," meaning the fellowship of those who had worked so hard that they felt they had given a gallon of both blood and sweat to attain their goals! Others put it that they wanted to organize a "Two Mile Club" of those ready to go the second mile if that would aid in their drive for excellence.

We have too many on the level of the youngsters at Christmas time who thought the carolers were singing "When Angels Washed Their Socks by Night." Perhaps we cannot hope for the competence celebrated in the book with the title "How to Clean Everything," but we can adopt a pattern of thinking and living which sets us in the direction of excellence. In spite of the fact that we have more than 21,000 clubs listed in this country, it is still true that in the case of the membership of most societies, less than ten percent of the individuals actually do any real work. The great majority of people do not even make a try for excellence. They never strive to see what their maximum achievement would be if they extended themselves fully. Many have acquired the material trappings of life, but have never really lived.

We have today a generation fascinated with the rewards of industrial production and economic resources as well as with the startling discoveries and wonders of science. But isn't it as important a thrill for us to see what we can make of a life as it is to experiment with what we can do with a chemical or some other substance? We wonder what kind of life there may be on Mars — but are not sufficiently challenged by what we can make of life on earth! There is no more important place for excellence than in personal living.

Our rally cry today is more likely for social adjustment than for social change and improvement. It is more for security than adventure. It is more status than sacrifice. So we encounter the timidity of the safe, the unhappiness of the adjusted, the shame of the unscarred. There are so many who have gathered many valuable possessions, but do not know the meaning of their own existence. There are others who can supply the demands of the crowds and reap rich rewards, but neither recognize nor seek excellence.

The attainment of excellence means the opportunity to realize the utmost in one's endowments and situation. We have not really lived until that which is within us has been given its time for action and for service. Only as a man climbs the summit which he sees before him and becomes a co-laborer and co-traveller with others does he come to understand the meaning of life.

Intellectual shallowness and imperfection mean dimness, weakness, and very likely death in our kind of world. This is a kind of society which has little place for irresponsible ignorance and for moral negligence. It cannot afford the ravages of the incompetent, the insensitivity of the imperfect and incomplete.

If man genuinely seeks the excellent, he will not stop in the foothills of any mountainous climb. He will not flinch at any necessary sacrifice or expense. He will not be willing to ignore human misery or unhappiness or misfortune wherever he finds it.

Excellence also requires a general will to do well and to apply well what one has acquired. Too much we have encountered the folly of those who feel that, if they can excel in one field, they must be permitted any kind of ignorance or folly in all others. We cannot go far with intellectual excellence without moral and spiritual excellence. Nor can we do well with a kind of spiritual excellence which tries to ignore the demands of the world and the need for mental advancement.

The struggle for excellence is a noble goal, but it is also notable for all that happens in man's journey on the way to excellence. If he is steadfast in his quest, he will settle a good deal that otherwise would plague him. If he is devoted to excellence, he will have little time for pettiness and unimportant digressions. He will not be beguiled into the support of a thousand worthless projects. As he seeks excellence, he will find more — he will find himself, his fellow man, his world, his God!

NUMBER 16

"BE KIND TO PEOPLE" WEEK

We have a "Be kind to animals" week, why not have a "Be kind to people" week? It would do us all good. There's a great deal of difference between not being unkind — and being kind. Most of us are fairly decent. We don't make a practice of stepping on other people's toes just for the fun of it. Unfortunately, we don't make a practice, either, of being kind to people — for the fun of it.

The surest way to become a better person is to begin being kinder than you have been in the past. Start doing nice things — things you don't have to do. Do them because you want to. Test your wits; think up little kindnesses you can do for others. And do them — not just plan to do them. And when you do them don't cock your ear for applause. And don't feel hurt if you don't get all the thanks you think your kindness rates. Sometimes a silent thank-you means more than the loudest praise.

New Minister At Rosemont

The new minister at Rosemont, South Norfolk, Virginia, arrived March 1, and is now busy at work.

Carroll Wayne Lewis is from the State of Illinois and the Methodist Church. He received his A.B. degree from Greenville College, Greenville, Illinois, and his B. D. from the School of Theology, Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia, in March, 1960.

Mr. Lewis served Methodist churches in Illinois for eight years and was four years at our Congregational Christian Church in Langdale, Alabama.

He married the former Elinor Heninger of Clay City, Illinois, and they have two daughters: Nancy Carole, 11; and Kathy Sue, 9.

Mr. Lewis was serving the Methodist Church at Mt. Auburn, Illinois, when he was called to the Rosemont Church.

Here And There Among The Churches

April 14-16 our Northview, Sanford, church considered "The Meaning of Church Membership" with Rev. Billy Joe Willett as guest speaker.

Our Tryon church has given an extra $100 to Church World Service for a special program for amputees in Korea.

Ministers' Conference for the United Church of Christ will be held at Moonelon May 15-17 with Dr. Gerald Jud, Dr. Albert Ronander, and Dr. Arthur Newell as guest leaders. Cost will be $9.00.

Rev. Robert Knowles preached at Northview, Sanford, March 26, with young people assisting him in the service. That afternoon he met with the Christian education committee and Sunday school teachers and officers.

Holy Week services were conducted at the Congregational Christian Church of Sunbury, North Carolina, by Rev. Percy W. Benton of Driver, Virginia. Twelve people were received into the church, seven on confession of faith and five by letter of transfer. This good news comes from J. M. Byrum.

We hope you read the announcements of the Eastern N. C. Mid-Year Conference and the Pilgrimage to Old Lebanon on page three in last week's Sun, even though they lacked headings to attract your attention. The former is to be held April 23 at the Community Church, Chapel Hill (Purefoy Road just off Mason Farm Road) 3:30-7:30. The Pilgrimage will be held 3:00-4:00 p.m. May 7 at the site of Old Lebanon Church, 2 miles from Surry Courthouse, Virginia (Highway No. 10).

Rev. Collins Kilburn is holding a pastor's class for young people at United, Raleigh, from April 15 to Pentecost, when members of the class will be received into the church. The class meets Saturday mornings.

Easter Monday the new parsonage lot at Elon College was cleared of debris and April 10 workmen started digging the foundation. It will be located just back of Atkinson apartments.

New officers of the Burlington District Women's Fellowship; chairman, Mrs. J. R. Kernodle, Burlington, First; assistant chairman, Mrs. J. R. Crutchfield, Beverly Hills, Burlington; secretary, Mrs. H. H. Jolly, Burlington, First; assistant secretary, Mrs. W. P. Hurdle, Bethel.

At Carolina a revival meeting is in progress this week with preaching each evening by the pastor, Rev. Grant Burns. A committee on Evangelism has made previous preparation, especially by visitation. Two extra prayer meetings were held last week. Individuals were challenged to "fill a pew" each evening, and all the members were urged to attend.

The Social Action Committee of First Congregational, Fairfield, Connecticut, where Dr. Henry Robinson is pastor, sent a printed newsletter to members of the congregation asking them to seriously consider seven bills pending before the state legislature and then write their representatives concerning them. The names and addresses of representatives in the General Assembly and in the U. S. Congress were given in order to make the writing easier.

A "Conference on Christian Social Action" will be held May 5-7 by the P. F. group of our Raleigh church and young people from Westmoreland Congregational, Washington, D. C., who will be their guests.

One evening a month members of the Fellowship Class of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, assist the minister, Rev. Frank Hamilton, in calling in the homes of members and friends of the church. Following such an evening April 19 the group met at the parsonage for refreshments and reports.

Rev. W. R. Stevenson's resignation at Tryon was not accepted by the congregational meeting April 5, and his pastoral relationship will continue. His brother, Dr. Russell Stevenson, director of overseas work for Church World Service, will visit the church May 5-7, speaking at a family night supper on Friday, preaching Sunday morning, and talking with the young people that evening.

SYMPATHY

Sympathy is expressed to Rev. Earl Farrell of Fuquay Springs, North Carolina, whose father died March 30 and was buried at Hank's Chapel April 1. Mr. Hugh W. Farrell was 80 years of age. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Clem Lassiter and Mrs. Walter R. Clark, both of Pittsboro; seven sons, Clayton, Talmadge, Warren and Raymond of Pittsboro; Lawrence of West Covenia, California; Earl of Fuquay Springs; and Maxton of Washington; one sister, Mrs. L. R. Sturdivant of Carrboro; a brother, P. T. Farrell of Pittsboro; and 19 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Junior and Senior High Pilgrim Fellowship groups from Elon College were guests of St. Mark's E. and R. Youth Fellowship April 23.

Sunday, April 9, members of the Emily and Thomas Mathews Circle of the Women's Fellowship of the First Congregational Christian Church, Winchester, Virginia, dedicated a flower vase for the communion table, given in memory of the deceased members of the circle and of Mr. and Mrs. Mathews, for whom the circle was named. The flowers were in honor of the minister, the Reverend Mark W. Andes, and the parsonage family.

The four Negro Congregational Christian churches in New York state have withdrawn from the Convention of the South and become a part of the New York City Association.

Mrs. Ruth Crabtree of Damascus, Chapel Hill, reviewed the mission study book, "One World, One Mission" at the March meeting of the Northview Women's Fellowship. Visitors were present from Turner's Chapel, Zion, Sanford and Lee's Chapel. A special guest was Mrs. George Griffin, Sanford district chairman.

"No Man Is An Island" was the play given by P. F. members at Northview, Sanford, March 19. Sunday afternoon, March 26, the group went to see the Easter Program at the Morehead Planetarium.

At Liberty (Vance) three adults and six young people united with the church at the Easter morning service. April 7 at the regular quarterly church meeting the study and planning committee recommended plans for a new educational building. The church accepted the recommendations, and appointed committees on construction, finance, and equipment to carry forward the program.

TO OLIN AND BETSY PENDLETON

As your ministry at First Church, Norfolk, draws to a close, we would add our tribute to the many expressions of affection and appreciation that will be showered upon you by those who recognize sterling quality when they behold it.

Yours has been no halfway commitment to your Master. No time clock was a part of your daily routine. No task was too small or too menial for you to perform. No burden was greater than your courage. You believe in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and you know full well they are inseparable. You proclaimed your convictions and you lived them. And you paid a price, without rancor or bitterness. The cross for you is real - you displayed it according to custom. But you knew it was meaningless unless practiced. That to accept the cross meant suffering did not deter you.

You will be remembered for your devotion, your capacity for friendship, your gracious spirit, your concern for the lonely and the injured.

God is very real to you and you have made God a reality to your people. Others may boast of their accessions, of their budgets, of the luxurious appointments of their church plants. You will not boast for such is foreign to your nature, but in the economy of God, if ever a couple deserved the commendation "Well done, thou good and faithful servants" it is you two good people.

We salute you! May God's blessing rest upon you and your labors.

NOTE: The above letter was sent to Rev. and Mrs. Olin Pendleton who completed their work with First Church, Norfolk, Virginia, on Easter Sunday, after seven years of service. During this time the church moved from Main Street to a new community development and erected beautiful new buildings. Occasion for leaving Norfolk was a serious arthritic condition Mr. Pendleton is suffering. Physicians advised a dry climate. Ed.

More About Colleges

Christian College Day should really be a long one, not just a Sunday in the Church Calendar.

The next decade will be exceedingly difficult for church colleges.

An exploding population will demand more class rooms with modern equipment and trained teachers. Increasing knowledge of our universe demands greater information in the class room and new equipment in the laboratory. Higher wages in industry and constantly increasing costs of living can easily empty the college of its best teachers and make it all but impossible to meet modern standards in equipping laboratories.

State institutions seek and secure their revenue from taxation. The new buildings and equipment needed in public schools and colleges in North Carolina, as in many other states, may come from tax on food and drugs, although there certainly must be some better source of revenue. Everyone must pay for the education offered by the state. But there is no way that anyone can be taxed to support church institutions — unless we are willing to lose our highly prized philosophy of the separation of state and church.

Herein lies one of the dangers facing us. It will be much easier to say "let the state do it" than to put in enough money for the church to do its full share in the education of youth. Already there has started a mighty drive to get tax money for church schools. Although the President of the United States happens to be a member of the Church which is spearheading this movement, he is opposed to it. He believes that the Protestant heritage in this field is worth preserving. He deserves the support of his fellow-citizens in this matter. Church people who want separate schools for their children should pay for this privilege. This means not only that there will be no tax money for Roman Catholic parochial schools, but it also means no tax money for colleges supported by Protestant church people — people like those who write and read this paper, the people of Congregational Christian churches in North Carolina and Virginia.

Elon College is well into its second half of a century of service. It was founded by members of the Christian Church in North Carolina and Virginia. It is owned and operated by the people of the churches in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. It is not merely a church related institution; it is a church institution. We do not expect either North Carolina or Virginia as political entities to contribute to Elon College. By the same token, it is right and proper for those who operate the institution to expect the members of the churches to support the college with their gifts. There are many other colleges, some of them doubtless better than Elon; but this is ours. We founded it; we have supported it, and do now; its future is ours. That future can be glorious because of its Christian usefulness, or it can be a flat failure. More than we like, the future depends upon us who are members of the churches. It can be our pride and joy. It will be if we know it, love it, and support it adequately.

Money is not the only need of a college. Without students it cannot operate. It can serve our churches best by educating our young people. President Danieley pleads with us to consider Elon when young people are planning for college. He is our college president, pleading for the privilege of training our young people. Elon could not educate all the young people in the Southern Convention, but it could accommodate many more than go there. Reasons may send some to other institutions, but Elon needs to be considered as the college for all our young people.

Yes, the next decade will be very difficult for our College. It will be much easier to let it go by default than to support it sufficiently. In a world like ours the Church institutions need to be maintained, and enlarged.

Preparing For Pentecost

Now that Easter is passed it is time to prepare for Pentecost, which this year will be May 21. Easter may have been wonderful, and it was, but Christians continually look to the future. When one task is completed, another is inviting; when one program is over, another needs to be in the making; even when earthly life is over, a new life in a better land is just beginning.

The disciples of Jesus were stunned by his death, astonished by his resurrection, and tempted to claim defeat for the whole enterprise, but they made some preparation for Pentecost and found in that holy and exciting event the transformation needed to fit them to be founders of the Church of Christ in a heathen world. They met for prayer day after day; they sought to know what God wanted them to do; they discovered a unity of purpose that made them meet together even in the early morning. And while they prayed, Pentecost really came.

Young church members need to be initiated into the family of God to such an extent that they will never want to leave. They need to learn how to serve through the Church. The history and doctrines of the Church are important for them to know.

But there are other people who did not unite at Easter. The cultivation started earlier needs to be continued until there is a harvest. The spring revival is used by some churches. Whatever the method, the work is urgent. May offers many opportunities for church families to enjoy rich and rewarding experience in study and fellowship.

Lest we forget, prayer is an essential part of preparation for any pentecostal experience in the life of an individual or church. Prayer is not just asking for something; it is seeking for greater knowledge; it is listening for human needs and God's whispered message.

"In spite of the beats and the wailers, the harp in the air still sings the melody of hope."

This quotation from the pen of the great Irish playwright, Sean O'Casey, has an uplift at a time when the world is in ferment and in turmoil, in anger and distress, and weighted in favor of despair, evil, suspicion and aggrandizement.

But to some degree the world has always been in trouble and probably always will be. But it is interesting to observe from history, ancient and modern, that hope is the pilot light by which men have been guided in their undertakings. Consider these examples:

The American colonists had fear of fatal sea tragedies or their destruction by Indians or wild animals upon arrival in their chosen land. But they had hope, and hope conquered their fears.

When the colonists decided to free themselves from English rule, their hope of success had to be pitted against the possibility of crop failures, failure in their struggle for freedom, and possible consequent punishment. But it was hope that sustained these pioneers in a new land and finally banished their fears.

In 1861, war over slavery threatened the unity of this republic and a division of its people. But the flag of hope waved high and long over some 6,500 battles and finally the States were united to become the greatest nation on earth.

When World War I was about to disrupt the future of most of Europe, it was the hope of helping to make the world safe for democracy that caused the United States to enter the conflict as an ally. That hope was not fully accomplished, but the whole world was given a demonstration of what could happen to an aggressor nation when other nations unite to defend a cause. The future holds the possibility that the lesson will be a warning to any aggressor nation.

In the early 1930's a pall of business failures began to cast their shadow over the United States. It was a time when men went from riches to rags, not rags to riches. Millions of families were being scattered and in despair. A new President was entering the White House and assured the people that "the only thing to fear is fear itself", and that "in every dark hour of national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential". The President's words sounded "the melody of hope", and a determined people emerged from an economic wilderness into the sunlight of self-support.

Part of the grandeur of man's role on earth is to encourage the children of each generation to pick up the pieces of failure and try again because there is always hope.

The great ages of mankind, the ages of the most radical changes, were not produced in times of ease and complete satisfaction. They were made great because "the harp in the air still sings the melody of hope".

WHEN MINISTERS GET TOGETHER

This gathering each year of the saints who often act like sinners, is an experience to be long remembered by an on-looker. Interesting and sometimes funny stories are sure to be heard, often on the competitive basis of "can you top this one?" Fellowship flows freely and often in small huddles or larger groupings some deep level thinking takes place during the hours of "mixing and munching."

One thing that has always interested me about any group of ministers is that when presentations are being made, and discussions are being led, ministers are prone to talk among themselves with little heed to what the man up front is trying to "put across." I often wonder what would happen in a church served by one of these ministers if laymen were to talk like that when the minister is "up front" conducting a service. No criticism. Just wondering!

What the world needs is Christian individuals with real depth and power. We need men today whose will to live has been freed from the will to power, to success, to superiority, to social recognition, to possession and to pretense; and has found its peace and power in the will to love, the will to fellowship, the will to self-giving service, the will to God's will and to be his children. — Nels Ferre

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

THE SCRIPTURES

"All scripture is given by the inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness,"

2 Tim. 3:16

Paul is writing to a young preacher. In almost the next paragraph he will be writing: "I am ready to be offered... I have fought a good fight... I have kept the faith." It is indeed a long ways back to the days when he was a member as a young man of the great court of his country. A lot has gone on since the days the Christ encountered the astute, educated, zealous young judge on the road to Damascus.

At long last Paul is saying to his young convert who has accepted the call to the Christian ministry: My son, you have accepted a very high calling, and you are very dear to me. I love a lot of people, my son, but I love you in almost a class to yourself. I wish you to succeed because of the strategic time in which you live, and the great value to the Church which you may be; and the joy and fellowship which you may know.

Let me give you a piece of fatherly advice. (Here let me interrupt myself to write, it must have been good advice. It has stood for nearly two thousand years in spite of the fact that it has been brushed around quite a bit!)

Know the scriptures, Timothy. When fighting the battle it is your sword; in teaching and expounding the doctrines of the faith it is your textbook; handled with love in correcting a brother it is your best chance of success; and it is what you need on the subject of how to live a Christian life. Love the word of God, study it, teach it, ask the Holy Spirit to help you; and you will come to know what Christ meant when he said: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you!"

Impressions of the Midwinter Meetings

Report given at Spring Rallies in Eastern Virginia Conference
By Mrs. J. H. Booth, Jr.

Would that I had the gift to give you a vivid look at the Midwinter Meeting of our Missions Council — so that you, too, could see and feel the urgency of the great challenge which faces the church today.

Before I bring you my impressions of the meeting — let me take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the Women's Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference for making it possible for me to attend this meeting held at Buck Hill Falls January 28 thru February 1. It was a real privilege to be there and since then I have thought quite a bit about some of the things which were said and done there.

We know that with each privilege there always comes added responsibility — and it is this responsibility that concerns me. The persons who attended this meeting were all leaders in some phase of the work of the church. Somehow these leaders must make the echo of this meeting ring again through our conventions, conferences, and churches until it reaches the individual church member — for it is with the individual that we must begin "Creating and Renewing the Church." This is the new theme for 1961-1962 — "Creating and Renewing the Church." Maybe it recalls for you that section of our Statement of Faith which says: "He bestows upon us His Holy Spirit, creating and renewing the church of Jesus Christ, binding in covenant faithful people of all ages, tongues and races."

Time does not permit me to give specific reports of the American Board, the Board of Home Missions, the Service Committee, etc. But the picture from each was the same in this respect — all felt they needed to be doing much more than their present budget permits them to do — if they are to really try to meet the challenge of our day.

We must remember that the real purpose of the church is to tell the story, "That God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself — and that it was because of love for all mankind that Jesus died upon the cross."

We must also remember that the church is the body of Christ — and by that we mean all individuals regardless of race, color or creed who have accepted Christ as their Lord and Saviour and are striving to do his will.

Our world has changed tremendously since we are living in the space age. We are now living on a "world level". We must find new ways of reaching the masses of people and getting the message of the church over to them. Our Boards and Agencies have worked out a program which they feel will more adequately meet the needs of our day. They have found that in order to support this program they will need an annual apportionment income of at least eleven and one-half million dollars.

Someone has figured it out that our Christian World Mission will cost $22.00 per minute. I quote this from material I received: "Let your mind run free. You can have this entire mission in your own hands for five minutes or ten minutes. See a line

Chikore

Mission station consisting of church, upper primary school, secondary school, cottage hospital and dispensary and 18,000 acre farm with 500 tenants. It is 140 miles from railway.

April

- 23—Mr. and Mrs. John R. Lowe went to Chikore in 1959 where he is farm manager. The average farm family's income is $50 per year. He had been an agricultural officer with the Native Affairs Department in South Africa before becoming a missionary.
- 24—Mr. and Mrs. Carroll McCormick are associate missionaries who went to Africa last summer for a five-year term. He teaches chemistry and she is secretary of the mission staff.
- 25—Mr. and Mrs. William Webb represent a "missionary marriage," for he went to Beirut, Lebanon in 1929 to teach and she went the next year to serve on staff of University Hospital. They were married on the field in 1932; then were in China five years; now they teach in secondary school at Chikore.

Mt. Silinda

Mission station, 3,600 feet above sea level in midst of mahogany forest. 3,000 acres of farm land in station.

- 26—Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Belair do a variety of things: He is mission treasurer, station treasurer, station superintendent, and farm manager and she teaches English and Bible in teacher-training department of Mt. Silinda Institute, runs the bookroom, is district commissioner of Girl Guides and leader of a cadet company of teachers in training.
- 27—Miss Carol Carpenter went to Africa in 1959 and after language study was assigned to serve as a nurse in Willis F. Pierce Memorial Hospital in Mt. Silinda. This is a 65-bed hospital which in 1958 served 2605 in-patients.
- 28—Dr. Alma Cooke spent 31 years in the North China Mission of the American Board; after six years of retirement she volunteered for work in Africa, serving for a year in Dondi and then transferring to Mt. Silinda where she was needed especially. (See article on opposite page.)
- 29—Mr. and Mrs. Eric Dahle were originally missionaries in South Africa (where her parents were missionaries of the American Board), serving at Adams College for many years. When the government caused it to close in 1956 they went to Rhodesia where they teach in Mt. Silinda Institute.

Visit To Southern Rhodesia

With Dr. Cooke

Mt. Silinda
Southern Rhodesia, Africa
November 10, 1960

Dear friends,

The Holy Christmas time is fast approaching and I want to wish each of you a Happy Season, with a new realization of what the Birth of the Son of God into the world can mean to this troubled globe. Only as each of us has His love in our hearts can we hope His peace to spread and conquer the passions and hatreds of the men on earth.

Ever since I have been in Mount Silinda (now nearly two years) I have wanted to go down into the Sabi Valley at the foot of our Mountain, with the doctor when he makes his monthly visit to the several clinics we have throughout the Valley. Our outstations, consisting of preaching place, school, and clinic are numerous and I have wanted to see for myself just what we are accomplishing outside of our main station at Silinda. There has never seemed to be the right opportunity for me to get away until just this last September when Dr. Stetson asked me if I'd like to go down on the trip.

The roads down the escarpment are terrible and only a Landrover (Jeep to you) can make the trip safely. We were well packed on the roof carrier and inside the car with the large medicine box, a box for the projector, the accompanying African orderly, Johnathan's blankets, a camp stove, a box of food, and three suitcases. Mrs. Schwyhart, one of the missionary mothers, asked to go too in order to talk to the women Church members and to encourage sewing classes in the schools.

The scenery is lovely at that time of year, for it was spring and the new leaves were coming out on the trees and new plants were springing up. There is one tree, msasa by name, that was particularly attractive for the new foliage comes out in several shades of red, orange and yellow, even a lovely bronze, then later these turn to a very vivid, though light, green — all a marked contrast of bright, striking, colors on the hill-sides amongst the darker green of the evergreens. Mountainside after mountainside was covered at that time of year. And when we got down into the wide Valley of the Sabi River we found the so-called Sabi Star all abloom, a very lovely fluted reddish pink flower, very much like an orchid — very beautiful indeed.

In all we visited five clinics in the over 100-mile trip in the Valley, and although the weather was rainy and misty part of the time, we saw well over 350 patients, making the trip well worthwhile. Most of the patients could be treated right there but a number of them we had to urge to come up to the Hospital for either protracted treatment or for surgery.

Each evening we showed pictures, using the car battery as source of electricity. This month it was a series of pictures on the subject "Jesus and little Children." That series was followed by some pictures and charts on proper diet, for the African diet in general is most inadequate and unbalanced. The pictures were preceded and closed by a short religious service of songs (which they love) and prayer. We had more than a hundred people at each showing.

We were entertained in the homes of one or the other of the Church members, some of whom are fairly well to do with their general stores, or butchery, or grinding mill, and have convenient homes with wives who know how to cook a European meal. Several of the men in whose homes we stayed have been educated in the American Board Mission's Adams University in South Africa and one of the wives has been graduated as a nurse from the McCord Hospital in Durban; she carries on a small clinic between visits of the doctor, sending to us any patients that need hospital care.

There are no resident pastors for these preaching places but the deacon of the locality holds the weekly services when the evangelist from Chikore is not present. The school faculties are resident, most of them being graduates of the Teaching Training Course here at the Mount Silinda Institute.

I came back wishing there could be a resident doctor in the Valley to visit these clinics at least once a week for there is much medical work (as well as evangelistic) to be done there and a monthly visit leaves much undone. Our fight against witchcraft would be greatly strengthened if a doctor were always available.

Politically, the situation in Belgian Congo is still chaotic and very tense but in Southern Rhodesia although there is a sporadic outburst of strikes, rioting and arson, in general all is quiet. You do not need to fear for our safety here in Mt. Silinda for we are too far from the big cities where the agitation goes on, to be affected.

To return for a moment to the Mt. Silinda Hospital. I have told you previously that our hospital evangelist, Mrs. Bangawayo, has died. We are praying (and ask your prayers too) that the Lord will soon send us an evangelist (and the wherewithall to support him, or her) to care for the 150 patients we have most of the time in the wards. Our work is only half done if we care for only their bodies.

With all good wishes to each of you, I am

Yours sincerely,
Alma L. Cooke, M.D.

AFRICAN OBSTACLES

According to Rev. Dr. Billy Graham, Christianity is facing an uphill struggle in Africa because many Africans consider it an imported "European religion." The Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman points to another formidable obstacle: Mohammedanism advancing its simple faith with allowances for such native practices as polygamy and for its reputed lack of color or racial prejudice. Some 60 million Moslems — mostly in north and east Africa — are pitted against 21 million Christians to win over some 150 million uncommitted Africans. In pressing their "holy march," the Moslems are being assisted by Egyptian authorities: out of Cairo are pouring thousands of phonograph records carrying the traditional chanting of the Koran deep into the most remote African jungle areas. According to Cecil Northcott of the London Observer, Islam is progressing 10 times more rapidly than Christianity along the West African coast. And he points to another peril. In the "old days," the educated African, raised in a mission school, often became interested in becoming a clergyman. Now, however, with the rapid emergence of so many new independent states in Africa, government administration and politics are vying to claim the educated native's interest.

Play Down The Dollar Sign!

By John R. Scotford

"What will it cost?" is the first question many people raise whenever they are confronted with a proposal to expand the services or enlarge the facilities of their church. They will justify putting financial considerations first on the basis that this is the hard-headed, businesslike approach to any problem.

If by "hard-headed" they mean unimaginative, this is correct. In any situation it requires a minimum of intelligence, or even knowledge of the language, to ask the price. With some of us this is an automatic reaction.

But is it fair to say that business always puts financial considerations first? This depends on what the line is. As a rule, the shoddier the goods, the larger the price tag, and the poorer the job the more emphatic the employer as to just what he can pay. On the other hand, the more significant the enterprise the less the emphasis on the financial aspects. Charles J. Connick, America's master craftsman in stained glass, was accustomed to say that his studios were "incidentally a business." We slander business when we say that it always begins by asking the cost.

Church people who respond to every new suggestion by waving the dollar sign are instinctively seeking to either put on the brakes or establish a roadblock. Their motivation in making financial enquiries is not curiosity but caution. They are quick to tell you that in their church there are no rich people, and that its finances are chronically in a precarious state. New expenditures must necessarily come out of somebody's pocket, and they fear that this might be theirs.

Putting financial concerns first in the consideration of any matter of church policy rests upon a fundamental fallacy; that there is just so much money available. Many congregations assume that they are like a cow, and when all the milk is in the pail it is all over until next time. The better analogy is with a flowing stream where the more you dip out the more there seems to be.

This principle of the unfailling fountain is illustrated in the Bible by the widow's cruse and the way the loaves and fishes held out by the Sea of Gallilee, but it has also been demonstrated by many churches. The rule seems to be that the more a church — or an individual — gives, the more they can give. The landscape is dotted with congregations which have astonished themselves and everybody else by their generosity.

A minister who persuaded 200 working-class families to go on a ten percent tithe of their takehome pay for a limited period of time to get their church built reports, "We did not hurt the automobile business at all. Just as many new cars turned up in front of the church as ever. Nobody was worse off, while some admitted they were better off because they had faced up to their personal finances and done something about it."

THE QUESTION

K. Stevenson Shaffer

What does it mean
This "conversion", they ask,
Is it something mysterious and queer?
It's simply turning around, I say,
And finding the way made clear.
It's seeing the Master of your life
Outstretching his arms to you
And finding forgiveness for the strife
That sin has taken you through.
It's hearing his voice so tenderly Calling, "Come, follow me.
Turn away from the dark
And walk in the light,
And ever my child be."

There is no way of proving in advance what a church can give, but there is much evidence to show that this capacity is far greater than is usually assumed. But this does not just happen. To tap a flowing well certain conditions must be met.

People never give just to get rid of their money. They must be conscious of a need before they will part with their dollars. The reason many congregations give so meagerly is that they have been jogging along in the same old way for many years, and nobody is anxious for a change. Boosting the local church budget requires more than a mathematical operation. To get more money a congregation must either do better what it has been doing, or do more. Before people will give for a new church they must be convinced that they need one.

But more is required than a lively sense of need; there must be a sensible plan for meeting that need. This does not imply an exact statement of just how the new money is to be spent, or a detailed floor plan for the addition or the new building. Such pin-pointing is dangerous. It can be quarrelled with, and it may be difficult to live up to an overly detailed prospectus. What is more fundamental is the assurance that procedures are underway which will produce the desired results.

The more widespread the participation of the people in the thinking out of which a project develops, the better. In the brochure celebrating the completion of Christ Episcopal Church in downtown Cincinnati the membership of 54 "committees of study assisting the committee on plans" is printed in full. The statement is also made, "Every recommendation of each of the 54 sub-committees was given exhaustive study by the Plans Committee, and every suggestion that could be justified was included in a 'scope of the work' which was presented to the architect." (Incidentally, the architect gives his hearty approval to this procedure.) One way and another every member of the congregation had a chance to share in the planning. A congregation should not feel that what is proposed represents the ideas of the minister or of a small group, but that it is something in which they have had a real part. Such an approach produces ideas, money, enthusiasm, and a sense of general achievement.

Although there are many schemes for raising money and a multitude of ways of going about it, there are fundamentally just three approaches to this task. Each puts the emphasis in a different place.

The obvious procedure is to stress the dollar sign. You want money, so you ask for money. This is tackling the mountain on its steepest face. Parting with dollars is painful for many people and difficult for most of us. We have an abundance of other uses to which it might be put. The direct assault on our pocketbook produces the maximum of resistance.

Recruiting workers for such a campaign is difficult. The procedure is too close to that of the beggar sitting on the sidewalk hoping for some stray coins. I have complete sympathy with anyone who refuses to go out and just "ask for money." The more the emphasis falls on "meeting the goal" or getting the ribbon up to the top of the thermometer, the harder the work.

A second, and much wiser approach, is to stress the end results which our giving is to achieve. All of us want to get something for our money. For most of us it represents the substance of our lives as the fruit of our toil. For all of us it is an opportunity to express our personalities. We want to feel that we are counting for something in this world, that the place will be a bit different because we have been here. When a New England college published the list of contributors to a multi-million dollar campaign, it put on the cover the caption "...some small degree of immortality..." That is what we would all like to have for our dollars.

Giving is transformed from a painful procedure to a happy achievement as we are able to visualize our dollars expressing our deepest and noblest impulses in a permanent way over the years. Viewed in this way, putting our money into the erection of a new church is just about as magnificent an investment as the mind of man can conceive. (The boys who built the old cathedrals surely got their money's worth!) But here again, the deeper we go, the better. On the surface, the sums we give for the support of our church end up as cancelled checks, while our contributions for a new building produce so much brick and mortar. Yet these material things are simply means to an end. The end result of both the church budget and the church building is God incarnate in human lives. Dollars given to the church produce spiritual dividends. The more the donor can be inspired to visualize the long term results of his generosity, the more will he want to give. The peril in stressing financial goals is that we may never clearly see the spiritual ends which we are seeking. Instead of talking about dollars and the details of architecture we should picture little children growing up in the nurture of the Christian faith and of men and women finding a meaning to life through the ministrations of the church.

A third approach to giving is to regard it as an act of devotion to God. We are his children. He has been good to us. We have been blessed as has no other generation or people. We should show our gratitude by sharing our substance with God by using it for his holy purposes. This is the deepest motivation for giving.

Such an approach is not for the man on the street. To those who instinctively ask, "What will it cost?" these words have little meaning. Yet when men and women once grasp the fundamentals of Christian stewardship they wax enthusiastic about the way of life which it opens before them. Who ever heard of an extititer? Or encountered a truly generous giver who found it painful to part with his dollars?

There have always been those who look upon the financial aspects of church life with a dismal eye. "The church would be a wonderful thing — if only it did not have to ask for money" has been a common complaint.

Yet the true wonder of the church is that it does ask for money. Out of its financial necessities come its greatest spiritual opportunities. In no way does it do more good than inspiring people to give.

12 Rules For Training Children

A year ago I printed in this space Twelve Rules For Raising Children. Many readers asked for reprints and suggested that I run it again. Here it is:

Remember that a child is a gift from God, the richest of all blessings. Do not attempt to mold him in the image of yourself, your father, your brother or your neighbor. Each child is an individual and should be permitted to be himself.

Don't crush a child's spirit when he fails. And never compare him with others who have outshone him.

Remember that anger and hostility are natural emotions. Help your child to find socially acceptable outlets for these normal feelings or they may be turned inward and erupt in the form of physical or mental illness.

Discipline your child with firmness and reason. Don't let YOUR anger throw you off balance. If he knows you are fair you will not lose his respect or his love. And make sure the punishment fits the crime. Even the youngest child has a keen sense of justice.

Remember that each child needs

TWO parents. Present a united front. Never join with your child against your mate. This can create in your child (as well as in yourself) emotional conflicts. It gives rise to destructive feelings of guilt, confusion and insecurity.

Do not hand your child everything his little heart desires. Permit him to know the thrill of earning and the joy of deserving. Grant him the greatest of all satisfactions — the pleasure that comes with personal achievement.

Do not set yourself up as the epitome of perfection. This is a difficult role to play 24 hours a day. You will find it easier to communicate with your child if you let him know that Mom and Dad can err, too.

Don't make threats in anger or impossible promises when you are in a generous mood. Threaten or promise only that which you can live up to. To a child, a parent's word means everything. The child who has lost faith in his parents has difficulty believing in anything.

Do not smother your child with superficial manifestations of "love."

The purest and healthiest love expresses itself in day-in-day-out training which breeds self-confidence and independence.

Teach your child there is dignity in hard work, whether it is performed with calloused hands that shovel coal or skilled fingers that manipulate surgical instruments. Let him know a useful life is a blessed one and a life of ease and pleasure-seeking is empty and meaningless.

Do not try to protect your child against every small blow and disappointment. Adversity strengthens character and makes us compassionate. Trouble is the greatest equalizer. Let him learn it.

Teach your child to love God and to love his fellow man. Don't SEND your child to a place to worship — TAKE him there. Children learn from example. Telling him something is not teaching him. If you give your child a deep and abiding faith in God it can be his strength and his light when all else fails.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .
 "To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.
 "To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.
 "To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

ASHEBORO YOUTH OBSERVE EASTER

By Margaret Hall

At 6:00 a.m. Easter Sunday morning eighteen members of the Asheboro Pilgrim Fellowship met at the First Evangelical and Reformed Church for the joint Sunrise Service of the Congregational Christian and the Evangelical Reformed churches. Our pastor, the Rev. W. Walter Hall, spoke at this service which was broadcast over Radio Station WGWR. After this service we went to our own church where, with the help of our advisors, we prepared breakfast. Everyone dug in heartily to a breakfast consisting of pancakes, sausage, bacon, coffee, and milk. Each one pitched in then to clean up the social hall in order to be ready for Sunday school.

We were all very proud of our P. F.'ers since nearly 100% of our members were present at this very early hour.

BETHLEHEM P. F. REPORT

By Louise Harrell, Reporter

Our Bethlehem Youth Fellowship has done many things this year to raise money for different organizations and people. In the fall of 1960 we sold barbeque to earn money for Workday for Christ. We earned about fifty-two dollars. For UNICEF, we went around "Trick or Treating," and people contributed fifty-five dollars.

We have paid eighty-five dollars on our apportionment. We gave twenty dollars to C. M. A., and fifteen dollars to U. C. Y. M. We collected clothes for people overseas. Two large boxes of pencils, notebooks, paper, soap, and first aid articles were collected and sent to migrants, by both Junior and Senior Youth Groups.

In observance of our youth week, which was one of our most outstanding events, we were given a banquet by the Women's Fellowship. A medical doctor gave a talk to us on the history of different religions of our country.

One of the highlights is our communion on Thursday night of Holy week. Sunday morning we were invited to a neighboring church to attend the Sunrise Service.

In February about fifty young people went to the Jewish Synagogue in Suffolk.

Suggested Goals For Pilgrim Fellowship

Is your Group really alive? How many of these goals can you reach? For information and resources, write to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

In relating your group to the wider Pilgrim Fellowship —

1. Study and discuss the P. F. Statement of Purpose. Adopt it for use in your own group or write another statement that better expresses your purpose.

2. Study the meaning and purpose of the three Commissions — Faith, Action and Fellowship — and use them as the basis of organization and activity.

3. Know and use the following P. F. Resources: High Fellowship Set, High Fellowship Helps, Youth Fellowship Program Booklets, Youth Magazine, Songs of Many Nations, Youth Fellowship Kit, Junior High Kit.

4. Have a Planning Retreat or some other opportunity for long-range program planning based on an understanding of the needs and interests of your members.

In Expressing Christian Faith —

5. Have well planned worship led by members of the group at every meeting.

6. Emphasize discussion and decision for church-related vocations.

The third Sunday night in March the Eastern Virginia Conference Caravan come to our fellowship meeting. Visitors included young people from Holy Neck and Eure.

At this time our Senior Youth Group is selling vanilla flavoring to raise money for our building fund. By Easter Sunday we hope to have fifty dollars.

Our youth groups have worked hard this year, and we hope to work even harder in the following year.

7. Use the booklet, LENTEN DEVOTIONS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE, in your group.

In Expressing Christian Action —

8. Use the interdenominational Mission Study Books each year.

9. Observe the annual Work Day for Christ. Dedicate money earned to Our Christian World Mission and send immediately to your Conference Treasurer for forwarding to the Southern Convention Treasurer.

10. Contribute to Friendly Service projects. For information write to Friendly Service, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

11. Have at least one $10 Member in Christian Missionary Association (Virginia) or North Carolina Church Builders Club.

In Expressing Christian Fellowship—

12. Organize a well-planned study of P. F. at local, state and national levels.

13. Have a joint meeting with an Evangelical and Reformed Youth Fellowship and/or study E&R heritage and history.

14. Be represented at Conference-wide and Convention-wide meetings.

15. Send participants to summer camp and conference programs at Moonelon or elsewhere.

Danieley Speaks To E. N. C. Laymen

By. F. B. Fuller, Secretary

The E. N. C. Laymen's Fellowship met at McCullers Ruritan Building near Raleigh Sunday night, April 9 at 6:00 p.m. with Plymouth Christian Church as host. The meeting was called to order by the vice president, Ed Langston. After a delicious barbecue chicken supper, the group joined in singing several old hymns which all enjoyed. There were 105 present for the meeting.

Rex Powell, the program chairman, introduced Dr. Danieley and The Elon Boys' Quartet. Everyone certainly enjoyed the singing of these boys. After this Dr. Danieley spoke on "Witness."

According to Webster, it means giving testimony or furnishing proof (legal). Harper's Bible Dictionary defines it as stress on faith in Christian truth. This is as Luke 24:48 puts it, "and ye are witnesses of these things." Also in Acts 1:8; 2:32; 3:15. The Church witnesses in two distinct ways...

1. The Church as the Church bears witness through its very existence in worship; fellowship; service. Witnesses to God's acts in past, to God's work in present world, and to the Kingdom yet to come.

2. The Church as individuals... much was said of the laymen as witnesses and many churchmen are unaware of the responsibility. They have a tendency to act as if this could be done professionally with no assistance from laymen.

There are several obstacles to effective witnessing: 1. Selfishness — unwilling to give time and make necessary sacrifice. 2. Complacency — lack of concern or the feeling of unimportance. 3. Lack of knowledge — we can't witness to that we do

16. Observe Youth Week each January in your own church and in cooperation with youth of other denominations.

17. Participate in United Christian Youth Movement activities: local or state councils, rallies, training conferences.

18. Have well organized recreational activities as part of your youth program.

19. Send an annual written summary of activities to Southern Convention Secretary and send at least one news article to Youth Editor of The Christian Sun.

not know of, it must be original. 4. Lack of conviction — we definitely will not witness to that we do not believe. 5. Lack of experience — we cannot describe something we have not experienced. 6. Bashfulness — this is not real and true; we speak up for that we know and believe.

Our Responsibilities: "Ye are my witnesses... said the Christ. This is our responsibility every day of the week, every week of the year, forever. We can't witness off and on again but must continue and take every opportunity. It is the ministry of every layman to the world in which he lives. We have our commission from the Christ and we cannot fail to heed the command. We must try to serve as his witnesses to the world today the best we can.

The E. N. C. Laymen will hold their next meeting at McCullers, July 9, with Dr. Cunningham as speaker. We invite all the laymen to these meetings.

LAYMAN CONDUCTS MEMBERSHIP CLASS

By Beatrice George

Mr. Henry A. Seymour, who has served as a deacon of the South Norfolk church for a number of years, conducted the membership class during the Lenten season this year. The classes were held Thursday afternoons for six weeks. Palm Sunday morning Mr. Seymour presented three boys and ten girls for membership. They were received into the church by Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor emeritus. Two adults joined with them and Kimberly, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Morrison, was christened.

Mr. Poythress conducted the Eastern morning service. The evening service was led by deacons Harold Davenport and Ellsworth Morris, with Rev. Mr. Davenport of North Carolina preaching. Following the service, Mr. Poythress, assisted by Junior Deacon Warren Morse, baptized the fifteen members who joined the church Palm Sunday.

Mr. Seymour is to be commended on the fine work accomplished in giving his time and effort to our membership class at this time when the church is without a regular minister.

HOW OUR BIBLE CAME TO US

New teaching materials utilizing advanced audio-visual techniques have been produced for churches by the American Bible Society, 450 Park Avenue, New York 22, New York.

One teaching kit consists of four film strips in color entitled,

HOW OUR BIBLE CAME TO US,
Part I The Bible Is Put Into Writing
Part II The Bible Crosses Europe
Part III The Bible Comes To England
Part IV The Bible Comes to America

With recorded narration, the kit is available for $15.00. With written narration only, the price is $12.00. It is designed to fit into a special container for easy handling, storage and preservation.

Another teaching aid is a set of 16 "Picture Posters of the History of the English Bible," also in full color, available at $1.25 a set.

A picture booklet in color, called "Our Most Precious Heritage," is ready for distribution at 20 cents each — or 15 cents in quantities of ten or more. The art work in both the posters and the booklet was selected from the color film strip and is beautifully reproduced on high quality paper.

All three of the new teaching aids are derived from the 84-minute film, "Our Bible — How it Came to Us," a 16 mm black-and-white production released by the Society nine years ago. A cast of 250 persons perform in this notable work. The film is available for a rental fee of $22.50.

The motion picture is also available in three separately titled segments, with running time and rental fees as follows:

"Formation of the Bible," 25 minutes, $8; "The Bible Spreads Across Europe," 24 minutes, $8; and "Making of the English Bible," 35 minutes, $9.

At Union Grove the young people had charge of the Easter Sunrise Service. Jimmy Rosser, a student at Elon, was the guest speaker. Following the service the young people served doughnuts and coffee.

At Seagrove our church joined with the Methodists in Seagrove's first Easter sunrise service. The speaker was Rev. Lonnie King, and the service was well attended by church people of the community. Our church has a new organ, which adds much beauty to the service, says Pastor Billy Joe Willett.

Convention Pulpit Exchange

By Joe A. French

Stewardship Chairman

Under the sponsorship of the Stewardship Commission of the Southern Convention and in cooperation with the national program of the every church visitation effort in Congregational Christian Churches, there will be a pulpit exchange on Sunday morning, April 30, in which an effort has been made to see that every church will have a visiting speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

Through the use of capable laymen, who will supply some of the pulpits, the yoked or part-time churches will also have a visiting speaker.

The purpose of the morning services with a visiting speaker is to call attention of all our church people to the program of Our Christian World Mission. The visiting speaker will not deliver an address or speech but a sermon on Our Christian World Mission.

There has been growing evidence of the need in our local churches for information on and inspiration for Our Christian World Mission. Many illustrations could be cited but one immediate matter of concern to all our churches in the Convention will point up this need. Last fall when the apportionment quotas were made public, many of our churches asked why the increase. When our church people understand that the major portion of the increase is in the two columns designated for the American Board of Foreign Missions and the Home Boards for missions in the United States, they will more readily and gladly accept the increase.

But further, when our people better understand what Our Christian World Mission is and that all these funds make it possible for our Congregational Christian Churches to help carry forward the great commission of our Lord, we will see the need for the increase and experience growing satisfaction through our participation in the one great cause of the church, that of extending the gospel.

Effort has been made by the Conference Chairmen on Stewardship to see that every church will have a visiting speaker for morning church service on April 30 and a list of these exchanges have been posted to all ministers and laymen participating in the program. Any known mistake should be reported to your respective chairman.

Also announcement has gone out from the Convention Office to all the churches requesting that ample announcement of the service be made. With this announcement is an order of service that may be adapted to the local situation or if the church uses a Sunday bulletin, the suggested order of worship may be used in the bulletin.

All indications point to a ready response to the program throughout the Convention and we feel sure that it will be a stimulating service and present a challenge to our churches to learn more about Our Christian World Mission and to share more generously in its support.

"We know that peace cannot come by prayers alone, that peace comes out of the whole human climate of wisdom, understanding, patience, sacrifice and love. Yet prayers for peace may lead us toward trying harder to create that better climate."

Dedication Prayer For Clanton Park Chapel

By Rev. Thomas R. Hamilton

Almighty Father of mankind, we pray that this church may be always a fit place for thy presence. At its doors, may there be a welcome for all souls.

In its school, may little children be taught the kindness of the Good Shepherd.

Here may young men and women come to be prepared for the struggle of life.

In this church, may both youth and age face aright the problems of our day. May the strong become aware of their need of thy power. May the weak obtain courage. May the desolate find friends and help.

Here may those beset by temptation find deliverance; may wanderers from thee find joy in return; and may those living in sin escape from its power.

In this sanctuary, may the sacrament of bread and wine give mystic communion with Christ and fellowship in his suffering.

At this altar, may there be joined by true marriage hearts steadfast in love.

Here, O God, may the ministry be magnified and young men and women imbued with zeal to enter this sacred work.

From this pulpit may there be preached words of comfort, admonition, and divine truth.

Here may the law of love be set forth as the law of life and the foundation of justice.

With quiet devotion, may the Prince of Peace be here adored.

May our faith be certified by good works and just stewardship; and may our sacrificial giving send thy Gospel to the ends of the earth.

And so, may this church, through its manifold ministry, be a means of grace and blessing to all those within it. When any go elsewhere, may its influence for thee be used beyond this immediate surrounding, to thy glory.

All this we ask in the name of Christ that his Kingdom might come, that thy will be done here and everywhere.

Amen

SAY IT RIGHT...
WRITE IT RIGHT

Sanatorium and sanitarium are words frequently used interchangeably. Sanatorium should be used when reference is made to a health-restoring place of any type. Sanitarium is a place where preventive treatment is predominant.

Names of seasons — spring, summer, autumn and winter — should not be capitalized except when personified. Examples: After spring comes summer. Like a hero, Winter was the conqueror.

Who should be used to refer to persons only. Which should be used to refer to animals and inanimate objects only. That may be used to refer to persons, animals, inanimate or animate objects.

The Latin phrase, in re, commonly used in law, should not be used to introduce the subject at the beginning of a letter.

When God's Wisdom Prevails

Background Scripture: Job 42.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 34:1-8.

Memory Selection: Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, let not the mighty man glory in his strength, let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glories, glory in this: that he understands and knows me, that I am the Lord. Jeremiah 9:23-24. (RSV)

A story comes out of the life of Walt Whitman that has point for the introduction to this lesson about Job, as recorded in the last chapter of that book, one of the great dramas of world literature. Whitman once attended a lecture on astronomy, and heard a learned astronomer talk in such academic, scientific, and high-sounding language that he got lost in it all. He got up, went out-of-doors, and stood quietly and reverently looking up at the stars — to worship!

Accepting What We Cannot Understand

It was thus with Job. He had listened to the long, drawn-out, highly-sophisticated arguments of his learned friends until he had got lost in the maze of stuff they were spinning in their efforts to explain his suffering, and the problem of suffering. Up to now, he himself has debated, reasoned, argued, doubted, while at the same time longing to believe in the goodness of God. Now he surrenders himself to God, confesses his ignorance of the divine mysteries, admits he has reasoned about things he did not, and could not understand. And all doubt is gone. In humility he casts himself on the wisdom of the One greater than himself. He accepts what he cannot understand, and a great peace fills his soul. "I have uttered what I did not understand, things too wonderful for me, which I did not know."

Here is one of the tests, and one of the functions of faith — to accept what we cannot understand. We engage in intellectual bouts and come out bruised and even beaten. Let us face the facts of life — there are some things we cannot understand or explain. Even a good scientist, the best of scientists will come to the place where he must say "I don't know", where he admits there is a wisdom beyond his own. Faith's supreme challenge is to accept what we cannot understand and explain. Jesus himself on more than one occasion had to do this. His servants can do no less.

First Hand Religion

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee." (Job 42:5). Thus far Job had been trying to find God through argument. He had talked about God, read about God, heard with his ears only what others had to tell him about God. He had heard the tradition of the schools, and the testimony of his friends. In short, he was plodding along on an inherited religion, a second-hand religion. And now he comes to know God personally. More than, and better than, knowing about God, he came to know God at first-hand. Now get this fact: he still did not have the answer to all his questions; he did not have to have the answers. But when he cast himself upon God, when he surrendered himself to God, in faith, he found God himself. And the answers to his questions, while important and desirable, became secondary.

The sad truth is that there are many people who have only a second hand religion. They have inherited their beliefs, been brought up on tradition, repeated mechanically the shibboleths of religion, talked much about God, but have not known God in an intimate, personal way. Perhaps second-hand religion is better than no religion at all, but it is a poor kind of religion. The following story has point for this lesson and at this point in the lesson: "Three of America's famous physicians were gathered together at a Convention in Philadelphia and were engaged in a friendly conversation about God.

All were active Christians. One of them asked, "What to you is the strongest argument for the existence of God?" As the discussion went on for some time, the youngest of the three sat in thoughtful silence. Then one of the others said, "Now let us hear what the young doctor has to say." "Well to me," said the young doctor, "the strongest reason I have for believing in God is that I am personally acquainted with him."

Humility of Spirit

"Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes," or "therefore I despise myself," as the RSV has it. Do you recall the instinctive response which Isaiah made when he saw the Lord high and lifted up in the temple? He felt a sense of sin and shame and a need for cleansing. "Woe is me, for I am undone, for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips," he cried out. It was thus with Job. He pours contempt on all his pride when he comes to understand his Creator's infinite wisdom. And he repents, not for gross sins, or of petty sins, but of the sin of doubting God, and of pitting his puny, finite wisdom against God's infinite wisdom and divine purpose. God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace — and it could be added, wisdom — unto the humble. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him.

The Power of Intercessory Prayer

God was weary of the empty, bland words of Job's "comforters", and his "anger" was kindled against them. They were guilty — they had said things about God that were not true, and they were to offer a sacrifice as a sign of confession and repentance of their errors. And then we come upon this strange verse: "And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends." There may have been bitterness in Job's heart because of the words of his friends, because "they had given him a bum steer" or a "bad deal." In any event there must have been disappointment. What was he to do? He prayed for his friends who had done him wrong. And in, or by the very act of intercessory prayer, he found help and healing and blessing. There is a universal principle here. Jesus told his followers to "pray for their enemies, to bless them that persecute you, to do good to them

Coupons Are Needed

Dear Friends:

Anyone knows that in this day and time it takes a great deal to support a large family of growing children.

Our Children's Home has this problem always. It makes every effort to make every penny go as far as possible and it leaves no stone unturned in its determination to help itself as much as possible.

One way we help ourselves and get help, too, is by saving coupons and asking our friends to save them for us. We are interested in "Red Scissors" coupons, on which we have a goal of 75,000 for this year to earn a bonus. Products carrying these coupons are: Borden's Milk, Luzianne Coffee and Tea, Octagon soap products, Calumet Baking Powder, Mrs. Filbert's products, Austex canned meats, Pride of Illinois and Joan of Arc canned vegetables, Gold Seal and Penny dog and cat foods, Skinner Macaroni Products, Skinner Raisin Bran and Raisin Wheat Cereals, Kirkman soap products, Jet and Bonus dog and cat foods and Rival Dog Food. We have recently made a shipment of these "Red Scissors" coupons for redemption and the number of coupons sent was about one-third of our goal of 75,000 coupons for the year. Our coupon year ends July 31. We hope our friends will read this list and send us any coupons they can spare in order that we may reach our goal for the year.

We also are interested in getting coupons from the following products: Betty Crocker Cake and Frosting Mixes, General Mills products, Red Band Flour, Gold Medal Flour, Pillsbury, Fleetwood coffee and tea, and W. A. Davis Milling Co. These coupons are valuable to us in obtaining beautiful and useful table ware and utensils for the dining room and kitchen. We greatly appreciate any which are sent to us.

All of the coupons listed above may not be available in one given area. Since we receive coupons from all over the country — through Friendly Service — we list some products which are sold in the north and west and not in the south. Thank you for sending any and all coupons which you can.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

that hate you," etc. Paul says we are to overcome evil with good, and that if we do a good turn to those who have done us a bad turn, we shall heap coals of fire upon their heads. Hate begets hate. Vengeance embitters. Love begets love and forgiveness heals and brings peace.

Goodness Has Its Own Rewards

The last three verses in today's lesson must be carefully considered. Taken on their face, it would appear that they give the idea that if you are good you will come out rich in the end. This is not always true. This is not what the writer says, unless the words are taken literally. What he does say, or means to say is that there are rewards for righteousness even if not material rewards. He is saying that justice is at the heart of the universe. He is saying that righteousness is rewarded, and unrighteousness is punished. He is saying that we are to love God not because we fear the penalty of disobedience, or because we covet the material rewards of obedience, but because we love him and trust him and want to please him.

IMPRESSIONS

of children waiting their turn for milk in Hong Kong, a chaplain ministering to your son or daughter in college, a nurse bending over a patient in Southern Rhodesia, a closed city church in Cleveland opened and given new life and purpose, a new college being established in Florida. All this and a thousand times more in the mission that you and I can hold in our hands and sustain."

Could we so challenge our people in 1962 that they think in terms of how many minutes they will sustain the mission? What about you? How many minutes?

When we think of Renewing the Church we must realize that the most effective way of all is to really live our religion in everything we do — in the manner in which we conduct ourselves at our daily work — the way we play a game — the concern we show for others — our willingness to assist in the work of the church. All of these things the laity must do if the church is to make an effective witness.

I do not remember if this thought came from material I received at Buck Hill Falls or from something else — but I like it. It is this — that we think of the church as being in operation for six days of the week — for then we will be out among people making our witness — and we are the church. Then on Sunday the church withdraws to our respective meeting places for renewal — for worship, for knowledge, for courage, for strength, for Christian fellowship.

Dr. Hoskins' address on "Time and a Time" left me with this impression: Now is the time in the history of mankind when Christians must take their stand to let the world know by their actions, their deeds, their giving, that they are really concerned about the plight of the peoples around the world.

This quote taken from a speech by Herman Reissig impresses me greatly: "This could be the best of all times for the human spirit. For it is a world that is ready for everything we can deliver! Brains, heart, stamina, courage! So profound are the changes, so complete the overturning, so great the opportunity that one might suppose God has decided to put his people's resources to a supreme test. Here is a confrontation of depths and heights, of great need and great resources such as men never before have seen.

"How are we going to come out? The next years may be man's finest hour to date. They may also turn out to be his worst. This is no time for optimism or pessimism. It is only the time for saying, "The people who see, the people who care, have now an awesomely great opportunity. I shall do my best."

I trust that these impressions which I have shared with you will linger in your thinking and that you will decide upon the witness that you as a part of the Body of Christ must make for him.

What Do Ye More Than These?

By Richard K. Morton

I always have a hard time when I have the task of meeting someone not known to me on sight, at airport, bus station, or railroad terminal, for instance. How will I recognize him? In just what ways is he different from others with whom I might confuse him?

In one instance, I, as a mere adult, had thought that a certain individual would do very well for a post of leadership with youth. Submitting these qualifications to the tribunal of one of my teen-age daughters, the outcome was a retort, "Big deal!" uttered with that kind of finalizing scorn which adolescents produce so effectively! In her estimation he had not done more than many others to deserve the job.

When someone asks, "What is a Christian? What is a church member? How would you qualify for either designation? What do they do?"

First, we expect that the Christian, especially if a church member, will do enough thinking and living so that he possesses more faith and more endurance, physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually. The Christian is one who pours himself out generously, without measure, and who goes the second mile. He is one who does not think primarily of what something will cost or of what rewards he will get from some action or service. The Christian is expected to think — and to have already thought, so that he has some conclusions, convictions, and marching orders.

At an ordination council of another denomination, the candidate was asked, "Do you believe in the Trinity?" He brightened and replied agreeably, "Oh, certainly; I have always accepted the great value of truth, goodness, and beauty." Now, if a candidate for the ministry knows no other trinity than this familiar Greek concept, I am sorry for him — and also for any churches he may be permitted to shepherd.

Secondly, the Christian is expected to possess resources of personality. This does not mean that he or she must be outstanding for looks, physical stature and perfection, strength, or something of the sort. It means that such an individual must let the light shine through and have had enough happen to him that it is somehow manifest to those who encounter the individual.

A colleague of mine, rector of an Episcopal church, lost his wife after the two had had a long and beautiful married life. At the close of the brief funeral service, he walked down the aisle on the arm of his bishop. Head held high and smiling gently to those who were feeling so deeply for him, he made his way out. I knew instantly that I was witnessing a bit of real Christian living.

A Christian should manifest more love, more kindness, more forgiveness, more deep-down happiness and contentment, than other people. He should have those personal qualities which make people feel he is not just like everyone else.

Thirdly, a Christian and church member should be putting more into his interpersonal relationships and affiliations. He should be one who associates himself with many good causes and is constantly promoting projects and principles that make for the welfare of mankind. There is no such thing as a Christian isolationist. Indeed there can be no such thing as a purely local church — or school. By their very nature both of these institutions are connected with the past, with great minds and movements which have left their mark upon the centuries. In a sense all Christian efforts are of a connective nature. They involve fellowship and group welfare.

Most of us have been in a position where we have had to sacrifice to pursue Christian service. We are busy during the week and get tired when the week-end comes. We too like to go swimming, to the movies; we too like to watch television and to go on long automobile rides. We like to sleep on Sunday morning. But if we do more than others who do not claim the affiliations we have, then we are ready to sacrifice and to put some service first, if that is called for.

The best sort of Christian, it seems to me, is the one who looks and acts like a Christian when he has a great many reasons for justifying rejection of this role.

As church officers, as Christians, or as members, are we trying to get into a position where we depend upon the services and sacrifices of others for our salvation? Is Christianity a means by which others lay down their services for your benefit, while you go about your own affairs unbothered and unhampered?

Fourthly, we must do more in actual work and serving. A church is not an institution walled up, where something is kept fortified and walled in; it is one from which something is constantly being radiated and poured out. It is one fellowship which does not depend upon economic balance and social mobility. It is not primarily concerned with the amount of one's academic training, financial standing, or social status. It is given over to the prodigal outlay of spiritual resources for the use and benefit of all who will accept them. A Christian is not truly one unless he is doing much more than everyone else in his own field of responsibility.

I have never forgotten a remark by a member of a family just getting interested in the church, when that individual went to the hospital for a serious illness. The preacher called, and he was grateful. But he said: "Will anyone else call? Does anyone else care?" He wondered whether anyone who was not somewhat obligated to care would do so.

Canvassers and visitors to homes will often meet the same inquiry: You have come to us now on an official errand. You want money or service or something else. But would you come just out of Christian fellowship and love? It is in this area that we must excel or fail miserably as Christian individuals and churches.

Finally, what do we more in terms of hoping and envisioning the coming City of God? Paul wrote (1 Thess. 4:13): "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." Other passages stir us to walk not as children of darkness, but of the light; we are to live not as those in bondage, but as those who are free. Indeed if we base all our hopes on this world alone, we are indeed miserable.

The Christian is committed to working toward that day when the will of God will be done as perfectly on earth as it is in heaven and when the City of God, as envisioned by Augustine and Milton and many more, can be realized upon the earth.

Now what more do we than these? How well do we tend our flocks and cultivate our fields?

If we claim that we are and act like Christians, what is it that we have in greater abundance than is possessed by even the publicans of our time?

Miss Susie Allen Honored At Raleigh

James C. Washburn, Jr., is shown as he presented Miss Susie Allen the following citation in a surprise ceremony at United Church, Raleigh, Sunday morning, March 26.

"In September 1911, a bright teenager volunteered to sing in the choir of the First Christian Church at the corner of Hillsboro and Dawson Streets in Raleigh, North Carolina. Happily for all of us, Miss Susie Allen is still giving her time and talent to this truly Christian service in the same church, fifty years later.

"Through this half century, she has devoted two to three hours of every week to rehearsing and performing music with no thought of personal recognition or monetary reward. Without formal training, she has brought a high standard of excellence in taste as well as performance, consistently sound musicianship, and a pleasant singing voice. In the many difficulties that beset almost every small choir, her stability and encouragement have been indispensable.

"Because the Music Committee and the choir feel that her quiet devotion should be fittingly saluted, it has been decided that the choir shall henceforth be known as the SUSIE D. ALLEN ADULT CHOIR of the United Church.

"In token of our affection, we want to present you with these flowers and with a framed copy of our resolution."

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High.

O come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise unto the rock of our salvation.

O sing unto the Lord a new song: sing unto the Lord all the earth.

Sing unto the Lord, bless his name; show forth his salvation from day to day.

O sing unto the Lord a new song: for he hath done marvelous things.

Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands.

Serve the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing.

Mrs. W. W. Sloan will be the visiting speaker at Mt. Zion, near Mebane, N. C., April 30.

Dr. Ed Riggs is speaking at Asheboro this evening, Sanford Wednesday, Henderson Thursday and Southern Pines Friday. He has already visited Norfolk, Bethlehem and Winchester in the Valley, Happy Home, Reidsville and Greensboro.

"Our Contemporary Interest in General Education" was the topic for Rev. Carl Wallace at Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, on National Christian College Sunday.

The Laymen's Fellowship at Union Ridge, near Burlington, N. C., is entertaining the basketball players and cheerleaders from Pleasant Grove High School with a supper Saturday, April 9.

Oakland church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, reports a visit by Dr. Arthur W. Newell and a busload of 40 members from St. John's Evangelical and Reformed Church in Richmond, on a recent Saturday. Each year the church sponsors a tour to places of interest and this year they visited Tidewater Virginia, in order to see and learn more about Congregational Christian churches in that area.

MEMORIAL DAY AT BROWN'S CHAPEL

By Mrs. E. A. Morgan

The annual Memorial Service will be held at Brown's Chapel Christian Church near Robbins, North Carolina, May 14. Sunday school will be at 9:45 and morning worship at 11:00. The new pastor, Rev. Jimmy Fogleman, will be speaker. There will be a picnic lunch on the grounds and a singing convention in the afternoon. Everyone is cordially invited to attend. Visiting singers will be especially welcome.

Rev. Frank Ratzell, pastor of First, Asheville, is the speaker for the May Fellowship Day service sponsored by the Council of Church Women at the First Presbyterian Church.

Pleasant Hill church, near Liberty, North Carolina, received 23 members Palm Sunday. Six were older teenagers who attended the pastor's class during the church school hour throughout Lent; fourteen of them attended a pastor's class during the Christian Endeavor hour on Sunday evenings. The pastor, Rev. Reuben Askew, is now starting a new pastor's class on Sunday evenings for young people and adults.

At Union Ridge on Palm Sunday nine people united with the church, and on Easter 178 attended the sunrise service, 244 were at Sunday school, and 341 were present for the regular morning service. Breakfast was served after the Easter sunrise service. A softball team is being organized. The Key Club and the Keyettes of the Burlington High School were guests April 9. Pastor Winfred Bray and his people seem to be working.

SUNRISE SERVICE AT ANTIOCH

A sunrise service was held at Antioch church, Windsor, Virginia, sponsored by the Women's Fellowship, with Mrs. Coston Cobb, president, leading the program. The Easter story in scripture was given, special music by the choir, a meditation by Mr. J. B. Gibbs on "A Man of Sorrow."

After the service everyone was invited to the fellowship hall for a breakfast prepared by the ladies. The service and the fellowship was enjoyed.

Easter Monday the Sunday school sponsored an egg hunt for eighteen children.

WAVERLY WORLD DAY OF PRAYER SERVICES

The 75th Anniversary of the World Day of Prayer was observed in Waverly, Virginia, by the four local churches, namely, the Waverly Baptist Church, the Waverly Methodist Church, Christ's Episcopal Church and the Waverly Congregational Christian Church.

The service was held Friday, February 17, in the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, with a member of said church presiding. "Forward Through The Ages" was the theme of the program.

The program opened with the "Call to Prayer" by the presiding officer, followed by a hymn by the congregation. Scripture was read by the minister of the Waverly Methodist Church, followed by a prayer by the vicar of the Christ's Episcopal Church. Four leaders from each of the abovenamed churches and one from nearby Spring Hill Christian Church led the program. Eight additional voices from the various churches acted as the nations answering to the roll call. A solo, "An Evening Prayer," was rendered by one of the members of the Waverly Methodist Church. The congregational singing was supported by the members of the choir of the Congregational Christian church, accompanied at the organ by a member from the Waverly Methodist Church. The program closed with a prayer by Rev. J. E. McCauley, minister of the Congregational Christian church.

About 70 people were in attendance and an offering was received in the amount of $28.00. Two little girls of the Christian church received the offering.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman will review "Heritage and Horizons in Home Missions" at Asheboro Friday, April 28.

HENDERSON BROADCASTING

Morning services during April at First, Henderson, are being broadcast over WHVH while those during May are being broadcast over WHNC. The Easter to Pentecost theme of the pastor, Rev. Joe A. French, is "The Church in Action, Fulfilling God's Redemptive Purpose." Topics are: Is Our Church Behind Closed Doors?, The Lost Chord of a Vital Life, Pentecost Is the Epic of Eternal Energy, The Pillars Upon Which the Gospel Rests, How Pentecost Affects the Christian's Life, What Has Pentecost to do with Material Things?, and What Happened at Pentecost for Evangelism? Rev. Harvey L. Carnes is the guest speaker April 30, "pulpit exchange Sunday." Twelve members were added during the Lenten season.

Our Asheville church reports a fine Easter season, with 15 new members, 162 at Palm Sunday service, 105 at Maundy Thursday communion, 241 at the two Easter morning services and an offering of $698.48, the largest on record for a single Sunday.

Ground-Breaking At Long's Chapel

By Mrs. H. L. Chandler, Reporter

Sunday, April 16, 1961, will remain a memorable day at Long's Chapel Christian Church (near Haw River, N. C.). The long-awaited ground-breaking service for a new church was held.

Rev. Wm. M. Loy, pastor, invited Dr. John G. Truitt to bring the morning message, after which the ministers led the way from the church to the place where the new church is to be built. Following were the deacons and honored guests, next the choir singing, "Lead On, O King Eternal," and then the congregation.

Mr. Loy conducted the ground-breaking service. He honored Mrs. Cornelia Aldridge, who is the oldest living member, by asking her to dig the first shovel of earth. Mrs. Minnie Horne, now a member of the First Christian Church in Burlington, who is the only living charter member, was asked to dig the second shovel of earth.

In turn, the superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. H. L. Foster, president of the Women's Fellowship, Mrs. Ethel Rudd, president of the Laymen's Fellowship, Mr. Otis Carey, president of the Pilgrim Fellowship, Larry Squires, and a deacon who is chairman of the building committee, Mr. Wm. J. Fonville, each dug a shovel of earth.

Before each shovel was dug, Mr. Loy gave a prayer of dedication, followed by a prayer of thanksgiving, pledging cooperation, by the congregation.

Dr. Truitt dug the last shovel of earth when the pledge to keep in harmony with denominational work and achievement to better advance the work of God's Kingdom was given. He also gave the benediction.

The members of Long's Chapel, inspired by Mr. and Mrs. Loy, have worked together eight years to build up a substantial fund for a new church. Now that the actual work is about to begin, it is with thankful hearts they look forward to the completion of a beautiful new church.

"Gone With The Wind"

On the 100th anniversary of the beginning of the Civil War this writer saw for the second time that masterful moving picture "Gone With the Wind." Not long before there was a visit to Atlanta, and more recently a trip to Charleston, and to Fayetteville where the slave market is still preserved. The flaming buildings and civilization destroyed by Sherman and his army are long since restored in a new fashion in the southern center of culture known as Atlanta, Georgia. There is a beautiful park with decorative cannon in place by the water's edge in Charleston, and the island fortress appears to be inviting friendship rather than cannon shells. The old slave market is now an interesting building open on first floor level in the center of Fayetteville's main street and is a turning point for those who wish to go again down the main thoroughfare of that thriving city.

Negroes and whites mingle on the streets of these and other southern cities as friends and patriots. The business of this editor in both South Carolina and Georgia was to attend meetings in which both races met for denominational planning, and where there was no apparent distinction between those whose forefathers were planters or slaves. The intellectual caliber and cultural development of the blacks showed no deficiencies in comparison with the whites. On the contrary, the choir of Talladega surpasses much that we hear elsewhere, and any Southern Convention church would be delighted to have organists and soloists comparable to those in Plymouth Congregational Church in Charleston.

It is evident that much of the culture of 1861 has indeed "Gone With the Wind." No one in his right mind wants to buy or sell another human being. A century ago it was profitable to have cheap labor on the farms of the South, and Negroes fresh from Africa (or born in the cabins of their owners) were not always considered as human. Today there are no armies of workers in those expansive fields, but Negroes can be seen operating the tractors and machinery where slaves once sang their doleful and delightful songs. No one questions the humanity of the men and women who as free people work where life to them is good because it is home.

Houses in which people live are not yet all that they should be, but the contrast is not quite so great as it was a century ago. Many of them are little, inadequate, and without modern conveniences. But there are not many of the "big" houses with their towering columns and winding stairways. There has been a levelling down as well as up. Of course there are some still who, like Scarlet O'Hara, would find it exceedingly difficult to earn a living by hard labor, but for a century those who wish to enjoy riches have had to till the soil, run the mills, build the houses, and work in industry. Most of them have earned their wealth through the "sweat of the brow" as commanded in the long, long ago.

Not all the old ideas have been blown away. There is still a feeling of superiority by some in both races. We are not yet ready for all the middle walls of partition to be pulled down and let all people move wherever they like with equal advantages and disadvantages. There are those who still like to surround themselves with luxuries and forget how hard it is for those who are not so rich in earthly goods. Separation of Church and State is not the only separation still desired in many parts of our world; and it can be found in the Old South of today, although many are not proud of it. It is difficult to learn that the poor of yesterday may be the rich of today or tomorrow, that those bound to the land yesteryear may be traversing our fancy highways in limousines today, that the ignorant and superstitious of a century ago furnish scholars for our time. Such things are learned slowly, and especially by those who continue in their own little circle of acquaintances.

The winds are still blowing, and, please God, they will continue.

As the slave market has become a turning point for street traffic in Fayetteville, the new century following that terrible human folly known as the Civil War may become the turning point in our civilization. As Negroes and whites have learned to live in the same communities with freedom and opportunity, we may yet learn to appreciate each other sufficiently to forget former relationships and to know that "a man is a man for a' that and a' that." We have much to learn; but we are learning. We know that bullets flying across the placid waters of Charleston harbor will destroy more than the beautiful park — we know that human life is the gift of God, and should be preserved, developed, appreciated. We know that the plaintive song of the slaves is the most original music America has produced, and that all of us should claim it as our heritage. We are becoming aware that all children with proper opportunity may become ministers, teachers, missionaries, statesmen. We know that hate is a more destructive fire than that which crumbled the houses from Atlanta to the sea in 1864, and that this fire is in the human spirit. We know that no one race or color of man can rightfully look down upon another and ignore him, "for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but shall have everlasting life." Jesus was a Jew but he died for us, too. "All we, like sheep, have gone astray." There is a loneliness within when we recognize it, and we listen for the Voice that is clearer than the whirlwind, a Voice calling all men into a fellowship centering in the cross of our Lord. That voice will not be stilled by the tempests, nor by the fury of those organized to keep certain people in their place. Who are we to say what place God wants an individual to occupy?

Breathe on me, Breath of God,
Fill me with life anew,
That I may love what thou dost love,
And do what thou wouldst do.

Much that was treasured has "Gone with the wind" in our beautiful southland. But where the cannon blazed on April 12, 1861, grass, flowers and trees grow today. The culture of Atlanta that crumbled a century ago now blossoms with colleges, churches and schools. Where slaves once toiled, free men now labor as they like. Tomorrow the culture of today will be something new. Let it be beautiful as the flowers, permanent as the rivers, and satisfying as friendship based on the love of God. F. C. L.

AN ISOLATED AND LONELY EMPEROR

Japan's recent announcement that it is constructing a new residence at a cost of $400,000 for Emperor Hirohito is a reminder that he is probably the most isolated and lonely individual in the world.

Hirohito never had an opportunity to develop as a normal individual; no chance to become master of his fate. He is regarded by the Japanese solely as a symbol rather than a personality. However, some of the symbolism vanished in 1946 when the Emperor publicly rejected the concept of imperial deity, and in 1947 when the Japanese Constitution deprived him of all his real powers. Now at the age of 60 he spends most of his time with his hobbies, the principal one being marine life. His palace is the perimeter of his world.

Born April 29, 1901, Hirohito was reared in the splendor of the great Meiji era, when his father lived a more secluded life, partly because no ruler could match the virtues of the mighty Meiji, and partly because of certain failings of himself. Before he was 20, Hirohito found it necessary to take over the duties of the throne from an aged and infirm father.

At the age of three the baby prince was surrendered to the empire, and a special palace built for his residence. There, under guidance of an admiral, the young prince was tutored in the arts of statesmanship. The boy did not enjoy the pleasures of an ordinary home, for only on Sundays and holidays were he and his brothers permitted to visit the palace of their ailing father, and only on Saturday afternoons was the Empress free to visit her baby son.

In the Emperor's academic education there was also an isolation from the outside world. In addition to private tutoring, he attended the famous Peers School, but was not allowed to enter any competition for grades lest unfavorable results occur. Sons of high-ranking nobles were selected as his companions. They were given brief and simple lectures on topics and by tutors selected by the nation's guardians. Under no circumstances were Hirohito and members of his private study group asked questions or required to take examinations.

An interesting sidelight on the education of Hirohito is that not until he became Prince Regent, in November 1921, was he permitted to select his own topics for reading. Prior to that, or during the 20 years of his life, he read a specially prepared newspaper for his knowledge of the world. Topics which went into the paper were selected by members of his household assisted by counselors representing the empire.

This circumscribed life which Hirohito lives makes it impossible for him to communicate with the outside world without consent of others. This is why President Roosevelt never received a reply to his peace plea addressed to the Emperor on December 6, 1941. Few believe it ever reached him.

With a life so completely separated from his people, and even the world, and having been directed and guarded in everything he did and does, Hirohito deserves sympathy and not censure.

BLESSINGS

It had been one of my usual busy days — housework, cleaning and caring for the children — jobs that I would repeat the next day and the next.

But it had been an exciting day for my five-year-old son. A group of youngsters from our church had been taken to visit some shut-ins. Johnny came home bubbling with talk of the trip and the sick ladies.

I put Johnny to bed a little earlier that evening and, as is our bedtime custom, I listened as he said his prayers. This night his prayer was different.

"And please God," he added, "please help those ladies get well so they can hang out clothes and wash dishes like Mommie."

I stood there in the darkened room, looking down at Johnny's sleepy head on the pillow. It was a moment of quiet revelation. I felt humble — the very best that my son could hope for someone else was a life like mine. Suddenly the morning's dirty dishes and unmade beds became my blessings.

A MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

LOVE UNLIMITED

"Then Peter said, silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee."

Acts 3:6

Reading between the lines the text says, I have Jesus. Turn back to John 17:23, "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

What a beautiful prayer! What a great promise!

Now here at the gate Beautiful the poor, lame man, put there to beg alms, "seeing Peter and John about to go" through that gate Beautiful, "asked an alms."

Look on us! We have Jesus, yes, "Jesus Christ of Nazareth." At John's home perhaps was the mother of Jesus right then! Jesus, of Nazareth! Love unlimited! Peter stood a good chance to die for that sort of boldness, and probably did later!

What a possession! The old days of the trial, of the testing, of the denying, of the shame and repentance, and remorse, were past. Peter had allowed even the last bit of jealousy of John perish, and now in glad company walked with him into the gate Beautiful. He could hear Jesus' command: "Feed My sheep!" Where compassion and healing and help were needed, in Jesus' name, he could give it. He had not silver nor gold, the ordinary alms; but he had Jesus, love unlimited!

Also I like the human fellowship, the togetherness, expressed in the fact that with him was John, and that Simon Peter said: "Look on us!" Remember it, that the comradeship of your Christian friends emphasizes the divine fellowship of the Christ.

With their combined faith and the Spirit of Christ the crippled man walked. May we accept His love, and faithfully serve Him.

Amen.

My Personal Experience And Beliefs

By Kieth C. Wright

EXPERIENCE

I was born in Billings, Montana, November 11, 1933, to an itinerant school teacher and his wife. My mother had been a teacher specializing in work with deaf children before her marriage, and my father was still struggling to support his family and finish his college work in the midst of the depression. My first six years are filled with memories of moving frequently from one rural school situation to another.

When I was six, my father went to Alaska to work for the federal government as a civil engineer, leaving my mother and me in Montana. Since the war had started, and it looked as if he would be there for the duration, we moved to Ogden, Utah, to stay with my mother's people. In Ogden I received my grammar school education, and my introduction to religion. My mother was a Methodist; my father was neutral so far as religious matters went. I was started in Sunday school, Boy Scouts, and attended the church services of the local Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It was here that the foundations of religious knowledge and Christian experience were laid. I attended a confirmation class as did all the other children and was baptized and received as a member at the age of 11.

My family decided to move to Salem, Oregon, during my 8th grade year in school. There I entered high school and continued to have a part in the local Methodist church, even serving as an officer in the youth program and attending the summer camps for four years.

Until I entered college I had had no thoughts concerning the Christian ministry. However, soon after entering college I began to attend meetings with a friend who was a Pilgrim Fellowship officer in the State of Oregon. I soon found myself involved in the state work; elected to be a national delegate, and so joined the local Congregational church. In this work I was constantly in contact with inspiring youth leaders on the state level, and came in contact with many pastors at summer camp. While helping with a youth meeting a minister asked me if I had ever considered being a minister. This question started a long series of events which eventually ended up in my decision to attend seminary.

My experience in college also affected my decision. I was majoring in philosophy and sociology and discovering the world of questions; these questions drove me to seek religious answers. Nor was my experience wholly theoretical, since I had taken a job at a state institution for the mentally retarded. Here I came in contact with human tragedy, the reality of death, and the dreadful pressure of living on two schedules.

In my seminary training I was particularly interested in the history of the Church and the then emerging field of pastoral care. My hospital experience had led me to question the adequacy of the minister's work in hospitals, and my studies in seminary convinced me that I wanted more training in a hospital setting. I have spent the last two years acquiring such experience.

During my year at North Carolina Baptist Hospital I became more and more aware of the fact that I had accumulated a vast amount of knowledge and experience, but that I lacked the reality of practical experience. In line with this when a call opened at Pfafftown, after serious thought, I accepted.

BELIEFS

God

God is the uncreated source of all existence who has revealed himself in holy power and love. God is first. This is to assert that there is something more basic and primary than man and his world. Before all of these things, HE IS. This places both man and creation in the proper "humble" light. God is not only creator, and source; he is also one who reveals himself, and yet is hidden. Even in the Christ, in whom we behold his glory full of grace and truth, there remains that which is not for our seeing. God is never fully within our grasp; yet he has chosen to make himself and his will known to men in the events of their world, in their personal lives. God has revealed his will, and his purposes to men to the extent that we realize that God is one in his being, his actions, and his purposes. We call this oneness "holiness" and know that he seeks to make all men and all things holy as he is holy.

Creation is the place in which God works out his will. Here he strives to embody his holiness. The story of the garden of Eden represents this state of holiness in which all things are united in one purpose: "to know and enjoy God forever."

The story of the fall of man represents the lack of holiness found in man. This fact of being unholy is known to us all. With Paul we may say that "the good I would, I do not, and that which I would not, that I do." We are all aware of the contradictory demands of our own nature, and the needs and desires of others. When the service and enjoyment of God is replaced by the desire to be served and adored as God is served and adored, then the facts of the fall occur again. All sin contains this element of self-elevation and the denial of equality to others.

The fall does not destroy creation, nor God's purposes. It spoils one possible course of events for men, and begins the course of events we all call history. Here God reveals Himself as we have come to know him.

Biblical History

The history of Israel is a record of God's working to bring peace between man and man, and between God and man. It is the story of God's seeking to make men holy. All of these attempts in the Old Testament story contain some idea of action on the part of man. "Repent, turn again, come back" are words frequently found. There must be some fulfilling of the Law. This history recounts again and again the failure of man to live up to his end of the bargain. Man is either unwilling to obey; or if he would obey, he finds himself unable to do so.

Jesus Christ

Jesus Christ is God's solution to this dilemma. Here God himself answers for man's disobedience, and frees man from his prison of guilt and helplessness. God acts that men may have freedom from guilt and bondage. Again, God is acting that men may become holy in themselves, and in their relations with one another.

In this light, the incarnation, the life and work, the death, and the resurrection are to be seen. All of Jesus Christ is involved in this work of making men "at-one" with themselves, with their neighbors, and with God. The cross and the awful meaning which surround it give the most vivid and awful statement to both the sin and salvation which are involved in this atonement.

The means by which God accomplishes this work of salvation, involve the doctrines of the persons of Christ — “truly man, truly God” — and the meaning of the word and the sacraments. For this reason most of the great battles in the Church have been fought over these doctrines and meanings.

The Church

The Church results from Christ. Because of his coming, his teaching, his death and resurrection, and his specific command the church arose:

(1) To proclaim their faith in his gospel of good news. This proclamation is done by the preaching of the word and the administration of the sacraments. The church has faith in the promises of God concerning freedom from guilt and helplessness, and the possibility of being made holy.

(2) To hope. The church not only proclaims what it has received of the Lord, it also waits with expectation for the fulfillment of his promises; not in our time, but in the fullness of time. All of the tradition of the Church, all of the meaning of the Word; and the sacraments, all of the worship of the church is done with this holy hope in mind.

That his will might be done on earth as it is in heaven.

(3) To love. The Church is always called upon to work out its faith and its hope in the world today. The gospel demands that men “love one another, and bear one another’s burden.” Our incorporation in the church by grace through justification demands that we also grow in that grace, and that we become better people in our human relationships, as well as in our relationships with God.

The Church is not left alone in this struggle, but is guided and directed by the Holy Spirit, who is the fulfillment of the promises of Christ that we would not be left alone, but that God’s love and care would continue with us.

The Word of God

The Word of God is found in the Bible as a whole. No individual part is to take precedence over the weight of the whole of biblical tradition. God has always revealed what men needed at a certain time and place. There is never a revelation in general. This means that we must always understand the place, the time, and the persons in any biblical story. We need to understand the language, the history, and the culture of the people to rightly discern truth from error. Only as we come to know the people to whom God spoke will we be able to understand God’s answer to them, and be able to decide if God’s answer is applicable to our lives. For this is what the Bible claims: that in their lives certain men met God, and this meeting changed all future events for them. They present God, and ask us to decide for him or against him. It has always been the claim of the Church that the biblical situation and our situation as men is one and the same, and that if we rightly understand the biblical situation we will rightly be able to understand our own situation.

The Sacraments

Holy communion is the visible proclamation of the gospel. Here we see and do what we so often only hear. Christ is host at his own table, and we know by his promise that whenever we celebrate this feast we gather at his table, and have fellowship with him and with one another. This is true, though men may make it untrue for themselves by denying his presence, or their own need of his grace.

Holy Baptism is the mark of incorporation in the Church of Jesus Christ. When it is administered to a child it proclaims that God and his people take this child under their care until he may decide for himself. For adults the decision is asked with the administration of the sacrament.

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF ST. PETER'S CHURCH, GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

Southern Rhodesia -- Signs Of Hope

Mr. and Mrs. F. Keith Schwyhart

Mount Silinda
Southern Rhodesia, Africa
October 16, 1960

Dear Friends,

Many of you have asked about the political situation here, so I will try to give you the picture as I see it. I'm sure if many of you were here talking to the people and seeing what is going on, you would form different opinions; however, I will do my best.

The economic, social and political problems here in Africa seem more complex than in any other country I have visited. First, we have a race problem. The white man came with a much more advanced culture. Some came to help the African; some came to exploit him. There are many white people who think of the African as the same person the whites met when they first came to Africa. They think of them as savage, dirty, ignorant and dishonest. There are enough of this type of African still here that this group can point them out whenever they wish to prove their point. There are some whites who think the governments of Africa should all be turned over to the Africans immediately, because they, the Africans, have the right to govern themselves. The Congo is an example of what can happen when the Africans take over the government without having been sufficiently trained for self-government by their former rulers. There are many Europeans and Africans who feel the African should be granted the rights of citizenship when he is properly trained. There is much disagreement on what "being properly trained" means. There are many Africans who think any government would be better than one in which whites have the control.

Add to this the large number of people whose ancestors came from India. Many are successful in business, yet they are not accepted fully into either the white group or the African. Then add the big differences in the Africans themselves due to their training. There are many who still have several wives, who go to the witch doctor to be cured of illness, worship spirits and in general live just about as their ancestors lived. On the other hand there are many who are trained and capable of competing with the white man on equal terms. There are a few who are outstanding and could compete with the best in most countries. There are some whites who come to Africa with nothing and find they can live well here with the African doing all the work. They want no change. I could continue listing more and more groups which are typical of Africa, but I'm sure you can see how complex it is.

I think Rhodesia has a good chance of becoming a sound democratic country. The government is allowing more and more Africans the right to vote; more offices in government are open to Africans each year; more and more jobs are paying the same wage scale regardless of race. But this country still has a long way to go. It will not be easy.

As for any danger to us here, I don't think we are in any more danger than we would be any place else in the world. Of course no one knows when people will act foolishly, so we are never sure. But there in America you are never sure that you are safe from destruction by warfare

Mt. Silinda

Mission station, 3,600 feet above sea level in midst of mahogany forest. 3,000 acres of farm land in station.

April

30—Miss Mary Dewar went out as missionary in 1947, sailing with one of the first groups to return to China after World War II. When work there was forced to close, she went to Portugal (1953) to study the language in preparation for work in Angola. In 1960 she was transferred to Southern Rhodesia, where she is a nurse at the Mt. Silinda hospital.

- 1—Dr. and Mrs. John Donaldson went to Africa in 1958. He is co-medical director of the Pierce Memorial Hospital in Mt. Silinda. She is doing social work. He makes regular trips to the hospital at Chikore and clinic at Zamchiya. Much work is done with T.B., which has increased 50% among Africans in Rhodesia in one year.
- 2—Mr. and Mrs. William Reedy had been teachers in the U.S. for many years when they decided to become missionaries. He is principal of Mt. Silinda Institute where she teaches. This is a day and boarding school for 500 African boys and girls. It includes classes through 8th grade, a teacher training course and building construction and carpentry courses.
- 3—Mr. and Mrs. Keith Schwyhart became missionaries in 1958. He teaches in the newly established higher-teacher-training program at Mt. Silinda, supervises student teachers and athletics. She teaches missionary children. He had been a teacher and principal in U. S. (See letter from them in this issue.)
- 4—Dr. and Mrs. Kirk Stetson went to Africa in 1956 where he is co-director of Pierce Hospital. The only hospital in radius of 25 miles, it has 65 beds, but 80-100 patients. He went to Turkey as a teacher, then decided to become a medical missionary and returned to U. S. and got M.D. degree.
- 5—Miss Louise Torrence has been a teacher at Mt. Silinda since 1927. After present furlough, she will do only church work, including women's work, home visiting, nutrition classes, Bible Institutes.

or some other danger of modern society.

We drove to a former American Board Mission in Mozambique a few Sundays ago. It was a 35-mile trip which took a little more than two hours each way. Several things which I learned I would like to share with you. The Gagoi Mission operated for 26 years, then was closed by the government for no apparent reason, except it was a Protestant mission in a Catholic country. Twenty-six years was not long enough to get Christianity really established. You need to have at least two generations to make any lasting changes. When the Mission was closed, people were progressing considerably; they were using better farming methods, had cleaner and better-made houses, were gradually losing some of their fears and superstitions of witchcraft. Now they have gone back almost as they were before the Mission was established. A few still try to follow their Christian teachings, but it is hard for them.

This is Juanita, now, to tell you about an interesting four-day trip into the Sabi Valley last month. Our two doctors alternate each month on their regular visits to several remote outposts, and on the last trip, Dr. Stetson took another woman and myself with him. We ate and slept at the African homes, and some of them are quite attractive and modern. I enjoyed helping all the sewing teachers at the 6 or 7 schools we visited, and talking with the local Ruwadzano women's groups.

One of my strongest impressions on the entire trip was the source of water at a place called Mabee (Mah bay ay). Here the people have a marshy stream, thickly choked with tall grasses, and near it someone has dug a hole in the black earth. There is no fence around it; donkeys walk up to it carrying jars or drums for water. The surface of the water is about three to four feet below the level of the ground, and the children lower gourds into the water by thin plaited ropes. When I saw it, the water was brown with mud; some straw had fallen into it, and one gourd floated on the top. Altogether it was a shocking sight and I was sickened by the sudden realization that I had that morning drunk tea made from water out of that hole.

But the government is making an effort to improve upon these condi-

Ground Breaking For The First United Church Of Christ

A very impressive ground breaking service was held Easter Sunday afternoon for St. Peter's United Church of Christ, Greensboro. The service was unique in that every person present took an active part in breaking ground. The service was arranged in the form of a litany divided into five parts representing the different aspects of the program of the Church. As ground was broken, the Congregation responded with "we break this ground."

The five parts of the service and their representatives were as follows: Part I, "The Church" — Rev. J. L. Levens, Secretary of the Southern Synod, represented the Universal Church; Dr. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of the local First Congregational Christian Church, represented the United Church of Christ; Rev. Melvin Palmer, pastor of the local First Evangelical and Reformed Church, represented the Southern Synod; Mr. Martin Garren, immediate past president, represented the Southern Convention; and the host pastor, Rev. Carl T. Daye, represented the local church. Part II, "The Sanctuary" — the pastor represented "Worship"; Mr. Charles Kirkman, director, represented "Music"; and Mr. Rayborn Hinshaw, president of the Consistory, represented "Commitment and Witness." Part III, "Christian Education" — Mrs. Charles Starr, nursery teacher, represented the pre-school children; Mrs. Ray Hicks, junior teacher, represented the primary and junior children; Mr. Bradford Hawkins, youth teacher, represented the young people; and Mr. Harvey Walker, general superintendent, represented the adults. Part IV, "Christian Fellowship" — Mr. Harvey Starr, vice president, represented the Churchmen's Fellowship; Mrs. Harvey Starr, president, represented the church Women's Fellowship; and Miss Deborah Daye, president, represented the Youth Fellowship. Part V, "The Building Committee" — Mr. Robert Peterson, architect of Greensboro, represented his office; Mr. Bill Starr, chairman, represented the building committee; and Mr. Otis Welker, contractor, broke ground signifying the beginning of construction. A large crowd, including many visitors from the two mother churches, were present for the service.

The building, of red brick and holiday hill stone in contemporary Gothic, will have 7,223 square feet in one-story with a basement on ground level at the rear. The building will have a multi-purpose room to serve for worship and fellowship, nine class rooms, kitchen, kitchenette, and a pastor's study. The first unit, to cost around $65,000, is expected to be completed by early fall. Plans call for the addition of an educational unit and a sanctuary as the congregation grows and the need for them becomes urgent.

More than 150 people attended this service for the first church in the nation chartered by the United Church of Christ.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

SYNODICAL YOUTH CABINET RETREAT

The week-end of February 25-26 the Southern Synodical Youth Fellowship cabinet had a retreat at the First Church of Christ (E. & R.) in High Point. In an effort to broaden the fellowship of the Youth Fellowship and the Pilgrim Fellowship, they invited the Southern Convention P. F. officers to the retreat. I attended this retreat and feel that it was very successful.

The theme for the retreat was "Personal Christian Commitment." We began Saturday morning with a discussion of "Committed — to What and Why?" led by Rev. Allan Rohrbaugh. After a presentation made by Mr. Rohrbaugh, we divided into small groups and discussed four questions. I am going to state these questions and attempt to tell you some of the conclusions made by the discussion groups.

1. What does it mean to be committed?

Everything in your life is influenced by your commitment. If you are committed, you are dedicated to something; you have a strong belief and give yourself and your life for a cause. Your commitment will create enthusiasm in your life.

2. Why be committed to anything?

Everybody needs something to work for and toward. Commitment gives us purpose in life. If we have no goal or purpose, we will be dead in spirit.

3. To what am I committed?

We all agreed that we are committed to many things — God, church, family, ourselves, school, popularity, friends, society, and money.

4. To whom am I committed?

We are committed to God and to serving our fellowmen.

Saturday afternoon Rev. John Settlemyre led a discussion of "My Responsibility and Dedication." He raised the question "How do we as young people develop deeper personal commitment?" He said that we should be aware of God's presence and respond to him. Also we should realize that all of us are rooted in the Christian faith — we are all children of God. We should live every moment of our lives with God. We need to decide who we are and where we are going. In doing so, we will set up goals for ourselves.

Saturday night the cabinet held a business meeting. After the meeting we departed from the church to homes of several church members who provided us with overnight accommodations.

Sunday morning those attending the retreat participated in the morning church service. The retreat ended after a Sunday afternoon session and closing worship service.

This retreat strengthened my personal Christian commitment. It is my hope that more retreats of this kind can be held so that other young people may be able to strengthen their commitment.

The Vocations Conference at Moonelon was interesting, instructive, constructive, and very helpful to all who attended.

Hubie Young made a good presentation of Moonelon activities when he appeared before the Women's Convention in Suffolk April 18. F.C.L.

A Pilgrim Fellowship group was organized at the new Community Church, Garner, April 16. Young people met at the parsonage with the pastor, Rev. R. L. Clapp.

These are busy days for high school people who are trying to finish the year's work with good grades, and especially those who are planning for college next fall. Selection of the right college is very important. Choice of life's work is even more important.

ISLE OF WIGHT P. F.

By Susan Munford, Reporter

The new year so far has proven to be a good one for the P. F. group of Isle of Wight Christian Church. The attendance and membership both have been greater than ever.

Work Day for Christ was observed and everyone turned in his money to be sent to Our Christian World Mission.

In February the P. F.'ers treated their parents to a banquet. Their pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, and his family were special guests. Following the supper the home mission study book, In Step With Time, was reviewed by Mrs. S. Ray Turner.

Youth Sunday was observed March 5. The speakers for the morning were Barbara Turner and Ann Munford. Others taking part in the program were Johnny Dillon, Frankie Barlow, Susan Munford, Eileen Barlow, Sidney Murphy, Jr., and Bobby Ray Edwards. Special music was rendered after classes were taught by members of the P. F. A service of this kind is planned for the third Sunday in each month by this group.

Each year the Pilgrim Fellowship makes some contribution to the church; their most recent is a new pew and organ light.

Robert B. Saunders, vice president of the sophomore class of Elon College and a native of Birmingham, Alabama, was the speaker at Oakland church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, on National Christian College Sunday.

Phyllis Hopkins and Jimmy Rosser ably represented Elon College at the Women's Fellowship Convention in Suffolk last week. Phyllis, granddaughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Neese, told of plans for a Prayer Room at the college. Jimmy gave some of the reasons he decided to become a minister after entering Elon College.

The Church Zoo

How long has it been since you took a trip to the city zoo? Not long ago I took a tour of it and I was amazed to find how the animals remind me of church people I have known.

You might read this list slowly and see if any of the characters fit you:

Don't be a Wildcat member (he hates everything and everyone in the church).

Don't be a Kangaroo (he jumps from class to class or church to church when things don't suit him).

Don't be a Wolf (he growls at everything and can't speak a kind word, even to himself).

Don't be a Hog (he's the fellow who wants to hog the show and run everything).

Don't be an Elephant (the big stalwart fellow who can't be pushed around).

Don't be a Goose (the member who is always honking about everything).

Don't be a chimpanzee (there's no place for monkey business in the church).

Don't be a skunk (he's the stinker in the crowd).

DO BE A HORSE (and use horse sense in everything you do for the Kingdom of God).

Eastern N. C. Men Ordained

By R. L. Clapp, Conference Secretary

Ordination services by the Eastern N. C. Conference were held for Elmo Allcox March 5 in the Bethlehem church and for Ronald Nichols April 2 in the New Elam church.

Preceding the ordination service for Mr. Allcox, a fellowship supper given by the Bethlehem and Antioch churches was held in the Littleton Community Building. Those sharing in the service of ordination were Dr. David Shepherd, Rev. Earl Farrell, Rev. Elmore Powell, Rev. Frank Apple, Mr. Luther Walker, and Rev. Rosser Clapp. Rev. Joe French delivered the ordination sermon.

Mr. Allcox was born in Beaufort, North Carolina, and attended Beaufort County schools. After taking studies from the University of North Carolina and completing the examinations on the course of studies given by the Committee on the Ministry, it was recommended that he be given Conference Ordination. In 1941, Mr. Allcox married the former Edna Byrle Roberson of Washington, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Allcox and son, Kenneth, live in Littleton, and serve the Bethlehem and Antioch churches.

Mr. Ronald Nichols, born near Farmville, North Carolina, graduated from Fountain High School, Fountain, N. C. In 1942 he married the former Edna Ruth Ivey of Farmville, and there are three children in the family — Jo Ann, Cheryle and Ronnie Lee.

In January of this year, Mr. Nichols completed the necessary examinations on a course of studies given by the Committee on the Ministry. Having completed this four-year course of studies, the committee recommended that Conference Ordination be given to Mr. Nichols. Those sharing in the service of ordination were Dr. Shepherd, Superintendent Clyde Fields, Rev. Max Vestal, Mr. E. M. Marks, and Rev. Rosser Clapp. Rev. Earl Farrell delivered the ordination sermon. Following the service of ordination, refreshments were served in the church fellowship building by the New Elam, Morrisville, and Mt. Pleasant churches.

The Nichols family live in Garner and serve the above mentioned churches.

Eastern Virginia Laymen's Fellowship meets Sunday, April 30, at 6:00 p.m. at Oakland church, Chuckatuck, for supper and program.

Rev. Richard L. Jackson will be installed as "pastor and teacher" of the St. Paul United Church of Christ, Cincinnati, Ohio, at special services Sunday afternoon, May 7. There will also be a rededication service for the church building which has been remodeled.

SOCIAL ACTION PRESENTED TO MINISTERS

A special program on Christian Social Action was presented at the April meeting of the Western N. C. Ministerial Association in Asheboro by the conference Social Action Committee. The purpose of the program was to inform the ministers of the committee's concerns and to encourage increased activity in this field. Members of the committee who took part in the program were the Chairman, William Joyner, Mrs. Sherman Maness, Mrs. Street Morgan, and Mr. Lewis Wicker.

Mrs. Maness presented concerns in the area of social welfare drawing upon information relating to actual conditions within the conference area. She urged the ministers to renew their efforts to eliminate unfavorable social conditions such as alcoholism, juvenile delinquency, and improper care of the aged.

Mrs. Morgan encouraged greater concern and stronger leadership on the part of the ministers in the field of race relations. She suggested that progress in this area could be made through the use of constructive sermons, hymns, films, and youth programs in the churches. Another suggestion was that churches might set up libraries or bookshelves and include in the selection of books those which provide information in the field of race relations.

Mr. Wicker's presentation dealt with the field of international relations. He indicated that there was much that a local church could do. He suggested that the churches practice true brotherhood, that foreign students be invited as guests to the churches, and that active interest be taken in international affairs by church people.

MEMORIAL DAY AT PLEASANT CROSS

By Mrs. J. W. Wilson, Jr.

The annual Memorial and Homecoming Day will be held at Pleasant Cross Christian Church, near Asheboro, North Carolina, May 7. Sunday school will be at 9:45 and morning worship at 11:00 with the pastor, Rev. M. L. Fogleman, speaking.

A picnic lunch will be served on the grounds at the noon hour. The afternoon service will begin at 1:30. This service will consist entirely of singing. Everyone, especially singers, is invited.

Our Pastor's Class

The decision of persons to give supreme allegiance to God in the person of Jesus Christ and join the Christian Church, ranks along with the choice of a life-partner and a life-work as a more momentous one. It should not be made lightly or casually but "reverently, advisedly, soberly" and out of love for God.

A whole philosophy of life is bound up in this decision. By it the person proclaims total loyalty to the Will of God; he affirms the intention of taking personally the call of Jesus; "Come, follow me"; he identifies himself with the fellowship of kindred minds within the Church. His attitude toward his vocation will be one of service to others above personal gain; his relation with family will be characterized by self-giving love rather than by desire for recognition or administration; his association with all people will be marked by overflowing goodwill and concern, as against indifference or prejudice.

An intelligent, purposeful, and durable decision such as this cannot arise out of spontaneous enthusiasm alone. It must come as the result of the church's devoted effort to prepare her young people thoroughly. The entire educational program of the church normally is designed to this end, beginning with the Nursery and proceeding up through the various departments of the church school to summer camp and the other organizations of the church. But of themselves, these familiar educational instruments are not always successful in kindling within a person an immediate and compelling desire to dedicate his life to God and join the church.

Thus the Pastor's Class has emerged. It attempts to bring the long-range purposes of the church's familiar educational program to quick boil.

While most of the educational work of the church school is entrusted to laymen, a special responsibility for winning the hearts of persons to the Christian enterprise rests properly with the minister of the church. He is both its executive head and its spiritual leader, and has been equipped by special training and experience to fulfill this very task.

There are several reasons why the Pastor's Class should become "standard equipment" in our church's program.

1. A special period of intensive training for young people is almost necessary to create in them the desire to choose the Christian way and to explore its meaning within the fellowship of the church.

2. In preparation for such a decision it is necessary to impact the fundamentals of the Christian faith, as an integrated whole, without the disconnections that all too frequently occur within the church school curriculum.

It is hoped that in the future those who desire to enter into the membership of our church will see fit to join the Pastor's Class!

HOLY NECK WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Clifton B. Baker, Reporter

The Women's Fellowship of Holy Neck is enjoying another successful year under the leadership of the president, Mrs. J. E. March. At the August meeting officers were installed with an impressive service by Mrs. Jim Wright.

In October we had a good number attend the fall conference at Great Bridge. During October we were also privileged to hear our home mission book "Heritage and Horizons" reviewed by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman at the Franklin Church.

November 4 World Community Day was observed with the five Holland area churches taking part. Sunday, November 6, the ladies had charge of the morning worship service. Mrs. Allen Piland gave the morning address.

At the regular December meeting the ladies enjoyed a Christmas party and exchanged gifts. At this meeting Friendly Service Gifts were dedicated in a service conducted by Mrs. Emmett Piland.

January 17 a covered-dish supper was held for members, their families, and the young people. After supper, we moved to the church auditorium for a devotional service conducted by the young people. At the conclusion of the devotional, Mrs. I. W. Johnson reviewed our foreign study book, "One World-One Mission." We were joined for this part of the service by the young people of the Holland church.

February 17 we observed World Day of Prayer with the five community churches.

The Bible study is one of the most enjoyable studies of the year. For two years the circles have met in the homes each night for a week for this study. We have good attendance and much is accomplished in the small groups.

At our last regular meeting we were fortunate to have our District Superintendent, Mrs. George D. Underwood, Jr., meet with us and give us the program. She used for her remarks the book "Twelve Baskets Full."

We had a good group to attend the Spring Rally at Cypress Chapel.

Those who went found the day very worthwhile.

We regret to report the loss of two of our members, Mrs. Gerald Rountree and Mrs. E. T. Holland. We extend our deepest sympathy to their families and pray God's blessings for them.

NEW HOPE FELLOWSHIP REORGANIZED

By J. C. Loy

On Tuesday, March 27, the Laymen's Fellowship of the New Hope Christian Church was reorganized at a special supper meeting sponsored by the Women's Fellowship. James Chamblee was elected chairman of the fellowship, Seeba Strickland was named vice-chairman, Vernon Sawyer, secretary and E. G. Chamblee, treasurer. The program committee named was Odell Arnold, Yates Holmes, Mr. Carl Ray, and Sherrill Lester.

Seventeen laymen attended the meeting. The fellowship is planning to sponsor a boy's baseball team for the church, and plans were made to organize a men's softball team to compete in the church-sponsored league in the Franklin County area.

Out Of The Heart

Background Scripture: Proverbs 3:1-8; 4:20-23; Luke 6: 43-45.

Devotional Reading: Luke 6:43-49.

Memory Selection: Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Proverbs 4:23.

Remember! !

"My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments." The Old Testament especially emphasizes the word "remember." Again and again, its readers are enjoined "not to forget." And with good reason. For holy living today and tomorrow depends in large measure on a man's knowledge of the holy history of the past; one can plan the future best as he knows the past well. The Hebrews knew that, but we seem to have forgotten it. We have an appalling ignorance of things holy. One daring preacher gave a Bible quizz on Universal Bible Sunday. The results were startling. One fourth of the congregation could not identify Calvary as the place where Christ was crucified; one third did not know that Nazareth was his home; 43% did not know what Gethsemane was, 75% did not know what Pentecost was, and only 40% knew that Thomas was one of Christ's disciples! Granted that mere knowledge of the Bible does not guarantee goodness, the quizz revealed that the average American churchman does not remember the holy past out of which his religious heritage has come.

Upon the Table of the Heart

"Let not mercy and truth forsake thee; bind them about thy neck, and write them upon the table of thine heart." The Jews wore a phylactery, a small leather box containing certain passages from Scripture, on their wrists to remind the wearer of his obligation to keep God's laws. The wise man of old suggested that his readers keep always before them the ideal of truth and mercy, loyalty and faithfulness. But he went further: he suggested that they write them upon the table of their hearts. True religion comes from the heart. As he uses the term heart, however, he is not referring simply to the emotions. He is referring to the inner man, to the matter of motives, of character itself. There is a goodness that is external, that is motivated by the fear of punishment or the hope of reward. But that is not true goodness. Jesus himself put a great deal of emphasis on this point. And it may be recalled that Jeremiah predicted the time to come when God would write his laws, not upon tables of stone, but upon the heart. The heart must be kept right if conduct is to be right.

Obedience and Direction

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." This does not mean that a good man will never make any mistakes. It does mean that the man who acknowledges God will have an inner light or guidance that will lead him into a knowledge of God's will, and will have divine guidance and girding. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart" — there is the word "heart" again, and lean not to thine own understanding. Total commitment, trust in God, confidence and faith in him — this is the important thing.

Every Man His Own Picket

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." The heart is, to use a simple and familiar figure of speech, "the spring of life." Just as the physical heart is so important in our physical health, just so is the heart in the spiritual sense all important in human life. Your heart life determines your whole life. What is in your heart will determine whether you are good or evil. How carefully we ought to guard our hearts! As a picket is set on guard against surprise or intrusion by the enemy, so every man is a picket set on guard against evil ideas and evil impulses from coming into the heart. How zealously we should "keep our hearts" for out of them are the issues of life indeed. And sooner or later what is in the heart comes out in the life. The heart is the fountain of the waters of life. From it come either clean or filthy waters. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.

And a bad heart in a moral or spiritual sense, often means poor health in a physical sense. Guard the care of your heart. Keep it with all diligence. Keep out of it all bitterness and malice and hate and the spirit of unforgiveness, and impurity, and untruthfulness. Better still, fill it with the spirit of mercy and kindness and faith and hope and love. Doctors tell us that from 40 to 60 percent of all our illnesses are mental or spiritual in origin. Take a look at your heart today. What do you find there? What motives and aspirations and attitudes lie hidden in it? The Psalmist long ago understood the supreme importance of the heart in the life of man. "Create within me a clean heart, O God and renew a right spirit within me."

A Tree and Its Fruit

Jesus adds his approval to what the Old Testament writer said about the importance of the heart, although he put it in another way. He said that the way to get good fruit is to have a good tree, that a tree is known by its fruit. A good tree does not bear bad fruit, and a bad tree does not bear good fruit. And men, like trees, are to be known by their fruit. And he adds "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Sooner or later, unless a man guards well his heart, the hidden things there will crawl out into the light.

A change of heart means a change of life. In a village there lived a man who cut and sold logs. He "chiseled" by cutting them a little short of the required four feet. During a revival meeting, he professed religion and joined the church. A group of skeptical and cynical men were talking about the matter, and were loath to believe that a fellow who had been for so long such a cheat could be changed. One of the number quietly slipped away, and when he returned he said "It's true! he has been converted." "How do you know?" asked one of the men. The man replied "I have been over and measured the wood he cut yesterday. It's all a full four feet long!"

Inside Religion

What all this means is that religion to be any good must be inside religion. It must be in the heart, for it is from within outward, says Jesus, that come the things that define a man. A missionary in the Belgian Congo tells about how he

New Emphasis In Child-Care

Dear Friends:

This past week I had the privilege of attending The Southeastern Child Care Association meeting in Winston-Salem, N. C. for three days. This Association is made up of child-caring agencies of the Southeastern states including church related, state related and private homes for children.

There were three workshops at this meeting. One for executives of the institutions, one for caseworkers and one for houseparents. The theme for the entire conference was "Children and Their Religious Nurture."

I attended the workshop for executives and in one session we heard Chaplain Benjamin S. Patrick, Jr., who is Associate Director, Department of Pastoral Care at the Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem. He led a very interesting discussion on the spiritual aspect of counseling and the important place this holds in dealing with boys and girls that come into our care.

In another session we heard Dr. Ellen Winston, State Commissioner of Public Welfare, State Board of Public Welfare of North Carolina, speak on the subject of "Cooperation in the Sixties." Among other things she pointed out how such institutions as ours were doing an increasingly better job. For instance, in every case where building programs were going on it was not for increased facilities, but rather for improving existing facilities. Also, now in a period of several years institutions are serving more children even though their number is not increasing. This is due to the fact that there are coming to be fewer children staying in child-caring homes for long term periods.

Another important thing she pointed out was the fact that more and more institutions such as ours are developing a Social Service Department. Thus a real service is being rendered in the field of child care that was not in years past. This way a better analysis is being made before a child is admitted to a children's home. Also, close contact is kept with whoever places the child in the home so that if the child could return to a normal home situation, whether it be his or her natural home or a foster home, it could be done.

Also, having such a department as this would enable a children's home such as ours to have a Foster Home Program. In this way children would not be kept in institutional care alone but in foster homes wherever and whenever possible.

In keeping with this forward look in child care, our Children's Home will employ June 1 its first full-time professional child case worker. He is John Biggerstaff. Mr. Biggerstaff has been a part-time employee of the Home for the last three years while finishing at Elon and working on his Master's Degree at the University of North Carolina. We are very happy that our Home will be one of those pioneering in this field of social service in the state of North Carolina.

Only our Baptist Home in North Carolina has this Department complete. The Methodist Home in Winston-Salem has just recently begun such a department. We will be the third church-related home to begin such work in the state. We will be among the first of small church-related homes to enter this field in our state. This is an area new not only to North Carolina, but also to all the other states in the southeast.

Thus you see we are justly proud of the fact that we are a part of this forward movement in the area of child care. An area where the church will have a responsibility as long as our society is what it is today. Let us share our responsibility in this field of Christian service!

One of the new members of the United States House of Representatives is Dr. Ben Reifel of South Dakota, who is a Sioux Indian, born on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. He had been working for the National Council of Churches in its Fellowship of Indian Workers. A co-worker said of him: "He has consistently been an aggressive and outstanding leader, not only among Indian people but all people of the state."

Our South Norfolk church participated in the union sunrise service on Easter morning at Lakeside Park, sponsored by the Southside Ministerial Association. The fifth graders of the South Norfolk elementary school rendered several anthems.

In Memoriam

HOLLOWELL

Our Heavenly Father in his all-wise providence took from our midst our beloved Allie Jane Hollowell on February 26, after a two months' illness.

Her passing represents a genuine loss to our church as she worked untiringly in all its activities. Putting others above self, her thoughtfulness, consideration, and loyalty endeared her to her many friends.

The Women's Fellowship feel deeply our loss as she served as Christian Education Chairman for three years, and was our chauffeur, taking us to local meetings, Rallies, and Conferences.

We extend to her family our heartfelt sympathy and pray God's comfort and sustaining power upon them.

"Even though death has a wonderful mission,
Though it robs us of those we love,
It draws us from our surroundings
To long for the meeting above.

No matter how heavy our loss is,
No matter how great our despair, Doesn't heaven seem nearer and brighter

To know that loved ones are there?"

Members of the Women's Fellowship of First Congregational Christian Church of Hopewell, Virginia.

LAWRENCE

We, the members of the Women's Fellowship of the Seagrove Christian Church of Seagrove, North Carolina, wish to pay a tribute of love and respect to the memory of Rufus J. Lawrence, who passed from this life March 31, 1961, at the age of 79 years.

Mr. Lawrence was a devoted member of our church. He was a good superintendent, a faithful teacher and a loyal deacon. We shall miss his presence among us. His community has lost a faithful friend. Although he was unable to attend the services of his church regularly during his last years due to ill health, he was faithful to the work of God's Kingdom.

Because of our appreciation for his faithfulness, we resolve:

First: To extend to his loved ones our sympathy.

Second: That we keep a memory of his devotion in our hearts.

Third: That a copy of this Memoriam be published in the paper he loved so well, The Christian Sun.

had to give pills directly to the sick person and thus insure that he would take them. Otherwise the patient would tie the pill on a string around his neck as a decoration instead of swallowing it. After all, a pill really does last longer around the neck! But there is a parable in that story. All too many of us have only a formal religion. It is not inner, vital, effective. The gospel must be taken inwardly if it is to cleanse and to heal. Only thus can it purify our motives, reconcile us to our brothers, and redirect our goals. Religion must be dynamic, not merely decorative.

In conclusion, here is this little gem: "Hardening of the heart ages people quicker than hardening of the arteries."

tions; in some places the authorities are digging bore holes and installing pumps for the people. We have all been heartened by the recent equalization of salaries between African and white teachers. If the government will continue to act in the best interests of the Africans, we should eventually see in Rhodesia an independent African government — without the strife which certain other countries have had. We hope that with your prayers and support, your missionaries can have some small part in bringing this about.

A Meditation Of A Missionary

(Based on First Corinthians 13)

By Rev. Blaise Levai

1. Though I speak in the dialect of the people I serve and can preach with the eloquent power of a fiery evangelist; though as a surgeon I can operate with skill; though as an agriculturalist I can raise acres of high grade rice; though I as a teacher can deliver learned lectures, but do not have love, my message is hollow. 2. And though I have the talent of a diplomatic organizer and administrator in councils and meetings; though I have all confidence that I need to raise large funds, but do not have love, I am good for nothing. 3. And though I share my possessions and give money to the poor, but do not help my brother to become a strong, independent follower of Christ, I achieve absolutely nothing. 4. Love, if it is genuine in the life and work of a missionary, is patient and constructive; nor does it seek for position and prestige. Love is glad to see a competent national in charge, and envies not. Love seeks to train an indigenous leadership; it does not cherish inflated ideas of its own importance; it is never anxious to impress. Love tries to identify itself with the people and is never puffed up. 5. Love that is genuine does not belittle. It does not compile statistics of another's mistakes. Love seeks to bear joy and sorrow, failure and success in brotherly ways. Love is not easily provoked when there is a difference of opinion; and when unknown rumors are spread, love believes the best. 6. Love that is genuine is a partnership. It is better to fail with a national in charge that to succeed without him. Love is not touchy; it never hides hurt feelings. Love never barricades understanding; it rejoices in sharing the truth. 7. Love keeps an open mind; is willing to attempt new methods and ways of doing things. Love does not consider the past so precious that it limits new vision. Love gives courage to change old ways when necessary. Unless we are prepared to adapt and change, we shall have defenders of an old system but no new voice; we shall have preachers but no prophets.

We shall keep the bush primly pruned by hired gardeners, using expensive equipment, but within the bush there will be no burning fire. 8. Love that trusts like little children never fails. Large institutions may cease; even heavily subsidized schools and colleges that impart knowledge may close. And if wisdom gained there fails to lead students to Christ the Saviour, it would be better to entrust such education to the Government; for our knowledge is always incomplete without Him who is "The Way, the Truth and the Life." Love that has no other desire but to trust, never fails. 9. We are in a period of change and transition. And where is the man who knows where we are going or what will happen on the mission fields? 10. But now, here on earth, we can comprehend only in part. 11. When missions were yet at the stage of childhood, the methods of proclaiming Christ's Gospel were simple. Authority was in the hands of a few. But now that missions have grown for over a century into maturity, they must put away childish dependence. There must be on each of the fields abroad a new, strong, independent Church for the Master that is self-supporting, self-administrating and self-propagating. 12. But whatever happens, whatever direction the winds of change may take, there is this certainty: Our Lord will not leave himself without a witness. He is perfecting his plan in and through history, though everything now looks confused and baffling. 13. Be sure of this: institutions will pass away, but labor wrought by hands which have shared with those in need, and the message of the saving love of Christ, who died and rose again and lives as Lord of Life, will never, never pass away. In this life there are only three enduring qualities: Faith, Hope and Love; these three. But the greatest of these is Love.

NOTE: The Rev. Dr. Levai was an educational missionary for almost 15 years in Vellore, South India. At present he is editorial assistant at the American Bible Society in New York.

PRINCIPLES of the

CHRISTIAN CHURCH

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

The Greatest Work

He built a house; time laid it in the dust;
 He wrote a book, its title now forgot;
 He ruled a city, but his name is not
 On any table graven, or where rust
 Can gather from disuse, or marble bust.
 He took a child from a wretched cot,
 Who on the state dishonor might have brought,
 And reared him to the Christian's hope and trust.
 The boy, to manhood grown, became a light
 To many souls, and preached for human need
 The wondrous love of the Omnipotent.
 The work has multiplied like stars at night
 When darkness deepens; every noble deed
 Lasts longer than a granite monument.

Rev. Mack Welch of Reidsville was the guest preacher for a series of services at Mt. Bethel April 16-22.

Seventeen members were received into our Franklin, Virginia, church Palm Sunday. Thirteen children received the sacrament of Holy Baptism.

Passersby on U. S. 311 will notice that someone cares as they pass our Sophia church and see the beautiful tulips blooming around the door to the educational section of the building.

Mrs. Carlton Scott reports that Lebanon church in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference voted unanimously April 16 to approve the constitution of the United Church of Christ.

Mrs. W. T. Scott, Sr., reviewed the mission study book "Turning World" for the junior high and senior groups at Oakland following a supper meeting April 16.

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, received 22 members Palm Sunday, and has several enrolled in a new membership class. The goal is 50 new members by the end of July.

Mrs. Robert Kimball of Burlington was the guest speaker for the family night supper and program sponsored by the Women's Fellowship at our Durham church April 28. A nursery was provided for the young children.

Bay View church, Norfolk, Virginia, where Dr. Charles Pegram is pastor, has been conducting a fund raising campaign in the form of a sale of bonds for the completion of their new church. $40,000 was needed and $41,900 worth of bonds were reported sold by the first of April! The Laymen's Fellowship has voted to paint the new church, thus effecting a saving of $1500.

"Church Family Night" will be observed at First, Burlington next Sunday. Following a picnic supper, M. Z. Rhodes will lead singing and Mrs. W. F. Randolph will lead the worship service.

Rev. Wilton Duckett of Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia, will conduct special services June 19-23 at Union Grove, near Asheboro. The pastor, Rev. B. J. Willett, is a graduate of Piedmont.

A family night supper for the entire church is being planned at First, Winchester, Virginia, for May 14. Services of this church May 21 and 28 will be broadcast over radio station WHPL. Rev. Mark Andes is the pastor.

Rev. and Mrs. Ralph Shrader, formerly American Board missionaries in China who now divide their time between Boston and Florida, worshipped in our Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, April 16. Mr. Shrader is Project Secretary of our Missions Council.

A recent service of worship at Mt. Zion, Mebane, N. C. included a litany based on the Ten Commandments, anthems by the youth and senior choirs, and the observance of Holy Communion. "Parish Comments" is the way announcements are listed on the bulletin by the pastor, Rev. Glenn Garrett.

The annual Easter sunrise service was held at Lebanon church, Semora, N. C., at seven o'clock, with the pastor, Rev. Lafayette T. Wilkins, in charge. Music was furnished by the youth and adult choirs. Henry Earp, Maynard Wells, Linwood Montgomery, Carroll Wells and E. M. Wells shared in the service. Coffee, juice and doughnuts were served at the close.

The present membership of Bayview, Norfolk, church is 423. Seven joined Easter Sunday.

Rev. Robert Kimball is conducting morning devotions over Radio Station WBBB at 9:00 each morning this week.

"Laconics" is the title given to the page of announcements on the Bay View bulletin. According to the dictionary, this means "expressing much in few words." Enough said!

At a recent business meeting, Shallow Well church, Sanford, voted to place its old records in the Church History Room at Elon College for safe-keeping.

How many churches have them? That is, fire extinguishers. A recent bulletin of Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, states: "Fire extinguishers have been installed throughout our church, thanks to a generous, thoughtful member."

Mrs. Paul Tedder announces plans for a church family night supper in the fellowship hall of Union Grove church May 5. A worship service will be followed by a short business session. Each family is asked to sit together.

The deacons of Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, have approved a "Phase Plan" for training leaders. This means that each year a different phase of the work of the church will be the central theme for training (e.g. missions, stewardship, social action, Christian education). They also approved a monthly plan of special emphasis for the year, which includes such things as "January — Annual Meeting, election and installation of officers; February — training of officers and teachers."

A Bible school will be held at Union Grove, Asheboro, beginning June 5 under the direction of the pastor, Rev. B. J. Willett. This school will be held from 5:30-8:00 p.m.

Mrs. Robert Knowles of Elon College was the guest speaker for the Women's Fellowship of First, Burlington, May 1. Her topic was "Christian Family Living."

Senior High P. F. of Burlington, First, had a retreat at Moonelon last week-end. Guests for the Saturday evening party were members of the Elon P. F. Chaperones were Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Rhodes and Mrs. W. F. Randolph.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Harold Eymann of Oakland, California, were commissioned missionaries of the American Board April 30 at Piedmont Community Church, Piedmont, California, where Dr. Eymann has been minister of Christian education for ten years. Their missionary work in the Philippines will climax more than 30 years in the ministry stretching from Berea, Kentucky, through Nevada, to California.

Two products of Shallow Well church, Sanford, N. C. have preached there recently—Charles Cecil Thomas and Jimmy Lewis Rosser. Rev. A. M. Campbell, new minister at Eutaw, Fayetteville, preached at Shallow Well April 30 as a part of the Southern Convention pulpit exchange, while the pastor, Rev. Max Vestal, preached in Chapel Hill.

An idea: "Don't forget to get your name tag!" was the admonition given to all the members of Billings (Montana) Mayflower Church in the weekly newsletter. Name tags were made for every member and placed on a big flannel board in the entrance of the hall at Rocky Mountain College where the Sunday services are held. "Seeing the names of other members helps each remember the other. Visitors can more easily remember the names of members they meet at the friendly coffee hour following the service."

Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell is in charge of a "School of Flower Arranging" May 15-19 for those interested in that in our Durham church.

Eutaw Community Church, Fayetteville, has twelve new members. A member of this church, Mrs. Mary Ellen Cox, is the new chairman of the Sanford district of the Women's Fellowship.

A former home demonstration agent and home economics teacher. Mrs. Lois Winegarner, of Thermopolis, Wyoming, has been appointed for a three-year term with the American Board. She will teach home economics at American Collegiate Institute, Izmir, Turkey.

The Junior Department of our Durham church school had perfect attendance April 16 when they went to visit the Sarah P. Duke Memorial Garden. Following a worship service in the garden, they went on a tour of it. This was planned to fit into this quarter's Pilgrim Series study, "God's Wonderful World." Mrs. Guy Alling, superintendent, Mrs. Clifton Walker and Mrs. Earl Ennis accompanied the group.

Dr. R. Norris Wilson, formerly a staff member of our Mission Council and more recently executive director of Church World Service, has been named to launch a new "paperback" publishing project for the Pilgrim Press. Dr. Truman B. Douglass has announced that Dr. Wilson will edit a series of books presenting "theological issues in non-theological language in a context relevant to life in the 1960's." It is intended that these will be used in the manner of the "Great Books" series, by small adult discussion groups in churches.

VORE TO BE SUPERINTENDENT

Dr. Duane N. Vore, graduate of Elon College and pastor of churches in the Southern Convention, who has recently served our church in Battle Creek, Michigan, has been selected by the conference trustees, subject to election by conference in May, to become superintendent of the Michigan Conference September 1, 1961. He thus joins Clyde Fields, J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., and Fred Register — all of whom graduated from Elon and all of whom are state superintendents of Congregational Christian churches.

At the parsonage for the Elon College Community Church, the foundation and pillars are laid and the sub-flooring is going down.

Seventy-five attended the "Family Night" for the community sponsored by our Holy Neck church, near Holland, Virginia. Following a covered dish meal, the youth fellowship presented the program.

Plans are already underway for the Greensboro Area Training School next January 14-17. Officers are: Dean — Rev. Thomas Madren (Hines Chapel); advisers to the dean, Mrs. Shirley King (First E. and R.) and Miss Dorothy Ballinger (First C. C.); business manager, Mrs. John Settlemyre (Mt. Hope E. and R.); secretary, Robert Pritchett (Apple's Chapel); treasurer, Rayborn Hinshaw (St. Peter's United Church of Christ). Miss Patricia Risdon, national children's worker for our denomination, will be on the faculty.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING WORKSHOP

The National Women's Fellowship is sponsoring the first leadership training workshop for the Province of the South at Franklinton Center, Bricks, N. C., May 5-7. Invited are conference and convention presidents and department chairmen of Congregational Christian Women's Fellowship groups from Florida to Virginia and from Alabama to Tennessee. "Fraternal delegates" from the Evangelical and Reformed Church will also be present.

Leaders include: Rev. Lillian S. Gregory, executive secretary; Miss Mildred Walker, administrative assistant; Mrs. R. W. Reneker, national president; Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, educational chairman. Five national department chairmen who will be in attendance are: Mrs. Elmo Niccum, spiritual life; Mrs. L. T. Schoen, stewardship; Mrs. C. F. McCall, Jr., Christian education; Mrs. Edward S. Treat, missionary education; and Mrs. R. R. Clendenen, friendly service. Mrs. A. D. Harry of West Point, Georgia, will lead the social action group.

Advance registrations indicate that 60 women will probably be in attendance. The Southern Convention Women's Fellowship will hold a meeting of its executive board preceding the workshop.

Executive Board Meeting

The executive board of the Southern Convention met in the beautiful new church at Elon College Thursday and Friday of last week. This was more than just another meeting. Far-reaching decisions were made.

The treasurer's report indicated that during the first quarter of this year the apportionment income for the Convention was less than half what was expected, and that only 61 out of 205 churches had made any contribution. The board decided that this is a temporary condition, that the other churches will contribute, and that the work must go on as scheduled. This judgment is based on faith in the churches.

Making our church program and fellowship inclusive of all the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed people in this area was faced frankly for the first time. Decisions were difficult, and of course could not please everyone.

Responsible leaders for Moonelon Camp have had to temporize when conferences that include both white and colored people were being considered, even though both groups are Congregational Christian only. Ministers of the area, white and colored, have met there for their Convocation for years, and have found the association profitable. Other groups, including the recent Vocations Conference, have met on an interracial basis, and, according to one of the young people who was there, found it to be "a rich blessing." A policy needed to be established, and the board voted that interracial groups of our own people can meet there when those involved are of college age and above. This eliminates the already planned Senior High meeting for this summer, and does not open the facilities to interracial groups other than our own.

Representatives of our Council on Cooperation which has been meeting for about four years with similar groups from the Southern Synod and the Convention of the South studying possible "first steps" in realignment on an area basis brought a request for a meeting of representatives from all the churches involved in North Carolina and Virginia soon after the United Church constitution becomes operative. This meeting is to be for a declaration of our unity and to get better acquainted. Both other groups had met previously and approved the plan for such a meeting. Our board approved, also.

Our board went one step further. It voted to look with favor on consultations between staff members of all three groups, and for a meeting of the executive bodies of all three. Before the United Church of Christ can really become operative in our area, such a meeting will be necessary.

A report indicated that slightly more than 100 churches have voted on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ. Of these five voted no and three abstained, the remainder wish to go forward with the merger.

Many other matters were considered by the board which is responsible for the Convention between sessions of the Convention itself, but these are the important decisions made before the editor had to get back to the printers so this paper could be completed. It would have pleased many if decisions could have been different, but it must be remembered that the people who made the decisions are members of our churches who have been elected to this responsible leadership, and they should be commended for their willingness to make "agonizing decisions" for the Church they love.

Remembering History

Next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock Congregational Christian people will stand around a small monument on Highway 10 near Surry, Virginia, and remember that day in 1794 when other people met at this same place in the Old Lebanon Meeting House and started the Christian Church. They will try to recall just why James O'Kelly, Rice Haggard, and some fifteen other ministers of the Methodist Church thought it wise to withdraw from Methodism under the leadership of Bishop Francis Asbury and establish a new kind of Church — the first new denomination in America.

The five cardinal principles of the new church will be recalled. (See them on the front page of this paper.) There will be a certain sense of pride in the remembering, for most of the people present will be members of that Church that had its origin at Old Lebanon, joined with the Congregational Churches in Seattle, Washington, in 1931, and is now sharing in a merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church — the first such merger in all Protestantism. They will recall that James O'Kelly was far ahead of his time in many things. He believed that democracy could work in the Church as well as in the State. He believed that the Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. He believed that Christian character should be the only test for fellowship and church membership. (He would have a "hot time" in our Convention now!) When it was not popular to do so, he declared that slavery is wrong. He believed that the Church should be the uniting influence in the world, and the Christian Church would fulfill its destiny by bringing all churches together.

Those who stand on the grass-plot by the highway Sunday afternoon will have important things to remember. Perhaps in the remembering they will find a new joy in being a member of the Christian, the Congregational, the Evangelical, the Reformed — the United Church of Christ. This is our hope.

* * * *

Pray for the leadership of the world in these very dangerous days. It could be your last time to pray. . . Officials of conference and convention Women's Fellowships of the southeast will meet at Bricks this week-end for study, planning, and inspiration. They will have national leadership. . . Mother's Day, Family Week, Pentecost, Children's Day, and Vacation Bible School plans should be well under way. Planning makes success possible. . . There may be some more people near you who would find your church a blessing. Invite them.

MARKED PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN EDUCATION

(First of two articles)

The marked progress in education in the South recently noted by certain foundations for financial assistance to educational institutions of higher learning is only another reminder of the renaissance that has been taking place in schools, colleges and universities in Southern States for several decades. With added new and improved buildings, larger and better qualified teaching staffs, Southern educational institutions rank among the best in the country.

Southern culture, as it was once academically known, is a sort of antebellum distinction between the classes that once populated the South. These were the aristocrats who owned large plantations and many slaves, and the land renters or tenants. But all that has "gone with the wind", to use the title of Margaret Mitchell's novel which depicted much of the South at that time.

Meantime, as the old order changed a leveling process went on which was fostered by public and private schools, colleges and universities. The process leveled up rather than down. For example, there are said to be more men of academic degrees in the South who are operating farms, factories, and other businesses, than in any other section of the country similar in size and with a comparable population.

Approximately 50 years ago such men as the late Josephus Daniels, editor, author, Secretary of the Navy, ambassador, and diplomat, also the late Edwin A. Alderman of the University of Virginia, Clarence Poe of the influential and nationally circulated Progressive Farmer, and other progressives began to preach the doctrine that the soil of the South needed the attention of college and university trained men. Dr. Hugh H. Bennett, a native of North Carolina, who died last year, went out to preach and apply that doctrine, not only in the South but in other sections of the United States, as well as in many parts of the world.

For more than a decade after the Civil War, the Southern people were so crushed by their misfortunes and harassed by political opportunists that they were forced to devote most of their energies to saving their civilization. During the latter years of the past century there was a forward movement, which was retarded to some extent during the first two decades of the present century and then pressed upward more rapidly than ever. Even the depression years of the 1930's did not check the movement to any telling degree.

During the last 30 years consolidated high schools have been constructed at an unprecedented rate. With a network of improved highways, hundreds of schools in rural districts have been combined and pupils living at distances too great to walk are transported in modern buses at public expense. One Southern State (North Carolina) operates the largest school bus fleet in the world — nearly 7,500 buses. Other Southern States have comparable school transportation facilities.

These consolidated high schools, together with those in towns and cities, are the suppliers of students to Southern colleges and universities. This is only one explanation why the South spends more on education than any other geographically comparable area in the United States.

The New Day

At length there dawns the glorious day

By prophets long foretold;
At length the chorus clearer grows
The shepherds heard of old.
The day of dawning Brotherhood
Breaks on our eager eyes,
And human hatreds flee before,
The radiant eastern skies.

For what are sundering strains of blood,

Or ancient caste and creed?
One claim unites all men in God
To serve each human need.
Then here together, brothermen,
We pledge the Lord anew
Our loyal love, our stalwart faith,
Our service strong and true.

One common faith unites us all,
We seek one common goal,
One tender comfort broods upon
The struggling human soul.
To this clear call of Brotherhood
Our hearts responsive ring;
We join the glorious new crusade
Of our great Lord and King.

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

As I look at April in retrospect, one of the things which interests me is that I attended somewhat comparable meetings for the three facets of the Women's Fellowship of the United Church of Christ in our area — the Georgia-South Carolina Conference of the Convention of the South, the Piedmont Regional of the Southern Synod, and the Women's Convention of the Southern Convention, in that order.

Many things about the three meetings were similar — they were well planned, they used the same themes, they studied the same books as background material, they had excellent worship services conducted by women of the group, they discussed the work of the same six departments, and they were concerned about increasing their giving for denominational outreach.

In one respect the Southern Convention meeting was superior — guest speakers there included Miss Frances Kaptizky and Dr. Ed Riggs, while the other two had Emily Lester!

It is interesting to note that the Convention of the South meeting was the only one using the denominational hymnal and the new Statement of Faith as an integral part of the program.

A significant part of the Evangelical and Reformed Piedmont Regional was the report by the Southern Synodical president, Mrs. A. D. Keppel, on the national meeting of such presidents in Cleveland in March.

The spirit of progress was in the air at all three meetings, accompanied by the inevitable possibility of changes. "Will we have separate meetings three years hence, or will we be meeting with women of the other groups?" was asked at the Piedmont Regional. Department chairmen were chosen for the first time for the Georgia-South Carolina Women's Fellowship. Southern Convention women were challenged by the idea of "The Year of Decision."

"It was good to have been there" could be said sincerely about all three sessions. I covet for each member of these groups an opportunity to share experiences with the others.

Uncertainty In Africa

Rev. and Mrs. Lawrence Henderson
Missao Evangelica do Bunjei
Galangue, via Nova Lisboa
Angola, Portuguese West Africa

March 9, 1961

Dear Friends:

This is our last day as house parents of the dormitory for missionary children in Dondi. The Canadian couple who has been taking care of the dormitory this year left unexpectedly. The parents are taking turns of a month each so that we will not have to close the dormitory until the end of the school year the first of June.

This year there are ten children in the dorm — two girls and eight boys. Our David, age 10 and in the fifth grade, is one of the Big Boys. The first few days the temptation was strong to at least smile when little freckle-faced Steve (9) objected against the order to go to bed at 7:30 saying "We Big Boys stay up till 8:30."

The house is well organized and has some very efficient help so the main job is looking after the kids. The cook has been here five years and in addition to being a good cook he is a diplomat, which is proved by the fact that he has worked for six different house mothers and they all speak well of him.

The missionary children's school which is next door has two teachers: an American and a Portuguese. In addition to the ten dorm kids there are eight other pupils who live with their families here in Dondi. The 18 students are scattered across all six primary grades. They follow a standard American curriculum plus Portuguese.

Kathie and Nancy were here in the dorm the first year it operated, 1954-1955. They look back upon that year as one of the happiest. This year they are together in a home for missionary children in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia. Kathie is preparing to take her Junior Cambridge Exam the end of November which corresponds to our high school graduation. Nancy is looking forward to the same exam a year later. We have been reading the Lovejoy's College Guide and have started some correspondence looking forward to Kathie's going to college in 1962. We'd be grateful for any suggestions you may have. Her special interest is writing and this would be backed up by the study of languages.

We're sorry to leave the dorm tomorrow. It has been fun being here with David and the other children. Yet we are also rather anxious to get back home. Mark shares these mixed feelings. He has enjoyed being here with the other children, but he also has chafed a bit at institutional life. This evening when he had to go to bed at the same time as the other "Little Boys" he asked, "Why does there have to be rules?". Being the only child at home gives him a freedom which one among eleven doesn't have.

The future of the dormitory is uncertain since we have no house parents in sight for the new school year in September. However in Africa 1961 we get used to facing an uncertain future. Although the general pattern of change is not too difficult to distinguish, it is impossible to foresee how this general pattern will work itself out in each local situation. You are very much aware of Africa through TV, radio, newspapers and books. We ask that as you watch the effects of the "winds of change," you do not forget to pray for the African church struggling to be faithful to Him who is the same yesterday, today and forever.

P. S. The American Board is making a special offer to all friends of missionaries who would like to use the Calendar of Prayer. This publication of the American Board and the Board of International Missions has a biographical sketch of all workers of the two Boards as well as information about each field. If you write to the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts and mention our name, they will send you a free copy of the Calendar of Prayer for 1960-1961.

The Rev. Miss Emilie Pitcock, a graduate of Schauffler College and Yale Divinity School, who has been serving churches in Maine, will begin work June 1 as Minister of Christian Education of the Southeast Convention. She succeeds another woman minister, the Rev. Annie Campbell, who has returned to the parish ministry.

DIFFICULTIES IN AIDING STARVING CHINESE EXPLAINED

An increasing concern among church people over reports that millions in mainland China are starving is shown in letters received by Church World Service, the relief agency of the National Council of Churches. At the request of its Board of Managers, Dr. Earle H. Ballou, CWS acting director of Overseas Program, has prepared a report explaining the situation.

"In answer to the many uncomfortable letters asking why something isn't being done," he said, "we have to say simply that, as things are, there is nothing we can do."

It is natural that with our overabundance of food, many feel that Americans should take the lead in sending U. S. surpluses to mainland China, Dr. Ballou said. They reaffirm that the presence of human need anywhere is a challenge to Christians to send help. And they quote, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him."

"However," Dr. Ballou explained, "not only do the laws of this country make it illegal to send food or anything else to China, but the Chinese Government does not want outside aid and will not accept it." He added that it would not be impossible to change our laws but that "the United States would probably be the last country from which help would be accepted."

Dr. Ballou cited a report that offers of help from the International Red Cross have been consistently turned down by the Peiping Government, which claimed it was "fully capable of overcoming temporary difficulties caused by natural calamities." In addition, the head of a Japanese goodwill and economic mission to Peiping reportedly was told that China "would never stoop to beg for food from the United States," Dr. Ballou added.

Records also show, he said, that while the Chinese are purchasing "enormous quantities" of wheat and flour from Australia and Canada, trainloads of foodstuffs continue to arrive from China in the British colony of Hong Kong, which is dependent on mainland China for most of its food. Some of these shipments, he said, are carried to other parts of S. E. Asia and sold, and some foodstuffs find their way back in 30-pound parcels which the Communist Chamber of Commerce permits to be sent from Hong Kong to friends and relatives.

PROGRAMS COVER ALL AREAS OF WORK AT AMELIA

By Mrs. Jack Penny

The Amelia Women's Fellowship feels we have had a good year thus far. The chairman of each of our six areas of work has been in charge of at least one program, all of which were good.

Our minister, Rev. Robert Bennett, helped with our social action program. He showed a film and also gave a good talk. We have had both mission study books reviewed — one of our members, Mrs. Howard Godwan, did one.

April 7 we invited the whole church to our family night. Our district superintendent and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Rex Powell, were also guests. After enjoying a picnic supper, Mr. Powell reviewed our other mission study book. He surely made us all want to read the book.

We have completed our friendly service project and also did a little home mission work — we gave blankets and pajamas to four shut-ins at Christmas. Along with the help of the Youth Fellowship we bought tile for four Sunday school rooms, baths, and halls. Thanks to the laymen for installing it for us.

April 13 the Raleigh-Henderson District Rally met with us for the first time. Our main speaker was Mrs. L. T. Schoen. Her message was wonderful. We had 116 present for a day we will never forget.

ASHEBORO DISTRICT MEETING

The Asheboro District Rally of the North Carolina Women's Fellowship was similar to the other rallies in the Southern Convention in that Mrs. Laurence Schoen of Wells, Minnesota, our National Stewardship chairman, was the guest speaker. It was similar to the others, too, in that the conference president (in this case, Mrs. J. R. Lackey) reported on the Mid-winter Meeting.

The district chairman, Mrs. S. H. Pell, who took office last fall upon the resignation of Mrs. Clyde Fields, presided with dispatch and ease over the group which included about 100 representatives from 16 churches. An offering of $41.20 was received for the prayer room at Elon College.

One feature of this rally was a panel composed of Mrs. Schoen, Mrs. Lester and six women representing the six areas of work who discussed Women's Fellowship activities.

Pews marked with the name of each church quickly showed how many were present from each group. Registration was by Pleasant Grove, ushers were from Seagrove, the opening worship was by Pleasant Ridge, and a hymn drama was presented by women of Antioch, Shiloh and Spoon's Chapel. Union Grove did a good job of entertaining in lieu of the "snowed out" invitation there last year.

MEALS FOR MILLIONS

The story of the "Loaves and Fishes" has a modern twist at Meals for Missions Foundation in Los Angeles. From this non-profit organization, more than 63 million "3¢ meals" of high-protein Multi-Purpose Food have been sent into 127 countries. Eighty per cent of these life-giving meals have been distributed by church-related agencies.

Popularly known as "MPF," this food was developed at the California Institute of Technology from soybean meal, fortified with minerals and vitamins. Each meal (2 oz.) provides proteins, minerals and vitamins comparable to those in a quarter pound of beef, a baked potato, a dish of peas and a glass of milk. MPF is used in famine and disaster areas from Alaska to Ceylon — eaten either alone as porridge, or more frequently combined with native dishes such as tortilla batter in Mexico, uppuma and curries in India, Pin Cha Duk in Korea, or Slap-it-again bread among the Navajos. Dr. Albert Schweitzer of Lambarene and the late Dr. Tom Dooley in Laos have both testified to its efficacy.

Meals for Missions also encourages food-deficit areas to produce their own MPF from domestic resources heretofore unused for human food. India, Brazil, Japan and Mexico are now producing their own MPF with the help of Meals for Millions. This People-to-People program has been made possible by the support of the American public and particularly of American churches.

Their slogan of "3¢ Buys a Meal" has endured through 15 years of rising prices. A Meals for Millions project offers a simple and rewarding way to express Christian concern. Almost anyone can afford to give a 3¢ meal to a hungry person. A dollar will provide 33 meals. Send your gift or write for information, free literature, exhibits, films, etc. to Meals for Millions Foundation, 215 W. 7th St., Los Angeles 14, California.

The Need To Be Identified

By Rev. Carl Wallace

Christian churches of the Southern Convention had their pure Christian label somewhat confused in 1931 when the merger of Congregationalists and Christians took place. Since then the awareness of two strains of ancestors has been confusing to those within the fold and frustrating to explain to outsiders.

Since 1949 when additional merger plans became known the mist about our identity has changed to a thick fog. Now as the United Church of Christ merger becomes imminent one begins to wonder how one can ever explain a four-fold background to outside Southerners so accustomed to definite denominational brands.

Does the answer not rest with a forward look rather than with a backward glance? Has the time not come for us to rally around the definiteness of the United Church of Christ as our church and our symbol? Should we not accomplish the finalizing of the merger as quickly as possible and then begin to let the influence of this new, greater witness be felt in this area?

We have a definiteness in the symbol of the new United Church of Christ. Together the constituent groups will offer resources and breadth of understanding heretofore lacking. Together we will be able to begin an extensive program of expansion, carefully wrought out by far-seeing leaders. Together we will be energized to face greater challenges and offer greater opportunities to the unchurched because we will carry with us the feeling of rightness revealed by Christ Jesus, our Lord. We have an identity now. Let us promote it and acquire the much-needed sense of belonging to a definite structure that is futuristic.

Change Taking Place In Rhodesia

A LETTER TO FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

Boston, Mass. — "The change now taking place in Southern Rhodesia, Africa, can be a peaceful one" says a distinguished missionary-educator.

George Copeland Grant, field secretary for Southern Rhodesia of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, reported recently to the executives of the Board in Boston.

"As long as people are prepared to talk with, and not shout at, each other, there are grounds for a peaceful settlement of their problems. It is significant to me that the Southern Rhodesia government has been talking with African political leaders in a way that was not noticeable before. And they have managed to come to a compromise agreement which demanded give-and-take on both sides."

"One of the most impressive changes," said Mr. Grant, "has been in the educational field where for a long time there were two scales of pay, one for Europeans and one for Africans. Today all teachers in Southern Rhodesia are being paid according to their academic and professional qualifications, and these are the only qualifications that matter."

In addition to his work as American Board field secretary, Mr. Grant serves as general secretary of the Southern Rhodesia Christian Conference. With his wife, the former Ida Madeline Russell, daughter of the late Sir A. Fraser Russell, Chief Justice of Southern Rhodesia, Mr. Grant was organizing secretary of the first All Africa Church Conference in 1957.

"Missionaries serving in Africa and other troubled areas of the world must occasionally ask themselves, 'Should we get out — or stay?'" Mr. Grant said. "After facing one baffling situation after another, they could hardly avoid such a question. There is, of course, but one possible answer: 'The good shepherd layeth down his life for his friends.'"

"Another question confronting those serving in Africa today," said Mr. Grant, "is whether we should ask others to join us. The answer is an emphatic 'Yes' — provided we make it very clear that they are coming to a situation very difficult."

"More missionaries are needed to help the Africans meet their increasing problems intelligently," said Mr. Grant, adding that "there is much to be done, for the Church, for education, for medical work; but those who want to come out and help must understand that they will not necessarily serve as leaders over others. More likely they will serve as leaders alongside of, if not under, African leaders."

Mr. Grant was born in Trinidad, British West Indies, taught in Trinidad and Grenada and, for a time while serving as principal in Zanzibar, was the Zanzibar director of education. He received his A. B. and M. A. from Cambridge University, England, and also studied at the Universities of London and Yale.

The Grants have two children, George Russell Grant who is with the Welfare Department of the Imperial Government, Ontario, Canada; and Florence, assistant librarian of the Toronto University Law School, Toronto, Canada.

Letters to the American Friends Service Committee are very similar to those received by our Service Committees. Here is a recent letter.

From Tunisia — Blankets are still greatly needed and do wear out, especially as many were not new to begin with. They are wrapped around one in the daytime and slept in on the ground or on straw at night. Inside the unheated hotel at Sbeitle I slept under four blankets and kept on my underwear and a sweater as well as a warm outing flannel nightgown. It is cold here. One blanket to two people, even with the worn remnants of the year before, is quite inadequate. I hope that along with other warm clothing for next winter blankets will have a high priority with AFSC.

THE SOUTH AFRICA MISSION

May

7—The South Africa Mission was started in 1835 to evangelize a primitive people. Now it works in great cities, on highly modern farms, and in primitive tribal areas. Racial tensions have made work increasingly important. Most of the schools have been taken over by the government. The African Christian's position here is difficult.

Durban

Port of Natal. Leading industrial and manufacturing center and holiday resort with population of half a million.

- 8—Rev. and Mrs. Robert Bergfalk work with pastors and do general evangelistic work. They have served at Adams Technological School.
- 9—Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Christoferson have served in South Africa for 45 years, working with African pastors and churches. After years of rural work, he lives in city and works with 15 churches there and 41 branches in surrounding county. He is mission treasurer.
- 10—Dr. and Mrs. Howard Christofersen (he is son of above missionaries) went in 1953 to join staff of McCord Zulu Hospital; he is doctor, she is nurse.
- 11—Dr. Aldyth Laxbrey was born and raised in South Africa. She is assistant medical superintendent of McCord Zulu Hospital. She visited U. S. in 1955.
- 12—Dr. and Mrs. Frank Magill went to McCord Zulu Hospital in 1958. His special concern is malnourished babies.
- 13—Rev. and Mrs. Richard Sales are on first mission assignment advising churches on South Coast of Natal in rural area about 50 miles south of Durban. One big job is building of churches, as former mission schools in this area are now property of the government.

New Minister At First, Portsmouth

The Rev. Daniel A. Bowers has accepted the call of First Congregational Christian Church of Portsmouth to become its pastor early in June. Mr. Bowers has served the Bethlehem C. C. church near Disputanta for the past 1½ years. Under his leadership a new $20,000.00 educational building has been erected and paid for.

For the past two years Mr. Bowers served as Executive Director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations in Richmond. He has resigned from this post effective in June.

He is a native of Toccoa, Georgia, and received his education in Toccoa Falls Schools, Toccoa Falls College, Tusculum College, Greenville, Tenn., Columbia Seminary and Vanderbilt University. He holds the B.A. degree in Christian Education, the B. A. degree in Sociology and Psychology and the B. D. degree in Theology. He has served pastorates in South Carolina, Florida and Tennessee. He is a former Rotarian, former member of the state Board for Mental Health, former Kiwanian. He is a Mason, member of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials and has contributed many articles in this field. He is married to the former Ruth Anne Styles. They have two sons.

SPRING REVIVAL AND EASTER PAGEANT AT APPLE'S CHAPEL

By Mrs. E. H. Thompson

The annual pre-Easter revival was held at Apple's Chapel March 19-24. Rev. Charles Bell of Bethlehem Church was the visiting preacher. Mr. Bell is a good preacher and his sermons were well received. He preached from the practical standpoint of living and made people see themselves in the light of Jesus' teachings. The church was truly revived. Six new members were added as a result of the meeting. The attendance was good throughout the week, with several visitors coming from other churches.

The annual Easter Sunrise Service was held at 5:30. In spite of the cool morning a large crowd attended the outdoor service. The program consisted of music, spoken word and action. After the program the ladies of the church served breakfast. It was estimated that more than three hundred were in attendance for the service and breakfast was served to two hundred.

Mrs. Mary Brown, Robert Pritchett, and Rev. Bland Leebrick were directors of the program. For the seventh consecutive year Lloyd Chrismon was narrator. Mrs. Norman Brooks was director of music.

FIRST FELLOWSHIP SUPPER AT LEBANON

By Mrs. Carlton Scott

The Women's Fellowship of Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C., sponsored a fellowship supper April 15 at the community house. The supper was quite a success, with close to 100 present. The proceeds, which amounted to $127.59, went toward our building fund.

Our pastor, Rev. Lafayette Wilkins, was in charge of recreation. He presented Miss Martha Brittle, who led the group in singing. Following this a sketch entitled "The Lighthouse Keeper's Daughter" was presented by Miss Brittle, Miss Betty Consfelt, Miss Connie Blake and Mr. John Fleming from Elon College. The program closed with Miss Connie Blake singing "Never Walk Alone."

This is the first time that a fellowship supper has been held in the community and we appreciate the cooperation of everyone in making it a success.

BLUE RIDGE ASSEMBLY

"The Christian Family and Rapid Social Change" will be the subject of one of the courses at The Sixth Ecumenical Institute to be held at Blue Ridge Assembly, June 11 to 16, 1961.

Leaders of women's work, men's work, youth and adult work in both education and social action will profit from this session.

The new movie, "Buyer's Choice," will be shown at the Institute and other new resources will be introduced.

The dates: June 11 to 16.

The place: Blue Ridge Assembly, Black Mountain, N. C.

The cost: $6.00 registration fee (before June 1); $35.00 board and room (or higher according to accommodations); $1.50 service fee per adult.

Further Information: Rev. J. E. Lantz, Southern Office, N.C.C., 63 Auburn Ave., N. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia.

The new minister of our United Church, Raleigh, writes in the church newsletter that he has been experimenting with different orders of worship for the Sunday morning service. Out of this, and after consultation with the deacons, has evolved an order of worship which he believes is theologically valid, meets the needs of worshipping people, and is consistent with our heritage and tradition. A copy of the new order of worship was sent to each member, asking each to study it before the next Sunday when it would be explained in the sermon.

"It is in line with the Reformed, free-church tradition, as opposed to the Anglican or Lutheran, or the revivalistic tradition so dominant in the South," says Rev. Collins Kilborn.

Rev. J. Frank Apple reports that Mt. Auburn and Fuller's Chapel churches in the Eastern North Carolina Conference approved the constitution of the United Church of Christ with no dissenting votes.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

"We are united in the purpose . . .

"To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will.

"To witness to the message and the mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

"To cooperate with all who seek to extend the Christian fellowship."

APPRECIATION EXPRESSED TO WOMEN

Hubie Young, vice-president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, recently addressed the Southern Convention Women's Fellowship at the Suffolk Church. He extended greetings on behalf of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship and expressed the appreciation of the many young people to whom the Women's Fellowship gives assistance.

An excerpt from his address follows:

"It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I also extend to you the thanks and appreciation of the young people with whom you occupy such a vital role. Since I began work in the Pilgrim Fellowship movement, I have been constantly amazed by the amount of time and energy which the Women's Fellowship has given to the young people. In addition to working with the young people in their own respective churches, the women of the Southern Convention provide leadership and guidance to the youth officers at both the conference and convention levels. Also, your spiritual and financial assistance has been vital in the maintenance of the Moonelon Camp program. The women throughout the Convention have given to Moonelon kitchen equipment, drapes, mattress covers, and numerous other gifts which contribute to good camp life. Therefore, I thank you — for your work with the young people in your local churches, for your assistance in the Pilgrim Fellowship structure at both the conference and convention levels, and for your assistance at Moonelon."

The Winchester P. F. group is going into the "car wash" business May 6 and 13, doing the work at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Vincent.

CARAVAN VISITS P. F.'S

By Sandra Privott, Reporter

A caravan consisting of several officers of the Eastern Virginia Conference Pilgrim Fellowship visited the Pilgrim Fellowships of Liberty Spring and Cypress Chapel in a joint meeting April 10. Those officers attending were Loren Waldo, vice-president; Sammy Barnes, treasurer; Sandra Privott, recording secretary; Louise Harrell, Action Commission chairman; Wayne Blythe, member-at-large; and Mrs. E. C. Wilkins, advisor.

The meeting began with fun songs which were followed by Loren Waldo who expressed the appreciation of being invited. He also gave information concerning the camps at Moonelon this summer. Devotions were conducted by Louise Harrell. Sammy Barnes gave a talk concerning the work of the Pilgrim Fellowship. After refreshments were served, the meeting was closed with a friendship circle which was led by Sammy Barnes. Rev. Raymond Phelts gave the benediction.

The annual sunrise service sponsored by the Pilgrim Fellowships of the Liberty Spring and Cypress Chapel churches was held Easter morning at 6:30 a.m. in the sanctuary of Cypress Chapel.

Fred Allen Bunch, president of the Cypress Chapel senior high group, was the leader. Sandra Privott, organist, accompanied Patsy Knight, Sandra Brinkley, Betty Jo Brinkley, and Judith Brinkley in singing "In the Garden." Hazel Bradshaw conducted the meditation. The scripture was read by Peggy Harrell, and Jackie Holloman led in prayer. Others taking part in the service were Kay Savage, Joel Harrell III, Shirley Byrd, Frankie Case, and Kenneth Babb.

Doughnuts and coffee were served after the service.

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP OFFICERS

The following officers were nominated and elected to serve in the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Conference during the next year. These officers will be installed at a June rally.

President — Hubie Young; Vice-president, Loren Waldo; Recording Secretary, Sue Dennis; Corresponding Secretary, Louise Harrell; Treasurer, Sammy Barnes; Faith Commission Chairman, Sandra Privott; Action Commission Chairman, Barbara Smith; Fellowship Commission Chairman, Alex Oliver; Pianist — Lloyd Earl Duck; Members-At-Large, Danny Chapman, Constance Trueblood, Bobby Tomlinson, Wayne Blythe; Advisors, Mrs. E. C. Wilkins, Rev. Julius Rice, Rev. Harold Tribble.

In addition to the above elected officers, several committees have been appointed by the president-elect.

An idea: The Congregational Church of Christ, Tryon, N. C. recently asked in its bulletin, "Would you like to have your own copy of the Pilgrim Hymnal for use in your home? When we order 25 or more, the price is just $2.00. We now have orders for 12 and will hold the order for two weeks, in case others wish to order a copy." Much better than simply taking one home from church and keeping it!

New officers of the Hank's Chapel P. F. are: Raeford Bland, president; Larry Farrell, vice president; Beverly Bland, secretary; Tami Hultman, treasurer. Mrs. I. W. Bland is the counselor.

In April the District Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs from Alamance, Caswell and Person Counties met in our Union Ridge church.

The Best

The following was sent in by Dickie Boushell, taken from the bulletin of a Chapel service he attended:

- The best day — Today.

Patience

By Mrs. Roscoe Graves

(President of Kansas Women's Fellowship, who has been ill recently.)

A certain lady was stricken with a serious illness on a day when she had every minute of the day and half of the night planned. She also had plans for many of the days that were to follow. When the heart specialist told her just what the trouble was and that she would have to lie in bed for at least twenty-one days, she closed her eyes and felt that the bottom had fallen out of everything for her.

She had no fear or apprehensions, her only thoughts were of the work that was to be done. What could she do about it? Nothing. She felt that God had his arms around her and that if she gave herself completely to the healing process, everything would work out eventually. Later she asked her doctor how long she would have to stay in the hospital. "Oh, only one day at a time," he said.

She learned that we all need patience; patience with ourselves and with others; with those who love us and those who love us not; against sudden inroads of trouble and under daily burdens; in the weariness of the body or in the wearing of the soul; in our own failure of duty; in everyday wants; in disappointments; in bereavement; in heaviness of the heart; and in sickness amid delayed hopes.

When she was able, she went to her concordance and found that there are more Bible passages listed on patience than on kindness. This then must be a very important trait for Christians to possess. When we stop to think about it, isn't patience a rare virtue? Many persons whom we know to be honest, zealous, kind, truly sincere Christians, fall short on this score.

Sometimes we feel lack of patience with other people because we have high ideals and we can not see why others do not measure up to what we think is right — our neighbors, friends, fellow church members, the young people we know. Then we should think how patient God is with this old world. He has tried through the centuries to train the human race in right ways of living, and yet, how far below standard we humans are. How patient He is with each of us. There is not one who has not many times disappointed Him.

As workers in the fellowship, it takes patience to labor on when we do not see results. When, in spite of our efforts, there seems lack of interest or response and there is evidence that those with whom we are working have ideals and habits different from those we have. We need to remember that we are planting seed; nothing we do for others in the name of Christ is ever lost.

The phrase, "Teach me the patience of unanswered prayer," is in one of our songs. Yes, we need this. We are inclined, when we ask God for something, to look for the answer today or at least tomorrow. But we often must wait.

How can we attain the virtue of patience? Paul says:

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self control; against such there is no law." Galatians 5:22-23.

These are the fruits of His indwelling Spirit, promised to us by Jesus himself. If we open our hearts in faith and self-surrender, His spirit enters and purifies our lives.

SOME RULES FOR HYMN SINGING

By Charles Wesley

1. Sing all. See that you join with the congregation as frequently as you can. Let not a slight degree of weariness or weakness hinder you.

2. Sing lustily and with good courage. Beware of singing as if you were half-dead or half-asleep; but lift up your voice with strength.

3. Sing modestly. Do not bawl, so as to be heard above or distinct from the rest of the congregation, that you may not destroy the harmony; but strive to unite your voices together, so as to make one clear melodious sound.

4. Sing in time. Whatever time is sung, be sure to keep with it. Do not run before, or stay behind.

5. Above all, sing spiritually. Have an eye to God in every word you sing. Aim at pleasing him more than yourself or any other creature.

A Layman's View

By W. H. Bradshaw, Rosemont, South Norfolk, Virginia

What I shall say here bears no reflection on any minister. Sitting in the pew Sunday after Sunday, year in and year out, I have seen and heard many different ministers, and they are doing a marvelous job. But any job anyone does can be improved upon. None of us really ever attain perfection.

Let's consider some things I think would add much to our worship services. My opinion doesn't necessarily reflect the opinion of the whole membership of any church, but it could be in the majority. I think acknowledging visitors is of great importance — not in a casual way by saying, "We welcome all visitors in our service today. Come again." That is nice, but I think a minister should put some action in it by having them raise their hands, better yet have them stand. That means something to strangers; it does to me and I don't think I am so different in that respect from others. Say what you please, people go for special recognition. This reminds me of an incident a few years back. My wife and I were in Florida. We visited a church of our own denomination in a certain city. We were a little early and the minister happened to be at the entrance as we entered. He shook our hands, and seeing we were visitors he naturally inquired where we were from, what church and denomination, and our minister's name. He had all the data and we felt we would get some kind of recognition, since we were so far from home. Well, he didn't even mention visitors, and so far as we knew no one but the minister ever knew who we were or where we were from. We left feeling very unimportant. The next Sunday we visited another church of a different denomination and "got the works." Does catering to visitors mean anything? I will leave that to you readers.

Another asset, I think, is gesturing while speaking, using the hands, occasionally stepping out from behind the pulpit, raising and lowering the voice. These are all little things that require no special skill, as I see it, yet to me they mean so much, like the song, "Little things that mean so much." I guess our ministers have more or less a certain pattern they follow, so if they never hear from the people as to their likes and dislikes they never know. I am sure all ministers aim to please their congregations, so long as they aren't expected to deflect from gospel preaching. Not too much deviation from the teaching of the Word of God is what "we the people" need. Preach the word, and let the chips fall where they may. Some of our ministers tune their voices too low, some are very distinct and make sure they are heard by everyone in the church. I don't know if it is a strain to the low speakers or not to speak up and be heard. I have at various times heard people say of some ministers, "I can't get much out of his services, because he speaks too low." I am sure if these pastors knew the score, they would make it a point to be heard. No one gets much out of a sermon if he only hears and understands a word now and then.

Another great asset is a singing pastor, one who leads his flock in the beautiful hymns of the church. I know everyone doesn't have that wonderful gift, but any church fortunate enough to have such is surely blest. If the pastor sings out and leads, the people will surely respond. It means something to hear the minister's voice above the congregation. There is an added touch in this kind of service that appeals to almost everyone, especially those who love good singing.

Our present pastor, Rev. Carroll Lewis, is one of our singing preachers. If you can sing at all you can follow him as he leads the congregation.

If I may, I would like to get in a "plug" for our new pastor, Rev. Carroll Lewis. We have waited a long time, patiently, for him to come to us. He has been here since the first of March and we are more than pleased with him and his charming wife and two daughters. We are sure he is a "Godsend" and with him at the helm we have much to look forward to. This is a new field to him; he has come into a group of strangers, but

Developing Spiritual Skills

By Rev. Frank Hamilton

The service a member renders in a church's mission is in direct proportion to his or her cultivation of the devotional life. The great, the strong and the courageous in the history of the church have been those whose lives were filled with a deep personal devotion to their Lord, and to the instrument of his grace, the church. Could it not be that the apathy of many "church people" is due to their neglect of the life of the spirit? They are disinterested, unconcerned, careless about their church obligations because they have not been developing the spiritual skills that contribute to moral achievement.

How often we hear it said, "I can't do that," or "I'm not qualified for such work" when one is asked to assume a responsibility in the ongoing of the church. They are of the opinion that some are born with greater ability to apprehend God, and to serve His cause. Actually, just about any one of us could do what we are asked to do in the life of our church, if we wanted to do it, if we were sufficiently committed to the task. We are ignorant of religious truths, spiritual concerns, the history and needs of the church, because we have never really tried to cultivate the spiritual skills of discipleship. Evelyn Underhill says in her Mixed Pastures, "Those who achieve for God do not possess abnormal faculties, but they arrive because of the completeness of their dedication to the overruling Spirit, and the consequent transformation of personality." Expertness in prayer comes to those who pray, in music to those who sing, in knowledge of the Scriptures to those who read and study the Bible. One of the best ways to become a fine teacher in the Church School is to teach.

Dedication to the devotional life and a commitment to our Lord are the basic requirements for real discipleship. When these are present, they are evident in every aspect of the church's life. Here is a real challenge for you, after Easter! Start to cultivate the life of the spirit; start to seek the sources of spiritual power, and make them manifest in doing more than your share of the work-load!

Discipline In The Home

Background Scripture: Proverbs 4:1-4; 10:1; 13:24; 20:11; 22:6; 29:17;

Ephesians 6:1-4.

Devotional Reading: Colossians 3:17-25.

Discipline in the home! What a timely topic! That seems to be the one thing that is lacking in so many modern homes — a lack of discipline. And because of it, children themselves, their parents, and society in general suffer and pay a heavy price. As I think of this matter, I am reminded of a brief article which I read recently in The Christian Century. Five boys, or teenagers, inmates of a Reform School in Iowa, were asked what they would do if they ever became parents to try to make sure that their children would not suffer their fate. Out of their stern experiences with the law, they listed the following program: Religious Training, Proper Education, Wholesome Companionship in the Home, Discipline, and Respect for Property, Law and Parental Authority. Take another look at these things. Note especially the emphasis upon Discipline, and Respect for Parental Authority. And even more the emphasis upon Religious Training. These young people were warning us that if we continue to set our children adrift upon the wild seas of our time without rigorous training, without compass or star, we can expect increasing human wreckage.

There came to my mind, too, an article in a recent issue of The Ladies Home Journal, entitled "I Reared a Criminal." It was a sobering, sorrowful, terrible and tragic story by a mother whose son was then serving a second and long-term in the penitentiary. The son, "Lenny," had never had any discipline — the father was too busy making money, and the mother was too soft and indulgent, and he had run wild. He wrecked his own life, the life of his young wife, his father's business, the fortunes of both mother and father, and became a menace to society at large, according to his mother's testimony, because they had never "crossed him" or disciplined. To be sure this is an exceptionally tragic case, but tragedy in more or less measure is involved in a lack of "Discipline In The Home."

Our Thanks To Parents Who Disciplined Us

The opening verses of today's lesson are the testimony of a man who, as he looked back, thanked God that he had parents who taught and disciplined him. "He taught me also and said unto me, Let thine heart retain my words, keep my commandments and live." The thing is all the more remarkable, because he was an only son, or child. How difficult it is to keep from spoiling an only child! When we were young we probably did not like discipline — young folks then were not much different from young folks today. But now that we are old or older, we look back, and we thank God that our parents loved us enough to discipline us, and cared enough to teach us the "good doctrine." More than once I have thanked God that I had a father and a mother who exercised discipline in the home. And all the more so because it was discipline based on love. The irony of the matter of discipline is that those who receive it early in life will thank God for it later in life and honor their parents for it, while those who failed to receive it in youth, will realize how unfair their parents were in not administering it when they were young, now that they are older, and often in trouble.

"I Love Him So Much I Can't Bear To Punish Him."

Have you heard some doting and indulgent and weak parent say that, or something like that? The writer of Proverbs has something to say to such parents. "He that spareth his rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." Indulgence is a curse; discipline is a blessing. A parent who fails or refuses to discipline a child does not really love the child. Love desires the highest and best for the one loved. And love at its best has a place for discipline at its best. disobedient child is a headache to himself, a heartache to his parents, and a darn nuisance to everybody else, including school teachers, and everybody else who has to deal or live with him. The fact is that there are perhaps more delinquent parents than there are delinquent young people. "Correct thy son, and he will give thee rest; yea he shall give delight unto thy soul." "A wise son maketh a glad father; but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother." And of his father, too, for that matter.

The Police As Well As Proverbs Has Something To Say On This Point

The Police Department of Houston Texas has issued a pamphlet giving rules for rearing delinquent children. A satirical gem it is worth sharing. (Only parts will be quoted for lack of space.)

"Begin with infancy to give the child everything he wants. Thus he will grow up to believe the world owes him a living.

"When he uses bad words, laugh at him. Then he will think it's cute.

"Never give him any spiritual training. Wait until he is twenty one and then let him decide for himself.

"Avoid the use of the word 'wrong.' It may give him a 'guilt complex.' If later he runs afoul of the law, he will think that 'society is against him, and that he is being persecuted.

"Pick up everything he leaves lying around — books, shoes, clothes. This will train him to throw responsibility on others.

"Quarrel frequently in the presence of children. Then they will not be too shocked when later the home is broken up.

"Give a child all the spending money he wants. Never let him earn any money of his own. Why should he have things as tough as you had them! !

"Satisfy his every craving for food, drink and comforts. See that every sensual desire is gratified. Denial may lead to harmful frustration.

"Take his part against neighbors, teachers, policemen. They are all prejudiced against your child.

"When he gets into real trouble, apologize for yourself by saying 'I could never do anything with him.'

"Prepare for a life of grief. You will likely have it."

Busy Days At Home

Dear Friends:

It hardly seems possible that within a month the public school will be closing and vacation time will be here again for our boys and girls. We hope that relatives, friends and sponsors who would like to have their children for a visit this summer will let us know early in order that we may arrange the vacation schedule as soon as possible. Perhaps some groups would like to send a boy or girl to camp at Moonelon for a week. The cost is $20.00 for the week and registrations should be sent in right away. If you would like to sponsor a child's week at camp please let us know. Many of our boys and girls have regular places that they visit each summer — some do not. Will you please help us to see that each child here has a pleasant vacation this year.

As we near the end of the school year it seems that things are more and more busy. Last Wednesday, April 19, our Elementary School here at Elon observed "Play Day." This was the spring festival with the various grades participating in folk games, rhythm dances, etc. A number of our children took part in the activities and we were proud to see them performing their assigned parts.

On May 12, the annual Junior-Senior Prom will be held. We have four students in the Junior Class this year: Frances Coggins, Ann Rich, James Crumpler and Sidney Johnson. Of course, our four seniors will be taking part in this activity also.

It is customary for various grades to have class picnics or outings as the close of school approaches. Since we have children in every grade in the public school and in almost every class, we are involved in all the activities which go on in both the elementary and high schools. So, you can see, this is a particularly busy time of the year for us all.

At this time we are also actively engaged in selecting the final touches for the new cottages. The plastering is being completed now and members of the building committee have been giving much consideration to the selection of paint colors and floor coverings. This is quite a task and takes considerable study and work on the part of a number of people. Work is progressing very well on the cottages and it is encouraging and exciting to look forward to being in them in a short time.

Birthdays for the month of May are:

- Mike Wise 5- 5-45
- Joan McFatter 5- 6-46
- Bobby Burgess 5-22-41

Each month we have a birthday supper honoring the boys and girls and staff members with birthdays during that month. A neighbor bakes a beautiful, especially decorated cake for the occasion and we have an "extra special" supper. "Best wishes and many happy returns" to the May birthday girl and boys.

Patricia Bolton, an eight year old girl who has been with us only about two months, is a patient in Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill where she has been for more than a week with an undiagnosed hip trouble. Cards and letters will help her to know that there are those who care. She is in room 527.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

"Just As The Twig Is Bent The Tree's Inclined"

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." There are exceptions of course. But the general rule holds true. The time to start training a child is when he is young, and one cannot start too young. Psychologists and child specialists are discovering more and more the supreme importance of the early years of childhood. The first years — some say the first six years are largely determinative. You parents of young children had better start now to give your children a wholesome home life, religious training, discipline, respect for parents and law and authority and property. Now is the accepted time. A dear old lady who raised seven fine sons without a "black sheep" among them was asked how she did it. She replied "With prayer and hickory." Wisdom is needed in administering discipline. It must be administered in love. The home should be a democracy and not a dictatorship. But parents should establish respect for authority. And believe it or not, deep down in their hearts young people want discipline. It really gives them a sense of security.

Loyalty Of The Clergy

"The impression among many Americans that the Protestant denominations, in particular, have been subjected to alarming infiltration and influence by Communists" has been called "a patent falsehood" by Chief Inspector William C. Sullivan of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The FBI official recently addressed some 1,000 clergymen at a meeting sponsored by the U. S. Citizens' Committee of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Declaring that the Communist Party in the U. S. has not achieved "any substantial success in exerting domination or influence over America's clergymen or religious institutions on a national level," Mr. Sullivan said: "There can be no question as to the loyalty of the overwhelming majority of the American clergy to the nation and the fact that they have been among the most consistent and vigorous opponents of communism."

"America is greatly indebted to its clergy," he continued, "for the outstanding leadership and service it has always exhibited."

For tactical reasons, the Communists have included American religious leaders among their targets, Mr. Sullivan said, and have been quick to capitalize on statements that happen to coincide with the Communist Party line. "They have been especially alert," he pointed out, "in exploiting utterances on such popular issues as peace, civil liberties and racial discrimination."

Stating that "some well-meaning, intelligent and patriotic people of distinction, including clergymen," have been duped "in their laudable desire to champion legitimate reforms," Mr. Sullivan told the ministers:

"In the struggle that is now raging between communism and the free world, our survival will depend on the strength, determination and idealism engendered by our Judeo-Christian faith."

Religion Should Be Used Every Day

By H. N. Wellons

Member of First Christian Church
Burlington, North Carolina

Religion is something that most of us have on Sunday, but which many of us leave at home when we go to work Monday. Many carry their work to church but far too few carry religion to work. Our religion isn't something to be used just on special occasions such as we'd use a Sunday suit, but something we should carry with us everyday as we would a good watch.

We should have full confidence in our religion and use it for the betterment of our life as well as for the benefit of those with whom we come in contact daily.

A good watch, to keep accurate time and keep its owner's confidence, must be wound daily, must be taken care of, and occasionally must be taken to the watch maker for cleaning or needed repairs. Our religion too must be wound daily. By offering our daily prayers we tend to accomplish this.

We go to church at regular intervals to give our religion the proper care, and at particularly weak moments, when our faith seems to be slipping, we renew our faith by rededicating our lives to God.

True faith itself is a continuous thing. A person doesn't have it today, get rid of it tomorrow, and pick it up again the next day. To be truly religious, a person must have faith and have it continuously, and to have it continuously means having it in our everyday life as well as on the Sabbath. Faith and religion are so closely entwined that it is impossible to have one without the other.

Therefore, it stands to reason, if we will increase our faith we will increase our religion and in increasing our religion we will be making it a more continuous thing, carrying it into our everyday life.

In carrying religion into our everyday lives, we will live a fuller, more satisfying life and serve our Father through our service to our fellow men.

A MOURNER'S NEED

A mourner's needs are too deep to be slighted or to be ignored.

What are some of the needs of a bereaved person? Their first need is for support from others. If one who has suffered loss is found in stunned silence, respect his silence. If he is sobbing, don't try to stop it. If he wants to talk, lend a sympathetic ear. "Something big has happened which he can't bear alone so he turns to others for support and for help.

A second need is to understand and feel the loss as a real and true fact. Intellectual acknowledgement of a fact and the emotional acceptance of it are quite different matters. Arriving at emotional acceptance may take weeks. Verbalization will speed the process. Only a responsive and concerned listener will be able to help at this point.

A third need is to express sorrow — express the intense pain of grief through weeping and talking it out. Other deep feelings which often accompany the grief experience, such as hostility and guilt, need to be put into words.

A fourth need is for new relationships. They will not replace the ones they had with the deceased but, in a sense, they will compensate for their loss. Human relationships are the very substance of which life is formed. They make people what they are.

A LAYMAN'S VIEW

not for long, for he and his family are easy to know, and that eases the situation. I am sure he will make for us a great pastor, as well as a beloved citizen in our community. A man of his caliber will become known far and wide. I think our entire membership will go along with me regarding my "plug" for our new pastor and his family. We are hopeful that they will be with us for many moons to come.

Again, what I have said here regarding "A Layman's Viewpoint" is no reflection on anyone. It is just an idea of mine as I have seen and heard many ministers through the years and had ideas on how church services could be improved without too much effort on anyone's part. Just a thought with the best of intentions.

ABC Stores - - A Christian Viewpoint

By Max Vestal

First of all, let me stress the fact that I do not seek to impose my views upon you. I trust that those of you who are eligible to vote, will do so according to your own Christian convictions. I do hope to call to your attention some of the issues you need to take into consideration in reaching your decision. I also realize that many of you will not have the privilege of voting on this issue, although it is one of vital concern for all the people of Lee County and surrounding areas. You may, however, make your decisions known to those who do reside in Sanford.

I must confess that I am prejudiced against the use of alcoholic beverages — prejudiced because I have sat beside the bed of a paralyzed youth, crippled for life while driving drunk — prejudiced because I have been called into homes broken by alcohol, in an attempt to help save something of what alcohol has cheated them out of — prejudiced because I've seen promising lives wasted and sometimes brought to shame — prejudiced because it endangers your life and mine every time we drive on the highway — prejudiced because I've had the sad duty of burying some of its captives — prejudiced because I can see alcohol working its devilish effects on the lives of persons inside and outside our church.

Now, I am being asked to vote for ABC stores in Sanford, making myself a partner with all other citizens in Sanford in the sale of beer, wine, and liquor.

I am told that this endeavor would be profitable. Statistics in counties and states where ABC stores are operated DO NOT bear this out when the added costs of law enforcement, loss of man-hours, loss to merchants selling necessary items, etc., are taken into consideration. This, however, is beside the point for the Christian. If the sale of beer, wine, and liquor is wrong, then a $1000 refund for each tax payer could not make it right.

I am told that proper control is the main concern. Evidence of effective control would be a point in favor of ABC stores — but I can find none. The products of the store are advertized both nationally and locally. The store may refuse to sell to minors, but it cannot prevent a resale to anyone. Witness the fact that most of the liquor consumed in Lee County comes from Alcoholic Beverage Control stores. What sort of control is this? Individuals and clubs have hauled liquor in by the truck load — from stores that are supposed to control.

The only element of control that I can see is an attempt to wipe out bootlegging. This I am in favor of, BUT look at the difference in approach. No longer can we oppose the bootlegger because his product is evil, for we are in the same business ourselves. We must now oppose him as our competitor and for his failure to pay taxes on his product. Our difference with the bootlegger can no longer be primarily a moral one, but a financial one. I cannot help remembering what the scriptures say, "The love of money is the root of all evil."

The liquor industries, using their great wealth, are flooding Sanford with their deceptive ads. Why? Because they see in this move an opportunity to further their business. It is as simple as that. We as Christians, however, will do much better to read our Bibles and to seek God's Word rather than man's.

Finally, let's try to approach this with love and understanding. Whether we have legal stores or not, the task of the Church remains the same. It is so to convert people to Christ, so to lead them to His abundant life, that they will feel no need nor desire for alcoholic stimulation. It is my belief, however, that setting up these stores in Sanford will be a step in the wrong direction, making our task more difficult.

Nobody Knows - - But Mother

Nobody knows of the work it takes
To keep the home together,
Nobody knows of the steps it takes
Nobody knows — but mother.

Nobody listens to childish woes,
Which kisses only smother;
Nobody's pained by naughty blows,
Nobody — only mother.

Nobody knows of the sleepless care
Bestowed on baby brother;
Nobody knows of the tender prayer,
Nobody — only mother.

Nobody knows of the lessons taught
Of loving one another;
Nobody knows of the patience sought,
Nobody — only mother.

Nobody knows of the anxious fears,
Lest darling may not weather
The storm of life in after years,
Nobody knows — but mother.

Nobody kneels at the throne above
To thank the Heavenly Father
For the sweetest gift — a mother's love;
Nobody can — but mother.

Great Bridge, South Norfolk and Oak Grove churches met at Rosemont April 30 for a joint evening service with a social period following.

Rev. Bill Simmons of Great Bridge, Norfolk, is preaching in his "home church" First Congregational of Albemarle, this week.

Members who have joined First, Richmond, since last May will be special guests at the family night supper being held there May 9.

Apple's Chapel joined Brown's Chapel and Friedens' Lutheran Church in the "Washington Township Sunday School Convention" May 7 at Brown's Chapel.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddy Cox have donated a new mimeograph machine to our Northview church. This makes it easier to publish "The Northview Star."

May Fellowship Day was observed last Friday at Apple's Chapel with a special service at 7:30. All church families were invited for the program and a period of fellowship.

Homecoming will be observed at Mt. Zion, near Mebane, N. C., May 14. New windows are being installed and the sanctuary painted before that date.

Barbaros Chelikkal, student at Elon College from Turkey, will be the special guest at the family night supper at Rosemont, South Norfolk, May 13.

Recent improvements at Lee's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C., include: shrubbery purchased by the Women's Fellowship; wrought iron banisters on front steps given by Pilgrim Fellowship with aid of Laymen; work on the church grounds by the Laymen's Fellowship; new signs put up.

The John Morrison Bible Class of Rosemont, South Norfolk, had a banquet for members and their wives April 21 with 84 attending. Mr. E. E. Brickell, new superintendent of South Norfolk schools, addressed the group following dinner.

Our Pfafftown (N. C.) church has recently secured a liability insurance policy, which gives the members full liability protection and $250 medical protection while at the church or on church business.

The Women's Fellowship of First, Portsmouth, is sponsoring a covered dish supper at the church Thursday, May 11, for all the families of the church. Rev. Sidney Olson of Little Creek preached at First, Portsmouth, April 30.

"Orchids to Mothers" will be the order of the day at Great Bridge, Norfolk, May 14. The Laymen's Fellowship is sponsoring this special gift, and orchids especially flown in from Hawaii will be pinned on the ladies at the door of the church. The "Queen Mother for a Day," elected by votes the preceding Sunday, will be honored on Mother's Day, also.

A Laymen's Fellowship has been organized at Lee's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C. Officers are: Jack Cole, president; Obie Watson, vice president; Bill Lanier, secretary-treasurer.

Mrs. Frank Lewis reports that our Shelton Memorial women joined in the observance of May Fellowship Day at a luncheon at the Episcopal church in Portsmouth. Shelton Memorial Senior Guild is planning a luncheon and book review May 12. Mrs. Keroy Ober of Norfolk will review "Masters of Deceit" by J. Edgar Hoover.

Dr. Paul Minear, professor of Biblical Theology at Yale Divinity School, has been named director of faith and order for the World Council of Churches. Dr. Minear is known to many of our people as chairman of the committee which prepared the study material on the theme of the Assembly of the World Council entitled "Jesus Christ, the Light of the World." Trained and ordained in the Methodist Church, Dr. Minear is now a minister of the United Church of Christ.

Family emphasis for the month of May at Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, includes encouraging attendance at church services of the 52 church membership families with children.

Dr. John G. Truitt told the 104 men (including 11 ministers) about the "First Laymen's Fellowship" when the Burlington Area Laymen's Fellowship met at Union Ridge April 27. Secretary Gerald Points resigned to enter medical school at the University of Kentucky, and Thomas Rascoe of the Union Ridge church was elected to that office. The next meeting will be at Long's Chapel July 27.

Miss May Bryant of Princeton, Illinois, went by plane from Boston to Turkey May 4, to resume her duties as a nurse in Turkey after a three-month furlough. A great-great grand-niece of the poet, William Cullen Bryant, Miss Bryant has served at Duke University Hospital, as well as at the Yale School of Nursing, and in India during World War II with the U. S. Army. She is to serve as a nurse at the Nute Clinic in Talas.

In Retrospect

Those delegates and ministers who were not present at the spring meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Conference on Sunday, April 23, excluded themselves from a very challenging and inspirational program.

The interesting theme of this conference session was "Called to Be Sent," the emphasis being on the responsibility of the churches to Our Christian World Mission. Dr. David Shepherd, president of the Conference, officiated, and special addresses were presented by Superintendent Clyde Fields and Rev. W. E. Wisseman, minister of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro. The meeting was held in the Community Church, Chapel Hill.

One of the more disturbing aspects of the session was the low attendance. Fewer than 50 people were present to represent the churches of the entire Eastern North Carolina Conference. This regrettable fact, considered along with the nature of the program, appears both sad and ironic. In the course of the afternoon program, a great many challenging descriptions were given of a world in desperate need for the Church's message. In view of the small number present for an important meeting of this kind, however, it would seem that one of the most desperate needs of all is that of overcoming the sin of indifference among our own churches. A world cries out for the "Good News," but one frequently has the impression that those who compose the Church are too preoccupied, too indifferent, or too lazy to care!

Among those attending the N. C. Council of Church's 25th anniversary session in Greensboro May 1-2 were Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Andes, Rev. James Jackson, Rev. Carl Wallace, Rev. W. E. Wisseman, Rev. W. T. Scott, Jr.; Mrs. O. H. Paris and Mrs. W. M. Paris from First, Greensboro; Mrs. H. A. Pollard, Sr., Mrs. J. R. Kernodle, and Mrs. W. F. Randolph from First, Burlington; Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Fields, Rev. and Mrs. Winfred Bray, Rev. Thomas Madren and Mrs. F. C. Lester. Featured speakers were Dr. H. Shelton Smith, who was honored as the founder, and Dr. Liston Pope, first secretary, both of whom are ministers of our denomination.

Theme: "Facing Our Task."

The First Annual Minister's Convocation of the United Church of Christ will be held May 15-17, 1961 at Camp Moonelon, Elon College, N. C.

The meeting will open Monday, May 15, at 11 a.m. with registration followed by lunch at 12:15. The afternoon session will begin at 2 o'clock with a worship service. A very interesting and outstanding program has been planned with splendid leadership and will include study, worship, fellowship and recreation. The program will close with devotions Wednesday morning, May 17, at 11:45 with lunch being served at 12:30.

Listed among the leadership are Dr. Arthur Newell, Minister of St. John's E. & R. Church, Richmond, Va.; Dr. Gerald Jud, Secretary of Evangelism, C.C. Board of Home Missions; Rev. Albert C. Ronander, Assistant to the Secretary of the General Council of C.C. Churches; Dr. Harvey Fesperman, President of the Southern Synod; Rev. Taylor Stanley, Supt. of the Convention of the South;

Rev. Clyde Fields, Supt. of the Southern Convention; Rev. James Rumley, Minister of Lincoln Charge, E. and R. Church at Maiden, N. C.; Rev. Kieth Wright, Minister of C.C. Church, Pfafftown, N. C.; Rev. Thomas Hamilton, Minister of St. Matthew's E. & R. Church, Charlotte, N. C.; Rev. Harold Myers, Minister of Edgewood United Church, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. Marlin Schaeffer, Minister of E. and R. Church, Lexington, N. C., and Rev. Bill Simmons, Minister of C. C. Church, Great Bridge, Va.

May has been designated as "Loyalty Month" at Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth. Attendance of all worshippers at the Sunday morning services will be registered. A family night dinner will be held May 10. Adults will hear Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, while a program of movies is planned for the children.

Members received recently by Edgewood, Burlington, raises the membership of this new church to 122.

Resolution Regarding Voting On The Constitution In The Southern Convention

WHEREAS, the great majority of Congregational Christian churches across the country are voting favorably for the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, and,

WHEREAS, the General Synod of the United Church of Christ, will vote to approve the Constitution at the meeting to be held in July of 1961, and,

WHEREAS, about one-half of churches of the Southern Convention have voted regarding the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, and

WHEREAS, the Executive Board of the Southern Convention feels called upon to make the following suggestion to the several Conferences through their executive committees,

NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the several Conferences issue a letter of concern to churches which have not voted on the Constitution of the United Church of Christ, expressing the desire that churches consider voting, so as to be registered by June 1, 1961.

2. That churches which have voted NO, and churches which have not voted, be reassured that they are still members of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches and the several Conferences making up the Convention.

3. That the Southern Convention, the several Conferences of the Convention, and the churches of the Southern Convention remind ourselves of our dual obligation to the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches and the United Church of Christ in North Carolina and Virginia, in the adoption of the following suggested resolution from the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches: That the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches designate itself as an acting Conference of the United Church of Christ.

Voted by Executive Board April 29, 1963

A Time For Greatness

The challenge of the time in which we live is for greatness.

International conditions demand greatness rather than political chicanery. New nations are coming to birth and need childhood care while they learn to establish stable government among their people who have never stood on their own political feet and to direct their way among other nations. It is easy to capitalize on such conditions and to take over another area of the world, but nations that wish to be really great will find ways to be helpful rather than greedy. The United Nations has a wonderful opportunity to patiently lead angry, greedy and provocative groups in sound and unselfish statesmanship.

Greatness is needed in our own America. Provocations and challenges offer the opportunity to be boastful, daring, and hateful, and even to start the war that might easily end civilization. It is important for our leaders to be humble in the presence of the superior accomplishments of others, as, for instance, the Russian success in putting a man into orbit. Challenges to military might may well be met with greater accomplishment in the ministry to human welfare. Sending a man into outer space has its value, but putting God into human experience is far more important. To feed the hungry, heal the sick, educate the ignorant, and preach the Gospel may sound tame and timid in comparison with some of the thrilling feats of speed now being hailed so heartily, but over the long pull what really matters is the kind of people who inhabit this earth, the planet once visited by God's Son.

This is a time for greatness in the Church. Currently those of us in the Southern Convention are concerned with voting on a Constitution for the United Church of Christ, in finding ways to make an important church merger effective in our area, and in learning to live happily with our neighbors. Opinions differ so widely that it is easy to think in terms of the person whose ideas are different from ours, and to lose sight of the main problems which press for solution. Brotherhood seems to be taking on new meaning, and urgency. So long as it was a beautiful idea about which the preacher waxed eloquent and the poets sang with glee, we could be all for brotherhood. But when it means something entirely foreign to our past experience, something that faces us in both business and worship — when it means a desperate effort to understand and appreciate those with whom we have had little contact, to believe that right can win over evil now as it always has done, and to stand firm for the difficult right against an easy and popular wrong — under such circumstance there is need for real greatness. And who would dare to be less than his best? The challenge of our Christian World Mission is a call to greatness rather than selfishness.

There is need for greatness in the home. Industrial developments have put before us such an array of desirable things for comfort and happiness that a man can no longer secure an adequate supply for his family. Now the well-to-do are like the poor of a half century ago in that all members of the family must work. That has made the idealized home of the past where mother cared for the children and the family met daily for family prayers a thing of the past. Husband and wife see each other in going and coming to their separate jobs. Children have "baby sitters" to care for them while the parents are away. Results: Juvenile delinquents, divorces, families on wheels going places, and probably parked among the hills or by the seashore for the long weekends, rather than at church.

This may be a sort of old-fashioned idea, impractical and impossible in our time, but it would seem to this writer that the civilization so highly prized through the centuries will have its best chance for immortality by making mother "Queen of the Home" not just for an occasional day but for keeps. The sentimentality lavished upon mother a generation ago may have been over-done, but there needs to be something around which to center the affection of husband and children even in the most modern home. We have dethroned the "Queen of Hearts" without finding an adequate substitute. Great homes have always been those with great mothers whose children have arisen to call her blessed. So far as this writer can see, there is no substitute for home in our civilization, and there can be no really good and great homes without mothers of the caliber which can be called great. Their call to service may reach far beyond the home, but it will be there, too. The church, the nation and the world need those madonnas about which artists have dreamed. We need mothers whose primary aim is to implant in her offspring the spirit which an ancient Mary gave to her boy Jesus. There are such, thank God. And to every one be blessing and honor not only at Mother's Day but every day.

MARKED PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN EDUCATION

(Second of two articles)

Advances in higher education in the South have kept pace with educational progress in other geographical areas. Noteworthy achievements may be cited in individual institutions.

Few universities of the North and West have attacked regional social problems with such courage and thoroughness as has the University of North Carolina. Similarly, the University of Virginia was possibly the first in the field of pure science.

The University of Texas provides such an excellent grade of graduate instruction in genetics that it is rated by the American Council of Education as being distinguished among other universities and colleges of the country.

More adequate educational facilities in elementary and high schools for Negroes have been increasingly provided for many years. Material and scholarship advancements, too have been marked in colleges and universities for Negroes.

Southern universities are doing highly competent work in the field of medicine. Medical schools at Vanderbilt, Tulane, University of North Carolina, University of Virginia, and Duke University, are noteworthy from various points of view. The medical school at Duke has as an adjunct one of the best equipped hospitals in the country.

The South is dotted with colleges which were once considered small, but most of them are no longer small in enrollment and number of buildings. They have greatly expanded their curriculums, increased their teaching staffs, and are more generously supported by gifts and endowments. Most graduates of these colleges enter professions that lead to successful careers, and the South is a foremost beneficiary of their training.

In addition to students who pursue courses leading to an academic degree, most Southern colleges and universities conduct night classes for the benefit of adults who, for various reasons, missed special training in their younger years. Young people, too, are attending these night classes in ever-increasing numbers. The principal purpose of all night students is to meet the challenge of changing times which requires more rigid qualifications in most pursuits and special training in new fields of endeavor.

In cultural spheres, the South has been forging ahead for many years. Museums and theaters in such cities as Richmond, Virginia; Greensboro, Raleigh, Charlotte, and Winston-Salem, North Carolina do credit to cities many times their size.

The South is also producing literature of recognized value. Writers during the close of the last century and early part of the present, with their flourishes and adjectives, their mellowness and sentiment, have given way to realists.

Histories and other textbooks are produced in the South in vast numbers, and are used extensively in all parts of the country, while the novels of William Faulkner, Thomas Wolfe, Caroline Gordon, Margaret Mitchell, and others have gone unscathed by literary critics and made the stage.

Advancement in the things of the spirit usually goes hand-in-hand with material and educational progress. This pattern is being increasingly reproduced in the South to national and international advantage.

C. B. Riddle

THINK ON THESE THINGS

Are we giving to the church in our tithes and offerings as we should? Try this experiment: take a pencil and paper, the average income and the number of people working in our church, and figure what the amount of tithes should come to. I think you will find that this church could operate on a budget over $12,000. What does this mean? It means that we could build our parsonage now, not next year, or the year after. It also means that this church could be full time instead of half time. Today there are more activities going on in this church than there are in the majority of the full time churches of this Conference. We have the people; we have the means; do we have the incentive?

Many Southern Convention people had an opportunity to see and hear Dr. Ed Riggs, medical missionary to India, when he was in our area the last two weeks in April. Sad to say, many of those people failed to take advantage of that opportunity...

I talked on the telephone to a subscriber to The Christian Sun in Georgia the evening I heard Dr. Riggs and saw his pictures in Asheville. She said, "I would have given anything to have been able to hear him. I read about it in The Sun and wished I could have the opportunity."

At the Women's Convention in Suffolk Dr. Riggs gave a picture of the work of a medical missionary, raising and answering such questions as "Should American doctors try to save babies' lives in countries where the problem of overpopulation is already acute?" He also made his listeners think as he asked them what they would buy if their yearly income corresponded to that of a villager in his part of India — $50 a year.

As he visited in local churches where he could show slides, Dr. Riggs gave a well-organized picture-story of life in Kilanjunai, India, where he and his family live, of the kind of work he does, and of the Christian church work there. This was interesting and educational to children, young people and adults.

Because Mrs. Riggs (Frances Whitaker) was commissioned in the Southern Convention (at Waverly, Virginia, in 1946), because he began his missionary service at Shaowu, China (supported by the Southern Convention), because he is partially supported now by funds from our area, and because he says southern U. S. reminds him of his home in southern India, Dr. Ed Riggs seemed very happy to be here for a brief visit before returning to his work in India. I regret that many who might have heard him missed this opportunity.

CC & E&R Church Merger Moves Forward

Latest News

Released by Office of Communication

More than half of the 1,419,171 members of Congregational Christian churches in the United States have voted to join the United Church of Christ, Rev. Dr. Fred Hoskins, minister of the denomination's General Council announced in New York April 27.

The Office of the Secretary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church announced simultaneously that Northern Illinois Synod had voted 212-39 to support the constitution. Rev. Dr. William L. Rest, president of this synod, had been actively campaigning to keep Evangelical and Reformed synods from voting on the constitution this year.

Eleven other synods have voted on the constitution — all favorably. The rest will vote during May.

Congregational Christian churches can affiliate with the United Church by voting to approve the constitution. They can also vote to join after the constitution is adopted.

Dr. Hoskins also announced that 2,669 of the 5,500 Congregational Christian churches have voted on the constitution, 2,505 (94 per cent) with 780,426 members in favor of it and 164 with 48,358 members opposed.

While 64 per cent of the denomination's 228 churches with 1,000 or more members, 56 per cent of the 518 churches with membership between 500 and 999, and 57 per cent of the 990 churches with 250 to 499 members have voted to join the United Church, the vast majority of the no-voting churches (136) have 100 or fewer members, Dr. Hoskins reported.

There are more than 1,000 Congregational Christian churches with ten members or fewer, many of which meet only intermittently and may not be able to assemble and vote on the constitution, Dr. Hoskins said. Such churches, as well as those which vote no, will not be considered to have left the Congregational Christian fellowship and will continue to be served by the denominational organizations, he added.

Dr. Hoskins also reported that Congregational Christian churches contributed $7,018,795 to home and foreign missions and other denominational benevolences last year. Of this sum, $4,671,510 (67 per cent) was given by churches that have voted to join the United Church and $117,096 by no-voting churches.

Comments

The Rev. Dr. Fred Hoskins, New York, Secretary and Minister of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and Co-president of the United Church of Christ, has commented regarding the United Church:

"The autonomy of the local church may not be changed by any organization except the local church itself."

"The question is no longer 'should there be a United Church of Christ?' or 'can there be a United Church of Christ?' It is whether a particular local Congregational Christian church shall remain in the main stream of American Congregationalism by becoming a part of the United Church of Christ."

"The constitution provides for free and voluntary relationships of local churches, associations, conferences, and ministers with the General Synod of the United Church of Christ and with each other."

"I don't know one single local Congregational Christian church that can write, prepare and make available to teachers and pupils an acceptable curriculum of religious education. The local member church can have available to it the enriched curriculum materials of the United Church of Christ.

"I don't know one single Congregational Christian church or any other single church that is able all by itself to produce a minister. If it can't produce a minister, where is it going to get a minister? In the United Church of Christ it has the added resources of two national denominations.

"By joining the United Church of Christ a local church will have better religious education materials, better guidance for young people's groups, better resources for training of ministers, better facilities for worldwide Christian service."

The two communions now joining in the United Church of Christ are both the products of earlier unions. In 1925 the Congregationalists united with the Evangelical Protestant Churches and in 1931 with the Christian Church. The Evangelical and Reformed Church was created in 1934 by union of the Reformed Church in the United States and the Evangelical Synod of North America.

Congregational Christian history tells of one successful union after another. In 1871 the Congregational Churches united for the first time to form the National Council. In 1925 the Evangelical Protestant Churches joined the fellowship. In 1931 came merger with the General Convention of the Christian Church, itself of three small groups.

The Board for World Ministries of the United Church of Christ which will combine the activities of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the Evangelical and Reformed Board of International Missions will support a chain of missionary centers, hospitals, and educational institutions on five continents.

The United Church of Christ inherits a tradition of deep concern for Christian higher education from both the uniting communions. The Evangelical and Reformed Church supports eight colleges and 25 are related to the Congregational Christian churches.

New York's Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller is one of the members of famous Riverside Church in New York City which voted unanimously to become a part of the United Church of Christ. With 3,065 members, Riverside is one of the largest of the 5,500 Congregational Christian churches.

The Congregational Christian Church of Stockbridge, Massachusetts, was the first to ratify the constitution of the United Church of Christ.

Formation of the United Church of Christ in 1957 was the result of 16 years of negotiation between leaders of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian churches.

June 1, 1961 is the deadline for Congregational Christian churches to vote approval of the constitution and become part of the United Church of Christ.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FOREIGN DIPLOMATS

Embarrassment in hotels, apartment houses and restaurants experienced by many diplomatic representatives to the U. S. Government and the United Nations has been deplored by the Department of International Affairs of the National Council of Churches.

At its first business session this year, Mar. 23, the department's general committee voted "to explore further the problems relating to hospitality for UN personnel (in New York City) and diplomatic representatives in Washington, D. C."

The independence of nine more African nations this year and last and the establishment of diplomatic relations with them underlines the urgency of assuring that they do not encounter racial discrimination in this country, the Rt. Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger told the committee. Serving his first term as vice-chairman of the DIA, he is Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

"The main concern now," he said, "is the question of suitable housing in New York for UN delegates." He added that not only African delegates but many of those from the Middle and Far East also are encountering difficulty in renting apartments and houses.

The committee also sent a telegram to UN Secretary General Gag Hamarskjold assuring him of the department's support "for his loyal and devoted efforts in the service of peace."

NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL URGES SPEED IN INTEGRATION

A major resolution calling for the removal "of any intimidation and artful barriers" to full citizenship for all people in the state, was recently adopted by the North Carolina Council of Churches.

The Council's executive committee noted with approval the increasing number of interracial ministerial associations in the state, the peaceful integration of lunch counters, the enrollment of some 80 Negro students in previously all-white colleges, and of 77 Negro children in formerly segregated schools. It also cited recent agreements by several industries in the state to hire on merit alone.

While such progress is laudable, said the resolution, "our Governor (Terry Sanford) has called on us not to be content to lead the South but to lead the nation."

Suffrage, in which North Carolina leads the South in the percentage of active eligible voters but is 40th in the nation; public education; fair employment practices; and open housing are each treated in the resolution. Also emphasized is the need "to open the doors of opportunity for all peoples, especially the doors of our churches...to create a climate in which full dignity and equality can grow."

Stating that "a church must realize that it is a house of God and not a private club," the Council pays tribute "to those ministers, laymen and women who have worked courageously and diligently" to open these doors.

The resolution called upon the state General Assembly to remember that it represents all and legislates for all, including Negro citizens. It emphasized that while they represent nearly one-fourth of the state's population, Negro citizens have to representatives in either house or in the state administration.

Morton R. Kurtz is executive director of the North Carolina Council, which has its office in Durham.

TWO COUNCILS STATE STANDS ON PUBLIC EDUCATION FUNDS

The Iowa Council of Churches and the Protestant Council of the City of New York last week issued statements of principle regarding the Federal aid to education bill now before Congress.

Stating, "We join with many of our Roman Catholic and Jewish friends in deploring the unwarranted and persistent attacks upon the character and soundness of public schools," the Iowa Council's statement says that the world situation demands a united America. It voices its "approbation of President Kennedy's stand in support of the public school system and the principle of separation of church and state."

"Great pressure is being brought to bear on men in political life on behalf of parochial schools," the statement continues and points out: "If religious schools were to be subsidized, every denomination and church would have an equal right to government funds. This would call for a dozen to 200 systems of parochial schools and would shatter the cohension of American education, tremendously increase the total cost and result in chaos."

Dr. Joseph O. Nelson, executive secretary of the Iowa Council, noted that the Board of Directors believes its position "is fundamental to the preservation of national unity."

The same stand was taken in a "Statement of Principle" sent by the New York City Council to all member churches to be read from pulpits and at church gatherings. Members were asked to make their position on the bill known to Congress. Declaring that "the specter of latent internal religious tension being rekindled (over the issue) is appalling," the Protestant Council also underlined the need to avoid national disunity. Dr. Dan Potter is executive director.

ATOM BOMB VICTIMS MAKE DOLLS IN SELF-HELP PROJECT

Kyoto, Oharame and "modern women" dolls from Hiroshima and Nagasaki will soon be available to church people in this country. A report from Japan Church World Service describing this new self-help project said that six women, physically handicapped by the atom bombing of their cities during the war, are producing about 400 of the dolls a month.

Workers from JCWS headquarters in Tokyo have set up training courses and workshops for more workers. They provide the materials and, in cooperation with local church members, instruct the workers in making various styles of dolls. These are already very popular with tourists and are sold at local church bazaars in Japan.

Church World Service in New York has several hundred of the dolls now on order. They will be sold at the international gift shops in CWS centers in New Windsor, Md., Napanee, Ind., and Modesto, Cal. CWS also reports that the dolls will be included in Far East parcels being prepared for churches working on the coming year's Mission Study Theme.

The JCWS project, said the report, not only supplements the earnings of the workers but is important to their self-confidence and feeling of usefulness. The centers also distribute food, clothing and other necessities provided by the American churches and the National Christian Council of Japan for the atom bomb survivors.

World Council Houses Refugees

By Geoffrey Murray

After forty years of wandering in the modern wilderness, 48 refugee families, numbering 195 men, women, and children, who still speak Aramaic, Christ's native language, are to be given new, permanent homes this summer by the World Council of Churches. Building will begin in April as soon as the rainy season ends. This building project will cost $50,000 and is being financed by funds raised mainly in Britain from World Refugee Year efforts.

The little community who will benefit in this way are a group of Armenian refugees whom nobody hitherto has wanted. Driven out of Armenia at the end of World War II, their long wanderings have taken them to Iraq, Syria, and finally Lebanon. Some of the men are cobblers and the women find seasonal work in the fields. But for the most part they are unskilled, and no country, and up to now no organization, has been willing to welcome them. But always they have refused to split up. Somehow they have contrived to keep together and survive despite appalling hardships.

I drove today from Beirut, Lebanon, across snowy mountains to Zahle, a little village in the fertile valley of Bekaa, where for some years now these unconquerable people have been sheltering in the most primitive conditions.

I visited homes where it was not uncommon for a single damp room to house 11 people. In places where there were only two parents and five children to a room conditions seemed good, by comparison. An outside tap was the only water supply for many families. A single lamp provided light. Cooking was done on tiny oil stoves, but the mountain bread in thin, round loaves — the community's staple food — has to be baked every day by the women in outdoor ovens according to a recipe that is thousands of years old. Incredibly, these many-bedded rooms, where so many people live and sleep, are born and die, were astonishingly clean and tidy. In most western countries they would have been condemned as unfit for animals to inhabit.

I met Father Alexandros, the Nestorian priest who is their leader. He was born in Turkey, and speaks many languages, including English.

I heard him talking in Aramaic to his little flock whom he refuses to desert. He has no church of his own, but a friendly Orthodox priest in Zahle allows him to conduct services for these wandering Armenians every Sunday. Some years ago he was offered a pastorate in Beirut, but he turned it down so that he could stay with his people. He and his wife and their three sons, one a school-teacher and another a carpenter, live beside the people he serves so faithfully.

It was Father Alexandros who first brought the needs of these people to the notice of Miss Ruth Black, a Scotswoman who is the World Council of Churches' senior representative in the Near East. Miss Black, after a full investigation, reported their plight to WCC headquarters in Geneva. It was agreed to resettle them as an entire community in the district if the funds required could be raised during World Refugee Year.

There were many difficulties in the way, but eventually a suitable site was found. Plans have been drawn, and now enough money is available for building to begin as soon as the weather is fit. Each house will be properly equipped according to modern standards of health and hygiene, and each will have its own garden where the refugees will be able to grow vegetables and corn for their bread.

They will live rent free, and so will be better able to survive as stateless persons in Lebanon which has many restrictions on the kind of work which refugees can undertake to make a living. If enough money can be raised, it is intended to build a school for the community, and if a grant can be obtained from the Ecumenical Church Loan Fund, a church will be built for them in which to worship according to the Nestorian rites — the most ancient in Christianity.

Like the children of Israel, these refugees have wandered for long in the wilderness. Now they are about to make their home in a valley which, says tradition, flows with milk and honey.

Russian Church To Join World Council

Latest Church to apply for membership in the World Council of Churches is the Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church. Action will be taken on this application from the Patriarch Alexis, the Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia, at the Assembly in New Delhi in November, along with applications from eight other Churches. These include two Pentecostal Churches in Chile and a Moravian Church in South Africa.

In making its application, the Russian Orthodox Church lists 30,000 priests and 73 bishoprics in the USSR, with 20,000 parishes and 40 monasteries. It did not list the total membership.

The Patriarch of the Russian Orthodox Church sent two representatives to spend a month in Geneva, Switzerland (headquarters of the World Council) in 1959. Since that time this Church has had observers at several ecumenical meetings. In the application, the Patriarch referred to the importance of "deepening mutual understanding among divided Christians and the strengthening of universal brotherhood, love, and peace among the nations on the basis of the Gospel."

Christian Family Life

By Mrs. Howard Boardman

Despite the lingering snowstorms, spring is really on the way and with it comes our annual observance of Christian Family Life Week climaxed by the traditional Mother's Day or Family Sunday (the emphasis many prefer) on the second Sunday in May. This is the time to plan something special for that first week of May to lift up and celebrate the significance of the Christian family.

How about a Family Fun Night? A potluck supper could be followed by a period of recreation in which the whole family could share. Relays, singing games, elementary folk dances would provide variety. The evening might be concluded with a songfest or hymn sing ending with a friendship circle or simple family worship service led by a church family. Such a program should not be too long and it should be led by an enthusiastic person capable of drawing all ages into common activity. It is good that the church family have fun together and that they praise God and give Him thanks for their common life.

Or, you might try a family breakfast on "Mother's Day" or Family Sunday. In one church I know tradition has it that the men prepare such a breakfast honoring the mothers, yet allowing for entire families to be together. A brief program could be held or again, a family worship service.

As Family Life Chairman in your own local church, do be aware of what is being planned for this particular week in your church. Take the initiative, if necessary, to see that the ball gets rolling, or if plans are under way, be sensitive as to where you may fit in and be helpful.

Encourage your families with children from 6 to 12 to use Family Devotions (90¢ a year) from The Pilgrim Press. Your Women's Fellowship might well assume the responsibility of distributing this aid to worship.

RICH IN FAITH

"Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" James 2:5

Faith, what a blessing! And you do not have to have everything else before you can have it. The humble minister's two boys, for instance, in the Dayton, Ohio, bicycle shop, were poor in this world's goods, but they had faith and the airplane flew! Many of the great inventions of yesteryear, which have brought us up to our present technological age, were made by the poor in this world's goods but rich in faith.

How often, in medicine, in all the fields of advancement, in every avenue of life, faith has rung the bell! Jesus preached it, had it. Over and over Paul wrote: We are saved by faith. He gave it prominent association with hope and love. Look at hope and you will find faith in it. Look at love and you will find faith in it.

It intrigues me to hear James so greatly exalting faith — the chosen of God, the rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom — the "poor of this world rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

Yes, this same James is quite ready to preach the funeral of faith, if it doesn't join up with works! He almost stages a debate between faith and works.

As I read the lines of this text that phrase "the poor of this world rich in faith" made me think of my mother. It seemed to me a double description of her!

That expression is a gem, isn't it? Read it, and thank God for your faith. Read it, you are poor enough for it to apply to you, and be thankful that you feel humble and poor, and that you can by your simple faith help to bring in the kingdom promises to them that love him.

COMMENTS OF YOUNG PEOPLE

Attending Church Vocations Conference

(Contributed by Rev. Max Vestal)

I have chosen the field of medical technology and wish to be a missionary. I would like help in planning for education to go into the missionary field.

* * *

This week of camp has meant a great deal to me — not only has it given me some idea of what a church-related vocation would be like, but it has also brought me closer to God. Our worship service this morning was the perfect ending to the ideas I have been getting during our discussions. I can truly say that this conference will help me to continue my search for a vocation.

* * *

I feel that much work and time has gone into this retreat and a very good job has been done. I feel that I have made new friends here. I had never thought of entering the ministry before, but now I have been reading the pamphlets you have provided and am giving it some serious thought.

* * *

I have come to understand better the importance of having a vocation, how to look for it, what it should mean. I would like additional material on foreign service and Christian education.

* * *

I've been at the Vocations Retreat for the past three years. I decided three years ago that I was definitely interested in considering a life work in the field of Christian education, and this idea has been strengthened in the past two years. Vocations Retreat at Moonelon has been a wonderful and helpful experience for me.

* * *

This weekend has helped me to have a new outlook on my life and the vocation that I have almost decided on. Now I feel more purpose and direction in my life through the help of God. One important factor I came to realize is that my Church needs me. I want to do all I can for it so that it will need me even more. Through soul-searching and praying I hope God will show me my calling to serve.

* * *

I have received a lot of useful information in the field of director of religious education. I would like to find out more about this field. Could you please send me any information regarding this?

* * *

I have gained something from this retreat that I was unable to obtain anywhere else. It is a new insight on my desired vocation, which is elementary school teaching.

I have not made up my mind as to a vocation in the Church but this week-end has made me clearly see that I must choose a vocation and not a job.

KINDNESS

Forget each kindness that you do
As soon as you have done it,
Forget the praise that falls to you
The moment you have won it,
Forget the slanders that you hear
Before you can repeat it,
Forget each slight, each spite, each sneer,
Wherever you may meet it.

Remember every kindness done
To you what e'er its measure,
Remember praise by others won
And pass it on with pleasure,
Remember every promise made
And keep it to the letter,
Remember those who lend you aid,
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress,
Be hopeful and forgiving,
Remember good, remember truth
Remember heaven's above you
And you will find through age and youth
True joys, and hearts to love you.

Anonymous

Let me be a little kinder, let me be a little blinder
To the faults of those about me;
let me praise a little more.
Let me be, when I am weary,
just a little bit more cheery;
Let me serve a little better those that I am striving for.
Let me be a little braver,
when temptation bids me waver;
Let me strive a little harder to be all that I should be.
Let me be a little meeker with the brother that is weaker;
Let me think more of my neighbor and a little less of me.

Prayer Of A Mother

Dear God, help me to live up to the faith I see in my child's eyes. I am so very human, so very frail — yet to her I am a tower of strength.

I can soothe her small hurts, I can give her love, I can protect and cherish her. Yet I can never be half of all I must be, without You to guide me.

Help me — and watch over her. Teach her the things that are beyond my power, so that she will one day be a better woman than I; and in her turn, a better mother.

"QUESTION SEVEN" SCORES A HIT

"Significant," "forceful," "a deeply moving drama" are some of the adjectives which appear in reviews of "Question Seven," produced by Louis de Rochemont with collaboration of Lutheran Film Associates.

Currently being shown in movie houses across the country, the story, set in East Germany, is described as a gripping account of the church behind the Iron Curtain. It was actually filmed in a West German town which, says one report, "gave itself over to the East German masquerade for six weeks of filming."

A 15-year-old boy is one of the central characters in "this cat-and-mouse conflict between communism and Christianity." Christian de Bresson, a young French actor who has appeared on the New York stage, plays the son of Pastor Friedrich Gottfried, portrayed in the film by Michael Gwynn of Britain.

In his review of the film, Lane Smith, religion editor of the Seattle Times reports: "The film is dominated by the pastor's dilemma of keeping the church alive and giving spiritual leadership to frightened people in a society ruled by atheistic forces, and his personal problem with his 15-year-old son who unwittingly is becoming a tool of the state."

The Christian Herald gives the film a special merit award. Other very favorable reviews have appeared in the Washington Post, Washington Evening Star, Christianity Today, and the Harrisburg (Pa.) Evening News, among others.

"One World, One Mission"

By Beatrice George

The Women's Fellowship of the South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church met April 27 in the social hall of the church for study of ONE WORLD — ONE MISSION. The meeting was opened with prayer by the president, Mrs. Ernest Evans.

The devotional was conducted by Mrs. Carol Chappell, spiritual life chairman, who read Psalm 15. Miss Brenda Harris, soloist, sang "Living for Jesus." Mrs. Chappell continued with a short meditation the Art of Living, closing with scripture reading from Proverbs 31: 10, 24-31.

Mrs. Bernice Hargrove, missionary education chairman, introduced Mrs. Herbert C. Davis of the Bayview Baptist Church who gave the book review on "One World-One Mission." Mrs. Davis developed her report by beginning with change taking place all around which might be considered as a mount of expectation and the place our mission work is taking in it through its meaning and accomplishments. It brings us to a study of other faiths and a better understanding of each other as we work together surrounded by threats of communism, color and caste differences. The spread of Christianity has become global in its missionary work. One reason for our being is to tell others of the gospel of Christ. New views have been revealed through recent wars, communications, flight transportation and now travel into space.

Statistics show that 34 of every 100 people claim the Christian faith, through which there has come a movement of unity looking toward an ecumenical church where barriers might be broken down and our world be drawn together. Mrs. Davis reminded that we learn through trial and error, thus the call to be faithful as we march into all the world together. There are many obstacles to be hurdled such as education, languages, customs, and time. Young people have a great contribution to make by using their talents to the glory of God. In closing she urged that we be obedient to our faith, convictions and prayer.

Mrs. Evans announced that May Fellowship Day would be held May 5th at the Lafayette Presbyterian Church, Norfolk. She also stated that five of our members attended the spring rally at Bayside Church.

After singing the closing hymn "I'll go where you want me to go, Dear Lord," and the Mizpah Benediction, there were refreshments served and a social hour.

FILM SHOWN FOR MAY FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

Mrs. J. O. Davidson, Sr.

Members of the Women's Fellowship of Holy Neck church were guests of the Holland Women's Fellowship for their annual May Fellowship dinner meeting May 9.

For the program at 7:30 in the Holland church sanctuary the film "Albert Schweitzer" was shown. This feature-length picture is recommended for children, young people, and adults and was of especial interest to all missionary groups.

Dr. Schweitzer, Nobel Prize winner, has achieved world renown as a philosopher, musician, theologian, missionary, physician, and above all as a man who has devoted his life to serving his fellowmen. The $32,000 Noble Prize was used to construct new huts with tip roofs in the leper village.

The first part of the picture was filmed in Gunsbach, France, his childhood village. The second part was filmed in "Albert Schweitzer Hospital in Lambarene, French Equatorial Africa. The narrative was written by Dr. Schweitzer. His grandson plays the part of young Albert in boyhood scenes, and the great man's mother is represented by his real-life sister.

For any who might be interested in obtaining this film, it may be secured from The Methodist Publishing House, Richmond, Virginia, at a rental fee of $45.00 for black and white and $60.00 for color.

IN EVERY HOUSE

Madonnas hallow every home;
O'er every roof where babies are Shines high and pure a guiding star;

Elon Announces Commencement Plans

Commencement at Elon College for 1961 has been scheduled for May 27-29. Plans are being made for a great commencement weekend. The highlight of this period for alumni should be Alumni Day, Saturday, May 27.

Classes ending in 1 and 6 will be holding reunions. Every alumnus is being urged to attend as much of commencement as possible — especially Alumni Day. This includes everyone who attended with the class whether he or she was graduated or not. Everyone is welcome.

Reunion classes will have breakfast at 9:00 a.m. in the McEwen Dining Hall. Special tables for reunion classes. (Special dining room for the class of 1911 (50th year) Golden Anniversary Class. The cost of the breakfast will be $1.00.

Lunch, cafeteria style, will be served to all visitors, faculty, staff, students at 12:30 in McEwen Dining Hall. Cost $1.00.

A brief business session of the Alumni Association will be held in Whitley Auditorium at 2:00 p.m.

West Dormitory parlors will be the gathering place for alumni anytime from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

The climax of the Alumni Day activities will be the Alumni Banquet in McEwen Dining Hall at 6:30 p.m. Rev. Robert M. Kimball, 34G, pastor First Congregational Christian Church, Burlington, will deliver the address. Dr. Robert W. Truitt, 41G, Head of Aerospace Department, VPI College, Blacksburg, Va., will receive the Outstanding Alumnus Award. Entertainment will be given by College Students. Members of the 1961 graduating class will be present. Cost $1.50. Dress-optional.

Following the banquet, Dr. & Mrs. J. E. Danielew will entertain at a dance in the Society Hall, Alamance Building, honoring members of the 1961 class and alumni. Dress-optional.

If reservations are made early enough, it will be possible for the College to furnish accommodations in the new dormitories on the campus. Families can be together in the same dormitory. There will be no charge for the use of the rooms. However, those using rooms will have to furnish their own bed linen, blankets, pillows, towels, etc.

Reservations for any of the events or use of rooms must be very specific. McEwen Dining Hall is being operated by a Catering Service which has a strict policy in regard to reservations. Reservations must be in the Alumni Office by Thursday, May 25. Checks should be made to Elon College Alumni Association. Tickets can be picked up at the events for which they are to be used.

MY TRUST

A picture memory brings to me:
I look across the years and see Myself beside my mother's knee.

I feel her gentile hand restrain
My selfish moods, and know again
A child's blind sense of wrong and pain.

But wiser now, a man gray grown,
My childhood's needs are better known,

My mother's chastening love I own.

Mother's Day

May 7 is the beginning of Christian Family Life Week. It must be remembered that there is a source of power in Christian family life that exerts an influence far beyond our realization. It's import can transform a neighborhood and the world. This force in Christian family life helps in time of trouble, sorrow and disappointment. If the quality of home life is improved, then the seriousness of our troubled world will be reduced, because every home will then become a laboratory in which the basic principles of Christian living will be demonstrated. When our homes become a place where we seek to serve God, then it's Christian influence will spread throughout the world.

A Prayer On Christian College Day

By Rev. Frank Hamilton

Our Heavenly Father, who art the Source of light and wisdom, and the Fountain of knowledge, on this national Christian College Day, we ask thee to shed forth thy Spirit upon all universities, colleges, and places of higher learning, that from them the light of truth may shine with ever-increasing brightness on all men. We know that knowledge and wisdom are the stability of our time, and that when they are allied with religion, they can be the inspiration of our young men and women for lives of integrity and of power.

We ask thee to prosper the instruction of professors and the studies of students, that they may come increasingly to a more perfect knowledge of thee, whom alone to know is life everlasting. — Thou dost guide thy sons and daughters through days of preparation in our colleges, and then give them work to do for thee in thy Kingdom. As their days of study and of training for this academic year are about to be completed, and their work in life is about to begin, we ask thee to grant to them high ideals of service; enable them to keep their visions fresh and keen, against the world. Guard them from a selfish use of their talents, which are given them by thee, the Giver of all good gifts, and lead them into those places where they may do battle for the right, as they strive to serve their Master, Jesus Christ. — We are thankful that we have fellowship in a branch of thy church universal, which has stressed, from its earliest inception, the value and worth of education. We remember the faith of our forefathers, that men should have a reason for the faith that is theirs; we remember the desire of our forefathers for an educated ministry and an enlightened laity, and are thankful for the enterprise and courage they had, which prompted them to labor for the establishment in our nation of great schools of advanced learning.

May we remember this day, adults and youth alike, that with all our getting, we are to get understanding; make us aware that knowledge is of little avail, until it is made wisdom, by the exercise of self control and the hard schooling of experience. To this quest for truth, this seeking after wisdom, this longing to know Him whom Thou hast sent, dedicate us today, one and all; may the day soon come when the knowledge of thee shall fill the earth and bless the sons and daughters of men. These mercies we ask in the name and spirit of the Great Teacher, even Christ, our Lord.

The Importance Of Diligence

Background Scripture: Proverbs 6:6-9; 22:30-34. Ecclesiastes 3:22. I Thessalonians 3:6-13.

Memory Selection: Whatever your task, work heartily, as serving the Lord, and not men. Colossians 3:22.

This lesson will "hit" most of us. For as Samuel Johnson once said, "Every man is as lazy as he dares to be!" In any event, there are many people who are not very diligent, and do not realize the importance of diligence. Young people in school, folks who work in offices and shops, church members, need to learn the importance and the discipline of diligence. It is a refreshing and inspiring thing to find a person who is diligent in his appointed task, or in his self-appointed enterprise. The writer of Proverbs knew all this. And in his collection of wisdom nuggets, he includes some words on the importance of diligence.

An Object Lesson In Diligence

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard," you "lazy man," and consider her ways. An anthill is all activity. There is apparently a division of labor — some ants work, some gather food, some lay eggs, but all, when the occasion arises go to work hunting and bringing in food to the hill. Strangely enough they do not seem to have a "chief officer or ruler." They lay up for a rainy day. There are none of them "on relief." None of them lives on the industry of others. To be sure there are cases in our modern world in which some folks do have to have help in times of emergency. But perhaps we need to give more heed to Paul's words, that only those who work shall eat. One thing is sure — all too many people in our nation are living off the industry of others.

Now there are many people who attribute their situation or circumstances to luck, and of course bad luck. They say they do not feel well, they never had a chance, everybody is against them, the other fellow got the breaks and was lucky, and they were just unlucky. The fact is that in many cases, these folks were just plain lazy. A freshman who was called into the Dean's office to give a reason why he had not turned in a term paper, said "Dean, I just didn't feel like writing it." The Dean said "Young man most of the world's work is done by people who don't feel like doing it!" It is not so much a matter of luck as of pluck. Success comes to the workers, not to the shirkers.

The Fellow At The Top

Folks often say that the fellow at the top of the totem pole, got all the breaks. He married the boss's daughter, he got a lucky break, he pulled strings, he was just plain lucky. A careful investigation in almost all of such cases will reveal overwhelmingly the fact that the people who are in top positions in all walks of life, got there by hard work, by diligence, by discipline. While other folks were whining, they were working. Barbara Ann Scott a young Canadian girl of eighteen, won the skating championship in the Winter Olympics. Wonderful, how lucky she was! But even though she was by far the best skater in Canada, she said that she had practiced at least 20,000 hours getting ready for that one event. Small wonder she won. To be sure she had talent, but she added to her talent, diligence and hard work and constant practice. Fritz Kreisler even at the top of his fame would spend eight hours a day in practice! Whether in skating, on the violin, or for that matter in prayer and Christian living, one must have diligence. The man who is faithful in few things, or little things, who is diligent in appointed tasks, will be given greater tasks to do. A stuffed shirt member of Parliament once said to a fellow-member, "You used to shine my father's shoes!" "Yes and I did it well" replied the man, "and that is the reason I am in Parliament." He who does his work well will be able to do better work. It is hard work that lifts a man, not luck, not chance, certainly not laziness.

The Field Of The Slothful

The author of Proverbs walked past the farm of a man who was a sluggard. The farm is overgrown with weeds, thorns and nettles, the stone walls that mark the boundaries are broken down and in disrepair, and signs of neglect are everywhere. It is a sorry sight. And he diagnoses the cause. It did not come about all of a sudden. There was a little sleep, a little slumber, and then the inevitable decay set in. Eternal vigilance and diligence is the price of a good vineyard or a good farm, as it is the price of liberty. Laziness begets poverty, and poverty compounds laziness, especially when somebody else will take care of the lazy man. And of course the principle obtains in other realms as well as concerning a farmer. How often do we hear it said of a man who failed "He just didn't tend to his business."

The Blessing Of Work

The writer of Proverbs emphasizes the importance of diligence in work. The writer of Ecclesiastes emphasizes the blessing and joy in work. The early conception of work as a bane, as expressed in the opening chapters of Genesis, comes from the childhood of the race. Most children look upon it as a bane, and many adults who have never grown up, also look upon it in the same way. But the Bible emphasizes work as a blessing, and stresses the joy of work well-done. "Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works." The "Preacher" who began his book in the spirit of cynicism and with the feeling that everything is altogether "vanity," made a startling discovery. He finds a cure for all this in work. "There is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labour." Eccl. 2:24. Work is good; work is divine therapy; work is of God! Work is one of God's best gifts to men.

Many doctors today are claiming that hard work kills few men, if any. Fatty degeneration of the heart, stimulated by lack of exercise, causes more deaths than long hours of exercise or of work. Hard work seldom breaks a man; more often it makes him and does him good.

A world without work! What a dull and deadly world it would be! Some of the most miserable people in the world are people who have nothing to do. Inaction can be hell; work can be heaven. Edna Ferber the authoress puts it thus: "My philosophy lies in work. If my brimstone and hell were

Board Of Trustees Meets

Dear Friends:

On Thursday, April 20, the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home met in their mid-year session. They heard various reports concerning the general condition of the Home and all reports were favorably received. Also, they were given a report on the progress of the cottages. Right now every effort is being made to be in the cottages by June the first and to have our service of consecration for the two cottages on June 11. The Rev. Lawrence Upton, Secretary of Health and Welfare for our denomination, will be the main speaker for the occasion.

Among other things, the Board of Trustees adopted a set of By-laws to govern its functions. As you know, the Home has a charter which was granted when the Home was organized and since has been amended from time to time as the need has arisen. However, there never has been adopted until this time any kind of By-laws. Should any reader desire a copy of these By-laws, we shall be glad to furnish you a copy so that you will know how your Board of Trustees endeavors to carry out its responsibility.

The Board of Trustees also voted to make Dr. D. L. Boone, Mr. Caleb West and Mr. Thomas W. Walton Trustees Emeritus. These are three men who have worked long and hard for "Our Children's Home." We feel that this is a proper honor for these men who have given so much of their time and energy for this institution. By their becoming Trustees Emeritus we will still have their counsel whenever they can be present for our Board meetings. Then, too, from time to time we shall feel free to call upon them for advice in decisions that have to be made concerning the welfare of our "Home."

A survey made in 1956 and adopted by the Southern Convention in session states that the clergy as well as the laity should be represented on the Board. In keeping with this practice, the Board nominated Earl T. Farrell to fill the vacancy created when the present superintendent took office. The Executive Board in session on April 28 elected Rev. Mr. Farrell to this position. There are now three ministers on the Board.

They are Rev. Mack V. Welch, Reidsville, N. C.; Dr. R. E. Brittle, Suffolk, Va., and Rev. Earl T. Farrell, Fuquay-Varina, N. C.

Those Forty Great Days

By Rev. Everette Neese

From Easter to Pentecost was the greatest forty days in the life of the early church and they can be great days in the life of the church today. The spiritual outpouring which came at Pentecost provided the pattern for New Testament evangelism. It was the coming of the Holy Spirit that gave power to the one-hundred and twenty in the Upper Room who had agonized in prayer. As a result of their praying the Holy Spirit came to dwell within the life of these followers of "The Way." It was no longer "God with Us" or "God above us," now, it was "God IN US" working out his purposes for man's salvation.

The forty great days through which we are now passing can be as enriching, as challenging, and as powerful, as they were over nineteen centuries ago. Today, we must remember that God's resources are as abundant as they were at the time of the Upper Room experience. As I see it, the problem, individually and as a church, rests not on the lack of available spiritual power but on the failure to receive and appropriate the inexhaustible spiritual power at our very finger tips.

The availability of this power individually and collectively, however, is predicated on meeting certain conditions. Two conditions, mainly. One, UNITY. Being in one accord. Being of one mind. Being united in thought and purpose for God and His Kingdom. The other condition is EARNEST PRAYER. The coming of the Holy Spirit was into an atmosphere thoroughly saturated with prayer. And thus it is always so; when we implore God to send his Spirit into empty, waiting and famine-stricken hearts he does not fail us. However, that Spirit will not come until we have waited patiently, prayed earnestly and believed sincerely.

Without question this is what the twentieth century individual and church needs to do in order to experience the supernatural power of the Holy Spirit. Then will come a revival of Christian experience, Christian faith and Christian concern which will give the individual and the church a new perspective and a new life in fellowship with God.

During these Forty Great Days let's prepare ourselves so that we may be channels through which God's Holy Spirit may work for the salvation of men.

Dear Friends:

As we come to the end of our first year in "Sunny California" we would like to pause long enough to renew our friendships with you who have brought much joy to our lives in the past.

These twelve months have been busy days for us. God has blessed us in a most marvelous way. Not only has He relieved me completely from the pains of arthritis but has given me the strength to accomplish, far beyond expectation, what we had hoped to accomplish in our new field of service. When I came out in March of last year I met with five very dedicated couples who felt the need of a church of our Fellowship in this new community. I was impressed by their sincerity and accepted the call to become their minister, effective May 1. I had 65 people who greeted me at my first service. In September a Sunday School for children through the sixth grade was organized, using the parsonage and two other homes as meeting places. In October we conducted our Building Fund Campaign when we raised $29,000 for our new church. In December we began construction, with my serving as contractor, and last Sunday, just four months from the day we broke ground, we moved from the Totten Dance Studio into our lovely new church, with 431 people in attendance, with 147 additional children in Sunday School. We are now crowded with dual sessions both for the Worship Service and the Sunday School. Our church consist of an assembly, pastor's study, church office, kitchen and seven class rooms, at an estimated value of $85,000; however, by our doing the work ourselves we were able to complete the construction at the cost of $63,500, including church equipment, landscaping and an asphalt parking lot that will park 60 cars, so we really feel quite fortunate in what we have for the money.

We have a very interesting group of people to work with, coming from all parts of the United States and several other countries, and from all walks of life. Being a born and bred southerner I came in fear and trembling, wondering how I would fit in with people from such a vast mixture of culture, but it has been interesting how my southern accent has been an asset to me. I have never witnessed a finer spirit of harmony, which proves to me beyond the shadow of doubt that in Christ there is no east or west, no north or south.

Gwen has loved it from the very beginning, and Sandra is rapidly becoming attached to Southern California. She will be graduating from high school in June, and since she has learned to love California as Gwen and I have learned to love it, she will be going to San Diego State next year. Since the University is just across the canyon from where we live she will be staying at home, at least for her first year, which pleases us very much. She is quite active in the work of our Church, serving as Church organist for the 11:00 a.m. service. She has been very helpful in the promoting of the Church program, particularly in the youth work, which causes us to be quite proud of her.

Even though we are extremely happy in our new work we still cherish the memory of the many happy years we spent in the South East and Southern Conventions. We hope that each of you will keep us on your prayer list, and come to see us if you are ever in this part of God's world.

Yours in Christ,
The Melvin Dollars

to be on this earth, it would be in waking up in the morning and having no story to think about, nothing to do but to make luncheon dates. I believe every adult should have to work for the right to live; if not at household chores, then at a job or craft."

The Women's Fellowship of Great Bridge, Norfolk, had its annual May Fellowship Day program and family night supper May 5. A film and skits provided the program.

More than 6000 square feet of vinyl asbestos tile was laid by the men of Edgewood, Burlington, in four evenings of one week, and rubber base mold finished in two additional evenings. Cost of the material was $972.

Edgewood United Church of Christ, Burlington, is having Family Life Conferences, sponsored by the Committee on Christian Education, the first three Wednesday evenings in May. Rev. Robert Knowles, Rev. John Graves, and the pastor, Rev. Harold Myers, will be the leaders. Their respective topics are: How Do They Grow Spiritually; Facing the Problem of Death; and Christian Answers to Sex Questions. Following the presentation by the leader, the group will divide into three groups for discussion — parents of pre-school, elementary, and teen-age children.

Our Senior Citizens

Honorable J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., Governor of Virginia, has designated the month of May as Senior Citizens Month.

The general purpose of Senior Citizens Month is to focus attention on the increase in life expectancy and the community's responsibility to channel the latter years of our citizens into occupations which are useful to the individual and to society, and to make effective use of the talents, education, experience and wisdom of our older people.

In 1900 the population of Virginia was 1,854,000 of which 72,846 persons, or 3.9 per cent, were over the age of 65.

In 1950 Virginia population had increased to 3,318,000, with an over-age 65 population of 6.5 per cent.

Today, the population of Virginia has increased to 3,966,949 of which 288,970 persons, or close to 8 per cent, are 65 years of age or older.

In Caesar's time, 2000 years ago, the average age of all persons was 25 years.

In Washington's time the average age of all persons was 38 years.

In 1900 the average age was 48 years, but today the average life expectancy of all persons is 70 years.

Today there are many older people who are unemployed even though they are quite capable of good work. If you can give a Senior Citizen a job, telephone the Virginia State Employment Service and ask for the Older Worker Interviewer.

Prayer For Parents

(Author Unknown)

Dear Heavently Father, make me a better parent. Teach me to understand my children, to listen patiently to what they have to say and answer all their questions kindly. Keep me from interrupting them, talking back to them and contradicting them. Make me as courteous to them as I would have them be to me. Give me the courage to confess my sins against my children and to ask of them forgiveness when I know that I have done them wrong.

May not I vainly hurt the feelings of my children. Forbid that I should laugh at their mistakes or resort to shame and ridicule as punishment.

Let me not tempt my child to lie and steal. So guide me hour by hour that I may demonstrate by all I say and do that honesty produces happiness.

Reduce, I pray, the meanness in me. May I cease to nag; and when I am out of sorts, help me, O Lord, to hold my tongue.

Blind me to the little errors of my children, and help me to see the good things that they do. Give me a ready word of honest praise.

Help me to grow up with my children, to treat them as those of their own age, but let me not expect of them the judgments and conventions of adults. Allow me not to rob them of the opportunity to wait upon themselves, to think, to choose and to make decisions.

Forbid that I should ever punish them for my selfish satisfaction. May I grant them all their wishes that are reasonable and have the courage always to withhold a privilege which I know will do them harm.

Make me fair and just, so considerate and companionable to my children that they will have a genuine esteem for me. Fit me to be loved and imitated by my children.

Amen.

THE OBSERVANCE OF PENTECOST

The seventh Sunday after Easter (this year May 21) is known in the Christian Year as Pentecost. On that first Pentecost the Holy Spirit descended on the apostles, 3,000 souls were added to the Christian community, and the church was born.

During these post-Easter weeks it is appropriate to think of the meaning of the church and our place in it. Just what is the church? Think on this definition: The church is a society of believers seeking to know and to do the will of God, looking to Jesus for the way and the power.

The Founding of The Christian Church At Lebanon Church Surry County, Virginia — 1794

By Rev. Wm. T. Scott Convention Historian

An address delivered at Old Lebanon Church Site, Surry County, Virginia, Sunday, May 7, 1961.

One of the least known but most significant events in American history took place near this spot 167 years ago — August 4-5, 1794. It was here at Old Lebanon Church that the CHRISTIAN CHURCH was organized — the first indigenous Protestant denomination born in America. Before 1794 Lebanon Chapel had long been a meetinghouse of John Wesley's "Methodist Societies," and prior to that time more than likely a chapel of the Church of England.

Let us move back swiftly across time — 167 years — to 1794, which is to us a year famous in the history of Christian freedom in America. Let us briefly review some of the conditions heralding that significant era in the United States.

In 1794 the Revolutionary War had been over only eleven years: The treaty of peace had been signed and the last British troops had left New York in 1783. Four years later the Constitution had been adopted, and President George Washington had been inaugurated for his first term in 1789. He had made a tour of the South, which has become notable in the annals of history. The country had a population of only 4,000,000, of whom more than 650,000 were Negro slaves. The means of transportation had not changed greatly for 4,000 years — animal drawn vehicles on land and slow sailing vessels on water were the only means of transportation. The steamboat was about 14 years in the future; the railroad was not to become a reality for 36 years, and the automobile and airplane were not to be our blessing and curse for more than a century.

Lotteries were one of the most popular means of raising money for the erection of public buildings, even including churches. The use of spiritous liquors was more or less general. There was an uprising in 1794 known as the Whisky Insurrection in Pennsylvania, in opposition to the Federal tax on alcoholic beverages. Apple brandy was a popular drink, even ministers and devout churchmen enjoying the social glass. An instance has been recorded of a member of a church, who asked a minister home to dinner and who was turned out of the church at the next conference because he was too stingy to invite the parson to partake of a dram before dinner! Still another instance is cited, where there were two old churches in a county, one of which was sold and the proceeds, strange to relate, were invested in a distillery to make brandy in order to keep the other church going!

Practically everything was made in the home, from hats to shoes. Living was more or less easy and everyone took life pretty much in the same easy-going way. Cities were few, and the science of medicine had made but little progress since the days of St. Luke, the beloved physician. The coin of the realm was the pound, shilling, and pence of old England and so remained until well after 1800, when our present system of currency became generally accepted. Preachers' salaries were often paid in kind instead of in cash. There were no public schools; churches were, as a rule, very small, some of them being poor apologies for meeting places.

The period in which the Christian Church was born in 1794 was one of great upheaval, socially, politically, and religiously. This upheaval found its most violent expression in the American Revolution in our own country and the French Revolution in Europe. Free thought was the contention, both in Europe and among American colonists. The principle of the rights of man was dominant in civilized nations everywhere. The common people insisted upon being heard, and revolt was everywhere in the air.

Religiously, this was the period when Wesley and Whitfield kindled a flame of spiritual fervor which spread through England and America like a forest fire. The colonies and, later the new-born republic, became the battleground for contending religious forces. Puritanism and Calvinism were entrenched in New England, with Congregationalism in fact the "established church." Roger Williams had left the Massachusetts Bay Colony and founded the colony of Rhode Island and the Providence Plantation, making it at the same time a citadel for the Baptists. Holland had set up her Dutch church in New York, and William Penn had founded Pennsylvania as a Quaker colony with Philadelphia, the "City of Brotherly Love," as its chief settlement. Scotland sent her Calvinistic Presbyterians to every frontier settlement. The Church of England was firmly entrenched in Virginia, the Carolinas, and other Southern colonies. The result of all of this was the most intense of religious rivalries, and from which America has never recovered. Arminism accused Calvinism; Anabaptists smote Pedobaptists; Predestinarians belabored the freedom of the will; Free Grace trampled Election! The body of Christ was patched over with and divided into sections, which were labelled with the names of men, and was deliberately and devoutly parceled out into what is now familiarly known as "Branches of the Church."

It was in the midst of these stirring times and "confusion of tongues" which rivalled, if possible, even that at the Tower of Babel, that our CHRISTIAN CHURCH was born. It was to form from the first a union movement, born of the passion of devout men to restore the unity of the Church — that unity, which had been lost through "worldly pride; human doctrine, unapostolic measures, and a lack of love to God and sympathy for men." Their simple plan was to make Jesus Christ Lord, King, and Head of the Church; the Holy Bible their only rule of faith and practice; and the right and duty of each person under God to interpret doctrine as the Holy Spirit might give light. In those days of bitter controversy they preached and practiced the essential unity of the body of Christ, not upon uniform agreement on doctrine but upon the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Those things were talked of and experienced here at Old Lebanon Church in 1794.

The leader of this movement was James O'Kelly, born of Irish ancestry, probably in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, about 1738. Strongly influenced by the lay preachers of John Wesley's "Methodist Societies" — a pietistic movement within the Established Church in England and America — pious James O'Kelly became a Methodist lay preacher himself on January 2, 1775. His deep conviction, power and influence were attested to by no less a contemporary than Francis Asbury, who had come to America in 1771 to be Superintendent of Wesley's "Methodist Societies." Already the seeds of the American Revolution had been planted, and soon this new continent was to be bathed in the blood of patriots.

The War of Independence won and the Church of England disestablished in the colonies, the members of the Methodist Societies set about to establish themselves as an American denomination. Their preachers met in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1784 and there organized the Methodist Episcopal Church. It was at this organizational meeting that Frances Asbury and James O'Kelly became Elders in the Methodist Church, O'Kelly becoming Presiding Elder of the vast Southern District composed of counties of Virginia and North Carolina, while Asbury was Superintendent and later became Bishop.

O'Kelly was opposed to bishops and from 1784 to 1792 he vigorously and relentlessly opposed the episcopal nature of the newly formed Methodist Church. Conflict soon became open opposition to Bishop Francis Asbury, whose "autocratic rule," as O'Kelly termed it, sparked rebellion on the part of O'Kelly and other leaders of Methodism. At the first "General Conference" of the Methodist Episcopal Church, meeting in Baltimore in 1792, James O'Kelly sought to offset the growing power of Methodist Bishops by urging increased democracy in church government, including a greater lay participation. These he contended were in keeping with the newly won political independence of the American colonies and the divine rights of the children of God. When his "Right of Appeal" resolution failed, after two days of debate, he led about 30 Methodist preachers out of the Conference.

Continuing their efforts to effect amendment, the dissenters held Virginia conferences at Reece's Chapel in Charlotte County the latter part of 1792; at Piney Grove in Chesterfield County, August 2, 1793; at Manakin Town, Powhatan County, December 25, 1793. At the latter place seeing, "the door to negotiations shut, all hope of union sunk," says O'Kelly, "a separation or a slavish submission was unavoidable. And we unanimously chose the former." It was here that they adopted the temporary name, "Republican Methodist," and O'Kelly writes "we formed our ministers on an equality; gave the lay members the balance of power in the legislature; and left the executive business in the church collectively. But fearing we should err again, as we were young in the business, we resolved to establish nothing we had done before another general meeting."

The next "general meeting" of the Republican Methodists was held

August 4-5, 1794, at this spot where we now stand. During the two eventful days, or more, these pilgrims sought earnestly to find the way of the Lord for them and their posterity. Here it was that the Rev. Rice Haggard, native of Norfolk County and one of the preachers who had left the Baltimore Methodist Conference with O'Kelly in 1792, rose and holding an open New Testament in his hand said: "BRETHREN, THIS IS A SUFFICIENT RULE OF FAITH AND PRACTICE, and by it we are told the disciples were called Christians, and I move that HENCEFORTH AND FOREVER THE FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST BE KNOWN AS CHRISTIANS, SIMPLY."

The motion was carried unanimously and the Christian Church was born. Democratic in its simple polity, local churches were to call their own pastors and manage their own affairs. Associating themselves in conference, the laymen were to be equal with ministers in representation. Primarily Wesleyan in doctrine, the right and privilege were reserved to the individual Christian to interpret truth as he might be led by the Holy Spirit. Before the conference adjourned, O'Kelly declared that Jesus came to establish one church — not many; that "any number of Christians united in love, having Christ for their head and centre of union, constitutes a Church." They declared that the organization they had formed was for the purpose of effecting a union of all the true followers of Jesus Christ. They enunciated what has been the guiding spirit of the Christian Church — the "Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church."

I close with words from the address of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of sacred memory, given at this place on August 4, 1927, on the occasion of the dedication of this monument:

"We have come a long way since the days of Revs. Rice Haggard and James O'Kelly. We have climbed to higher heights and come closer to God. For the doors of churches were closed to these men and they were excluded from pulpits and congregations, consigned to the hall of scorn and rebellion in their day FOR NO GREATER CRIME THAN THAT OF CLAIMING THE RIGHT OF APPEAL FROM A BISHOP'S DECISION, AND THE RIGHT OF LAYMEN TO HAVE A VOICE IN CHURCH

What Is The Holy Spirit?

A Sermon by
Dr. Curtis Beach, Minister

Smithfield Congregational Church
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
April 23, 1961

I am preaching this sermon in answer to a question asked by a member of the congregation. "What is the Holy Spirit?" She said: "I hear you use the word spirit again and again in our service — starting out with the statement 'God is Spirit' and ending with the benediction, 'May the spirit that was in Jesus be in us also.' What do you mean by spirit and why do you say the word so much?"

I had not realized it, but I guess I do use the word spirit a great deal. That is because it is such an important term in religion. It has been said that the whole of the Christian faith could be expressed in terms of the Spirit. It has also been said that there is nothing the Church needs more than a fresh infusion of the Holy Spirit and an understanding of what the Spirit means. That is very true. Yet I am reminded of the remark of a bewildered church-goer: "So far as I am concerned, the Holy Spirit is a holy fog." So this morning I am going to try to define terms — and tell you what Spirit is and why it means so much in the Christian faith.

* * * *

The basic meaning of the word spirit is breath. In all three ancient languages in which our faith was cradled — Hebrew, Greek and Latin — the word for spirit and the word for breath is the same. Because a man was alive as long as he could breathe, and appeared to be dead when the breath had stopped, the word for breath also came to mean spirit, which, in this case is practically equivalent to life. There are other meanings to the word spirit — personality, mind, attitude, emotion, influence, presence — but these are all derived from the basic concept of breath. The spirit is the living power in man; it is also the creative energy of God.

We find the word spirit in the very first chapter of the Bible, in the story of creation, where it says that "the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." The line could also be translated, "The breath of God blew upon the surface of the waters." The poetic image it conveys is that of God with his cheeks puffed out, blowing on the unbroken seas that covered the earth and causing the oceans to take shape. This mysterious power was the breath or spirit of God. It was something that went forth from God and moved upon the chaos and caused the universe to be formed. The divine breath or Holy Spirit was a pictorial way of describing the creative energy of God.

We find the word again in the second chapter of Genesis in the story of the creation of man. The statement is made that God "breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living being." This could also be translated, "God breathed into man the spirit of life." Here the picture is quite expressive. God had modelled Adam's body and breathed into it some of his own breath, and thus the man began to move. It was the spirit of God, the breath of God, that came into man and gave him life.

The word spirit, then, is almost equivalent to life, but it is not quite so broad as that. The term implies conscious existence. The Bible means that God not only gave man life, but also gave him conscious existence — the ability to think, feel, hope, plan and pray. The term spirit is often used in contrast to body. The body is the physical organism; the spirit is the mental and emotional life. It includes the mind, but it is more than the mind, because it also includes the emotions. Man not only thinks and reasons; he also pities, hates, laughs, weeps, sympathizes, and loves. The spirit in man is the real man, the invisible man. It is the personality, within the body. It is the only part of man that can be eternal. The body is the house in which the spirit dwells.

Thus we see the meaning of the statement, "God is Spirit." God clearly does not have a body. But he does have a mind — or, more accurately, he is a mind: he thinks and plans. And he does have emotions: he cares and loves. "God is Spirit," and so are we. The Spirit of God is the source of our spirit. That is the meaning of the Biblical story. When God created man, he breathed into him a part of his own life. The spirit in man is a part of the spirit of God. The Holy Spirit, of course, is not a thing, it is not a gas, or a vapor or even a breath, it is God. But the term is usually used to denote God acting. It is a figure of speech for the creative activity of God.

* * * *

But the term Holy Spirit is usually used in a much more specific and immediate sense than that. It is used to denote the activity of God in making contact with human beings. It is the mind of God making contact with our mind, and influencing and directing our thoughts. It is God's means of communication with us. Just as the Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters and gave them shape, and as the Spirit of God breathed on man and gave him life, so we believe the Spirit of God can touch a man at any time and give him "newness of life." It can revitalize his existence. That is what we mean by "inspiration." The word inspire, incidentally, comes from the same root as the word spirit and means literally "to breathe in." The concept here is that something comes from God (figuratively speaking, his breath) and gets into a man and re-creates him. It gives him new direction, new outlook, new vigor, new zest.

We are speaking, of course, in poetic symbols, but the experience they describe is very real. We believe that in some way God does touch and influence our lives. How he does it we do not know. But we cannot feel that God has left himself without a way of communicating with us, of guiding and inspiring and directing our thoughts. To be sure, he cannot influence my thought unless I let him — unless I keep my mind open and try to think clearly and let him show me what I ought to do. The Holy Spirit, then, is the term we use to describe the outreach of God, touching and transforming human life. As I said, its operation is a mystery. That is what the writer of the Gospel of John meant when he said: "The wind blows where it will; and you do not know where it comes from or where it goes, but you do know what it does. So it is with the Spirit of God." (Remember that the word for breath and wind and spirit, in Greek, is the same.) The Holy Spirit is, poetically speaking, the breath of God, the mind of God, touching us, inspiring us, and drawing us to him.

* * * *

The term Holy Spirit, or its equivalent, is used many times in the Old Testament. The words which our choir sings before the pastoral prayer, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us," come from one of the Psalms. The Bible speaks of the Spirit of God entering into the prophets and being given to Moses.

But the term Holy Spirit (or just the Spirit) is used much more in the New Testament than in the old. In fact, you might say it is one of the "theme songs" of the early Church. Oddly enough, it was almost never used by Jesus, but was used abundantly by those that came after him. After the disciples had come together again after the crucifixion and had decided to create a fellowship in Jesus' name, they found that there was among them a remarkable enthusiasm, a remarkable vitality, a new zest, a new vigor, something that lifted them up and drove them on. There was also a new attitude among them — an attitude of compassion, kindness, the desire to help other people, the desire to give themselves to others in love. This they called "the Holy Spirit." It was the Spirit of God, touching their lives and giving them new life.

Here I must remind you of some other meanings of the word spirit. Spirit means enthusiasm, as when we speak of the spirit of the crowd at a baseball game. Spirit means vitality or vigor, as when we speak of a spirited horse. Spirit also means attitude, as when we speak of the spirit of generosity or goodwill. Spirit also means influence, as when we speak of the spirit of Jefferson still living in American democracy. Spirit also means the sense of someone's indwelling presence, as when we speak of the spirit of Jesus at our Communion table. All of these meanings — enthusiasm, vigor, vitality, attitude, influence, and continuing presence — are found in the word spirit as it was used in the early Church.

As I said, the early Christians found that there was among them a new enthusiasm, a new vitality, that lifted them up and drove them on. They also found there was a new attitude among them — an attitude of tenderness, sympathy, charity, brotherhood, and the desire to give themselves for the benefit of mankind. This they called "the Spirit"; it was the effect of the Spirit of God. They found that "living by the Spirit," as they called it, was much more dynamic than following the commandments of the Old Testament Law. As Paul put it, "The commandment kills, but the Spirit gives life." He said: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control; concerning these there can be no law." The early Christians found that there was among them a great zeal for spreading the Gospel, for carrying on Jesus' ministry in the world. The Spirit drove many of them to their death, but it also gave them life.

This fire, this mood, this contagion, they said it was the Spirit of God. But they also said it was the spirit of Jesus — and that is the point I want to make. It was the spirit of Jesus — his influence, his attitudes, his vitality, and the consciousness of his presence in their lives — that created this mood and gave it content. They were fully aware of that. The spirit in the Church was "love, joy, patience, kindness," and so on, as Paul says, because these were the attitudes of Jesus. They were the attitudes that Jesus had demonstrated and imparted to them. That was what Paul meant when he said, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." The spirit of Jesus should be at the very heart of the Church's life.

The Holy Spirit, then, for the early Church, was the Spirit of God, but it was also the spirit of Jesus. Or, to put it more exactly, it was the Spirit of God working through Jesus. It came from God into Jesus and was transmitted through him into the Church.

This is expressed pictorially in some of the symbolic passages of the New Testament. According to the Gospel of John, the Holy Spirit descended upon Jesus at his baptism, in the form of a dove. After his death it was transmitted by him to his disciples. In one of his resurrection appearances he says to his followers, "Receive my spirit." John is saying, in poetic symbol, that during Jesus' lifetime his spirit — God's Spirit — was contained or "bottled up" in him. At his death it was released to his followers, as the wine pours out of a broken crock. That is a poetic symbol for exactly what happened. During his lifetime the disciples did not quite "catch" Jesus' spirit, but after his death they did. When they "caught" it, the Church was born.

It is not correct, historically, to say that Jesus created the Church. He probably had no intention of creating a church. The Church came into being after his death. It was the spirit of Jesus that created it — or, rather, the Spirit of God transmitted through him. From the point of view of Christian theology, the Holy Spirit created the Church.

But the Spirit has never ceased to empower the Church. It still comes to us — from Jesus and from God — directing and uplifting our fellowship, guiding our work and challenging our action, calling us to give ourselves to help humanity in this critical and exciting age. The Holy Spirit still comes to us from God, "creating and renewing" the Church of Christ.

* * * *

Or does it?

Someone once spoke of the "lost radiance" — the radiance that was seen in the early Church. Those first Christians knew what "the Spirit" meant. They were fired and charged with it. They were driven and compelled by it. They were transfigured and transformed by it. It gave them life, but it sometimes also brought them death. It gave them power, so that they went out to win the world for their new faith. They were willing to sacrifice for it, because it meant more to them than life itself. They were willing to die for their faith, because they believed that the world needed what they had to give.

And we? Does the Holy Spirit challenge us as it did them? Is the Church empowered by the Spirit as it was then? I sometimes wonder. Sometimes it seems to me that the modern Church, with all its buildings and all its organization and all its endowments — things which the early Church never had — sometimes it seems to me that the modern Church is a pale replica of the vibrant Church of the early days. Can we recover the energy that we have lost? Can the Spirit work through us as it did through them? That depends on us. It can — but only if we give ourselves to it wholeheartedly, creatively, enthusiastically, dynamically — and find in our fellowship here the contagion of the spirit of God. Only if we look beyond these four walls, and beyond our own lives, to the pressing needs of humanity, and try to serve those needs with a greater zeal and a greater sacrifice than we have ever shown so far. The voice of God is calling — calling us to do his work in this age — so full of frightful possibilities, and so full of opportunity.

We need a fresh injection of the Holy Spirit — in ourselves, in our lives, in our church, in the Church at large. The Holy Spirit can only live in the Church if it lives in us. It can live in us only if we open our lives to it — and respond. People like you and me, feeling the compulsion of the Spirit so strongly that they cannot resist it, can make the Church what it ought to be — an instrument of God for the transformation of mankind.

* * * *

Almighty God, who brought the worlds into being, and whose creative power has given us life: Transform the lethargy of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that we may completely give ourselves to thee, and serve mankind in accordance with thy will. Amen.

The Holy Spirit

By Henry H. Tweedy

O Spirit of the Living God,
Thou Light and Fire Divine:
Descend upon Thy Church once more
And make it truly Thine!
Fill it with love and joy and power,
With righteousness and peace,
Till Christ shall dwell in human hearts,
And sin and sorrow cease.

Blow, Wind of God! With wisdom blow
Until our minds are free
From mists of error, clouds of doubt,
Which blind our eyes to Thee!
Burn, winged fire! Inspire our lips
With flaming love and zeal,
To preach to all Thy great Good News, God's glorious Commonweal!

Teach us to utter living words
Of truth which all may hear,
The language of all men understand
When love speaks, loud and clear;
Till every age and race and clime
Shall blend their creeds in one,
And earth shall form one brotherhood
By whom Thy will is done.

So shall we know the power of Him
Who came mankind to save.
So shall we rise with Him to life
Which soars beyond the grave;
And earth shall win true holiness,
Which makes Thy children whole,
Till, perfected by Thee, we preach
Creation's glorious goal!

Antidote To Panic

By Rev. Frank E. Ratzell

There is something akin to panic in the minds and attitudes of many people, assaulted as we are from every side by crises and alarms everywhere. We don't believe in burying our heads in the sands, but it would seem a matter of common good judgment to get a more balanced view of the news picture. Nothing saps away courage and initiative faster than a steady diet of the daily news presented by the secular press. It creates the distortion that everything and everybody have gone mad.

The truth is that a tremendous amount of good is being done right now and that good is being reported principally by the church press. We should all be familiar with such publications as The Christian Century, The United Church Herald, The Christian Sun, to name a few. These papers not only report the other side of the news, they offer the thinking of able commentators on the passing scene whose good judgment and whose information are trustworthy.

As further antidotes to panic, we suggest more familiarity with the Bible, and especially the New Testament. There is also more worship, prayer, and free discussion with others of the things that trouble us. And finally, work — creative work in the church, such as participation in its activities, its charities, its teaching program, its music — anywhere you feel you can be useful. People purposefully engaged in the work of the church are not easily sucked under by the panic and pressures of the time. They are "about their Father's business," and that is the chief business of any Christian.

Hearing members of Congress of the United States, and many others, orate on slum clearance one gets the impression that the undertaking is a sort of salvation to reform individuals. History of slum clearance repudiates this assumption.

There is admiration and support for anything to help alleviate living conditions of the unfortunate, whether such circumstances are the result of environment, unusual conditions or lack of opportunity. But advocates of slum clearance fail to mention the cause of such conditions or what it takes to prevent them.

Philadelphia, Boston, New York and Chicago are among the cities which pioneered in slum clearance, but these cities have more slums now than at any other time in their history. After a century, despite housing progress, decaying tenements are still around in these cities with their hazards to health and safety, their phantom landlords.

Slums are created by people, and it is what is in the mind and heart of the individual that does it. Habits of people, wherever and whoever they are, are merely the outward physical manifestations of what is inside the people themselves. The outbreak on the skin of a person afflicted with measles is not the disease itself but only the evidence of it. Thus people make slums, rather than slums make people.

The remedy for slum clearance lies within the breast of every slum dweller and nowhere else. A farmer cannot change the habits of his livestock by placing blue ribbons around their necks and housing them in his parlor. A new building cannot reform the individual, and persistence of slums and increase in crime show that new houses do not make new characters.

Slums will be eradicated when each individual in them says to himself: "I will be a different and better person" and act accordingly. Pious resolutions cannot do this. Congress cannot do it with appropriations.

The idealists who founded settlement houses near the beginning of the present century held the view that vice and crime are byproducts of poverty and would disappear with better living places. This has proved to be an over-optimistic view of human nature. Individuals and gangs that roam the streets of many cities day and night committing crimes upon the innocent are largely by-products of idleness. Many of these criminals live in modern places elegantly furnished, not slums.

Every society contains a core of people who are unable to come to terms with life. Every society also contains people who choose to avoid work and prefer unpleasant surroundings as a penalty for idleness rather than work and live in better places as a reward. And often, unfortunately, idleness is a byproduct of public welfare.

Much is written and spoken about the standard of living in the United States, that standard always being equated with the number of automobiles, radios, household conveniences and gadgets, and the per capita consumption of various foods. But a crying need of the times is a higher standard of thinking... a good first step toward the elimination of slums.

It should be obvious that the practical approach to the elimination of slums should be through teaching of the elemental principles of morality, ethics and human relations. Otherwise, life in the slums will continue to produce more life in a vicious circle

WORLD'S GREATEST NEED

- A little less creed;
- A little more giving and a little less greed;
- A little more smile and a little less frown;
- A little less kicking a man when he's down;
- A little more "we" and a little less "I";
- A little more laughs and a little less cry;
- A little more flowers on the pathway of life,
- And fewer on graves at the end of the strife.

ATTENTION, N. C. CHURCHES!

The following information, sent by George D. Colclough of the Burlington Chamber of Commerce to the Ministerial Association there, should reach all our churches:

"We understand that the North Carolina Department of Revenue has ruled, and our merchants have been informed, that in order for churches to be exempt from N. C. sales tax they must have a number. This number may be secured by writing to the N. C. Department of Revenue, Raleigh, N. C. and requesting it."

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

On a "dark and stormy night" (April 9) I attended the dedication service for the chapel at the new Clanton Park United Church of Christ in Charlotte, North Carolina.

It was interesting to note that in spite of the bad weather the garage-converted-into-chapel was filled to capacity — more and more chairs were brought in until about 100 people were in attendance. As the pastor, Rev. James C. Jackson said, perhaps it was a good thing it was a stormy night, for if the weather had been good and thus more had attended, he didn't know where they would have been seated!

Superintendent Clyde Fields, who preached the sermon, Mrs. Fields, Hubert Beane, layman from Asheboro, Dorothy Lester, president of W.N.C. Pilgrim Fellowship, and "yours truly" represented our churches in central North Carolina, while a goodly delegation from our Tryon church (including the pastor's parents) showed the interest of Mr. Jackson's "home church" in this, his first parish.

The choir came from a Charlotte Evangelical and Reformed church (as did the pianist, who used to be a member of our Albemarle church), Synod president H. A. Fesperman and local E. and R. minister, Thomas Hamilton, shared in the program, as did local ministers of other denominations. A number of Evangelical and Reformed ministers and lay people were present.

This new church, which owns a farmhouse situated in the center of a new housing development, has outgrown those accommodations and thus has transformed a large garage into an attractive little chapel. Celotex ceiling, heat, a pulpit and a worship center make one forget the former use of the building. We are off to a good start at Clanton Park!

A MEDITATION

ANXIETY

"Humble yourselves therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

I Peter 5:7

Are you looking at the same word in that text which I am? It is a little three-letter word, but where it stands it is great: "All." "Casting all your care on him!" How about that?

There is a portion for us to do, and then, we are to leave it with God. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God." Mark you, it is Simon Peter writing. The same Simon Peter who had once so miserably failed. But he loved the Lord Jesus, and repented with bitter tears.

The Lord was his friend, and he loved him! If we ourselves kept that fact in mind in our own conduct, and thought more of him, our anxieties and worries would be far less likely to take the joy of living from us.

Being humble and obedient Simon Peter had seen the "mighty hand of God," in the upper room at pentecost; in the multitudes that were saved with the simple preaching of the story of Jesus, his death and resurrection; and in the miraculous power given followers. And how painlessly God revealed the fact to Peter that the gospel was to be preached to the Gentile world as well!

As he wrote the above text perhaps he could hear Jesus saying, "Do not be anxious... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Paul asked the Philippians not to worry; but work, pray, give thanks; and the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ." "That my joy may be in you; and that your joy may be full," said Jesus.

THE SOUTH AFRICA MISSION

Johannesburg

1,500,000 people live in this city, the center of the world's greatest gold fields.

May

21—Rev. and Mrs. Lee Bergsman went to South Africa in 1947 from the post of associate pastor of Old South Church, Boston. He is counsellor to African pastors and churches and chairman of the Bridgman Memorial Hospital Board. She specializes in work among women. He has participated in organizing a United Church in the new gold mining area in the Orange Free State.

22—Rev. and Mrs. John Parsons work with the Bergsmans, having gone out in 1954. He visits mine churches and city churches, counsels pastors, and helps to train leaders.

Maphumulo

23—Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Kaetzel are evangelistic missionaries assigned to the area north of Durban in Natal and Zululand, where there are 80 Bantu Congregational churches. She is the first missionary to have been ordained by the Bantu Church. Their home is schoolroom for their children, center for church and community meetings, and a place where sick and injured can receive first aid.

Modderpoort

24—Rev. and Mrs. William Booth are well-educated — he studied at University of Maine, Hartford Seminary, Cambridge and King's College in England, and Yale Divinity School; she at Schauflyer, Hartford and London University. He is principal of Adams Theological School, which is maintained jointly by London Missionary Society and our American Board. Most of the students are married and bring their families. All share work in garden, grounds, and kitchen. Special prayers are asked for the continued freedom of theological schools in South Africa to carry on their work without interference.

25—Rev. and Mrs. P. Allen Myrick spent 1956 in South Africa on a traveling Fellowship awarded by Union Seminary and the Phelps-Stokes Fund. They went there in 1958 to teach at Adams United Theological School. He teaches Old and New Testament, Church History, Christian Doctrine and Practical Theology. She teaches classes in the work of the pastor's wife.

Roodeport

26—Mr. and Mrs. David Rubenstein served 1947-56 at Adams College, until it was closed. They are managers of the Wilgespruit Fellowship Centre near Johannesburg. This is an interdenominational conference center in a place where true Christian fellowship is difficult to attain.

Ecuador

27—When the United Andean Indian Mission was founded in 1945 a careful survey was made to find places of greatest need in life of Indians of Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia. There is a four-fold program centering in church, agricultural, educational and medical ministries. Four denominations support it: Evangelical and Reformed, Evangelical United Brethren, Presbyterians, U.S., United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Gleanings From The Southern Synod

Evangelical and Reformed Church
Grace Church, Newton, N. C.

1. Southern Synod voted 99 to 26 with 2 abstaining, in favor of the United Church of Christ.
2. The Synod voted to assume the task of raising by various means the sum of $400,000 for a chapel on the campus at Catawba College during the next 3 years.
3. Catawba College reported largest enrollment in its history 848 full and part time students and for the first time we had a larger number of United Church of Christ students than any other denomination enrolled at the college (189).
4. In 1960 the Synod established one new church, paid its apportionment for the 18th consecutive year in full and overpaid its World Service Goal. Givings for benevolent and other causes exceeded $200,000 for the first time.
5. In 1960 the net gain of members for the synod was only 190 though 1076 members were received. Rather large erasures in one congregation accounted for this. Church school enrollment was 16,925.
6. Three young men were licensed and ready for ordination into the Christian ministry: Yorke Peeler, Jr., Wade Curran and Rex Dobey.
7. Blowing Rock Assembly Grounds announced 3 new cottages available in addition to the dormitories for our families vacationing or attending conferences this summer.
8. Nazareth Children's Home has 55 children under the leadership of new supt. Charles Beidler. Churches of Synod gave $22,325. Each congregation is asked to give $2 per member during the coming year.
9. United Church Retirement Home has been authorized to move forward and with funds from churches to secure competent help in drawing up plans for the home.
10. There are 74 Women's Guilds which gave over $10,000 to national Guild work and almost $4,000 to the Nazareth Children's Home. Brotherhood has 66 chapters, 1500 members, and has the project of raising money for a new kitchen at Johns River Valley Camp.
11. The Synod Church Builders Club continues to grow with 47

RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations of Social Action Committee, E. and R. Synod.

1. That the monthly publication of "Social Action" be subscribed to at $2 per year by every congregation and that individual subscriptions also be encouraged.
2. That the churches support the migrant program to the extent that they endorse the following federal or state legislative measures:
 - a. Extension of a federal minimum wage to agricultural workers.
 - b. Extension of the services of the National Labor Relations Board to organizations of farm workers.
 - c. Provision of national crew leader registration and supervision to protect migrants from the unscrupulous practices of some crew leaders and labor contractors and the establishment of a federal housing code for these workers so as to make crew leaders comply with the code.
 - d. Provision of federal financial aid to local school districts in meeting their responsibility to migrant workers for education of children and for vocational education to youth and adults.
 - e. Extension to agricultural employment of the full coverage of the child labor protections of the Fair Labor Standards Act.
 - f. Improvement of the administration and enforcement of such protective and beneficial programs as the filing of returns on workers earnings under the Social Security Act, the Annual Worker Plan of the Farm Placement Service, and the Interstate Commerce Commission's transportation code.
 - g. That the above recommendations be expressed by our membership to their respective local representatives.
3.
 - a. That we continue to participate in World affairs through the United Nations and that the United Nations be that instrument through which the new and emerging nations of Asia and Africa be educated and guided, lovingly and sympathetically, into self rule, whereby they may no longer be used as means to other men's purposes but attain unto personal and social dignity.
 - b. That we encourage our nation to strive for the development of an effective and enforceable body of international law.
 - c. That our churches should give vigorous support to the Freedom from Hunger Campaign being conducted under the supervision of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the U. N., not neglecting our own World Service.
 - d. That we combat Communism, not by negations and name calling, but through a positive approach "by making our own system more adequate to human needs;" the full use of diplomatic, political, economic and cultural means in building free and just societies; positive support of change in places where justice demands fundamental reforms.
 - e. That we heartily welcome the increased attention now being given by both government and private organizations to plans for the reduction and control of armaments and we believe such efforts should have more vigorous public support, since an ever-accelerated arms race will lead, not to security but to disaster.
 - f. That the people of our churches help to build the public opinion that will make it possible for the United States to provide the positive leadership that our world clearly needs.
4. That we endorse "A Call to Renewed Responsibility for Racial and Cultural Relations" by:
 - a. Praying and working for the elimination of segregation and discrimination in every aspect of our common life, beginning especially with each local church.
 - b. Supporting those citizens who have been moved to protest the wrongness of particular laws or customs by non-violent demonstrations and commending those who, with admirable self-discipline and courage, have by peaceful means opposed the inequities of segregation in churches and in places of public accommodation.
 - c. Urging the institutions and facilities of our church within the synod to serve all racial and cultural groups.
5. That our people participate in the study "The Family and Rapid Social Change" which emphasis will begin in July, 1961.
(This report was adopted.)

Youth Faces The Future

We the youth of the United Church of Christ affirm that God has made himself known to us in Jesus Christ and has called us into his Church. Believing that he seeks us in holy love, we would respond by joining together in covenant with him.

He gathers us into a loving fellowship in which we encounter one another as unique persons who are created in his image. We seek to express the spirit of this fellowship in all our relationships.

Our vocation is to witness to the message and mission of the church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace. Our hope is in God who in Jesus Christ offers redemption to all men and gives promise to his kingdom of love.

The Youth Covenant

Perhaps several of you noticed the change in the heading of this week's Youth Page. The United Church Youth Covenant is used instead of the customary Statement of Purpose. At the Joint National Youth Council last summer, one of the main areas of thought and concern was the newly-proposed Youth Covenant. After returning from the Council, the four Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship delegates lead classes and discussions on the Covenant at the 1960 Moonelon Officers Conference. Because the Youth Covenant may someday replace the Statement of Purpose, every P.F.'er should at least have some basic knowledge or understanding of the Covenant. The following material was written by members of the Plan of Organization Committee of the Joint National Council. Although this is only an introduction to the Covenant, it is hoped that this introduction will stimulate more study and discussion within the individual Pilgrim Fellowships.

"First, let's make sure we know what a covenant is! A covenant is an agreement or a contract between two parties. The covenant usually involves a statement of the rights and duties to be taken on by both parties. Sometimes a covenant is between two equals, sometimes between a king and his people, sometimes between a conqueror and his victim.

"The Hebrews described their relationship with God as 'covenantal' — that is, God chose the Hebrews to do a job. He promised on His side to be their Ruler and Saviour; in turn He demanded of them faithfulness and obedience, justice and righteousness. The Hebrews looked back to the time of Moses as the time when God gave this covenant to the people. You'll find the background for this event that was so important to the Hebrews in Exodus and the story of God's establishing the covenant with the people in Exodus 24. To learn how important this covenant was to Hebrew religion, read carefully the following writings from the prophets: Amos 3:1-2; Hosea 2:15; Jeremiah 7:22-26, 31:32; Ezekiel 16:3-8; 60, 23:1-8. You will notice that God, not the people, is always the one who established the covenant. The responsibility of the people is to respond. Thus it was that the Hebrew Law (including the Ten Commandments) came to be — to help the people respond to the covenant established by God.

"Christians see in the New Testament the record of the establishment of the 'New Covenant.' This new 'Contract' defining the relationship between God and man (all men now, not just the Hebrews) was established through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. God keeps his side of the covenant by graciously loving man; man is to respond through faith in Jesus Christ and through the by-product of that faith, love for his fellow man. While the Hebrew nation was chosen to keep the Old Covenant, the Church is called to keep the New Covenant.

"Now that we have an idea of what a covenant means to Christians, why should there be a covenant for United Church Youth? The answer is really very easy. United Church Youth is the 'youth ministry' of the United Church of Christ. Or, to put it in another way, it is 'the Church at work among young people.' If United Church Youth is the church, if it is the ministry, then its call to enter into the New Covenant of Jesus Christ with God is the same as that given to the church throughout history. The only reason why United Church Youth exists at all is because God has established a 'covenant' with us, his children.

"You will recall that both Pilgrim Fellowship and Youth Fellowship had a common statement of purpose. It had three paragraphs, each one describing something that we thought was our job to do. But there are two reasons why this old Statement of Purpose is being abandoned. One reason is that the Joint National Council of 1958 expressed dissatisfaction with the actual wording of the old statement. But we could have just done some rewording if that was the only objection. The other is the greater reason: it was felt that the job of the church (or the United Church Youth, to be specific) should not be thought of as our statement of our purpose, but rather as a statement of God's purposes for us and our responsibility to Him. Any organization can have a 'statement of purpose,' but only the Church can have a 'covenant with God.' So, United Church Youth should have a covenant to express what God has done for us and what he calls us to do!"

Twenty have signed up for attending Moonelon from Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines. The church shares in the cost.

The Youth Fellowship at Mt. Zion, near Mebane, has installed floodlights on the side of the church hut.

May 5 and 19 are the two nights this month designated for "Youth Recreation" in the social hall of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia. Those from 9 to 18 years of age enjoy various stunts, games and contests.

Elon College Ministerial Association

By Wayne Gardner

This has been an interesting year for the Ministerial Association in its work here at the College and throughout the Southern Convention. As soon as school started in September the Ministerial Association started its organization of deputation teams. For those who are not familiar with deputation teams, these teams are composed of students preparing themselves for full-time Christian vocations.

These teams are available to any church in the Southern Convention which is interested in reorganizing and organizing Pilgrim Fellowship groups. The teams will furnish new ideas and aid in organizing and planning programs for their individual group.

These teams spend the entire weekend, arriving Saturday around noon and working with the youth throughout the entire weekend. In the past, these teams have proved helpful to the churches and the college youth. If the youth of your church would like help in reorganizing their youth program, please contact the Ministerial Association of Elon College.

An impressive installation service was held May 8 at the Elon College Community Church to install the new officers of the Ministerial Association for the 1961-62 year. Wayne Gardner, senior member of the group, led the service. Rev. Clyde Fields, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, brought the evening message to the group entitled "Called to Be Sent" followed by a solo by Miss Constance Blake of West Boxford, Massachusetts. Dr. Ferris Reynolds, sponsor of the group, who has presented the charge to the incoming officers for many years gave the charge entitled "Forget Not The Gifts Which We Have In Us." The charge which was given by the sponsor has become a tradition on the Elon College campus.

The new officers for the coming year are president, Re-elected, James Lewis Rosser, Sanford, North Carolina; vice president, Roger Fletcher, Connecticut; secretary, Doris Ann Morris, Virginia; treasurer, Mary Ann Hepner, Philadelphia; editor of the Ministerial Association Yearbook, Betsy Carden, Fuquay-Springs, North Carolina.

Those participating along with the new officers in the installation service were the retiring officers. They are Larry Smith, vice president, Elon College; Martha Brittle, secretary, Suffolk, Virginia; Wayne A. Gardner, treasurer, Suffolk, Virginia; and Mary Ann Hepner, editor of the Ministerial Association Yearbook, Philadelphia.

The group has been fortunate in having Dr. Ferris Reynolds, chairman of the Department of Philosophy and Religion as sponsor for the group. We appreciate what Dr. Reynolds has done for the group in its work this year and in years past.

ACTIVITIES OF PLYMOUTH P. F.

By Susan Ferrell, Reporter

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Plymouth church (near Raleigh, N. C.) made a trip to Elon College Sunday, April 23. The group packed a picnic lunch and left immediately after Sunday school. We ate lunch at Moonelon and then visited the Children's Home. On our way home we visited the Duke Gardens. It was a lovely day and everyone really enjoyed the trip very much.

The members of our Pilgrim Fellowship at Plymouth recently divided into the junior and young people's groups. We are still working on our "secret" project, which we're very excited about. We are now planning to have a swimming party and picnic at the park, when school is out.

Young people from Edgewood, Burlington, church will go with their advisors to John's River Valley Camp June 16-18 for fun, fellowship, worship.

The Senior Pilgrim Fellowship of Northview is working on a project for its church: a brick walk, which the members are laying.

4-H Club Church Sunday was observed at Union Ridge, Burlington, May 7. Enclosed with the bulletin was an insert regarding stewardship of the soil.

The Philathea Class of Rosemont, South Norfolk, will have their annual Mother and Daughter Banquet May 22 at the church.

UNION SERVICE AT ROSEMONT

By W. H. Bradshaw

A union service was held at Rosemont Christian Church Sunday, April 30, at 7:30 p.m. The Great Bridge and South Norfolk Christian and Oak Grove Methodist church shared with us in a record attendance. Rev. Bill Simmons led the service of worship and read the scripture. Rev. Graham Carlton, pastor of the Oak Grove Church, led the congregational singing. Two selections were rendered by the combined choirs of the four churches. These were "The Awakening Chorus" and "Onward Christian Soldiers." Mrs. Royal Gallup of the Rosemont Church directed the choir and Mrs. Elizabeth Goforth was at the console. The choir numbered nearly fifty voices and their rendition of these two numbers was very inspirational. Another added attraction was a solo by the Rev. O. D. Poythress who is well known as the "singing preacher." Rev. Carroll Lewis brought the message of the evening.

These union services take place every fifth Sunday, alternating with the three churches named above. This idea is quite new. It began a little over two years ago. It is getting to be very popular, as the attendance increases with each succeeding service. The people are beginning to look forward to these fifth Sundays, as there is a great inspirational song service, climaxed by a message by one of the able ministers of the participating churches. The social period that follows is very rich in Christian fellowship and friendship. Time and again we can say "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

From June 15-August 15 the playground of Edgewood church (Burlington) will be used by the city recreation department for community recreation activities.

Week-day kindergarten at Edgewood United Church of Christ, Burlington, is all filled for the next school year with 25 children accepted and others on the waiting list.

The baccalaureate service for Pleasant Grove High School will be held at our Union Ridge church May 28 and the graduation exercises will be held there June 2.

FAMILY SUPPER AT FIRST, RICHMOND

By Mrs. C. W. Sprengle

As a part of Christian Family Life Week observance at First Church, Richmond, a covered dish supper was held on Tuesday night, May 9, at which the 20 new members who have joined the church since last May were the special guests. Among other invited guests were Dr. Dwight M. Chalmers, Pastor Emeritus, and Mrs. Chalmers, and Mr. Laurence Wells and Mr. Robert Lominack, theological students working at the church.

The evening program of "Fun and Fellowship for the Church Family" featured selections by the Junior Choir, games, and an "Old Fashioned Song Fest." The supper and program was sponsored by the Woman's Fellowship of which Mrs. J. Everette Neese is president.

"LIFE OF CHRIST" SERIES AT PLEASANT GROVE

By Dolan Talbert

"The Living Christ" film series is now being shown at the Pleasant Grove church near Bennett, North Carolina. We invite groups from churches in this area to join with us in seeing the life of Christ portrayed so realistically. The films are in color and sound and are very faithful to the Biblical account. We are sure that young and old alike will be inspired and deeply moved as Jesus Christ is made so very real on the screen.

Services are held at 7:30 p.m. each Sunday as follows:

- May 7 — Holy Night
- May 14 — Escape into Egypt
- May 21 — Boyhood and Baptism
- May 28 — Men of the Wilderness
- June 4 — Challenge of Faith
- June 11 — Discipleship
- June 18 — Return to Nazareth
- June 25 — Conflict
- July 2 — Fate of John the Baptist
- July 9 — Retreat and Decision
- July 16 — Triumph and Defeat
- July 23 — Crucifixion and Resurrection

Memorial services were held last Sunday at Shallow Ford, near Elon College, where Rev. Richard Petersen is pastor. Supt Clyde Fields was the speaker for the morning service and Rev. Charles Bell, neighboring pastor at Bethlehem, Altamahaw, brought the memorial address in the cemetery.

The masthead of United Church Herald now lists Emily C. Lester, as writer concerning lay activities of the United Church of Christ.

Hymn of the month at Tryon is "O Be Joyful in the Lord" (based on Psalm 100) written by Dr. Curtis Beach, whose sermon is used in lieu of editorials this week. Dr. Beach is the only current writer to have more than one of his original hymns accepted for inclusion in the new Pilgrim hymnal.

Dr. Charles Pegram calls attention to the fact that we gave the wrong church name to figures listed in The Sun recently. It is Bayside, Norfolk, where Rev. Julius Rice is pastor, which now has a membership of 423. Bayview has 247, which is a net gain of about 70 in three years — which means 100 new members during that time, what with Norfolk's "fluid" population.

Dr. Walter Graham, president of Southern Union College, spoke at both morning services May 14 at First Church, Congregational, Fairfield, Connecticut, where Dr. Henry Robinson is pastor.

The religious affiliation of members of the 87th Congress is interesting. Nineteen Congregational Christians and two members of the Evangelical and Reformed Church are members of the House of Representatives. In the Senate seven are Congregational Christian. There are a total of 98 Roman Catholics in Congress, 1 Sikh, 20 who list "Protestant" but give no denomination, 4 who give no religious affiliation, and 411 who belong to various Protestant denominations. Methodists are most numerous with 94, followed by Presbyterians with 72, Episcopalians with 67, Baptists with 66, and Congregational Christians with 26.

The Virtue Of Self Discipline (Temperance)

Background Scripture: Proverbs 2; 7:1-5; 14:29-30; 16:32; 17; 27; 20:1; 23:19-21; 19:29-35.

Devotional Reading: II Peter 1:3-11.

Memory Selection: The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control. Galatians 5:22-23.

A few weeks ago we had a lesson about "Discipline in the Home" and that lesson emphasized an important aspect of discipline. It is very important and desirable that children and young people be disciplined in the home. Today we come to another important aspect of discipline, which is perhaps even more important than discipline in the home — namely, self-discipline. Indeed the goal of discipline in the home should be self-discipline. What parents should covet and seek after is that the discipline of the home should become self-discipline, that because a child has learned discipline in the home, he will have developed the power of self-discipline as a means of governing himself when he goes out of the home into society. It is one thing for a person to do right because his parents or his teachers or the officer of the law makes him do it; it is quite another thing if he does right because his better self tells him to do it! Self-discipline is the highest form of discipline, the goal of all other disciplines.

Going Through the World Without Brakes

Some years ago as I left my home in College Court to go to my study, a boy from across the street came gliding down the long concrete walk in the Court at a high rate of speed on an improvised bicycle. He had assembled parts of several old bicycles and was having the time of his life coasting down the modest slope of the long street. He would run with the thing as fast as he could and then would straddle it, sitting on a makeshift seat and coast down the grade. When he saw me step off the front porch, he called out in a wild shout, "Get out of the way, Mr. Hardcastle, I ain't got no brakes on this thing!" And all unconsciously that little fellow stated a disturbing fact about so many people, both young and old today — they are going through life without brakes. They have no self-control, no self-discipline, no self-restraint as they go down the streets and roads of life! They are carried along by their appetites and passions, by the standards and actions of the crowd. Something else is in the driver's seat.

Wine and Women

Today's lesson, a Temperance Lesson, is concerned primarily with self-discipline in the matter of wine and women. And so often they go together. There is a quip to the effect that while "candy is dandy, liquor is quicker." In any event two of the perils which confront young people today are drinking and sexual irregularity and immorality. There is far too much drinking by young people, and far too much looseness in relations between the sexes. For one reason or another, or for many reasons, there has been a marked increase in the number of un-wed mothers, many of them of high school age! In many instances drinking and immorality go together. Many a young person, under the influence of liquor, will do things that he or she would never think of doing when sober.

The Prostitute and the Prophet

Proverbs 7 gives the longest and most elaborate description of an adulteress or prostitute in the whole Bible. It tells in a simple, unvarnished way about her wiles and her ways. It also tells about the fate of her victim. Best of all it tells about the means of avoiding her. It is because of this fact that this lesson emphasizes self discipline. Society can make all kinds of laws to control and to punish prostitution, but these laws will be of no effect in getting rid of the evil. The solution to the problem lies not in a change of laws, but in a change of heart. By the way it is significant that in Old Testament days, they punished the adulteress by stoning her, but they did not stone the man! (He was equally guilty!) The Puritans in New England tried sewing a scarlet "A" on the dress of the adulteress, but that did not stop adultery. Nothing will stop it but something deep in the mind and heart of men and women. You do not get rid of sin or temptation by punishment or legislation, but by hating the offense in your heart. A young man abroad for study was asked by a group of "loose livers" how he managed to keep pure amid all the temptations of the city in which he was living, and he said simply that there was a young woman back home waiting for him, and he was doing it for her sake. It was what Thomas Chalmers the great preacher called "the expulsive power of a new or great affection." Unless a young person has a great ideal in his or her heart, and unless life is undergirded from within by a strong self-discipline, he or she has a hard time in our modern world, both from the standpoint of immorality and intemperance.

A Sound Heart

The writer of Proverbs knew nothing about what is now called psychomatic principles, that is he never heard the word as used today. But he knew full well the intimate relationship between mind and body, or as he calls it "heart" and body. "A sound heart is the life of the flesh, but rottenness is the envy of the bones" or as the RSV puts it "A tranquil mind gives life to the flesh, but passion makes the bones rot." This is not hocus pocus. What tremendous effect does mind have over body! How many physical ills and how much sickness is due to mental and moral sickness or maladjustments! Only this morning, as I started to write these NOTES a man came into my study, a man who is not a member of my church, but who calls on me from time to time for help such as I try to give him. I knew from his appearance that something was wrong, and it soon came to light. A day or two before, in a moment of weakness, and under stress and strain, he had spoken sharply and bitterly to a person. And the thing had so upset him that he was really ill. His remorse over the rash act had upset him and affected him

Three Fine Girls

Dear Friends:

When the picture on this page was made just before Easter all three of these girls lived at the Home. Today only two of them are with us. Patricia Bolton, the one on the left, is no longer with us. She was released from our care May 1. She is now a patient at Memorial Hospital at Chapel Hill. Patricia has an infection located in her hip. As yet the doctors have not decided how serious it is. Patricia had lived with us for about six weeks when she became ill. She was placed in our Home by the Welfare Department in Alamance County. They have now taken her back into their care and have assumed full responsibility. Patricia is a very intelligent and sweet little girl. She had adjusted real well to group care. All of us at the Home were very sad over the illness that befell Patricia. We still hope and pray that the doctors will be able to find the treatment that will bring her back to her normal health. You may write her at Room 527, Memorial Hospital, Chapel Hill, N. C.

The other two girls in the picture are Shelia Beaman in the middle and Elanda Wade on the right. Both of these girls are with us and are both healthy and working hard in school. Both of them should make their grades this year. They are eagerly waiting the finishing of the two new cottages for they will be part of the group that will be moving into one of the cottages.

We hope you have marked June 11 on your calendar and will plan to be with us for the consecration of the cottages in the afternoon at 2:00. We hope all our churches in the Southern Convention will be represented.

Brittles Honored At Eure

Dr. and Mrs. R. E. Brittle were honored at a reception at Eure's Christian Church Sunday evening, April 30, following the evening service. This was Dr. Brittle's last service as pastor of the church which he has served for ten years. He is now to give full time to Bethlehem church, Suffolk.

Just prior to the benediction, Mrs. Cleetise Briscoe, president of the Women's Fellowship, presented the Brittles an engraved silver tray and set of china and two shopping certificates amounting to $100. Mildred Ann Felton, president of the Pilgrim Fellowship, presented Dr. Brittle with a boutonniere, Mrs. Brittle with a corsage and a floral centerpiece.

The congregation was invited to the fellowship hall for the reception, where the receiving line was composed of Allen Askew, Sunday school superintendent, and Mrs. Askew, L. E. Smith, Jr., assistant superintendent, and Mrs. Smith and Dr. and Mrs. Brittle. Mrs. Alva Askew, organist, presented several musical selections during the reception. Assisting with the reception were Mrs. Gordon Eure, Mrs. Harrell Felton, and Mrs. Marlene Felton Campbell.

Twelve members have united with our Tryon, N. C., church since January 1.

June will be "Laity Month" at Pfafftown (N. C.) church while Rev. and Mrs. Kieth Wright are away on vacation and attending the General Council.

Books have recently been given to the library at Wake Chapel in memory of C. A. Ballentine, Miss Emma Grantham, and Hugh W. Farrell, father of the pastor, Rev. Earl Farrell.

Wake Chapel, Varina, North Carolina, is having its annual homecoming and memorial day service May 21. The same Sunday this church will vote on the constitution for the United Church of Christ, having discussed it on Sunday evening, May 14.

The Great Bridge church has so many babies in its nursery during services that it has secured the services of a registered nurse. The newsletter says, "Parents can rest assured their children are in competent hands and can now attend worship services together."

First, Richmond, experimented with all organizations meeting on the same evening May 2 at the church. These included the official board, the deacons, the deaconesses, the Women's Fellowship, board of trustees, public relations committee, and the Holmes Bible Class.

"Christian Education Day" will be held in our Asheville church May 28 at 11:00 a.m. All Sunday school classes, from nursery to adult, will report on work for the year. Exhibits of educational materials and student projects will be displayed and a reception held in honor of the Sunday school teachers.

Henry Hewitt of Rosemont, South Norfolk made a mail box for the church office for the use of all officials. Chairmen of committees, presidents of organizations, etc., are asked to check their boxes each Sunday morning.

Sermon themes of Rev. Carl Wallace at Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, in conjunction with "Family Month" in May are: Priest and Prophet, Living by Fear or Hope, The Power of the Spirit, The Worth of It All, and Charting of the Unknown.

Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Mason Brown are being honored at a dinner by our Tryon church May 19. Mr. Brown will become pastor of Bethany Congregational Church, Montpelier, Vermont, June 1.

Rev. Elmo Allcox of Littleton has become pastor of Eure's Christian Church in Gates County, North Carolina. Services are now being held on the first and third Sunday mornings of each month.

The Laymen's Fellowship of Great Bridge, Norfolk, are inviting all the church to enjoy an evening of "fish and fun" on the church lawn May 20. There is no "catch" to this — no tickets to buy, nothing to join, says the church newsletter.

The tenth anniversary service for Beverly Hills, Burlington, was held May 7. Topic for Rev. Kenneth Register was "A Sure Foundation!" This church is beginning discussions with an architect concerning further expansion of the church plant, as additional church school space is needed.

Rev. William A. Cousins, formerly of Levittown, Pennsylvania, preached his first sermon as pastor of our South Norfolk church Sunday, May 7. The morning topic was "Why I Take Communion" and the topic for the evening meditation was "Developing Stamina to Stand Strain."

A "retirement hotel for senior citizens" is being opened in Southern Pines, North Carolina, for year-round occupancy. In doing this, Mr. George W. Pottle, a member of our Church of Wide Fellowship, is converting "The Hollywood Hotel," which has been operated by his family there for 48 years as a seasonal resort hotel, into this new-type hotel. Room and meals are provided at a yearly rate.

churches having 400 members during 1960. Two projects were completed with gifts to: Edgewood United Church $3,285 and St. Andrews, Lexington $3,500. The next project will be St. Peter's Church in Greensboro.

12. Synod authorized the Council on Cooperation to consider and if found advisable and possible, to establish a central office for the 3 organizations as soon as the Constitution is declared in effect. It expressed its preference for the boundary lines of the new conference to be those churches of Southern Synod, Convention of the South, Southern Convention within the state of N. C. which would comprise 331 congregations and 51,846 members.

POLITY AND GOVERNMENT. . . . O'Kelly and his compeers, heroes of a bitter and yet a most noble struggle, are little known in history and little esteemed, because he and his did not write history. They made history.

"One day this marble will crumble to its native element, and even its bronze tablet will corrode; yea, even every sign and token of this day. . . . will pass away and be forgotten. But never so long as time shall last. . . . will the principles for which James O'Kelly and Rice Haggard wrought and labored and died, be forgotten. They will never perish from the earth. For they are the embodiment of, and the answer to, the prayer of our Lord — 'That they all may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' (The) principles of religious liberty and Christian tolerance (declared here) are the gift of God, and they are the voice of God which today finds utterance in the fraternity of a fast uniting Christendom."

Unable to effect reform in the Methodist Church in his day, O'Kelly was driven to help found a new brotherhood of Christians. But even so, there is not today a Methodist Church, nor a Methodist Layman, nor a Methodist Minister, who does not owe a debt of gratitude to James O'Kelly for his pursuit of liberty; who does not profit today from the reforms attempted by O'Kelly in his day.

Pentecost 1961

A Message from the Presidents of the World Council of Churches

The keynote of St. Peter's Pentecost sermon, the first sermon of the Church of Christ, is: "This Jesus God raised up and of that we are all witnesses". Peter thus gives evidence of the fulfilment of Christ's promise that His disciples would receive the Holy Spirit and be enabled to proclaim the good news to the ends of the earth. The disciples, so slow to understand and to believe, have been transformed by the Spirit into men who speak boldly and convincingly of "the mighty works of God" manifested in the life, death and resurrection of Christ. Thus at the very beginning it becomes clear that the Church in history is by its very nature a company of men and women who are called to render witness to God's act of salvation in Christ.

Today we need this reminder about the central task of the Church. A world of conflict and darkness, in which there is so much lack of clear purpose and real hope, needs to hear the message of reconciliation and renewal of life with which the Church began on Pentecost. It needs a Church which witnesses to the present activity of the Holy Spirit by its peace-making, its concern for man and need, its evangelism, and by manifesting its God-given unity.

This year the churches in the World Council prepare for their Assembly in New Delhi. The main theme will be: "Jesus Christ, the Light of the World." At the center of our deliberations will be the absorbing purpose of agreeing upon our common Christian task. This is an opportunity to demonstrate that this great light "already shines" and that it dispels the darkness in and around us. For it is in the unity of living, praying, working, speaking together that the churches must show their desire and readiness to reflect the one Light of the World. And all congregations can participate in this by their study of the Bible and their prayer in relation to the Assembly themes.

Let us, therefore, all join in praying that the Spirit may inspire and enable us, like Peter, to respond gratefully to Christ's promise by accepting it and committing ourselves to be His witnesses together.

NUMBER 21

A Litany For Graduation

By Richard K. Morton

Through gratitude for the love and care of those who helped me to grow and to complete my work,

Guide me in the fulfillment of the tasks for which I have prepared,
O Lord.

Through mindfulness of the privileges that have been mine and of the promise in what lies ahead,

Give me humility yet courage as I go forth, O Lord.

Through continued eagerness to learn, willingness to serve, and sincere love of knowledge and devotion to human welfare,

Cast more and more light upon my adventuring steps, O Lord.

Through discrimination in judgment, sensitiveness in all relationships, and faithfulness in all responsibilities,

Equip me to apply and to advance the resources at my command, O Lord.

Through openness of mind, yet genuine commitment to principle, and through proper acquisitiveness in labors, yet generosity of spirit,

Lead me unto worthy fields of labor and stimulating fellow-laborers,
O Lord.

With fresh eagerness to begin new work and to find new friends,

Send me forth with love and faith and hope, I pray.

With quickened pulse as I sense the needs around me and with stirred heart as I begin to understand the meaning of what I have learned,

Send me forth with courage and strength and confidence, I pray.

With skill to perform tasks, understanding of why I want to do them, and dedication to definite aims and goals,

Send me forth to lift up the lives of many, I pray.

With pride in preparation and admiration for learning, yet greater consciousness of the need for character and personality,

Send me forth still to learn and still to strive, I pray.

With sobered recognition of responsibility and disciplined habits of thinking and meeting problems,

Send me forth with readiness to accept my appointed tasks, I pray.

With full remembrance of errors made and weaknesses that remain,

Send me forth with firm resolution to enlarge my knowledge and to improve my methods, I pray.

With command of necessary skills, ability to communicate, and the will to enthroned Thy law and spirit within me,

Send me forth to join my brother man in shaping a life and a world that shall honor Thee, I pray. Amen.

PRINCIPLES of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the Church.
2. Christian is sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

Here And There Among The Churches

Apple's Chapel, near Gibsonville, N. C., voted April 23 to approve the constitution of the United Church.

Chaplain Herbert Dumstrey, U.S.N. (Retired) will be the speaker at The Christian Temple, Norfolk, next Sunday when the pastor, Rev. Frank Hamilton, is at Elon College delivering the baccalaureate sermon.

"What Happens to It?" was the topic for Rev. Mark Andes at Winchester, Virginia, May 7 on Our Christian World Mission Sunday. May 14 this church had a family life supper and program.

Rev. Frank Snider, pastor of St. John's E. and R. church in Burlington, spoke to the Churchmen's Fellowship at St. Peter's Greensboro, May 18. His topic at the dinner meeting was "Our Heritage in National Missions."

Last week's sermon by Dr. Curtis Beach on the Holy Spirit and this week's address by Dr. L. E. Smith on Church Unity seemed so appropriate preceding and following Pentecost that they have been used in place of the usual editorials.

A planning retreat for members of the consistory, presidents of all organizations, and chairmen of all committees at St. Peter's, Greensboro, was held Sunday afternoon, May 21. Following a light supper, the meeting closed with a brief worship service of re-dedication and Holy Communion. St. Peter's had an average church school attendance in April of 88, and an average of 89 at morning worship.

"The Guest in Your Home" was the subject of Dr. W. J. Andes at Elon College Community Church on Mother's Day. Laymen of this church had a supper May 10 with Hobart Steele as speaker.

"The Family of Jesus" was the Mother's Day subject for Rev. Calvin J. Felton at First, Portsmouth. This church recently enjoyed a family night supper with Bible study as the program.

May 22 the Women's Fellowship of Tryon will have its annual business meeting (after one year of organization) in the form of a luncheon. The program will feature the 150 years of the American Board. New officers will be installed.

Friends will be sorry to learn of the serious illness of Mrs. James Hess, who served with her husband for many years as a missionary to India, and who lived at Elon College in recent years when Dr. Hess served on the faculty there. Their address is Dr. and Mrs. James Hess, Route 2, Box 822-A, Oregon City, Oregon.

The first Sunday in May was a big day at Pleasant Grove Church (W.N.C.) according to the pastor, Rev. Dolan Talbert. There were approximately 800 present for the Memorial and Homecoming services. Many people were turned away because the church was filled to overflowing for the morning worship service. After everyone enjoyed a delicious meal on the lawn of the church, the Rev. Lynwood Hubbard brought a most inspiring message for the afternoon service.

Memorial Day at Apple's Chapel will be observed May 28 with Rev. W. W. Snyder speaking at the morning service, Mr. Loyd Chrismon in the cemetery, and Rev. Thomas Madren at the afternoon service.

Jack W. Campbell, Jr., member of Shallow Well church, was a recent guest speaker at Turner's Chapel, using as his subject "Our Christian World Mission." The pastor, Rev. James E. Porter, spoke at Amelia, near Raleigh, on the same subject.

The congregation at The Christian Temple, Norfolk, on Mother's Day was seated in family units. The youth choir shared with the adult choir in presenting special music. Sermon topic for Rev. Frank Hamilton was "The Family and Moral Responsibility."

It must have been a happy reunion when Dr. Ed Riggs spoke at St. Paul United Church of Christ, Cincinnati, Ohio, May 13, for that is where Rev. Richard Jackson is pastor. And the Riggs and the Jacksons were missionaries at Shaowu, China, together, supported by the churches of the Southern Convention.

Circle 2 of the Women's Fellowship of Apple's Chapel sponsored a special Mother's Day bulletin which listed the names of more than 200. Proceeds from this are to go to the church building fund. Gifts were presented by Robert Pritchett to the oldest mother, youngest mother, mother with most children present, and grandmother with most grandchildren present. Rev. Bland Leebrick's sermon topic was "The Weakness and Strength of the American Family."

ELON PARSONAGE GOING UP

Rafters went up on Monday, May 8. Roofing will be going on this week — we hope! Bobby Whitesell and his carpenters really "make house while the sun shines"... Vasteen Wagoner and his brick masons can place the brick in rapid order... Waverly Hughes is getting the furnace all set — he may need several helpers when he installs it... Our hats off to Mark McAdams and Biff Brafford for their constant overseeing and shopping for the best prices. The Church will never know the amount of time they have put in on this project... If you want to know about the electricity, ask Professor Hook.

It is really amazing how many people have been working on the building itself. On a recent Saturday, Bill Pendergrass, our Laymen's Fellowship president, had 14 men working — which included such men as Billy Pendergrass, Tommy Edgerton and Barry Oxford, and from their age group on up! Last Saturday six men were needed, and they were there!

Received fertilizer and more grass seed last Saturday through the courtesy of Les Wagoner, Lack Moore, Biff Brafford, and George Morningstar... Now of course the rain will stop and we will need to water the lawn... Vitus Covington, our janitor, thinks this will just make the grass grow faster and the mowing will be more frequent! Thanks fellows!

Some of our men suggested that their "rheumatic knees" and engagements prevent their nailing and sawing. "Could they give some money to pay someone to work in their place?"... Why, yes indeed! Leroy Hughes, treasurer of the Laymen's Fellowship, will be glad to receive your gift.

A local church may check up on its business practices through a self-study schedule contained in the May issue of Social Action, which has been sent to every pastor. Additional copies are 25¢ each, or 10 or more copies for 15¢ each from the Council for Christian Social Action, 289 Park Avenue, South, New York 10, New York.

Congressman Horace Kornegay of Greensboro and Washington will be the featured speaker for Elon College's graduation exercises Monday morning, May 29.

TWO NEW FILMSTRIPS AVAILABLE IN CONVENTION OFFICE

The Church at Warren, color, 17 minutes, recording. This filmstrip tells of the village church at Warren, Michigan, near Detroit, which suddenly found itself in the midst of a fast growing urban community. Should it change its ways to meet the new conditions? This filmstrip shows how, through the leadership of its minister, it has met the challenge.

Charity Begins at Home, color, 17 minutes, recording. This filmstrip states that charity begins at home, in your church, but it extends to the ends of the earth — to Chile, Hong Kong, Korea, Greece, Africa — wherever there is need. This is the theme of this filmstrip produced for the Commission on World Service of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

You may obtain these filmstrips by writing to Miss Ruth Dunn, Box 336, Elon College, North Carolina. The only charge is return postage.

SPECIAL FEATURES AT HAYES CHAPEL

By Dollie Stone Stirewalt, Reporter

The Junior Department of Hayes Chapel, Garner, North Carolina, had charge of the Sunday school hour May 7. Grady Partin took the superintendent's place and led the singing. Scripture reading was by Deborah Young and prayer by Ann Tussey. The other juniors recited the Beatitudes. We are really proud of these juniors. They did a wonderful job.

During our worship service our pastor, Mr. Sessom, brought a wonderful message from Romans 10:1-10, "Salvation by Christ."

Our youth choir which has recently been organized with Jerry Stone as director and Judy Stone as pianist brought two selections. We are also proud of these young people.

"BIG DAY" AT MT. ZION

By Myrtle Shepherd, Reporter

The annual Homecoming Day, Mother's Day, and Memorial Day service on May 14 at Mt. Zion United Church of Christ, Route 3, Mebane, North Carolina, was well attended.

The interior of the sanctuary had been painted a soft, pale green and with the new memorial windows gave the church a "new look" which was quite a surprise to most of the people attending the homecoming service.

Rev. Glenn Garrett, our pastor, read for the scripture lesson Proverbs 31:10-31. His sermon topic was "Attributes of God's Love and Mother's." He compared a mother's love for her child with that of God's love for his children. He said God's love shines into a mother's heart and then the mother's love reflects out of her children. A mother's love for her child is the next thing to God's love for each of us. Just as the light from a flashlight shining into a mirror reflects the light to the other side of the room, so God's love shines into a mother's heart and then the love in her heart reflects back to her child.

The senior choir sang "If I Could Hear My Mother Pray Again." The youth choir sang "My Mother's Prayer." Miss Judy Crutchfield sang a solo during the offering.

There was plenty of food spread on the tables at lunchtime and everyone seemed to enjoy the wonderful fellowship together. The cemetery was beautiful with flowers on practically every grave. We always look forward to this special day each year, because we can renew old friendships and see friends we haven't seen since last year at this time.

SUCCESSFUL MINISTER'S CONVOCATION

When the registrar, Rev. Robert Knowles, added up the registrations for the Ministers' Convocation held at Moonelon May 15-17 he came out with the following: 43 from the Southern Convention, 32 from the Southern Synod, 7 from the Convention of the South. With the three leaders this made a total of 85.

It was voted by the group that next year the Convention should be jointly planned by a committee composed of: Rev. John Settlemire (E. and R.), chairman; Rev. Robert Kimball, Southern Convention; and Rev. W. Judson King, Convention of the South. The committee is to decide on the time, place and program, with the suggestion that next year's meeting might be held the third or fourth week in June.

Rev. Bland Leebrick has tendered his resignation at Apple's Chapel, near Gibsonville, North Carolina, in order to accept the Bethlehem-Wood's Chapel-Wissler's Chapel pastorate in the Valley of Virginia. The Leebricks plan to move August 1.

The Cardinal Principles Of The Christian Church

By Leon Edgar Smith

(Address delivered on the occasion of the Pilgrimage to Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Virginia, Sunday afternoon, May 7, 1961)

In considering the topic assigned, the Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church, I prefer to discuss, specifically, the prophetic implications of these principles, for they do constitute a basis upon which the whole Christian world might unite. They do imply the means by which such a union might take place. We recall that certain strained interpretations of scripture and religious dogma, dogmatically proclaimed lay at the root of the deflection from the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Baltimore Conference. We are reminded of this scission today as we celebrate the founding of our church in 1794. If we could capture the passion, the vision, the conviction and the determination that possessed the minds and hearts of James O'Kelley and his associates on that far away day, and then recognize the necessity of organization within the church, make plain our willingness to forego all divisive doctrines and all unauthoritative and unnecessary interpretations of scripture as practiced by the church, and then take a firm stand upon the principles adopted, we should experience but little difficulty in discovering an acceptable basis for Christian unity throughout the world.

When the founders of our Church withdrew from the Methodist Church they were not interested in forming another denomination. They were only interested in religious freedom, in giving the whole Gospel to the whole community, in converting unbelievers to the Christian faith, and in Christian unity for the whole Church. Think of what they believed and of what they declared:

I—The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church.

II—Christian is a sufficient name for the church.

III—The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

IV—Christian character is a sufficient test for fellowship and church membership.

V—The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

What more could they say? What more could be said even unto this good day?

In 1931, in Seattle, Washington, the Congregational and Christian Churches were merged into one Christian body on these eternal principles, not spelled out in so many words, but activated by the same spirit and standing upon the same general principles. These principles are as divine and as eternal as is the Holy Spirit.

To this day, in the year 1961, as never before, this same spirit and demand for a united Church is moving in the hearts of men in different denominations, and in different countries.

The Congregational Christian Church is praying earnestly and working diligently for a united church the world over. At the moment we are concerned for the union of the Congregational Christian Churches in America and the Evangelical and Reformed Church in this country. We pray earnestly for the success of these efforts. Of course, the two churches are different, different in belief, in doctrine, in polity and in practice. But what do these differences matter when we are united in Jesus Christ as the only head of the church, are to be known the world over as Christians, and both denominations turn to the Bible, the Old and New Testaments, for inspiration and guidance? And, also, we are bound together in one Holy Communion by the love of Christ and sustained by the unfailling Grace of God. This union will not curb our freedom locally in the least, but will increase our influence and give us broadened opportunities for service at home and abroad.

Surely we are beginning to realize, and all who love freedom in religion and in civil life should realize, that there are powerful forces operative in this country today that would hinder our freedom in religion and destroy the Protestant concept and practice, long since established in our country. One of these forces is Communism; that seems to take delight in ridiculing our religion and avows vengeance and destruction of all Christian beliefs and practices of our people. They declare that there is no God; that such a thing as divine revelation is a ridiculous absurdity.

Then are you aware of the rapid growth of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States; growth in numbers, position, influence and now in power. Do we realize what this means to Protestantism, our conception of true religion in purpose and practice? One man speaks for the Roman Catholics. There are so many voices for the Protestants that they make such a confusion that no one seems to hear nor does anyone really understand. Do we realize that all of this is a threat to the freedom in religion, without disturbance, that this nation has enjoyed since the day that the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock? It is high time under God, that the Protestant Church unite her forces and arouse herself to her privileges and responsibilities.

These are the forces that are arrayed against Protestant religion today. Think you, that any one denomination, however great, is strong enough to stand against these sinister foes that are constantly blasting away at our faith, our principles, our doctrine — the very foundation of our hopes in God? NEVER! This is the task of the whole church, of united Protestantism. In union there is a strength; in differences there is weakness. A united Church could speak with force on perplexing issues, and to militant foes who stand with everlasting vengeance against the Church. Are we courageous and bold enough to put aside all "isms", Lutheranism, Episcopalianism, Methodism, Presbyterianism, Congregational Christianity and all other "isms" and come together as one great Church of God dedicated to give Christ

Freedom of the seas may be an empty phrase to those who have not taken time to analyze the full significance of its meaning. Its importance is equally great and indispensable in times of peace and war. Indeed, freedom of the seas is the foundation of one of the oldest industries of this country, its benefits to mankind are mutual, and no nation could well survive without free use of the seas.

Man's mastery of the waves through the construction and operation of ships is so full of romance and adventure that it is a part of the life of the people the world over. And to the United States goes the honor of having sent the first steamboat across the Atlantic. This 100-foot ship, the Savannah, sailed out of the port of Savannah, Georgia, May 22, 1819, and when sighted in an Irish port, someone exclaimed that the ship was on fire, not having before seen a vessel sailing under steam.

On August 17, 1807, Robert Fulton sailed the Clermont, the world's first steamboat, up the Hudson River, and following this, the use of steam in propelling vessels came into use along the Atlantic Coast. But it remained for the Savannah to be the first steamship to reach European shores. "America first" has never been an empty phrase.

Ship-building and ship-operation by the United States since the days of the Savannah is a full and exciting book of itself. It would take long research to ascertain how many ships, commercial and for defense purposes, have been constructed in the last 150 years, how many outmoded, lost or destroyed, and the vast cost involved. For reasons of defense, the number of ships equipped for defense is not known to the public, but merchant vessels number approximately 3,500. This is on par with the number of such ships operated by the British Commonwealth of Nations, and five times more than the number of commercial vessels operated by the U. S. S. R.

All countries combined operate about 17,000 ships that haul imports and exports for the benefit of their people. This exchange of goods among nations is essential, for if it were not for foreign trade the United States would have no coffee, no tea, no tropical fruits, no spices and no rubber tires for automobiles. It would suffer in many other ways. Even such great industries as steel and telephones are dependent upon the imports of many foreign products. The situation presents a picture of interdependence.

One half of the world does not know how the other half lives, but without freedom of the seas and ships the "other half" might not be living.

Psalm 24

"The Torch" of the Elon College Community Church reminds members of the above theme for this quarter's Sunday schools lessons in our denominational literature.

"The courses being studied this quarter explore the order and dependability of creation. They lift up the wonder and mystery of God's world. They point out the opportunities given by God to man for responding in adoration and action to the goodness of God."

"Science in God's World," which is the senior high topic and "The World in Which We Live," the young adult topic, are particularly thought-provoking.

A MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

WELLS WITHOUT WATER

These are wells without water; clouds that are carried with a tempest. 2 Peter 2:17.

These who? "There shall be false teachers among you." These are they. This chapter begins with them, and describes them until we arrive at this text: "These are wells without water." Useless, dangerous, nuisances are wells without water. Also windblown clouds bearing no refreshing rain, tossed by the tempest in a hot copper sky, are only vain promises.

Jesus served a right sharp sentence on bad teaching, didn't he? Jesus came not to destroy the law and the prophets. They could not be brooked or gain-said, but everyone of them should be fulfilled; to that purpose had he come. (Matthew 5:17-19).

Do you remember how Paul wrote Timothy to "Preach the word... for the time is coming when people will not endure sound teaching... they will accumulate teachers to suit their own liking, and will turn away from listening to the truth."

Teachers? Who are teachers? First parents are teachers. The mind of a little child is open, waiting, receiving, learning. Nearest to a little child is its mother — its mother and father. They are paid in the best coin beneath the shining stars — the love of a little child! And how about the other "professors," those whom the parents themselves have trained for their "professorships," the brothers and sisters in that selfsame family circle?

That school, my friend, has a head start on all the others. It comes before kindergarten and goes beyond college, far out into the halls of experience, deep into all the years to come.

Now go back to the next: Dry wells and windblown clouds, which the little country boy calls, "Empties, daddy." Home! What a place! What a pity, if it isn't "What a place!" What a responsibility rests on that school!

And, ah! yes, teachers. Teachers who greet little six-year-olds at the wonderful door of the grade school. And you, you are a teacher, and so are we all. "Actions speak louder than words." Be not wells without water! Amen.

When We Disagree

By George D. Alley

Part of the genius of our fellowship, and of the vitality of our local church, is that we may "agree to disagree." One of the most cherished of the Cardinal Principles of the Christian denomination, in which our church had its birth and has recorded the greater portion of its history, is: "The right to private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all."

Through all the years since James O'Kelly and his friends reached out for religious liberty in 1794, the practice of this principle has meant that individuals and groups within our churches have clashed, often resoundingly so! But the rights of persons to hold differing opinions have ever been respected and have seldom been the cause of disunity or of lasting discord. With God's guidance, our forbearers were able "to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," (Ephesians 4:3) thereby giving clear example of their capacity for Christian love. Such has happened at least once, if not many times, in every local congregation and in every larger body within the Church.

As your minister, it has been my privilege to witness such examples on several different occasions in the Suffolk Christian Church. Some of the finest personal stature I have ever observed has been in people who have said to me, "I did not vote for this but, now that the decision is made, I intend to go along with the majority."

Surely, we need this spirit in our church in these days! I, for one, confidently believe that it is very present and will certainly prevail. It helps, always, to realize that the church is greater than any individuals within it, that it was here before we were born and will be here after we die and that, just as others have presented us with a goodly heritage, we have a deep and abiding responsibility to do as much for our children and our children's children. In our appreciation for the past and all that has been brought to us out of it, we must remember that our responsibility is to the future: for generations yet unborn will be living tomorrow, not yesterday.

These lines from the pen of the poet express, more fully than anything I can say, what we ought to feel:

"Hold high the torch!

You did not light its glow—

'Twas given you by other hands, you know.

'Tis yours to keep it burning bright,

Yours to pass on when you no more need light;

For there are other feet that we must guide,

And other forms go marching by our side;

Their eyes are watching every smile and tear

And efforts which we think are not worthwhile,

Are sometimes just the very helps they need,

Actions to which their souls would give most heed;

So that in turn they'll hold it high

And say, 'I watched someone else carry it this way.'"

Circular Living

By Rev. J. E. Lair, Minister

The Congregational Church of Jefferson Park
Chicago, Illinois

"Fix firm the center first, then draw the circle round" is a little saying I heard a long time ago and have often thought about. Think about it a bit. Everyone of us draws the circle in which we live. What we read daily helps to set the bounds of our circle. Always, you can gauge the outreach of a man's mind by his reading habits.

What we say and the manner in which we say it helps to determine the bounds of the circle we draw for ourselves. Conversation about trivial things and events of a passing nature does not push out any boundaries. What we think and do helps also to set the dimensions of our circle. Narrow thoughts lead to narrow speaking and living. Revengeful thoughts lead to uncooperative action. It keeps the spotlight upon the "I" rather than upon the "WE" of our daily relationships; and the "I" is always constricting, never expanding.

The drawing of a circle about ourselves is inevitable. We cannot escape it. If it is not an expanding circle it becomes an ever-shrinking circle. It cannot remain static. The moment we stop growing we begin to shrink and get smaller.

See what circles can do. One: A circle can shut out from your living — people, achievements, the wider world, and attitudes just as effectively as a closed door shuts out from your home all that you do not want in. Two: As a circle can shut out, by that very act it can shut in as well. When you close the doors to outsiders you shut yourself in. By shutting others out and ourselves in we close the doors to those attitudes and deeds which would make us all citizens of the world and children of the One God, the Father of us all. The spirit of revenge closes the door to goodwill; smugness shuts out learning, complacency shuts out adventure, bitterness shuts out understanding.

The corollary of shutting others out and ourselves in is that we begin then to live as on a merry-go-round. But remember that while our living is circular in design it is intended to get us somewhere. Though our jobs may contain a lot of routine there is still room for growth and adventure if we look for it. For life need not — and will not — become a merry-go-round to us if we will see our respective jobs in relation to the whole gamut of living.

John tells us that "Jesus, knowing that he came from God, and that he was going to God, rose up..." There was no sense of wandering in his life. He knew! "Fix firm the center first, then draw the circle round." That is what Jesus did. He settled early in life the purposes for which he would live. He determined what the center of his life would be. He made it God.

Jesus knew too that from the center of life springs all outward action. The words we speak are first thoughts in our minds. They are the result of quiet but persistent meditation. The action we exhibit is first meditated upon in the mind. The attitudes we show by word and deed are first conceived in the heart, and nurtured there till they become strong enough to expose themselves. Motives, said Jesus, are the very center of life. They are the beginning of all we do and say. So Jesus said: "Seek first God's Kingdom..." In short: "Fix firm the center of your life, then draw the circle round." Then comes inclusive living.

Activities At Waverly, Virginia

The Waverly Congregational Christian Church, Waverly, Virginia, wishes to report varied activities.

In the early fall, Rev. Robert Knowles and a team of young people visited our church and Sunday school. They showed slides of Moonelon and its varied projects, after which a covered dish dinner was served. The attendance and interest were revived by their visit.

Then the Elon College choir worshipped with us one morning in November, lifting our spirits and appreciation of good music by their numbers. There was a full house and many became interested in what Elon College has to offer in the music department. The entire Fellowship served dinner to all who came.

Our Christmas pageant was presented to a large and appreciative audience. Mrs. S. B. Sheffield, Jr., directed it and was ably assisted by the choirs, various committees, and all departments of the church school.

Youth Week was observed by our junior and senior groups for two Sundays. Our youth and sponsors really showed what they could and would do, with our pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, guiding and assisting in every possible way. Mrs. Wilmer Rowe, one of the sponsors, worked long and faithfully to make these services worshipful and meaningful. Our young people participated in the choir and assisted in ushering.

Special services were held during Lent and at Easter. On Maundy Thursday Holy Communion was served in a beautiful candlelight ceremony. The music of our choirs, with Mrs. Minnie England directing and Miss Cox as organist, helped us to really meditate on the meaning of the Last Supper. Good Friday a union service was held from 12:00-3:00 at the Episcopal church with the ministers of Waverly participating.

Easter services began at 6:00 a.m., with ministers of our town joining with our minister and choir in a union sunrise service. The 11:15 service found the church filled with people, and the beauty of the flowers, music and morning worship helped us to realize anew that Christ has arisen.

For our minister's subject the next Sunday he used the topic "A Glorious Easter — What Then?" The F.H.A. group worshipped with us.

Already we are thinking in terms of graduation, vacation, and our vacation Bible school. The Methodists and our church work together on the latter.

The Rev. Mr. Tucker Humphries, pastor of our church at Franklin, Virginia, has accepted the invitation to be our guest minister in a series of evangelistic services in September. We are looking forward to these days together with happy anticipation and joy.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. McCauley has been confined to her home and the hospital since January 2. We wish for her a speedy recovery.

Pilgrimage To The Site Of Old Lebanon Christian Church

By L. E. Smith

On at least one previous occasion the officials of the Christian Church in the Southern Convention have called a meeting of representatives of our church to be held at the site of Old Lebanon Christian Church. That meeting, as I recall, was in the summer of 1927. Personally, I could not be present, but it was my privilege to be present and a part of such a gathering on Sunday, May 7, 1961, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. A sizeable congregation gathered; I should say encouraging considering the efforts expended for such a gathering. The ones of us who were there were appreciative.

The site was not attractive, nor pleasing. If the church is to continue to call upon its membership to celebrate the founding of our church some effort certainly should be made to improve the appearance of the place of the founding of our denomination. The site consists of a small plot of ground on which are a number of graves, and a very beautiful monument with slanting top, which represents the Holy Bible, beneath which is an imposing bronze tablet on which is inscribed the Cardinal Principles of Our Church, with some mistakes which are regrettable. This monument is the only thing that is attractive about the whole place. Behind the church lot is a tenant house. To the left facing from the road is another tenant house; neither of which is in the best of repair. The whole appearance is a sorry spectacle.

If we are to continue to gather at this historic place, and if it means as much to us as we contend, certainly something should be done to make it worthy of the great church that it commemorates. Can anything be done? What can be done? Who, but the Eastern Virginia Conference, and the Southern Convention should do it? Comments and suggestions may be made through The Christian Sun.

India Welcomes World Council

By Metropolitan Juhanon Mar Thoma

Metropolitan Juhanon Mar Thomas, of the Mar Thoma Syrian Church of Malabar, is a president of the World Council of Churches. This is one of a series of articles issued in connection with the Third Assembly of the World Council of Churches, to be held in New Delhi, India, November 18 - December 6.

When the World Council of Churches holds its Third Assembly in New Delhi, India later this year, it will come to a centuries-old civilization — to a land which has given birth to and nurtured many of the world's religions. This is a land whose ancient sages, the Rishis, prayed: "From the Unreal lead me to the Real, from Darkness lead me to Light, from Death lead me to Immortality."

India's sons and daughters have sacrificed everything to follow and realize the Real. This is a land where thrones have been abandoned in the search for Light and Peace; and sceptres and swords given up in the pursuit of truth and non-violence. Therefore, the declaration of Christ as the Light of the World, the assembly theme, will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of the people of this land.

Christianity Comes to India

Christianity in India has been long looked upon as an exotic plant introduced by western missionaries. This is because the outside world, cut off as it was by mountains on one side and the sea on the other, did not know for many centuries that the Church existed in South India at a very early date. Yet tradition records that St. Thomas founded the Church there, and the sixth century historian Cosmas reports that he discovered churches in Ceylon, Quilon and Konkan during his travels, an indication that they existed long before his time.

Of the churches which Cosmas saw in his travels, only those in Quilon on the Southeast coast have survived. While the decline of early Christianity may be partially attributed to Muslim invasions, the major cause lies in the fact that the Church did not make a sufficient impact through missionary endeavor and other activities.

Today we have in Malabar not a united church as in the beginning. There are rather to be found in South India today five separate religious bodies, all claiming early traditions. There is first the Chaldean Church, or the Church of the East, dating back to the sixth century. Then there are the Roman Catholic, Jacobite Orthodox and the Mar Thoma Syrian churches, as well as a small offshoot of the Mar Thoma body, known as Thozhiyoor Church.

The churches of Cosmas' day were in communion with the Nestorian Church in Persia. But while the St. Thomas Christians were in communion with a foreign body, they were independent in the administration of their own affairs.

It was not until the close of the 16th century that the Malankara (Kerala) Church was brought under the authority of the Roman Catholic Church by the Portuguese who dominated the southwestern part of India. However, with the decline of Portuguese power in the middle of the next century, one section of this church declared its independence from Rome and appointed its own bishop.

To validate the consecration, a bishop from Antioch was invited to perform the rite. It was in this way that the connection with the Jacobite Church of Antioch began. In time, the Jacobite Church protested against the control of the Patriarch of Antioch and established its own independence.

When British rule was established in South India at the beginning of the 19th Century, the St. Thomas Church (later known as the Syrian Church) drew the attention of the British Church Missionary Society (C.M.S.). These Christian workers came to help the indigenous church and not to establish an Anglican communion in India. As a result, there was close cooperation between the missionaries and the Syrian metropolitan for some 25 years.

But then disagreements arose between the metropolitan and a new generation of C.M.S. workers, causing them to abandon their work in the Syrian Church and direct their attention to non-Christians, especially those of the backward classes. It was in this way that a branch of the Anglican Church was founded in Malabar. Today it is a part of the united Church of South India, which was inaugurated in 1947 and unites Anglicans, Methodists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians. (Discussions for further union of the united church with Lutherans, Baptists and Mar Thoma Christians are still open).

Abraham Malpan was among those who came under the influence of the C.M.S. workers, who emphasized the principles of the Protestant Reformation and translated the Bible into the local Malayalam dialect. Efforts to initiate reforms in the Syrian Church finally forced Malpan to leave the group and to organize the Mar Thoma Syrian Church, which claims to have restored the early purity of the church in Malabar as it existed before Roman Catholicism was introduced in the country.

Modern Protestant Missions

However, the honor of being the father of modern Protestant missions in India belongs to William Carey, Baptist, of England. It was the work of Carey, along with that of Marshman and Ward, which inspired other missions to extend their work to India. While these foreign missions organizations have carried their divisions at home to the mission field, they have done their work effectively, promoting educational, medical and social programs with enthusiasm.

Their contributions to the uplift of India are acknowledged throughout the country. However, their activities have also indirectly contributed to the resurgence of indigenous religions, the adherents of which reject the religious propaganda of the missionaries. But today even smaller Christian bodies, including the Pentecostal and Plymouth Brethren, are represented throughout the country.

While missionary activity has not been affected by the achievement of national independence, a break with this policy may be expected. This may result in fewer foreign missionaries coming to India and in the reduction of foreign aid to churches which have not yet fully become self-governing, self-supporting and self-propagating.

Indian Lessons In Search For Peace

It is in such a climate as this that the World Council will meet in New Delhi. The Indian Church has invited the World Council of Churches to hold its assembly there, and the government has assured the visiting church leaders of its welcome.

The Church in India is certain to receive great impetus with the coming of this world-wide assembly to its land. While there are many obstacles to overcome, unity talks are being earnestly carried on in North India, South India and Ceylon. It is certain that the World Council with its 178 member churches will give added zest to these union proposals.

The call to unity will be heard in other areas of the church's life as well. For example, the caste system has been hampering the development of Indian life for centuries. And while it is now legally abolished, it is by no means dead. Even the church is not free from the evils of this system. It is therefore to be hoped that this fraternal gathering of people of all nations and colors will prove to be an object lesson for the Indian Church.

There is also the feeling in many quarters in India that Christianity is a western religion. But this assembly should help the Indian churches to feel their oneness with churches in other lands. It will show Indian believers that in Christ there is no East or West, that the treasure of many cultures has been offered in homage to Him. The presence of eastern traditions will also help to clear up some of these misconceptions and the assembly itself will make it clear that "we are but part of a world-wide fellowship which owes its allegiance to the One Master whom it declares to be the Light of the World."

The merger of the World Council of Churches with the International Missionary Council at this historic session will have special significance for the church in India. For this event will indicate to the entire world that evangelism must always be an integral part in the life of the Church, and can never be a mere "extra".

The Church must fulfill its mission to bring light to the world by bearing witness to her Lord, as the Scriptures command.

World Can Learn From India

At the same time, the churches of the world can learn something from the spirit of religious toleration that has inspired the people of India. Western churchmen can learn from them the meaning of living together and learning from one another. It may be noted that the formation of the Church of South India through a merger of several denominations (including Anglicans) is without parallel in the West.

Great strides are being made in India today to build a welfare state, to solve the problems of poverty, unemployment and ignorance, as well as to distribute both land and wealth on a more equitable basis. Mahatma Gandhi and Vinoba are among those who have demonstrated that social evils can be solved by a change of heart and by winning goodwill rather than by force. Their examples are a challenge to those who would resort to arms. And there are many others as well in India who have demonstrated by their lives that it is better to give than to receive.

These are but some of the things which India can teach the world as it joins in the common search for goodwill and peace. So it is that the Church of India prays that the forthcoming assembly of the World Council of Churches on Indian soil may be an occasion for realizing anew the meaning of the self-offering of our Lord as the Light of the World.

Ecuador

(E. and R. Mission)

Picalqui

Rural community 60 miles northeast of Quito where many Indian families live.
May

28—Rev. and Mrs. Eugene Braun combine agricultural and medical missions, for he supervises the Picalqui mission farm, agricultural classes, and extension work, and she supervises an outpatient clinic. A minister, he preaches, visits, teaches. His father was executive secretary of Board of National Missions; her parents were missionaries to Honduras for 30 years.

29—Rev. and Mrs. Paul Streich are the senior missionaries of the United Andean Indian Mission, having gone in 1954 to open up new work in Ecuador and help establish a cooperative mission pattern there. Now they supervise a 7th grade boarding school for Indian children; supervise Sunday schools in two new areas; direct community programs of literacy, recreation, handicrafts. He wrote program on Latin America for 1961-62 adult program book.

Quito

Capital of Ecuador with population of 250 000.

30—Rev. and Mrs. Harold Auler, Sr., have been missionaries to Honduras but are doing a special two-year term in Ecuador because of critical shortage of missionaries there. He does evangelistic work in outlying villages; she works with women's groups and teaches music.

HONDURAS

(E. and R. Mission)

31—Mission work was started in San Pedro Sula, Honduras, in 1921 in response to a cry for help to meet economic, social, moral and religious needs of the country. Now there are 18 organized congregations which form the Honduras Synod, five ordained pastors and five candidates about to be ordained.

June

1—Rev. Thomas Puroff is a new missionary to Honduras, but he has a substantial background of experience. A graduate of Heidelberg College and Eden Theological Seminary, he has directed work camps in Puerto Rico and North Dakota, participated in one in Ecuador; did seminary field work at inner-city mission; served as student chaplain at St. Louis Hospital; and spent a year in Honduras as a special term missionary, teaching in mission high school in San Pedro Sula.

Concepcion Del Norte

Small mountain village about 60 miles from San Pedro Sula where a rural extension program is being developed and a Honduran nurse assists in mission dispensary. The church has a Honduran pastor.

2—Miss Diemut Heller is a native of Germany, where she received nurse's training. She went to clinic at Concepcion del Norte in 1958, now is attending language classes in Costa Rica, and then will return to clinic.

3—Miss Magdalene Kroehler served as a missionary nurse in India for 21 years. Then she went to Honduras, where she had to learn language, and became head of clinic in Concepcion del Norte and also serves clinic at Pinalejo.

Hubie Young

Youth Faces The Future

We the youth of the United Church of Christ affirm that God has made himself known to us in Jesus Christ and has called us into his Church. Believing that he seeks us in holy love, we would respond by joining together in covenant with him.

He gathers us into a loving fellowship in which we encounter one another as unique persons who are created in his image. We seek to express the spirit of this fellowship in all our relationships.

Our vocation is to witness to the message and mission of the church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace. Our hope is in God who in Jesus Christ offers redemption to all men and gives promise to his kingdom of love.

Moonelon

Come to Camp Moonelon this summer! Here you will find fun and Christian fellowship, time to dig into our Christian faith, significant experiences of worship, good food prepared by expert cooks, a chance to get closer to the out-of-doors and understand God's ongoing creation, and an opportunity to meet old friends and make new friends. Lives have been strengthened, enriched, and changed at camp, and it can happen to you. Send in your registration blank right away.

When asked to write a brief summary of her week at Moonelon, one of last summer's campers wrote the following account:

"I can't really put into words the things Moonelon has meant to me this week. It has, of course, meant fun, fellowship, and work with my fellow teenagers. But it has also meant something much deeper and greater. It has meant a chance to worship and come closer to God, a chance to find my life. This is the kind of life I want: a life of service.

"Everyone came to Moonelon looking for knowledge. Most of us found this knowledge in one form or another.

"Now we are leaving and going back to our churches to share our new-found faith and knowledge. We all go with a prayer of dedication in our minds and with the two words, 'Help me.' Help me to share the worlds of knowledge and faith that Camp Moonelon has given and meant to me."

Another camper stated that Moonelon meant the following to her:

- Many wonderful experiences
- Many new friends
- Seeing old friends again
- The inspiration of Vespers
- The stillness and strength found in Morning Watch

- Being tired and dirty after work projects
- Good, clean fun
- Impressive presentations
- Useful discussions
- North Carolina's beating Virginia in softball
- The campfire
- The cross on Vesper Hill

- Communion service
- Good food
- Talk, talk talk
- Most of all, getting closer to God."

Remember, the first camp begins on June 11. Send in your registrations at once because the camps are quickly filling. Oh yes, just let the North Carolina P. F.'ers try to beat us Virginians in another softball game!

The Pilgrim Fellowship

The youth fellowship of your church is a part of the youth ministry. You are a part of the youth ministry! It is both the service which the whole church gives to its young people and the services which the young people share with each other and with the whole world. The minute we cease to think of the youth fellowship of a church as less than a church, we begin to limit the purposes and programming of the youth ministry. We are an important, serving part of the church to be served. This is the youth ministry to which our various fellowships are committed.

This means that our youth fellowship (called the Pilgrim Fellowship) is far more than a Sunday evening meeting of young people or an organization of youth. It means that everything the church does for young people, and everything young people do in, with, and as the church, and everything that ought to be done, is part of this vital ministry.

Several things Pilgrim Fellowship isn't:

- ... It isn't a national Congregational Christian youth club, with local chapters in each church. (It is the church itself, at work with youth.)
- ... It isn't, therefore, something you have to join. (All our young people are part of it no matter what the name of the local organization might be: Young People's Society, Scrooby Club, Christian Endeavor.)

... It isn't just an organization for high school young people meeting on Sunday evening. (It is the total youth program of your church, meeting in various sections at various times: in church school classes, in week-day groups, on Sunday evening.)

VALLEY SPRING RALLY

By Leanna Sellers, Reporter

The Virginia Valley Conference Pilgrim Fellowship had its spring rally at Bethel Church at Elkton, Virginia, April 30.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Bethel Church led the opening devotions. The minutes from the fall rally were read and approved. Roll call showed that eight churches were represented.

An item of business was the adoption of the newly-proposed budget. A role play in which each item of the budget was explained was presented by our guests from North Carolina. These North Carolina guests included Dorothy Lester, Dianne Binkley, David Andes, George Morningstar, and Rev. Robert Knowles. With the aid of their role play, the new budget was adopted.

A picnic supper concluded the rally.

What Will I Be?

The future puzzles everyone. We all wish we could tell just what will happen to us in the days ahead. If we knew, we could plan for it. But we don't know. We can only guess. But our guessing is not gambling, for we do have some knowledge, some experience, some faith to strengthen our hope for the future.

No matter what the future brings, we go on living. But our daily living dare not be aimless wandering. We need to plot our course, expecting detours, but always keeping our eventual goal in mind. And what is our life goal?

Is graduation a life goal? What if we make our goal in life to graduate from college? We knock ourselves out to get a diploma. We sacrifice everything. We might even cheat or steal to get that diploma. Then with diploma in hand, we suddenly realize that we don't know where to go from there. We're lost. We've run out of a goal for our life.

We should think big! College graduation makes a good temporary goal in life, but it is not big enough to last a lifetime. Then what goal is as big as life itself? We've got to lift our sights. We need a perspective that is not limited by our human span on earth. And that's where God comes in.

God started it all. All that we see and know had a beginning. All life works according to laws and patterns established at that beginning. This means that if we were to know these laws, we could live in harmony with the original purpose of creation. Already man knows many of these laws of creation — the law of gravity, the chemical pattern that forms water, and the laws that lift airplanes into the sky. Only recently has man uncovered the long-dormant laws of the atom which were in existence from the beginning of time. Yet to be uncovered are unnumbered laws that have been lying dormant since the days of creation. And in that beginning was God. He is the Creator.

Where do we fit in? Included among God's creation were laws by which we humans live and die, laugh and cry, work and play, run and fall, think and read, discover and grow. We believe that God loves us and that his laws are to our advantage when we follow his intended way for us. When we do not know or follow his way, we stumble and fall. Therefore, can we say that to live abundantly means to live according to God's intention for our lives? Could this be our goal in life: TO LIVE THE WILL OF GOD?

"Now let's get practical," you say. "How can I live the will of God when I haven't the slightest idea of what God's will is?" The truth is that none of us ever completely knows God's will. The process of "finding the will of God for my life" never ends. We ceaselessly examine our talents and opportunities. We continue to be sensitive to the needs of the world about us. We diligently seek for even fuller knowledge of God's way for us by exposing ourselves to him through prayer and worship, by studying God's truth as revealed in the life and teachings of his Son, Jesus Christ, and by observing God's working in and through the people and events of our day. Every Christian who lives his life in the service of Christ's cause is called of God in his vocation — whether it be a church vocation or not. That's the "priesthood of all believers." We owe God our first allegiance. As St. Augustine said: "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless until they find their rest in Thee."

Finding our place means taking an honest look at ourselves and our opportunities. Many aids are available — vocational and talent testing, guidance counselors, ministers, teachers, friends, and also many fine books, experts, and employees in those fields of our major interests. There is abundant information. Use it. When we begin to finalize the decision on our life vocation, we should choose what we are best equipped to do. Then we need to get down to the job of preparing ourselves adequately for our vocation.

We pack more power than we know. None of us lives up to our full potential. We all have muscles and brain power and talents we've never used. Only under pressure do most of us call upon our untapped resources. However, some people discipline themselves to press for greater use of their own personal powers. A scientist sets out to discover a cure and under pressure of his research, he draws heavily on his potential mental power and talents. The athlete strives to break a record and pushes his body to make use of a fuller physical potential. We must want something hard enough to make the most of our potential.

By giving ourselves, we make the most of what we have. By giving, we receive.

FAMILY NIGHT PROGRAM AT LIBERTY

Approximately sixty-five persons attended the Women's Fellowship annual family night service at Liberty (Vance) Christian Church, Route 1, Henderson, N. C., Wednesday evening, May 10.

The service was led by the minister's wife, Mrs. Gale Brady, with people of all age groups taking a part. Kathy Ayscue had the prayer of the children; Terry Stokes told briefly what a home means to teenagers; and Janice Grissom led the teen-ager's prayer. Mrs. Gale Brady led the prayer for housewives and Mrs. F. B. Fuller, Jr., led the entire group in responsive prayer. Mrs. Robert Kittrell sang "Bless this House" accompanied by Mrs. Nelson Falkner on the piano.

Special honors were given Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Ayscue, Sr., for being the oldest father and mother attending the service and Mrs. M. L. Grissom was honored as the oldest person present. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Foster were honored for being the youngest father and mother present. Mrs. W. D. Foster bestowed the honors with beautiful flowers and a very impressive speech to each person.

Mrs. Thomas Dement was in charge of games for the children and adults. At the close of the service Mrs. Tollic Smith served everyone delicious punch and cookies.

It's fun and playtime for the young people of Pleasant Grove church (near Bennett, N. C.). For several weeks they have been busy clearing off ground behind the parsonage. It's lots of fun to rake and haul off rocks, knowing that you'll have a big hamburger cook-out when the work is done! The ground is ready now, and the young people are buying play equipment. They have a volley ball court, an area to play badminton and horseshoes and a basketball goal. Anyone ready for a game?

Thirteen great-grandmothers were honored by Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, on Mother's Day.

New Student Officers At Elon College

By Luther N. Byrd

The Elon College Student Government officers, who will direct student affairs through the 1961-62 college year, assumed their duties the first week in May following a formal service of installation during a special chapel service.

Clifford Hardy, of Franklin Park, N. J., is the new president of the student government; with Don Terrell, of Richmond, Va., as vice president, and Eleanor Smith, of Winston-Salem, N. C., as secretary-treasurer.

Clifford Hardy

Members of the new Honor Council are Charlie Rayburn, of Norfolk, Va., William Bilderback, of Annapolis, Md., William Luby, of Wethersfield, Conn., Sandra Neighbors, of Forest City, N. C., and Susan Sandefur, of Danville, Va.

Installed as members of the new Student Council are Lee Mullis, of Myrtle Beach, S. C., James Rosser, of Sanford, N. C., Gail Hettel, of Hampton, Va., Denyse Theodore, of North Belmor, N. Y., and Kenneth Inge, of Elon College, N. C.

Fred Shull, of Burlington, N. C., is the president of the rising senior class; other officers being Walter Bass, of South Boston, Va., vice-president, and McIver Henderson, of Columbia, S. C., secretary-treasurer.

Thomas Brady, of Henderson, N. C., is the president of the rising junior class; with Jerry Hollandsworth, of Danville, Va., as vice president, and Judy Maness, of Ramseur, N. C., as secretary-treasurer.

Lynn Ryals, of Durham, N. C., who was president of his freshman class, was re-elected and will serve as president of the rising sophomore class; with Gerald Allen, of Winston-

Eleanor Smith

Salem, N. C., as vice-president, and Ellen Burke, of Graham, N. C., as secretary-treasurer.

These class officers will serve as representatives of their classes in the Student Senate, but each of the classes also elected five additional members of the Student Senate. The senators who were installed as members of the campus legislative group are as follows:

Don Terrell

From rising senior class: John Knight, of Sanford, N. C., Bobby McKinnon, of Burlington, N. C., Jane Morgan, of Greensboro, N. C., Don Rankin, of Miami Beach, Fla., and Helen Wright, of Greenville, S. C.

From the rising junior class: James Buie, of Darlington, S. C., Roger Fletcher, of Burlington, N. C., Amy Litten, Burlington, N. C., Becky Stephenson, of Suffolk, Va., and Robert Saunders, of Birmingham, Ala.

From the rising sophomore class: George Diaz, of Douglaston, N. Y., Roger Grimson, of Durham, N. C., Doris Ann Morris, of Stanardsville, Va., Valerie Spangler, of Silver Spring, Md., and Carol Tragesor, of Arnold, Md.

Elon Alumni Groups Have Active Year

The most active year in the history of the Elon College Alumni Association is nearing a close, according to a report from the office of Alumni Secretary William B. Terrell, which shows a total of twelve chapter meetings during the year and a total attendance of more than 800 persons.

Dr. J. E. Danieley, Elon College president, who has appeared as the featured speaker at most of these alumni gatherings, expressed himself this week as highly pleased with the increasingly close ties between the college and its former students in all sections. Speaking at various meetings, Dr. Danieley has presented alumni with the story of Elon's progress.

Along with President Danieley and the alumni secretary, Prof. Robert Baxter, who is director of development, and William R. Ginn, Elon admissions counsellor, have attended many meetings. Other faculty members were also present on a number of occasions, and student musical groups have been present to provide entertainment.

Alumni chapter meetings have been held in North Carolina, Virginia and Georgia. Those in North Carolina have been held in Alamance County, Gibsonville, Reidsville, Wilmington, Charlotte and Sanford, while gatherings in Virginia have been in Richmond, Alexandria, Norfolk - Portsmouth, Suffolk and Newport News. The Georgia meeting was in Atlanta.

A Search For Life's Meaning

The Answer But Not
The Whole Answer

Background Scripture: Ecclesiastes 1:12-18; 3:1-14; 5.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 42: 1-5.

Memory Selection: In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. John 16:33.

What Is Life?

Many answers have been given to this question, an old, old question. Some say life is "a dead end street" — one man said it was a dusty corridor shut at both ends; some say it is a battle; some say it is a squirrel cage; some say it is a merry-go-round; some say it is an idle dream; some say it is just one thing after another (a wag said that the difference between life and love is that life is one thing after another, while love is two things after each other); some say it is a dead-end street; some say it is a delusion; some say it is either a comedy or a tragedy; and so on and on and on. Whatever else may be said, men for a long time have been trying to find some meaning in life. For lack of meaning, life becomes dull and deadening and commonplace. Much of the unhappiness in our modern world is due to the fact that people do not have a philosophy of life that gives it any meaning. What ought to be an adventurous experience becomes mere existence. These things ought not so to be.

The "Preacher" Gives His Answer

The author of the book of Ecclesiastes, who calls himself "the Preacher who was king over Israel in Jerusalem" tries to find the meaning of life and an answer to this haunting question. Tradition assumes that Solomon was the author. Whether he was or not makes no difference in the value of the book. Whoever he was, he was a man of great wealth and great wisdom — worldly wisdom that is — and he wrote out of a background of a long and varied life. In the first three chapters of his book he tries to find the meaning of life in three realms. First he turns to wisdom. And by wisdom he means that practical, human wisdom which seeks God's plan for every individual life. He is a philosopher, and he interprets life from the human standpoint, a way which in the end he finds inadequate and unsatisfactory. There are some things that human wisdom cannot explain, e. g. birth, suffering, death, or any of the other great moments and issues of life, without looking to the Author of Life, the Creator of all. Human wisdom, as good and desirable as it is, is "altogether vanity," a "striving after the wind."

In the second chapter he tells of his attempt to find the meaning of life in sensual delight. This does not necessarily mean immorality. It meant rather living for the senses, making pleasure the goal of life. But here again he finds that this, too, is vanity, vanity. The human heart is made for something bigger and finer than mere pleasure. Things, and the satisfaction of the senses, cannot bring happiness or give meaning to life, or answer the hunger of the human heart.

In the third chapter of his book, from which today's lesson is taken, he tries to find the meaning of life in the fact that it is from beginning to end in the hands of an arbitrary deity, who has arranged it, dividing it into compartments, or seasons or times. God started the clock, he sets the cadence to which man must march keeping step with it, asking no questions, keeping the monotonous, uninspiring lock-step from the cradle to the grave. God sets a time for everything, and man is to accept it and make the most or best of it! It is a rather dismal and dismaying thing. In this system man is a machine, a robot, a mere cog. But there are thousands who have this philosophy of life. "Whatever is to be, will be" — how often have we heard that expression! "When your number is up, you will die, that's it" said the soldiers in both World Wars! All our undertakings are subject to His unchangeable decrees.

To use slang "the fellow's got something there!" We do live in God's world, and God's world is an orderly and law-abiding world. And in a way all things come alike to all. But folks do not react to the same things in the same way. There are some who go through life with a grim fatalism, for whom life is a treadmill, for whom life has no meaning and merit. But there are others who know they are in God's world, that there is order and purpose in it, who try to discover this meaning and purpose, and who give themselves to him in quiet confidence that he knows what he is about, and that He will lead us to his goals if we but try to help him in our own behalf. The fact is that the author of Ecclesiastes does not settle the problem to which he set himself, at least not until he comes to the last chapter, which we will consider in a later lesson.

Dorothy Canfield Fisher, a well-known American writer, makes this penetrating comment on this matter. "The trouble with many of us is that we just ride along in life." Then she poses a test which serves as an eye-opener, showing us how thoughtless our life often is. "If only we would give, just once, the amount of reflection to what we want to get out of life that we give to the question of what to do with a week's vacation, we would be startled by our false standards and the aimless procession of our busy days."

So much depends upon one's point of view, and upon what one is looking for. There is the story of an old gentleman who lived not far from the estate of the Duke of Devonshire who one day took the faithful housekeeper of his home to see the priceless things the Duke had in his mansion. The housekeeper would go from room to room, looking at and examining carefully each picture, each a masterpiece, but saying nothing. Later the old gentleman asked his housekeeper what she thought of it all. "It was perfect," she said with real enthusiasm, "I couldn't find a speck of dust anywhere."

Life is a trust from God. It is a stewardship from him. It has a plan and a purpose under him. It is not a big grab game or a pleasure jaunt. It is to be lived for God and for others. And those who try to do this find life satisfying and meaningful.

Please Send Coupons Now

Dear Friends:

Frequently we receive a letter asking "Do you still collect coupons?" The answer is "Yes, indeed." And we will be most happy to have all coupons which churches, Women's Fellowships, circles and individuals can send to us.

With the Betty Crocker and General Mills coupons we receive lovely stainless steel table ware and useful utensils for our kitchen and dining room, also plastic plates, bowls, cups and saucers, etc. When we move into our new cottages we will be needing additional items along this line, so the Betty Crocker coupons which we have on hand and the ones we will receive in the future will be most helpful to us. It is very economical for us to be able to furnish the place settings for the tables as well as part of the kitchen utensils with only the effort of counting the coupons and the small cost of mailing them in to be redeemed. We are most grateful to many friends who assist us in this fine way.

The "Red Scissors" coupons which you see listed in the ad on this page bring us cash returns. Some coupons are worth for us $3.00 per thousand, others $4.00 per thousand, and still others $5.00 per thousand. Our goal for this year is 75,000 coupons. If we reach this goal the redeeming company will give us a bonus and if we go over the goal we will receive an additional bonus. To date we have mailed in 30,512 "Red Scissors" coupons. We have several thousand on hand ready to be mailed, but, as you can see, we are a long way from our quota for the year. If you have any of these "Red Scissors" coupons which you would like to contribute to our Home we would be happy to have you mail them to us just as soon as possible so that we can get them counted and mailed to the company before the end of our coupon year, which is July 31.

Over the years, since the coupon campaign was started, the additional income and the premiums received for them have been most helpful to our work. We appreciate your continued interest in and support of this project.

"Red" Scissors says:
We turn Red Scissors Coupons into cash. Send us the coupons you find on the fine products shown here. Ask your friends and neighbors to save them too. We are grateful for your help.

A Memorial On Memorial Day

In Memoriam

Supt. Clyde L. Fields

To have a loved one remembered "in perpetuity," arrange for a memorial that takes the nation or the world into consideration. Would it not be well for individuals to set up a trust fund for "the welfare of all mankind" in memory of a loved one as a remembrance of his contribution to the good of all of us? Such an opportunity might be considered by individuals of the Southern Convention on Memorial Day, May 30, 1961.

How wonderful if individuals or groups in our Southern Convention would set up a trust fund, provide an insurance, endowment, set aside money in a will, or make a cash contribution in memory of some loved one to the ongoing work of the churches of the Southern Convention! With the great challenge before us on Our Christian World Mission, with the unlimited opportunities in church extension right here in our Southern Convention, with the need for greater stewardship support of the American Board and the Board of Home Missions and other boards and agencies of our denomination, with the crying need of our world for the gospel of Jesus Christ, how wonderful it would be if we could remember in some continuing way our loved ones on Memorial Day, May 30. Your Superintendent would wonder how many individuals or groups in our Southern Convention would like to remember some loved one with such a possibility as this. Rev. Lillian Gregory, of the National Women's Fellowship, has worked out a mathematical approach to the stewardship support of Our Christian World Mission. She has concluded that Our Christian World Mission might be supported for one minute for $22. Would it not be possible for a great many of us in our Southern Convention to undergird our total Christian World Mission for a minute in the name of some beloved friend or relative for $22.00? I wonder if a number of us in the Southern Convention might not forward to the Convention Office $22.00 in memory of some loved one or relative to be credited to Our Christian World Mission?

The idea of setting aside a trust fund or an insurance policy, or an amount in a will came to the attention of the Superintendent from the mimeographed pamphlet distributed by the Board of Home Missions, called "Estate Planning," edited by Dr. Walter C. Giersbach. I would call to your attention one paragraph in the spring issue of "Estate Planning":

"Miss Harriet R. Cobb, a school teacher in Northampton, Mass., lived simply — very simply — in season and out. At her passing recently her personal effects were valued at $120.27 which told the world how little she valued things when compared to service to her fellowmen.

"The small inheritance that was hers was invested and reinvested with wisdom, devotion, and faithfulness until it grew to be in excess of $202,000. She remembered seven of her relatives, a hospital, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in her Will. The last named ultimately received $148,000, which was to be used 'for the general purposes of the Board.'

"Her name is now listed with the others in annual reports which this Board has made for 150 years. But more than that, her light will shine throughout the dark places of the world that seek "the light of the world."

The editor spent last week in Florida enjoying a few days of relaxation and recuperation from a virus which he could not seem to "throw off" in the weather of North Carolina's "springtime."

RETIRED MINISTER DIES

The Rev. Robert Lee Williamson, 85, retired Congregational Christian minister, died May 11 at his home in Charlottesville, Virginia.

He was graduated from Elon College in 1910 and ordained to the ministry the same year. He held pastorates in North Carolina and Virginia for 33 years. He was president of the Valley Conference of Congregational Christian Churches for several years. He served Winchester and Timber Ridge churches in that conference 1928-33.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Virginia Moore Williamson; and a brother, Oscar C. Williamson of Stuart, Florida. A graveside service was held at 3:30 p.m. Sunday, May 14, in Monticello Memorial Park.

SNOW

The members of the Women's Fellowship, Mt. Olivet Church, Dyke, Virginia, wish to pay a tribute of love and respect to the memory of Buey G. Snow, who met his death on the highway April 7 at the age of 83. His death came as a complete shock to the family, as well as to the Dyke community and surrounding counties.

Mr. Snow had not been a regular attendant for a few years at his church, as his hearing was impaired, but he will be remembered especially for the interest he has always taken down through the years when a building program or repair job came up in the church.

Mr. Snow had been a member of Mt. Olivet since young manhood. He spent his entire life in the Dyke community and endeared himself to neighbors and residents of the entire community. He was willing at all times to help his fellow men.

The family is appreciative of the gifts of money which came in lieu of flowers, and which will be used for the church.

THE CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

and His Gospel to a sinful world that all men the world over might have hope?

The founders of the Christian Church, in 1794, gathered on this sacred spot, formed and enunciated principles upon which Protestant Christianity could unite, and looked forward to the day when such a glorious event would come to pass.

As we gather today in the name of God, and our Church, we all realize that fifty to a hundred years from now the Christian Church, our denomination, will not be known save on the pages of history; but we should rejoice that our founding fathers here gave to the world the principles upon which true Christianity must eventually unite.

Frontiers Of Brotherhood And Freedom

God of our Fathers, hear our prayer,
Bless all Your children everywhere,
From pole to pole, land, sky and sea;
Teach us the truths that make men free
And laws that safeguard liberty
To all Your world-wide family.

Hunger, disease and poverty—
These are the frontiers where we see
Roadblocks to human dignity;
But doubly damned is tyranny
That shackles men that should be free,
Censors the news, denies free speech,
Readies armed forces out of reach,
Plans ultimatums often hurled
At its own serfs, or anxious world;
Boasts launching pads prepared to kill
All those who vex a tyrant's will;
Trains saboteurs to infiltrate
The heartbeats of some new-born state,
And teaches hatred as a tool
To justify its own misrule.

Why must so many million men
Beat plowshares into swords again?—
Wasting in sterile armament
The lifeblood of each continent
That should be used to set men free
To live in peace and dignity,
Secure from want and tyranny,—
To win from rivers, sun and soil
Rich dividends from honest toil,
Till not oppressed and more mature,
For ancient ills they learn the cure.

Poor propaganda-blinded youth
Can never hope to grasp the truth
That Brotherhood makes mankind free,
But hate and fear breed tragedy.
The burdens of another war
Will be far greater than before.
Those who survive will fail to see
A healthy, free economy,
For misuse of atomic power
Can blast man's progress any hour,
And open wide the bloody door
From World War Three to World War Four.

Father, why do there have to be
Frontiers of brutal enmity,
Where lack of true humanity
Blinds us to our real destiny?
Teach us to serve our fellow man
With all the strength and skill we can
To conquer through fraternity
Hunger, disease and poverty.
As ill will and aggression cease,
Help us to share enduring peace;
And may the Prince of Peace, Your Son,
Bless us until this peace is won.

Gilbert Darlington

THE AUTHOR

The Armed Forces of the United States have been paid a tribute in a special poem written by Chaplain Gilbert Darlington, Lt. Comdr. NYMN Ret., entitled "Frontiers of Brotherhood and Freedom."

A "first reading" of the poem was given by Dr. Darlington before the Military Chaplains Association of the United States, meeting at the United States Military Academy, West Point, New York, Wednesday, May 3.

The poem is also dedicated to "all who are working for peace and freedom among people and in countries everywhere."

The author is Chaplain of the New York Chapter, The Military Order of the World Wars; Chaplain General, Naval Order of the United States, and Chairman Emeritus, New York Armed Forces Day Committee. Dr. Darlington has been active in veteran's and patriotic organizations for many years. After serving as Chaplain in the Navy during 1917 to 1918, he became treasurer of the American Bible Society and for forty years has continued in this position.

Commander William S. Stuhr, Commander, New York Chapter, The Military Order of the World Wars, and Chairman of the Armed Forces Day, has invited Dr. Darlington to read "Frontiers of Brotherhood and Freedom" at the banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, marking the culmination of Armed Forces Week observances, Saturday, May 20.

Our Task Is Crucial

We are summoned to a unique and urgent mission. Public agencies can give material aid, advance education, and speed technological progress. But only Christ can give the reconstructed man. Only Christ can give the New Society of the forgiven and the forgiving. Without Christ all aid, and indeed all life, turns sour, soon or late. So our mission is pivotal, our task crucial.

For this reason it is a shock to learn that our mission is crippled by inadequate resources. One board lives on a diet of slow starvation, having about the same dollar income it had thirty years ago. Another says its ability to respond to the needs of this dynamic society remains static. Both major boards are now drawing heavily on reserve funds just to maintain the current program.

It is a shock, too, to learn that a large group of our retired ministers receive annuities rendered seriously inadequate by inflation.

This need not continue. We are now asked to raise our giving to the Regular Apportionment of Our Christian World Mission from $7,000,000 in 1960 to $11,500,000 by the end of 1962. This new goal is based on the known needs of the boards and the anticipated needs of the conferences. We must reach this goal in 1962 if we are to overcome the devastating effects of spiralling costs and if our mission at home and abroad is to have the resources to move ahead with strength and confidence. Being over and above our Christian Higher Education Fund, this objective calls for a radical change in our giving patterns. It means we are asking of ourselves a percentage increase five times greater than the increase during any previous two-year period.

MEMORIAL DAY PRAYER

For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed, Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blessed.

Thou wast their Rock, their Fortress and their Might;
Thou, Lord, their Captain in the well-fought fight;
Thou, in the darkness drear, their one true Light.

O may thy soldiers,
faithful, true, and bold,
Fight as the saints who nobly fought of old, and win with them
the victor's crown of gold.

O blest communion, fellowship divine!
We feebly struggle,
they in glory shine;
Yet all are one in Thee,
for all are Thine.

Here And There Among The Churches

"A Worthy Vocation!" was the Mother's Day sermon topic for Rev. Bland Leebrick at Apple's Chapel.

Plans are under way for the Vacation Bible School June 7-16, at Palm Street, Greensboro. Commencement will be Friday night, June 16. Mrs. Exie Preddy is leader.

Turner's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C., has six new members: Rev. and Mrs. James E. Porter and two daughters, Gail and Nancy, and Mrs. Woodrow Scoggins and John Corrington. Mr. Porter is the new pastor.

As a part of Christian Family Life Week observance at Palm Street Church, Greensboro, a covered dish supper was held on Saturday night at the church. The supper was sponsored by the Women's Fellowship of which Mrs. Pearl Hall is president.

Homecoming will be held at Palm Street Church, Greensboro, June 11. Lunch will be served in the church basement immediately following the 11 o'clock worship service. An afternoon service will be held at 1:30. Rev. Mack V. Welch, Reidsville, will be guest speaker for the afternoon service. All former members and friends are cordially invited.

One of the 18 workshops being held across the country to train "competent and dedicated" Christian education leaders for the United Church of Christ was held at Camp Hanover (Richmond, Va.) last week. About 60 selected men and women were expected. They represented Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Indiana.

Nine members were received into our Albemarle church May 14, seven of whom were young people. This followed a week of special services in which a former member of the church, Rev. Bill Simmons of Great Bridge, Norfolk, was the guest minister.

SLIPS ARE SHOWING

By mistake pages 5-12 were printed before proof-reading was completed. Readers will please be as lenient as possible in their criticism concerning misspelled words, etc. Our slips are showing badly. We are very sorry.

Editor

Remember to send coupons to our Home for Children at Elon College. Those needed were listed in last week's Sun. This is often a project of the friendly service department of our local Women's Fellowship groups.

Vacation Bible school will be held at several of our churches the early part of June. These include Tryon, June 5-9, through junior department; Albemarle, June 12-16 age 4-16; Union Ridge, June 12-16, 4 years through eighth grade; Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, June 12-18.

An item of interest from the bulletin for May 21 from our church in Southern Pines, North Carolina: "In a special business meeting of the congregation last Wednesday evening the title of our church was changed by unanimous vote to conform with the new merged denomination of which we will become a part on midnight June 5, 1961: THE UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST (Church of Wide Fellowship), Southern Pines, N. C."

The North Alamance Church Soft-ball League includes Bethlehem, Carolina, Long's Chapel, and Union Ridge churches of our denomination and Bethel Methodist and Stony Creek Presbyterian churches.

Elon College Community Church had a special early service of worship at 9:00 Sunday morning, May 28, which was baccalaureate Sunday at Elon College. Ten high school seniors and one college senior were honored.

May 7 was a day of rejoicing in the life of St. Paul Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. For on that day of rededication of a renovated church building and installation of Rev. Richard Jackson as minister 675 attended the services and an offering of $1080 was received.

Rev. and Mrs. Calvin J. Felton were honored at a farewell reception at First, Portsmouth, Sunday evening, May 28. The Women's Fellowship, which sponsored this, invited the pastors and members of our two other Portsmouth churches as well as members and friends of First Church. Mr. Felton has been the interim pastor there for some time.

St. Peter's United Church, Greensboro, is in the process of building a church. And they have acquired a bell, which formerly hung in Hurdles Mill Methodist Church in Person County, a building no longer used as a church. J. R. Long, treasurer of the building fund at St. Peter's, attended this church as a child; in fact, his mother gave the land on which the church was built. It will be mounted on a free-standing tower alongside our newest Greensboro church.

New speaker's stands for the junior and junior high classrooms at Beverly Hills, Burlington, have been made by James Phillips as one of his God and Country Award Scout projects.

Homecoming service was held at Union Ridge, Burlington, May 14, Sunday school attendance (281) was a record, and 574 were present for morning worship, followed by a picnic lunch. The bulletin for that day reported that in the past year cement walks had been completed, three acres of land acquired, landscape work for softball grounds completed, and work begun on a recreational area for the community.

MISSIONARY DIES IN KOREA

Miss Edith Galt, missionary nurse of our Congregational Christian Service Committee in Korea, died May 23 in the U. S. Army Hospital in Seoul. Dr. Kenneth Anthony of our Service Committee received a cable May 20 saying that she had been stricken with polio. Miss Galt was born in China of American Board missionary parents, and went to China as a nurse in 1944. Since 1953 she has been in Pusan, Korea.

Survivors include her father, Rev. Dr. Elmer Galt, retired missionary, of Grinnell, Iowa; a brother Rev. Ralph Galt, formerly pastor of Bethlehem parish in our Valley Conference and now in Mandaree, North Dakota; and a sister, Mrs. R. D. Modak, Bombay, India.

ACTIVITIES AT MONTICELLO

By Mrs. Mary Faucette, Reporter

Monticello has a full schedule planned for the first two weeks in June. Revival services will begin the first Sunday and last through Friday evening. Rev. W. W. Snyder will do the preaching.

On the second Sunday we will have our annual Homecoming program with Dr. J. E. Danieley as speaker. Communion will be observed. A picnic dinner in the Fellowship Hall of the church will follow the service. There will be no afternoon program.

We invite all our former pastors and members, and all our friends to join us in these services, especially the Homecoming.

During the week following Homecoming Vacation Bible School will be held at the Monticello church in cooperation with Friendship Methodist Church.

SPECIAL SERVICE AT LEAKSVILLE

R. O. Rothgeb

The Leaksville Church of the Virginia Valley Conference will hold its annual homecoming and memorial service on the second Sunday in June (June 11). The morning service will begin with Sunday School at 10 o'clock, followed by the worship service at 11 o'clock, with special musical numbers by the choir and the memorial sermon by the pastor, Rev. Thomas D. Sutton. A picnic lunch will be served at the noon hour.

The afternoon program will open with a devotional service followed by special musical numbers by the choir and a song service by choir and congregation. The public is cordially invited.

GOD'S PROMISE

God hath not promised
Skies always blue,
Flower-strewn pathways,
All our lives through;
God hath not promised
Sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow,
Peace without pain.

But God hath promised
Strength for the day,
Rest for the labor,
Light for the way;
Grace for the trials,
Help from above,
Unfailing sympathy,
Undying love.

SAY IT RIGHT...

WRITE IT RIGHT

The expression, the American people, when used by most citizens of the United States, means only those who live in this country, but it also is applicable to residents of Canada and other North and South American countries.

Never say these kind, but that kind, or this kind. Kind is singular, while those is plural.

"Another one" is often heard, but the "one" is superfluous. "Call me up" is also the "up" too much.

A pair of new shoes is correct, not a new pair of shoes. It is the shoes that are new, not pair.

INCLUSIVE VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL

The seventh annual united vacation church school sponsored by First and United Churches in Raleigh will meet this year June 5-10. Five and six year olds will meet at United Church and will go from there for a morning program of outside activities. Grades one through eight will go to Doak Day Camp. Parents and friends will come to the closing program at United Church, Saturday, June 10, at 11:00 a.m. and enjoy a pot luck lunch.

Cost is $5.00 for first child in family, $4.00 for each additional child, and $2.50 for kindergarten group. Study theme will be Latin America. Over half the time will be spent in camp activities, such as craftwork, sports, nature study. The enrollment is limited to 160 for the total group.

Someone Said It Well

Dr. Charles H. Malik, "the Christian statesman whose influence reaches out from little Lebanon to the whole world," is to be the commencement speaker June 8 at Chicago Theological Seminary. The Seminary Register dated May 1 has this quotation from him:

"Three passions dominate my life: philosophy, religion, and the international scene in its deepest aspects. ... And when I speak of the international scene I do not mean 'international relations' in the academic or political sense of the term, but the clashes between peoples and cultures and ideologies which characterize the present epoch and which constitute the essence of history."

"There are many phases of Western life which are repulsively materialistic... To the superficial observer who is unable to penetrate to the core of love and truth which is still at the heart of the West, there is little to choose between the soulless materialism of the West and the militant materialism of the East."

In reply to the question, "How should a Christian view world politics?" Dr. Malik replied:

"It is the duty of the Christian to know the facts, to study their backgrounds, and so deepen his knowledge of the truth, to refrain from jumping to conclusions or hoping for easy solutions, to seek justice and to pray."

Memorial Day

What are the memories that come trouping back across your mind on Memorial Day?

War widows and soldiers will unavoidable think of husbands who never returned, and "buddies" who fell in the fight. Fatherless children will wonder what it would have been like to live under the guidance of a father, and perhaps with more of the necessities and luxuries of life. Statues scattered across our world are silent reminders of valiant soldiers who gave their lives for some "cause" that may have been lost or won. Patriotic speakers will eulogize this myriad of men whose lives came to an untimely end by the destructive forces of other men. But deep in the heart all who lay flowers on a military grave, look at the picture of a loved one lost to warfare, or cherish the sacred memory of the boy, the sweet-heart or the husband who never came back — in the heart of all there is a loneliness that springs from the uselessness of continuous slaughter of the flower of manhood. The democracy my college generation sacrificed to save has all but fled from the earth. And so it is with many another fine ideal slaughtered in the carnage of war. But on Memorial Day we need to remember those who gave life's blood with the hope that it would bless mankind.

Roll-call in churches of those who have departed this life is a good way to assure remembrance.

Such a roll-call in the Southern Convention appears to be needed. It is so easy to forget that we are "surrounded with a great cloud of witnesses." Without James O'Kelly, Rice Haggard and a thousand or more people who were concerned for freedom in the Church about 1794 we would never have been the prophetic group of which Dr. L. E. Smith spoke at the site of Old Lebanon Church recently (see article in last week's Sun). Take out of our heritage the influence of William Long, founder of Elon College, of J. O. Atkinson, missionary exponent, mighty wielder of pen, and orator extra ordinary, of W. W. Staley, pastor, college president, and leader in starting the Federal Council of churches now known as the National Council of Churches, of Stanley C. Harrel, long-time pastor and Convention leader whose judgment was wise, and we would be poor indeed as a Convention. Then there is the long list known best to readers of this paper of ministers and laymen who have made their contribution to the Church they loved. Time and space do not permit naming them all. But pardon an editor for naming some who were like giants in their day, or so it seems as memory recalls — I. W. Johnson, J. E. West, L. I. Cox, W. A. Harper, P. J. Kernodle, Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Williams, P. J. Carleton, P. T. Clapp, J. W. Wellons, that marvelous Newman family with J. U. as teacher at Elon for half a century, W. P. Lowrence who taught students at Elon how to speak and appreciate good English — and a host of others known and loved by you who read these lines.

In acknowledging our debt to them, we must remind ourselves that they cannot reach the perfection of their ideals without us. They wrought well in their time, and our appreciation of their gifts to us make it necessary for us to move forward under the leadership of the truth we know and the God we serve as they did in their time.

Reverend R. L. Williamson

The home-coming for R. L. Williamson was May 11, 1961, as we count time. He and his good wife had hoped to celebrate their Golden Wedding Anniversary July 18, but a Voice from above called, and he went to sleep so they could lay his body in the silent halls of death and look through their tears to the "house not made with hands" where good people go to dwell with the Redeemer.

The Reverend R. Lee Williamson was a native of North Carolina, a graduate of Elon College in the class of 1905, a faithful minister of churches in Carolina and Virginia, "a likeable and fine-spirited man," as one friend wrote his widow. As president of the Virginia Valley Central Conference he presided over thirteen consecutive sessions (some of them mid-year) of that Conference. For many years he had been an invalid, and had been lovingly cared for by his devoted companion in their home at Charlottesville, Virginia. Burial was in that city May 14.

The eloquence of his life surpassed that of his tongue, the nobility of his character illumined his deeds, the sincerity of his purpose endeared him to people. Another of our devoted ministers has finished his course, and it can be said truthfully that he "kept the faith."

Commencement At Elon College

The brave souls who dared to start Elon College would doubtless have been delighted to attend the 73rd Commencement during the past weekend. The thousands of students who have received training in this Church college have certainly added something of value to the world because of the pioneers who laid the foundations and the faithful who have maintained and improved the institution. The Church that gave the college birth is rendering service of tremendous worth.

A Uniting Church

The dream of James O'Kelly and his followers that the Church should be united is at this late date seeing fulfillment. Congregational and Christian churches in majority numbers have voted to unite with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. This merger should be declared operative at the meeting in Philadelphia near the first of July.

But that is not the end. It appears to be the beginning. Disciples of Christ have shared in consideration of our merger with the expectation that the time would soon come when that Church would seek membership in the United Church of Christ. Recently the Presbyterian Church has heartily voted to consider merger with the United Church of Christ, the Episcopal Church and Methodist Church. The main stream of Protestantism seems to be gathering momentum as it moves toward the unity of the faith in Christ Jesus the Lord. For this we can thank God and take heart, and be pleased that our little Christian Church may have been the rivulet that started the river.

The Museum of Comparative Zoology at Harvard University is world known, and has given impetus to similar exhibits at many other institutions of learning in this and other countries.

This famous museum had its beginning in the dream of Louis Agassiz, born in Switzerland, May 28, 1807. He studied in many important research centers in Europe, and before the age of 23 had published books on several scientific subjects. His name was known to every scientist in the old world.

Early in life Agassiz became interested in the subject of museums, and visualized one where the public could come in contact with facts in the field of natural science. Agassiz's idea of making a museum a center of education had profound influence, and the welcome change from the old method to the new is attributed largely to his methods as a scientist and professional exhibitor. Almost every museum in this and other countries established since Agassiz's day has incorporated his ideas.

Agassiz came to the United States in 1845 to give a series of lectures at Lowell Institute, Boston, and decided to make this country his home. For three years he lived in a small house in East Boston, and every room had the aspect of an aquarium. In 1848 he accepted the chair of natural history of the Lawrence Scientific School at Harvard, and when he moved to Cambridge, his home again took on the atmosphere of a zoo. The household included an alligator, a tank of turtles, a family of constantly increasing rabbits, a cage of eagles, several opossums, and a tame bear. While a student in Germany he had some 40 birds flying about his study.

When Cornell University opened its doors in 1865, Agassiz spoke on the occasion and later helped to train many of the institution's early scientists.

Money was never the goal of this renowned scientist. After obtaining world-wide recognition he was urged to undertake highly paid lecture tours, but unhesitatingly declined because the trips would interrupt his research.

Agassiz's zeal to establish a museum according to his lifelong dream never flagged, and before his death at Cambridge, in December 1873, his vision materialized. His jealously hoarded collection of specimens stored in a shanty on the banks of the Charles River became the nucleus of one of the finest museums of the world — Harvard's famous museum of zoology. Christ Is All And In All Christ is our Way; we walk in Him.

 He is our truth; we embrace Him.
 He is our life; we live in Him.
 He is our Lord; we choose Him to rule over us.
 He is our master; we serve Him.
 He is our teacher, instructing us in the way of salvation.
 He is our prophet, pointing out the future.
 He is our priest, having atoned for us.
 He is our advocate, ever living to make intercession for us.
 He is our Saviour, saving to the uttermost.
 He is our rock; we grow from Him.
 He is our bread; we feed upon Him.
 He is our shepherd; leading us into green pastures.
 He is our true vine; we abide in Him.
 He is the water of life; we slake our thirst from Him.
 He is the fairest among ten thousand; we admire Him above all others.
 He is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of His person; we strive to reflect His likeness.
 He is the upholder of all things; we rest upon Him.
 He is our wisdom; we are guided by Him.
 He is our righteousness; we cast all our imperfections upon Him.
 He is our sanctification; we draw all our power for holy life from Him.
 He is our redemption, redeeming us from all iniquity.
 He is our healer, curing all our diseases.
 He is our friend, relieving us in all our necessities, and cheering us in our difficulties.

A MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

ANXIETY

"Humble yourselves therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

I Peter 5:7

Are you looking at the same word in that text which I am? It is a little three-letter word, but where it stands it is great: "All." "Casting all your care on him!" How about that?

There is a portion for us to do, and then, we are to leave it with God. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God." Mark you, it is Simon Peter writing. The same Simon Peter who had once so miserably failed. But he loved the Lord Jesus, and repented with bitter tears.

The Lord was his friend, and he loved him! If we ourselves kept that fact in mind in our own conduct, and thought more of him, our anxieties and worries would be far less likely to take the joy of living from us.

Being humble and obedient Simon Peter had seen the "mighty hand of God," in the upper room at pentecost; in the multitudes that were saved with the simple preaching of the story of Jesus, his death and resurrection; and in the miraculous power given followers. And how painlessly God revealed the fact to Peter that the gospel was to be preached to the Gentile world as well!

As he wrote the above text perhaps he could hear Jesus saying, "Do not be anxious... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Paul asked the Philippians not to worry; but work, pray, give thanks; and the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ." "That my joy may be in you; and that your joy may be full," said Jesus.

Who Should Answer?

By L. E. Smith

Jesus, as his custom was, in the days of his flesh went about the countryside, the villages and the cities teaching in the synagogues, healing the sick of all manner of diseases, and preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God. He aroused intense interest everywhere he went. People came after him in great numbers. He looked out upon the seething multitudes and cried out in his soul, "Truly, the fields are white unto the harvest, but the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth the labourers into his harvest."

This same Jesus is abroad in our land today, stalking through our countryside, villages, towns and cities. We may not be aware of his presence, as were many in his day, but even so he is here. He sees the multitudes that are worn and weary, afflicted with questions, doubts and fears — men who are without God and without hope. He is crying out constantly, if only we could hear. "Truly, the fields are white unto the harvest, but the labours are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth the labourers into his harvest."

We have only to look out on our own fields, existing conditions in our Southern Convention, to see the whitening and the wastening of the harvest. There are many, far too many, vacant pulpits in the several Conferences of our Convention. There are numerous points in these Conferences where new churches are needed. The government, principles, freedom and spirit of our denomination make it inviting for the United Church of Christ. In the Eastern Virginia Conference new churches are needed in the various new developments in and around this whole Tidewater section. Some of these needs will be met by other denominations, but some will wait a long, long time before the messengers of good news arrive. We simply do not have the leaders, the ministers, to meet these needs. Truly, for us the fields are white unto the harvest, but the labourers are few.

What are we to do? Where will we find the labourers? The ministers? How will the young men, the young women of our church be induced to answer the call of God, and give themselves to the privilege of preaching the everlasting gospel? How are young people influenced to give themselves wholly to Christ, and to the business of preaching? Is it to make the profession attractive and inviting from a standpoint of any easy-going life, to convince them that there will be for them good parishes with adequate salaries, sufficient for them and family, that they will have furnished for them commodious and

Jesus Calling

Hark, the voice of Jesus calling,

"Who will go and work today?

Fields are white, and harvests waiting,

Who will bear the sheaves away?"

Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich rewards he offers thee;

Who will answer, gladly saying,

"Here am I; send me, send me?"

Let none hear you idly saying,

"There is nothing I can do,"

While the souls of men are dying,
Gladly take the task he gives you;

Let his work your pleasure be;

Answer quickly when he calleth,

"Here am I, send me, send me."

beautiful homes to live in, and that there will always be waiting for them good pastorates when desired? Not at all, I think. There seems to be today too great a tendency to make the Christian life an easy one, too inviting for the uncommitted Christian and the worldly-minded. The Cross is still the center of Christianity, and those of us who would be followers of Christ must take up our Cross and bear it daily. We would never see a star if there were no night. We would never know the light if there were no shadows. What would joy mean to us if we had never known sorrow?

Is there a tendency in the Southern Convention to make the minister's life too easy for him and his family? The majority of our churches and parishes have provided the ministers of our Convention with beautiful and attractive homes. This is good. I am all for it. Our Convention officials are constantly urging higher salaries for our ministers and Christian workers. I join with them in the interest, but I do not agree that these are the things, the attractions, the influences, that cause talented young people to answer the call of God to bear witness, to preach the everlasting gospel of Christ. No, Sir! Never! Christ did not say, "Make the way easy and inviting, and they will come and go on this holy mission," but he laid this responsibility upon the Apostles. He said, "The need is great, it is urgent. You are the only ones who can meet these needs. The responsibility is yours. The remedy is prayer. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

The need in our Church, and our Convention today, is great. The harvest is wasting. The Master has placed the responsibility to meet these needs upon our Church, upon our pastors, upon all of us who constitute our churches. We must bear this responsibility at the altar of prayer. He commands again and anew, pray, pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest. To pray to the God of all Grace that he would send forth labourers into the whitening fields about us to help recruit the ministers, to influence talented young people to enter the ministry, to give themselves for the work of Christ, first of all is the responsibility of the church. Christ laid this responsibility upon the disciples of his day. He places it upon his Church, upon us, today. Our sword and spirit are prayer, placed in the hands of every true Christian. Shall we use them? Or shall we lay them aside?

In the past years I have visited in most of our churches in the Southern Convention. I have listened to a large number of our ministers preach, and preach well they do, but at the moment I do not recall ever having heard one in his prayer beseech the Lord to call the young people of his congregation into the gospel ministry. Could we, by becoming concerned, have our ministers in the Southern Convention entreat the Lord in earnest prayer at the 11 o'clock service on the Sabbath that he would send forth labourers into the whitening, wasting harvest of our divinely assigned fields at home and abroad.

GILBERT GOES TO BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY

Boston, Mass., May 23 — Rev. Lewis L. Gilbert, Cleveland, Ohio, has been named executive secretary of the Board of Pastoral Supply of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. Gilbert, formerly a missionary in China and now minister and assistant superintendent of the Ohio Congregational Christian Conference, will take up his new duties in September. He succeeds Rev. Horace G. Robson, Newtonville, who has reached the mandatory retirement age. Mr. Robson has given distinguished service in the post since 1950.

The board, which has its headquarters at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, is maintained by denominational agencies in the eastern area of the United States to help churches to find ministers and ministers to find churches. Cooperating bodies include state conferences in the New England states, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Born in New Haven, Connecticut, August 17, 1898, Lewis Gilbert was graduated from Wesleyan University (Connecticut) in 1920 and from Yale University Divinity School in 1924. Harvard University Divinity School awarded him the degree of Master of Systematic Theology in 1944.

From 1925 to 1941 he was in China, serving first on the faculty of Yale-in-China College and later in North China as a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His last four years in China was under the Japanese military occupation.

Mr. Gilbert joined the staff of the Ohio Conference in 1948 as minister of stewardship and laymen's work. He was appointed minister and assistant superintendent in 1954. In addition to his work with the conference, he also served as lecturer in Practical Theology and as field work supervisor at Oberlin Graduate School of Theology (Ohio). His daughter Doris graduates from Oberlin College this year.

Homecoming at Hopedale Congregational Christian Church June 11 will be the beginning of a week's revival. Guest speaker for the revival will be Rev. Charles Bell, pastor of Bethlehem. Pastor Lester Stanley gives a cordial invitation to everyone to attend the services at Hopedale.

Being A Church Member

By Clair Wilkins, Liberty Church, Lennig, Virginia

The Church is the body of Christ. A physical body has imperfect and inactive members and so does the body of Christ.

It is the strong, on-going spirit of our bodies that carry us on despite our imperfections. It is the strong, outward-reaching members of the body of Christ that keep it moving despite the efforts of the weak, self-centered members who strive so mightily to smother its spirit and stifle its growth.

When Jesus said we should be child-like in our faith he did not mean childish. A person who has entered the kingdom of God is child-like because he has accepted God as a loving Father, and Jesus, as Christ the Son of God, to be his Savior and example of life.

As a child he must grow to be like his father through loving obedience and by following and communing through the one he sent to lead the way.

No child ever becomes an adult that does not grow. Nor does a church member ever know the joys of abundant life who doesn't grow nearer God each day of his life through deeds and thoughts that are inspired by the constant, living presence of God.

A child must do something for himself if he is to become a happy, healthy person. He must feed and exercise his body. We must also feed our minds and souls if they are to be healthy, happy ones.

All of us have at least moderately well-fed bodies but how desperately starved our souls often are. We never take the opportunity to learn of the God we profess to love. This just doesn't jibe. That which we love we seek and long to know better.

There are countless church members who never seek for themselves the message of God's word. I believe the Bible has a message for each person individually. Many depend upon a minister or Sunday School teacher to teach them the thing they should be searching for on their own initiative.

I think sometimes there are those who are afraid to become informed for fear that it will shake them loose from their nice, comfortable chair of complacency. Why should I become informed and aware of all the need and injustice around me? I am comfortable as I am and I don't want to change. It is much easier to close our eyes and minds and just sit where we are.

We often use the excuse of not having a good education and having a poor mind to deter us from doing things. We know deep inside that the great barrier is a lack of desire to do it.

Our minds must be exercised if they are to grow. We are given minds of lesser and greater degrees. But we of the lesser group often refuse or don't bother to let the greater group help us and lead us to the pinnacle of God.

As church members we must grow in God if we are going to produce our share of thrust in moving the body of Christ to its appointed destination.

Being in the Church can be an experience as cold and dead as the ink with which your name is written in the roll book if we let it; or it can be the living water of the soul, the fire that warms life and the spark that makes every day more than just a day, if we want it so. For as we want to be, we are.

May Fellowship At Turner's Chapel

By Mrs. John A. Redding

Turner's Chapel Women's Fellowship held their annual May Fellowship meeting May -- at the Colon Community building with a large number of members and their families in attendance.

The meeting began at 6:30 with supper. Then an interesting program was presented under the direction of Rev. James Porter, Mrs. James Wicker and Mrs. Carl Dawson.

The worship service included a duet "Bless This House" sung by Nancy and Jane Porter accompanied by their sister, Gail Porter. A film "Bible on the Table" was shown by the pastor, Mr. Porter.

Everyone enjoyed the evening of fellowship and felt benefitted from receiving such an inspiring lesson as the film taught.

Let's Go To Florida

By A Roving Reporter

When the travel fever hits one all kinds of excuses can be found for making a trip. Long labors and little rest, recurring colds that debilitate, fishing that has been postponed for ages, sunshine with its healing ministry — why, certainly any one of such reasons is adequate encouragement for one who looks wistfully to Florida when Carolina weather is cold and wet.

An old Lincoln had been traded for another of later vintage. The newer one challenged its owner to try its stamina on the highways leading south. Since the church treasurer had a little time to spare and the good wife was going to be home long enough to get out an issue of this paper, the time seemed to be propitious, and we set out happily on a Sunday afternoon.

A church member in Athens and another in Macon, Georgia, lent reason for going that way for visitation. That made the west coast of Florida right in line.

Pass-a-Grill marks the tip end of a peninsula across from beautiful St. Petersburg. The waters of the Gulf of Mexico were placid, the boatman steered straight to where the fish congregate above rock bottom. Sure enough, there were hungry fish foolish enough to swallow a hook. It was real fun to pull in the fish while bathing in sunshine far from land. On the return trip there was nothing more fitting than a nap — restful, relaxing, restoring.

Of course you are not interested in trimming hedges and cleaning the lawn while the sun gets hotter by the hour. All right, then, go in the house and sleep where it is cool and birds make your music.

Church in Winter Park is always a delight. Perhaps memory paints part of the picture, for there at the altar could be seen through the years a bride and groom pledging allegiance, and June will soon be here again with its anniversary. But really the choir and organ produced music to stir and soothe the soul, and the new minister challenged the worshippers to "receive the Holy Spirit" as it continues its good work in the world.

First United Church in Orlando invited one and all to share in its dedication Sunday afternoon, May 21, and it was good to be there. "Today, just twenty-two months and ten days since the first worship was conducted for the establishment of this congregation, we dedicate the buildings of our first unit," read the bulletin for the occasion. Three buildings, connected by corridors, stand among orange trees in a ten acre grove that cost $57,750. The buildings, composed largely of blocks; contain 8,212 square feet of floor space and cost $78,000. The parsonage at 1211 Vantage Drive was purchased for $21,500.

The service of dedication was in School For Town and Country Ministers

Rev. Weldon T. Madren reminds us that the 32nd Summer School for Town and Country Ministers at Virginia Polytechnical Institute will be held July 3-7 at a cost of $16.50 per person. He says the food, fellowship, and fun are good. Of course the courses of study are helpful. There is some scholarship aid for those who need it.

Further information can be received from Mr. Madren, Superintendent Clyde Fields, or Dr. Donald R. Fessler, Virginia Polytechnical Institute, Blacksburg, Virginia.

This year's program consists of four lecture-discussion series:

1. The Town and Country Church Reclaiming Her Community by Dr. Henry A. McCann who represents the National Council of Churches in this field. Discussions will center on the place of the pastor, enlisting lay leadership, and the program of involvement.

2. The Church's Concern for the World Situation by Dr. Henry S. Randolph of the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. Consideration will be given to the social and economic changes in Europe, the Church confronting rapid cultural changes in the underdeveloped areas, the Church in the midst of exploding nationalism in Asia and Africa, and the Church's involvement in economic improvement in underdeveloped countries.

3. Group and Individual Adjustment in an Era of Rapid Change by Dr. Ward F. Porter, Chief of the Program Research Branch, Division charge of Rev. Horace S. Sills, a young North Carolina minister whose success in this new community has been phenomenal. Sermon for the occasion was delivered by Dr. Louis Schultz, a professor at Piedmont College and former minister of First Congregational Church in Winter Park, whose dream was being fulfilled, for it was he and the Winter Park church that started the process that established the church in Orlando. Superintendent of the Florida Conference, Robins Ralph, shared in the service. Dr. Fred Ensminger was an honored attendant.

The fish are eaten, the lawn is clean, the church is dedicated, and an editor must heed the call to duty. So, Good Bye, Florida — until a later date.

"STUDENT MINISTERS"

By William Joyner

The title "student minister" is used in a variety of ways throughout the Southern Convention. Some use it with apology; some with contempt; some with sympathy. Nearly always, when this title is referred to, the speaker has in mind a minister who is carrying on studies in a college or seminary. To limit the title to such ministers, however, is completely mis-leading. Why should we use the term "student" only in reference to ministers in college and seminary? All ministers, regardless of the extent of their formal education are (or certainly ought to be) life-long students. All ministers are "student ministers" by reason of the task they are engaged in.

To apologize for being a "student minister" is therefore, out of the question, for to do so would be to apologize for answering the call of God. To refer to "student ministers" is absurd, for in doing this we discredit the very nature of the ministerial task. To sympathize with "student ministers" is just simply unnecessary. If we separate the word "student" from the word "minister," then we sabotage the Christian Church.

Summer Resolutions

By Mrs. Naomi G. Ekdahl
Director of Women's Work
Massachusetts Conference

I resolve this summer to increase the time spent in my private devotions since earlier waking is easier than in the winter season and I can therefore give more of the morning hour to prayer, meditation and Bible reading.

I resolve this summer through my own purchases or library borrowing to add to my devotional reading, being on the alert for the newer books such as Praying — How, When, Where, Why by Muriel Lester; Never Forget To Live by Halford Luccock; Love Is A Spendthrift by Paul Scherer.

I resolve this summer when traveling on Sunday to find a church in which to attend the worship service and if at home or on vacation to attend worship service each Sunday in some church if I possibly can even though not of my own denomination.

I resolve to memorize in the course of each week one hymn and to continue to sing each of these hymns while working or resting as the summer goes on in order to preserve them in my memory for time to come. I should then have a dozen or so hymns added to those which I can sing from memory.

I resolve in the midst of entertaining guests or of added tasks and unusual confusion sometimes attendant upon summer life to practice the presence of God and with Brother Lawrence say "in the noise and clutter of my kitchen... I possess God in as great tranquillity as if I were upon my knees."

I resolve this summer to use every resource possible to deepen and to make articulate our family worship at home whether the family number is increased or depleted or if at cottage or camp being sure that there is a worship center even though "family prayers" may often be held under the trees or by the lake side.

I resolve every day this summer to reflect consciously for a few moments on some specific object of beauty, absorbing it mentally and spiritually — the mauve afterglow of the sunset, the iridescence of a butterfly's wings, the colorful tapestry of a rock garden, the awesome silhouettes of an electric storm and then thank God "For the beauty of the Earth, For the splendor of the skies."

I resolve now if at all possible to can study or observe the techniques of planning worship services and settings, so that I may be better qualified to serve on worship committees or to conduct worship services or to lead a spiritual life group the coming year if asked to do so.

HONDURAS

(E. and R. Mission)

June

4—Rev. and Mrs. Edgar Krueger are evangelistic missionaries who work out from Concepcion del Norte in surrounding villages. He worked two years in Migrant Ministry in U. S. before becoming missionary to Honduras in 1958.

Pinalejo

Village 40 miles from San Pedro Sula; missionary primary school and dispensary here.

5—Miss Ruth Strauss was born in Germany; 1933-42 she went to school in the Netherlands. In 1951 she went to England and studied to be a nurse. She went as a missionary in 1958 and after language study is now at clinic at Pinalejo.

6—Miss Louise Vordenberg was one of pioneers of mission work in Honduras, arriving there in 1924. Her first assignment was to go from camp to camp in banana plantation area teaching children; then she began open-air classes in LaLima, near San Pedro Sula. From this has come a church, and many of the Christian leaders in Honduras were once her pupils. Now she is in charge of the Pinalejo mission station.

Progreso

Important center of United Fruit Company, 16 miles from San Pedro Sula; strong Roman Catholic center, but has Evangelical mission church and primary school.

7—Rev. and Mrs. William Baur both have degrees from Eden Seminary — he was born in India where his parents were missionaries. In Honduras since 1953, he is now station administrator at Progreso and she is principal of the primary school.

8—Mrs. Elise Vargas went to Honduras as a missionary in 1923 and did pioneering work in opening up new fields; she is experienced in women's and children's work and adult literacy; also in training church school teachers. She married a consecrated layman from San Salvador in 1941; he died suddenly in 1943. Now she carries on educational and evangelistic work in cooperation with local pastors.

San Pedro Sula

Second largest city in Honduras, founded by Alvarado in 1536. Government center and strong Roman Catholic center. Mission headquarters here and grade school, high school, bookstore, normal institute.

9—Rev. and Mrs. Harold Auler, Jr. have done a variety of mission work in Honduras, beginning with evangelistic and pastoral; he turned a radio hobby into an instrument of service to the mission, setting up shortwave radio system that connects all mission stations in Honduras. Before coming to U. S. on furlough he was administrator of mission high school and chairman of the Honduras Mission; she as director of boarding homes for students.

10—Miss Anna Bechtold taught in a high school, a college, and a Bible institute in U. S. before going to Honduras in 1920, where she has been one of the leaders in educational programs, beginning with a primary school with two pupils in her home. Her dream of a normal school became a reality in 1939 and she became its first principal — until 1957. She taught there until retirement last year.

Youth Faces The Future

Hubie Young

We the youth of the United Church of Christ affirm that God has made himself known to us in Jesus Christ and has called us into his Church. Believing that he seeks us in holy love, we would respond by joining together in covenant with him.

He gathers us into a loving fellowship in which we encounter one another as unique persons who are created in his image. We seek to express the spirit of this fellowship in all our relationships.

Our vocation is to witness to the message and mission of the church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace. Our hope is in God who in Jesus Christ offers redemption to all men and gives promise to his kingdom of love.

PATTERNS OF P. F. ORGANIZATION

1. Dream Group Pattern

This pattern is an adaption of the "cube group" idea. The suggestion is that all the senior highs in a local church be divided into dream groups of 6-10 members (some churches will have only one or two dream groups). This will give a chance for fellowship, study, service, worship and outreach in a setting in which each person can make a significant contribution. The life of the dream group will revolve around the program areas. With several dream groups, each group might work at a different program area. Occasional meetings of all dream groups together will offer a chance for sharing and experience in different program areas.

2. Fellowship Group Pattern

This idea is similar to the present pattern in the majority of our churches. It is important that the "Sunday evening fellowship group" revolve around the program areas. The whole group needs to be involved in depth, perhaps through each person working on a program area group. Church school or study seminar experience needs to be closely correlated with the fellowship group.

3. Group for Each Grade

In churches of adequate size (6-10 or more in each grade) it would make good sense to organize by school grades for study, recreation, outreach, worship, and service. Either the dream group or the fellowship group pattern could be the organizational basis.

Many churches may wish to develop a Middle High (grades 9-10) and a Senior High (grades 11-12) grouping rather than one for each grade.

4. Ninth Grade and Senior High Group

In many communities the freshman year is not part of the senior high school pattern. In some communities young people from a particular church in ninth grade will be part of a junior high school pattern, and others in a senior high pattern. Therefore, it often makes good sense to have a separate Freshman Fellowship. In many churches this group is the confirmation or church membership class.

Grades 10-12 could then be organized on the dream group or fellowship group pattern.

TEENAGERS AND PARENTS MEET

By Mrs. Carlton Scott

The Christian Youth Fellowship of Lebanon church, Semora, N. C., held its regular meeting May 7 with parents and interested friends invited.

The program, led by Miss Brenda McSherry, was entitled "What Teenagers Expect of Their Parents" and "What Parents Expect of Their Teenagers." Four teenagers and four parents, took part in an interesting round table discussion. Several of the members took part on the program, with Linwood Montgomery giving an interesting talk on "Ten Rules for Teenagers." A picnic supper followed the discussion.

For the past year this group has sold cards, given stews, and with the help of donations has succeeded in buying a projector. A film was shown on "Faith" and following this Carol Wills was in charge of the dedication service in which the projector was presented to Lebanon Christian Church for the use of all church organizations. Our pastor, Rev. L. T. Wilkins, closed with the benediction.

This group is led by Mrs. Ezra Stowe and we are all grateful for the fine work she is doing with them.

"PEACE CORPS" OF U. S. CHURCHES

President Kennedy's proposal that a Peace Corps of young men and women be sent abroad to teach and help in underdeveloped countries may be a new idea for the New Frontier, but it is a program of long standing with the churches of America.

Even a Peace Corps expanded eventually to 10,000 members, as Kennedy has indicated he wants, would be a smaller movement than the assistance programs carried on the world over by more than 33,000 American missionaries.

There are today more than 26,000 Americans serving as Protestant missionaries abroad and 7,000 of the Catholic Church. While it may be supposed these people spend all their time teaching the Bible and religious doctrines, such is not the case.

These American missionaries — comprising a "peace corps" of many years' standing — teach school and provide training in trades in every corner of the free world. During times of war numerous missionaries have elected to remain in the country of their service rather than return to the peace and safety of their homes.

Missionaries have built hospitals, given medical aid, helped educate doctors and nurses, trained native leaders in administrative work, developed social welfare programs and provided technical skills.

Although there is need today for more work in the fields occupied by the missions, the Peace Corps will be a supplemental force rather than a brand new concept.

This is not to say the administration's program should not be given a fair trial. It is highly possible it may be effective because of its official stamp of U. S. approval, in some areas in which the church-supported missions are hindered.

PROTESTANT CLERGY CHALLENGE "RECKLESS SMEARS"

Exposure by leading churchmen of the aims and methods of the John Birch Society has resulted in recent weeks in challenges from many parts of the country to its leader, Robert Welch. They are demanding that he produce the evidence he claims he has for his attacks on the loyalty of the Protestant clergy.

In a recent telegram to Mr. Welch, Methodist Bishop Gerald Kennedy of Los Angeles declared: "Get specific or else admit that you really do not know what you are talking about." The Bishop invited Mr. Welch to appear with the evidence before his Conference's Board of Ministerial Training and Qualifications, which screens its clergy.

(In speeches in California and elsewhere, Mr. Welch has claimed that 7,000 of the nation's 200,000 clergymen are "comsymps," meaning Communists or Communist-sympathizers.)

Dr. John C. Bennett, dean of faculty, Union Theological Seminary in New York City; Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike of California; Dean B. Sayre Jr. of Washington Cathedral; Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church, USA; and other denominational leaders have issued similar challenges to Mr. Welch.

In one of several statements he has made on Birchite charges, Bishop Pike declared: "The real issue is freedom versus totalitarianism. The Birch Society seeks to smear and destroy any person who dissents from radical right-wing thinking."

"Why doesn't Mr. Welch name names and turn over his knowledge to the FBI?" Dr. William M. Elliott, prominent Presbyterian minister of Dallas, Texas, asked in a recent denunciation of the Society's "reckless smear campaign." Dean William S. Lea of St. John's Cathedral in Denver has stated: "Mr. Welch has the re-over, though, the only past and present contact with Americanism has come through the dedicated missionaries who voluntarily have sacrificed easier lives of comfort to devote themselves to the world's underprivileged.

The new Peace Corps in this respect will be following a trail well-blazed by the efforts of the American Churches.

sponsibility to turn over a list of those he accuses to the proper authorities." He also warned that the Society is "playing directly into the hands of the Communists by setting brother against brother."

Denominational groups which have formally denounced the Society's attacks in recent public statements include, among others: The New England Conference of the Augustana Lutheran Church, the Presbytery of Boston, the General Assembly of the

By Robbins Ralph

And God said "Let there be light" and there was light. Before His creative act all was dark. "Dark as a hundred midnights down in a cypress swamp," the poet James Weldon Johnson describes it. Since God has spoken there is light at the center of the universe, and light for the centering of our affections.

Life's Light and Darkness

A group of thoughtful college students had been discussing the meaning of life in this vast and mysterious universe. As their campfire flickered low toward the end of the evening one of these young men philosophized, "After all, there is mystery at the center of the universe, isn't there?" "No," replied their wise counsellor, "not at the center. There is darkness and mystery all around the edges: at the center the face of Jesus Christ." Our personal lives may be ringed with shadows and uncertainties, but they can be centered around the faith that the God who created the galaxies made light to shine out of darkness in the face of Jesus Christ.

MOTHER'S DAY AT TURNER'S CHAPEL

By Mrs. John A. Redding

Rev. James E. Porter delivered a very inspiring and impressive Mother's Day message to his congregation at Turner's Chapel. For the scripture he read a portion of Samuel I and Romans 13.

A quartet composed of Peggy Bridges, Jessamine Lassiter, Beth Cole and Gwyn Wicker sang a lovely hymn "Mother Knows" and the choir sang "My Mother's Bible."

Special recognition was given Mrs. J. M. Riddle, 86 years old, as being the oldest mother present. Mrs. Ralph Smith, 23 years of age, was recognized as the youngest mother present and Mrs. F. C. Sineath was recognized as the mother present having the largest number of children.

The altar vases held white roses and an arrangement of red roses was on the piano.

Consider The Steward Of The Soil

He is the guardian of our soil and the first custodian of our water.
He manages our woodland and provides for the wildlife of Nature.
He is the producer of goods and fiber so essential to the health and well-being of all men.

He is a man of vision; he is a man of deeds.
He is a cooperator, working on his own land and with his neighbors to conserve and develop God's gifts of soil and water for the greater good of his community and his country.

He is a man of integrity; he is an orderly man.
He is a man of responsibility under God, recognizing that the Earth is the Lord's placed here for the benefit of all His children — in town and country alike.

As the Steward serves God, he serves himself and countless others in many ways.

We depend on the Steward of the soil; we should honor him.
Consider the Soil Steward! Consider him well!

Elon College, May 20 — Plans are complete for Elon College's seventy-first annual commencement, a three-day program which gets underway with Alumni Day exercises next Saturday and concludes with the college's graduation ceremonies on Monday, May 29.

Congressman Horace Kornegay, of Greensboro and Washington, representative of North Carolina's sixth congressional district, will deliver the address at the graduation program on Monday morning, May 29, when the college presents degrees and diplomas to the seniors of the Class of 1961.

The graduation program will climax a full weekend event, which gets underway with the annual Alumni Day next Saturday, May 27, when members of thirteen Elon graduating classes will gather on the campus for reunions.

The Saturday program will get underway with breakfast meetings of the reunion classes, followed by a picnic luncheon at noon, a business meeting of the Elon College Alumni Association in the afternoon and the annual Alumni Banquet at 6:30 o'clock Saturday night. The Rev. Robert M. Kimball, pastor of Burlington's First Congregational Christian Church, will be the featured speaker at the banquet in McEwen Memorial Dining Hall.

An all-day program on Sunday, May 28, will get underway with the

ELON RECEIVES FUND FROM N. C. FOUNDATION

Elon College has received $19,929.44 as its share of the funds contributed by state and national business concerns this year to the North Carolina Foundation of Church-Related Colleges.

In announcing the receipt of the fund, Dr. J. E. Danieley stated that the $19,926.44 was the Elon portion of a total of $403,615.42 given to the Foundation by 274 business firms in North Carolina and 39 firms from other states.

The total funds are divided among the colleges that are members of the North Carolina Foundation, with 60 per cent of the total divided equally among member colleges and the other 40 per cent divided pro rata on the basis of enrollment.

The largest apportionment this year went to High Point, followed in order by Mars Hill, Atlantic Christian, and Elon, since the schools have the largest enrollments among the church-related colleges that comprise the Foundation group.

It was pointed out that the total of $403,615.42 raised by the Foundation this year represented an increase over the $380,573 that was raised last year. The 274 North Carolina firms participating this year also represented an increase over the 257 firms in the state that contributed a year ago.

NOTICE — N. C. CHURCH BUILDERS CLUB

Attention members of the North Carolina Church Builders Club! The "call" for St. Peter's United Church in Greensboro, N. C. went out about a month ago, to date, less than half of our Club members have responded. We have something over 500 members now and we have heard from 230. Your contribution of $10.00 is badly needed. An early response to this "call," on your part, will be greatly appreciated. We hope to hear from you real soon!

Two Views Of Life

Background Scripture: Ecclesiastes 12; II Timothy 4:6-8.

Devotional Reading: I Timothy 6:11-16.

A woman, traveling in India, was greatly impressed by her hostess, a woman of high rank, with grace and charm. She said to her hostess "I think you are perfectly beautiful." To which the cultured Indian lady replied calmly and simply "I ought to be, my dear. I am seventy-four years old!" The woman had grown old gracefully. The years had added charm and beauty and loveliness. Why live, implied the lovely Indian lady, if it did not make one more lovely and gracious?

In this connection, one thinks of the remark of Abraham Lincoln on one occasion when he remarked to a friend that he did not like the looks of a certain man's face. His friend countered with the remark that a man could not help how his face looked. To which Lincoln replied "He can if he is over forty!" His point was, of course, that a man's inner life and character were reflected in his face.

The "Preacher" View of Life And Old Age

The "Preacher" as he calls himself in the opening words of the book of Ecclesiastes has a dismal and even cynical view of life and of old age. It is vanity, vanity, altogether vanity. All is vanity. In his concluding chapter he suggests that young people remember their Creator in the days of youth while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. He may be suggesting that young folks make the most of life while they are young, for there is not much joy or fun in old age. The references which he makes to the "keepers of the house, the grinders, the darkened windows, the closed doors, the daughters of music, etc," may be references to the hands, the teeth, the eyes, the ears, the vocal chords, etc. Furthermore the reference to the silver cord may refer to the spinal column, the golden bowl to the skull or cranium, and the wheel broken at the cistern to the abdominal parts, using symbolism as the Orientals often do. In any event old age for him is a dull, dismal, discouraging thing.

Well, as Longfellow says in his great poem "Morituri Salutamus,"

"What ever poet, orator, or sage, may say of it, old age is still old age. It is the waning, not the crescent moon; the dusk of evening; not the blaze of noon. It is not strength, but weakness, not desire, but its surcease; not the fierce heat of fire, the burning and consuming element, but that of ashes and of embers spent, in which some living sparks we still discern, enough to warm, but not enough to burn." And then he asks the question, "What then?" But unlike the "Preacher" he has an answer, which we will note later. There is no blinking the fact that old age is old age, and sometimes old age is a difficult time in life. But even old age has its finer possibilities and its glories. The cynic does not have the last word.

Paul's View of Life and Old Age

Another "Preacher" named Paul also wrote some words about life and old age. And at the end of a life that had been filled with hunger and hardship, disappointments and discouragements, service and suffering and sacrifice, perils and privations, headaches and heartaches, he also wrote something about the sunset years of life. But for him, as for Browning, "the best was yet to come, the last of life for which the first was made." To be sure life did have its limitations and old age its burdens. But though the outward man was decaying or perishing day by day, the inner man was renewed. And although the outward man might be dissolved, he was sustained and cheered by the fact that he had "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Writing to Timothy near the end of his life, he makes it clear that for him, or for the Christian, life does not end in darkness or terror, in deepening shadows and declining powers, but in a burst of sunlight and the awarding of a crown. "The time of his departure" — that is what he calls death — is at hand; the Great Station or Train Master had called his train that was to take him on his last, long journey. But there is no fear, no cynicism, no despair. He is sustained by a great faith. Death is the culmination of life, the moment of home-going, the time of reward for a life well-spent. There awaited him the crown of a good life, the Master's "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and eternal fellowship with God. There was something better and greater ahead for him. And for all others, too, who "love his appearing." For Paul the decay that often accompanies old age was simply the decay of a seed in the earth as it passes from one form to another far more beautiful.

What Paul puts in prose, Longfellow puts in poetry. Picking up where we left off in the other section, he says: "What then? Shall we sit idly down and say, The night has come; it is no longer day? The night hath not yet come; we are not quite cut off from labor by the failing light; Something remains for us to do or dare; Even the oldest tree some fruit may bear; Not Oedipus Coloneous or Greek ode, Or tales of pilgrims that one morning rode, Out of the gateway of the Tabard Inn. But other something, would we but begin; For age is opportunity no less, than youth itself, though in another dress, And as the evening twilight fades away, The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day."

All this has meaning for in an earlier part of his poem he lists so many things that old men — and he could have added, old women — have done: Cato learning Greek at eighty, Sophocles writing his masterpiece at that age too, Theophrastus at ninety writing his "Characters of Men," Goethe completing Faust when past eighty, and so on. And although these are exceptional instances he insists that they "show how far the gulf-stream of our youth may flow, Into the arctic regions of our lives, Where little else than life itself survives."

"Age" or "Mature"

Who is there of us who does not know individuals who are examples of both types of people here discussed — those who grow old disgracefully, and those who grow old gracefully? Or to put it another way: Those

Payments On CHIP Appreciated

Dear Friends:

Part of our report for this week is a list of contributions from churches and church groups to CHIP since February 20, 1961. At that time the churches had given a total of $24,483.79. The $3,226.43 listed in today's report will bring the total to $27,710.22. We are most grateful for all gifts from churches and church groups to assist with our Building Fund. As the cottages are nearing completion we are having to borrow money against the outstanding CHIP pledges to make the final payments on the contracts. We hope that as many churches, groups and individuals as possible will bring their CHIP pledges up to date so that our loans may be smaller.

For several months now our weekly income has been running quite a bit below the average needed weekly to operate on our budget. We should receive an average of $1,730.77 per week to meet our budget for the year. Since we are several hundred dollars below this average this particular week it means that some of our bills will have to wait for a while. Our expenses continue on during the summer months and we hope that our friends will not be too busy vacationing to remember our Children's Home.

Speaking of vacations, we have this week two gifts — one from a church group and one from a family — which will enable two of our children to attend a week of camp at Moonelon. We are most grateful for these contributions. The camp experience will be beneficial to the children as well as most enjoyable. Our sincere thanks to these friends and to others who have expressed their interest in helping our boys and girls to have a happy summer vacation.

Last week our subject was coupons and we would like to add this further word to express our appreciation to all who help in this way and to let you know how the coupons assist us. A few days ago we mailed 53,450 Betty Crocker coupons for redemption. For this amount we will receive a quantity of Lifetime Dinnerwear and some large, commercial-size cooking utensils for the dining rooms and kitchens in our new cottages. You can, therefore, see how very useful the coupons are to us and we hope that you will continue to collect and send them to us.

A Project for Children and Youth

Meals For Millions

Three pennies can provide a meal for a hungry child in India, or Korea or anywhere. A special multi-purpose food preparation has been developed which provides the necessary protein, minerals and vitamins to hungry people, at the rate of three cents a meal. The food can be eaten dry, stirred into liquids, or added to available foods to increase their food value.

Dr. Edward Riggs, one of our American Board medical missionaries, distributes this multi-purpose food in famine areas in India. "By improving the nutrition, general health is improved and the people are able to ward off infection easier, work better and are happier."

Giving pennies to the Meals for Millions Foundation can be especially meaningful to children, because they can understand three cents and will be pleased to know that their pennies can help people around the world.

The Meals for Missions Foundation provides stickers that can be placed on jars or boxes to make banks, envelopes, little samples of the Multi-Purpose Food, various descriptive leaflets, and a filmstrip for children entitled "Where in the World Do the Pennies Go?" These may be ordered from the Meals for Millions Foundation, 115 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles 14, California.

Contributions should be sent to the Congregational Christian Service Committee marked "Meals for Millions" and may be designated, if you wish, for any of the following:

1. Dr. Alma Cooke, at the Mt. Silinda Hospital of the Rhodesia Mission.

2. Dr. Edward Riggs of the Madura Mission in India.

3. Dr. Hale H. Cook of the Vadala Hospitals of the Marathi Mission in India.

4. Miss Edith Galt at the Australian Presbyterian Mission Hospital in Pusan, Korea.

5. Tuberculosis and family projects of Church World Service in Hong Kong.

This is an "Authorized Special" and apportionment credit will be given if requested.

This project was suggested by the Missionary Education Committee of the Division of Christian Education. Church schools using Pilgrim Series materials will find missionary giving suggestions in their regular curriculum courses. This project is planned for our church schools using closely graded, elective, or other materials, or for church schools and other church groups desiring additional giving suggestions.

Progressive Revelation

By W. R. Cullom, Wake Forest, N. C.

Through the early years of my life, I thought of the Bible as having come to us as one lump. It all came as if God had spoken it in a moment's time and as if in one sentence. Having come in this way, it was all of equal importance. The story of Jonah stood on a level with the Sermon on the Mount. The author of this book was in my thinking quite a magician.

Then the Bible came to be a new book to me when it dawned on me that it had a gradual growth through many centuries and that this growth had come step by step until it reached its climax in the miraculous conception, in the human life, in the death, in the burial, in the resurrection, in the ascension, and in the eternal fellowship of the Son of God, Jesus Christ, Our Lord. This perpetual fellowship of "Spirit with spirit" will, in my opinion, go on growing in significance, in joy, and in blessing through eternity. In the earlier section of my life, I read the first paragraph in the letter to the Hebrews without seeing anything special in it. When this new conception got hold of me, this paragraph and the whole conception took on new meaning and produced a thrill that was unspeakable and full of glory. The first three verses of this paragraph read thus: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in this last day spoken to us by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the world," etc.

I do not recall just now as to how this new concept came to me. As far as I can recall, it came to me gradually through many years. But whatever may have been the source, of it, it has been and becomes more and more an ever-increasing source of joy and blessing to me. My last word in this connection shall be an exhortation to my friends to accept, develop and use the doctrine of the progressive revelation of the Bible.

who AGE, and those who MATURE. And there is a difference, and a great difference. This should be said: Every one of us is growing older. Every day and every year makes us older. There is nothing we can do about the calendar and about birthday anniversaries. Furthermore science and other factors are making possible a longer life for more people. As individuals and also as society, we had better give thought to the matter of old age. It can be a frightening thing. But it can also be an inspiring thing and a beautiful thing — provided in youth the hearts and minds of persons are stocked with experiences that will give them happy memories in old age, and with spiritual values that will support them in old age. We must grow old, whether we like it or not. But one, by God's grace and help, can determine how he grows old. The fact we cannot deny; the how we can determine.

In Memoriam

JONES

Mr. James Thomas Jones passed from this earthly realm to the heavenly on February 16, 1961. He was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, in 1883 and spent his entire life within the county. He joined the Holy Neck Christian Church and transferred his membership to the Holland Christian Church about thirty-five years ago. He was one of the two remaining lifetime members of the board of deacons and had served his church in other ways, including teaching in the church school.

Mr. Jones was well known and respected in the area, having been in business in Holland for many years. He possessed a quiet dignity which commanded respect and emulation. He is missed in our midst, but the memories of his earthly life linger with us.

He is survived by Mrs. Jones and by two sons, Thomas R. and James Robert, who reside in Holland, and by a daughter, Mrs. Rozier Bayly.

Holland Christian Church extends to the family its sympathy and expresses its gratitude to God that such a man did abide and serve in our midst for three decades and more.

If I Were Graduating

By Richard K. Morton
Chaplain of Jacksonville University

IF I WERE GRADUATING FROM SCHOOL OR COLLEGE THIS YEAR

I would seek to come to this important landmark in my life with the consciousness that I had honestly worked and achieved and effected something that would continue to be a credit to myself and to others.

I would express in specific ways my gratitude to the culture and way of life that made possible my opportunities.

I would indicate to those closest to me — parents and other kinsfolk, friends, and associates — how much I feel indebted to them for their part in bringing me to this happy moment.

I would very carefully remember that formal, academic education is not the only method by which people grow and fit themselves for service. I would not yield to arrogant displays or a sense of superiority simply because of the diploma I now hold, but would generously praise and assist those who are accomplishing much in their lives although they never could complete a formal course for graduation.

I would recognize that when I go forth from the somewhat specialized and cloistered community in the educational world I must be capable of adjusting to many new situations and must be able to apply and to reorganize what I have learned.

I would continue to formulate plans that look far into the future, especially guaranteeing the continuance of my intellectual growth and the maturing of my personality.

I would seek diligently for that to which I would eagerly make a life commitment and which would give me a sense of deepest fulfillment as well as a sense that more important meanings to life had opened to me.

I would seek to qualify for a specific field of service and to handle carefully the details of daily living, involving my financial, community, and work obligations, but I would also be mindful of those spiritual, cultural, and personal areas which lie far beyond these matters.

I would above all seek to respect both my abilities and my limitations, the hopes of my friends and loved ones, the needs and problems of the culture which helped to shape my way of life, and the demands that rightly can be made upon me as a trained and trusted individual.

I would — if I were graduating — want to join in the thrilling adventure of shaping a world in which those who will graduate later may live more purposefully and more deeply, confident that in the pursuit of this life aim I should find much happiness, strength, meaning, and love and even a sense of the eternal.

Congratulations and Good Wishes To All Graduates

WOMEN'S FELLOWSHIP ISSUE

Come To Elon College
School of Missions – June 21-23

Keynote Speaker At School of Missions

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman (Graham Rowland) will give the keynote address for the opening session of the School of Missions. Her theme will be "Creating and Renewing the Church." This should be a must for everyone who can possibly attend.

Mrs. Wisseman is a native of Virginia, wife of Dr. William E. Wisseman, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., and daughter of Dr. Charles H. Rowland, one of the beloved ministers of the Christian Church in North Carolina and Virginia.

Mrs. Wisseman is a past president of the Convention Women's Fellowship, the North Carolina Women's Fellowship, and has held many positions of leadership in our Church. At present, she is serving as Chairman of Education for the National Women's Fellowship and as a member of our Congregational Christian Service Committee.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Dr. J. Earl Danieleley, Elon College president and a noted parliamentarian, will present a session on Parliamentary Procedure on Thursday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. This session should give many opportunities for learning proper procedure and correct Rules of Order for our meetings. We all need this!

Please Note: This is a change in date. Officers workshops will be held Wednesday.

At the School of Missions there will be an hour and a half each afternoon for rest, study, or whatever you desire. After a strenuous morning, many will welcome this "free time."

REGISTRATION FOR SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

The cost of the School of Missions will be $15.00. It is hoped that each local fellowship will send its president (with expenses paid) and authorize her to buy 1960-61 packet ($3.50) and study books ($1.95 each). Day registration will be $1.00 per day plus meals. Send registrations to Mrs. W. J. Andes, Elon College.

Bring with you: bed linens, pillow, towels, wash cloth, informal clothes, comfortable shoes, Bible, note paper and a good spirit and open mind.

Speaker for Homecoming at Monticello June 11 is Supt. Clyde Fields rather than Dr. J. E. Danieleley as announced last week.

Come To Moonelon!

Clyde L. Fields, Superintendent

Come to Moonelon this summer! Yes, come to Moonelon Conference Center for a week of study, camp experience, and growing in Christian faith. An excellent program for the young people of the Southern Convention is being prepared for Moonelon during June, July, and August. We call on all our young people in the Southern Convention to avail themselves of the opportunity of a week at Moonelon. Most young people who go to Moonelon for a camp experience are invigorated in faith and activity in the local church. All young people interested in spending a most profitable week with other young people of the Southern Convention, led by competent and dedicated counselors, please consult with parents and the minister of the church at your earliest convenience. Please fill out your application and mail it in to Rev. Robert Knowles, Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., so you may be included in a glorious week at Moonelon.

CAMP DATE CHANGED

Rev. Robert Knowles announces that the Senior High Camp scheduled for June 11-17 is being changed to July 16-22, because of a lack of registrations.

DEPARTMENTAL WORKSHOPS

Newly elected Southern Convention department chairman for the six areas of work will lead workshops at the School of Missions Wednesday afternoon 3:30-4:30 (note change from Thursday as earlier schedule shows). If several are present from one church they should plan to go to different workshops.

At the same time the district chairmen and local presidents will have a workshop under the leadership of Mrs. F. C. Lester.

This week The Christian Sun gives its space and influence to the Women's Fellowship of the Southern Convention.

Since 1912 the women of our churches have worked through Conference and Convention organizations, and for more than a century before that they were busy in local churches. Without their love, labor, and leadership our churches would be poor indeed, but with their help the churches have a chance to grow in numbers and in usefulness.

The School of Missions is witness that the women wish to do intelligent service. For the greater part of a week each year they gather at Elon College to study under the best leadership our denomination has to offer. Every phase of the specialized work of church women is considered; needs of homeland and overseas people are studied; national and international problems come up for review in the light of Christian ideals; specific plans are presented so the women in any church can share in the work of all the churches. The meeting of women at Elon is a school — a specialized school in the field of Christian Mission. At Elon women climb a high mountain of church ideals and look across our world to see what it is now and what it can become under the benign influence of consecrated Christians. They return home with a new vision, new hope, new information, and new determination to let the light of Christian truth shine in every nook and cranny of our world.

The Christian Sun would like to urge that leaders of all our Convention churches attend the School of Missions. Little churches as well as the larger ones need the help that comes from study, fellowship, and able leadership. Every church should be represented at this meeting of leading women from North Carolina and Virginia. In these difficult times of merging denominations, social changes and international upheavals it is exceedingly important to learn as much as possible about the problems that face us, and to be reassured of the fellowship that centers in Christ. At Elon our women have a chance to talk with people from other churches, to hear discussions that throw new light on old and increasingly pressing problems, to share in worship with some whose ideas may be different from those they hold, to hear leaders who have travelled far and wide and who can bring a world view into a little church, and to think of the home church as it is seen from a distance. All of this, and much more, is the privilege of the women who attend the School of Missions; and it is a privilege that should be shared by an increasing number of people.

* * * *

Leaders of our Convention women went to Buck Hill Falls last winter for a meeting of the Missions Council and shared in setting a goal of eleven and one-half million dollars for our Christian World Mission by next year. They saw the necessity for this sixty percent increase in giving, and they were convinced that such a goal is not too difficult to attain, since it is much less than one dollar per month for the members of Congregational Christian churches. Twenty-two dollars per minute will pay the entire amount for nearly one and one-half million members — the entire mission program at home and abroad for the denomination which we love and through which we have promised to serve.

Strange things happen. When these women returned and met in Convention in Suffolk, they voted to continue the goals for giving as they have been the last two years since those goals had not been reached. They did suggest that the 60 percent increase is important and that each local society should consider adding that amount to the previous goal. What happened when convention delegates returned to local societies is not yet reported. However, it is easy to believe that in our churches there are people who are keenly conscious of missionary needs who will induce their fellow members to join in doubling their giving for the support of our Christian world mission. They are not willing to ride in fine cars, live in palatial homes, and worship in luxurious churches without making adequate contributions to the missionary program of the Church of Christ. This is only a reminder that goals set two years ago will neither meet the needs, nor the standards being promoted by the denomination. Initiative is needed in local churches to set in motion plans that will secure additional money for the support of our missionary enterprises.

* * * *

Another phase of the women's work which is of tremendous value in our time is the study of missions. We need to know the people of all nations — how they live, think, feel, and what their great aspirations are. In our midst are migrants, refugees, descendants of slaves, representatives of many nations, ignorant and scholarly, rich and poor, humble and haughty — people of many kinds. Millions of Americans are scattered around the world. The human voice can girdle the globe in seconds, and people fly across nations and oceans in a matter of hours. What happens here is reported "there" immediately. Things we say on a bus or streetcar may insult a multitude on the other side of the earth.

In such a world careful study of nations, philosophies, leaders, education, ideals, religions, emotional reactions, social standards and desires, and all those things that constitute human personality is a necessity. Ignorant or thoughtless action may start emotional reactions that will lead to war to end all wars by destroying the human family.

It is in such a time as this that the Christian religion has its most glorious opportunity, for Christianity is redemptive not destructive. God's love is a magnet drawing all mankind into one great fellowship. The high privilege of the Church is to proclaim to all people this message made known to us in Jesus the Christ. To understand the message and how to deliver it successfully demands real study, and our women are showing us how this can be done.

Following the General Synod meetin in July the Women's Fellowship and the Laymen's Fellowship will be united in a Council for Lay Life and Work and be part of the General Synod of the United Church of Christ. This will open new doors of privilege, about which more will be said later.

Lift Up Your Eyes

A Service of Worship for Women

By Mrs. Lucile D. Von der Sump of Lantana, Florida

HYMN

O God, Our Help in Ages Past

SCRIPTURE

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills. From whence cometh my help? My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.

Psalm 121:1-2 Read 1-8

MEDITATION

This Psalm is called the "Traveler's Psalm" because the Hebrews of the Old Testament sang it as they traveled to Jerusalem to worship in their temple, to pay their taxes, or to attend a festival and mingle with the crowds which came from all parts of their world.

This journey to Jerusalem was not always a safe journey. Bands of robbers preyed upon the caravans, so that at night sentries were stationed upon the hill tops, to keep watch, and warn the pilgrims of approaching danger. The leaders of the groups "lifted their eyes unto the hills" to see whether the sentries were keeping watch, or whether they slumbered or slept.

During the day as they journeyed, they sang this Traveler's song. Their leader would intone and question — "From whence cometh my help?", and the refrain of many voices responded "My help cometh from the Lord who made heaven and earth. He will not let my foot stumble on the rough path. He will neither slumber nor sleep as he watches over me. When I cross the hot desert he will be my shade, and keep me from sun-stroke, and at night, he will keep me from all the fits and fevers of moon-madness. He will keep me from the time of my going out from my home, to the time of my going in again. He will keep me from all evil forever more."

How beautiful a custom to sing as one journeys! These Hebrews were not just whistling in the dark. They were voicing their faith, their convictions, their trust in Jehovah. They were a singing people. They sang on joyous occasions, at betrothals and weddings, and they sang when in sorrow, and disappointment, and grief. The Old Testament abounds in references to their singing. Moses' sister Miriam led the women in song when they escaped from the Egyptians. "The horse and rider hath he overthrown!" The Psalms themselves are songs and many verses refer to singing. "Sing a new song unto the Lord." "In the night, His song shall be with me." "I was their song all the day." Even when the Hebrews were in captivity in Babylonia and had hung their harps on the willow trees, their captors bade them to sing the songs of Zion, either to mock them, or for their own amusement. "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" Today, there are thousands upon thousands of captives and refugees who have hung their harps on the willow trees. Could it be that they are saying "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?"

This Traveler's Psalm also tells us to lift up our eyes. Have you women ever thought of how many of our household duties keep our eyes cast downward? We look down into the mixing bowl, into the pots and pans on the stove, and into the kitchen sink! No wonder we occasionally get bogged down! We need to lift our eyes, to look up, and out. One time when we do just that is when we hang the laundry on the line. Here, in Florida, between the clothes pins, I see a branch of the Brazilian Pepper hedge, loaded with red berries, and waving in the breeze. Beyond that, is a cocoanut palm tree, its fronds all a-slither, and forming shadow patterns on the trunk of a Caribbean pine tree. This pine, in turn, leans its head on a massive white mountain, for "Clouds are the mountains of Florida, for the eyes that yearn for peaks." (Don Blanding's "Floridays") All this ascending beauty leads to thoughts of God, who made heaven and earth. Lifting up our eyes and singing as we go makes life sweeter, and makes us better women.

A rewarding hobby that "lifts our eyes" is bird-watching. One morning,

This Interested Me

By Emily C. Lester

I was greatly interested in the outcome of the first leadership training workshop for women from our churches in the "Province of the South," which was held at Franklinton Center May 5-7. The results were gratifying.

In the first place, the leadership was the best our denomination has to offer — Miss Lillian Gregory and Miss Mildred Walker from our Women's Fellowship staff; Mrs. Robert Reneker, our new national president; Mrs. W. E. Wissemann, national education chairman, and five of the six national department chairmen. The place of the sixth, who lives on the other side of our country in the state of Washington, was ably taken by Mrs. A. D. Harry of Lanett, Alabama. Three "visitors" from the Evangelical and Reformed Women's Guild added their contribution to the success of the venture.

In the second place, every area was represented. Seventy-six women came from Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia — and for some of them Franklinton was "a fur piece." There are 21 conference and convention groups in the southeast, and 18 of them were represented. Twenty-four were present from the Southern Convention, including the presidents of the four areas. Six women from the Valley, six from Eastern Virginia, and twelve from North Carolina made up our representation.

In the third place, although this was an "inclusive" meeting, race relations as such was never mentioned — except in the social action workshop where it came as one of the many things considered. Here were simply officers of our women's groups in the southeast learning how to better lead their women.

Beginning with Bible study which set the tone for the entire workshop, including early morning communion on Sunday, and closing with worship with the Bricks Community Church, this meeting may well meet the standard suggested by one former schoolteacher who recalled what her principal said years ago after attending a fair, "There ain't never been anything like it, and there ain't never goin' to be anything like it again!" (However, the group present voted in favor of another such meeting next year.)

Now While There Is Time

An address presented at Franklinton Center, Bricks, North Carolina, May 6, 1961.

By The Rev. Miss Lillian Gregory

The 1961 theme for Our Christian World Mission, Now While There Is Time, appears on the poster which it is hoped will be used in every Congregational Christian Church in America. A leaflet has been prepared with the bold announcement: We Are Summoned As A People. What do these themes and titles mean? They mean that 1961 is a Year of Decision. They mean we, as Congregational Christians, are being asked to give tangible proof of our belief in the great imperative of the Christian faith, the urgency of the Christian Mission. They mean we are being asked to match our stewardship practices to our gospel. With great urgency and persuasiveness we are being asked to accept a goal of $11,500,000 for Our Christian World Mission by the end of 1962.

Now While There Is Time, We Are Summoned As A People to do this. But this is no easy goal, since it represents a sixty percent increase over our 1960 giving to Our Christian World Mission.

Some might debate the merits of projects of the various Boards and Agencies of our denomination. Some might attempt to escape their responsibility by saying that this cause or that cause needed more attention. Some may even try to avoid coming to grips with the need and the urgency of Our Christian World Mission.

But this minimum goal for the mission of our churches will not be met by laboring a materialistic basis alone. What lies behind the real reason for the mission of the Church? What is the philosophy of the Church's mission? Certain considerations deserve our attention.

The Kiplinger magazine Changing Times for January 1961 highlighted on its cover a lead article entitled "The Fabulous Fifteen Years Ahead." In 1945 at the end of the war, rare was the man or woman with the acumen to see that by the year 1960 this nation would have gone almost as far in its development as in the entire 169 years which preceded 1945. Who would have dared to predict that in 1960 jet planes would span the country in 5 hours and 40 minutes? Who would have dared to predict that one could get on a plane eastbound from Tokyo at 11 o'clock in the morning and arrive in Honolulu at 10:30 the previous evening? Who would have imagined the headlong plunge of Americans into a civilization compounded of suburbia and shopping centers? What young medic would have expected to find tranquilizers, antibiotics, Salk vaccine and a multitude of other miraculous drugs in his medical bag? Did anyone of us in 1945 guess that by 1960 the average American family would spend 42 hours a week in front of a television?

Were we prepared for the startling surprises of air-conditioned houses with two baths and a dishwasher in the kitchen, for a few hundred dollars down and thirty years to pay? Would we have anticipated the increase of installment buying (the easy-payment plan to economic oblivion)? Did we know that we would wear Dacron and Arnel and Orlon; that the foods we would serve would be frozen, dehydrated, pre-cooked and enriched; that our garbage would be ground in the sink, and left-overs preserved in freezers and laundry washed and dried by push button? Were we prepared for the population explosion which soared to a record of four and a quarter million babies in 1959? Yes, it is a great new world, and according to this article in Changing Times we have more in store for us, for it is predicted that the changes of the last fifteen years pale by comparison with those to come in the next fifteen years. The greatest growth is expected in electrical machinery, home appliances and equipment, automobiles, space and atomic gear. Production will be stepped up, IBM will come into its own and the whole field of computers from air planes to automobiles to homes will be pressed into service. It will be a world of automation, of science, of technology, the like of which we cannot even envision. The houses of today will be as outmoded as the houses of the Gay Nineties seem to us now. We will live differently, we will dress differently, even to the point of having disposable clothing, disposable housing, and disposable automobiles and space ships. Planned obsolescence will be the order of the day.

What is a Christian's responsibility in the midst of such change? For this will not only affect America, but it will affect the living conditions of the whole world. What is our responsibility on a changing planet, with men and women finding the tempo of life stepped up increasingly, discovering leisure time through automation, the order of the day? What will it mean to our churches that Thursday evening one can go to the beach or the mountains and return early Monday morning for work? What will this do to family life as we have known it? In the words of John Dewey, "The future surrounds the present like a halo and the day is fast upon us."

Now While There Is Time, We Are Summoned As A People to make our witness in this kind of a world. It was a matter of no small astonishment last week to learn at another meeting that but eight percent of the population of the world is Christian. And greater consternation came with the fact that the population explosion going on in certain areas of the world more rapidly than in the western world, predicts that by the year 2000, but five percent of the world's population will be Christian. In other words, you and I belong to the world's greatest minority.

In 1956 our Congregational Christian Churches produced and distributed a booklet entitled "America, A Mission Field." It dealt specifically with the work of our Board of Home Missions and our Council for Social Action. It stated that despite its wealth and apparent well-being, beneath all the glitter and sophistication, the soul of America still needs saving — the USA is a mission field — for in America live sick men as well as healthy — unhappy men as well as joyous — men without worthy ends as well as those with mighty causes. To them and to our nation concerned Christians have a mission.

Long before our most recent president, who refers to this administration as the New Frontier, one of the leaders of our own denomination wrote an article in our denominational magazine entitled "New Frontiers of Faith." In it he raised this question, "What is the source of the missionary mandate of the Christian Church? The most exposed and hazardous frontier of the Church is not the boundary where the Church faces the world. It is the frontier where the Church faces its Lord and gives an account of itself, not to the world, but to him. . . . The new frontier is not space, but people." Dr. Roger Hazelton of Oberlin refers to the Church as the equipment to win the world back into fellowship with God, and he points out that it is not half as important for us to know who we are, as to know whose we are.

A basic problem facing us as we attempt to wrestle with this "great imperative" is to learn the disciplines of discipleship. Discipline is not the customary stance of the modern Christian. The reasserting of the lordship of Christ, the primacy of the Christian faith, not only for America but for the whole world is the "great imperative," the urgency of the mission. Now While There Is Time We Are Summoned As A People to take our stand, to bear our witness, to make our commitment, not merely to the canvassers on Enlistment Sunday, but before God and His Christ. Whether 1961 will be a Year of Decision and 1962 will bring us to the realization of our goal of $11,500,000 for Our Christian World Mission depends entirely upon the disciplines of our Christian faith. Stepped-up promotional persuasion or pressure at a given time may play its part but basically the realization of this financial goal depends on whether you and I honestly believe in God, in his Son, and in the power of the Holy Spirit working in man to change the world of men into the Kingdom of God on earth. Such a faith is born of worship and the disciplines of discipleship are its natural children. The nineteenth century Unitarian, Ralph Waldo Emerson, in an address before the Harvard Divinity School said,

"And what greater calamity can fall upon a nation than the loss of worship? Then all things go to decay. Genius leaves the temple to haunt the senate or the market. Literature becomes frivolous. Science is cold. The eye of youth is not lighted by the hope of other worlds, and age is without honor. Society lives to trifles, and when men die we do not mention them." This is what the loss of reverence and awe can ultimately do to a Christian nation or a Christian individual.

We could say that Our Christian World Mission is a ministry of hope, of reconciliation, of witness at home and around the world, a healing, helping, teaching, preaching mission. We could cite every place where Congregational Christians are responsible for leadership, every place where the need is great; we could picture the men and women who are in the forefront of the battle; we could read every piece of denominational material and memorize the American Board Calendar of Prayer, but all of this is as ashes in our mouths unless we believe that the "great imperative" of our day is the urgency of the mission. Now While There Is Time, We Are Summoned As A People. For the mission is not something outside ourselves. The mission is us. The person who fails to see the need for helping others lacks the awareness that he or she has been helped. Paul said, "I am a debtor." Then he went on to list the people to whom he was indebted. Christian mission is based on a knowledge that God has done something, therefore, other things follow as a natural sequence. One of the gifts of the free church is the understanding of the inseparability of Church and Mission. To be a church member is to be a missionary. To be a Christian is to be an evangelist. Church membership means a great deal more than sponsoring an institution. It means discipleship.

In this period of rapid social change, when the world has become larger rather than smaller, but we move faster about it, and are more conversant with it, we may not come at once to actions which match our gospel, but certainly it is the will of an honest people to try.

Now, While There Is Time, We Are Summoned As A People, when new world patterns are emerging, new nations being born, old religions ascending and superceding Christianity, as Islam supercedes Christianity in modern Africa, when the conflict of interests among nations and within nations is apparent, when the world is caught in a power struggle for supremacy, when nations are challenging space and seeking its conquest, when all about us seems to be in constant change, this is a day when we need strong moorings, when we need to share those moorings with others, so they too may stand.

It is possible to live flexibly in such a changing world but it is only possible when our roots are deep in an unchangeable God. This is not a day when we dare be obsessed with the small. It is a day when human nature must rise above itself. Our generation understands the words of a character in Christopher Fry's "A Sleep of Prisoners" when he said that "affairs are now soul size."

In answering it would seem that the work which we must do today is that of making the Christian word real again in the everyday lives of laymen and lay women. The "Apostles of Discord" who are at work in our society and our churches are stepping up the "strategy of terror." The Christian cannot be prey to terror or to fear. We do not serve the purposes of the church by being either blind or unwilling to admit many of the problems of corporate and individual morality which are out of joint. We are equally unwise to ignore a nativism which unites men in animosity against causes or groups rather than making a positive attack upon a society which is in some ways off the beaten path. It would appear that we have more to fear in America today from the extreme right-wing organizations than we have ever had to fear from the left-wing movements. A recent publication from the University of Illinois entitled "The American Right Wing" discloses that there are approximately 1000 voluntary organizations in the United States today which may be called Rightists, ranging from responsible conservatism to the kind of far-right radicalism which is currently being exposed. An immanent danger to the American Church comes from those groups who smear personality without foundation or fact, and cause us, within the fellowship of the Christian Church, to be suspicious one of another. This is one of the surest ways to break the Christian Church, and we must be vigilantly on guard against it.

A further danger is that of making the Church an end in itself. We are

Mrs. John H. Sargent

LATIN AMERICAN STUDY LEADER

Mrs. John Henry Sargent of Lowell, Massachusetts, who has just finished her term as missionary education chairman of the National Women's Fellowship, will lead the women in the current international mission study theme on Latin America.

A Congregational Christian minister's wife, Mrs. Sargent has served as president of the Vermont Women's Fellowship, vice president of the National Women's Fellowship, a member of the executive board of the New York Congregational Christian Conference, and chairman of the Brooklyn, New York-Suburban District of the Metropolitan Association.

As missionary education chairman of the National Women's Fellowship, she also served as our representative to the American Bible Society, on the missionary education committee of our Missions Council, and as one of the Congregational Christian representatives concerned with missionary education publications of the Friendship Press.

In Brooklyn, Mrs. Sargent served with the Protestant Council, working with Negro and Puerto Rican children in "store-front churches." Her concern for the Puerto Ricans increased during a period of service with the Second Spanish Church in Manhattan and in 1955 she visited Puerto Rico to see and study the island and its people.

Dr. Purd E. Deitz

HOME MISSION STUDY LEADER

Dr. Purd E. Deitz, general secretary of the Board of National Missions of the Evangelical and Reformed Church since 1950, will teach the mission study course on "The Christian Mission in Churches for Our Times." In addition to the regular work of church extension, his board is responsible for mission institutions which minister to the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, to people in the Missouri Ozarks and those in blighted areas in several large cities, and other special projects.

A native of York, Pennsylvania, Dr. Deitz is a graduate of Ursinus College and of Central Theological Seminary (since merged with Eden Seminary). He has done graduate work at Edinburg University, Scotland, and has received a Doctor of Divinity degree from Ursinus College.

Dr. Deitz has held pastorates in Dayton, Ohio, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (1932-38) and was professor of practical theology at Eden Theological Seminary 1938-50. From 1954-57 he was chairman of the Division of Home Missions and vice president of the National Council of Churches. He has written: "Christ's Life and Ours" (high school study course); "We Would Be Building" (hymn); "Christianity Makes a Difference" (book on mission program of E. and R. Church); and "In Every Time of Need" (adult study course).

Rev. Sarah A. Edwards

BIBLE STUDY LEADER

The Bible study leader for the School of Missions needs little introduction to Southern Convention women, for she was the leader of the "spiritual life retreats" which formed the program for Women's Fellowship Rallies in this area in 1960.

Mrs. Edwards and her husband, Robert Edwards, are both graduates of Union Theological Seminary in New York City and are both ordained ministers. Mr. Edwards is pastor of Immanuel Congregational church in Hartford, Connecticut.

The mother of two children, Mrs. Edwards finds time to work in her local church, her association, the Connecticut state conference, and to accept numerous speaking engagements.

This year the Bible study at the School of Missions will be unique in that it will be especially prepared by Mrs. Edwards to give the background for the theme of the year, "Creating and Renewing the Church." Mimeographed study outlines will be available for use by local groups.

"Sally" Edwards will bring a "sparkle" to her teaching — and she will surprise some who have an image in their minds of a "typical woman minister."

Please note that the Bible study sessions will be held in the Elon College Community Church each morning, rather than in Whitley Auditorium.

Women's Fellowship Packets

By Mrs. Robert M. Kimball
Christian Education Chairman

The Packet for 1961-1962 is all ready for distribution at the School of Missions. The cost will be only $3.50, truly a bargain in view of all the interesting and helpful materials it contains.

We are very enthusiastic about the PROGRAM BOOKLET based on our theme for the year "Creating and Renewing the Church." We believe that you will find many of the programs adaptable to your church situation. Those in the field of Missionary Education are especially interesting.

We are glad to be able to include in the Packet a booklet of WORSHIP SERVICES entitled "Witnesses to These Things." They will be good to use in your Circles and at small group meetings.

For our BIBLE STUDY this year we will study the biblical background for our theme, "Creating and Renewing the Church." Study material has been prepared by the teacher, the Rev. Sarah Edwards.

The MISSION STUDY BOOKS are not included in the Packet, but will be sold separately at the School of Missions. However, there are a number of pamphlets and program suggestions in the Missionary Education section of the packet which will provide excellent resource materials for your programs.

Mrs. Robert Kimball

Each section of the Packet contains a specific program in addition to general information about the particular area of work. There is a Dedication Service for Friendly Service Gifts, a Thank Offering Service, an Installation Service, a beautiful Christmas program, and services written especially for the Lenten Season and for Christian Family Life Week.

We feel that all the Department of Work Chairmen have done an outstanding job this year, and we believe you will be pleased with the results.

Remember, the Packet costs only $3.50. Plan to get yours as soon as you arrive at the School of Missions. If no one from your church is attending the School, we hope you will give your check to your District Chairman so that she can buy a Packet for you. We hope to sell all the Packets at the School of Missions this year.

School Of Missions Car Pool

If you plan to drive to the School of Missions and do not have your car full would you please contact your District Chairman who may have the name of some one nearby who needs a ride.

If you would like to attend the School of Missions but have no transportation will you contact your District Chairman who may be able to arrange a ride for you with a driver nearby.

Women's Fellowship Histories

By Mrs. W. W. Sellers, Historian
Southern Convention
Women's Fellowship

The Christian Sun of September 27, 1960, carried a very fine article written by Dr. H. H. Cunningham, President of the Historical Society of The Southern Convention, and himself a historian and writer of note, telling how to gather information and how to write church history. If there are those who do not have a copy of this article and who would like a copy, it can be secured at the School of Missions or from the Convention Office.

As Historian for the Women's Fellowship, I would like to report that the histories for the binders are coming in slowly. Some of the women have sent in histories covering the entire period of the organizations, while some are sending in their histories for only one year. We are anxious to complete all the back histories and then keep the books up to date.

Many of the women are asking just how to go about writing this history. Here are a few simple suggestions made by one who is neither a historian nor a writer, but one who loves the Church History Room and one who enjoys reading the histories as they arrive:

1. As Dr. Cunningham has said, we must get our facts right first, and organize our research material. This information will be accurately recorded in the Secretary's book.
2. Try to give a full account of the organizational meeting, naming the first officers and giving the names of charter members.
3. It is always interesting to know who the officers are from year to year.
4. Give important work done by each department.
5. Tell of progress made.
6. Give list of Life Memberships and Memorials.
7. Include short biographical sketches and pictures (good snapshots will do) of any members lost by death during the year. These will be given an extra page included at the end of the year's work.

8. If there have been any good group pictures made during the year, they will also add interest to the history.

Strive to complete your histories as soon as possible and send to:

HONDURAS
(E. and R. Mission)

San Pedro Sula

Second largest city in Honduras, founded by Alvarado in 1536. Government center and strong Roman Catholic center. Mission headquarters here and grade school, high school, bookstore, normal institute.

June

- 11—Miss Louise Filger has been in Honduras since 1949 and is principal of grade school, supervising teachers, secretarial staff and 240 pupils. Weekends she goes to LaLima where many banana plantation workers live, where she conducts classes on Saturday and Sunday — having a church school class of 60 boys and girls under eight years of age!
- 12—Rev. and Mrs. Stuart Goude have been in Honduras since 1959 — he is station treasurer, pastor of the English speaking church, administrator in charge of maintenance of buildings, grounds, and automobiles. She has charge of bookstore and works with church school and women's groups. He was Congregational Christian minister in Washington; then chaplain in Army for 11 years. She had been Methodist missionary to Bolivia for 14 years before their marriage in 1957.
- 13—Mrs. Martha Herscher went to Honduras in 1927 with her pastor-husband. She operated a small clinic and directed primary school work. Following her husband's death in 1957 she became treasurer of the mission. She helped her husband build a strong Christian community at Pinalejo. She is an authority on the flora and fauna of Honduras.
- 14—Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth Sell went to Honduras from Pennsylvania in 1957, where he is rector of normal school and is responsible not only for spiritual life of school but also teaches and serves as pastor of rural congregation. She is treasurer of normal school, teaches classes in English and Bible, plays organ for chapel, and supervises church school in rural church.

Yoro

The word means "where fish rain down from heaven." Minor government center.

- 15—Rev. and Mrs. Harlan Levsen reached Yoro in 1953; he travels by mule-back or jeep to surrounding villages in the mountains, using tracts, slides, records, as well as stories and sermons to explain the Christian faith. She is principal of the Yoro primary school with 100 pupils.

THE MEXICO MISSION

- 16—The American Board began mission work in Mexico in 1872, with centers in Guadalajara and the west coast and union work in Mexico City; eleven churches carried on through persecution and curtailed work by board; now schools are growing; the Conference of Southern California now shares in supervision.

Guadalajara

Second largest city; beautiful city and mountain health resort founded in 1530.

- 17—Mr. and Mrs. John Howe do educational and youth work. A graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy, he became a marine for 12 years; invented moisture proof salt shaker and was in business five years; became a teacher in California. They and their five children have been in Mexico since 1957.

Guarding The Tongue

Background Scripture: Proverbs 6:12-19; 15:1-7; James 1:19-20, 26; 3:4:11-12.

Memory Selection: A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger. Proverbs 15:1.

The writer of the book or epistle of James was the brother of our Lord Jesus Christ. He was a practical fellow. He puts the emphasis in his letter upon behaviour and not on belief. In his letter he deals with snobbery, conduct that gives the lie to pretended belief, trust in material things and prosperity, and the dangers of an uncontrolled tongue. In his simple language and direct approach to the problems of life, he reminds us of his brother in the Sermon on the Mount. To be sure he does not deny the place of faith in the Christian life, but he insists that a man show his faith by his works. He is especially insistent upon the supreme importance of the tongue, or human speech, in the life of society. He does not pull any punches. He says that if a man seems to be religious, and bridles not his tongue... this man's religion is vain or empty. (James 1:26) And he says that if a man "offends not" in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.

A Little Member, But A Mighty Menace

The Japanese have a proverb that says "The tongue is but three inches long, but it can kill a man six feet tall." James says it is a little member, but a mighty power. He uses a homely and familiar figure to enforce or teach this truth. Here is a horse, strong, powerful, perhaps bent on doing his own will and going his own way. And yet with a bit, a small piece of metal in his mouth, his master keeps him under control and guides him and governs him. Here is a huge ship, driven and buffeted by the winds and waves, and yet the captain of the ship guides it simply by using the rudder, a very, very small piece of wood or metal in comparison with the bulk of the ship. Here is a spark or a small fire, perhaps only a lighted match thrown from an automobile, and yet it can start a huge forest fire which destroys hundreds of acres of fine woodland, or under other circumstances, a whole block of buildings in a business section. All of these things are small in size, but mighty in possibilities. So says, James, is the tongue. It is a small or little member, but it boasts great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! AND THE TONGUE IS A FIRE, A WORLD OF INIQUITY, something that defileth the whole body, something that works devastation and destruction in society. It is set on fire of hell.

An Unconquered Domain Or Dominion

Strangely enough men have conquered or subdued many other unruly things — every kind of beasts, and birds, and of things in the sea — I saw some trained porpoises a few years ago which had been trained to do almost unbelievable things — man has extended his dominion to so many areas of both inanimate and animate nature. But, alas, he has not tamed his tongue. Not as fatalism but as fact James says "But the tongue, no man can tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." Of course, James is not considering here what can be done by the grace and Spirit of God. He is simply saying that from the human standpoint the situation is helpless and hopeless.

A Bane Or A Blessing

James goes on to point out that the tongue, this little red muscle in the mouth, is capable not only of infinite evil, but also of infinite good. It is like a fountain of water. It cannot pour forth both good and bad water at the same time. But it can pour forth either good or bad water — which kind of water is determined by its source. There is the secret of it all. That is the reason we are urged to keep our hearts with all diligence, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. An evil tongue is a sign of an evil nature. Unkind, bitter, impure, untruthful, malicious, slanderous speech suggests the need of a new birth, a cleansing of the inner life. In a very real sense, the use of the tongue is a test of life. Unless controlled by Christ, or the power of Christ, the gift of speech may prove deadly to ourselves and to society. Think of the contrast between the total effect and influence of a good tongue and an evil tongue! What a different world it would be if we all, by the grace of God, could tame our tongues.

Three Tests For The Tongue

"If you are tempted to reveal a tale someone to you has told about another — make it pass before you speak, these three gates of gold: Three narrow gates; first IS IT TRUE? Then IS IT NEEDFUL? If your mind gives truthful answers The next is last and narrowest: "IS IT KIND?" And, if to reach your lips at last, it passes these gateways three, then you may tell the tale, nor fear what the results of speech may be."

Louis H. Evans

"Is it true? It is necessary? Is it kind? — these should be the tests of our conversation about others.

Some Tongues

Space permits only a listing of some of the kind of tongues of men: The Lying Tongue, The Impure Tongue, The Gossiping Tongue, The Suggestive Tongue, The Double-Tongue, The Critical Tongue, The Fawning Tongue, The Unkind Tongue, The Cruel Tongue, The Loose Tongue, The Profane Tongue.

But there are also other kinds of tongues: The Truthful Tongue, The Kind Tongue, The Generous Tongue, The Encouraging Tongue, The Pure Tongue, The Reverent Tongue, The Praying Tongue, The Singing Tongue.

Every one of us might well pray the prayer of the Psalmist, who prayed: "SET A WATCH, O LORD, BEFORE MY MOUTH: KEEP THE DOOR OF MY LIPS."

The United Church of Christ suffered a loss last Sunday in the sudden death of Dr. John R. C. Haas of Evansville, Indiana, first vice president of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Dr. Haas collapsed during the recessional hymn at the baccalaureate service at Catawba College, Salisbury, North Carolina, where he had just preached the sermon.

AT OUR CHURCH HOME FOR CHILDREN

Alumni Association Meets June 11
Dedication Of Building At 2:00 P.M.

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Alumni Association of the Congregational Christian Home for Children will have its annual Homecoming on Sunday, June 11. Registration and visiting will be from 10:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. At 11:30 the group will meet in the Holt Memorial Chapel. In years past it has been noted that while there is usually a large crowd present for homecoming, only a very small number attend the meeting in the chapel. We sincerely hope that all alumni will be in the chapel at 11:30 for this meeting.

A worship service will be presented by our graduating seniors and rising seniors. Brief remarks will be made by Mr. John Biggerstaff and myself regarding the work of the Home since the last Homecoming and some of our plans and hopes for the future. A committee from the Alumni Association will present a project that will benefit the Home which the group hopes to undertake. New officers will be elected and the installation service will be conducted by the former superintendent, Dr. John G. Truitt.

Luncheon for the Alumni Association members, their families and guests will be served in our dining room at 12:15 p.m.

For many years, perhaps since the group was first organized, the annual meeting of the Homecoming Society was held on the Sunday of Labor Day week-end. A number of the members felt this was perhaps not the most appropriate time to meet as so many families like to have one last vacation week-end, with the added holiday, before the end of summer. We trust that changing the time of meeting will increase the attendance.

Officers for the Alumni Association for this term are: Mrs. Allen E. Gant, president; Paul H. Williams, vice-president; Clyde W. Rudd, secretary.

The program for Sunday afternoon will be a highlight in the history of the Home for Children. At 2:00 p.m. the consecration service for our two new cottages will be held. The speaker for this occasion will be Rev. Lawrence M. Upton, Secretary for Health and Welfare, The Board of Home Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches, New York, New York. We are very happy that Mr. Upton can be with us and bring the address for this occasion.

Immediately following the Consecration Service, at approximately 2:45 p.m., open house will be held and everyone will have an opportunity to tour and inspect our cottages for the first time.

Letters of invitation to the homecoming and the afternoon service have been sent to all alumni whose addresses we have. Invitations to attend the afternoon service will be sent to all contributors to CHIP, to ministers, churches and other interested individuals. We hope to have the largest crowd yet for the Homecoming, and a most cordial invitation is extended to all our friends to attend the Consecration Service and Open House for our new cottages. Come and rejoice with us over the forward steps which our Home for Children is making.

Program Demonstrations

Mrs. Robert Kimball and Mrs. Robert Knowles will give "Program Demonstrations" Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, with practical suggestions on how to use our materials. Mrs. Kimball is also to present a drama and candlelight service on Thursday evening, following the recreation led by Rev. Robert Knowles at 7:30.

Mrs. Kimball is the wife of the minister of First Church, Burlington, Rev. R. M. Kimball, and they have three children — David, Susie and Rickey. Mrs. Kimball has been serving as chairman of Christian Education in the Convention Women's Fellowship, and is the newly elected First Vice President and Chairman of the School of Missions for next year.

Mrs. Knowles is the wife of our Southern Convention Minister of Christian Education, Rev. Robert A. Knowles. She has served in important positions in her local church and is the Chairman of Missionary Education for the North Carolina Fellowship. The Knowles have three children — Debbie, David, and Mary Ann. Helen is very capable, especially in Christian Education, having received her Master's Degree at Hartford Seminary.

While There Is Time

not seeking to save the Church, even though with our "edifice complexes," our enormous spending program where we keep so much for ourselves and send so little on for the mission, we may give the impression to people outside the church that we believe the church is an end to itself. I often wonder what image we do create in the mind of the unbeliever or the half believer. There is a danger you know, of making religion our God rather than God our religion. The clericalized layman does this and therefore renders himself useless in the service of the church.

Not long ago I had occasion to worship in a church, a new church, which was meeting in a public building, and I said to one of my friends who is a member of that church, "How will I know when I come to the church," and she said, "You will see a man with a white boutonniere in his buttonhole." That's a symbol of the church. Today, too often, one can't tell it from the undertaking parlor. I know what she meant, but let us hope that there are more recognizable signs of a church than a white boutonniere in a coat lapel. What do you say when people ask you about your church? Do you tell them about the building, about the number of new members you have received, how successful the building drive was, the fact that you have an educational plant that's adequate for all the modern methods of religious education? Or do you tell them the deeper things about the lives that have been changed because of the fellowship of that church, about the action groups which work in the community, about the people who have stood up and been counted on social issues which were controversial? What is the image of your church and of mine?

Our faith in the redeeming love of God revealed in Jesus Christ requires us and enables us as Christian citizens to live in the kind of world we are living in and to minister to it. Our faith must be a faith of affirmation, a faith which makes its influence felt in the days in which we are privileged to live.

The Message to the Churches adopted by the Fifth World Order Study Conference at the National Council of Churches reads as follows:

We believe in God, Creator of heaven and earth, Sovereign over time, history, nations and peoples. He has made of one blood every nation of men, and wills that men should live together in an order of freedom and justice, and at peace with one another.

We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, through whose life and teaching, death, and resurrection, God gave reality and power to the life of reconciliation. In the Lordship of Jesus Christ in and over the world, God is at work bringing all nations and peoples under his sovereignty, calling men to loyalty and obedience as instruments of his purposes.

We believe in the Holy Spirit through whom God in Christ transforms the hopes and fears, the motives and capacities, the lives and destinies of men and nations into conformity with His redemptive purposes for the world and for all men.

We believe that Christians are members of the world-wide community of the church, and as such must strive to provide within their own fellowship as well as in their common life as citizens, the kind of community God wills for the world.

Ever and again in the course of human history, evil intrudes itself on men in new magnitudes of urgency and terror. The ultimate question is not whether man can destroy himself with the freedom which he has been given by God, or whether God would allow such destruction. The ultimate question is whether, in confidence in the triumph of God's righteousness, men will live in faithful obedience to God.

It is an affirmation such as this that you and I have to make if our lives in any measure are to be an answer to the "great imperative," a reaffirmation in the Lordship of Christ in the world. What you and I do in answer to such a statement as this, and what we do about the discipleship, will spell the difference as to whether 1961 or any year will be a Year of Decision; whether we will meet our goal of $11,500,000 for Our Christian World Mission, not in money alone, but in dedication and discipleship, accepting our full responsibility Now While There Is Time. For We Are Summoned As A People under God and under the mandate of his spirit to do his work in the world. O God, who didst choose for thyself

to be thy agent in the world and when it failed thee didst recreate it in the Church of thy Son:

Grant that thy Church may be truly the Body of Christ, giving itself for the world as thou didst give thy Son and as he did give his life.
Let thy Church be a light to the nations,
the messenger of thy gospel,
the agent of thy salvation.
And to us who are members of thy Body, give faithfulness, obedience, zeal and love, that thy wise and loving purpose may be accomplished and all men may know thee as their God and Saviour, through Jesus Christ our Lord.
Amen.

Lift Up Your Eyes

outside my window, a little brown bird perched on a branch of an oak tree. She was an old friend, little Miss Oven-bird Warbler. She is a dignified bird, for instead of hopping about as many birds do, she walks sedately on her pretty pink legs, holding her head high, and wearing her gay orange cap, which looks very chic with her brown and buff outfit. She is a good home-maker, and builds her house on the ground, with a hood over it, like a little oven, and only a small door in the front for an entrance. She has an inquiring mind, and yearns for an education, for every day, over and over, she calls for "teacher, teacher, teacher," singing as she walks along in the shrubbery. She has hundreds of cousins and distant relatives, all belonging to "the winged fowl of the air" which God made before He saw that His creation was good. These winged creatures can teach us many lessons, and add joy to our journey if we come to know them and their songs.

Birds, trees, hills, and clouds, all lift our eyes upward, and speak to us of Him who made them all, in the beginning.

PRAYER

Dear Father, Thou knowest that we need Thee as we journey through our days. Keep our feet from stumbling, and teach us to sing as we go. Lift up our eyes, our hearts, and our minds unto the high places.
Amen

GOD AND COUNTRY AWARDS PRESENTED AT OAKLAND

At the morning service of worship May 14 at Oakland church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, three boy scouts received the coveted God and Country award. The awards were presented by the pastor, Dr. W. T. Scott to Arthur Butler, Jr., Marvin Underwood, Jr., and Bradley Simpson. He was assisted by Jacques Phelps, Suffolk, scout executive of the Old Dominion Council; Clyde Kelley, scoutmaster; Dr. Leroy Howell, district commissioner; William Chandler, president, Chuckatuck Ruritan Club; and committeemen Josh Pretlow, W. A. Butler and P. D. Howell, Jr.

Here And There Among The Churches

Speaker for a revival at Apple's Chapel July 9-14 will be Rev. J. L. Neese.

Our Great Bridge church has voted to secure the services of an architect to study its needs and to prepare plans for new and improved buildings.

Dr. Frank Hamilton, pastor of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, preached the baccalaureate sermon at Granby High School, Norfolk, June 11.

Golden Age Sunday was observed at Bethel (Valley Conference) May 21. Special invitations to attend the services were extended to those 70 and older.

Members of the Sunday school of First, Richmond, joined the Sunday school of St. John's E. and R. Church of that city in an excursion to Buckroe Beach, June 3.

Members of Union Grove will travel to Moonelon, Saturday, June 17, for an afternoon of recreation and swimming, followed by a picnic supper.

"Shut-in Week" at Rosemont, South Norfolk began Sunday, June 4, when the minister and deacons held Communion services in the homes of those who were not able to attend church. During the following week women of the church called on shut-ins.

Guest speaker for First, Asheville, for Sundays June 18 - July 9 will be Dr. Louis Shultz, Assistant President and Professor of Religion and Philosophy at Piedmont College and former pastor at Winter Park, Florida.

Beverly Hills, Burlington, has approved the Constitution of the United Church of Christ by a vote of 109-0.

A Moonelon scholarship fund has been set up at Northview, Sanford, to assist young people of that church interested in attending summer camp at Moonelon.

Guests at Mt. Zion for the morning service Sunday, June 4, included Masons from Bingham Lodge in Mebane and their families. The service June 18, Father's Day, will be led by the Women's Fellowship.

Sunday School Conventions: Eastern North Carolina — June 14, Eutaw (Fayetteville); North Carolina and Virginia — June 27, Mt. Bethel; Western North Carolina — June 28, Liberty; Eastern Virginia — July 18, Bayview.

The Women's Fellowship of Concord church (near Elon College) was host to the Women's Fellowship of Bethel May 12. Following a supper the two groups heard a review by Mrs. W. E. Wiseman of the book "Heritage and Horizons in Home Missions."

ADDITIONS TO OFFICERS' LIST

By mistake the following were left off the list of Women's Fellowship officers printed in last week's Sun. Please add them to your list:

Southern Convention
Education — Mrs. D. W. Shepherd.
326 McIver St., Sanford, N. C.
Stewardship — Mrs. Clyde Fields,
Box 546, Elon College, N. C.
Valley of Virginia
Treasurer — Mrs. Stella Liskey, Route 3, Harrisonburg, Va.

Members of our Wakefield church are participating with other denominations in a union vacation Bible school, which began June 12.

The Women's Fellowship of Beverly Hills, Burlington, met May 29 for a review of the home mission study book, "Safe In Bondage."

Rev. Walter Hall, of our Asheboro church, delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Seagrove High School May 28.

BURNS HONORED AT CAROLINA

By Mrs. Hillary Jones, Reporter

Sunday evening, May 21, Rev. and Mrs. Grant Burns were honored at a reception given by members of Carolina church in the fellowship hall. During the evening of fellowship and singing they were presented with a gift as a token of our love.

Our hearts are saddened by the departure of this wonderful family from our midst, for their love for God and their willingness to serve and help others have endeared them to our hearts. May God's richest blessings be with them as they continue to serve and witness for Christ and his Church.

The 35th annual Homecoming and Memorial Day service May 28 was well attended. Rev. Grant Burn's sermon topic was "Golden Opportunities." The choir sang "Tread Softly" for the offertory and "By Grace Are Ye Saved" for the anthem. We always look forward to this special day, because everyone seems to enjoy the wonderful fellowship and renewing of old friendships.

Dr. John G. Truitt is serving as interim pastor at Carolina, his first service having been held there June 4.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION ASSOCIATES MEET

A new phase of Christian education work in the United Church of Christ is the securing of "Christian Education Associates" from local churches across the country who will be informed about our denominational program.

Twelve from the Southern Convention attended the first C.E.A. Workshop for our area at Camp Hanover near Richmond, Virginia, the week of May 21. They were: Rev. Robert Knowles and Miss Ruth Dunn from the Southern Convention staff; Mrs. Mark Andes, Miss Dorothy Ballinger, Mrs. Robert Bew, Rev. Gale Brady, Mrs. Winfred Bray, Mrs. T. G. Humphries, Mrs. William Joyner, Mrs. Emerson Rohart, Mrs. D. B. Smith and Mrs. Charles Thomson.

Other areas were represented as follows: Mercersburg Synod, 9; Middle Atlantic Conference, 9; Potomac Synod, 8; Southern Synod, 7; and Convention of the South, 7.

Leaders were Rev. Leila Anderson, Mrs. Irene Simmel, Miss Mildred Widber and Rev. William Wimer. Chief topic was: "How Is the Gospel Communicated?"

Mrs. Mark Andes writes: "It was a terrific experience. We from the Valley of Virginia will continue study sessions with E. and R. counterparts beginning June 13 at Winchester parish house to outline program of C.E.A.'s for Valley on joint basis."

RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE FOR SOLDIERS

The second Retreat Conference of the United Church of Christ for military chaplains and personnel will be held in Berchtesgaden, Germany, August 21-25. Ministers and church members in the U. S. are urged to inform parishioners and friends about this retreat, the theme of which will be "Jesus Christ, the light of the world." Courses will be presented relating this theme to home and family living, our Christian beliefs, our Christian mission outreach, our Christian witness, and our responsibility as Christian lay people.

Mrs. William Tolly and three children are home from Angola. They are spending June with Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Tolley, Sr., Edgewood Addition, Lynchburg, Virginia. She will accept limited speaking engagements this month.

MEMORIAL AND HOMECOMING AT BELEW'S CREEK

By Pauline F. Murray, Secretary

The annual Homecoming and Memorial Day service at Belew's Creek United Church of Christ May 28 was well attended.

Our pastor, Rev. C. Fred Allred, used as his sermon topic, "To Know God is to Enjoy Him."

The remodeled sanctuary and new carpet gave a "new look" to the church. Lunch was spread in the recently completed fellowship hall. Everyone was then invited to see the improvements made to the educational facilities. The most inspiring part of our building program has been the erection of a steeple. Our thanks to Mr. Allred and our young men who are excellent climbers.

We look forward to Memorial Day from year to year. We can renew old friendships and see former members who return to enjoy the day with us.

WAVERLY WOMEN'S FELLOWSHIP

By Mrs. B. F. Clary

It has been a long time since any report of the Waverly (Va.) Women's Fellowship has been sent to The Christian Sun. Yes, there is still a Woman's Fellowship, a small group, but with faith and prayer we are keeping on.

We observed World Community Day in November and packed a nice box of articles for the nurses on the foreign field. We gave our Thank offering and completed the Friendly Service Quota. Shirts and pajamas for the Christian Home for Children were sent. An offering of $5.00 was given to Migrant Workers. Games were sent to Greece and Lebanon. We observed the World Day of Prayer with Mrs. R. H. Clarke as leader.

We had two new members to join our group in April and obtained two new subscriptions to The Christian Sun.

Citation God And Country Award

Oakland Christian Church
Chuckatuck, Virginia

By Marvin M. Underwood, Representative
Chuckatuck Ruritan Club
Institutional Sponsor of Boy Scout Troop No. 25
Sunday, May 14, 1961

The God and Country Award is an award of recognition of achievement in Boy Scouts. It is a Church-centered program and is administered by the Protestant Committee on Scouting. The award is made upon the recommendation of the Minister of a local Church after the qualified candidates have fulfilled specific requirements of Study, Experience, and Service in five general areas — CHRISTIAN FAITH, CHRISTIAN WITNESS, CHRISTIAN OUTREACH, CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP, AND CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

Under the direction of Dr. William T. Scott, Minister of Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, over a period of several months, Scouts Arthur Butler, Jr., Marvin Underwood, Jr., and Bradley Simpson have fulfilled all the requirements for the God and Country Award. (See picture on front page.)

In the areas of Christian Faith and Action, the Candidates have given faithful and satisfactory evidence of Bible reading and knowledge of many of its fundamental teachings; history of the Congregational Christian Churches and of Oakland Church, as well as a knowledge of the work of the churches of Christendom. In the practice of Christian Citizenship, the Candidates have given evidence of supporting the world outreach of the Christian enterprise through support of the local Church and of the Church at large by their gift of Time, Talents, and Money.

A Church is honored when from its membership one Boy Scout qualifies for this outstanding God and Country Award. Oakland Christian Church is particularly honored today in having three of its fine boys receive this award. For this we are profoundly grateful to all those in Scouting, the Home, and Church who have worked with these boys, and particularly are we grateful to our Minister who has given many hours in preparation for this award.

On behalf of the Chuckatuck Ruritan Club and the Scouting Officials we gratefully acknowledge the participation of Oakland Christian Church in the presentation of this God and Country Award.

What Goes With Graduates?

Within the past few weeks American colleges have proudly presented thousands of diplomas to young people who have spent four years in their institutions. Men and women have walked across the stage to receive the commendation of alma mater, and have received their diplomas in a burst of glory. Eloquent and scholarly speakers have declared to these youthful students that they are prepared to change the world that has been waiting for their appearance, their courage, and their conquest. It appears from these speeches that science has prepared the waiting world for this new crop of graduates to move with lightening speed from the depths of the earth to the heights of outer space, to manipulate gadgets that will guarantee comfort, to live in a paradise of luxury, and to expect old age security from want and pain.

The one big difficulty facing this new generation of those who have the "rights and privileges of the cultured" is that people have not learned to live together happily. And that makes a tremendous difference.

All our wealth, prestige, power, and ability to fly to the moon are of little value when bombs burst about us and the air is filled with poison. Unless we can speak pleasantly with our neighbors near and far, we lie not down to pleasant dreams at night nor do we feel comfortable by day. If the fellow across the street, down the road, or on the other side of the earth is our enemy, we are constantly unhappy. If we are his enemy, we are still more uncomfortable — for then conscience tells us that we are less than we ought to be.

In May and June there are multitudes of graduates bedecked in cap and gown, groomed and ready. Where will they be in July and August? in November and December? next year? ten years hence?

Some will surely find a place of usefulness in further scientific discoveries, in cultural pursuits, in manufacture and distribution of needful commodities, in social reconstruction of vast areas of our world, in international statesmanship, and in Christian missionary endeavor as it undertakes to bring all the blessings of God to all of God's people.

When High Point College conferred degrees recently, two of the trustees on the platform of that good institution were members of the class of 1918 at Elon College. This editor was delighted to know that his college and his classmates were making their contribution in this fine way. So may it be with other graduates a half century hence.

Let Papa Have His Day

Father's Day is not so well established and not so well surrounded with sentiment as is Mother's Day, but papa ought to have his day. The third Sunday in June is just about at the end of special Sundays for the season, and it may get pushed off into vacation, but please do not forget papa.

In American thought father is not so clearly defined as is mother. The poets and artists have long vied with each other to describe the courage, loyalty, beauty, serenity, and loveliness of mother. Only recently have they joined with ancient Biblical writers in ascribing to father a place in the family worthy of a man.

Search your brain for a description of father, and what comes up? "Everybody works at our house but our old man — he sits around all day." Many children say "my old man" much more often than "my father." Perhaps he is the one who is a stranger to the children; he leaves before breakfast and returns after children are in bed. Or he is the one from whom children secure money, or the use of a car.

Is father just the utility man? Or does he have real value in a family, in a church, in a community, in industry, in politics, in the world's welfare?

Take a good look at father. What would a home be without him? Of course women work, but still there is need for men to do some of the work of the world.

When Jesus tried to explain what God was like he told the story of "a certain man who had two sons." That is the kind of a father most men would like to be — giving and forgiving, the head of a home that stands like the rock of Gibraltar to which wanderers may return.

Yes, give father his day. Perhaps you can think of something better to do than to give him a tie that he would not dare wear in public. Let him know that he is respected not only "in the gate," as they said in the time of Proverbs, but is loved in his home, his church, his community.

Matters Of Business

Last week this paper undertook to assist the women of our churches as they seek leadership ability in a School of Missions. This week much space is given to Elon College and its graduates. In both instances the people of the churches are certainly interested, and all readers may find something helpful by reading these specialized items. Next week we will be back to a more regular type of paper with much more news of what is being done in the churches.

In the summer of 1915 this writer was called to be pastor of Haw River Christian Church, and that fall he began work there as a college student. Most of the time since, there has been double duty, as at present — editing this paper and serving a city church. That would seem to be enough reason for a daughter to share in the editing this summer. Elizabeth has had two years in Oberlin College, but with little experience in editorial work. She can be of real help to her father, and it is sincerely hoped that she will also bring zest to the paper.

There will be no paper dated July 11. We skip one issue in summers, and the printers take vacation the week of July 4.

Probably more people embark from Washington, D. C., to remote corners of the world to see unusual places than from any point on the globe, but rarely does anyone journey to one of the most unusual places within a short driving distance of the Nation's Capital.

This place is Tangier Island, in the northeastern corner of Virginia, twelve miles south of Crisfield, Maryland. The island was discovered in 1666 by Captain John Smith of Jamestown, Virginia, fame, although a storm prevented him from landing.

The island is three miles long, two miles wide, has only one street a mile long and ten feet wide. But the thoroughfare means more to the some 1,000 inhabitants than the boardwalks of Atlantic City, the sidewalks of New York City or the wide avenues that criss-cross Washington, D. C.

Surrounded by shallow water, Tangier Island is inaccessible except by small craft and airplane. Perforated with small channels of the Chesapeake Bay, and neatly sliced by narrow canals, the island looks as if it had been kidnapped from the Netherlands.

In winter, ice often bars passage of the mail boat from Crisfield, the island's one regular contact with the outside world. Often patients are flown by helicopter to some nearby hospital. Severe storms have been known to cover the entire island with a foot of water, frightening the population more than anything since the British stopped there in 1812 on their way to capture Washington.

A church spire rising above the quiet town marks the largest of its few buildings. Neat white-picketed cottages are bordered by vegetable gardens in which the island's only truck crops are grown. There is no fire company, and the police department consists of a lone sergeant who spends his time fishing. The principal store is also the postoffice. Most villagers do their buying from mail order houses, except groceries.

The captain of the mail boat, the postmaster, the minister, and teachers are about the only persons on the island who do not make their living directly by fishing, oystering and crabbing.

The first white settlers brought five family names from the coast of Cornwall — names still predominant on the town's roster and tombstones:

Crockett, Evans, Parks, Thomas and Tyler. In one of the few large burying plots on the island, in use since front yards became filled with graves, only three family names are found. It has long been the custom to affix numbers after surnames, so that various branches of the same family can be distinguished.

Residents of the Chesapeake Bay country, which include those who live near or in sight of the Atlantic's largest inlet as it sweeps majestically to meet the main ocean between Cape Charles and Cape Henry, Virginia, say that theirs is a land of pleasant living. Tangier Islanders add their voice to the statement, and a visitor believes it too because of their friendliness.

A MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

THE MORNING STAR

"And I will give unto him the gift of the morning star."

Rev. 2:28

By any measurements the morning star is quite a gift. In my years I have seen it often. One of the times which stands out more than all the rest in my memory is the beautiful autumn morning when I went with my mother early to help her pick dried peas as their pods hung shining in the early morning light. The morning star was still shining. The bright streaks of dawn had not displaced its light. There it was a tiny diamond in the eastern sky.

Whenever I have read this verse I see more than the star, I see the hard-working mother and remember the gifts of training and example she gave us.

In the same book from which this text is taken I read: "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." How about that! And I will give unto him the gift of the morning star, says Jesus! No greater gift could ever be given than God's own Gift of love, Jesus!

If you start with the morning star in any given day you can get a lot of work done. Jesus intends that a lot of work be done. To the church at Thyatira, to whom he was speaking in the above text, he emphasizes work. "I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last is more than the first." The works were increasing.

It seems to me that having the gift of the morning star one will be up and going.

At that line I was interrupted with a knock at the door — the laundryman with a package of clean clothes. He had just come from my neighbor's with enthusiasm for the lady who lives there. "She is the finest person I ever saw," he said. "You know," he went on, "she is so busy working for others. I was expressing my pleasure at what she was doing, and she said she was looking forward to her ninety-third birthday." Yes, I know, Mrs. Foster has the gift of the morning star, and it has stayed with her till evening! It is worth thinking about. Do you have it? Amen.

Paging The Astronauts

Baccalaureate Sermon Preached by The Reverend Frank R. Hamilton at Elon College, North Carolina
May 28, 1961

A college commencement is at once both a point of attainment and a point of departure. It represents the culmination of an effort, and the beginning of an endeavor. At graduation time, the curtain is raised for the production which is presented on the main stage of life. Everything that has happened, prior to this time, has been in the nature of rehearsal — a preparation for your embarking on the course that you have charted, and which you will now begin to explore personally. There remains only the venture of living in a vast and strangely complicated world, the venture of your stepping out on the stage of life, to play a distinctive role.

Unlike the usual stage productions, this one, in which you and many another college graduate are participants — this one, in which you constitute the cast and play the stellar roles, has not been put into writing by any playwright. You have been given some valuable cues, been offered some choice bits of advice, and been the recipients of many a valuable suggestion — but the nature of this play — the manner in which it is staged and enacted, will be, in great measure, your responsibility, your opportunity. Many have labored to prepare you for this debut, but the lines and the acting, from now on, will be distinctively and uniquely your own.

What is your role to be in the drama of life? Your concept of the part you play can be small, and pessimistic, as Shakespeare's lines depict it: — "Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player, that struts and frets his hour upon the stage, and then is nothing." Or, your understanding of your part can be as great as the words of the prophet, "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Again, your enactment of the role can reflect the sublime concept of One who was a Master Scientist in the laboratory of human relations, a Master Artist in the studio of personality: — "Life is more than meat, and the body than raiment. Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his soul? Or, what can a man give, in exchange for his soul?" Yes, you decide what the purpose of the play shall be; you decide how the lines shall be pronounced, how the part shall be played, for Toynbee was right: — "History does not make men; rather, men make history."

Dr. Robert Gordon, the Director of Educational Relations for the American Red Cross, formerly the Dean of the University of Southern California, told the directors of the Norfolk Red Cross Chapter the other day of being in his study one evening, reading about the rapidly changing and shifting scene in the Congo. Desiring to orient himself accurately — to locate on the map the city of Leopoldville, he went into his small son's bedroom to secure a geographical globe he had given the boy for Christmas. Having secured the globe, he was on his way to the door of the bedroom when his young son, not yet asleep, said to him, "Dad, what are you going to do with my world?" That is the question my generation is asking today, asking of college graduates across the land,

"What are you going to do with our world?" We might put the inquiry in the more cogent words of Mordecai to Queen Esther, "Who knows whether you have not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

At graduation time the curtain rises, and the stage of life comes into view. On the programme furnished the audience two facts are given as background and prelude to the drama's presentation: — first, the locale, the time and locality in which the action takes place; and then, the cast of characters, the men and women who will give color, meaning and purpose to the presentation. To play the role to the full, to meet its exacting requirements, we must first know the setting, the environment, the current scenery in which the action is to take place. Then, we can concentrate on the qualifications for the cast of characters.

How would you describe our day and time? Life now is so complex and intricate, so enmeshed and involved, so complicated in its ongoing and so universal in its import, that it almost seems to defy description. Man has known the Age of the Renaissance, the Age of the Reformation, the Age of Learning, and the Age of Reason. How would you delineate our age? Perhaps in the words of that hymn of Arthur Coxe, written seventy-five years ago — "We are living, we are dwelling, in a grand and awful time. In an age on ages telling, to be living is sublime!" Perhaps those lines of Dickens introducing his "Tale of Two Cities" best describe it: — "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times; it was the age of wisdom; it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity; it was the season of light, it was the season of darkness; it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair. We had everything before us, we had nothing before us; we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way."

Some, perhaps, would accept this description of our time, "Our youths now love luxury. They have bad manners, contempt for authority, disrespect for older people. Children nowadays are tyrants. They no longer rise when their elders enter the room. They contradict their parents, chatter before company, gobble their food, and tyrannize their teachers." But that was written by Socrates, in the fifth century before Christ. — How would you describe our vastly complicated current scene? I think we might safely say that its cardinal characteristic, and the most far-reaching in its implications, is its marked technological advance. Man has been on this earth perhaps 50,000 year, yet only in the last century and a half has he made spectacular and phenomenal technical advancement. Until the invention of the steam engine, in the latter part of the 18th century, man's speed of travel never exceeded that of a horse. In 1910, when our government contracted for its first military airplane, it was specified that the plane must fly 40 miles per hour; actually, it flew 42. But, on March 7 of this year, an Air Force major in an X-15 rocket plane flew 2,905 miles an hour. Thus, have we rapidly accelerated our speed of travel. Wasn't it Rufus Jones, the Quaker mystic, who once shrewdly observed "If a man is a pinhead when he enters a streamliner, and is a pinhead when he debarks, what is the use of the speed?" We have improved our communications so we can reach the ends of the earth in no time, but we still cannot manage to get along with one another. On April 12 of this year, a Soviet space man, we are told, was hurled into an orbit about the earth that was 188 miles high, in which he reputedly sped across the realm of outer space at a speed of some 17,000 miles per hour. One of our space men has reached an altitude of 115 miles, and a speed of 5,100 miles an hour. We have been seeking out that area of outer space while still knowing very little about that great realm of inner space, the kingdom of the mind, the empire of the soul. In the realm of relative space, in our social outreach with our fellow-men, we are woefully lacking. We can talk with anyone, anywhere on our planet, in a matter of minutes, but we still haven't cultivated the art of living in harmony with our neighbors. We seem to progress in the physical sciences and retrogress in our human relations. As science makes the world a neighborhood, man makes it an ever more difficult place in which to live at peace with others.

During the last world war the greatest destructive device we had in production was the so-called block-buster; today, if we had 166,000 of those bombs, their combined destructive force would not be equal to one megaton, which is the unit of measurement in nuclear devices. How much is a megaton? One million tons of TNT — and that is not the size of today's bombs; it is just the unit for their measurement. Man has the means now with which to annihilate himself; he can wipe his own species off the face of the earth. He has evolved the means for his own complete destruction, so that, today, our weal or woe, our survival or our elimination, depend upon the character of people. Those who handle and manage the massive technical discoveries of our time must be men and women of broad understanding and great good will. In other words, the answer will rest with our new generation, coming from our colleges onto the stage of life to assume their responsibility. They are the architects of man's destiny in the years ahead; they are the vice-presidents in charge of tomorrow.

Man has known the Age of Reason and the Age of Reformation, but surely this must be the Age of his Redemption, lest it witness his complete departure from our earthly scene. The role now to be played must be one of research and renewal in the realm of the spirit. For all too long, we have emphasized the quantitative, the material, the earthy; we have thought and lived in materialistic manner. Now we must bring into being the era of the qualitative, the day of the humanities, the supremacy of the spirit. Man is of the earth, earthy, yet he bears the image of the heavenly. Jeremiah put it succinctly, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his own steps." Wordsworth phrased it in classic language, "That blessed mood, in which the burden of the mystery, the heavy and weary weight of all this unintelligible world, is lightened." Edwin Markham drove home the point, "Why build these cities glorious, if man unbuilded goes? In vain we build the world, unless the builder also grows!" The apostle Paul developed the theme in his letter to the Roman church, "The creation waits on tiptoe, waits with eager longing, for the revealing of the sons of God." Our world today is waiting, expectantly and hopefully, for the emergence of this new man, this son of God, who will stress his ties with his Maker, who will, by his thoughts, world and deeds, reveal that he is fashioned in the likeness of God, created but little lower than the angels, and crowned with glory and honor.

When preparations were first underway for the shooting of a man into the reaches of outer space, a new word was coined — the astronaut, by definition, a navigator finding his way toward the stars. When the Soviet space man, Gagarin, made his memorable flight last month, it was decided by the critics that he was a cosmonaut, not an astronaut. He was orbiting about the earth, but not reaching out and up to the far environs of the universe. More than that, Gagarin's own life was dry and barren; he had no God to seek, whom alone to know would be life everlasting. With our concentration on the material aspects of life, we have been all too long mere cosmonauts; now, there must emerge the era of the astronaut, the man who thinks and acts in the direction of the highest. We need him, the type who is not bound to the earth, but can and will explore the heavenly in knowledge and in experience. Please note his qualifications: — the astronaut must have a background of careful, meticulous educational preparation; he must have the propulsion, the thrust upward, to get him off the level of the earthy, and, once in orbit, he must cultivate and exercise certain essential factors, to insure his reaching his objective. These factors include a spirit of adventure, the ability to make decisions promptly and wisely, the practice of a rigid self-discipline, and a personal commitment to the high aims of his fraternity. If you would see these qualities exemplified, study the life of Paul, the astronaut. "Reaching forward to the things that are before, I press on toward the mark, to the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." There is the spirit of adventure, the longing for discovery. "I know whom I have believed, and am certain he will keep me against that day." There is the faculty of prompt decisions. "I master my body, and bring it under subjection, lest, when I have told others how to live, I should be disqualified myself." The exercise of stringent self-discipline! Then he was a man dedicated to a great purpose, who could say, "Lord, what would you have me do?" Discovery, decision, discipline and dedication, those are the attributes of the astronaut; in the apostle's

Honary Degrees Given At Elon

By Luther N. Byrd

Three outstanding men in the field of education and religion received honorary degrees at final exercises of Elon College's seventy-first annual commencement, held Monday, May 29.

Dr. Lewis Everett Spikes, of Burlington, N. C., superintendent of the Burlington City Schools since 1936, received the Doctor of Law degree as a tribute to his long and distinguished service in the field of education.

Doctor of Divinity Degrees went to Dr. James Horn Lightbourne, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., superintendent of the Southeastern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches; and to Dr. Frank Roosevelt Hamilton, of Norfolk, Va., pastor of the Christian Temple in that city.

Dr. Spikes, a native of Durham, N. C., is a graduate of Duke, holds master's degrees from both Duke and Teachers College of Columbia University and the Ph.D. degree from George Peabody College at Nashville, Tenn.

In addition to his long tenure with the Burlington City Schools, he has also held teaching and administrative posts in other North Carolina schools and has held numerous offices in educational organizations. He spent several months some years ago as an educational consultant to the Japanese government, assisting in setting up a new and democratic school system in Japan.

Dr. James Horn Lightbourne, Jr., a distinguished Congregational Christian minister in his own right, is the son and grandson of Congregational Christian ministers, and he is the third generation of his family in direct line to receive the honorary Doctor of Divinity from Elon, his grandfather having been so honored in 1910 and his father in 1926.

He completed high school at Burlington, N. C., while his father was pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church in that city, and he later graduated from Elon College, going on to Brown University and to Hartford Theological Seminary for his theological training.

He held a student pastorate at Brown Summit, N. C., during his student days and later served pastorates at Stoddard, N. H., and Holland, Va., prior to accepting administrative duties with the Congregational Christian Church. He has been superintendent of the Southeastern Convention since 1957.

He served as pastor at Oskaloosa, Iowa, prior to beginning a 25-year service at a chaplain in the U. S. Navy. During his Navy service he served throughout World War II and was on the carrier Yorktown when it was sunk in the Battle of Midway. He resigned Navy duties in 1956 to accept the pastorate of the Christian Temple, and since that time he has played an outstanding role in the religious and civic life of Norfolk.

Elon Alumnus Of Year

By Luther N. Byrd

Dr. Robert W. Truitt, who assumed new duties June 1 as head of the Department of Engineering at N. C. State College, was honored as Elon College's "Alumnus of The Year" at the annual Elon College Alumni Banquet, held in McEwen Memorial Dining Hall May 28.

Dr. Truitt, who graduated from Elon with the Class of 1941, has been head of the Department of Aeronautical Engineering at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Blacksburg, Va., since 1951, but he resigned that post recently to accept the new appointment at N. C. State.

A native of Greensboro, where he was active in First Congregational Christian Church, he majored in physics during his undergraduate days at Elon, but his master's and doctor's degrees from Virginia Polytechnic Institute are in the field of applied mechanics. He has also done

Commencement At Elon College

Elon College, May 29 — The idea of service to the nation and to the world was stressed by Congressman Horace Kornegay, of Greensboro and Washington, as he addressed the 85 graduating seniors at Elon College's seventy-first annual commencement here Monday morning, May 29.

Quoting from President John F. Kennedy's inaugural address, Kornegay told the Elon seniors that they must "ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country," and he then declared that the seniors' first opportunity for service to America would lie in cultivating an awareness of the problems that press upon the nation today.

Pointing out that America in the past has served as a beacon of hope to less fortunate nations, the congressman declared that the country must continue to shine as a symbol of potential achievement to the smaller nations and areas now engaged in a deathless struggle of good and evil.

He then declared his confidence that products of America's church-related colleges, such as compose Elon's Class of 1961, can render significant help in creating the moral know-how to win a global peace, just as America in the past has mobilized men and machines to win global wars.

Introduced by North Carolina's Secretary of State Thad Eure, who is chairman of Elon's board of trustees, Congressman Kornegay expressed pleasure that his first commencement address since becoming a member of congress should be at Elon, a church-related college in his own district. He further expressed the belief that the small church-related college can and does contribute much to the nation today in offering higher education with high spiritual content.

Alumni Day Observance

The annual Alumni Day observance on Saturday, May 27, which opened the commencement weekend, attracted one of the largest groups of Elon alumni seen on the campus in many years. The Saturday program, which opened with reunion breakfasts and included a picnic luncheon at noon and the annual alumni association meet in the afternoon, was climaxed by the alumni banquet in McEwen Memorial Dining Hall on Saturday night.

Featured speaker at the banquet was the Rev. Robert M. Kimball, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington, who chose as his topic, "Blessed are the dissatisfied, if they have a goal." The speaker, who stressed the importance of a definite goal in life, was introduced by Dr. Leon E. Smith, of Bay-side, Va., now president emeritus of Elon.

Honors Awarded

There were a number of special awards to Elon students, including presentation of the annual Monroe Awards for improvement in scholarship, leadership and an all-round development in student life to Dava Newsome of Dunn, and Robert Kittenger of Elon College.

Five members of the 1961 graduating class were presented their diplomas with honors: Dean Ctadler Coleman, of Burlington, who graduated summa cum laude; Chloe Dean McPherson, Helen Evans Misenheimer and Randolph Marks Williams, Jr., all of Burlington, who graduated magna cum laude; and Faye Gordon Humphrey, of Suffolk, Va., who graduated cum laude.

Youth Faces The Future

David Andes

We the youth of the United Church of Christ affirm that God has made himself known to us in Jesus Christ and has called us into his Church. Believing that he seeks us in holy love, we would respond by joining together in covenant with him.

He gathers us into a loving fellowship in which we encounter one another as unique persons who are created in his image. We seek to express the spirit of this fellowship in all our relationships.

Our vocation is to witness to the message and mission of the church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace. Our hope is in God who in Jesus Christ offers redemption to all men and gives promise to his kingdom of love.

P. F. President's Report

As we launched the year of 1961, we needed no resolutions to remind us that the Southern Convention had a busy schedule ahead. Although the planning and preparation of our upcoming activities had begun months before, much remained to be done to insure fulfillment of all our hopes. The results of our cabinet meetings have been evident and will continue to be so in the total program of our Southern Convention youth.

State rallies were a point of concentration this spring, and the North Carolina state-wide rally was held at Moonelon on April 16. Because our two conferences in Virginia are so inconveniently far apart, two separate rallies were held in Virginia. The Valley Conference held its rally at the Bethel Church on April 30, and the Eastern Virginia Conference met on April 9 at the Liberty Spring Church. New officers were elected in most of the conferences, and I extend my sincere congratulations to them.

Our annual Vocations Conference was also held this spring on April 14-16. An attendance of about 50 deemed this a well-spent weekend.

Our recently initiated caravan program has been active in both the Eastern Virginia Conference and the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. We hope this will continue to be a utilized service by our local P. F.'s. If the demand for caravan teams diminished, the program may have to be discontinued. Let me know if your group is interested in a caravan visit.

Earlier this spring, two of your officers shared in a spiritual retreat sponsored by the other half of our United Church of Christ family, The Evangelical and Reformed young people. Another joint endeavor will be the United Senior High Camp.

This was originally scheduled to be held at Moonelon, but unfortunate circumstances have altered these plans. We hope to participate in more joint enterprises as time progresses.

The United Christian Youth Movement (UCYM) is another of our major concerns, and we shall endeavor to maintain continual support to this organization. We feel that cooperation with other denominations is essential to the strengthening of our faith and works in Christ.

Approximately $900 was received for Workday for Christ this year. Of that sum, six hundred dollars was appropriated to the following causes: ULATE (a UCYM project to provide hymn books to young people in Latin America), a scholarship to provide a week at camp for children in our Christian Home — preferably paying half the cost, Save Our Surplus, students in Mexico, Louis Wilkins in Turkey, the Greek parents of Effie Zikas. These are some of the things your hard-earned money supports.

To look ahead, this summer contains several events of interest. In addition to the regular camps at Moonelon, there will be a special P. F. Officers Camp from July 30 through August 8. This nine-day camp will be generally open to young people of senior high age, but more specifically to those who will be officers in the coming year. There will be a limit of four per church until July 1, when restrictions will be lifted. This camp will not only be a valuable training session, but it will also serve as host to our annual assembly of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship.

We are making this the highlight of our P. F. program, and we invite everyone to help make it such by your attendance.

We are also fortunate to send Rosemary Hoffman and Hubie Young to the North American Ecumenical Youth Assembly in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Their interpretations of our interests and concerns will be of primary importance in determining the direction of our youth program over the next few years.

Don't go away, folks; we're not through yet!

Virginia UCYM

The Summer Conference of the Virginia United Christian Youth Movement will be held at Massanetta Springs, Harrisonburg, August 5-11, 1961. Sponsored by the Virginia Council of Churches, it will offer "a summer ecumenical encounter" for young people 15 years of age and older who are active in local, denominational, or interdenominational youth programs. Young people are provided an opportunity to experience a larger concept of the Church, to see their role in the Church and in the life of the churches, and to understand the concepts, methods and problems of church cooperation and unity.

Program highlights of this year's Conference include: "Our Protestant Heritage" and "Understanding Our Denominations," Bible Study and Prayer Fellowship Groups, and "Our Churches Working Together." Under the direction of the Rev. George A. Williams, Associate Executive Secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches, the Conference staff includes leaders from the Protestant denominations in the State.

For further information, write to the Virginia Council of Churches, 109 West Grace Street, Richmond 20, Virginia.

May, 1961

Dear Friends of the American Board,

We are writing to you about what we think is one of the most important tasks in our contemporary world. In every daily paper, on television and radio, we hear of crises and dire human needs in every part of the world. We know that Russia and Red China are trying to capitalize on the hunger, the poverty and the ignorance of people in underdeveloped nations. Surely we Christians have a better answer.

In the face of grave conditions and great opportunities, we must share with you this disquieting fact. In order to maintain our present missionaries — ministers, medical doctors and nurses, teachers — and in order to get more Christian leaders at work at strategic points, we need to raise at least $250,000 at once.

I am sure that everyone of us has felt: "I wish I could preach the Gospel, I wish I could teach the Bible, I wish I could give a cup of milk, a bowl of soup, a dish of cereal in Christ's name." We cannot go because of commitments at home, but we can help so that others may go.

There was a lad in a country village, who after a great struggle became a minister. His helper during his days of study was the village cobbler, a man of wide reading and far thinking.

On the day that the young man was ordained to preach, the cobbler said to him: "It has always been my desire to be a minister of the Gospel, but the circumstances of my life made it impossible. Now you are achieving what was closed to me. I want you to promise me one thing. I want you to let me make and cobble your shoes as my gift, and I want you to wear them in the pulpit when you preach. Then I'll feel you are preaching the Gospel that I always wanted to preach... standing in my shoes."

By our gifts we can know that worthy, dedicated Christians are standing in the shoes we have provided. Let us give that others may live.

For the sake of Christ, our Lord,

David J. Davis

Taking Our Faith Seriously

Christian Social Action is simply taking our Christian faith seriously by relating it to the problems of our society. It means asking ourselves, What does the Gospel require of us in our daily work, in the community, in national and international affairs?

It may begin very close to home, as we consider how the community takes care of its children and youth. Have we provided adequate schools? Wholesome recreation? Opportunities for work and useful activity? How is our love of neighbor expressed in relation to the aging, the alcoholic, the handicapped, the mentally ill?

Christian social action also means looking at the grave problems which face the nation and the world at large. We expect a Christian to be a good citizen. But good citizens are not simply those who do not break laws that are established for the good of all; they are willing to take responsibility for studying the problems which confront us and for putting into effect decisions which are beneficial to all. Farm policy, industrial relations, civil rights legislation, international economic assistance, the control and reduction of armaments — these are our business because God's justice and man's well-being are bound up in them.

Christian social action is an essential part of the Church's Mission: to do Christ's work in the world — "that in everything he might be pre-eminent."

O Young fearless prophet
Of ancient Galilee:
Thy life is still a summons
To serve humanity,
To make our thoughts and actions
Less prone to serve the crowd,
To stand with humble courage
For Truth with hearts unbowed.

Reports can be dull, but this one is not. This report is exciting. We could make it as long as a book. That is not necessary. This is more than a report. This is the most hearty thanks that you can possibly receive for your part in the Christmas Fund. In sending a gift you have had a part in the most successful Christmas Fund in all the fifty-nine years of its life. The final total was $160,936.16. You were one of the 6,649 donors. Of these, 4,905 were gifts sent by individuals and 1,744 were from churches or church groups and represent hundreds of individual givers. Truly the Veterans of the Cross are not forgotten and it is our great joy to thank you that it is so.

More than that, you have sent Christmas checks to 722 Veterans and to almost as many you have sent a second Christmas check. The first one we send for Christmas and the second one after we know what the Fund produces. Those who receive these checks tell us that the second one is a great blessing in meeting the winter's unexpected "extras."

But that is not all. In a gift to the Christmas Fund you have set up the Emergency Fund. From this Fund grants are made almost daily to some stricken minister or minister's widow. Now, look what this does. It has helped a great number to meet final bills on the death of a life partner. It has paid innumerable hospital bills. One widow with a $540 a year pension had $1,250 to pay for hospital bills with only one-half covered by insurance. It bought eye glasses for an Indian pastor. It bought medicine for stricken children in a parsonage. It bought fuel oil to keep a very old couple warm. It has bought medicines which otherwise could not have been provided. It has set one very young widow on her way to providing for her two young children by freeing her from debt. A minister's widow saw her young son move forward in school when hearing aid and glasses were provided for him. You can be proud of this Fund and all that you have done through its ministries.

Mrs. James Hess Dies In Oregon

Mrs. Mildred Waldo Hall Hess, a Congregational Christian missionary in India and Japan for 37 years under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, died Saturday, May 27, at Oregon City, Oregon. She was 73 years old.

Memorial services were held May 29 with the Rev. Dr. Royald V. Caldwell, minister of the First Congregational Church, Portland, Oregon, conducting the service.

Besides her husband, the Rev. Dr. James M. Hess, Mrs. Hess leaves a daughter, Darthea, Mrs. Michael W. Tunnicliffe of Oregon City; a brother, Benjamin C. Hall of Cranston, Rhode Island; a sister, Mrs. Winifred H. Dingee of Cranston, and several grandchildren.

Dr. and Mrs. Hess sailed together for India in 1915 but were transferred to Japan a few months later where they spent four years at Doshisha University in Kyoto, the largest church-related university in Japan.

Returning to India in 1920, they were assigned to The American College in Madurai City and served there until their retirement in 1952. Dr. Hess served the college as head of the English Department and as bursar. Mrs. Hess assisted her husband over the years, mainly in library work and in religious education.

For several years after their retirement as missionaries Dr. and Mrs. Hess lived at Elon College, North Carolina, where Dr. Hess was on the faculty of the college.

A native of Willimantic, Connecticut, Mrs. Hess was educated at Rhode Island Normal School and at the University of Chicago. She married Dr. Hess in 1910.

Interment was in the family lot at Harleigh Cemetery in Camden, New Jersey.

THE MEXICO MISSION

Tepic

Capital of Nayarit, West Mexico, located on Tepic River; commercial center.

June

- 18—Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Hayes are the senior missionaries on the field, being in their third term of service. He is now Superintendent, so named by the Mexican churches. He is interested in music; promotes pension plan; cooperates with joint program of Presbyterians and Disciples of Christ.
- 19—Mr. and Mrs. William Kenney, appointed in 1957, reach out from Tepic to do educational work throughout the American Board field of local churches.

The Near East Mission

- 20—The American Board began work in the Bible Lands in 1820 and has served in Bulgaria, Albania and Serbia as well as in the countries where it is now working — Turkey, Greece, Syria and Lebanon. Our major work is in Turkey, where we are only western denomination at work.

GREECE

Athens

Capital and cultural center of Greece where we have Orinda Childs Pierce College and Estia Filias Community Center.

- 21—Miss Marguerite Bicknell taught at Olivet and at LeMoyné, both Congregational Christian colleges in the U. S., before going to Near East in 1948. She taught at Izmir, did difficult assignment in interior Turkey, and then taught English at Pierce College before her retirement last year.
- 22—Rev. and Mrs. Raymond Blakney have been in Greece since 1957 where he is president of Pierce College. Previous to that he was missionary to China at two different times, and president of our Olivet College in Michigan.
- 23—Mr. and Mrs. Newell Steward are joint representatives of our American Board and our Service Committee, living at Estia Filias Community Center in a very poor part of Athens. They are beginning the first center for old people in Greece. They also supervise work in mountain villages where Communist guerillas have been active. She is head of Pierce College School of Social Work and while the Blakneys were on furlough 1960-61 acted as president.

Thessaloniki

Seaport town of 310,000. Paul's letters to the Thessalonians were addressed to converts here.

- 24—Miss Mary Ingle was born in England, but has her B. A. from Pacific University and M. A. from University of Chicago. She was teacher at Anatolia College 1936-38; during war at American Academy for Girls, Uskudar; returning to Anatolia College in 1945. One of her great achievements was planning and raising money for three new buildings for Anatolia College to begin girls campus which was moved to city after destruction in World War II.

ACTIVITIES AT LITTLE CREEK

Special services have been the "order of the day" recently at Little Creek, Norfolk. Mothers were in good attendance with their families at the morning service May 14. The oldest mother and the youngest mother were each presented with a lovely potted plant. In the evening, a fellowship covered dish supper was held at 6:00 p.m. followed by the religious film "Fire on the Heather."

Sunday, May 21, the church observed Armed Forces Sunday. Service men came dressed in their uniforms. Mr. Olson paid tribute to the contributions made to the church by servicemen and their families. Sunday evening Rev. Julius Rice presented an interesting sermon to the church entitled "Neighborhood Evangelism." Recently, the Women's Fellowship held a beauty clinic to raise funds for missions.

Sunday evening, May 28, was Sunday School Night. The children presented an appropriate program. May 30 the Men's Fellowship had a cook-out. Plans are being made by the church for a Vacation Bible School to be held in August.

The Fruits Of Faith

Background Scripture: James 2, 5; Galatians 5:22-25.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 118:21-29.

Memory Selection: Faith by itself, if it has no works, is dead. James 2:17. RSV

Let us keep in mind that the letter or book of James was written by the brother of our Lord Jesus Christ. Strangely enough, James did not believe on his brother during His earthly ministry, but became convinced that his brother was the Christ by His passion and resurrection, and occupied an important place in the life of the Jerusalem Church. It is also well enough to keep in mind that James was a practical kind of fellow. He believed that religion made a difference, that creed should be expressed in conduct, that faith should find expression in works. It would seem as if James believed that a man was saved by works instead of by faith. But that is not the case. His concern is to prove that faith and works are inseparable. He never questions that faith is the instrument of salvation, but he does insist that if faith is real it will manifest itself in works. A faith that does not produce works is dead. A faith that is simply mere assent to a creed is not worthy of the name. Faith is trust and obedience and devotion and love. And such faith expresses itself in works.

Regarding Respect For Persons

James deals with a very common temptation — the temptation to partiality, the temptation to make unfair distinctions between persons. And he pin-points the matter with a specific case. A man, well-dressed, evidently a successful, socially-acceptable fellow comes into the synagogue or church, and he is warmly welcomed, carefully seated in a good place, and showered with attention and service. At the same service another man, quite evidently a poor man, simply dressed, comparatively unknown, comes in, and he is told to "take a back seat"; indeed he is told "to stand" or at best "to sit under the footstool." James asserts that this is not only discourteous, but sinful. God is no respecter of persons — the size of a man's bank account, the color of his skin, the street on which he lives, the circle in which he moves, the work he does, the education he has, the culture he reflects, the creed he holds — is not the basis on which God looks at a man. Many may look on the outward appearance but God looks at the heart. "But if ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin, being convicted by the law as transgressors" — that is the "royal law of love" which is the law of Christ. All degrees of rank and position among men are insignificant before God and contemptible to him.

Alas, we are all guilty of breaking this law. Almost instinctively we kow-tow to the fellow at the top of the totem pole. Consciously and unconsciously we show partiality. We make distinctions between men based on outward and material factors. We judge by appearances. We show favoritism, not only in society but in the sanctuary. We make distinctions between the rich and the poor. How foolish it all is, to say nothing of how sinful. Poor men are often rich in faith and rich men are often poor in faith. Many poor men are deserving of respect and many rich men are worthy of contempt. How foolish to judge a man by outward circumstances or to condemn him because he belongs to a certain class.

Judgment With, Or Without Mercy

One suspects that every one of us wants mercy more than we want justice. James suggests that we will do well to temper our judgments with mercy, "for he shall have judgment without mercy that showeth no mercy." And he adds that "mercy rejoiceth against judgment." We ought to be careful, then, as to our judgments, and guard against all unfair discriminations, all narrow suspicions and class distinctions and race prejudices, for we ourselves are to be judged. That applies even to the judgments of men; it applies more to the judgments of God. When we read these words of James, we are reminded of the words of his brother, the Lord Jesus Christ "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged."

Faith And Works

Luther called the epistle of James "an epistle of straw," because he felt that it put undue emphasis upon works, instead of putting it upon faith. But as has been stated above, James was not saying that a man was saved by his works, but that a man showed he was saved by his works. How can a man show that he is saved if he does not show it by his works? James gives a classic and caustic illustration of what he is saying. A person who is destitute and naked and hungry comes to a man who professes to have faith and asks for help. The good soul, so full of faith, says in essence, "Sorry old fellow, too bad, I wish I could do something for you, depart in peace, be warmed and filled and good luck to you." But he does not give the man anything. "What doth it profit?" asks James. James goes on to say that if a man tries to show his faith without works, he will show his faith by his works. Of course James is not talking about a creed which a man has in his head, but a compassion which he has in his heart. Faith for James is not committing something to memory, but committing one's self to Someone.

Wanted — Patience

"Be patient, therefore, brethren unto the coming of the Lord... be ye also patient, establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The early Christians confidently expected an early and almost immediate return of the Lord Jesus Christ, as a careful reading of the earliest New Testament books will reveal. But He did not appear or return, at least not in the way in which they expected, and they were becoming impatient. Like Paul in writing to the Thessalonian Church, James had to enjoin patience on the part of his readers. We still need patience. Over nineteen hundred years have passed and our Lord has not come as many think He will come. But a thousand years in his sight are but as a watch in the night. It is not ours to reason when or how; it is ours to do our work faithfully and to wait patiently until He comes.

Gifts Of Food Are Appreciated

Walstein W. Snyder, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

These are busy times at our Children's Home. By the time this reaches you we will have consecrated our cottages and the Alumni Association will have had their annual meeting.

Our truck patches are beginning to bear vegetables. Already we have frozen enough English peas for the year and enough kraut has been made to see us through until next spring.

Recently we have been the recipient of some surplus vegetables and fruit that has been most welcome. Several weeks ago Dr. W. T. Scott called and said that 45 to 50 bushels of English peas were available if we could come to Chuckatuck, Virginia, for them. Mr. Perkins, our farm manager, and myself took the pick-up truck and picked up the peas early on Monday morning. By the next afternoon we had about 1,000 pounds of English peas in our walk-in locker. These were given us by our good friend Mr. Tom Bradshaw of Route 4, Suffolk, Virginia.

Then, just last week Mr. Howard Campbell of Burlington, N. C., came by with 34 bushels of green beans and said if we could use them they were ours. So we placed these in our cooler until our boys and girls came from school. With their help 21 bushels were snapped and placed in the freezer. The others will be used from day to day as we have need. We are most grateful for this good fortune.

Then this past Saturday morning our boys went to the farm of Mr. W. C. Way, Jr., near Liberty, N. C., a member of our Pleasant Hill Church, and picked 12 gallons of strawberries. Eight gallons of these were frozen.

Many thanks to all these people for being thoughtful of our Children's Home. All this helps very much.

Mark Thelin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy A. Thelin, missionaries to the Philippines, has been appointed by the American Board to a three-year teaching term in Formosa. Mr. Thelin, who is now studying at the University of North Carolina, will go to Formosa as soon as he completes his doctorate.

Paging The Astronauts

case, they qualified him to make a remarkable statement; he said, "God has made my life a pageant of triumph; it has been in reality a triumphal procession."

Astronauts, navigators in the direction of the highest, are being paged today to come forward and occupy the center of the stage. That is what we are confident you will be. A church-related college, dedicated to man's seeking after the truth that makes him free, has been instrumental in your careful preparation. Stressing the worth and value of a dynamic religious faith, the college has offered and furnished your propulsion, the thrust to get you off the level of the common and the ordinary. Now, on the stage for yourself, living and working with your fellow men, this college has placed in your hands the essentials for your being and becoming an astronaut. It has done so in the confidence that you will navigate toward the highest and noblest. Those words in the epistle to the Romans are tailor-made for the situation. The apostle says, "In my opinion, whatever we have to go through now is less than nothing compared to the magnificent future God has planned for us. We are on tiptoe, to see this wonderful sight, of the sons of God coming into their own. Our hope is that the whole of created life will be rescued from the tyranny of change and decay, and have its share in this magnificent liberty, which can only belong to the children of God."

In that hope we ask you to share: in your enactment of the role required for its consummation, we are confident you will perform in accord with our highest expectations. Our day and time is waiting with eager longing for the advent of men and women who will be astronauts; it is paging such star-seekers, who will live above the fog in public duty and in private thinking. Our world is calling, local and long distance, for those of such calibre, who will seek those things which are above, where Christ is. "The earth is here beneath our feet; to seek the stars makes life complete."

Dedication And Memorial Day At Pope's Chapel

By Miss Ethel Holmes

The dedication service held in Pope's Chapel, May 28, was the 1st in the memory of any living person. Some of the items dedicated were purchased by the church, others were donated by individuals. The committee arranging for the special day was composed of Mesdames Fred H. Cooke, Bobby Winstead and Howard Conyers.

During the past few years our church has shown much improvement, as the members have taken on a renewed interest by building four Sunday school rooms and a vestibule; purchasing new pews, pulpit furniture, communion table, secretary's table and chair; providing tables and chairs for the new rooms and carpet for the sanctuary; and installing a Hammond organ.

It would be difficult for one who saw the church in 1940, the year our present pastor, Rev. E. M. Powell, was ordained in this church, to recognize this as the same building. Mr. Powell is now in his eighth year as our pastor.

Mr. Powell used as his sermon topic "The Church." Four things required for a church, he said, are: loyalty, prayer, work, and sacrifice.

At the close of the morning service the memorial gifts were named, including communion table and pew by Mrs. O. M. Evans, Sr., in memory of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Suitt and N. W.

Suitt; pew by Bob Conyers family in memory of Robert Conyers and his two wives; vacuum cleaner by Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Morton as a memorial to his mother; flags by Mack House in memory of his parents. Pews were given by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Grissom, Mr. and Mrs. J. Howard Conyers, H. B. Conyers, Julian Pergerson and family and Fred Cooke; the pulpit stand by Mrs. Fred Cooke; secretary's table and chair by Mr. and Mrs. J. Howard Conyers; choir platform by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cooke; picture of Lord's Supper by Mrs. O. M. Evans, Sr. The Women's Fellowship gave the altar and table scarves, pulpit chairs, and step railings. Additional items were purchased by the church, ranging from Sunday school rooms to offering plates. Following a litany of dedication, the pastor read "The Church of My Dreams" and led the dedicatory prayer.

Following a bountiful lunch and fellowship hour, members joined visitors from other churches in an afternoon of singing by several choirs.

The church, which was established more than a hundred years ago, has grown much — but not enough. We, the members, are looking forward to the coming revival services which will begin June 25 with the Rev. J. L. Neese as guest minister. We are hoping to see more growth as the result of these services.

Spring Activities At Oak Level

By Mrs. Marsh Wiggins, Reporter

The annual Easter sunrise service was held at Oak Level church, Youngsville, North Carolina, at six o'clock. A pageant, "The Meaning of Easter," was presented. This was a song-story depicting the life and ministry of Jesus from the incarnation to the resurrection. Miss Peggy Cash sang "The Beautiful Name" and our pastor, Rev. E. M. Powell, gave a short sermonette. Following the program the ladies of the church served breakfast to approximately 80 members and friends in our new fellowship building. Mrs. Elton White and Mrs. Kelton Grissom were directors of the program. Mrs. Dewey Wiggins was narrator.

The Rachel Wallace Fellowship has had a good year thus far. The chairmen of our six areas of work have been working hard. The Fellowship has bought 100 place settings of stainless steel for our Fellowship building.

May 8 our Fellowship members had the privilege of hearing Mrs. Robert Smith of Durham review our foreign mission study, book, "One World, One Mission." She made all of us want to do more for missions in the future than we have in the past. She showed a film which went along with the book. It was a pleasure to have the ladies from Pope's Chapel visit us and hear Mrs. Smith.

The Women's Fellowship observed family night May 28 at the church with a supper which included homemade ice cream for dessert. After enjoying a delicious meal and fellowship we went into the church for a program in the form of a play. Those taking part were: Mr. Kelton Grissom, Mrs. Marjorie Grissom, Phil Wiggins, Mary Iva Wreen, Coleen Grissom and Jesse Preddy.

Assistant minister for United, Raleigh, in July and August will be Rev. Oscar McCloud, a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary. Mr. McCloud was made available to the church by the Student Interracial Ministry Committee of the National Student Christian Federation, a committee which, through finding summer positions for white and Negro ministerial students in churches of the opposite race, hopes to increase communication and understanding between Negro and white Christians.

JOHNSON

Mrs. Kemp B. Johnson, Fuquay Springs, North Carolina, died May 25, 1961, at 89 years of age. The funeral was held in her church, Wake Chapel, by her minister, Rev. Earl Farrell, assisted by the Rev. John G. Truitt, Elon College. "To tell the story of the life of Mrs. Johnson would be to tell much of the story of Wake Chapel Congregational Christian church," said her pastor, "and in turn to write the history of the church would recount much of the life of Mrs. Johnson. They grew up together, and her interest in the church continued for more than eighty years."

Mrs. Johnson, who was before her marriage Alice Utley, attended Elon College in its earliest years. Her husband was a trustee of the college until his death; one of her sons, Harold, is a member of its board; and another son, Marvin, is on the board of trustees of the Congregational Christian Home for Children. She is survived by one daughter, Ruth; and four sons, Harold W., Brantley Baird, Marvin M., and A. Burnett; seven grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

The home was not only large and beautiful with great trees towering above it, but it was a Christian home, hospitable, humble and inspiring. The father who died several years ago was active in his community, church and state, and the wider interests of his Church. The children have grown up to be quite as interested in their local church, and the institutions and enterprises of their denomination.

It was easy to sense the appreciation of a large community, and a large circle of relatives, neighbors and friends whose presence gave testimony to the high esteem in which the Christian home is held. The music and the prayers expressed the triumph and togetherness of a good life and a great community.

Interment was made in the family plot in the church cemetery nearby. May the memory of her good works, and the blessings of God, comfort and guide the loved ones left behind.

John G. Truitt

On "Father's Day" we have come to think of men of the Church and their contribution to its life and work. Typical is this group of men who shared in the first annual "Joint Laymen's Retreat" at Massanetta Springs in the Valley of Virginia April 29-30.

Dr. Arthur Newell, pastor of St. John's, Richmond, opened the meeting with a talk on "Men at Work." At the Saturday evening service he continued with "What Do I Do Now?" "Mighty Men and Mighty Movements" was discussed by Rev. Robert Knowles Saturday afternoon, while his Sunday morning sermon topic was "Men With A Mission." Rev. Mark Andes of Winchester led the vesper service. Bible study classes were conducted by Dr. C. H. Huffman, retired professor at Madison College and a member of the Synodical Council, and Harry Thompson, adult teacher at St. John's.

A closing communion service was conducted by Rev. Edourd Taylor, pastor of St. Stephen's E. and R. Church, Harrisonburg, assisted by Rev. S. E. Madren, whose meditation was entitled "Facing the Task."

The week-end proved to be a profitable one for the sixty men present from the C. C. and E. and R. churches in the "Valley" and from St. John's E. and R. church, Richmond. A welcome visitor was Dr. J. Kenneth Kohler, national executive for the E. and R. laymen. Co-chairman was Clarence A. Phillips of Bethlehem. The president of the joint Valley Churchmen's Fellowship is Thomas Mitz of Mt. Olivet (R).

Groundbreaking At Bethlehem

Dr. R. E. Brittle, pastor, turns the first spadeful of earth to launch the building of a new $40,000 sanctuary for Bethlehem Christian Church, Suffolk, Virginia. At center is R. H. Joyner, 86, and a member at Bethlehem for 75 years. To the right are little Bonnie Griggs, one month, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Griggs.

Here And There Among The Churches

Burton's Grove and Dendron have voted to approve the Constitution of the United Church of Christ.

Guest choir for the revival at our Montecello church was from St. Peter's, Greensboro.

Laymen of Lakeview church were in charge of the morning service June 4.

Father's Day was observed at Apple's Chapel June 18. The youngest father, the oldest father, the father with the most children present, and the father with the most grandchildren present were honored.

Rev. Bill Simmons and his wife were pleasantly surprised recently with a joint birthday gift of an electric fry-pan from the Ladies' Bible Class of their church (Great Bridge). Both Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have birthdays in May.

A Sunday school workshop was held at Damascus May 30. Rev. Robert Knowles, Minister of Christian Education for the Southern Convention, led this meeting, which both teachers and members of the Sunday school attended. Among the topics discussed were way of improving the Sunday school program and ways of evaluating and choosing Sunday school literature.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA S. S. CONVENTION

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School Convention will meet at Liberty Vance Church near Henderson June 27, rather than at Eutaw, as was announced previously.

T. N. Daughtry, president

Rev. Grant Burns was the speaker at a revival at Damascus July 10-14.

Organist for First, Burlington, during June and July is William Whitley, a student at Elon College.

The church school staff of our Tryon church met recently to hear a talk on the new English Bible and its relation to other translations.

A revival will be held at Union Grove July 19-23 at 7:30 p.m. Speaker will be Rev. Wilton Duckett, professor of religion at Piedmont College.

Guest minister at our Tryon church June 18 and 25 is Rev. Leonard W. Topping, associate minister of First Presbyterian Church, Spartanburg, S. C.

Vacation Bible schools are scheduled for June 12-23 at Northview, June 26-30 at Concord and June 26-30 at Rosemont.

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Elon College Community Church sponsored a church-wide "family picnic" at Moonelon June 10. Men of Shallow Ford and Saint Mark's churches and their families were the guests of the Elon church at this picnic.

The annual Homecoming and Memorial Day service was held at Big Oak church, Eagle Springs, June 4. The inspiring program, given by the children and young people, ended with the congregation following the pastor, Rev. James Fogleman, to the cemetery for singing and prayer. After a picnic lunch, the afternoon worship service was led by Mr. Fogleman.

Vacation church school will be held at Bayside August 7-11.

If Jesus had had any racial or national prejudice, he would not have been the Savior of the whole world. (From the Sunday bulletin, First, Burlington.)

The Women's Fellowship at Damascus met May 24 to hear the home mission study book, "Heritage and Horizons," reviewed by Mrs. Henry Bowden. Guests at this meeting were the women of Mann's Chapel. Also recently Bible study on "A Portrait of Luke" has been used by the Damascus Women's Fellowship.

Churches are challenged by 1960 census facts: in a nation where one person in five changes his address every year, and where rural population is declining while urban growth has more than doubled, the churches will certainly need to revise their approach to their ministries.

A replica of a stained glass window was used as a worship center at Northview May 28, when the Women's Fellowship led the opening worship for Sunday school. Each of the six departments of the organization was represented by a "pane" in the window.

N. C. AND VA. S. S. CONVENTION

The Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet at Mt. Bethel Church on Tuesday, June 27, convening at 10 o'clock. All churches of the conference are urged to send as many delegates as you can.

SPECIAL DAY AT HINES CHAPEL

By Mrs. R. W. Isley

Sunday, June 4, Hines Chapel observed Homecoming and Memorial Day. The service was well attended — the church was full and some fifty people congregated in the educational building to enjoy the service over the P. A. system. The sanctuary was made beautiful with floral arrangements placed in memory of departed loved ones. Special music was rendered by the adult and junior choirs.

The pastor, Rev. Thomas Madren, brought an inspiring and challenging message on "Upholding the Standards." He reminded us of the crucial time in which we are living and of how we are falling short of the standards set up for us by our forefathers. He said that he would rather see us have a high standard and not reach it than see us pull the standard down to our own height.

The memorial address in the cemetery was brought by Mr. Stedman Hines, one of the sons of the church, who is now in the state legislature.

At the noon meal plenty of good food was enjoyed by all. Part of the afternoon was spent in wonderful fellowship of renewing old acquaintances, making new friends, and having a most enjoyable visitation together.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT APPLE'S CHAPEL

By Mrs. E. H. Thompson

The Daily Vacation Bible School was held at Apple's Chapel June 5 through June 9. Mrs. Grady Cook was general director and Monty Busick was director of music. Several children came from other churches of the community in addition to those of our own church. We appreciate this spirit of cooperation and are glad to have these children attend our church. There was a total enrollment of 131 children and 27 teachers and helpers. The children ranged in ages from nursery to early teenagers.

The theme of the school was LIVING FOR JESUS. This idea was carried out throughout the week in all classes. On Sunday night the children gave a nice program under the direction of the teachers. The program also carried out the theme of the week.

The church people are very grateful to those who carried on the work.

MEMORIALS DEDICATED AT SOUTH NORFOLK

Altar memorial gifts were dedicated during the morning worship service Sunday, June 11, at South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church.

Mrs. C. N. Harris, on behalf of the donors, presented the following gifts: the cross — presented in memory of Mr. G. A. Peebles by Mrs. G. A. Peebles, Mrs. J. R. Morrison and Mr. Gordon A. Peebles, Jr.; the candlesticks — presented in memory of Mr. Lloyd L. Webb by Mrs. Lloyd L. Webb; the paraments (communion table runner, lectern scarf, and Bible marker) — presented in memory of Mr. Henry V. Rawls by Mrs. Henry V. Rawls, Miss Lou Rawls, and Mr. Veston Rawls; the vases — presented in memory of Elizabeth Hargrove by Mr. and Mrs. Coleman Hargrove; the offering plates — in memory of A. L. Hanbury, Sr. by Sadie E. Hanbury; Wilma Hanbury by Claude M. Hanbury; Clinton Rawls by Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Rawls; Sally Ross by Mrs. E. C. Etheridge; H. E. Seymour by Mrs. H. E. Seymour, Henry A. Seymour, and Miss Mildred Seymour; Curtis Smith by Ruby Hall Smith; the memorial book — presented in memory of W. T. Hanbury, Jr. by Esther H. Evans, Mary H. Evans, and Blanche Lee Sawyer, and in memory of Hattie L. Wharton by Mrs. Raymond Funk.

These memorials were accepted by Mr. C. F. Reece, chairman of the official board, with thanks and appreciation.

A "DREAM COME TRUE" AT BAYVIEW

By Mrs. B. G. Harrell, a charter member

At long last we have realized the dream of many of us — a new house of worship. We are overwhelmed when we see all that has happened around us, and exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" To everyone who has helped we are eternally grateful. Space would be exhausted if we attempted to list all who helped by praying, planning, giving money and loans, buying bonds, soliciting and collecting, working with their hands, even giving blood and tears. Everyone has really worked. The women painted the five large Sunday school rooms, a fifty foot hall, a stairway, the spacious social hall, and the kitchen. The men painted the sanctuary and laid all the tile. Mr. Clyde Kessler built the chancel and choir lofts. Our minister, Rev. Charles Pegram, and his wife have worked faithfully.

There is lots to do on the finishing touches before the building is completed, but we did have our first service there Sunday, June 4. Everyone came to the old building. Then the choir led them to the new one. At the front entrance, the choir sang "Open the Gates of the Temple." Mr. Kessler, our senior deacon, cut the ribbon and the people entered, with the choir following. Inside, five people joined the church, a baby was christened, and Communion was served.

VISITOR IN AMERICAN HOME MISSED GOD

A young Japanese girl was invited to spend several days in the home of a kindly American family. During the visit no pains were spared to show her how families in this country live and to entertain her.

As she was leaving them at the close of the visit, she tried to express her appreciation of their hospitality and kindness. Her hostess, sensing a bit of disappointment, asked: "Was there something you wanted to see that we have overlooked?"

"Everyone has been so very kind," she replied, "it is only that I have missed the God in your home."

In her home in Japan her God had a prominent place and everyone who entered was at once aware of him. In this American home God had never even been mentioned.

In many homes in our country this is true and J. Edgar Hoover believes it contributes materially to the increase of crime and juvenile delinquency which is so appalling.

Abraham Lincoln said: "It is the duty of nations as well as of men to owe their dependence upon the overruling power of God... and to recognize the sublime truth, announced in Holy Scriptures and proven by all history, that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord..."

Mrs. M. Seymour Purdy in The North Carolina Clubwoman

"I'm going with an open mind, a complete lack of prejudice and a cool, rational approach, to listen to what I'm convinced is pure rubbish."

United Church To Become Active

For about twenty years delegates to the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches have been considering a union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. At first it was a sort of dream, a proposal that appeared to be only a difficult possibility; then favorable votes from both denominations indicated that for the first time in history two very different denominations really could become one Church under the leadership of the Spirit of Christ. Lawsuits followed, for there were those who did not wish such a merger of denominations — who wanted no change from the Way which they called Congregational. But the dream maintained its reality. At long last Synods on the one hand and churches on the other voted on a Constitution for the United Church. Final tabulation of the voting of churches has not been announced, but all indications are that some 90% of churches have voted, and that about 90% favor the Constitution. That means that when the General Synod meets in July it will be possible to declare the Constitution operative; and the new denomination will be ready for its chance to write a new chapter in church history.

In the Southern Convention, and in the Convention of the South, votes have been taken to authorize the conventions to act as conferences in the United Church until mergers on convention levels are made.

Our conferences have voted to act as associations, and such votes are to be made in the Convention of the South. It is understood that Southern Synod has also voted in the same fashion.

All of this means that by the second Sunday in July churches can feel the thrill of being part of the United Church of Christ when they meet for Sunday services. It will be a good time for celebration, and dedication. We can rejoice in the progress made, in the birth of a new Church dedicated to the idea that Christians of various beliefs can work together in harmony. The future will be just as bright as the dedication of the people who are the Church. Plans for the future appear to be inviting, but the fulfillment of these dreams depends upon the loyalty to the ideals, the sincerity of purpose of those involved, the intelligent leadership elected, and the dedication of the entire membership to Christ who is the only Head of the Church. There is no obvious reason why the United Church of Christ should flounder in its attempt to make its witness to Christian union. There are many indications that the future is filled with thrilling opportunities to serve more effectively at home and abroad, and to lead the way to still larger unions in Christendom. If it has success in this latter, the purpose of the Christian Church as stated by the founding fathers a century and a third ago will be fulfilled. This is our hope.

The Convention Of The South

Both Congregational and Christian Churches before their merger in 1931 had members of both white and colored people. Negroes in the Southern Convention area were organized as the Afro-Christian Convention, and as the North Carolina Congregational Conference. Most of the Negro churches of the two denominations were in North Carolina and Virginia, and they still are. However, the Convention of the South includes churches from New Jersey to Texas.

That organization met at Talladega College in Talladega, Alabama, last week, and your editor was among the 240 persons present. He represented the Superintendent, who found it inconvenient to take the greetings of the Southern Convention and to share the fellowship. He was honored to be his representative, and found the meeting to be delightfully instructive and inspiring.

The program was planned so all groups could have their biennial meetings. The Laymen's Fellowship, Women's Fellowship, Pilgrim Fellowship, and ministers all had their separate meetings. Then the entire group would come together and act as a convention. Laymen, women, and young people each had an evening service for the entire group. Topics for discussion were the same as those at meetings of similar groups in the Southern Convention, with the possible exception of greater emphasis on the United Church of Christ and a serious concern for the influence of the Church on world conditions. It did appear that those present were very conscious that Christianity should be closely related to people as they live in our world, and not just a delightful personal experience.

There is evidence of immediate growth. Plans of yesteryear are being discarded and more modern methods adopted. The shouting so familiar (even in white churches) is rapidly disappearing. Worship services based on the Pilgrim Hymnal style are in vogue. Sermons are prepared and delivered with knowledge and skill. The ordinances are observed with dignity. A sense of being part of the denomination is taking hold, and for many it is strong indeed. There appeared to be a sincere effort to make progress in all phases of church work.

Addresses were of the highest order — clear, concise, constructive, eloquent, scholarly. Leaders directed thought towards specific goals. People entered into discussion promptly and intelligently. Services moved forward with dispatch and decorum. Singing was excellent whether by choir or congregation. Those who rode busses from Virginia and North Carolina were evidently interested in what was going on, and they must have felt repaid for their loss of sleep, long and expensive journey, and the time invested.

It will be difficult for this group to merge with white churches of their various areas, and, as was said by their president, there will be some human regrets if they no longer have meetings of their own Convention, but they are looking forward to being active members of the United Church of Christ.

THE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN FLAG

The United States is the youngest of the great nations, but its flag is one of the oldest and most interesting.

On June 14, 1777, the young American Congress meeting in Philadelphia resolved that "the flag of the thirteen States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation." This resolution put the seal of approval on the flag made by Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, a Philadelphia needleworker.

It was at the request of the committee composed of George Washington, Robert Morris and Col. George Ross, appointed by the Continental Congress, that Mrs. Ross created the emblem cherished then by some 3,000,000 people and now by 180,000,000.

The colonies had their own banners when they made battle against the King of England. No general, however tactful, could decide without some offense under which banner he should lead his forces. The Cambridge flag flown by Washington in 1776 possessed Federal significance, but because of certain British characteristics, was later considered unsuitable. Then it was that the committee and Mrs. Ross got to work.

It has been claimed that the colors stand for courage, liberty and loyalty, but the definition by the young Congress is found in the description of the United States Seal, the hues of which are those of the flag. White signifies purity and innocence; red, hardiness and valor; and blue, vigilance, perseverance and justice.

There have been three Federal acts and an executive order describing the flag, the original description in 1777, and the others made necessary by changing conditions. Nearly 18 years after the flag's adoption, in order to recognize two new States — Vermont and Kentucky — Congress decreed that two stars and two stripes be added, making 15 in all.

By 1818, five more States had been admitted to the Union. Then, in order to give them representation on the flag, it was enacted that for each new State a star should be added and the number of stripes be reduced to the original thirteen. It was further provided that stars for new States should be added the Fourth of July following their admission. An executive order by President William Howard Taft in 1912 established proportions of the flag and decreed that the stars be placed in six rows of eight stars each. A new arrangement of the stars was made after the admission of Alaska, January 3, 1959, and Hawaii, August 21, 1959.

Congress in 1905 prohibited the registration of a trademark bearing "the flag, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States or any simulation thereof". In 1916 it was enacted that desecration, mutilation or improper use of the flag in the District of Columbia would involve penalties. Later Congress provided

This Interested Me

The North Carolina Council of Churches recently celebrated its 25th anniversary with a special two-day meeting in Greensboro. It was my privilege to be able to share in the first day's sessions.

Many things interested me, for the speakers (including Dr. Frank P. Graham, Dr. Liston Pope, and Dr. Eugene Carson Blake) were, of course, excellent. However, I was particularly interested in the impact which ministers of our denomination had made upon this organization in its early history.

Tribute was paid to Dr. H. Shelton Smith, distinguished member of the Duke Divinity School faculty, who is a graduate of Elon College and originally from Hines Chapel near Greensboro, as the one person most responsible for the organization of the Council 25 years ago. In fact, he was the first president. And the first secretary? Why, that was Dr. Liston Pope, Congregational Christian minister who is dean of Yale Divinity School, originally a Methodist minister hailing from Thomasville, North Carolina. Honor was paid to all who have served as president, and this included Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, long-time minister of our church in Durham and for a period editor of The Christian Sun.

Down through the years Dr. Smith has continued his interest in the N. C. Council, serving on important com-for the dismissal of Federal employees who criticize in an abusive manner the flag of their country.

The flag should always be displayed from a staff or hung flat. It should never be draped over a speaker's desk or automobile; should be flown only from sunrise to sunset or hours designated by proper authorities, and should be hoisted briskly and lowered slowly. In the Army the flag is folded into the shape of a cocked hat and no part is permitted to touch the ground. When suspended in a street, the blue field should be toward the north on an east-west street, and toward the east on a north-south street. Another flag can be hung above it on the same halyard, or hoisting rope and tackle, only in the Navy when the church pennant is flown during divine services on shipboard.

mittees. His address at the anniversary dinner, though, did not dwell on the past (as it might easily have done) but was titled, "Behold, an Open Door," and dealt with the future. Stressing the urbanization of the South, and of North Carolina in particular, he challenged the churches to meet the door opened to them in the field of changing patterns of rural life and in labor-capital relations.

The educational front was the next place he challenged the Church to work, saying they were "spiritually deaf" if they did not meet needs shown up by the fact that $\frac{2}{3}$ of our children are attending unaccredited schools, one out of five North Carolinians are found "functionally illiterate" when tested, and the state ranks 45th in army tests — below Alaska or Hawaii! Higher education meets a crisis in North Carolina which the churches must help to face.

The open door of Christian citizenship he challenged the churches to face, indicating that we have failed to raise up political statesmen, and that the Protestant forces of the South must take the responsibility for the lack of democracy and the presence of reactionary ideas in Congress — for our representatives are chairmen of important committees there. Many of the positions

The Lollipop Maker

By Geoffrey Murray

World Council of Churches'
Staff Writer

If you would know what the churches are doing to meet human suffering overseas, stand with me for a few minutes beside the bedside of Rahim Bux, in the oddly named Paradise Street, Lyari, a refugee district of Karachi, the chief town of West Pakistan.

He is so thin, so huddled and motionless that it is difficult to believe he is alive. In fact, he is very close to death.

He lies on a rickety charpoy — an Eastern bed whose mattress is a criss-cross of string across the wooden frame. His thin grey blanket and soiled native shirt are spotted with blood coughed up from his lungs, rotted by tuberculosis.

There are two more charpoy's in the room, which is not six paces square. It has been cobbled together with scraps of old timber and sacking. The floor is of earth, and a sort of roof has been constructed of palm matting.

When it rains, it soaks through and saturates the dying man.

But today it is blisteringly hot, and outside in the sun Mrs. Bux has placed a tray of yellow lollipops she made this morning. Flies swarm over them. In an hour or two she will hawk them in the streets, and if she finds enough children with dimes to buy them there will be a little food for the family tonight.

To bring this scene home still more clearly to you, let me add a few more details.

The communal tap from which Paradise Street draws its water is a quarter of a mile away. There is no other supply.

Rahim Bux lives in this shack with his wife and their four children, together with his widowed sister and her three children — ten human beings altogether. The sister also has TB and so has Bux's five year old son.

All the children sleep on the ground on a few rags. The bedding has now been "tidied" away in a net slung under the roof. An oil lamp and three electric bulbs hang over Rahim Bux's bed. The bulbs are quite useless. They were retrieved from a rubbish dump, and of course there is no electricity in Paradise Street. The bulbs merely serve as ornaments — the only decoration this appalling home possesses.

Behind the strung-up bedding there is a tiny set of improvised shelves, and among the litter on these, containing the dubious ingredients of Mrs. Bux's sweetmeats, is a bottle and a pillbox. These bear the labels of Church World Service and they contain the medicines that have kept Rahim Bux alive, because he is too weak now to walk the six miles to and from the government clinic for an injection to fight the bacilli which are killing him.

LEBANON

Beirut

Former capital, port and cultural center of Syria, but since 1944 of Lebanon; population about half Christian (of many different sects) and half Muslim.

June

25—Rev. and Mrs. David Ensign went to Beirut in 1955 where he teaches church history at Near East School of Theology. This school is supported by American Board, Presbyterian USA, Armenian Evangelical Union and Arab Evangelical Synod and is only Protestant theological institution in the Middle East with work at the university level. Mrs. Ensign works with Palestinian refugees, teaches in an elementary school, supervises welfare project, and takes care of Friendly Service gifts.

26—Rev. and Mrs. Burton Thurston went from Kansas, where he was president of Manhattan Bible College, to the Near East. He teaches New Testament at the School of Theology and on faculty of America University. She is on library committee of the Seminary and teaches in community church Bible school.

27—Dr. Daoud Yousef, who spoke at Conferences in the Southern Convention last fall, is field supervisor of our Service Committee's program for refugees in Lebanon. This includes 7 elementary and one high school enrolling 2,000 children in Beirut, Tyre, and Sidon. He was born in Jerusalem and was registrar of the District Court of Haifa and Magistrate of the Juvenile Court in Haifa 1943-48, until he became a refugee. He works closely with officials of the UN.

SYRIA

Aleppo

Largest town in Syria (population 400,000) which dates back to 2000 B. C.

28—Miss Inez Clinger taught in Ohio schools for 40 years, the last 15 of which she was principal of an elementary school in Akron. In 1960 she went for a 3-year term of English teaching at the Girls' High School of Aleppo College.

29—Miss Luella Dunning taught 1944-47 in Izmir and Aleppo; then taught in U. S. until retirement; now is back as dean of the girls' division of Aleppo College, where she teaches English and does in-service training of younger teachers. This school has enrollment of 250 girls of Armenian and Arab background.

30—Rev. and Mrs. George F. Miller, Jr. were married in Syria and he is now the acting president of Aleppo College from which his wife graduated. He went out in 1946 for 3-year term, and then decided to make it his career. He is especially interested in archaeology.

July

1—Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Shepard have been at Aleppo College since 1954, where he is teacher of general science and biology, supervisor of the Boys' Division, chairman of the department of natural and physical sciences and member of the Faculty Council. He is fourth generation missionary (Turkey) and she a third-generation missionary of the Cary family (Japan).

Bux and his family fled from Barrackpore, in India, when rioting began in 1947. They made the hut in which they now live, and for a time he was able to work as a laborer in Karachi.

Seven years ago he was struck down by tuberculosis, and now the family's income comes from the pitiful sweets that his wife makes. Yet more children have been born to them in the meantime.

Shacks exactly like Rahim Bux's line both sides of Paradise Street. In almost every one of them, at least one man, woman, or child is a TB victim. They lie on charpoys amid the heat, the noise, the stench, and the flies.

In some huts a cow is stabled. Right now a flock of sheep is being driven along the rough alleyway. A metal-worker is laboring at a crude forge, and a tailor is crouched over an ancient sewing-machine. All these people are refugees.

Streets like this are to be found throughout Karachi.

No one knows exactly how many refugees from India there are in the city. They are swallowed up in Karachi's 3,000,000 population where poverty is endemic and absolute.

The most fortunate are those who have been resettled by the government in the satellite town it has built at Korangi in the flat brown desert about twelve miles away. Here about 40,000 families, approximately 200,000 people altogether, have been placed in one or two roomed quarters built in cement.

It has been established by means of mass X-rays that 8 per cent of Pakistan's 85,000,000 population are infected by active TB. The country's population is increasing by one million every year. Because of this pressure, the poor are inevitably herded together, and medical social workers estimate that every TB sufferer is in contact with five more people.

"Contact" here is used in its literal sense. Some families have only one cup between them and this has to be used by every member — the tubercular and the uninfected.

To meet this tremendous need, Church World Service, the relief arm of the National Council of Churches (USA) working in association with the World Council of Churches, is engaged in an extensive program of feeding, milk distribution, and the provision of medicines to institutions throughout Pakistan.

One of these institutions is the remarkable Captain Foundation, formed by a Parsee, Mr. K.R.S. Captain, and his family.

Mr. Captain is a former seaman who for many years now has been a successful chemical manufacturer in Pakistan.

He uses profits from his business to finance the Foundation he has created. Its purpose is to relieve human suffering and sorrow.

The Captain Foundation has built clinics and dispensaries. It provides amputees with artificial limbs, homes for people whose dwellings have been knocked down by storms, and has paid for blood transfusions, and relieved destitute people like Rahim Bux.

It was Mr. Captain who took me to Paradise Street. He also showed me the warehouse a little way off, where the women and children of Lyari come every day for a free distribution of CWS milk made available by the U. S. government.

The Captain Foundation has four men at work all day making home visits and handing out money, wheat, old clothes, and reconstituted milk channeled through Church World Service.

U. S. Help

The Rev. Boyd S. Lowry, the Presbyterian minister who is director of Church World Service in Pakistan, gave me these figures of the help Church World Service gives the Captain Foundation as part of its program in Pakistan: 200 bags of wheat, each containing 120 lbs.; 100 bags cornmeal, each containing 100 lbs.; 40 containers of dried milk, each weighing 54 lbs.; and more than 8,000 multi-vitamin tablets. These are monthly allocations to this one institution. Many more Pakistani organizations receive similar gifts.

Mr. Lowry also told me that Pakistan is so poor a country that the government TB control service has to work mainly through home treatments. There are only three hospitals in Karachi which provide beds for TB patients. One hospital has 150 beds, and the other two have 50 beds each. Yet the TB Control Clinic has 150,000 registered cases, and its examinations discover 20 new cases every day.

Mr. Captain showed me a letter from the wife of a government clerk who for two years has suffered from a duodenal ulcer that has now developed into cancer. He has not been able to work for two years. The wife's English is faulty, but there is no mistaking her need.

"There is no one else to support my family of six members. I have to run about whole day to arrange on time meal. What to talk of a square meal, my husband who cannot take anything else except milk and blank (bland) diet gets nothing suitable.

"Frequently we have to starve for a day or two. Only yesterday I telephoned you just to request you to break our fast. We had not taken any meals or even tea for two times and I could not see my children crying with hunger.

"We have only one quilt and no sheets or mattress, and on that one quilt we lay all the six on the floor all night through the winter.

"I have now been compelled with shame to ask you in the name of humanity to come to our rescue and save our lives, the live of small and innocent children. In short, save an entire family from starvation."

McCord Hospital

Outstanding among hospitals of the world is McCord Zulu Hospital, deservedly named for the man who founded it in 1909, Dr. James McCord, an American Board missionary. There is no better hospital in Durban, South Africa, a city of 450,000 people.

Founded on a hill overlooking the city and the Indian Ocean harbor where land was cheap, the hospital was beset with lawsuit after lawsuit from the white residents of the area. Dr. McCord persisted in fighting the cases and lost every time until he threatened to appeal the case to the Privy Council in England.

South African courts quickly reversed themselves because they did not want England to see certain irregularities in their trials.

McCord Hospital, highly professional as it is, still under threat of removal by the Government of the Union of South Africa, has what many institutions tend to lose — its powerful spiritual influence.

General Synod Meets July 3-7

New York City, June 1 — Final steps in the formation of the United Church of Christ will be taken in Philadelphia on Independence Day when its constitution will be declared in force.

Voting has been overwhelmingly in favor of the constitution. All but one of the Evangelical and Reformed synods has approved the document. With 65 per cent of the Congregational Christian churches on record, the vote now stands at 92 per cent in favor of the constitution.

Once the constitution is declared in force, delegates to the Synod will elect a president, secretary and treasurer; approve a budget for 1962-63; decide on the location of permanent headquarters; and review all phases of the work of the church.

Overseas operations of the United Church will be the subject of a special presentation Monday evening, July 3. The focus will be on newly-appointed missionaries of the Board for World Ministries, which will combine the activities of the Board of International Missions (Evangelical and Reformed) and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational Christian) and the overseas emergency relief committees of both denominations.

Major addresses will be delivered by Dr. Chandran Devanesen, president of Madras Christian College, India, and the Rev. Dr. Alford Carleton, Boston, Massachusetts, executive vice president of the American Board. The crucial problems of African missions will be presented jointly by the Rev. Charles P. Blakney, a missionary in Rhodesia, and the Rev. Dr. Reginald H. Helfferich, St. Louis, Missouri, executive of the Evangelical and Reformed Commission on World Service.

The Rev. Dr. Douglas Horton, dean emeritus of Harvard Divinity School, will deliver the sermon at the Synodical service of Holy Communion to be held Wednesday night, July 5. The layman's viewpoint on stewardship will be presented in an address by Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy, New York City, associate general secretary of the National Council of Churches, Thursday evening, July 5, under the auspices of the Stewardship Council. The program will also feature two new stewardship hymns, "O God, Thy Hand the Heavens Made" by Frank LeRoy Cross and "God, Our Father and Creator" by Edwin Krusen Ziegler.

The Synod will close Friday, July 7, with installation of officers and a worship service to be led by the Rev. Dr. Ruben H. Huenemann, president of Mission House Theological

Hoskins Takes New Job

New York City, June 8 — The Rev. Dr. Fred Hoskins, 55, New York City, co-president of the United Church of Christ and chief executive of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, has accepted an appointment as professor at Chicago Theological Seminary, beginning in January, 1962.

Dr. Hoskins and Dr. James E. Wagner of Philadelphia, president of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, were elected co-presidents of the United Church of Christ at the time of its formation in 1957.

While leading the union through its formative stages, Dr. Hoskins continued to serve as minister and secretary of the General Council, a post to which he was elected in 1956.

He is a member of the executive committee of the International Congregational Council and of the General Board of the National Council of Churches.

At Chicago Theological Seminary, Dr. Hoskins will be Professor of The Parish Ministry, a newly created chair.

His appointment by the Board of Directors indicates "the central importance of the parish ministry" in a new study program the 106-year-old theological school will begin next year, according to Rev. Dr. Howard Schomer, the seminary's president.

"Dr. Fred Hoskins, coming to our faculty out of a rich background of experience in the pastorate of local churches and with a distinguished record of national leadership in the Congregational Christian Churches, the United Church of Christ and the National Council of Churches, will bring us great strength in our endeavor to relate every branch of theology to the concrete tasks of the pastor and of the organized church Seminary, Plymouth, Wisconsin.

The United Church General Synod will be preceded by simultaneous meetings of the twelfth General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the biennial meeting of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches. From June 29 through July 2 they will conduct necessary business preparatory to the adoption of the constitution of the United Church of Christ.

in the ecumenical age," Dr. Schomer said in announcing the appointment.

Founded by Congregationalists in 1855, Chicago Theological Seminary is open to students of all denominations.

Ashby E. Bladen, Glen Ridge, New Jersey, chairman of the Executive Committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, expressed the regret of the General Council "and indeed of all Congregational Christian ministers and members" that Dr. Hoskins is leaving official denominational service with the expiration of his current term as Minister of the General Council.

He paid tribute to Dr. Hoskins' "unflagging energy and unflinching tact and diplomacy without which the United Church might not have been brought safely through its formative years.

"It is typical of Fred Hoskins that he should hold the baton of leadership firmly during the years of travail and lay it down when success has been achieved," Mr. Bladen concluded.

Before his election to head the General Council, Dr. Hoskins was pastor of the First Congregational Church, Oak Park, Illinois, Plymouth Congregational Christian Church, Des Moines, Iowa, and United Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Dr. and Mrs. Hoskins make their home in Stamford, Connecticut. They have three children: Rev. Robert W. Hoskins, minister of First Congregational Church, Sharon, Connecticut; Rev. Theodore G. Hoskins, associate minister of Saugatuck Congregational Church, Westport, Connecticut, and Mary Ellen, a student at Colby College.

Concerning The Local Church Historian

Note: It is not to be expected that the historian when first appointed will attempt all the duties listed herewith, but will consider which of these suggestions that have come from historians may be appropriate for the particular church.

1. The Church Historian should be elected by a responsible church body, assigned specific duties and be given a modest expense budget. He should seek close cooperation with the pastor and church clerk. In some churches the same person is assigned the duty of clerk and historian.

2. Careful personal preparation is essential. The historian should know the history and publications of the Conference, the national agencies, the Boards, also the News Letter, and United Church Herald and have a denominational history.

3. Old diaries, histories and documents should be collected and deposited for safekeeping with the Congregational Christian Historical Society or one of the denominational depositories. A record should be compiled of persons who have interesting historical documents, books, and heirlooms in their possession.

4. If there is a church library it should be supplied with books on our denominational history. The reading of church history should be encouraged and assistance given to high school and other students who may be writing on an historical topic.

5. Town and State libraries and historical societies should be cultivated and supplied with a copy of the local church history, the State Conference paper, and United Church Herald.

6. A brief chronological record should be kept of interesting events as they occur, and a scrap book or carefully indexed folders should be kept for pictures, newspaper clippings relating to the church, its organization, its members, special programs of interest, published material from the pastor or other members; also photos of significant groups carefully preserved for future celebrations, with names and dates properly entered.

7. A file with copies of (1) circular letters to members, letters from absent members; (2) reminiscences by older members concerning people and events of the past; (3) State Conference paper and programs of special interest. A special file of Sunday church bulletins should be kept.

8. The historian should maintain close relationship with the national Congregational Christian Historical Society, create interest in it that the church maintain membership in the Society, and nominate interested individuals for membership. Secure copies of the News Letter for the literature table.

9. The historian should attend Association, Conference and other church meetings when possible, and should send items of interest to the State Conference paper and local papers. Preserve all such published notices.

10. For Forefathers' Day and other anniversaries adequate time should be taken for careful preparation and literature secured. While the pastor or a special committee will usually be in charge of such celebrations, the historian should always be ready to render such service as may be desired.

11. The report. A brief report may be made at an annual meeting if and when special events occur, as anniversaries, new buildings, new organizations formed, changes of pastorates, ordinations, and participation in community and denominational affairs.

A MEDITATION

By John G. Truitt, D.D.

THE LORD'S PROMISE

The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. 2 Peter 3:9.

There is a good place to come to, repentance. It needs a bit of good humble thinking on one's part, ready to see one's sins and errors, and to turn away from them, with godly sorrow, and true humility. That is a nice private road straight to the heart of him who died for our sins, that no one should perish — stubbornly, unrepentantly, self-wilfully, perish.

Says Simon Peter, "The Lord . . . is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish." I guess Simon Peter was not so much better than many of us in the beginning. He was sort of like most of us. But at least he had a big heart and wanted what was good and right for one and all. And he wanted to see the Messiah. He did not know all he wanted, was wrong about some of it, for instance, the restoring of a political kingdom which should be big enough to cause the kingdoms of the earth to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks. Yes, he wanted the prophecies to come true, so that the knowledge of the Lord would cover the earth as the waters cover the seas. The Old Testament gave him plenty to look forward to.

But here, instead, came Jesus, Jesus of Nazareth!

There was something about him! There was something "out of this world" about him — something elemental, right, lovely, something that called forth the very best in him, and caused Simon to follow him. A few of his friends — fellow-workers, and others, did, too. By the time of this epistle it was a brave, divine, story. Even Paul had come into the picture — "our beloved brother Paul," says Simon — what a beautiful tribute for Peter to make when he calls the epistles of Paul "scriptures" (Pet. 3:16)! Now he is telling one and sundry how the Lord desires that none perish, but that all should come to repentance, "that the new heaven and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" may come. Are we walking the road of humble repentance, and devout faith?

Youth Faces The Future

We the youth of the United Church of Christ affirm that God has made himself known to us in Jesus Christ and has called us into his Church. Believing that he seeks us in holy love, we would respond by joining together in covenant with him.

He gathers us into a loving fellowship in which we encounter one another as unique persons who are created in his image. We seek to express the spirit of this fellowship in all our relationships.

Our vocation is to witness to the message and mission of the church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ, and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace. Our hope is in God who in Jesus Christ offers redemption to all men and gives promise to his kingdom of love.

History Of The Pilgrim Fellowship

Youth Work Before Pilgrim Fellowship

Young people have always felt a need to come together, to share their common experiences and ideas, to express their doubts and concerns in an atmosphere where they are appreciated. In the Williston Congregational Church of Portland, Maine, on February 2, 1881, the first church related youth organization, the Christian Endeavor Society, had its birth. Soon, because of its appeal to young people in dealing with "their concerns," many Christian Endeavor Societies came into being in both Congregational churches and churches of other denominations in America and other lands.

Inter-church fellowship flourished through Christian Endeavor Unions and through the Young People's Councils sponsored by Sunday School workers. Youth temperance clubs and missionary societies were now appearing. Although all types of youth organizations were founded in Congregational and Christian Churches, no denominational program developed nationally.

Experimentally, Congregational young people's summer conferences began about 1920.
