He became a successful businessman and established a substantial trade in Pittsburgh, besides holding honorary connections with a number of banks and public institutions. At the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1875 he was appointed to serve as one of nine commissioners from the Methodist Church (the name of the church then composed of the northern and western conferences of the M. P. Church which had split in 1858 over the slavery issue), to meet with nine commissioners from the M. P. Church to devise plans for a reunion of the conferences. This union was created at a historic uniting Conference of 1877. John Jones Gillespie immensely helped the BOOK CONCERN of the Board of Publications through his generosity and business foresight.

GILLIES, JOHN (1712-1796), Church of Scotland minister at Glasgow University Kirk, was born near Brechin in 1712. He was friend and correspondent of GEORGE WHITEFIELD, whose biography, Memoirs of Whitefield, he published in 1772. Although a Calvinist, Gillies opened his pulpit to JOHN WESLEY in 1753, and thus began a life-long friendship. He gave general guidance to the Methodist society in Glasgow. In 1772 Wesley attended a sacramental service at Gillies' church. Both Wesley and Gillies were criticized when they introduced hymn singing in the kirk in 1753. Gillies' best known book was Historical Collections relating to remarkable periods of the success of the Gospel (2 vols., Glasgow, 1754), a study in revivals. He died March 29, 1796.

GILRUTH, JAMES (1793-1873), American minister, was born in WEST VIRGINIA, Jan. 29, 1793, the son of Scottish immigrants. Brought up on the OHIO frontier, he served in the War of 1812, joined the OHIO CONFERENCE on trial in 1819, and was appointed junior preacher on the Duck Creek Circuit. For years he served on frontier circuits. He was known for his physical strength and his ability to keep order at CAMP MEETINGS. He never missed an appointment for fourteen years.

Gilruth served a notable term as PRESIDING ELDER of the frontier Detroit District, 1832-36. The district membership increased twenty-eight percent in one year. Following the example of JOHN WESLEY, he faithfully kept a journal, which reveals his zeal, labors, hardships, and constant endeavor to read and educate himself. As presiding elder he led in the movement to establish a Methodist seminary in Michigan (later ALBION COLLEGE) and was instrumental in obtaining the charter on March 23, 1835.

He was outspoken in his anti-slavery sentiments at this period, when this stand was unpopular in the old northwest. He opposed rented pews. He became obsessed with the idea of a Christian socialist community and located in 1836 to establish his community; however, he became disillusioned and returned the following year to the ministry in the Ohio Conference.

In 1850 he moved to IOWA, and served several appointments in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE until his retirement in 1861. He died near Davenport, Iowa, June 2, 1873. He was survived by his wife and seven children; a son, James H. Gilruth, served in the Upper Iowa Conference for some years, and two of his daughters married ministers.

GITTO, WILLIAM (1829-1916), New Zealand minister, was born in Durham, England. Coming to New Zealand as a young boy, he was brought up under the influence of the early missionaries in the Hokianga area, and he soon became a master of Maori thought, custom, and language. The first thirty-five years of his ministry were spent in the service of the Maori people of the Kaipara River. He even continued to supervise work among them when additional duties caused him to reside in AUCKLAND.

Ablly assisted by his wife, second daughter of JOHN HOBBS, William Gitto served the Maori people with exemplary devotion, and became a great force for righteousness among them. On leaving the Kaipara district, he served for several years in the Waikato and King Country. At the request of the Conference he reopened the Waipa Mission while residing at Te Awamutu.

In 1894, he was appointed general superintendent of Maori Missions in the Auckland Province, a position he held until 1913, when failing health compelled retirement. He died in Auckland on May 26, 1916.

GLENDALE, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A., was settled in 1886 and incorporated in 1906. S. B. Woolpert, a member of the Southern California Conference (ME), was appointed to Glendale in the fall of 1889. The next year he reported forty members, a church valued at $1,000, and a parsonage worth the same amount. Glendale appeared in the appointments through 1898, and in that year it had 102 members. From 1899 to 1905 inclusive there is no reference to Glendale in the conference minutes. Then in 1906 the record shows that the Glendale church, later called First Church, had 161 members and a building valued at $9,000. In 1913 when First Church had 375 members, a second congregation was started. A third church was established in 1919, a fourth in 1929, and a fifth in 1939. The denomination came to unification in 1939 with about 3,700 members in Glendale.

The PACIFIC CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South appointed D. M. Barr to Glendale in 1922. The next year he reported a congregation of ninety-nine members. The church came to unification with 289 members.

In 1969 The United Methodist Church had five churches in Glendale with 5,093 members and property valued at $3,302,051. They reported a total of $304,115 raised for all purposes during the year.

FIRST Church, the largest Methodist church in CALIFORNIA, dates its beginning in 1903, although the record shows that there was a Methodist congregation in Glendale for about ten years prior to 1900. On Oct. 11, 1903, some thirty Methodists gathered in the Glendale Odd-fellows Hall and agreed to organize First Methodist Church and erect a building. A church valued at $9,000 was dedicated in 1906. Charles R. Norton served as the first pastor. A new sanctuary valued at $50,000 was dedicated in 1917. In 1929 a five-story education building costing $265,000 was completed. Its tall tower bears a lighted cross which at night can be seen throughout the city. A new 1,300-seat sanctuary in the shape of a cross was completed in 1961 at a cost of $1,300,000. The massive pulpit shaped like a ship plowing into the future, suggests the centrality of preaching. The buildings and adjoining facilities occupy a full city block. The church has four ministers and a paid staff of twenty-six persons.

One pastor of First Church, EVERETT W. PALMER (1951-60), was elected bishop (1960).

In 1969 First Church reported 3,223 members, property valued at $2,003,135 and $209,636 raised for all purposes.

GLENDINNING, WILLIAM (dates uncertain), an American pioneer preacher who became bitterly opposed to Bishop ASBURY and joined in the anti-episcopal moves of JAMES O'KELLY. The minutes show that William Glendinning was admitted to the ministry in 1776 and traveled until 1786, when his name is listed among those who "desist from traveling." An editorial note in The Journal and Letters of Francis Asbury, Vol. III, p. 105, says, "William Glendinning was a very odd person. He had preached in the traveling connection for about ten years but had to give up because of mental aberrations." When he did try to come back, Asbury wrote him a letter, which seems to have been written from the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE meeting at Lanes Chapel, Sussex County, Va., on Dec. 23, 1791. Asbury wrote, "I write in the presence of, and by the consent of Conference, to inform you that we do not look on you as being in connection with or under any direction from us. We cannot therefore make appointments for you, in our societies, or advise our people to hear you, knowing you are not under any legate authority but your own; and should you obtain countenance and authority from another denomination, it will not be ours" (pp. 105-6).

About the same time Asbury wrote to EDWARD DROM-COOLE, ". . . As to Glendinning, I believe Satan is in him and will never come out. I expect he would come too and act like himself, go where he pleased, and be subject to no authority."

Glendinning's insubordination, if it was that, or mental aberration, or whatever it might have been, put him in line with the opposition of James O'Kelly to Asbury's powerful superintendency, and he belongs with those who objected to the highly centralized organization of the early Methodist Episcopal Church.

GLEN ELLYN, ILLINOIS, U.S.A. First Church. Winslow Churchill, a Methodist layman, settled at what is now Glen Ellyn in 1834. It was then known as Babcock's Grove, and it was called by six other names before it became Glen Ellyn. In 1837 Churchill held the first religious service and organized the first Sunday school in the community. Also, he led in building the first meetinghouse in 1839. Jude Gary, who apparently was a supply preacher, served as the first pastor. Gary was the uncle of Elbert H. Gary, the steel magnate. When the railroad came in 1849-50, the depot was built some distance down the hill, and gradually the business houses and homes gravitated in that direction, leaving the Methodist meetinghouse somewhat isolated. The Methodists became disorganized, and the Baptists took over the meetinghouse. On Dec. 9, 1866 the Methodists organized a Sunday school, but they had no building.

The influence of the evangelists Dwight L. Moody and Ira D. SANKEY was felt in Glen Ellyn, and on Sept. 16, 1891 the First Methodist Church was organized with nine members at the home of Samuel Grannis. William E. Catlin, a lay preacher, served as the first pastor. The congregation worshiped in eight different places in as many years, and in 1899 it moved back into the meetinghouse built in 1839. The membership grew slowly, never rising above twenty-five in the first ten years. During that time the church was served by supply preachers. Finally in 1903 J. C. Anderson, a member of the conference, was appointed as the first full time pastor. In 1911 the membership passed the 100 mark for the first time. Thereafter progress was steady. In 1913 a brick church valued at $18,000 was built. An education unit costing about $155,000 was erected in 1929. The church then had some 675 members. Thirty years later when the membership numbered nearly 1,500, the present sanctuary costing around $800,000 was constructed. In 1970 First Church reported 1,844 members, property valued at $1,232,500, and $129,245 raised for all purposes.

GLENN, EDGAR MASSILON (1858-1946), American minister, was born in Glennville, Barbour Co., Ala., Jan. 4, 1858. At the age of thirteen he was converted and joined the Methodist Church. In December 1879, he was admitted on trial by the ALABAMA CONFERENCE, meeting in Tuskegee with Bishop ROBERT PAINE, presiding. In 1881, in Selma, he was ordained DEACON by Bishop GEORGE F. PIERCE, and admitted into full connection in the Alabama Conference. In 1883, he was ordained ELDER in Eufaula. He married Mamie Imogene Arrington of Forkland, Ala. on Dec. 3, 1884, and they had four children.

At the conference of 1886 he was located at his own request, but in 1888 he was readmitted by the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE, in which he served for many years. He was elected president of Birmingham College, serving 1898-1902. While president of the college, he finished the work for his degree and had the unique experience of signing his own diploma. He served as president of ATHENS COLLEGE 1903-04. In 1909-12 he was presiding elder of the Decatur District. In the difficult days of establishing, building, and uniting the Methodist colleges in Alabama, Glenn's wisdom, wit, and good judgment were invaluable to Methodism in that state. His years of retirement were spent in his home near Warrior, Ala., where he died Nov. 29, 1946.

LAYONA GLENN

GLENN, LAYONA (1866-1972), American missionary to BRAZIL, was born near Conyers, Ga., on March 8, 1866. Her grandfather, Joshua N. Glenn, was the first Methodist missionary in St. Augustine, Fla., after Spanish occupancy ended. Her elementary education was received in the home. Anxious to be a missionary, she enrolled at the newly opened Scarritt Bible and Training School, then in Kansas City, Mo., and though not the first to enroll, she was the only one of seven to graduate in 1894 from its Bible department.

Recommended by the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions and commissioned by Mrs. W. D. Wightman (for bishops would not commission women in those days), Miss Glenn sailed for Brazil in August 1894, going with MARTHA WATTS, who was the first woman missionary sent to Brazil by that Board.

Miss Glenn served in Brazil in a variety of capacities—as teacher and principal of several Methodist schools; as social worker and principal of the day and night schools connected with Instituto Central do Povo, RIO DE JANEIRO; as member of the committee that worked out an agreement between the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South on the demarcation of their boundaries in South America; as founder and organizer in 1916 of the first conference organization of Methodist women in Brazil; and as founder and first director of the Instituto ANNA GONZAGA for children in Inhoaiba, near Rio de Janeiro.

She was for years principal of the Colegio Americano Fluminense in Rio de Janeiro, which school became a precursor of the present COLEGIO BENNETT, nationally known and respected.

After twenty-five years in Brazil, Miss Glenn went to the United States to care for her aged parents. She returned to Brazil in 1923, continuing in active service until 1934. During this period were two outstanding achievements. First, as principal of the day school at the Peoples' Institute in Rio, where conditions had become chaotic, she was successful in restoring order and discipline.

Her second major achievement was founding the Instituto Anna Gonzaga. For years Miss Glenn had dreamed of an institution that would be both a home and an industrial training center for orphaned and abandoned children. She accomplished this by winning the interest and financial support of a wealthy Brazilian lady, Anna Gonzaga, who gave the church about 1,200 acres of valuable land in what was then the Federal District. Today this institution has become Brazilian Methodism's largest and best-known home for children.

In 1934, Miss Glenn was officially retired. She returned to her home in Conyers, Ga., to an active life of speaking in the community, teaching at church mission schools, and writing weekly columns for three county newspapers in Georgia. In 1957, at the age of ninety, she was recommended to President Kubitschek of Brazil to receive the coveted award, the Order of the Southern Cross. In 1964, SCARRITT COLLEGE celebrated its seventieth anniversary, and Miss Glenn was invited as its honored guest.

At the age of ninety-nine she took up residence at Wesley Woods Towers in ATLANTA, Ga. Following her 100th birthday, Miss Glenn was honored both in the United States and in Brazil. Accompanied by her seventy-eight-year-old brother, Mark Twain Glenn, and by Scott Houston, superintendent of Wesley Woods, she flew to Washington, where she was received by President Lyndon B. Johnson, interviewed for national radio and television broadcasts, and given a formal reception by the Brazilian ambassador. She then flew by jet to Brazil, where she was greeted enthusiastically by Methodists everywhere, received by President Castelo-Branc, recognized officially by congress in Brasilia, and received at the Porto Alegre airport, Rio Grande do Sul, by a state military band—the first time the band had ever played for the reception of a woman. Through her visit, Brazilian Methodism had the greatest publicity in its hundred years.

In 1969 Fleming H. Revell Company published a 40,000-word autobiography of Miss Glenn, I Remember, I Remember, in the writing of which she was assisted by Charlotte Hale Smith of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Miss Glenn assigned royalties from the sale of this life story to the Wesley Homes Trust Fund, for the expressed purpose of helping persons who might not otherwise be able to benefit from the facilities of the Wesley Homes. She died in Atlanta on March 20, 1972.

GLENORCHY, WILLIELMA LADY (1741-1786), was a Scottish patroness of Calvinistic Methodism. Influenced by the family of ROWLAND HILL, she became deeply religious and opened a number of proprietary chapels. At one of these, in Dundee, services were conducted by Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Methodists. After WESLEY's first visit to this chapel, in 1770, she sought his help in the appointment of a master for her charity school. Although the man appointed, on Wesley's advice, was a Calvinist, Lady Glenorchy presently closed her pulpit to Wesley's Arminian preachers. She finally bequeathed the management of her chapels in England and Scotland to the Arminian, Lady Maxwell, a further instance of her inconsistency.

GLENS FALLS, NEW YORK, U.S.A. A city in upstate eastern NEW YORK, incorporated as a village in 1839. Situated on the Hudson River and Adirondack Northway (interstate) connecting New York City and MONTREAL, Canada, this tree-shaded city with a 1970 population of 16,955 people, is the main commercial and distribution center between Albany and Plattsburgh. The early settlement predates the Revolution, and as it was but a few miles from the upper end of Lake George, it became a strategic bastion during the struggle of the French and Indian War as well as the later war for independence.

The city occupies the northern side of the Hudson River as it bends eastward and then south. The rapids at this point include the rocky cavern known as Cooper's Cave, made famous in Fenimore Cooper's Leatherstocking Tales.

Paper making, research in the same, industrial colors and chemicals, the Glens Falls Insurance Company, and numerous smaller industries constitute the city's economy today.

The Methodist Church there "was formed in 1824 under the leadership of John Lovejoy in the dwelling known as the General Pitt place situated between the canal and the river in the rear of the old stone store." The exact location of this site would be difficult to determine today. "In 1829 their first church edifice was erected. It was a small stone building on Church Street facing Berry Street. During these early days the preaching was done by itinerant ministers." One of these was Russell M. Little, later to become a state senator and president of the Glens Falls Insurance Company. In 1847-48 a large new building was erected on the northwest corner of Warren and Church Streets. This brick building "was destroyed by fire in 1864 and was re-built the next year on the same site. In 1869 the members, feeling a responsibility for the folk 'across the river' established a mission and erected a brick chapel in South Glens Falls. This church became the South Glens Falls Methodist Church. In 1873 the work of the church had prospered so that it was necessary to put on an addition to the Warren Street building . . . at a cost of $21,000. On the first Sunday in the new building the entire debt for the remodeling was wiped out with a special subscription that produced a surplus! In 1904 the 1,100 members decided to re-locate in order to obtain more adequate facilities. The Warren Street property was sold to the Roman Catholics and the present structure was erected (54 Bay Street). At that time the congregation adopted the name 'Christ Church Methodist Episcopal.' The word 'Episcopal' was dropped in 1939 when the three great branches of Methodism in America united to form 'The Methodist Church.' The cornerstone for the structure was laid in 1905 and the building first used in October of 1906 with Bishop EDWARD G. ANDREWS dedicating the new sanctuary in 1907. In 1953 . . . the church numbering about 1900 members . . . made plans for renovation and expansion. On the 50th anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone for the main sanctuary, Bishop FREDERICK B. NEWELL officiated at the corner-stone laying ceremonies for the new building . . . which was ready for use in September of 1955."

The church membership in 1970 was reported at 1,664, with a staff consisting of the senior pastor, associate pastor, director of Christian education, director of music, three office secretaries and two sextons.

In 1965 there was a need for a new Methodist congregation recognized by the leadership of the TROY ANNUAL CONFERENCE and individuals resident in the Town of Queensbury, a rapidly developing suburb at the north end of the city. Subsequently the Annual Conference purchased a site on Aviation Road adjacent to the Adirondack Northway, consisting of seven acres of land for the location of the newly formed Queensbury Community Methodist Church. The first Sunday worship of the congregation was held in the JeRay Restaurant on Route 9 on Sept. 19, 1965, with seventy-five persons in attendance. The church was officially constituted at a Quarterly Conference at that site on Dec. 19, 1965 with eighty-nine charter members, District Superintendent Milton M. Lavery, presiding.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new church building were held on Sunday, Dec. 17, 1967. Construction on the first all-purpose unit began the next day and the first service in the new church was held Easter Sunday, April 14, 1968. The new church was consecrated by Bishop LLOYD C. WICKE on Sunday, May 19, 1968.

GLIDE, LIZZIE H. (1852-1941), outstanding American Christian philanthropist, was born near Haughton, La., on Oct. 1, 1852. She was the daughter of a medical doctor, Thornton A. Snyder, and the third in a family of ten children.

In 1868 she graduated from Greenwood Seminary, Lebanon, Tenn., where she excelled in mathematics. In 1869 the Snyder family became established in SACRAMENTO, and united with the M. E. Church, South. It was within this Christian fellowship that Lizzie Snyder met Joseph Glide, an English immigrant. They were married Dec. 7, 1871, and there was born into the family five children.

Joseph Glide was a successful breeder of livestock, and became one of the most wealthy stockmen in CALIFORNIA. The family resided in a beautiful mansion in Sacramento and occupied an honored place in the life of the community.

Through the influence of her parents, Lizzie was converted at an early age. She had been an active member of the Methodist Church for twenty years when she came into an epochal spiritual experience of complete consecration, which she interpreted as sanctification. Within a short time she was instrumental in establishing a mission in Sacramento. When Mr. Glide died in 1906, she became manager of his large fortune, and through wise business transactions was able to build several Christian institutions. The Mary Elizabeth Inn, SAN FRANCISCO, furnished a haven to hundreds of working young women in the city. Epworth Hall near the campus of the University of California was erected as a Christian home for university girls. Glide Hall on the campus of ASBURY COL-LEGE, Wilmore, Ky., was built. The Glide Memorial Church was the result of her dream of many years for an evangelistic center in the heart of downtown San Francisco. A radio station in LOS ANGELES was purchased for Trinity Methodist Church, of which R. P. SHULER was the pastor. In addition, numerous churches throughout California and many mission fields abroad benefited from her generous gifts.

Mrs. Glide established the Glide Foundation which owns Californian Hotel and owns and operates the Glide Apartment Hotel, both of San Francisco. The Foundation carries on extensive religious activities in evangelism and Christian education in San Francisco and throughout the bounds of the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church.

One of her important benefactions was the assistance of Christian young men and women through college and seminary. Many of these are now ministers and missionaries in several countries.

Mrs. Glide died in her 89th year, and is buried in the family plot in the East Lawn Cemetery, Sacramento.

GLIDE FOUNDATION, Methodist-related foundation, incorporated in CALIFORNIA, U.S.A., was established by Mrs. LIZZIE GLIDE in 1929. The trust requires that there be an evangelistic center at the corner of Taylor and Ellis Streets in SAN FRANCISCO, for the training of Christian workers, and service to residents in the city's depressed area. It is best known for its Glide Urban Center and related Glide Memorial Methodist Church. The Foundation also controls the Epworth and Wesley trusts for work with students at the University of California. Assets of the fund in 1968 were $3,295,316.

GLOSSARY OF METHODIST TERMS. There appeared in the Book of Discipline of The Methodist Church, first in 1948 and then in subsequent editions, a brief listing and definition of common terms in use among Methodists under the heading "Definitions of Terms." The name of this section in 1960 was changed to Glossary, and the material it embraces was usually put at the end of the Appendix section of the Discipline just before the index. It was not continued in the 1968 Discipline of The United Methodist Church.

An explanatory note introducing this material stated: "This glossary, like the Index, is not part of the law of the church, but rather a guide to that law, arranged in alphabetical order for the convenience of readers. So far as possible the definitions are based on the Constitution and legislation and use the Disciplinary language. Where there is no specific legislation, they are based on historical usage and accepted practice. For terms not defined here, see the Index, where paragraphs containing definitions or definitive information are indicated by boldface type." (Discipline, 1960.)

Most of the items in this Glossary are described and explained in a more complete way under their own names in this Encyclopedia. The Glossary proved useful, and while it disclaimed being actual law, yet since its material stood unchallenged in this official publication of

The Methodist Church for a score of years, its correctness, as well as its formal interpretative status in the Church, was usually taken as approximating Methodist law. The definitions were not at all complete, but sufficient for practical use, and probably may be cited as references with no great fear of serious contradiction.

GLOSSBRENNER, JACOB JOHN (1812-1887), American bishop of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, was born July 24, 1812, in Hagerstown, Md., to Peter and Christiana (Shane, Schon) Glossbrenner. Since his parents were members of the Lutheran Church, both his early religious training and formal education took place under the auspices of that denomination. After a two-year apprenticeship as a silversmith and watchmaker, he took up his trade with a devout Methodist layman, John Reynolds, who took a keen interest in his spiritual welfare. However, it was under the ministry of William R. Rhinehart, a young minister of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, that he was converted at the age of seventeen.

He began his career as a youth leader, but was soon granted an exhorter's license. By the time he was nineteen, he was licensed to preach. He performed his duties so conscientiously that a group of older Christians bought him a horse, saddle, bridle, and saddlebags so that he could become an itinerant preacher. He was ordained by the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1833; and one year later he was named presiding elder.

When the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1845, in an unprecedented move, elected a completely new slate of bishops, Jacob John Glossbrenner was among those chosen. He served in the office until 1885.

Bishop Glossbrenner was a forceful preacher, an astute administrator, and a powerful leader in the controversies of the day. He opposed slavery and secret societies and argued for a stronger position on the doctrine of depravity. He was an advocate of a prescribed course of study for young ministers and of a meaningful missionary program; and played a major role in the adoption of these functions by the General Conference of 1853, in which he reached the highwater mark of his career.

His most difficult years were those of the American Civil War, when he was restricted in his movement to the southern area of VIRGINIA. At the outbreak of the war, he had decided that in spite of his anti-slavery sentiments he would remain with his flock. During this period and other crucial years of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, no one gave more devoted leadership than he. He died Jan. 7, 1887, less than two years after his retirement as bishop. He was buried at Churchville, Va.

GLOUCESTER POINT, NEW JERSEY, U.S.A., is on the Delaware River in Gloucester City, Camden Co., N. J. It was the landing place on Oct. 21, 1769, of JOSEPH PILMORE and RICHARD BOARDMAN, the first Methodist preachers JOHN WESLEY and the Conference in England sent to America. Their appointment was "America."

Bishop ASBURY preached at Gloucester Point on at least five occasions.

Gloucester Point was named in 1677 by the early English settlers. Betsy Ross, America's Revolutionary War heroine, was married here in "Hugg's Tavern," built about 1720 by Joseph Hugg. At one time during the Revolution, Lord Cornwallis and some of his British officers occupied Hugg's Tavern.

Today, the remains of the British ship "Augusta" can be seen in the waters just off the Point. This sixty-four gun frigate was sunk on Oct. 23, 1777.

MARKER AT GLOUCESTER POINT

In 1869, Methodists of Gloucester held a Centennial Celebration commemorating Pilmore and Boardman's arrival at the Point. Then on Oct. 25, 1969, Methodists of the New Jersey area, in conjunction with the annual meeting of the Northeastern Jurisdictional Commission on Archives and History, held a two-day celebration commemorating the Bicentennial of Pilmore and Boardman's arrival. Highlight of the celebration was the erection of a monument at Gloucester Point from funds raised by the laymen of the New Jersey area. The monument reads:

GOBBEL, LUTHER LAFAYETTE (1895-), American educator and long time college president, was born on Aug. 26, 1895, in Rowan County, N. C., the son of John Henry and Sarah Ellen (Simerson) Gobbel. His wife was Marcia Rachel Russell, whom he married on April 4, 1929, and they had two children. He was educated at Trinity College (now DUKE), receiving the A.B. degree in 1918, the A.M. in 1927; and at Yale University, the Ph.D. in 1934. For a time he went into business, but became assistant to the treasurer of Trinity College, 1915-18. Then he became associate editor of the Lexington Dispatch (North Carolina) and managing editor of a NORTH CAROLINA paper. For a time he was a reporter on the GREENSBORO Daily News. In the first World War, he served as a member of the United States Army. He was elected as a lay delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1938 (MES); of 1940 and '44 (TMC), of the Uniting Conference in 1939, the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of 1940 and '44. He served upon the Commission on Ritual and Orders of Worship (TMC), 1940-48; on the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in America, 1944-48; was vice-president of the Educational Council of the College Section of the MECS, 1937-38—its president, 1938-39. Dr. Gobbel was president of GREENSBORO COLLEGE in Greensboro, N. C., 1935-52; then of LAMBUTH COLLEGE, Jackson, Tenn., 1952-62. After retirement he was called to become interim president of ATHENS COLLEGE, Athens, Ala. in 1969. He has written Church-State Relationships in Education in North Carolina Since 1776, 1938.

GOBIN, HILLARY ASBURY (1842-1923), American preacher and educator, the son of Calvin and Jane E. (Gray) Gobin, was born March 25, 1842, in Terre Haute, Ind. He was an industrious student at Indiana Asbury University, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, graduating in 1870. He was admitted into the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1869. As a pastor he served two large churches. In 1880 he became a professor at Indiana Asbury. He was president of BAKER UNIVERSITY, Baldwin, Kan., three years. He was dean of DEPAUW'S School of Theology from 1890 to 1896, and served as president of this university from 1896 to 1903. He was vice-president and one of its outstanding professors from 1903 to 1923. He was elected to four GENERAL CONFERENCES. He was affectionately known as "the Grand Old Man of DePauw." GREENCASTLE'S Gobin Memorial Church bears his name. He married Florence A. Orrill, Nov. 3, 1871. She died Dec. 16, 1891. In 1896 he married Clara L. Beale. She and a daughter survived him. He died March 18, 1923.

GODBEY, ALLEN HOWARD (1864-1948), American educator and minister, was born in Pettis County, Mo., Nov. 21, 1864. He graduated from Morrisville (Missouri) College in 1883, and was a fellow in Semitics at the University of Chicago, 1902-05, winning the Ph.D. degree in that field from that institution in 1905. He was married to Emma L. Moreland, June 16, 1892. Godbey was admitted to the SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, South in 1895, and served as a pastor for the next four years. Later he was transferred to the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE and served eight years as a pastor in St. Louis. However, he was best known for his proficiency in Semitics and his work as an educator. He taught mathematics, Latin, and Greek at Morrisville College, and Latin and English literature at St. Charles (Missouri) College. He served as principal of the academy at CENTRAL COLLEGE, 1899-02, and as president of Morrisville College, 1906-09. When the DUKE DIVINITY SCHOOL was established in 1926, Godbey filled the chair of professor of Old Testament until his retirement in 1932. He was a member of the American Oriental Society, the Society of Biblical Literature, and a number of other learned societies which promote biblical and archeological research. He was the author of: Code of Hammurabi (with R. F. Harper), The Lost Tribes, A Myth, New Light on the Old Testament, and several other books. Notwithstanding his brilliance, Godbey was somewhat eccentric; at times he had difficulty in working with associates and superiors. During the 1948 GENERAL CONFERENCE in BOSTON, which Godbey attended, he was hit by a truck while crossing the street and died a few hours later.

ALBEA GODBOLD

GODBEY, JOHN EMORY (1839-1932), American Methodist preacher, teacher, editor and author, was born Aug. 11, 1839 in Casey County, Ky. He was educated in private schools. His college training was interrupted by the Civil War when St. Charles College, St. Charles, Mo., was seized by Union troops. Emory College in GEORGIA conferred upon him the D.D. degree in 1885. Godbey married Mary S. Holloway, Nov. 2, 1865, who died in 1910. He married Martha Virginia Dunnivant in 1911.

While stationed in Washington, Mo., Godbey opened a private high school (1867), his first educational venture. After two years as PRESIDING ELDER, he was appointed to First M. E. Church, South, in ST. LOUIS; and, afterward to Cook Avenue Church, for the building and relocation of which he raised $75,000.

He was instrumental in establishing The Southwestern Methodist (1882) in St. Louis and was elected editor. He served in this post until it was combined with The St. Louis Christian Advocate in 1890. He was appointed to the presiding eldership of the Kansas City District and served until 1894, when he was elected editor of The Arkansas Methodist, LITTLE ROCK, where he served until 1905. He was sometime professor of philosophy in HENDRIX COLLEGE, Conway, Ark., while editing The Arkansas Methodist. He represented the SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE (1894), the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE (1902 and 1906), and the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE (1910 and 1914), in the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES). He returned to the St. Louis Conference in 1910, which he had first joined in 1859, and was stationed in Kirkwood.

Prior to his retirement in 1919, Godbey had written and published: The Methodist Church Member's Manual; Light In Darkness, Or Missions and Missionary Heroes; Foundations Of Faith, a text book often used in some colleges and in leadership training schools. He was better known for his Lights and Shadows Of Seventy Years (1912), an autobiography which told much about others, but not very much about himself; and for Pioneers Of Methodism In Missouri (1930). He died Feb. 29, 1932.

GODBOLD, ALBEA (1895-), American minister, church official, and historian, was born July 25, 1895, in Summit, Miss., the son of Gabriel C. and Ella (Felder) Godbold. He was a student at George Washington University (District of Columbia), 1914-17 and 1919-20, and at the University of Grenoble (France) in 1919. He received the B.A. degree from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, 1921; the B.D. in 1923; an M.A. from Yale in 1926, and the Ph.D. from DUKE in 1939. CENTRAL METHODIST COLLEGE in MISSOURI awarded him the D.D. degree in 1961.

He married Anna Lucile Ayers on Feb. 2, 1924, and their children are Adah Lucile (Mrs. Harvey W. Phelps), Channing W., Edmund O., and Margaret E. (Mrs. Conway B. Briscoe, Jr.). For a time Dr. Godbold served with the Department of the Interior in Washington and then with the Department of Labor in the same city from 1916-17 and 1919-20. He served as pastor of the Humphrey Street Congregational Church, New Haven, Conn., 1924-26, but joined the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South in 1926. He was pastor of Brevard Street Church, CHARLOTTE, N. C., 1926-28; College Place Church, GREENSBORO, N. C., 1928-31; Chapel Hill, N. C., 1931-34; First Church, Conway, Ark., 1934-36; First Church, El Dorado, Ark., 1936-41; St. John's Church, MEMPHIS, Tenn., 1941-42; and St. John's Church, St. Louis, Mo., 1942-58. He was the superintendent of the St. Louis District, ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE, 1958-61, and of the St. Louis North District, MISSOURI EAST CONFERENCE, 1961-63. In 1963 he became the executive secretary of the Association of Methodist Historical Societies and editor of Methodist History (magazine), based at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.

Dr. Godbold drafted the plan for the church-wide commemoration of the BICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM in 1966, directed the celebration, and served as editor of Forever Beginning 1766-1966, the volume of historical papers presented during the three-day observance at BALTIMORE, Md.

He was a member of the General Board of Education of The Methodist Church, 1956-64; a delegate to the South Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, 1952, '56, '60; to the GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1956 and '60. In 1952 he was elected president of the South Central Jurisdictional Historical Association, in which position he served until 1960. He was an official visitor to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in 1954; a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, 1966; a member of the Division of Christian Education of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1958-64; a trustee of Southern Methodist University, 1946-68; ST. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, Kansas City, Mo., 1957-63; and of MCKENDREE COLLEGE, Lebanon, Ill., 1959-67. He served in the U. S. Army in 1917-19, in the American Expeditionary Forces in France. He is the author of The Church College in the Old South, 1944, and has served as chairman of the Editorial Board in supervising the work on the Encyclopedia of World Methodism. He retired in 1968, and spent the next three and one-half years in full-time editorial work on the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

GODDARD, ALVIN CHESLEY (1882-1958), American preacher and Peace Commission worker, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goddard, was born Oct. 24, 1882 at Rockford, Tenn. He attended Wesleyan College Institute at Athens, Tenn., and the UNIVERSITY OF CHATTANOOGA. He studied at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY and Harvard University, and was ordained Oct. 8, 1904, in the HOLSTON CONFERENCE (ME) in east TENNESSEE. He married Clara C. Dougherty in CHATTANOOGA, Nov. 24, 1909. He became Executive Secretary of the Chattanooga Area in 1913, and Executive Secretary of the MAINE CONFERENCE in 1927.

Goddard served as secretary of WORLD PEACE COMMISSION of the M. E. Church from 1928-32, working in cooperation with the State Department in Washington. He also served on the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; he was a member of the committee on militarism in education; and active in Fellowship of Reconciliation. He aided in the formulation of the United Nations charter by serving on the fact-finding and research committee of the State Department from 1943-45. During his term as Peace Commission secretary, he wrote Toward World Comradeship. A popular speaker, Goddard addressed audiences at seventy-eight colleges in forty-three states. His articles on human problems and international relations were published in many nationally known magazines. He was a member of the faculty of Haverford College of International Relations, and lectured frequently for the United Nations. In 1947 he was honored by SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY by being initiated into the honorary membership of Theta Chi Beta, honorary Biblical fraternity. Goddard died on Oct. 10, 1958.

GODDARD, OSCAR ELMO (1867-1950), American missionary, presiding elder, and executive secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions for the M. E. Church, South, was born on Sept. 1, 1867, in Sebastian County, Ark., the son of Columbus Evans and Narcissus (Smedley) Goddard. He was educated at Hendrix College, receiving the B.D. in 1893 and the D.D. in 1910. On June 3, 1893, he married Leila Robins, and they had four children. He served for a time pastorates in Magnolia, Ark., and then went to CHINA, where he was vice-president of the Anglo-Chinese School in Shanghai. He came back and served in Monticello, Ark., and also at Fort Smith. He became presiding elder of the Harrison District in 1901-02. He served two other charges in ARKANSAS and then was presiding elder on the Muskogee District. After a time he transferred to the TEXAS CONFERENCE and served First Church, GALVESTON, his pastorate beginning in 1913. He was elected Home Missionary secretary of the General Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, in 1918, and served in that capacity until 1930, when he became secretary of the Foreign Mission Division of the Board. His travels over the mission field, especially in Africa, were quite productive. From 1937 to 1940, he was pastor of Dodson Avenue Church, Fort Smith, Ark. Upon his retirement, the name of this church was changed to Goddard Memorial, which is today a strong and active church. Goddard retired in 1940 to live in Conway, Ark. He died on April 28, 1950. He gave leadership to his Church in the whole field of missions in the period between the two World Wars.

GODHRA is the easternmost district headquarters and institutional center in the Gujarat Annual Conference in INDIA, and likewise for the government of the State of Gujarat. In 1895, when Methodist evangelists first came there, Godhra's population was reported as 30,000. A large majority was accounted Hindus, although half or more of their number knew little or nothing about philosophical Hinduism and could more aptly be counted as Animists. Perhaps ten percent were Moslems and a few were Parsees, or Zoroastrians.

In 1898-1900 famine was severe in Gujarat. Fortunately the missionaries looked with understanding eyes upon the hungry bewildered throngs and helped greatly. The Rev. and Mrs. Robert Ward were the station missionaries. Moving stories are told of their exploits in saving thousands from death by starvation or by cholera that struck many of the half-starved. They saved thousands but lost their own son as a victim of cholera.

The government established a poorhouse and fed thousands. When the famine ended many had no homes to which they could return. The government decided to close the poorhouse and compel all men and boys to hunt for work somewhere. They asked the church to take care of the women and girls. Between four and five hundred found a home in the mission. Temporary quarters were hastily constructed, and a girls' school was started. Gifts were sent by many individuals and groups, and The Christian Herald collected and forwarded generous amounts to provide permanent quarters.

The WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY accepted responsibility for the school and sent as their first representative Anna Agnes Abbott, an experienced missionary from Muttra. They also contributed funds for a bungalow and other staff quarters. While the famine lasted, no one for whose physical needs the church was providing was baptized. Worship services were regularly held, and attendance was encouraged. However, when the famine had ended many people asked to be recognized as believers and be baptized. In 1903 Bishop JAMES M. THORNTON baptized 1,700 adults and children in one week. In 1908 Miss Abbott, utterly exhausted and ill, went on furlough. She had to be carried aboard the ship.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Bancroft had taken over from Mr. and Mrs. Ward. In addition to those from the famine camp, who came from different castes but could not at the famine's end lay claim to any caste status, converts were soon received in some number from three communities. These were the Sweepers, among whom the first group movement in Gujarat had begun; the far more numerous Dhed caste; and the aboriginal Bhil tribe. While descendants of these elements now predominate the Church in Godhara City and district, there have been occasional converts from higher Hindu castes and from the Moslems.

A boys' primary school was established years later, and under the direction of Mrs. Lucy M. Parker, known affectionately to hundreds as "Aunt Lucy," made notable contributions to Christian education in Gujarat. A teachers' training school was opened by Margaret Crouse in 1910. In 1912, Minnie Newton was appointed as principal of the normal school, and there began a notable career as a mission educator. Gujarat-speaking trained Christian teachers were not available, but Miss Newton secured and held the complete loyalty of three highly qualified Hindu masters. This normal school trained many excellent teachers for service in village schools and enabled the Gujarat Conference to organize and maintain for decades more than 200 village primary schools. These lady teachers did not limit themselves to teaching a few children, boys and girls, during appointed school hours, but often conducted separate classes for the mothers and sometimes for adolescent boys. Religious instruction received much attention, and the church gained immeasurably from the work of these trained women. Other churches and missions sent girls to Godhra to be trained.

Laura F. Austin conducted from Godhra a far-reaching program for producing literature for the church in Gujarat, including materials to aid in evangelism. She also provided valuable aids to teaching illiterates to read and, what is even more essential, material to help new literates to retain literacy. She was also one of a dozen or more lady missionaries who served effectively as evangelists working closely with both city and village congregations.

GODWIN, ANGIE (1876-1948), American deaconess, evangelist, and social worker, the daughter of John M. and Minerva (Cochran) Godwin, was born May 19, 1876 at Farmersburg, Ind. She attended and was graduated from the Chicago Training School as a deaconess. For about fourteen years she was an evangelist and led many to Christ in many communities in INDIANA. She was the founder of the Indiana Methodist Children's Home. It began in 1914 in GREENCASTLE, Ind. In 1915 the Indiana Conference gave her its endorsement and for seven years she solicited funds and cared for the needs of the Home. By 1923 the INDIANA and NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCES became responsible for its management and it was moved to Lebanon. She then organized and operated the Victory Boys' Club in Greencastle. In later years she was a licensed accepted supply pastor. She retired in 1946 and lived in Greencastle, where she died Sept. 2, 1948.

GOETHE, CHARLES MATTHIAS (1875-1966), American layman of the M. E. Church, South, was a scientist, educator, and philanthropist. He was born in Sacramento, Calif., and was married to Mary Glide. As each of them had inherited property, they decided at marriage that all earnings thereafter should be devoted to the betterment of mankind. For forty years they traveled the continents, taking pictures, making notes on flora and fauna, and especially on the living conditions of men. These formed the basis of his numerous books and pamphlets.

While a man of wide interests, his work centered largely on eugenics, education, and conservation. The U. S. National Park Service named Goethe "Honorary Chief Naturalist of the National Park Service" for being the inspirer of the nature guide service in the National Parks. He initiated and supported that service until its proved worth led to its support by the Congress. He gave, with matching contributions from the state, land that became the nucleus of three Redwood State Parks. The Goethe Grove is the center of the Jedediah Smith Redwood State Park of 10,000 acres. This is sometimes regarded as the second finest stand of virgin redwood.

Cooperative movements in mission fields and in his home city and state were one of his interests. The Northern California-Nevada Council of Churches places the names of Mr. and Mrs. Goethe at the head of their officary as "The Founders," since they promoted the Council and financed it until it was firmly established.

Goethe's books cover a wide range of observation in the natural sciences—biology, botany, eugenics, and ornithology. He made many gifts to establish natural history museums in high schools. He served for many years as board chairman of the Sacramento State College. His extensive real estate holdings were given to educational and religious institutions at his death.

Edmund G. Brown, Governor of the State of California at the time of Goethe's death, said that, "The results of his efforts are evident throughout the length and breadth of the land."

GOFF, CHARLES RAY (1889-), American minister, was born in Dallas, Iowa, May 7, 1889, son of Samuel J. and Mary Ellen (James) Goff. He was married to Ruth Maddy, Oct. 11, 1911, and they had three children. He was graduated from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, B.S., 1923; with the B.D. degree from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1926, and was by Garrett awarded the D.D. degree in 1934.

His pastorates were all in ILLINOIS, and from 1935 to 1942 he was instructor in religion in Rockford College. From 1942 to 1961 he was pastor of the Methodist congregation of the famed CHICAGO Temple, a sky-high church edifice in the Chicago Loop area.

He was preacher of the National Methodist Men's Hour Radio Network. He was a member of five GENERAL CONFERENCES. He has served as trustee of Garrett Biblical Institute and of Rockford College.

He is the author of A Better Hope, 1951; Anyone for Calvary, 1958; Invitation to Commune, 1959; Chapel in the Sky, 1960; Shelters and Sanctuaries, 1961. He retired in 1961.

GOLDEN CROSS SOCIETY is an agency of The United Methodist Church under the direction of The Board of HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTRIES of that church. It collects moneys and affords other material assistance in providing for the sick, older persons and youth.

The idea of a Golden Cross Society was conceived in 1931 by Bishop CHARLES C. SELECMAN, who at that time was minister at First Methodist Church in DALLAS. The purpose of the program was to serve as an organized means of financing charity work in the Methodist Hospital of Dallas.

Money raised through the first Golden Cross Society was used to treat the indigent sick at Methodist Hospital. Serving on the Golden Cross Society founding committee were Layton W. Bailey, W. C. Everett, Dan Morgan, M. J. Norrell, Rev. J. A. Old and Gus W. Thomasson.

From this small group of Christian leaders, the plan was directed to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E.

CHARLES F. GOLDEN

GOLDEN, CHARLES FRANKLIN (1912-), American bishop, was born at Holly Springs, Miss., Aug. 24, 1912, the son of J. W. and Mary P. (Tyson) Golden. His wife

Church, South, where it was adopted as an official part of the work of the church. Bishop Selecman presented the idea when General Conference of that church was held at Hot Springs, Ark. in 1922.

The Golden Cross program became a reality and today it is one of the major ways to finance charitable work in Methodist hospitals all over the United States.

The original means of raising money for the Golden Cross Society was through payment of a stipulated enrollment fee by churches. Each member contributing $1.00 or more became a member of the Golden Cross Society.

First Church and Oak Lawn Church, Dallas, have the distinction of being the first two chapters of the Golden Cross Society.

The Golden Cross Society became a part of the Methodist organization and operated on a national basis under the Board of Hospitals and Homes of The Methodist Church. There is a Golden Cross Sunday, on a date now set by the Annual Conference Board of Health and Welfare Ministries. Methodists contribute in special offerings, and the funds received are handled through disciplinary Golden Cross regulations.

Many good works are accomplished and many persons are given hospital care, who otherwise could not afford it, through the Golden Cross Society. The Golden Cross program is a warm living thing, incalculable in its service to humanity.

Standing as a symbol of Christ's ministry of healing, and signifying the birthplace of the Golden Cross Society, is a seventeen-foot high golden cross which beams from atop Methodist Hospital of Dallas. It was presented to the Hospital in 1959 by the Woman's Auxiliary.

As the cross turns and reflects in the sun and shines through the night, it "beams a welcome to the sick in need," a promise to all, whoever they may be—for want and suffering know no race, color, faith or creed.

In 1963 the original society was changed at The Methodist Hospital in Dallas when the Golden Cross Foundation was established. A board of trustees was named to administer the Foundation, which was a commingling of trusts and foundations which existed prior to that date. In the general church there is now a Golden Cross Fund to be promoted within the annual conference for that conference's ministry.

The Golden Cross program now encompasses not only care for needy patients, but other development programs for the benefit of the hospital and its patients: building programs, replacement and addition of new scientific equipment, research, medical education, scholarships for student nurses and students in other paramedical programs, and other fund-raising needs.

GOLDIE, DAVID (1842-1926), New Zealand layman, was born in Tasmania, and in 1836 arrived in New Zealand, where he joined the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH, of which he became a stalwart. He was received as a local preacher in 1869 and served in that capacity for over forty years. He was a timber merchant, but found much time for public service. For fourteen years he was a member of the city council. He served both as mayor of the city and as a member of parliament. Only a few of the many offices he filled can be mentioned: chairman of the fire board, chairman of the employers' association, trustee for the foundation for the blind, member of the hospital board, Sunday school superintendent for over fifty years. His great versatility and success were matched only by his humility.

GOLDIE, HELENA (? -1948), was the wife of JOHN F. GOLDIE, pioneer New Zealand Methodist missionary of the Solomon Islands. Formerly Miss Teague, of Mt. Morgan, Queensland, AUSTRALIA, she was an accomplished musician and linguist. She joined her husband in the primitive Solomons as soon as a home could be built in the jungle. She founded the first home for orphans and neglected children. She translated many hymns and taught the people to sing. She assisted her husband in reducing the Roviana language to writing and in subsequent translation work. She trained the women in child welfare and hygiene. A gifted speaker, she stimulated much interest in Christian missions when on furlough in Australia and New Zealand.

JOHN F. GOLDIE

GOLDIE, JOHN FRANCIS (1870-1954), NEW ZEALAND minister, was born in Hobart, Tasmania, where he was known as "the boy preacher." He entered the Methodist ministry in Queensland, Australia, in 1897. He was a pioneer missionary to the Western Solomons in 1902, continued as chairman of that district for forty-nine years, and was president of the New Zealand Conference in 1929.

In a brief half-century, the most bloodthirsty savages of the Southwest Pacific were evangelized by Goldie and his colleagues. Educational, medical, child welfare, technical, and industrial services were established throughout the district. He founded a theological institution and a native ministry. Six of the languages spoken were reduced to writing and much translation work done (see HELENA GOLDIE). The story of the mission is vividly told by Clarence T. J. Luxton in The Isles of Solomon (Methodist Foreign Missionary Society of New Zealand, 1955).

Goldie retired in Australia, where he died in Melbourne, on June 29, 1954.

GOMER, JOSEPH (1834-1892), American United Brethren missionary, was born at ANN ARBOR, Mich., one of eight children, July 20, 1834. He attended school irregularly, for black children were often insulted even in northern schools.

In 1859, Joseph Gomer was converted in CHICAGO, where he had gone at the age of sixteen years to be employed in a home furnishing establishment. He served two years in the Civil War as a cook for Union officers. After the War, on a steamer from NEW ORLEANS to CINCINNATI, he met a widow lady (Mary W.) from Chillicothe, Ohio. Before the travel ended he had proposed marriage and was accepted. They were married upon arriving in DAYTON, Ohio (1865). In that city they became members of the Third United Brethren Church where Gomer served as Sunday school superintendent, CLASS LEADER, STEWARD and trustee. He was an upholsterer by profession and became department foreman in a large mercantile store of the city.

In 1870, the Gomers volunteered for missionary service in Africa. They arrived in Freetown, SIERRA LEONE, Jan. 11, 1871. The climate in that country had proved to be too much for white missionaries, and the African natives found it difficult to relate to white persons. Only as a last resort did the United Brethren missionary board turn to the Gomers. After twenty-two years, most of which time he served as superintendent, a well-established mission was founded.

On a visit to America, Joseph Gomer was ordained Aug. 20, 1876, by the Miami Conference and received as a member. Death came to him Sept. 5, 1892, from apoplexy, and he was buried in Sierra Leone. Mary W. Gomer remained two more years before returning to the United States, where she died Dec. 1, 1896.

JOSEPH GOMEZ

GOMEZ, JOSEPH (1889-), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in TRINIDAD, WEST INDIES on Nov. 29, 1889. He was educated at New York and Wilberforce Universities, receiving the A.B. degree from the latter institution. He later earned the M.A. degree from the Eden Graduate School of Religion in Missouri. He was ordained DEACON in 1914 and ELDER in 1918, was pastor of churches in BERMUDA, CANADA, MICHIGAN, and MISSOURI, and taught at Payne Theological Seminary until 1948, when he was elected to the episcopacy from the St. James Church in CLEVELAND, Ohio. He was a delegate to the Third Assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES at New Delhi, INDIA in 1961 and the Eleventh WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL which met in LONDON, England in 1966. He presently resides at Cleveland, Ohio and supervises the Canadian, Michigan, Chicago, Illinois and Indiana Annual Conferences which comprise the Fourth Episcopal Area District.

GOMOH, Bihar, India, is a town and railway junction in Mambhoom District, and headquarters of a Methodist ecclesiastical district. The government headquarters of the district are in Dhanbad. Christian missionary work in Gomoh was begun in the winter of 1912-13 by Mr. and Mrs. Reichard of the United Holiness Movement, also known, as several other groups have been, as the Church of God. Ida Klingeberger joined them in 1916. After the death of Reichard in 1919, Mrs. Reichard returned to the United States and Miss Klingeberger joined the Methodist Church and became a missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. When the Reichards came to Gomoh, a Jamaican Negro was living there in a small house which he owned on a site that was highly desirable as a mission location. He became ill, and Mr. and Mrs. Reichard took care of him. Despite all they could do, he died. He left the property to them in gratitude. Mrs. Reichard asked the Methodists to take it over and absorb the mission. There were only a few paid workers and several orphan children. James Lyon, a retired missionary and a fervent evangelist, volunteered to serve at Gomoh. God richly blessed his ministry, and hundreds of converts were received.

Recent industrial developments, aided by the Damodar Valley Corporation's multipurpose hydro-electric projects, have provided employment for hundreds of Indian Christians. New Methodist congregations have been organized and church buildings erected. Services are held in Hindi and in English.

A coeducational school, started shortly after the Methodists entered the area, has been lifted to the high school level and named the "Bishop Rockey High School," in honor of Bishop CLEMENT DANIEL ROCKEY, who supervised the work at Gomoh from his election in 1941 until his retirement in 1956. As a Methodist, Miss Klingeberger worked with great dedication and effectiveness for more than forty years, first in Gomoh and then in the Delhi and Madhya Pradesh Conferences. Before retiring she revisited Gomoh and wrote, "When I see the marvelous growth that has taken place in the Church here and throughout the District my heart is filled with gratitude and praise to God."

GONÇALVES, ARTUR DE CAMPOS (1901-1956), Brazilian LOCAL PREACHER, was born in Avare, state of SÃO PAULO, on April 6, 1901, of poor but devout Protestant parents. He received his primary and preparatory education at the INSTITUTO EDUCACIONAL PIRACIBANO, and his teacher's diploma from the Piracicaba Normal School.

Gonçalves taught first at INSTITUTO GRANBERRY in JUIZ DE FORA, state of Minas Gerais, where he took a course in geographical engineering. He also taught at the Rodrigues Alves Institute in Guaratingueta, São Paulo, and at the Caetano do Campos Institute in the city of São Paulo. He became inspector of secondary and normal education and educational technician for the state of São Paulo. He wrote three books on logic and geography.

Gonçalves served the Methodist Church in many capacities—as LOCAL PREACHER, LAY LEADER, STEWARD, delegate to annual and GENERAL CONFERENCES, and member of boards and commissions. He married Iracema de Neto, also a teacher, and they had two children, Artur and Noemi. Firm in the faith, he died on June 21, 1956 in Santos, São Paulo.

ANTONIO DE CAMPOS GONÇALVES

GONZAGA, ANNA (1861-1932), Brazilian laywoman, was donor of the estate on which now stands the INSTITUTO ANNA GONZAGA, children's home of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, First Regional Conference. Dona Anna was born Nov. 22, 1861, on a farm near Campo Grande, then in the Federal District. Her father was Major Luiz Gonzaga, wealthy owner of farmland and orange groves. Of his union with Anna de Soledade, three children were born—two sons and Anna, called Annita. The mother died when Annita was eighteen months old, and faithful slaves cared for the children.

Annita became her father's close companion, riding horseback with him over the farm. Later he placed her in a boarding school in RIO DE JANEIRO, run by two sisters who, although Roman Catholic, were not fanatical. The major opened the doors of his home to all, but would not be coaxed or coerced into any formal religion.

Among his visitors was a Senhor Jose de Araujo, brother of a Methodist preacher. Not a declared Protestant, he owned a beautifully bound copy of the New Testament and Psalms which had been given him, probably by his brother. When he showed it to Annita, she liked it so much that he gave it to her. She put it among her treasured possessions, not knowing its spiritual value. Years later, when she heard singing at an evangelical service in a home across the street, she became interested, secured a hymnal, and began practicing the songs at her piano.

Before his death in 1901, Major Gonzaga named Anna, then forty, executrix and administrator of his estate. Her brother Luiz died before final settlement, but Anna turned over the inheritance to his son. Left alone now, she rented out the farm and moved to a small house in town.

Spiritually restless for years, she began attending a nearby Protestant Episcopal church. She was converted at the age of fifty-one under William Brown, later bishop, and was confirmed in the Episcopal church. Happy in her faith, she resolved to try to evangelize the community around her farm. At her own expense, she rented and furnished a house where Sunday school and worship services could be held, taught in the Sunday school, and, when the pastor was absent, led in the worship. For a time, however, Anna stopped attending church due to some misunderstanding. Fourteen years later she began going to the Vila Isabel Methodist Church, of which she became a faithful member until death. She remained humble and democratic in spirit, despite her wealth. Convinced that God had a special purpose for her life, once again she took up the evangelization of her community, building in 1927 a house that would serve as a chapel and residence for the pastor, a local preacher, Manuel Batista Leite. Later she met LAYONA GLENN, and her life purpose was formed—the establishment of the Instituto Anna Gonzaga. Her life became radiant, and she was looking forward eagerly to the formal inauguration of the home on May 1, 1932, when she suffered a fatal accident and died on April 1 of that year.

With a few exceptions, Anna Gonzaga deeded all her possessions to the Methodist Church of Brazil. She had always refused to have a photograph made to hang in the home, saying, "The home is to be my picture." The true picture of this remarkable woman is in the lives and hearts of little children saved by her gift.

GONZÁLEZ, JUSTO LUIS (1937-), minister, educator and former dean of the Evangelical Seminary of PUERTO RICO, was born in Havana, CUBA, on Aug. 9, 1937, the son of Justo and Luisa (García) González. He was educated at the Instituto de Marianao in Havana, and did postgraduate work at the University of Havana in 1954-57. He received the S.T.B. degree from Union Theological Seminary at Matanzas, Cuba, in 1957; the S.T.M. from Yale, 1958; and the M.A. from that institution in 1960; and the Ph.D. in 1961. He did further postgraduate work at the University of Strassburg, and in the University of Basel, 1958-59. He married Erlantina Ramos on Aug. 22, 1959, and they have a daughter, Juana Luisa. He was received on trial in the Cuba Conference of The Methodist Church in 1957, and came into full connection as an ELDER in the Puerto Rico Provisional Conference in 1963. He served as professor of historical theology at the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, 1961, and was elected dean of this institution in 1967. In 1969 he became associate professor of World Christianity at Candler School of Theology. He is a member of the World Council of Churches, and of the Christian Literature Fund Committee. He has written Historia del Pensamiento Cristiano, Vol. 1 and 2, Revolución y Encarnación, and several other books, including The Development of Christianity in the Latin Caribbean (1969).

GONZÁLEZ CARRASCO, JUSTO B. (1902-), Cuban lay preacher, teacher, and author, was born a Catholic, but was converted to Protestantism in a Quaker mission. When this work was discontinued, he joined the Methodist Church. He studied at CANDLER COLLEGE, where he was deeply influenced by the director, H. B. Bardwell. Later, he became a teacher at the same school. In the 1930's, he took part in the conspiracy which culminated in the fall of dictator Gerardo Machado. After retirement, he undertook a literacy program which was born out of memorial funds for Bishop JOHN BRANSCOMB, and which eventually developed into what is now Alfalit. In 1961 he was forced to leave Cuba and went to Alajuela, COSTA RICA, where he and his wife, Luisa Garcia, established the headquarters of Alfalit. His published works include two novels: Cubagua and Así en la Tierra como en el Cielo.

GONZÁLEZ Y SARDINAS, IGNACIO (1879-1956), a Cuban pastor, was born in Guanajay, Pinar del Rio Province, Dec. 12, 1879. He married Angela Sardina and had three children, Manuel Ignacio, Amalia and Flora. The two daughters married Methodist preachers.

Under the preaching of Cesar Ramon Moreno, he was converted. After being licensed to preach he was transferred to TAMPA, Fla., in 1906, but in 1914 he was transferred back to CUBA where for forty-two years he served eight of the most important charges in Cuba. When it was decided to appoint nationals as district superintendents, he was placed in charge of the Oriental District.

His ministry was notable for his evangelistic fervor and his personal interest in everyone.

Retiring largely because of poor health, he spent his last years in Cardenas in the home of his daughter.

GOOD HOPE, WEST VIRGINIA, U.S.A. New Bethel Church in Harrison County, W. Va., is in Good Hope community on Route 19. The church was organized in 1784, and first met in the home of Moses Ellsworth or Isaac Washburn.

Joseph Chevront, a soldier in the Revolution and a Frenchman trained for the priesthood, was converted in 1779 and in 1791 purchased 200 acres of land in Good Hope. A pioneer school teacher, local preacher and itinerant, he at length located in 1803 and lived in the community for almost forty years afterward.

On Feb. 14, 1802, John and Mary Ellsworth donated an acre of land to the Methodist Church. A log church, erected in 1802 and called the Ellsworth Meeting House, was on the Clarksburg Circuit which then had twenty-eight appointments. In 1806 the congregation paid $7.02 one quarter, the largest amount paid.

The second church was erected about 1848. W. M. Shultz led in the construction of the third church, which was dedicated in 1905 by W. B. King, who had been pastor in 1896. This building burned in 1942.

Among the more than 155 senior and junior pastors who have served New Bethel, many were outstanding: JOHN SMITH (1786) attended the Christmas Conference in 1784, and Wesley Smith, father of Bishop CHARLES W. SMITH, was pastor in 1854.

In 1793 President Washington thanked three Good Hope pastors for their services during the "alarming Whiskey Insurrection." These were William McLenahan, 1790; VALENTINE COOK, 1793, and THORNTON FLEMING, 1808. Two New Bethel pastors, A. B. Rohrbough (1886) and H. J. Boatman (1883-85) were among the founders of WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE. Both were trustees.

The present Gothic stone church was built during William Casto's pastorate, 1942-51. Marshall C. Law, Glenn Rapping and C. W. Post did work on the building.

New Bethel, in a community of 500, was dedicated by Bishop LLOYD C. WICKE on Aug. 8, 1948. After winning second and third place, New Bethel Church was given "The Middle Atlantic Church of the Year" award on July 17, 1958.

GOODE, WILLIAM H. (1807-1879), American lawyer, educator, minister, and long time presiding elder, was born in Warren County, Ohio, on June 19, 1807. On the death of his father in 1824, he went to Madison, Ind., to live with his brother. He taught school and was admitted to the bar. He married Sarah B. Pearson on April 30, 1829, at Port William, Ky., where he had been president of the seminary. To them were born ten children, three sons and seven daughters. Mrs. Goode died in 1859, and after her death he married Mathilda Hubbard.

Going into the ministry, Goode was received on trial in the INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1836. He was a presiding elder for twenty-seven of his forty years in the ministry, serving the South Bend, Greencastle, Indianapolis, Muncie, and Andersonville districts in the Indiana Conference; Nebraska, Nebraska City, Omaha districts in the NEBRASKA CONFERENCE; Loudon and Council Bluffs districts in the Western Iowa Conference; Kansas-Nebraska Mission and the Cherry Creek Mission in the Kansas-Nebraska Conference. He was principal of the New Albany Seminary, Indiana; Fort Coffee Academy and Indian Mission, Arkansas; and agent for Literary Institutions, Indiana. He was also pastor of several churches during his career: Jeffersonville, Richmond, in Indiana; and Oreapolis, Nebraska.

While in the Arkansas Conference in 1842, he formed the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE. Returning to INDIANA, he transferred to the new NORTH INDIANA CONFERENCE. He was elected to the LOUISVILLE CONVENTION of 1845 but declined to take his seat as he was opposed to slavery and the imminent division of the M. E. Church. He was afterward elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1848, 1852, 1864, 1868, and 1872 from Indiana. He is credited with being the first missionary to COLORADO and organized the first four churches there. He died in Indiana in 1879.

GOODELL, CHARLES LEROY (1854-1937), American pastor and evangelist, was born at Dudley, Mass., July 31, 1854, the son of Warren and Clarinda (Healy) Goodell. He won the A.B. degree at BOSTON UNIVERSITY (1877), and the A.M. (honorary) at New York University (1900). WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY awarded him the D.D. degree in 1906. He married Mary F. Blair, June 3, 1896, and they had five sons and one daughter. Admitted to the PROVIDENCE (New England Southern after 1881) CONFERENCE in 1879, he served the following charges in the several conferences covering the region from New York to BOSTON: Acushnet, Mass., 1879-80; three in PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Broadway, 1880-83, Chestnut Street, 1883-86, and Trinity, 1886-89; two in Boston—Winthrop Street, 1889-94, and First Church, 1894-97; and three in greater New York—Hanson Place, BROOKLYN, 1897-1904, Calvary, NEW YORK CITY, 1904-13, and St. Paul's, New York City, 1913-18. He was in charge of religious work at Camp Meade in 1918, and in the same year he became executive secretary of the Commission on Evangelism in the FED-

C. L. GOODELL

ERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES and served in that capacity sixteen years. From 1928 to 1936 he conducted a radio ministry called "Sabbath Reveries," and in one summer 40,000 copies of his radio sermons were sent out in response to personal requests.

Goodell was a trustee of AMERICAN UNIVERSITY and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. As a delegate to the 1908 GENERAL CONFERENCE, he received 392 votes for bishop on the fourth ballot and 388 on the fifth when it required about 510 to elect. It is claimed that J. M. BUCKLEY, vastly influential editor, did not favor Goodell, and moved adjournment of the conference at a strategic time. At the subsequent session there was a marked decrease in the number of votes for Goodell.

During his nearly forty years in the pastorate, not a month passed that Goodell did not receive someone into the membership of the church, nor did a year pass without his holding a series of evangelistic services in January. When appointed to Calvary Church, New York, he was told that it was not possible to have a revival there. He replied that there would be a revival in the church or a funeral in the parsonage, and there was a great revival. When he arrived Calvary Church had 80 probationers and 1,392 members. At the end of the first year there were 332 probationers and 1,721 members. When he moved after nine years, the church had 2,609 active and 418 non-resident members. Effective in the pulpit, Goodell was in demand as a speaker on evangelism. Few if any were more eloquent than he on that subject in his day. He had a warm and genial nature which won him many friends and accounted in large measure for his success. Among the seventeen books he published were: The Price of Winning Souls, Pastoral and Personal Evangelism, Heralds of a Passion, Motives and Methods of Modern Evangelism, The Drill Master of Methodism, Pathways to the Best, and Twilight Reveries. He died in New York, April 26, 1937.

GOODFELLOW, WILLIAM (1820-1898), American missionary who gave permanent, stable organization to the Methodist Church in ARGENTINA and was a partner with Domingo Sarmiento in the establishment of the country's educational system, was born in OHIO.

Goodfellow became a minister of the OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE and taught successively at MCKENDREE COLLEGE, ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, and GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE. He joined the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE and was sent from there by Bishop Ames to the Buenos Aires Mission in 1857. He found a struggling work, based upon a controversial school and an English-language church. Protestant preaching in Spanish was prohibited by a decree issued by the tyrant, Rosas, who had been overthrown in 1853, but many of whose laws remained in force.

Permission was obtained from the national government for Methodist preaching in Spanish; and it was a protégé of Goodfellow's, JOHN F. THOMSON, who preached the first Spanish sermon from Goodfellow's pulpit. Goodfellow was instrumental in the conversion of Thomson and A. M. HUDSON, and with their aid extended the church into other cities and directed its work toward the Spanish-speaking Argentine people. His work as pastor at BUENOS AIRES and mission superintendent from 1857-69, gave permanent organization to Methodism in Argentina.

Goodfellow became a friend and counselor of Domingo F. Sarmiento, the great educational pioneer of South America. By the time of the missionary's departure for the United States, Sarmiento was president of Argentina, and he asked Goodfellow to contract for forty "normal-school" teachers in the United States to come to Argentina to organize schools and train teachers for the fight against illiteracy. This was accomplished with the help of the widow of another famous educator, Horace Mann. Mrs. Mann was able to increase the teacher recruits to sixty-five. This was the beginning of the normal-school system of Argentina.

Goodfellow's wife, Mary, was a daughter of JOHN DEMPSTER, another pioneer of Methodist missions to South America.

GOODLOE, ROBERT WESLEY (1888-1966), American professor, scholar, and author, was born in Burleson, Texas, on Feb. 23, 1888. He received the A.B. degree from Polytechnic College, Fort Worth, Texas, in 1912; M.A. from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in 1916; B.D. from Yale University in 1918; and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1929. He was a chaplain in World War I. After a short service as public school teacher and pastor in west OKLAHOMA, he joined the faculty of the School of Theology at Southern Methodist University (1921), where he taught until his retirement in 1956. He was a delegate at various times to general and jurisdictional conferences, and a member of the Commission on the Course of Study, the Committee on Revision of the Ritual, and the Commission on Union just before 1939. He served for a time as a member of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, dean of the Texas Pastors School, and director of Correspondence Courses for Ministerial Study at Southern Methodist University. He was the author of Principles of Church Government, The Sacraments in Methodism, and added the two final chapters to the 1949 edition of The Story of Methodism (written in 1936 by Halford E. Luccock and Paul Hutchinson). Twice he served as interim pastor at Highland Park Church, Dallas. Following his retirement he taught for three years at Union Theological Seminary in MANILA, the Philippines; at WESLEY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Washington; at HENDRIX COLLEGE, Conway Arkansas; and at CENTENARY COLLEGE, Shreveport, Louisiana.

GOODNOW, ISAAC T. (1814-1894), American pioneer layman and sponsor of higher education in KANSAS, was born at North Whitingham, Vt., on Jan. 17, 1814.

In 1854, he left his professorship at Providence Seminary at East Greenwich, R. I. under the influence of a lecturer on the subject, "The Struggle for Freedom in The Territory of Kansas," and he immediately began to organize a colony and set out for that territory. Included in the colony was his brother-in-law, JOSEPH DENISON, who later became minister of First Methodist Church, MANHATTAN, KAN., and one of the presidents of Kansas State University.

Goodnow was advised to select a townsite at the junction of the Blue and the Kansas Rivers which he did. He was instrumental in raising money for the first church building in Manhattan, the establishment of Bluemont Central College, which became Kansas State Agricultural College in 1963, and is now Kansas State University. One of the large dormitories on the campus at Kansas State is named for Goodnow. He is buried with his wife in Sunset Cemetery in Manhattan.

GOODRICH, FREDERIC SAMUEL (1865-1948), American college professor and Bible scholar, was born Sept. 8, 1865, in Waterbury, Conn. He attended the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., and Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., receiving a bachelor's degree in 1890 from the latter institution. After study at the University of Berlin, Germany, and the American School of Archaeology, Athens, Greece, he studied at the University of Michigan, where he received an M.A. degree in 1897. He was granted a D.D. degree by Defiance (Ohio) College in 1909.

Goodrich joined the faculty of ALBION College in 1892 and continued his active association with that institution until 1935. He was successively professor of Greek, professor of the English Bible and acting professor of Greek, acting president of the college, professor of the English Bible again, and after retirement, college chaplain. He visited the Holy Land in 1890, 1913, and 1930, gathering much material for many lectures. Goodrich Chapel on the Albion College campus was named for him. It was dedicated Sept. 21, 1958.

Goodrich and Mary Maltby Harrison were married Jan. 3, 1893, in Waterbury, Conn. They had one son and one daughter.

ROBERT GILDART

GOODRICH, ROBERT EUGENE, JR. (1909-), American minister and radio preacher, was born at Cleburne, Texas, June 9, 1909, son of Robert Eugene and Moya (Wilson) Goodrich.

He was a student in CENTENARY COLLEGE, 1928-30, and was awarded the D.D. degree by that institution in 1950. He was graduated with the A.B. degree from BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE in 1932, and with the M.A. degree from PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, in 1935.

His pastorates have all been in TEXAS: Wesley, Port Arthur, 1936-37; Galena Park, 1938-39; Riverside, HOUSTON, 1939-44; Trinity, EL PASO, 1944-46; and pastor of First Church, DALLAS, since 1946.

Since 1946 he has been chairman of the TELEVISION, RADIO, and FILM COMMISSION, of the South Central Jurisdiction, and was chairman of the Jurisdiction Council, 1960-64. He has served as trustee of the Methodist Home, Waco; SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY; Methodist Hospital, Dallas; and of the Golden Cross Foundation, Dallas.

He is the author of What's It All About, 1956; Reach for the Sky, 1960; Lift Up Your Heart, 1962; On the Other Side of Sorrow, 1964. He has been preacher in the Methodist Series, Protestant Radio Hour.

He was married to Thelma Quillian on June 5, 1939, and they have four children.

GOODSELL, DANIEL AYRES (1840-1909), bishop, was born in Newburg, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1840, the son of Buel and Adaline (Ferris) Goodsell. His father was an itinerant in the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE. He was educated at Clinton Academy and New York University, graduating from the latter in 1859. He held the S.T.D., D.D., and LL.D. degrees from WESLEYAN, New York, and DICKINSON, respectively. He married Sarah F. Loweree, June 5, 1860, and they had two daughters and a son. He was admitted to the New York East Conference in 1859, and his pastorates, all of which were in that conference, were: Clintonville, 1859; Grand Street, BROOKLYN, 1860; Riverhead, 1861-62; Glen Cove and Buckram, 1863-65; Greenpoint and Tabernacle, Brooklyn, 1866-68; First Church, Norwalk, 1869-71; Meriden, 1872-74; Washington Street, Brooklyn, 1875-77; New York Avenue, 1878-80; and three in New Haven, Conn.—Wesley Chapel and Chapel Street, 1881, Trinity, 1882-83, and First Church, 1884-86.

Goodsell served as literary editor of the New York Christian Advocate, 1880-88, and was elected editor of Zion's Herald in 1887, but before he could get well settled in the job he was made secretary of the Board of Education of the M. E. Church. He was a delegate to four GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1876-88. At the latter he was elected bishop. His episcopal residences were on the Pacific Coast, in the Southwest, in the South, and in New York. He presided over conferences in many states. As a bishop he tried hard not to be arbitrary. When F. D. LEETE, later bishop, was needed in a city church but desired to serve in a mill town, Goodsell appointed him to the latter. Goodsell was broadminded, emphasizing the unity of all Christianity. In 1907 he condemned his church's rules against dancing, theater-going, and card playing. In 1905 he headed the 11-member group from his own church which with a similar number from the M. E. Church, South prepared the first joint Methodist hymnal. Goodsell's tolerance and breadth of mind made him valuable as an ecclesiastical ambassador. Much of his time in the episcopacy was spent on official visits to CHINA, JAPAN, KOREA, ITALY, BULGARIA, SWITZERLAND, GERMANY, Scandinavia, and nearly every part of the United States. Felicitous in the use of English, he was an able speaker and a graceful writer. He wrote many magazine articles, and published three books: Nature and Character at Granite Bay (1901); The Things Which Remain (1904); and Peter the Hermit (1906). He died in New York, Dec. 5, 1909, and was buried in Meriden, Conn.

GOODWILL INDUSTRIES. In 1902 a young Methodist minister, EDGAR JAMES HELMS, pastor of Morgan Memorial Chapel in the South End of Boston, Mass., became concerned about the welfare of the handicapped and unfortunate people who lived in his community and parish. For them he conceived a plan of helpfulness and service described by the slogan, "Not charity, but a chance," which has now grown into a world-wide network of vocational evaluation, training and employment programs for handicapped people. This program, known as Goodwill Industries, is the largest private network of sheltered workshops in the world. It serves all types of handicapped and disabled people.

The plan of operation was simple. Unwanted clothing and household articles were collected from the homes of the community and other sources. Handicapped men and women were given opportunity to learn trades, acquire skills and receive income through repairing these articles. Resale of the repaired items provided wages and financed the operations.

The enterprise was incorporated in Massachusetts as the Morgan Memorial Cooperative Industries and Stores, Inc., in 1905. In 1910 a National Cooperative Relief Association, Inc. was organized to encourage the establishment of similar church related programs in other cities. One in BROOKLYN, N. Y., established in 1915, originated the name "Goodwill Industries" which has since become universal. The slogan quoted above was coined by the CLEVELAND, Ohio, Goodwill Industries.

By 1918 seven Goodwill Industries had been organized. Between 1919 and 1924 the Board of Missions and Church Extension of the M. E. Church assisted in the development of twenty-four more as a part of its Centenary Program. In 1918 a Bureau of Goodwill Industries was established in the Department of City Work of the Board of Missions and Church Extension. In 1940 this Bureau was elevated to a Department of the Section of Home Missions of the Division of National Missions of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church and has continued so to operate. Eleven other Goodwill Industries were established in this early period prior to unification by the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South.

The national Goodwill Industries organization developed into the National Association of Goodwill Industries in 1933. The name was changed to Goodwill Industries of America, Inc. in 1946 and has so continued. The national organization is managed by a lay Board of Directors, thirty in number, elected by the member local Goodwill Industries. They employ an executive officer to direct the day to day activities of the national program.

The organization of local Goodwill Industries since 1940 has been through a combination of national and local financing, with individual donors, trust funds, churches, civic groups and existing Goodwill Industries

W. KENNETH GOODSON

GOODSON, WALTER KENNETH (1912-), American bishop, was born in SALISBURY, N. C., on Sept. 15, 1912, son of Daniel Washington and Sarah (Peeler) Goodson. He received the A.B. degree from Catawba College (Salisbury, N. C.) in 1934, and was a student at DUKE UNIVERSITY, 1934-37. He received the D.D. in 1960 from Duke University, a D.D. from HIGH POINT COLLEGE in 1951, the L.H.D. from St. Bernard College (Cullman, Ala.), and the LL.D. from University of Alabama in 1968. On July 12, 1937, he married Martha Ann Ogburn and they have three children.

Walter K. Goodson was admitted on trial into the Western North Carolina Conference in 1935; full connection, 1939; ordained DEACON, 1937 and ELDER, 1939. His pastorates have included Oak Ridge, 1935-37; Associate, West Market, GREENSBORO, 1938-41; Muir's Chapel, Greensboro, 1941-44; Wadesboro, 1944-48; First Church, HIGH POINT, 1948-53; district superintendent, Winston-Salem District, 1953-56; First Church, CHARLOTTE, 1956-61; and Centenary, WINSTON-SALEM, 1961-64. He was elected bishop in 1964 and is the presiding bishop of the Birmingham Area.

Bishop Goodson was a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1951 and 1956; a member of the Mission Team to England of General Board of Evangelism, 1962; study team to France and Berlin, 1962; preacher to Air Force Personnel in Europe, 1968; past president, as sponsors. Currently, about $50,000 is required to establish and equip a local Goodwill Industries program and finance its first two years of operation. Thereafter, the program develops in accordance with local needs and resources and usually requires about a ten percent financial subsidy.

By the close of 1960 the number of Goodwill Industries operating in the United States had reached one hundred and twenty-six independent units. Five new units were organized in 1962. Each Goodwill Industries is a local, autonomous unit, receiving its charter from the state in which it operates, and is controlled and managed by a Board of Directors elected from representative citizen groups of the community. Goodwill Industries of America, Inc. operates as a member organization representative of the interests of all local Goodwill Industries.

In addition to the Goodwill Industries in the United States there are twenty-three Goodwill Industries or closely related adaptations of the Goodwill Industries program operating in eight foreign lands with almost one-half of them being located in Canada. Other countries are Mexico, Peru, Uruguay, Trinidad-Port of Spain (West Indies), Korea, Netherland Antilles, and Australia. This group of Goodwill Industries, at home and abroad, constitute the largest network of vocationally oriented training and workshop programs for handicapped people in the world.

Dr. Helms, thirty years ago, described Goodwill Industries as "a business-plus" and as "a social service-plus." His description still applies. A Goodwill Industries is a unique combination of a non-profit, social service agency operating on a business like basis.

In a recently published annual report, Goodwill announced that it expects the physically handicapped to continue constituting the majority of its clients, but is going to shift its emphasis somewhat to include the socially and economically handicapped, as well as those suffering physical limitations. It recently reported facilities in two hundred cities in the United States and abroad and annually assists 85,000 handicapped and disadvantaged persons.

The national office of Goodwill Industries of America, Inc. is located at 1913 "N" Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

GORMAN, SAMUEL (1851-1943), a Methodist layman, retired to Nelson, NEW ZEALAND, after a successful business career as an explosives expert in various parts of the world. Deeply interested in overseas missions, he worked and gave generously for the reestablishment and maintenance of a full medical missionary service in the Western Solomons, following the depression of the 1930's. He made it possible for New Zealand Methodism to send a highly qualified doctor back to the Solomons and to restore the nursing staff to full strength. This was also helpful in the training of native medical workers.

GOTHENBURG (GÖTEBORG), second largest city of SWEDEN with 420,000 inhabitants (1965), has always been the country's western gateway. English and American ways have stamped community life. Immigrants from England and the Netherlands have played a prominent part in the development and history of Gothenburg.

Seamen and sailors converted on the BETHEL SHIP, "John Wesley," in NEW YORK harbor were the first to bring the Methodist message to their homelands in Scandinavia. Very early some of them preached in and around Gothenburg. So did J. P. Larsson, in 1854 nominated by the Methodist Society of the M. E. Church as missionary to Scandinavia. Victor Witting preached in Gothenburg in 1866 and hired a little room. On Jan. 13, 1868, Emanuel Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, the second in Sweden. In 1881 the Emanuel Church building was constructed. It is still one of the leading Methodist churches in Gothenburg.

ST. JACOB CHURCH

In 1872 MAGNUS FREDRIK AHGREN was sent to Majorna, the section of Gothenburg where another congregation was organized in 1883, its building being dedicated in 1891. In 1888 a third congregation was organized, later called St. Jacob (St. James). Emanuel and St. Jacob have been and still are among the strongest Swedish churches. The latter for many years rented the Y.M.C.A. hall for Sunday morning services. In 1928 a modern church building was dedicated. Several other churches have been built in different parts of the growing city, St. Matthew in the west, as well as Tabor and St. Peter. Mölndal is now a separate town. Three of those small churches, Efraim (Wesley), Tabor, and St. Peter have united with the old Emanuel Church and together organized the new Trinity Church, preparing to build a great modern church in the neighborhood of the place for the oldest preaching place in Gothenburg—Pustervik.

A Central Mission existed for some years (from 1914) as an organ for social work of all the churches. In 1937 an old people's home, Hanneberg, started its work.

The Bethany Deaconess Institution was started in Gothenburg in 1899, and for many years upheld a hospital for mental diseases and a convalescent home, until 1963, when it was closed. The great costs cannot nowadays be met by private institutions.

In 1873 a printing office and publishing house called Wesleyana was started in Gothenburg, but it was moved to Stockholm in 1878.

Gothenburg was also first in organizing the youth fellowship called EPWORTH LEAGUE (1892), and already in 1894 a layman, John Börjesson, a manager, started the first Junior Epworth League in Sweden. This was the pattern for such organizations all over Sweden among all denominations.

In 1924 the Union Scandinavian Theological School was settled in Överås, Gothenburg. Young men from all the Scandinavian countries are attached to the different churches and play an important part in the activities of Methodism in Gothenburg and its neighborhood.

About a seventh of the total Methodist membership in Sweden (1,165 members in full connection out of 8,271) are living in Gothenburg and its neighborhood.

GOUCHER, JOHN FRANKLIN (1845-1922), American minister, college president, and generous benefactor to higher education and foreign missions, was born on June 7, 1845 at Waynesboro, Pa. He was the son of John and Eleanor (Townsend) Goucher. He attended DICKINSON COLLEGE in nearby Carlisle where he received the A.B. degree in 1868; the A.M. in 1872; the D.D. in 1885; the LL.D. in 1899. He declined offers to enter business in PITTSBURGH, where he lived in his youth, and entered the Methodist ministry, becoming a member of the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1869. He married Mary C. Fisher on Dec. 29, 1877. During the twenty-one years of his pastorate he took the lead in building fifteen churches which included Harlem Park, Strawbridge, and First Church of BALTIMORE.

Goucher and his wife's family were largely responsible for donating and raising the funds necessary to charter a Methodist woman's college in 1885 to celebrate the CENTENNIAL of the organization of the Methodist Church in America. However, the college was not opened until 1888 when it was named the Woman's College of Baltimore City. Goucher became its second president in 1890 and continued in that office until 1908 when he retired as president emeritus. In 1910 the name of the college was changed to GOUCHER COLLEGE.

Goucher was delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of '88, '92, '96, 1900, '04, '08, '12. In 1894 he was a fraternal delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South. He was the author of Young People and the World's Evangelization, Sunday School and Missions, Christianity and the United States, Principles of Stewardship, Growth in the Missionary Concept.

At the 1892 General Conference, he was the author of the so-called "Goucher Substitute," in the debate over how the constitution of the M. E. Church could be identified. His motion was in substance that "the section of the Discipline of 1808 together with such modifications as have been adopted since that time in accordance with the provisions for amendment in that section," was the constitution. The Conference adopted this as its position on the matter.

Goucher and his wife were greatly interested in foreign missions and gave upwards of $250,000 to educational projects in the Far East, mostly in CHINA, JAPAN, and KOREA. They supported 120 vernacular primary schools in INDIA. He visited officially, for his Church's Mission Boards, their projects in MEXICO as well as in Java and other Asian lands. He received decorations from Japanese and Chinese governments. He continued to live in retirement in the suburban town of Pikesville, the former home of the very wealthy Fisher family, his wife's people. There he died on July 19, 1922.

GOUCHER COLLEGE, Baltimore, Md., was founded in 1885 as Woman's College of Baltimore by the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. In 1910 the name was changed to Goucher College in honor of JOHN F. GOUCHER, a benefactor of the school and distinguished Methodist layman. In 1920 the college's charter was amended to make it a self-perpetuating institution, but it did require that nine trustees be Methodists, three each from the Baltimore, CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA, and PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCES. In 1960 the charter was again amended, calling for nine of its trustees to be members of The Methodist Church without respect to annual conferences.

JOHN O. CROSS

GOUGH, HARRY DORSEY (? -1808), was the owner of Perry Hall, a large colonial estate near the intersection of Harford Road and Big Gunpowder River about twelve miles northeast of BALTIMORE. The impressive mansion had spreading wings, a kitchen, and "quarters" for slaves or servants. An English preacher from Nova Scotia said it was the most spacious and elegant building he had seen in America. In time the mansion was partly destroyed by fire, but what is probably a part of the central edifice, along with a small stone building with a cupola which was probably a part of the slave quarters, still stands.

Historically both Gough and his mansion are important because he entertained ASBURY, COKE, and other Methodist preachers in the house for a week prior to the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE in 1784. Undoubtedly Asbury and Coke discussed Wesley's plans and instructions for the American Methodists during their days together at Perry Hall. Coke wrote on December 17, "We set off for our valuable friend's, Mr. Gough. His new mansion-house, which he has lately built, is the most elegant in this State . . . He intends to go to Europe next spring to buy furniture for his house. Here I have a noble room to myself, where Mr. Asbury and I may, in the course of a week, mature everything for the Conference."

The Gough family became Methodists about 1775 under the ministry of Asbury. Gough's wife, a sister of Charles Ridgeley who was governor of Maryland from 1815 to 1818, was the first to be converted, whereupon her husband forbade her to attend Methodist services again. Sometime later Gough was one of a gay company at Perry Hall which decided to go to a Methodist meeting in a spirit of revelry. The outcome was different from what Gough expected; he was so affected by Asbury's sermon that he could no longer enjoy his accustomed pleasures. Then while riding over his estate, he heard a Negro from a neighboring plantation leading his own slaves in a religious service and expressing thanks for the blessings they had in their depressed lot. Deeply moved, Gough prayed for divine mercy and was converted. Then both he and his wife joined the Methodists, and thereafter Perry Hall was both an asylum for itinerants and a preaching place. THOMAS RANKIN visited Perry Hall the next year and wrote, "I spent a most agreeable evening with them." He said that when he conducted prayer the servants came in, forming "a little congregation." Gough built a chapel near his mansion, and it was claimed that when the bell rang for morning and evening devotions, visitors as well as the family and the servants repaired to the chapel for the service which often consisted of a chapter from the Bible, a hymn, and a prayer led by the mistress of the mansion.

In time Gough became estranged from the church, but was reclaimed and joined the Light Street Church, Baltimore, in 1801. Asbury visited Gough in May, 1808, found him near death, and later preached his funeral. At that time Asbury wrote in his journal concerning Gough, "That he did depart from God is well known, but it is equally certain that he was visibly restored. As I was the means of his first turning to God, so was I also of his return and restoration." He went on to praise the man's kindness, hospitality, and charities.

In October 1934, Methodist preachers dressed in the garb of Asbury's day, launched the celebration of the SEQUICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM by riding horseback from Perry Hall to Baltimore.

GOW, FRANCIS HERMAN (1896-), American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Cape Town, SOUTH AFRICA, on Sept. 29, 1896. He was educated at WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY, from which he received the A.B. degree. He also attended schools in Cape Town, South Africa; Tuskegee Institute, ALABAMA; Miami University, OHIO; and Lane Theological Seminary, Tennessee. He is the recipient of the D.D. degree from MORRIS BROWN COLLEGE and Wilberforce University, and the LL.D. degree from ALLEN UNIVERSITY. Following his ordination as DEACON and ELDER, he served American pastorates in Ohio and WEST VIRGINIA and South African A.M.E. pastorates at Cape Town and Evaton, Transvaal. Following several years as a presiding elder in South Africa, he was elected to the episcopacy in 1956. He was assigned to Cape Town, South Africa, where he supervises the work of the Fifteenth Episcopal Area District comprising four annual conferences in West Africa.

Seminary, 1897-99, and completing his seminary course, Gowdy was admitted to the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE in April 1902, and was immediately transferred to the Foochow Conference in CHINA. He taught in the Anglo-Chinese College, Foochow, 1902-04, and again, 1928-30. He was president of that institution, 1904-23, and president of Fukien Christian University in the same city, 1923-27. He served as a member of the executive committee of the National Christian Council in China.

On Feb. 27, 1930, Gowdy was elected bishop by the Eastern Asia Central Conference of the M. E. Church. He served for ten years, reaching the mandatory age for retirement in 1940. After his elevation to the episcopacy, he served as a trustee of both Anglo-Chinese College and Fukien Christian University. Bishop Gowdy was ever a "sweet spirited" Christian man. In retirement he lived in Winter Park, Fla. and died there, Sept. 9, 1963. His wife of sixty-one years survived until 1965.

GRACE. The eighteenth century Wesleyan movement has been appropriately called a "Revival of the Reformation." It recaptured the joyous confidence of classical Christianity in God's sovereign initiative in his relations with man. In it JOHN WESLEY and his followers were freed from anxious preoccupation with works designed to gain God's favor, and were liberated into a life of truly Christian good works. They testified to the Good News of God's offer of pardoned sin and renewed life. The Wesleyan Revival is distinguished by its insistence on the reality and fullness of the gospel of grace.

For Wesley, as for Paul, Augustine, and the Reformers, there is no doctrine of grace side by side with other doctrines. The doctrine of the grace of God in Jesus Christ is identical with the whole of the gospel of salvation. In its operation grace is not impersonal nor objectively mediated only by sacramental hierarchies. It is God in action, giving nothing apart from himself. It is grounded in God's love manifest in the person and work of Christ.

Wesley nowhere gives a rounded statement on the atonement of Christ, perhaps because it is everywhere presupposed in his theology. Usually it is agreed that he held the substitutionary theology of the atonement regularly professed in evangelical circles in his day. Because of sin, his own and that of Adam, man deserves the punishment of death. God's justice must be satisfied. Since satisfaction cannot be made by man, God provides for salvation by sending his son to suffer the punishment due man's sin. Wesley refers repeatedly to what Christ "has done and suffered for us." The atonement is the sole "meritorious," "procuring," or "efficient" cause of salvation. All merit is in Christ, none in man.

In a famous sermon on "Free Grace" Wesley contends for the universality of God's grace in Christ. Grace is "free in all" and "free for all." Grace for all is Wesley's answer to Calvinism. The work of Christ is not limited to a select few. God's invitation in Christ is in fact extended to all men. Wesley argues at length against Calvinist limitations on the atonement and speaks out boldly for free universal grace. Throughout its history, Methodism has given this accent consistent support.

The grace of God in all sums up Wesley's belief in the universal gift of preventent grace. To all men, wherever or whenever they are born, God bestows preliminary grace. Common to all, preventent grace does not accomplish salvation in sinful man. It does, however, provide for the possibility of his salvation which is effected by further gifts of grace received through faith. On the basis of this prior grace, man is given a responsible part in salvation even while it remains wholly of God. (See FREE WILL.)

Wesley uses the phrase "the entire work of God" to express his conviction that exclusively and inclusively salvation is the work of God's grace. First, it is the exclusive work of grace apart from human effort. It is the sole work of God. In his insistence on the sovereign initiative and exclusive agency of grace in salvation, Wesley reiterates the central theme of the Reformation.

He also stresses the inclusive character of grace. It embraces the whole work of God. Wesley's characteristic concern for the fullness of grace underlines the prominence he gives to preventent grace and to Christian perfection: to grace reaching back into man's life prior to salvation, and forward to bring his life to full salvation. Steadfastly he refused to limit the effectiveness of grace.

In salvation grace works both as pardon and as power. Grace as pardon is effective in JUSTIFICATION. It is the disposition of God to pardon and reconcile man in spite of his sin and guilt, to accept him as just, and to subject him no longer to wrath and punishment. Man's pardon is won through the work of Christ. It is received by faith.

"True and living faith in the merits of Jesus Christ" is itself a gift of grace conveyed by the Holy Spirit. Faith restores man's spiritual senses enabling him to see the things of God and to be convinced by their evidence. It is also "a sure trust and confidence in God" that relies on the merits of Christ. In faith, the work of Christ becomes direct and personal. Through such faith man is justified, his sins are pardoned, and he is restored to God's favor.

Grace as power is effective in sanctification. The pardoned sinner is a sinner still. But the faith by which he is justified also begins his sanctification. He is not simply declared righteous, but begins to be righteous, renewed in the image of God. Sanctification (regeneration, or the NEW BIRTH), entire sanctification, and CHRISTIAN PERFEC-TION are all the fruit of grace through faith. They are the product of God's love, and depend fully on Christ's atonement for their appearance, continuation and fulfillment.

In the new birth the power of sin is broken. Though sin continues, it does not reign. Its presence requires "evangelical repentance" and receptivity to further gifts of grace. Entire sanctification or Christian perfection is not, however, the end product of progressive sanctification. Nor is it produced by man's striving. It results from a further act of faith, freely given. In no stage is sanctification a static possession. It is maintained moment by moment in a personal relationship between God and man.

At the end of his life, man is rewarded according to the works of faith. "God hath joined together from the beginning, pardon, holiness, and heaven." Throughout the order of salvation, God's grace is the effective agent.

In summary, Wesley's theology of "free grace" has the following characteristics. Grace is a gift—grounded in God's free act in Christ. Grace is free for all—the atonement contains a universal invitation. Grace is free in all—preventent goodness leads and strengthens every man. Grace is free in salvation—independently of any merit or work, man is saved by grace through faith. Finally, grace is free to accomplish full salvation—consummated in entire sanctification and Christian perfection.

1790-1840. Second generation Methodists endorsed Wesley's doctrine of grace. They faced somewhat different demands, however, in response to which they emphasized different facets of the doctrine.

RICHARD WATSON, an Englishman, had the greatest influence in British and American Methodism through the middle half of the nineteenth century. He made the atonement of Christ the central doctrine of Wesleyan theology. His chief concern is to refute its denial by the Socinians (Unitarians), and its limitation by the Calvinists. In general, he upholds a theory of substitution in which the atonement has objective bearing on God's justice and the authority of his divine law. He followed Wesley closely in his discussion of the general benefits of the atonement. Though preventent grace does not appear as frequently in his theology, often he ascribes to it a more positive role than did Wesley. In his discussion of salvation proper, Watson is faithful to his heritage. He insists that man cannot repent apart from God's grace, and that justification and sanctification depend on grace received through faith. He tends, however, to interpret the element of "assent or persuasion" in faith in more rationalistic terms.

In America the early preachers, such as FRANCIS ASBURY and FREEBORN GARRETTSON, proclaimed a theology of salvation. They found the revival tradition a congenial force, supporting and being supported by it. As a result of their primary evangelical commitment, they resisted scholastic argument, the substitution of romantic feeling for evangelical conversion, and the temptation to become worldly. But they tended also to exaggerate the subjective experience of grace and its emotional accompaniments.

In its controversy with Calvinism, Methodism was tempted to modify its emphasis. NATHAN BANGS and WILBUR FISK led Methodism's defense which they based on the gracious restoration of freedom. Growing concern for a philosophical doctrine of freedom and responsibility accelerated a change in the setting in this discussion. From the realm of redemption it began to move to the realm of creation. (See FREE WILL, CALVINISTIC CONTROVERSY.) This change implied modifications in the doctrines of atonement, justification, and sanctification. Despite these implicit transitions, however, the Wesleyan doctrine of grace was still largely intact at the close of this period.

1840-1890. The changes in the doctrines of grace in nineteenth century American Methodism are nowhere more clearly and systematically expressed than in JOHN MILEY'S (1813-1895) theology. RAYMOND and Ralston endorsed the governmental theory of the atonement. WIEDON and Wakefield displayed Methodist innovations regarding man's moral agency. Most discussions of justification and sanctification had basic similarities. Miley integrated and elaborated all these developments.

Miley laid the foundation for the later development of his systematic theology in The Atonement of Christ (1879). In this volume he contends for a governmental theory of the atonement. God's concern for moral government, not his absolute justice or honor, requires the punishment of those who violate it. But governmental atonement weakened the demands of the divine holiness and justice as they had been maintained by Wesley and Watson.

For Miley, justification is addressed to the guilt arising from man's own sins. Its bearing on the guilt of original sin is explicitly denied. Forgiveness in Christ, required only by governmental justice and applied only to actual sin, became more mechanical and less exacting than it had been in Wesley.

The understanding of faith also is revised. It requires "a mental apprehension" whose truth must have a "ground in evidence." It is indissolubly linked to repentance, a "requirement of our own agency." It is not a "gift of God." Rather it is "a free personal act."

Regeneration also depends on man's free personal agency. Man must first choose it in order for God to bring it into being. Wesley's stress on sanctification, as a moment-by-moment relation produced and sustained by faith, does not appear. Entire sanctification is interpreted as a progressive realization of regeneration, not a fulfillment dependent on a decisive act of faith.

Miley's commitment to man's free personal agency (that is, the exact correspondence between accountability and guilt) shaped his doctrines of sin, atonement, and salvation. It led him to restrict the role of prevenient grace and to make imposing claims for the freedom of rational man. It resulted in a reluctant but decided departure from the original Wesleyan doctrine of grace.

In this period several others contributed to the systematization of theology and to the elaboration of the doctrine of grace. Miner Raymond in his statement of Methodist Arminianism proposed to reinterpret Wesley's theology in the categories of free personal agency. His revisions were similar to but more restrained than those of Miley. WILLIAM F. WARREN produced only an introduction to theology. It was a creative statement, however, arguing for the retention and restatement of evangelical doctrines in terms compatible with the new world view. T. O. SUMMERS was loyal to Wesley, Watson, and Pope, yet open to newer developments. He was reluctant to dismiss original guilt, yet followed Whedon on the will. He endorsed substitutionary elements, yet also asserted a governmental theory of the atonement.

Somewhat more slowly, in Britain some modifications in Wesley's doctrine took place. Toward the close of the century, the theology of WILLIAM BURT POPE recaptured the Wesleyan spirit and refocused attention on crucial emphases in the doctrine of grace (Vol. I, 321-25, 339-

42, II, 92-6, 115-69, 216-51, 263-97). His work represents learned and influential resistance in British Methodism to "liberal" theology. (Also worthy of mention in this connection is the work of J. SCOTT LIDGETT, one of the most revered leaders of this and the following period, which upholds the governmental theology.)

Conservative opponents of these revisions (E. M. MARVIN, D. STEELE, J. TIGERT) offered resistance in General Conference, in articles in The Methodist Quarterly Review, and in various books. Despite their efforts, through the nineteenth century a steady change took place in the understanding of grace.

1890-1935. The impact of philosophy of religion (Hegel, Schleiermacher, Ritschl) in the last part of the nineteenth century supported drastic changes in American doctrines of grace and fulfilled tendencies evident in the previous period. BORDEN PARKER BOWNE (1847-1910) was the most influential Methodist philosopher of religion. Though he gave only summary treatment to the doctrines of salvation, several of his followers sought to integrate his personal idealism and Christian doctrine.

Some of the theological implications of Bowne's philosophy were drawn by HENRY C. SHELDON and OLIN CURTIS. ALBERT C. KNUDSON provided its most complete and thorough-going treatment.

Knudson set aside all "abstract" and "impersonal" theories of the atonement out of preference for the moral theory. It recognizes that the obstacle to reconciliation always lies in man, not God. It stresses the revelational nature of Christ's person and work, not the objective bearing of Christ's death on God. It requires no divine drama for the removal of man's guilt. It is addressed to a man whose response is not hampered by bondage or depravity.

The metaphysical freedom that man possesses derives from creation. It is not a capacity lost by sin that has been restored through Christ's work of redemption. Man's freedom is decisive in the attainment of Christian life.

CONVERSION has both a divine and a human side. The human side is represented by repentance and faith, the divine by JUSTIFICATION and regeneration. Repentance is faith viewing the past in sorrow and contrition. In its forward aspect, faith is wholehearted devotion to God. Faith is not a unique gift of God, but a "profoundly inward and ethical act or experience" of the free man.

The terms which designate the divine side of conversion (justification, regeneration, and sanctification) are simply metaphors pointing to various phases of Christian experience. If they are transformed into doctrines, confusion and disappointment result. Grace is not a divine intervention or an unusual or alien factor in human life. It works through the "orderly processes of the human mind" to "moralize and spiritualize" man's existence. Knudson regards Christian perfection or sanctification as a "theological provincialism." It has some meaning if it implies a "completely integrated moral life."

Knudson's theology is representative of American Methodist liberalism of the first third of the twentieth century. Less boldly, HARRIS FRANKLIN RALL (1870-1964) and EDWIN LEWIS (1881-1959) elaborated the same general themes. This liberal theology reduced the doctrines of redemption essentially to human acts of repentance and faith. It denied that salvation is the rescue of an otherwise helpless man. It affirmed his freedom to improve his condition with divine assistance. It stressed God's disclosure of his love in Christ which invites man's wholehearted response and assists his moral and spiritual transformation. Salvation is a cooperative process involving man's freedom and God's grace.

JOHN A. FAULKNER, HAROLD PAUL SLOAN, and others led a vigorous but unsuccessful attack on these theological revisions. They termed them "modernism." The liberal reconstruction of theology, however, proceeded apace through the first third of the twentieth century.

1935— European crisis theology and rising tides of neoorthodoxy in America began to influence Methodism in the writings of Edwin Lewis (1934) after his radical theological conversion, and G. C. CELL (1935), an interpreter of Wesley's theology. They pointed again to man's bondage in sin and underscored the necessity for God's sovereign initiative in salvation.

Following these statements, a number of unpublished doctoral studies of Wesleyan and Methodist theology began to appear. The most scholarly and influential work to come out of British Methodism in this connection is that of VINCENT TAYLOR, who has powerfully restated in modern terms the principle of representative sacrifice, traditionally expressed in the Anselmic satisfaction-theology. This has been affirmed as essentially a New Testament doctrine, and has done much to preserve the idea of the Cross as an objective divine work of grace. Books by British and American scholars on various Wesleyan doctrines also informed Methodism about its theological heritage. Directly or by implication they reminded modern Methodism that it had modified or surrendered many of its traditional emphases. Courses on Wesley and the history of Methodist theology offered in Methodist seminaries did the same. The wider theological renaissance of the time led by Barth, Brunner, Tillich, Bultmann, the Niebuhrs, and Bonhoeffer also prompted Methodists to re-examine their historic doctrine of grace. Involvement in ecumenical discussions further moved them to consider it in relation to current doctrines of grace and that in classical Christian tradition.

Characteristic Changes. From Wesley's time, through the first third of the twentieth century, his doctrine of grace underwent steady revision. Each of its several aspects assumed a different character as Methodism sought to maintain relevance in a changing world. The development of teaching in liberal circles in America may be outlined as follows.

1. Atonement. Wesley's substitutionary theory posited an infinite distance and contradiction between God and man, apart from God's costly act in Christ. The governmental theory gained ascendancy in the nineteenth century. It assumed far less antagonism between God's holiness and man's sin. Christ's work promotes the general moral welfare of mankind. It is not intrinsic to man's release from bondage and guilt. Finally, atonement was understood by some as moral influence. This presupposed no chasm between God and man. In it man is free to respond to the ennobling example set forth in Christ.

2. Faith. Faith, in Wesley's theology, is wrought by God's grace. It cannot be produced by man's independent action. It includes elements of trust and assent. The element of assent later was interpreted in rational terms as conviction based on demonstrable evidence. Its exercise more and more was placed within man's native power. At length, it was affirmed by some to be an essential act of free human agency.

3. Human Freedom. As maintained by Wesley, the restrictions on freedom by original guilt and original depravity were successively surrendered. Concurrently there was less insistence on preventent grace as the source of man's free and responsible participation in salvation. Freedom became a natural capacity given in creation. It ceased to be a gift given by grace to sinful man through Christ's redemptive work. The context of the discussion of freedom shifted from that of evangelical renewal to that of the philosophical analysis of human responsibility. Salvation no longer was taken to be a work of God's grace from beginning to end. It became the cooperative effort of man's freedom and God's grace.

4. Justification. Justification by grace through faith was stoutly asserted by Wesley who found in grace the sole power of salvation. Repentance is preliminary to justification, though not indispensable to it or even possible apart from grace. With the later denial of God's wrath, the guilt of original sin, and the bondage of universal depravity, simple forgiveness tended to replace justification. As free acts, not God's gifts, faith and repentance placed the possibility of salvation squarely in man's hands.

5. Sanctification. In a distinctive way, Wesley insisted on the fullness of the operation of grace in sanctification or Christian perfection. He viewed them as products of faith subsequent to justification, not as moral achievements. They are not static possessions but depend continually on grace. In time, sanctification was interpreted as moral and spiritual growth and its concerns were turned outward in the Social Gospel movement. The original Wesleyan doctrine was largely relinquished to "holiness" and "second blessing" sects.

The above five propositions represent the movement of thought as it has taken place in "liberal" Methodist circles. Other schools of thought, however, particularly those centered in British Methodism, have remained much closer to the substance of Wesley's thought.

GRADED PRESS was the publisher's imprint used first about 1912 on some of the Graded Courses of Lessons issued by the METHODIST BOOK CONCERN for the M. E. Church. These courses were prepared interdenominationally, and published jointly by the M. E. Church, M. E. Church, South, and Congregational-Christian Churches (later merged into the United Church of Christ). Gradually the imprint was extended to all closely graded lessons issued by these denominations. It was used on these resources in The Methodist Church until closely graded courses were discontinued in the period of 1959-63. However, there was no actual press with this name.

In 1963, however, Graded Press was adopted as the name for the entire operation of the church school curriculum publishing department of The METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, Nashville, Tenn. This Press publishes all official United Methodist church school curriculum with the Division of Curriculum Resources of the General resources for use in the United States. It works closely with the Division of Curriculum Resources of the GENERAL BOARD OF EDUCATION, which provides the editorial supervision for these resources. The resources include a wide variety of magazines, books, flipcharts, records, filmstrips, maps, charts, teaching pictures, packets, kits, and books. These resources for 1969 reached between six and seven million persons.

GRADY, HENRY WOODFIN (1850-1889), American orator, journalist, and post-Civil War publicist of the deep South, was born in Athens, Ga., May 24, 1850, the son of William S. and Anne E. (Gartrell) Grady. His father rose from captain to colonel in the Civil War and was killed at Petersburg. Henry graduated from the University of Georgia in 1868 and studied law at the University of Virginia. In 1871 he married Julia King, with whom he had joined the Methodist Church in 1865.

Journalism was Grady's real interest and soon after leaving law school he was at work in that field. In 1879, he borrowed $20,000 and bought a fourth interest in the Atlanta Constitution. With an unerring sense for news, a zeal for ordered progress, and the capacity to plead convincingly for causes which were in advance of popular sanction, he quickly became influential. He built the Constitution into a great force in Georgia and beyond and gave it a prestige which has endured.

An orator as well as a writer, Grady was in constant demand North and South for addresses. His famous oration on "The New South," delivered with passion, frankness, and magnanimity in New York in December 1886, was incessantly declaimed for many years by aspiring young orators throughout the land. It was said that he shattered the post-bellum despair in the South.

Grady was subjected to some criticism, but generally his sincerity was unquestioned. A pious man, he came forward on one occasion to recommit his life when the pastor of First Methodist Church, Atlanta, of which he was a member, made an altar call. He was a teetotaler and an early prohibitionist.

Grady left a deep impress on Georgia, and after his untimely death, Atlanta erected an imposing monument in his memory near the Constitution building in the heart of the business district. He died Dec. 23, 1889, of pneumonia contracted while on a trip to Boston to deliver an address on the race problem. The country mourned the loss of the promising young leader.

GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA, U.S.A. Andrews Church is distinguished as the edifice in which the annual observance of Mother's Day began. H. C. Howard, the pastor, preached the first Mother's Day sermon in Andrews Church, May 10, 1908.

ANNA M. JARVIS, who had taught Sunday school in the Andrews Church, while living in PHILADELPHIA, conceived the idea of such an annual nationwide observance. Encouraged by John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia merchant, she publicized her plan. Governor William E. Glasscock of WEST VIRGINIA issued the first Mother Day's proclamation, April 26, 1910, and in May, 1914, the United States Congress designated the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day. The 1952 GENERAL CONFERENCE adopted a resolution recognizing Andrews Church as the "Mother Church of Mother's Day" and recommended that "it become a shrine symbolizing appreciation of the love and devotion of mothers."

Methodist services began in private homes in Grafton during 1852, and the next year a church building was erected. Andrews Church, named for Bishop E. G. ANDREWS, was dedicated by him, March 16, 1873. A second church, West Main Street, was established in 1875, and a third, St. Paul's, in 1902. The three congregations merged in 1962 to form the Church of the Good Shepherd, and a new church edifice was erected.

The old Andrews Church building was sold to Kiwanis International, and the organization maintains it as a historic shrine.

In 1970, the Church of the Good Shepherd in Grafton reported 642 members, property valued at $332,085, and $39,014 raised for all purposes during the year.

GRAHAM, CHARLES (1750-1824), Irish minister, was a local preacher for twenty years in his home district at Sligo until the 1790 Conference called him to the itinerancy. Because he was a fluent speaker in the Irish language, he was sent to County Kerry, then almost entirely Irish-speaking, where at the time of his appointment there was not yet a single Methodist family. His work as the "Apostle of Kerry" led to 200 members being received by the Methodist Society in the first year. His fluency in Irish led to another special appointment in 1799, as one of the three general missionaries set apart to travel all over IRELAND. The other two were GIDEON OUSELEY and JAMES MCQUIGG. American Methodism owes much to the success of these "Black Cap" or "Calvary" preachers, for many of their innumerable converts, particularly those from Roman Catholicism, found it better to emigrate to the land of greater freedom and opportunity across the Atlantic Ocean.

GRAHAM, WILLIAM CREIGHTON (1887-1955), Canadian minister and educator, was born at St. Mary's, Ontario. He was educated at Harbord Collegiate Institute, Toronto, and VICTORIA COLLEGE, from which he graduated in 1912 with the B.A. in Oriental Languages. Subsequently he attended Harvard and the University of Chicago and was promoted to the rank of full professor in the American School of Oriental Research, Jerusalem. He participated in the archaeological investigations which resulted in the discovery of blast furnaces used for smelting King Solomon's copper at the Gulf of Aqaba, and of clay tablets inscribed in a language akin to Babylonian. Graham was successful in deciphering this language.

In 1938, Graham was appointed principal of United College, Winnipeg. His term of office spanned a difficult period in the college's history. Salaries were low, and the trend was away from the humanities toward practical subjects. Yet he firmly upheld his belief that a liberal education should be provided by church colleges and that such colleges should rank with the greatest secular institutions.

In 1946 a flood of returned servicemen seriously overtaxed the college's facilities and necessitated the holding of classes in warehouses, basements, and other temporary buildings. Graham inaugurated a building fund and appealed to the public for support. He secured the active cooperation of staff and students in a personal canvass of city and province. With the completion of the first new building, Bryce Hall, in 1951 he was to see the beginning of a phenomenal period of expansion. The student body had grown from 590 in 1938 to 1,100 in 1955. Graham resigned the principalship because of failing health only a few weeks before his death, July 31, 1955. He was buried at Newmarket, Ontario.

He was the recipient of several honorary degrees and was elected in 1947 as a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada. He was the author of The Prophets and Israel's Culture (with H. E. May); Culture and Conscience; and The Meaning of the Cross.

JOHN C. GRANBERRY

GRANBERRY, JOHN COWPER (1829-1907), a bishop, was born at Norfolk, Va., Dec. 5, 1829, the son of Richard A. and Ann (Leslie) Granberry. He was graduated at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in 1848, and that school awarded him the D.D. degree in 1870. He married Jennie Massie in 1858; she died in 1859. In 1862 he married Ella Winston, and they had three children. One son, named for his father, served as an itinerant in the WESTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Converted at fifteen, licensed to preach at eighteen, Granberry joined the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1848. He was ordained DEACON in 1851 and ELDER in 1853. His appointments, all in the Virginia Conference, were: Eastville, junior preacher, 1848; Farmville, 1849; Third Street, Lynchburg, 1850-51; left without appointment in 1852 due to ill health; Loudon, junior preacher, 1853; Randolph-Macon and Boydton, 1854-55; Charlottesville, 1856; King William, supernumerary, 1857; WASHINGTON, D.C., 1858; Chaplain, University of Virginia, 1859-60; Chaplain, 11th Regiment, Virginia Volunteers, Confederate States' Army, 1861-62; Missionary to Army Corps in Northern Virginia, 1863; Superintendent of Missionaries in Army of Northern Virginia, 1864; Market Street, Petersburg, 1865-67; Centenary, RICHMOND, 1868-71; Broad Street, Richmond, 1872-74; and Professor, VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, 1875-81. He was elected bishop in 1882.

Granberry was a reserve delegate to the 1866 and 1878 GENERAL CONFERENCES (MES) and a delegate to those held in 1870, '74, and '82. Also, he was a delegate to the 1881 and 1901 ECUMENICAL CONFERENCES. He was a trustee of Vanderbilt University, 1882-1907. It seems clear that after his service as a chaplain in the Civil War, in which he was severely wounded and lost an eye, he was held in high esteem by his brethren in the Virginia Conference. The theological students at Vanderbilt affectionately called him "Old Granny." As a bishop he was missionary minded. He organized the BRAZIL CONFERENCE (MES), and he published several sermons and pamphlets in Portuguese. A number of his sermons and addresses were printed, and he brought out several books, including: Bible Dictionary (1885) and Experience the Crowning Evidence of the Christian Religion (1900). He retired in 1902 and spent his remaining years at Ashland, Va., the GRANADOSIN, PAUL LOCKE A. (1925-), a bishop of the United Methodist Church in the Philippines, born on Aug. 2, 1925, in Los Angeles, Calif. He graduated at the Philippine Christian College, MANILA, and at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY (M.A. 1968). He obtained the B.Th. degree from Union Theological Seminary of the Philippines in 1952. He married Socorro Mella, who is a graduate from Union Theological Seminary of the Philippines with a B.R.E. degree with a major in music. They have six children.

Paul Locke A. Granadosin began his career in the ministry as an associate pastor of Central Church, Manila, in 1949. He has served the San Francisco del Monte Church in Quezon City; the Malabon North Church in Malabon, Rizal; Grace Church in Calocan City; and Knox Memorial Church in Manila. He was appointed superintendent of the Manila District in 1963.

The PHILIPPINE CENTRAL CONFERENCE on Nov. 29, 1968, elected him a bishop and he was assigned to superintend the Baguio Episcopal Area, which presently consists of the Northern, Northwest and Middle Conferences.

GRAND CENTRAL ASSOCIATION was an association of British Wesleyan Methodist reformers set up in Manchester in November 1834 to organize opposition to JABEZ BUNTING and support for SAMUEL WARREN in the controversy over the plan to set up a Wesleyan theological college. The association's chief aim was to increase the laity's share of power in the Wesleyan Methodist constitution. JOHN KENT

GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA, U.S.A. On April 4, 1861, Bishop THOMAS A. MORRIS held NEBRASKA'S first annual conference at Nebraska City. He appointed fourteen preachers to various parts of the state, among them Thomas B. Lemon who was appointed as a missionary along the Platte River. Lemon rode back and forth from Fort Kearney to Columbus, often stopping to preach at the home of Judge Beal who lived where the California Trail crossed Wood River. Preaching was also held at the home of William Eldridge.

After the railroad was built, Lemon often held services in the town, and in 1869 First Church was organized with David Marquette appointed as minister. His work stretched along Wood River from Gibbon Siding to Silver Creek west of Grand Island—a distance of sixty miles. First Church was made possible by a gift of four lots from the Union Pacific Railroad. Two of these were sold, and from the proceeds a church was built at Second and Pine on the alley back of the Wolbach store. This was in 1874. The cost was $2,200. The first parsonage was built in 1879, largely by the efforts of the LADIES AID SOCIETY. From 1874 until 1890 the church grew to a membership of 700, with church school attendance over 400.

Under the leadership of C. W. Savidge services and church school were held in the opera house. This pastor handed out church hand bills to each store and tavern on Saturday afternoon. The church grew so large, and the trains ran so often keeping people from crossing the tracks at church time, that Trinity Church was organized and located north of the tracks at Sixth and Sycamore. This church soon had a church school of three hundred and built a church costing $12,000 in 1889-90.

Meanwhile First Church moved west to Cedar and Second Street and built a beautiful new church noted for its magnificent windows. The nineties were rough times but diligent pastors and courageous people kept the churches solvent, First Church finally paying its last indebtedness in 1899. The next big advance of First Church came under the leadership of S. D. Bartle, who came to the church in 1908 and remained for a number of years. A pipe organ was given by the Bentley family for this church and during Bartle's pastorate a Methodist Brotherhood was organized and a Knights of Methodism for the boys and girls.

In 1914 Trinity Church, running out of room, went to 1100 East Eighth Street across the Burlington Railroad tracks and started a church school under the leadership of Trinity people. This church has remained a mission church and center under the direction of the Trinity people, serving now a large, shifting population in that locality.

After World War I Trinity and First Church united in order to build one large congregation, but after six months this effort was discontinued and the two churches remained separate.

Then the Trinity people, under the leadership of Paul Hillman, decided to move six blocks west. A new church was erected in 1927-28, costing $90,000. Due to the depression, the two churches, First and Trinity, decided again in 1936 to become one congregation. First Church sold its building and location and moved over to Trinity. The beautiful windows were stored in a barn and later worked into the new sanctuary built in 1956-57. This new church had a combined membership of some 900 members but only half of the First Church people moved to the new church, giving it a solid membership of 750.

After the union of the two churches in 1936, the new church struggled to get a real union of the two memberships into one working congregation. During World War II, Grand Island was flooded with war workers and men from the nearby air base. The church grew to a membership of some 1,700 members under the leadership of William A. Hubbard. After the war, the Methodist churches in Grand Island began a period of rapid growth. A new church was started at West Lawn in 1954 which became a part of the Methodist Parish in 1965 until its union with the E.U.B. church as a new United Methodist Church in 1968.

In 1954 the Methodist Church renamed itself Trinity Methodist. It expanded the work at the East Side Chapel, building a new building and expanding the size of the original chapel in 1954. There are approximately 300 members of the church there, now yoked in membership with Trinity and served by the Trinity pastors. Meanwhile Trinity added a new building in 1950 which was quickly paid for and then because of rapid growth, built a new sanctuary seating 1,100 in 1956-57. By that time the church had grown to 5,500 members and still grows steadily. It had 6,423 members in 1970.

To meet the changing times three services are held each Sunday morning and in 1968 a worship service on Monday evening was started to meet the needs of those who work on Sundays. Trinity operates two church schools and other groups for all ages during the week. It has produced six ministers—Ray Gilham, Robert Linder, Warren Baker (deceased), Tom Tout, Michael Cummings and Roger Eshilman, and one missionary, Dr. Roberta Rice in KOREA.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, U.S.A., was incorporated in 1838 and became a city in 1850. Methodism began in Grand Rapids in 1835; it was a point on the Grand River Mission Circuit, Ann Arbor District, OHIO CONFERENCE (the Michigan Conference was organized in 1836).

Osband Monnett was appointed to the circuit in 1835 and Frederick Seaborn in 1836. Neither preacher left anything of lasting importance at Grand Rapids. Seaborn left the work early in the year and was expelled from the conference in 1837. Mrs. Mehitabel Stone, who was moving to Grand Rapids in 1837, told her brother-in-law, HENRY COLCLAZER, presiding elder of the Ann Arbor District, that if he would send a good preacher there she would give him room and board. Colclazer sent Orin Mitchell who organized a society of five members in the Stone home, and at conference in 1838 he reported sixty-eight members. The number grew to 151 in 1840. A church building was erected in 1842, and Grand Rapids became a station in 1844. In 1845 there were 120 members. In 1869, when there were 342 members, a new building valued at $40,000 was erected.

In 1855 a second church was organized in Grand Rapids. It continued seventeen years before erecting a building. A German language church was formed in 1872, and a Wesleyan Methodist church was organized in 1874. By 1876 there were four M. E. churches in Grand Rapids: Division Street, 461 members; Second Street, 160; City Mission, 117; and German, 89. By 1900 the denomination had eight churches in the city. As the city grew and the population shifted, some new churches were organized, some were relocated, and some were renamed. In 1910 Feakins Memorial became Burton Heights Church. In 1910 Division Street Church bought a lot for a larger building nearer the center of town and has since been known as First Church. In 1916 Clark and Trinity Churches in eastern Grand Rapids completed a merger as Trinity Church. At unification in 1939 there were eleven M. E. churches in Grand Rapids with 6,103 members.

By 1900 the Aldrich Memorial Deaconess Home and Training School of the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE was established in Grand Rapids. In 1907 the M. J. Clark Memorial Home completed its first year with ten residents. The Clarks gave their country home with twenty acres of land on the edge of Grand Rapids for the use of retired ministers, their wives and widows, and "such other worthy persons" as the trustees might accept. Several residence wings and nursing facilities were added as time passed. Since 1960 a large home for the aged with a capacity for 340 people and nursing facilities for 120 has been built.

In 1970 The United Methodist Church had fifteen churches in Grand Rapids. Three of these with a total of 1,025 members were formerly E. U. B. churches. The fifteen churches reported a total of 7,037 members, property valued at $7,050,551, and $760,433 raised for all purposes during the year.

GRANDSTRAND, PAULINE (1878-1950), was the first American missionary appointed to work among the aboriginal Santals of INDIA. She was born in Scandia, Minn., June 8, 1878, of Swedish-born parents who were lifelong Methodists. As a girl interested in a career in needlework and clothes designing, she met Bishop JOYCE, who advised her to enter the Chicago Training School for Deaconesses and Missionaries. She responded joyfully.

After completing her course, she served as a deaconess in a South Chicago School and at Lake Bluff Orphanage.

When a call came to her from India, she was eager to accept. The WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY approved but had no funds for her travel or salary. Her father offered to pay all her expenses for a first five-year term. When she reached India in 1905 she was appointed to open work among Santals, some of whom had indicated an interest in the Christian faith. During twenty-nine years, she saw the development of a Methodist Church among the Santals organized into a district of the BENGAL CONFERENCE and served by village educational primary schools, boarding schools for boys and girls, and a training school for Christian workers.

Methodists in Scandinavian countries and those of Scandinavian origin in the U.S.A. became deeply interested in the Santals and have given invaluable help to the church working among them. There are now in the Bengal Conference more than 2,800 Methodists of Santal origin.

Miss Grandstrand retired in 1934 and died Jan. 19, 1950.

ABRAM GRANT

GRANT, ABRAM (1848-1911), American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born a slave in Lake City, Fla., on Aug. 25, 1848. He was educated at Cookman Institute in FLORIDA and became an inspector of customs in that state. He was ordained DEACON in 1873 and ELDER in 1876. He held pastorates in TEXAS and was a presiding elder there. He served as vice-president of PAUL QUINN COLLEGE, and was elected bishop in 1888. He was only thirty-nine when elected bishop—next to the youngest man ever elected to the episcopacy of his church up to that time. Because of his evangelistic fervor he was popular everywhere. He sought to have permanent episcopal residences established for the bishops, and succeeded in doing so for PHILADELPHIA, KANSAS CITY, and INDIANAPOLIS. He presided over the SIERRA LEONE Annual Conference in 1899 in west Africa and organized the Central Alabama Conference of his church at Demopolis, Ala., Nov. 23, 1892.

R. R. Wright, Bishops (AME), 1963. GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

GRANT, ALSIE RAYMOND (1897-1967), American bishop, was born on Aug. 24, 1897, at Oshkosh, Wis., the son of Alsie Rollen and Katharine (Miller) Grant. He was educated at CORNELL COLLEGE, Mount Vernon, Iowa, receiving the A.B. degree in 1919, and the D.D. in 1932; from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, the S.T.B. in 1926, and the D.D. in 1955; L.H.D. from ALASKA METHODIST UNIVERSITY, 1965, and College of Idaho, 1965. He married Doris Malin on June 22, 1921, and they had one daughter, Jean Marilyn (Mrs. Kimball Salmon).

In 1921, A. Raymond Grant was admitted on trial in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE and was ordained ELDER in 1926. His pastorates included: Mason City, Iowa, 1919-21; general secretary, Y.M.C.A., Mason City, Iowa, 1921-23; Nashua, Iowa, 1926-28; First Church, Vinton, Iowa, 1928-31; Simpson Church, MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., 1931-33; First Church, DULUTH, Minn., 1933-37; and First Church, SACRAMENTO, Calif., 1937-52. He was elected bishop in 1952 and assigned to the PORTLAND Area which included the OREGON, the IDAHO and the ALASKA MISSION CONFERENCES. This Area he served faithfully and efficiently until his death in 1967. At the time of the earthquake disaster in ALASKA, Bishop Grant was particularly effective in awakening the entire church to the need for help.

Bishop Grant was a visiting professor in homiletics at Pacific School of Religion, 1942-45. He was president of the General Board of Christian Social Concerns of The Methodist Church and president of the Sacramento Council of Churches, 1941-43; a member of the Commission on Interdenominational Relations, 1944-48; and president of the Oregon Council of Churches, 1962-63.

Before his election as bishop, he served as delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of The Methodist Church, 1944, '48, and '52; of the Western JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of 1944, '48 and '52; and was a delegate to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Amsterdam, 1948; delegate to the Oxford Conference, 1951. He was a trustee of WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, Salem, Ore.; of Willamette View Manor, Portland, Ore.; UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND; and president of the Board of Trustees of Alaska Methodist University. His health became impaired during the 1964-68 quadrennium and after a lengthy period of illness he died on Aug. 15, 1967.

GRANT, FRANCIS CHAPMAN FERGUSON (1894-), educator, linguist, and president of the Conference of the Methodist Church in GHANA, was born on Aug. 5, 1894, at Cape Coast, Ghana. He attended a Methodist secondary school at Cape Coast and eventually prepared to offer for the ministry of the Methodist Church. He was trained at Richmond College, 1913-15.

He served at Wesley Church, Cape Coast; on the staff of Wesley College, 1923-35. In 1927 he joined the Colonial Office representatives and went deeply into a study of the Ghana language, especially the Fante. He was Journal Secretary of the annual Synod of his Church, 1920-25; minister and manager of schools at Obusasi, 1935-42; transferred to Saltpond as pastor and circuit superintendent, 1942-43, and from 1943-49 was on the teaching staff of Mfantispim and chaplain. He married his first wife in March, 1923, and two children were born of this marriage. Mrs. Grant died in 1926, and in 1933 he married Victoria Grant, and they have three daughters.

His further services included pastoral work and the superintendency at Cape Coast, Saltpond, Sekondi, and then he was elected chairman and general superintendent and elected president-designate for the Conference for the autonomous Church which was inaugurated in 1961. At that time he became president of the Conference of the Methodist Church of Ghana and served for five years.

A trained linguist, he worked upon a new translation of the Holy Bible into Fante in 1966, and is presently working upon a translation of the New Testament. The government of Ghana gave him the Grand Medal for Distinguished Service in 1969 at the Inauguration of the Second Republic. A hymnist also, F. C. F. Grant has edited original hymns in the Fante language and translated several hymns in the Fante Hymn Book for the Synod of the Church. Some years ago he compiled an order of service for the blessing of civil marriages in the church, and this was authorized for use in the Church in Ghana. He presently resides at Standfast in Accra, Ghana.

GRANT, ROBERT ALEXANDER (1878-1939), American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Tallahassee, Fla. He received a B.S. from Florida A. and M. College ca. 1908, and a B.D. from GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1911. He was honored with the degrees of D.D. and LL.D. He was admitted into the Florida Annual Conference in 1911 and ordained an elder in 1912. He held pastorates in Florida and was a presiding elder there. He was noted as a church financier. He was elected bishop in 1928 from the pastorate of Grant Memorial Church in JACKSONVILLE, Florida. He died in 1939 from injuries suffered in an automobile wreck.

GRANT, ULYSSES SIMPSON (1822-1885), the eighth President of the United States of America and an attendant of the M. E. Church, was born to Jesse and Hannah Simpson Grant on April 27, 1822 in Point Pleasant, Ohio and named Hiram Ulysses Grant. In 1839 Ulysses, the oldest of six children, left his boyhood home in Georgetown, Ohio to attend the United States Military Academy. When his West Point appointment accidentally listed him as Ulysses Simpson Grant, he accepted the change. After graduation in 1843, he served in the war with Mexico and was advanced to the rank of brevet captain in 1847.

Returning from the war, he married Julia Boggs Dent of St. Louis, Mo., on Aug. 22, 1848. Their first of four children was born two years later. In 1854 Grant resigned from the army. Until 1861, when he reentered the army, he worked at various occupations with limited success.

As commander of the Union armies in the West, his victory over the Confederate forces at Vicksburg on July 4, 1863 gave the North a new hero. Rewarded with an advancement to the rank of lieutenant-general, Grant was given command of the Army of the Potomac. On April 9, 1865 at Appomattox Court House, Virginia, he accepted the surrender of the Confederate commander, Robert E. Lee.

In 1868 Grant was nominated by the Republican Party for the office of President and on November 3 was elected over his Democrat opponent, Horatio Seymour. He was reelected in 1872. Although he personally continued to hold the affection of the masses, his Administration was discredited by a number of scandals and a depression in 1873. In 1880 he was unsuccessful in an unprecedented bid for a third nomination. In the closing years of his life he met with financial misfortunes which he offset only by the sale of his Memoirs completed shortly before his death.

While President, Grant regularly attended the Metropolitan M. E. Church in WASHINGTON, D.C. His pastor, JOHN PHILIP NEWMAN, later became a bishop of the church. On April 2, 1885, three months before his death, Grant was baptized and received into membership by Bishop Newman. Political opponents often charged that Grant drank excessively, but there is little supporting evidence. It has been suggested that he suffered from migraine headaches and that this was responsible for the drinking rumors.

Ulysses S. Grant died on July 25, 1885 at Mount McGregor, N. Y., of throat cancer. Following the funeral conducted by Bishop Newman, he was buried in New York City. A large tomb has since been erected on the site.

GRAVE MARKER

GRAVE MARKER FOR MINISTERS. The official marker for the graves of Methodist ministers, as shown in the accompanying illustration, was designed, and is fabricated and sold, by the General Commission on Archives and History, Lake Junaluska, North Carolina.

The need for such a grave marker was felt for many years. Over a period of time some annual conferences and individuals drafted designs for markers, and in some instances manufactured and used them, but none of them was officially adopted by the larger church.

For some years the Association of Methodist Historical Societies, predecessor of the General Commission on Archives and History, was aware of the demand for an official grave marker and sought to meet it. The Executive Committee of the Association appointed several subcommittees in succession to consider the matter and bring in recommendations. In each instance their suggested designs failed of approval. Then a subcommittee was instructed to draft appropriate guidelines for a marker, and in time the Executive Committee agreed that an emblem for the graves of Methodist ministers "should be simple and dignified in design; . . . should possess a timeless quality appropriate for the past, the present, and the future; . . . should be distinctively Methodist, while at the same time related to the historic Christian tradition; and should be suitable for a minister . . . within the framework of . . . a world church."

The design finally adopted seems to conform fairly well to the guidelines. Obviously a circuit rider on a horse is the historic symbol of early American Methodism, and it evokes appropriate sentiments today. The horse and rider face west, as did early American Methodism, and they are superimposed on a globe, suggesting Wesley's words, "The world is my parish." "Methodist Minister" and "United" at the top and bottom of the emblem suggest the contemporary United Methodist Church and the possibility of Methodism becoming part of a larger church in the ecumenical era.

The grave marker, five inches in diameter, is fabricated of bronze, and is so made that it can be embedded in a tombstone, placed upright on a shaft in the ground, or rest flush with the level of the ground.

The design was adopted at a joint meeting of the Executive Committee of the Association of Methodist Historical Societies and the Historical Society of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, Dayton, Ohio, in March, 1968. Jurisdictional and annual conference historical organizations were advised of the official approval of the design, and manufacture and sale of the marker began.

GRAVES, RICHARD (1715-1804), Anglican satirist of Wesleyanism, was born at Mickleton, Gloucestershire, on May 4, 1715. He went to Pembroke College, Oxford, 1732-6, and was ordained in 1741. In 1749 he became rector of Claverton, near Bath, in Somerset, and remained there until his death. He published a book of epigrams in 1765, but his novel, The Spiritual Quixote (1773), was his first serious work. He also published Columella (1779), Eugenius (1785), Plexippus (1790), together with various books of poetry and a Memoir of William Shenstone (1788). The Spiritual Quixote remains his memorial, a genial satire of the eighteenth century Wesleyans, which ran to four editions by 1792, and has been reprinted in the twentieth century.

Its origin was in 1757, when a journeyman shoemaker entered Claverton and drew off most of Graves' congregation to services in a large old house; the itinerant had failed to obtain a preaching-license, however, and so Graves was able to drive him away. The book, however, does not suggest personal malice. His case against the Wesleyans was that they were righteous overmuch, that they neglected more important duties in order to pray and preach, that the doctrine of justification by faith easily became a mode of spiritual self-indulgence, that their religious meetings stirred up undesirable mass emotion, and that they fostered superstition (JOHN WESLEY's use of the lot for deciding questions was one instance).

In form, the book recounts the summer ramble of Geoffry Wildgoose through the Midlands and WALES, accompanied by a village cobbler, Jerry Tugwell, preaching Methodist doctrine. Wildgoose is not a portrait of any Methodist leader, but was based in part on the author's brother, Charles Graves, who became a Methodist himself. He may have drawn on William Warburton's Doctrine of Grace (1750), for the theological substance of his criticism. His style and approach owe much to Fielding and something to Sterne. The moral of the book is that the Methodists are mistaken in their rejection of the world as sinful; the plain tradition of English country life (no doubt over-valued through the eyes of a comfortable eighteenth century parson who had the best of it), is a means of grace intended by God; as for religion, "if the clergy would not do their duty . . . as the canons of the Church required, there would be no necessity for these extraordinary proceedings." This was the most civilized attack on eighteenth century Methodism published, and a valuable witness to contemporary feelings about it.

JOHN KENT

GRAY, ALSON (1798?-1880), American LOCAL PREACHER and evangelist, who after 1828 withdrew from the M. E. Church and joined the reformers who had established the M. P. CHURCH in NORTH CAROLINA. In a history of the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church given by JESSE ELI PRICHARD in 1927, Gray was cited as foremost among "many intellectual giants" who played an important part in the organization of M. P. churches in the state. During his long ministry, Gray served the Guilford, Orange, Granville, Randolph, Yadkin and Haw River Circuits and organized a number of churches including the Fair Grove Church, Haw River Circuit, Rockingham County; Mount Pleasant Church, Liberty Circuit, Cleveland County; Concord Church, Saxapahaw Circuit, Alamance County; Pleasant Grove Church, Davidson Circuit, Davidson County; and Dalton Chapel, Dalton, N. C.

He was president of the North Carolina Conference in 1836, 1837, 1843, 1844, 1846. In 1840 he was appointed to serve as conference missionary with instructions "to travel as suited his convenience and be supported by his own collections." He served as conference evangelist in 1874-75 and 1878-79. He was a trustee of the ill-fated JAMESTOWN FEMALE COLLEGE and served as its agent in 1858-59. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1854 and 1858. On the division of the North Carolina Conference in November 1878, Gray was elected to serve as president pro-tem of the Western North Carolina Conference. (This conference reunited with the North Carolina Conference in 1880.)

Gray died on Sept. 25, 1880.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

GRAY, EDWARD JAMES (1832-1905'), American preacher and educator was born of Scotch Irish ancestry and genuine Methodist parentage, on a farm in Centre County, Pa., July 27, 1832. He died in the Johns Hopkins Hospital, BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 20, 1905.

He was educated at Williamsport Dickinson Seminary, where he was graduated with honors in 1858. The following year he entered the EAST BALTIMORE Annual CONFERENCE, not without misgivings, and began his ministerial career.

He served a succession of pastorates in his Annual Conference with distinction. In 1874 he was elected to the presidency of Williamsport Dickinson Seminary, a position he held for thirty-one years. He was an outstanding educator and the years of his leadership are among the most illustrious in the institution's history. Gray was an eloquent preacher. He was in demand throughout his career as a preacher to preachers, and was highly respected for his scholarly brilliance in the pulpit.

From DICKINSON COLLEGE he received a M.A. degree in 1876, and the honorary D.D. degree in 1882. He was a member of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1891, and of the same conference in 1901. He was elected to five GENERAL CONFERENCES between 1888-1904. He had a certain charm of manhood about him. It drew men to him and they knew him as a distinguished leader.

D. FREDERICK WERTZ

GRAY, JOSEPH M. M. (1877-1957'), American pastor, author and chancellor of AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, was born on Aug. 31, 1877, at Montgomery, Pa., the son of Joseph and Mary Ann Miller Gray. He was educated at DICKINSON COLLEGE (A.B., 1876); and at DREW SEMINARY (B.D., 1901). BAKER UNIVERSITY gave him a D.D. in 1915, and SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY the Litt.D. in 1925. On Oct. 14, 1903, he married Elizabeth Lily McCurdy and to them were born two sons and a daughter.

Gray held a number of strong appointments over the M. E. Church, first in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE where he served Rogers Memorial, Wesley Chapel, Havre de Grace and East Baltimore; and then Hamline in WASHINGTON, D. C. He then went to the Grand Avenue Church in KANSAS CITY, Mo., then to Elm Park at SCRANTON, Pa. and to the Central Church at DETROIT, Mich. From thence he became chancellor of American University in Washington, D. C., which position he maintained until his retirement.

Gray was a member of the Joint Hymnal Commission of the M. E. Churches, 1930-4. He was author of The Old Faith in the New Day; The Contemporary Christ; An Adventure in Orthodoxy; Sufficient Ministers; Concerning the Faith; Prophets of the Soul; and The Post War Strategy of Religion—the last written during the second World War. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his Church in 1920, '24, '28, and '32—at which last he was put in strong nomination for the episcopacy. Also he was a member of the General Conference of 1936, of the UNITING CONFERENCE in 1939, and of the North Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of 1940 and '44. Gray was positive and strong-minded and always expressed his convictions with great force. He died in his home in Pelham Manor, N. Y. on Jan. 9, 1957.

GREEN, ALEXANDER LITTLE PAGE (1807-1874), eminent minister in both the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church,

A. L. P. GREEN

South, was born on June 24, 1807 in Sevier County, Tenn. In his childhood he came with his parents to reside in Jackson County, northern ALABAMA. Here he joined the M. E. Church when he was nine years of age. In 1824 he was licensed to preach by the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE, which at that time included northern Alabama. As a circuit rider he moved frequently, as was customary in those days, preaching in a number of small towns in the area of the cities of Athens, Huntsville, and Decatur before becoming presiding elder for a period of thirty-four years. He was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE at the age of twenty-five. This important position he filled at every General Conference but one during the rest of his life.

Representing north Alabama churches in the Tennessee Conference, A. L. P. Green was a delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. Church of 1844. On the withdrawal of the Southern delegations at the conclusion of that General Conference, Green became a leader in the formation of the M. E. Church, South. He played an important role in the lawsuit that resulted in the division of the sizable funds of the METHODIST BOOK CONCERN. Green was one of the original trustees chosen to operate ATHENS COLLEGE, which was incorporated on Jan. 9, 1843 by the General Assembly of the State of Alabama as the Female Institute of the Tennessee Conference of the M. E. Church. The last two years of his life he spent largely in contributing time and money toward the establishment of VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. His death occurred on July 15, 1874.

GREEN, ALFRED ELI (1850-1914), Canadian missionary, was born in Tiffeld, England, on July 16, 1850. As a young man he came to Victoria, on Vancouver Island, where he met "Father" McKay at the old Pandora Street Church. He was received on trial in 1877, and into full connection in 1881. While attending a prayer meeting Green was struck with the impassioned appeal of THOMAS CROSBY for a missionary who would go to the Indians on the remote Nass River. Green volunteered, and in 1877 he set out for his new field. A year later he married Elizabeth Jane Gilbert of Nanaimo, who accompanied him to the Nass, where they stayed for twelve years in conditions of great privation.

From the Nass he was sent to Fort Simpson for one year before leaving Indian work for less strenuous responsibilities. He served on several pastoral charges in British Columbia, and was for three years chairman of the Vancouver district. In 1908 ill health forced him to retire from pastoral work.

Alfred Green was intensely evangelistic and an ardent worker for temperance and for moral reform. For four years he was "Grand Chief Templar of the Independent Order of Good Templars in British Columbia." If he had been a merchant he would have prospered greatly. Unknown to his brethren, he was a success in business, owning several canneries and mining claims. He died Jan. 28, 1914.

GREEN, ANSON (1801-1879), Canadian minister, was born in Middleburgh, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1801. He was educated in the local schools and, being unable to attend college, pursued in addition an independent course of study. Although his mother was a Baptist, many of his friends and relatives were Methodists. He was converted in 1819 at a Methodist meeting. Four years later he emigrated to Upper Canada and became a teacher near Kingston.

As a literate, faithful Christian with some preaching experience in the United States, Green was naturally singled out as a potential itinerant. At the first session of the Canada Conference, held at Hallowell in August 1824, Green was licensed to preach under the presiding elder and appointed to Smith's Creek circuit near the present town of Port Hope. Received on trial in 1825, he was ordained DEACON at the Conference of 1827. Already he was becoming a prominent figure, for, at the Conference of 1828, he preached the first sermon after the Conference formally achieved independence. Despite the pleas to return addressed to him by his American brethren, Green had by this date become attached to Canada. He would remain in the Canadian Methodist connection for the rest of his life.

In 1832, WILLIAM CASE, the acting general superintendent, appointed Green presiding elder of the Augusta district in eastern Upper Canada. The bitter climate and miserable roads of that region in combination with Green's determination to perform his duties resulted in permanent damage to his health. Nevertheless, after the union of 1833, he continued as a district chairman. During these years, too, he was an active member of the Upper Canada Academy Board; in consequence he became an active promoter of Methodist educational institutions.

In 1842, and again in 1863, Green was president of the Canada Conference. The 1844 Conference appointed him BOOK STEWARD, a post which for a time he combined with the office of district chairman. He continued as Book Steward until 1834, and from 1860 to 1864. He was a representative to the English Conference in 1854 and 1856 and was a delegate at the first General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada, in 1874.

The posts which Anson Green held in the Canadian Conference do not truly indicate the significant role which he played in its work. Although he was detached from regular circuit work at an early stage, he was an indefatigable and effective preacher—one who combined dignity and warmth in his words and his deportment. Increasingly, too, he was called upon to manage the legislative and financial affairs of his church. In this capacity he was involved in delicate political negotiations and in frequent contacts with the English and American conferences. The D.D. degree which was conferred on him in 1853, was indeed an inadequate reward for his distinguished services. With his death in Toronto, Feb. 19, 1879 one of the last great links with American Methodism and with the early years of Canadian Methodism was severed.

GREEN, FRANCIS HARVEY (1861-1951), American educator, was born May 19, 1861, at Booth's Corner, Del. Co., Pa. He married Gertrude Heritage of Bryn Mawr, Pa., in 1911. They had no children. He was educated at West Chester (Pa.) State Normal School; Amherst College (Mass.); DICKINSON COLLEGE; and Harvard University. He received the Litt.D. degree from Temple University; and the LL.D. from Juniata College. He was professor of English at Juniata College, 1884-1888, and was head of the Department of English at West Chester Normal for thirty-two years. He then became the headmaster of Pennington Prep School in New Jersey, 1921, where he served for twenty-two years. He was called back to serve another year in his 85th year.

Green was a gifted and noted speaker, in great demand, averaging more than five speaking engagements a week for more than forty years. He was a famous after-dinner speaker, using "The Nature and Worth of Wit and Humor" several thousand times. He lectured on literature, education, religion and moral subjects. His works as an author included Notes on Rhetoric and Desirable Degrees. His best works as a compiler were Quotations from Great Authors; What They Say Day by Day; What Others Say Each Passing Day. His verse and prose were widely used in periodicals and magazines. Many of his poems were set to music by Adam Geibel and Grant Colfax Tullar. His life was dedicated to building and shaping strong stalwart Christian character. The famous columnist, Mark Sullivan, said of Green, "Such a man should be put into a mold and a thousand replicas made, and one should be given to every school and college in the world."

Green continued to be active until his death, having spoken to the largest Protestant congregation in PHILADELPHIA the last Sunday of his life. He was attending a special assembly at the Pennington School when stricken with a fatal heart attack, Jan. 23, 1951, before being presented to the students. He was taken back to Booth's Corner for burial.

G. NELSON MOORE

GREEN, RICHARD (1829-1907), British minister, was born at BIRMINGHAM on June 16, 1829. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1853. He established a great reputation as a student of Methodist history, and was one of the small group of pioneers who worked to put the study of the past of British Methodism on a new, much more scholarly footing. It was he, then a tutor at Didsbury College, who in June 1893 sent out the circular which led to the formation of the WESLEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY; he became the first president of the society, from 1894 to 1907. In 1861 he went to ITALY, becoming a pioneer missionary there. He developed especially the work in Naples. His health in 1863 forced him to return to England.

Among Green's earlier publications was the FERNLEY LECTURE for 1890, The Mission of Methodism. In the last years of his life he produced many books, including the still vitally important work, Anti-Methodist Publications Issued During the Eighteenth Century (1902). A not dissimilar kind of compilation was The Works of John and Charles Wesley: A Bibliography (1896; 2nd ed., enl., 1906). Biographical studies were John Wesley, Evangelist (1905); Thomas Walsh (1906); and The Conversion of John Wesley (1908).

Green had a vast library of Wesleyan literature, and it was his urging which led to the editing of a new, standard edition of JOHN WESLEY'S Journal, the nineteenth-century versions of which were full of inaccuracies. He died on Sept. 19, 1907.

JOHN NEWTON

GREEN BAY, WISCONSIN, U.S.A., a fur trading post as early as 1665, was settled about 1745 and was incorporated as a city in 1854. Methodism was first planted in WISCONSIN at Green Bay. In 1832, JOHN CLARK, a preacher who had come from England, was sent to the Fox River Mission which embraced Green Bay. This mission is first mentioned in the appointments of the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE in 1835, and William Royal was the preacher in charge that year. A church building was erected in 1836, and twenty years later it was replaced by another. There was a German church in Green Bay as early as 1864, and a Norwegian congregation by 1876. In the latter year, First Church had twenty-eight members, the German church fifty-eight, and the Norwegian church twenty-five.

First Church erected its fourth building in 1902 when it had 149 members. The structure was destroyed by fire in 1926, and a Gothic edifice costing $240,000 was built in 1929. At that time there were about 440 members. An education building was erected in 1958. In 1970 First Church reported 1,543 members.

The Fort Howard community adjoined, and in 1895 became a part of Green Bay. In the early years the Methodists at Fort Howard were included in the Green Bay Church. Then in April 1869, the Fort Howard church was organized with thirty members, and that fall W. J. Olmsted was appointed as the first pastor. A church building was erected in 1871. In 1890 the church was relocated at North Chestnut and Hubbard Streets and was called First Church. Five years later when Green Bay annexed Fort Howard, the name of the church was changed to St. Paul's. At that time it had 212 members, while First Church in Green Bay had 126. St. Paul's continued to grow and in 1953 it put up a new edifice at Division and Wilson Streets costing some $350,000. At that time it had 885 members. In 1970 it reported 1,187 members.

Bethany Church in southwest Green Bay was started in 1950, was organized in 1952 with fifty-eight charter members. A building was erected in 1954, and a new one was consecrated in 1967. In 1970 Bethany Church had 618 members.

The former German language church in Green Bay, now called Zion, had 141 members in 1970. The former

E.U.B. Church had one church in Green Bay. It reported 171 members in 1970.

In 1970 the five United Methodist churches in Green Bay reported a total of 3,660 members, property valued at $2,223,055, and $234,303 raised for all purposes.

GREEN MOUNTAIN COLLEGE, Poultney, Vermont, was chartered by the Vermont legislature in 1834 as the Troy Conference Academy of the Methodist Church. From 1863 to 1874 it was known as Ripley Female Seminary and was Vermont's first institution of higher learning for women to grant an academic degree. It reverted to its original name in 1874 and operated as an academy until 1931, when it was reorganized as a coeducational junior college. In 1943 it became a two-year college for women. The governing board has thirty-three members, twenty-one elected by the TROY CONFERENCE, nine self-perpetuating; three elected by alumnae.

GREENCASTLE, INDIANA, U.S.A. with a population of 10,000, is the Putnam County seat. In 1837 the Indiana Asbury (now DePAUW) UNIVERSITY was founded here by the INDIANA CONFERENCE. The major industries located in or near Greencastle are the American Zinc Products Division of Ball Brothers, Lone Star Cement Corporation, International Business Machines Corporation and the P. R. Mallory & Co.

A Virginian, William Cravens, an "insatiable enemy of slavery and drunkenness," ministered to a Methodist Society in Greencastle as early as 1822. At irregular intervals he preached, also, in a log church built in 1826. Ten years later the church became a station, with its own minister, the eloquent James L. Thompson. An imposing brick church, Roberts Chapel, was built in 1847. It was named for INDIANA'S first resident bishop, ROBERT R. ROBERTS, who is buried on the DePauw University campus. Largely responsible for the erection of this building were David Southard and Peter Albaugh. Because a flood washed away the last available sawmill in Greencastle, they rode horseback to CINCINNATI, round-trip 300 miles, and purchased machinery required to produce lumber from nearby forest trees.

A second Methodist congregation built Simpson Chapel in 1850. Its name honored MATTHEW SIMPSON, first president of Indiana Asbury University, and later a bishop. This congregation merged with that of Roberts Chapel in 1872. Yet another Methodist congregation built Locust Street Church in 1876.

Roberts Chapel in time became crowded and in 1879 the cornerstone of the College Avenue church was laid. John E. Porter was minister of College Avenue church and H. C. Clippenger was pastor of the Locust Street church when the congregations merged in 1924. C. Howard Taylor was the minister to carry out the terms of the merger which included building a new church. The new building, erected in 1929, with financial aid from DePauw University, was named Gobin Memorial Methodist Church in honor of HILLARY A. GOBIN, a Methodist minister and former president of the university, as well as a faithful member of the congregation.

Robert W. Gingery was the minister when the educational unit, CHARTERHOUSE, was built in 1961. The name was selected because Charterhouse in London was the school JOHN WESLEY attended as a youth. The Methodist Student Foundation building was completed in 1965.

Active members of Gobin numbered 875 in 1970. The church doors are open to individuals of all races.

There have been two Negro Methodist congregations in Greencastle. The Bethel A.M.E. church was organized in 1872; the church stands at the corner of Crown and Apple Streets, where it has been improved from time to time.

GREENE, SHERMAN LAWRENCE (1886-1967), American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Vicksburg, Miss., on June 15, 1886. He was educated at Alcorn College (Mississippi), SHORTER COLLEGE (Arkansas) and Campbell College (Mississippi), receiving the A.B. degree from the two latter institutions. He received the B.D. degree from WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY. Honorary degrees awarded him include: ALLEN UNIVERSITY, A.M. and Wilberforce University, D.D. and LL.D. He was ordained DEACON in 1908 and ELDER in 1910; held pastorates in ARKANSAS and LOUISIANA; was presiding elder in Louisiana and Arkansas; president of Lampton College (Louisiana) and Shorter College; member of the General Conference for more than fifty years; a delegate to seven WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCES and a participant in ecumenical affairs since 1938. Greene was elected to the episcopacy in 1928 from the presiding eldership. He served as bishop for thirty-three years, was in all the important boards and councils of his church, and said of himself that he "was probably the most widely travelled Bishop in the history of the church and had had more honors heaped on him than any other." He resided in Atlanta, Ga., was assigned to write the history and polity of African Methodism. He died in Atlanta, July 25, 1967.

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA, U.S.A., named for General Nathanael Greene who was in command of American forces at the battle of Guilford Courthouse in 1781, was founded in 1808. Since the Guilford Circuit was formed in 1783, Methodism was in the region long before the town was established. However, there is no evidence that Methodism gained a permanent foothold in Greensboro until twenty-two years after its founding. A deed for land for a Methodist church, made out to BISHOP ASBURY and his successors, was recorded March 5, 1791 in Guilford County, but today nothing is known about such a church. The deed for the Pleasant Garden Church, the oldest Methodist church in Guilford County, is dated 1792. So far as is known, the oldest Methodist congregation in Greensboro is the West Market Street Church. It was organized in 1830 under PETER DOUB, and its first building was completed in 1831. Through the years West Market has sponsored six other churches in the city: Centenary (1887), College Place (1900), Carraway Memorial (1907), Bethel (1919), Park Place (1920), and Christ Church (1956). West Market is one of the largest Methodist churches in the Carolinas and Virginia; it reported 3,428 members in 1970.

In 1869 the M. E. Church reentered NORTH CAROLINA and formed the North Carolina Conference. Greensboro Station (Negro) appears in the appointments in December 1870, with 100 members. By 1900 the North Carolina Conference had four churches in Greensboro with nearly 1,000 members. At unification in 1939, the conference had five churches in the city with 1,356 members. St. Matthews Church was the largest (553 members). In 1968 when the North Carolina-Virginia Conference merged with the overlying conferences of the Southeastern Jurisdiction, it had five churches in Greensboro with 1,325 members.

The M. P. Church, largely a rural denomination, was slow to essay organizing a church in Greensboro. In 1886 the Board of Church Extension, North Carolina Conference (MP), agreed to consider Greensboro as a mission point, and appointed a committee of seven men to look after M. P. interests there. After three years the committee reported having subscribed between $3,000 and $4,000 toward the project, and in May 1891, J. R. Ball organized Grace Church. W. F. Ohrum, who was to graduate from WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in the spring of 1892, became the first pastor. In 1900 Grace Church had 116 members. By 1930 it reported over 400 members and a building that cost $100,000. It was then regarded as one of the strongest churches in the denomination. In 1970 Grace Church reported 1,096 members and property valued at $859,000. In 1919 St. Paul and West End M. P. churches were established with 162 and 93 members, respectively. In 1925 Calvary Church was organized with 130 members. In 1931 the M. P. churches in Greensboro had a total of about 1,100 members.

Methodist institutions in Greensboro include GREENSBORO and BENNETT COLLEGES and the North Carolina Christian Advocate. Greensboro College, founded in 1838, is the second oldest college for women in the United States. Bennett College was established by the M. E. Church in 1873.

In 1970 The United Methodist Church had 25 churches in Greensboro which reported a total of 15,589 members, property valued at $10,347,227, and $1,709,525 raised for all purposes.

Grace Church was one of the strongest and most influential congregations in the M. P. connection prior to 1939. It was one of the first city churches organized by the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE (MP). In 1886 the conference Board of Church Extension voted to make Greensboro a mission point, and appointed a committee to raise money. Some $3,000 to $4,000 was secured in cash and pledges, and in May 1891, Grace Church was organized with twenty-two charter members. W. F. Ohrum, scheduled to graduate from Westminster Theological Seminary in 1892, was the first pastor. In succeeding years, a number of strong preachers, including T. J. Ogburn, S. K. Spahr and C. W. BATES, served the church. Prior to unification, Grace Church helped to establish St. Paul and Calvary Churches. In May, 1926, the Grace congregation occupied a new building costing $100,000. In 1956 the church erected an education building that cost $160,000. On March 30, 1900, the North Carolina branch of the M. P. WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY was organized in Grace Church with Mrs. J. F. McCulloch as president. Then in 1908, Mrs. McCulloch organized in Grace Church the first North Carolina local church society of the WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY. The Grace Church organization sponsored a medical missionary in CHINA for several years. The North Carolina Conference (MP) met in Grace Church seven times between 1895 and 1934, and the uniting session of the conference convened there October 18-20, 1939, with J. E. Pritchard as president. At that time Grace Church had 336 members.

In 1970 Grace Church reported 1,096 members, property valued at $859,000, and $115,356 raised for all purposes.

Moriah Church, originally located four miles outside the city, was one of about eight in North Carolina almost 100 percent of whose congregations withdrew from the M. E. Church to join the M. P. Church when it was formed. Moriah Church was organized Nov. 22, 1813, when "fifty rods of land" was deeded to the Moriah Society of the M. E. Church by Robert Gilbreath, a Methodist preacher. Prior to that date eleven persons from three families had worshiped in an old log schoolhouse on the property. In 1829 copies of The Mutual Rights were distributed in the neighborhood. As a result the members of Moriah Church met and chose a committee to draft resolutions disapproving of the autocratic government in the M. E. Church and to take the necessary steps to affiliate with the Associated Methodist Church (Methodist Protestant Church after 1830). Of the thirty-six members in Moriah Church at the time, thirty-four withdrew to go to the M. P. Church. Moriah Church thus became the first M. P. congregation in central and western North Carolina, and as such it was the mother of several M. P. churches in the area. The church was on several circuits as follows: Guilford, 1829-42; Randolph, 1842-63; Greensboro, 1863-92; Tabernacle, 1892-1926; and Moriah, 1926-39. In 1853 the original church building was moved onto an adjoining tract, and the original site was then used as a cemetery. The North Carolina Conference (MP) met at Moriah Church in 1856 and 1876. For many years a CAMP MEETING was held at Moriah Church the fourth week in August. When Grace Church, Greensboro, was organized in 1891, about twenty Moriah members transferred there. A new church building was erected in 1914. At unification in 1939, Moriah Church had about 150 members. In 1949 an education building was constructed, using some of the hand-hewn timbers from the original church. In 1954 the third sanctuary was erected, and in 1966 another education building was projected. In 1970 Moriah Church reported 413 members, property valued at $321,400, and $45,084 raised for all purposes.

West Market Street Church was organized in 1830 under the leadership of PETER DOUB who was serving the Guilford Circuit that year. The church was listed in the conference minutes as Greensboro Station until 1887 when a second church was formed in the city. The cornerstone for West Market Street's first building was laid May 14, 1830. It was the first meetinghouse of any denomination in the city. The first separate session of the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, after it was set off from the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE by action of the 1836 General Conference, was held in January 1838, in the Greensboro church, and, as it happened, the first session of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE was held at West Market Street in November, 1890.

In 1835, the first time the statistics for West Market Street Church were listed separately from the Guilford Circuit, there were ninety white and thirty-eight colored members. In 1866 there were 202 white and no colored members. The membership grew to more than 500 by 1887, when West Market sponsored the organization of Centenary Church. Over the next third of a century, the mother church assisted with the formation of four more churches in Greensboro—College Place (1900), Carraway Memorial (1907), Bethel (1919), and Park Place (1920). Then in 1956 came Christ Church, which has grown rapidly. West Market's membership passed the 1,000 mark in 1911, 2,000 in 1938, and 3,000 in 1953. It reached a peak of 3,815 in 1967, and then began receding, as downtown churches in many cities have done in recent years.

Peter Doub, pastor at West Market in 1837, was a leader in the founding of GREENSBORO COLLEGE whose campus is still within walking distance of the church. For many years the pastors of West Market served as chaplain of the college.

West Market's present sanctuary, erected in 1893, includes stained glass windows purchased after they were seen on display that year at the Chicago World's Fair. The building was refurbished in 1958. Two modern education buildings have been constructed, one in 1952 and the other in 1963. The church has emphasized religious education, four of its staff of twenty-six devoting full time to the work. In recent years the church has regularly paid an apportionment of some $20,000 per year for higher education. Also, strong support has been given to missions. The membership of the church includes some Chinese, Japanese, Cubans, and Negroes.

In 1970 West Market Street Church reported 3,428 members, property valued at $3,578,157, and $397,356 raised for all purposes.

GREENSBORO COLLEGE, Greensboro, North Carolina, was chartered in 1838 as Greensboro Female College, and the name was changed to Greensboro College in 1921. In 1954 it became a coeducational institution. This change has brought many advancements in the character of student activities and the instructional program as well as growth in physical facilities and expanded opportunities for all students. Degrees granted are the B.A., B.S., B.M. (Music) and B.M.E. (Music Education). The governing board has thirty-two members, twenty-four elected by the board and confirmed by the NORTH CAROLINA and WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCES, eight by the alumni association.

GREENSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY wrote in his Journal on Sept. 18, 1789: "We passed Greensburg, stopping at Hanover Davis', a man who has trouble and conviction; his three sons were killed by the Indians, his wife and two children taken prisoners and detained from him eighteen months."

Like so many of America's early Methodist congregations, the First Church of Greensburg was a re-enactment of the scriptural expression, "the church in thy house." Greensburg Methodism began officially in the house of Samuel Bushfield and his wife Catherine. The Bushfields came from IRELAND to the United States in 1792. They settled in Greensburg in 1799 and immediately turned to procuring regular Methodist preaching for the town. The church in their house continued until 1830.

Following a "protracted meeting" conducted by Charles Cook in 1832, there was much agitation for a "meeting house." This concern was productive, for in 1833 the first church building for Greensburg Methodists became a reality. Thrilling growth was in the making for in 1851 a new and much larger church was built in the heart of the thriving community at the corner of Second and Main Streets. The art glass windows installed in this structure were considered by some to be inappropriate for Methodism. The dissenters were certain they were right when a hail storm broke several of them. Major improvements and additions were made to this structure in 1886.

The present structure in its basic form was built in the period 1905-1907 from local sandstone, only to have its interior destroyed by fire in 1933. This challenged the congregation to dedicated service of far-reaching scope, because two years later from the rubble there took form one of the area's finest examples of English Gothic architecture. In 1962 a renovation program of more than a half-million dollars created an educational plant where a church school of more than 1,000 members receives Christian instruction.

Should James Smith, the circuit rider who came to Greensburg to the home of Samuel Bushfield in 1799, revisit the scene of his preaching he would find a congregation of 2,142 served by a staff of eight persons and one listed among the top fifty Methodist churches in World Service benevolent giving. The congregation born in the Bushfield home has become "A Friendly, Family Church in the Heart of the City" and one of the largest in the WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE.

KENNETH P. RUTTER

GREENVILLE, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A. The first Methodist Church of Greenville was organized in 1837. As early as 1830 a preacher from ARKANSAS preached in the vicinity of Greenville, then known as Bachelor's Bend on the Mississippi River. The Delta at that time was still an immense canebreak with the exception of settlements along the river front. Methodist services were held in private homes until a church which had a puncheon floor and benches was built in 1839 on a site later to be known as old Greenville. About 1845 the log cabin church was replaced with a sturdy frame structure. Church membership rapidly increased and by 1851 the Methodists began to insist on Sunday rather than weekday preaching. Services each Sunday were made possible by two preachers who served the Upper Deer Creek Circuit and preached on alternate Sundays in Greenville.

During the Civil War, old Greenville was shelled by Union gunboats and much of the town was destroyed, including the small frame Methodist Church. In 1865 the town was established on its present site and that same year the Methodists erected a frame church. Another church building was erected in 1869 which was bought with nearly all of its material intact in Cincinnati, Ohio. It was shipped to Greenville by boat ready for erection and was fitted together immediately upon arrival. Because of caving banks of the Mississippi River, the church location was changed in 1880 to its present site. That building served as a house of worship until 1903, at which time another was built. The present church building was constructed on the same site in 1949. In 1970 First Church reported a membership of 1,552.

GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA, U.S.A. Buncombe Street Church. With the gift of a plot of ground by Vardry McBee of Lincolnton, N. C., in the year 1832, Methodism came to the little village of Greenville, earlier known as Pleasantville because of its delightful climate and altitude of 1,000 feet.

On this lot, across the street from the old Christ Episcopal Church (built in 1824 on another lot given for the purpose by Vardry McBee), the first house of worship for the "Greenville Methodist Church," as it was then known, was constructed. The church began operations with a membership of six, consisting of five women and one man. Some ten years later reports show a membership of eighty-one. In the year 1836 a Sunday school was organized—one which has kept pace with progress of the church.

With the passing of the years, increase in membership rendered the original building inadequate and in 1870 a new and larger lot was acquired on Buncombe Street (so called because it was the highway leading to Buncombe County, N. C. and the City of ASHEVILLE). This location was two blocks from the main street and the center of the town. At this time the name became the Buncombe Street Methodist Church. On this lot an imposing structure of Greek architecture was erected, with a portico supported by massive Ionic columns.

In the year 1951, to meet the requirements of the congregation, an addition, doubling the seating capacity of the church, was constructed, preserving and carrying out the same architectural design. The new sanctuary has a seating capacity of 900. A recent appraisal of the property places the value in excess of $1,237,000.

Through the intervening years Buncombe Street Church has made a record of progress and achievement, yet retaining to a very large degree the more intimate and friendly relations between members that its earlier and smaller congregations enjoyed. The church in its activities has kept pace with the spectacular growth of the city in its change from a predominantly agricultural way of life to that of a highly industrialized urban center.

With the shifting of employees and change of management that go along with the requirements of modern business, a part of the membership moves each year, but new members come in so that the total membership remains practically unchanged. In 1970 it reported 2,046 members.

In fulfilling the responsibility of a great downtown church, Buncombe Street now conducts a school for retarded children of the community, a kindergarten, a child care center with registered nurses, and provides, in a recently acquired building, a place of meeting for retired men and women and those of advanced years.

The church supports two missionaries in Korea, two in Brazil and one missionary in the Congo is supported by the W.S.C.S. It has also undertaken the chief support of two missions in neglected sections of the city.

GREENVILLE COLLEGE, Greenville, Illinois. In 1892 ministerial and lay leaders of the Central Illinois Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH purchased Almira College, founded in 1855, and changed the name to Greenville College. Their purpose was to provide higher education for young men and women under Christian influences.

During its seventy-five year history the college has had six presidents: WILSON T. HOGUE, 1892-1904; Augustin L. Whitcomb, 1904-08; Eldon G. Burritt, 1908-27; LESLIE R. MARSTON, 1927-36; H. Johnson Long, 1936-62; and the incumbent, GLENN A. RICHARDSON.

Because beliefs and conduct are inseparable, Greenville College, standing in the tradition of the evangelical Christian college, seeks to maintain standards among its faculty and students which fully implement the basic tenets of the Christian faith.

The college, a four-year liberal arts school, has been regionally accredited by the North Central Association since 1947 and is professionally accredited by the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education. Its enrollment is about 900.

GREGORY, BENJAMIN (1820-1900), British minister, was born at Stokesley, North Yorkshire, on Nov. 29, 1820. The son of a Wesleyan minister, he was accepted for the Wesleyan ministry in 1840. He was appointed CONNEXIONAL EDITOR together with Benjamin Frankland from 1868, and was sole editor from 1876 to 1893. He was the first editor to pay his contributors. He was chosen as president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1879. As editor of the Methodist Magazine from 1876, he waged unceasing warfare on biblical criticism; discontent with his rigidity partly caused his retirement in 1893. Among his writings were: Memoir of Emma Tatham (1858); the FERNLEY LECTURE for 1873, The Holy Catholic Church; the Handbook of Scriptural Church Principles and Wesleyan Methodist Polity (1888). He published in 1880 the Sermons, Addresses and Pastoral Letters given during his presidential year. His lasting memorial, however, will be Side

GREGORY, DAVID THOMAS (1889-1956), American E.U.B. bishop, was born July 16, 1889, in Berkeley County, W. Va., to Joseph T. and Sarah (Fulk) Gregory. He attended Martinsburg Normal School and received a state certificate to teach. He entered LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE (1915) graduating (1917) with A.B. He then attended Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (1917-20) and received the B.D. He was awarded the honorary D.D. degree from Lebanon Valley College (1924).

Gregory joined the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, UNITED

BRETHREN IN CHRIST, and was licensed to preach (1915) and ordained (1920). He first served as pastor at Jones Spring, W. Va. and Shenandoah Charge, Va., and then as pastor of Bethany Church, Lebanon, Pa. (1915-17). He was elected editor, Religious Telescope (1920); and assistant executive secretary of the General Board of Administration (1921). He became president of SHENANDOAH COLLEGE, Dayton, Va. (1922), and during his presidency it became an accredited junior college (1922-26). He was pastor of Euclid Avenue Church, DAYTON, OHIO (1926) serving ten years; during the latter part of this term (1932-36), he was also Superintendent of the Miami Conference.

He was elected by General Conference in 1939 as executive secretary, Board of Administration. In this position he gave leadership to the movement to unite with THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH. The 1950 GENERAL CONFERENCE elected him bishop, at a time when he was not in the session but at work in his office downtown. Teased about his apparent indifference, he laughed, "Somehow I find it hard to think of myself as a Bishop!" At this Conference the number of bishops were reduced, and Bishop Gregory was assigned to the newly created East Central Area with residence in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Bishop and Mrs. Gregory (née Margaret Broy) were tragically killed in an automobile accident Dec. 27, 1956 near Cambridge, Ohio. Funeral services were held in Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 31, 1956, and in Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 2, 1957, with burial in the Martinsburg Cemetery.

At the time of death Bishop Gregory held these other positions: president of the general Council of Administration; chairman of the Department of Home Missions and Church Extension; vice-president of the general Board of Missions; and president of the board of Flat Rock Children's Home.

GREGORY, JAMES F. (1899-1964), FREE METHODIST CHURCH editor and an ordained elder of the East Ontario Conference, was educated at GREENVILLE COLLEGE (A.B.), McMaster University (B.A.), University of Toronto (M.A.), and Emmanuel College, Toronto (B.D.). He was pastor and superintendent in the East Ontario Conference and principal of Lorne Park College, Ontario, for eight years. Later he became president of Spring Arbor Junior College, where he served six years. He was director of teacher training, professor of education and philosophy and dean of students, ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, for five years. He was elected editor of The Free Methodist in 1955 and continued in that office until his death. He was a radiant Christian, an effective writer, a winsome preacher of Christ's gospel. Young people felt the charm of Jesus through his ministry. He died at Winona Lake, Ind.

GREY INSTITUTE TRUST (New Zealand) administers funds arising from an area of land set aside in the town of New Plymouth under local trustees for the advancement of the Maori people in matters of education.

About 1840, an area of a hundred acres was purchased for the purposes of a mission station at Ngamotu, some distance from the center of New Plymouth. A residence was erected on this property in which the missionaries lived, and there was a school attached. The land was originally used for agricultural purposes. The name given to the place, Grey Institution, was in honor of George Grey, the governor, who was greatly interested in such projects. For many years the property was administered by the Auckland Missions Property Trust, but subsequently a local trust board was formed.

With the development of the district, a portion of the area was set aside for building allotments and was known as Whiteley Township, because of the association of JOHN WHITELEY with the district. In the late 1800's a portion of the land was taken for railway requirements, and the original area was reduced to eighty acres. Now the area is completely subdivided, on a leasehold basis, into building allotments which are occupied as private homes and small businesses to serve local residents. All income goes to the HOME AND MAORI MISSION DEPARTMENT of the church for its work among the Maoris, especially the Rangiatea Hostel for Maori Girls. As a teaching institution the work was carried on with moderate success until the Taranaki Wars of the early 1860's, when the school was closed.

Early in the twentieth century, some old families of the district held the mistaken impression that there had been an unfulfilled trust in connection with the property. They took the view that the original crown grant of a hundred acres was made in trust directly for the purpose of educating children of the Maoris. The free expressions of these sentiments caused the government to lodge a caveat against the title of the trustees and to make a thorough investigation. After an exhaustive inquiry, the government was satisfied that the title was indefeasible.

CECIL F. GRIBBLE

GRIBBLE, CECIL (1903-), Australian minister and church executive, was born on June 12, 1903 at Ballarat, Victoria, Australia. He was educated at the Ballarat High School and the Ballarat College.

After completion of his apprenticeship as a pharmaceutical chemist, he became a candidate for the ministry from Lydiard Street Church, Ballarat and entered QUEEN'S COLLEGE in 1924, spending five years there and graduating with an honors M.A. degree in history and political science.

During this period Cecil Gribble married Isabel Overend, daughter of H. A. Overend, a minister of the Victorian Conference and its President in 1926. It was at this time that he won the Ballarat Eisteddfod.

He served in circuits of the Victorian and Tasmanian Conference at Cobram, Shepparton, Hobart and Launceston, extending his ministry with a tour of inland mission areas in Central Australia.

In 1936 he became the Clerical Secretary for Home and Overseas Missions in Tasmania and, offering for overseas missionary service in 1939, was appointed as Principal of Tupou College in TONGA. Here he was able to use his musical knowledge with the Tongan choir.

From 1939 to 1946 he worked in Tonga, not only at Tupou College but also as Director of Education for the Government of Tonga from 1943 to 1946. At this time Prince Tungi, who has recently become king, was Minister for Education. Gribble returned from Tonga in 1946 and was appointed Assistant General Secretary of the Department of Overseas Missions under A. R. Gardner, and also Principal of George Brown College.

In 1949 he became General Secretary for Overseas Missions, and his term of office has been a period when great changes have taken place in the structure and pattern of missionary work.

In this connection he attended the World Conference of the International Missionary Council in Africa in 1958; participated in a goodwill tour of Russia in 1959; attended the Assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in New Delhi in 1960-61 and in Uppsala in 1968. In 1961-62 he participated in Pacific consultations to plan ecumenical action under the aegis of the World Council of Churches.

He was appointed Secretary General of the Australian General Conference in Adelaide in 1963. He subsequently became President General in PERTH in 1966, serving in that post for three years and giving imaginative leadership to the entire Australian church.

GRIFFITH, ALFRED (1783-1871), American minister, was born in MARYLAND, March 16, 1783, and was converted in 1801. He joined the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1806, and during a fifty-year effective relationship was conference secretary nine years, presiding elder twelve years, and occupied 116 conference committee assignments as a respected statesman. He served in nine GENERAL CONFERENCES (1816-1860) and led his delegation to the last one. As pastor of important stations, his sermons were "heavy artillery," though lacking the grace of elocution. His fellow pastor, JAMES E. ARMSTRONG, wrote that Griffith seldom debated in conference but that no one, even the bishop, ever forgot when he did, due to the thunder of his tone and the loftiness of his themes. In 1856 he was among those appointed to sketch the early history of American Methodism. One of his resulting manuscripts survives in Lovely Lane Musuem. After a long decline, he passed away April 15, 1871.

GRIFFITH, GEORGE WILLIAM (1869-1936), American pastor, editor, and bishop, was born in Oneida, Ill. Converted in the teens, he joined the M. E. Church, but later he joined the FREE METHODISTS in Shenandoah, Iowa. He was received into the West Iowa Conference (FM) in 1888, where he served as pastor. He was pastor and district elder in the California and Southern California Conferences, 1895-1908; Central Illinois Conference, pastor 1908-10; district elder or pastor 1915-19; president, Westington Springs Academy, 1910-15; editor, Sunday School Literature, 1919-23; editor, The Free Methodist, 1923-27; bishop, 1927-36. He was president of the General Missionary Board, and an apostle of stewardship and missions. He was loyal to the great causes, a strong preacher, prolific writer, and withal a humble man. He was the author of The Divine Program and editor of Arnold's S. S. Commentary, 1919-23. Many of his writings were collected in two memorial volumes: Living Embers and Daily Glow, edited by his wife, Mrs. Lillian B. Griffith. He died Feb. 13, 1936.

WILLIAM GRIFFITH

GRIFFITH, WILLIAM (1806-1883), British Methodist, was born in London on Nov. 4, 1806, the son of a Wesleyan Methodist minister of the same name. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1828, and had been in it twenty-one years when with JAMES EVERETT and SAMUEL DUNN he was arraigned before the 1849 Conference for his activities in connection with various periodicals advocating reform, notably the Wesleyan Times. As he refused to answer incriminating questions, he with the others was expelled. The "Three Expelled" held Reform meetings up and down the country until Griffith in 1855 became minister of a Wesleyan Reform chapel in DERBY, where he remained to the end of his life. He was elected president of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES Assembly in 1877, but declined to serve. He disliked the use of the term "reverend," was an ardent opponent of a state church and a Republican—his effigy was burned in Derby marketplace. At the 1881 ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE he was greeted affectionately by some of those responsible for his expulsion in 1849. He died in London on July 12, 1883.

GRIFFITHS, WALTER GERALDSON (1897-), and MABELLE ELWOOD (1896-), were missionaries of the M. E. Church in Southern Asia, 1920-39, and of The Methodist Church in Southern Asia since 1939. Griffiths earned degrees as follows: University of California (B.S., 1920), DREW UNIVERSITY (B.D., 1931; Ph.D., 1939), and New York University (M.A., 1931). He married Mabelle Elwood of Los Angeles, Calif., in CALCUTTA Dec. 30, 1921. His first appointment was to the Lee Memorial Mission. In 1923, he joined the faculty of the India Methodist Theological College which shortly became the LEONARD THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, Jabalpur. He was acting principal in 1936-37. In 1940, he became superintendent of the Lee Memorial Mission and continued in that position until his retirement in 1965.

Griffiths always held additional responsibilities, including terms as superintendent of Calcutta Bengali District, Calcutta Hindustani District, and Pakaur District, all in the BENGAL ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He was a fellow of, and held various offices in the Royal Asiatic Society, was an examiner of anthropology for the Universities of Calcutta and Ranchi, president of many organizations including the Calcutta Book and Tract Society, the Evangelical Literature Society, and the Bengal Literature Board. His writings include The Kol Tribe of Central India (Part I, 1947 and Part II 1949 of Introducing India, published by the Royal Asiatic Society); various articles on anthropology, and a book of poems entitled Sunlight and Starlight (Calcutta: Baptist Mission Press, 1963).

Mrs. Griffiths was associate superintendent of Lee Memorial Mission for twenty-four years and at various times was principal of the Lee Memorial Schools, treasurer of the Bengal Women's Educational League, District evangelist and on the board of governors of the Women's Christian College, Calcutta. Thousands remember her as the gracious hostess of the Lee Memorial Guest House.

GRIMSHAW, WILLIAM (1708-1763), was one of the best-known Anglican clerical supporters of JOHN WESLEY. He was born of poor parents at Brindle, Lancashire, in September 1708. Trained, not very seriously, at Christ's College, Cambridge, 1726-31, he was ordained priest at Chester on Sept. 10, 1732. He spent the rest of his life in the more remote parts of northern England, and especially at Haworth, in Yorkshire, the countryside which later served Emily Brontë as a background for Wuthering Heights. Essentially a seventeenth-century character, he was finally convicted of sin in 1739 by reading Thomas Brook's Precious Remedies against the Devices of Satan (1652), and converted by John Owen's Doctrine of Justification by Faith (1677). He was drawn to John Wesley, whom he first met at Haworth in 1747, by a common passion for evangelism; but although they were closely associated, Grimshaw was more of an Anglican revivalist than a Wesleyan Methodist. He strongly opposed those of Wesley's preachers who in 1760 wanted to break with the Church of England, and his theology was more Calvinist than Arminian. He died near Haworth, April 7, 1763.

GRINDROD, EDMUND (1786-1842), British Methodist, was born near Rochdale, Lancashire, in 1786. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1806. Grindrod had the misfortune to be superintendent of the LEEDS East Circuit in 1827-28, the time of the Leeds Organ Case. His defense of the traditional authority of the Wesleyan Conference and ministry was convinced but incautious; he never entirely recovered from the strain of this controversy. He was chosen president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1837; just before his death he published a Compendium of the Laws and Regulations of Wesleyan Methodism, the first and most famous of a long series of official summaries of Wesleyan law and polity. He died May 1, 1842.

GROSE, GEORGE RICHMOND (1869-1953), American bishop, was born in Nicholas County, W. Va., July 14, 1869, the son of Andrew Dixon and Mary Harrah Grose. He was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1894; A.M., 1896; D.D., 1908).

He married Lucy Dickerson, of Cadiz, Ohio, June 28, 1894. The next year he went to BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, where he was graduated S.T.B. in 1896, and was ordained a member of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE. Among his early appointments were: Cherry Valley Church, Leicester, Mass., 1894-97; First Church, Jamaica Plain, Boston, 1897-1900; First Church, Newton, Mass., 1900-05; First Church, Lynn, Mass., 1905-08; Grace Church, Baltimore, Md., 1908-12.

He went to the presidency of DEPAUW UNIVERSITY in 1912. His administration was progressive, wholesome, and constructive. The institution grew consistently under his care. Soon after he assumed the duties of the presidency, he was appointed a member of the State Board of Education, Indiana.

While he was working on his biography of Bishop JAMES W. BASHFORD, he went to CHINA to study the Bishop's work in the Orient. After election as bishop in the M. E. Church in 1924, his background studies in China Methodism proved useful, for he was assigned to Peking, and he directed missions in China for five years. He resigned as bishop in 1932.

His writings included: The Outlook For Religion, 1913; Religion and the Mind, 1915; Life of James W. Bashford, 1922; The New Soul in China, 1927; Edward Rector—A Story of the Middle West, 1928; The Man From Missouri—Mr. J. E. MacMurray, 1943. He wrote various pamphlets and articles, and following his resignation from the episcopacy was religion editor of the Pasadena (California) Star-News for over twenty years.

He died May 6, 1953 and was buried at Greencastle, Ind.

GROSS, JOHN OWEN (1894-1971), American minister and educator, was born at Folsom, Ky., on July 9, 1894, the son of William and Anna (Chrisman) Gross. ASBURY COLLEGE gave him the A.B. degree in 1918, the D.D. in 1930. He did postgraduate work at the Lane Seminary in Cincinnati, Ohio, 1918-19, and the University of Cincinnati and the University of Kentucky in 1929. He studied theology at BOSTON UNIVERSITY, receiving the S.T.B. in 1921, and the S.T.D. in 1949. He was the recipient of numerous honorary degrees, including MCKENDREE COLLEGE, EMORY UNIVERSITY, HENDRIX COLLEGE, SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, RUST COLLEGE, LYCOMING COLLEGE, and MOUNT UNION COLLEGE. His wife was Harriet Lucretia Bletzer, whom he married on June 30, 1920, and their children were George Albert, John Birney, and Harriet Lucille (Mrs. Edwin Eugene Smith, Jr.). Gross joined the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE on trial in 1916, and continued his membership in that Conference throughout life. The conference elected him its president at the 1959 session due to the illness of Bishop Watkins.

His pastoral assignments included Barbourville, Ky., 1921-25; superintendent, Barbourville District, 1925-29, at which time he became president of UNION COLLEGE in Barbourville, serving there until 1938, and then in SIMPSON COLLEGE, Indianola, Iowa, from 1938-41. He became the secretary of the Department of Educational Institutions in the Board of Education of The Methodist Church in Nashville, Tenn., just after church union, or in 1940. He became the general secretary of the Division of Higher Education of that Board in 1948, serving as such until 1965, when he retired.

Gross was the general secretary of the UNIVERSITY SENATE of The Methodist Church, 1948-65; a member of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES of 1931, '47, '51, '56, '61, and '66, and of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1932 and '52; of the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of the Southeastern Jurisdiction, 1940, '52, and '60. He was a member of the executive committee of the World Methodist Council, 1961-66. In demand as a lecturer, he delivered the Alexander Gustavus Brown lectures at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, 1951, and the Willson lectures at McMurry College, 1957. He served administratively many institutions, being a member ex-officio of the Board of BENNETT COLLEGE; a former trustee of DILLARD UNIVERSITY; Rust College; HUSTON-TILLOTSON COLLEGE; AMERICAN UNIVERSITY; MEHARRY COLLEGE; CLARK UNIVERSITY; BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE; SCARRITT COLLEGE; and WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE. He received the ST. GEORGE'S award for distinguished service to The Methodist Church in 1961. Gross wrote History of Cokesbury College, 1947; You and Your College, 1945; Education for Life, 1948; Methodist Beginnings of Higher Education, 1959; The Beginnings of American Methodism, 1961. He acted as general editor for the educational institutions of The Methodist Church in the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

Gross had great influence over the whole church. Time credited him with spearheading a "renaissance" in Methodist higher education "which among other things resulted in $80,000,000 being raised for denominationally-related colleges and schools within four years."

He continued to live in Nashville following his retirement. His wife died in 1965, and he himself died there on Feb. 4, 1971, after a lengthy illness. He was survived by a daughter and two sons.

GROVE, KATHRYN MOWREY (Mrs. D. Dwight). (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

GROVE, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. Grove Church. Originally named Goshen, then Valley Meeting, and finally Grove, this church in "origin and continued existence" is the oldest Methodist Society in Chester County. It is located at Grove, a community in West Whiteland Township, four miles northwest of West Chester.

The first Methodist sermons in Chester County were preached by GEORGE WHITEFIELD at Nottingham and at Fagg's Manor Presbyterian Church in 1740. He recorded in his Journal that he preached to 12,000 persons at Nottingham and to about the same number at Fagg's Manor. It is thought that JOSEPH PILMORE preached in Uwchlan Township in 1772. Isaac Rollins preached in Chester County, and FRANCIS ASBURY recorded in his Journal having preached eleven different times at the church when it was named Goshen and later Valley Meeting.

The first Methodist Society was organized at Goshen in 1773. George Hoffman, Daniel Meredith and George Smith were three of the earliest members of the Society, Hoffman being the first Methodist in Chester County. The Society held meetings in a log school house for eight or nine years until a stone church was built in 1783. The chapel was "30 x 40 feet with three doors—North, South, and West front—an end gallery on the West, and a tub pulpit on the East." A great many of the better known early Methodist leaders preached here including Francis Asbury, WILLIAM WATTERS, BENJAMIN ABBOTT, Daniel Ruff, HENRY BOEHM and others. In 1844 a new structure replaced the old stone church, and was in turn replaced in 1888 by the present structure. In 1873, at the 100th anniversary of the church, Henry Boehm, who was then ninety-nine years of age, returned to preach the anniversary sermon.

Historic Old Grove, as the church is called today, became the mother church of a Methodist Society at Laurel in West Bradford Township, which in turn became what is now the Hibernia Church. Grove was also the mother of what is now the powerful and important United Methodist Church at West Chester, a church which likewise assisted with the beginnings of many other churches in Chester County. In recent years, historic Old Grove has considerably expanded its buildings and program to meet the needs of a growing community. An educational unit has been erected and the sanctuary completely redecorated. An aggressive program is bringing a new challenge on this historic site to a modern community.

GRUBER, JACOB (1778-1850), American pioneer preacher of German parentage, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., in February, 1778. At the age of fifteen he was converted, and joined the M. E. Church. But for this act he was driven from home by his parents, who were German Lutherans, though later on there was a reconciliation, and he was permitted to return home. Yet he was so zealous for the spiritual welfare of his neighbors that he was compelled, when about twenty-one years of age, to leave home for a second time. He started on foot towards Lancaster, not knowing exactly what to do, and on his way he met a Methodist preacher, who informed him of a vacancy on a circuit, and who urged him to commence preaching at once. He immediately spent all his means in purchasing a horse and started for the circuit which had been described to him. The next year he was received on trial by the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE, and his appointments after that extended from NEW JERSEY through PENNSYLVANIA to WESTERN VIRGINIA, and from "the lakes to the shores of the Chesapeake Bay."

Jacob Gruber was an eccentric, colorful type, both in manner and style, and his peculiar ways and sayings were often quoted by those who lived long after him. He was a circuit preacher for thirty-two years, then served as presiding elder for eleven years, and though opposed to station work, yet filled acceptably for seven years stations in PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE and WASHINGTON, D. C.

"A Pennsylvania German, original, quaint and witty," he was called by J. E. ARMSTRONG, the historian of the old BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. He was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1812 in the Baltimore delegation.

He was strongly anti-slavery, and was once arrested in MARYLAND and tried for inciting insurrection, because he preached against slavery as a national sin. He was acquitted, but the Baltimore Conference "resolved that Brother Gruber be advised by the president of the Conference to be more cautious in the future and forbear as much as possible from the use of epithets and allusions calculated unnecessarily to irritate, without informing the people." (Armstrong's Old Baltimore Conference, p. 185). It was alleged by some that his methods in opposing slavery were calculated more to defeat than to promote the end he had in view. At the Baltimore Conference of 1831, a motion was passed opposing the transferring of Jacob Gruber to that Conference, but afterwards in 1835 this motion was expunged. (Such motion had no legal effect as the bishops always had the right of transferring ministers in and out of Conferences.)

HENRY BOEHM, who was once the colleague of Gruber, said of him, "A more honest man never lived; a bolder soldier of the cross never wielded the sword of the Spirit. As a preacher he was original and eccentric; his powers of irony, sarcasm, and ridicule were tremendous."

By rigid economy and careful investment, Jacob Gruber acquired some means which at his death, having no children, he bequeathed to the church, leaving to the CHARTERED FUND, $1,400; to DICKINSON COLLEGE, scholarships amounting to $500; to the church in Lewistown, $500; and to the Missionary Society, at the death of his wife, $3,120. He died in Lewistown, Pa., on May 25, 1850.

BENJAMIN GUANSING

GUANSING, BENJAMIN I. (1908-1968), Philippine minister, seminary president, and Methodist bishop, was born at Melabon, Rizal, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, on Feb. 24, 1908. He was the son of Catalino and Albina (Ignacio) Guansing. He received the Ph.B. degree at Union Theological Seminary in the Philippines in 1932, the B.D. in 1934, and the same degree in 1941 from Union Theological Seminary, New York City. He was given the M.A. degree by Columbia University in 1947. In 1958 Union Theological Seminary in Tokyo honored him with a D.D. He married Emilia Ramos on July 4, 1934, and their children are Alejandro, Edna (Mrs. Melanio Cabaltica) and Emilita. He served as minister of the Methodist Church in the Philippines, beginning in 1928, until he became a professor in the Union Theological Seminary there in 1945. He was elected president of the Seminary in 1951, was the secretary of the Philippines Conference of The Methodist Church from 1932 to 1940, becoming also the chairman of its Board of Ministerial Training in 1945. He edited the Philippine Christian Advance from 1948 to 1950; the Philippine Christian Yearbook from 1962-63. In 1967 he was elected bishop by the PHILIPPINE CENTRAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. Bishop Guansing was assigned to the Manila Area composed of the Philippines and Middle Philippines Conferences, both having about 61,576 members. He was one of the two bishops of The United Methodist Church in the Philippines. He attended the UNITING CONFERENCE in Dallas in April-May, 1968. After engaging in various international church meetings in the United States, he returned to Manila on May 25, where he suffered a fatal heart attack a few days later on June 3. He had served scarcely a year in the episcopacy, but in that time had ably represented his church both in his native land and the United States.

GUARD, THOMAS (1831-1882), Irish, South African, and American Methodist minister, was born in County Galway, IRELAND, on June 3, 1831. He preached nine years in Ireland and another nine in SOUTH AFRICA before visiting America in 1871. His great pulpit ability led to a pastorate at Mount Vernon Place Church in BALTIMORE, 1872-75, followed by five years in the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE. In 1880 he returned to Mount Vernon Place where he died suddenly on Oct. 15, 1882.

No pulpit orator ever commanded greater respect in BALTIMORE. Excelling in feats of memory, grasp of Methodist theology and supremely apt in lifting his congregations Godward, his name remains a byword of outstanding preaching. It was said that President ULYSSES S. GRANT went over from Washington a few times to hear Guard. OSCAR T. OLSON, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Church, 1921-32, observed once that he knew he had done well when any of the old members said, "You preached like Tom Guard today."

GUATEMALA is the most populous and the second largest country of Central America. It is a charter member of the United Nations. The area is 42,000 square miles and the population is 3,800,000. The capital is Guatemala City, connected by railroad with Puerto Barrios, the major port.

There are important archeological sites of the pre-Mayan and Mayan cultures. Spain subjugated the region and held control until 1821. A brief period of Mexican authority obtained, until the five Central American Republics gained independence.

Methodist activity in Guatemala consists of a small mission of the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH among indigenous Indian tribes; there is a membership of 1,000 and a community of about 2,000. The British Wesleyan Mission made slight penetration through the extreme southern corner of British Honduras, following groups of Negro and Creole members who crossed the border in search of employment.

GUERRA OLIVARES, ELEAZAR (1898-1970), bishop of the Methodist Church of Mexico, was born in Reynosa, Tamaulipas, on March 21, 1898, of Methodist parents. He was educated in church schools in Mexico, at Wesleyan Institute, SAN ANTONIO, Texas, and in SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas. GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE awarded him the D.D. degree in 1940. Ordained a minister of the M. E. Church, South, he served as pastor of churches on both sides of the border: Eagle Pass, Texas; Terreon and Saltillo, Mexico; Dallas and San Antonio, Texas. In 1938, after the organization of the independent Methodist Church of Mexico, and while he was serving as presiding elder of the Oriental district of the Border Annual Conference, and pastor in Saltillo, Guerra was elected as the third bishop of his Church. He was re-elected to the episcopal post in 1942, 1946, and 1950. From 1954 to 1958, he was secretary of evangelism in the Mexican Church. In the latter year he was again elected bishop of the Church, serving until 1962. The Church saw growth in numbers and influence under his administration. It was his honor and privilege to lead in the celebration of the seventy-fifth year of the Church in Mexico. He died Sept. 14, 1970.

GUERRA Y DIEGUEZ, PROSPERO (1876-1956), a Cuban pastor who served for a time as a Spanish soldier in CUBA and fought against the Americans at the battle of San Juan hill. He was converted under one of the first American missionaries in Santiago de Cuba and became a Methodist preacher. He was born Feb. 29, 1876, in Viana, Orense, Spain, the son of Josefa and Felipe Guerra. His education was in the public schools of Spain, and he had to go to work at the early age of eight years in order to help his parents. His first work in the church in 1905 was selling Bibles, walking on foot in good and bad weather; busy with this special work he impressed all with his complete consecration.

To his marriage with Asuncion Nicolas, 1897, there were born eight girls and two boys. With this large family life was not always easy, but the home was always orderly and the children cooperated in helping make his ministry fruitful.

In 1910 he was admitted into the Cuba Conference and during his lifetime served nineteen different pastoral charges. Having been a carpenter in his youth, he built with his own hands several chapels and parsonages. It was said by one of his district superintendents that at every Quarterly Conference he always reported every financial obligation "paid in full," and never left any debts when his appointment would be changed, and never complained.

After his death certain churches, proud of their association with him, began to memorialize him by naming classes after him. Two of the leading pastors in Cuba were products of his ministry. After his passing to his reward in 1956, as the result of an eye operation, the unusual tributes paid to his memory gave evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by his brethren.

GUJARAT CONFERENCE covers the state of Gujarat in INDIA. Methodist work in the conference was begun in 1870 among the English-speaking people of Baroda by local preachers who were encouraged and inspired by Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR. The first Methodist missionary was appointed to Baroda in 1888, and this city has the largest Methodist station in the conference. The city itself, with a population of 211,000, is an educational and cultural center. Its district—the Baroda District—is the largest in the conference.

The Gujarat Annual Conference became a separate unit in 1921, formerly having been a part of the BOMBAY CONFERENCE. It is divided into five districts, and at last reporting had 35,329 names on the church rolls, including baptized children.

The Ahmedabad District is centered about Ahmedabad, an industrial center with a population of 1,316,723. There are two self-supporting Methodist congregations there and the district reports a membership of 3,494. The Gujarat United School of Theology is an interdenominationally sponsored school which moved from Baroda to Ahmedabad in 1954. The Division of World Missions of The Methodist Church, in cooperation with the United Church of Northern India and the Church of the Brethren, presently supports it. It is the outgrowth of two schools, one a Methodist institution, the Florence B. Nichols School of Theology, and another which united with it in 1942.

The Umreth District of the conference has the oldest rural work of the Methodist Church in this conference. There are eleven circuits staffed by fifteen ordained and thirty unordained ministers and about 8,488 members.

The Nadiad-Kapadwanj District is named for Nadiad, a city of about 63,000 inhabitants southeast of Ahmedabad, a place which has a large temple which draws thousands for its occasional melas. The Methodist Church there has a membership of 1,172, and there is a Methodist hospital of 150 beds in Nadiad. It was once called the Thoburn Memorial Hospital.

The Godhra District, with about 8,889 names on the rolls, is the other district of the conference. It is named for Godhra, a city of 40,000 inhabitants where an evangelistic center was opened by the Methodist Church in 1895, and where there are now two self-supporting churches.

Several other Protestant agencies including the Wesleyan Church and the Church of England work in a comity agreement in this big part of western India within the Gujarat Conference.

GULF CONFERENCE. (See LOUISIANA, SOUTHERN CONFERENCE, and TABLE OF METHODIST CONFERENCES.)

GULFPORT, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A. First Church, which was known as the Twenty-fifth Avenue Church for the first seventeen years, was organized in 1896 with a charter membership of five, one of whom was S. A. Tomlinson, to whom we are indebted for much of the church's historical data. Tomlinson was the first Sunday school superintendent and also the first chairman of the official board. The other charter members were: George Odom, Mrs. T. E. McCrary, Mrs. J. P. Butler, and Mrs. R. L. McNair.

N. B. Harmon (father of Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON), pastor of the churches in Long Beach and Bay St. Louis, Miss., saw the need for a Methodist church in the community of Gulfport (population 200 in October, 1896) and with the help of the presiding elder, W. W. Simmons, and several dedicated Christian laymen, selected a lot on 25th Avenue and 14th Street as the site for this new church. Captain Jones, the founder of Gulfport, offered the lot free to the Methodists as he did lots to other churches. A week before the church was actually organized, on Dec. 13, 1896, a union Sunday school was organized by S. A. Tomlinson, a nineteen-year-old express messenger on the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad. This Sunday school was the only one in Gulfport for several years and was attended by members of all denominations. Tomlinson served as superintendent as long as the Sunday school existed.

The first pastor, T. W. Brown, held services in Gulfport's only school building (one room). Brown was followed by J. H. Holland and J. P. Drake. Drake was the pastor when the first frame church building was started in 1899 and completed in 1900. J. S. Parker, W. D. Dominick (pastor when the church was made a station), George H. Galloway, J. W. Morse, Felix R. Hill and M. L. Burton served in this church. In 1912, while M. L. Burton was pastor, the frame church building was badly damaged by fire, and services were held in the upstairs of the City Hall until the present brick church was built the following year. This was on the corner of 24th Avenue and 15th Street about two blocks away from the original site. This building cost approximately $75,000, and its dome is considered most impressive. The church was dedicated by Bishop AINSWORTH during the pastorate of W. J. Ferguson. The 23rd Avenue and 15th Street lots for the present educational building were bought in 1963, and this building was erected under the leadership of John M. McCay. It was consecrated by Bishop PENDERGRASS in the fall of 1965.

A succession of able ministers of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE have served this church including, in addition to those mentioned: N. B. Harmon, 1915; William H. LaPrade, 1916-17; Hicks M. Ellis, 1918-19; W. L. Linfield, 1920-23; W. J. Ferguson, 1924-27; Victor G. Clifford, 1928; P. D. Hardin, 1929; A. M. Broadfoot, 1930-31; J. L. NEILL, 1932-33; P. M. Carraway, 1934-36; Carroll Varner—W. C. Newman, 1937; V. R. Landrum, 1938-41; C. C. Clark, 1942-45; H. M. BULLOCK, 1946-49; C. H. Gunn, 1949-60; J. M. Jones, 1960-63, and J. M. McCay since 1963.

The great hurricane of the late summer of 1969—said to have been the worst the nation has ever suffered—badly damaged the church, as it did other churches and parsonages on the Gulf Coast. The district parsonage located at Gulfport was almost completely destroyed, with Seth Granberry, the district superintendent, losing everything he had in the house. A wedding was held in First Church, Gulfport, two days after the storm, the papers reporting that the bridal party stepped over broken glass in the aisle and were married under the broken roof.

The church rebuilt however and continues to progress. It reported 1,554 members in 1970.

NANNETTE TOMLINSON CARR

GUM, WALTER CLARK (1897-1969), American bishop, was born at Monterey, Va., on July 4, 1897, the son of William Early and Salie Maude (Taylor) Gum. He was educated at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE and EMORY UNIVERSITY. He received an honorary D.D. degree from Randolph-Macon College in 1940, the LL.D. degree from KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE in 1961, and the L.H.D. from UNION COLLEGE in 1964. On Oct. 31, 1919, he married Mary Lucille Hendricks, and they had one daughter.

Walter Gum was admitted to the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, South in 1918, and was ordained to the ministry in 1919. He held the following Virginia pastorates: South Sussex, 1919-21; Irvington, 1921-23; Chatham, 1923-25; South Boston, 1925-30; First Church, NORFOLK, 1930-33; Monumental Church, PORTSMOUTH, 1933-36; Ghent Church, Norfolk, 1936-39; Barton Heights Church, RICHMOND, 1939-40; district superintendent, Norfolk District, 1940-45; Centenary Church, Richmond, 1945-50; district superintendent, Richmond District, 1950-56; Park Place Church, Norfolk, 1956-60.

He was a member of the COORDINATING COUNCIL of The Methodist Church, 1952-60, and chairman of its Committee on Review from 1956 until 1960. He was chairman of the Committee on Missions of the South-eastern Jurisdiction, and of the Board of Missions of the Virginia Conference. He was a delegate to the last five GENERAL and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES before being elected bishop. He was a trustee of ALASKA METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Randolph-Macon Academy, being elected president of the Board of Trustees of Randolph-Macon College in 1965. He was a trustee of the Virginia Methodist Home for the Aged and the Superannuate Home for Ministers.

He was elected bishop on July 15, 1960, at the South-eastern Jurisdictional Conference at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., and was assigned to the LOUISVILLE, Ky., Area. Bishop Gum for four years, 1960-64, administered the work of The Methodist Church in the KENTUCKY and LOUISVILLE Annual CONFERENCES, comprising 1,035 churches with a total membership of some 175,000.

He was vice chairman of the National Division of the Board of Missions, vice chairman of the Commission on Chaplains, and held retreats for Chaplains in Europe in 1964. His episcopal travel included a journey to East Asia in 1962 and to South America in 1967.

At the 1964 Jurisdictional Conference, he was assigned to the Richmond Area. At the end of the quadrennium in 1968 he retired and died on May 31, 1969.

GUNN, WILLIAM (1797-1853), American minister, was born March 13, 1797 in Caswell County, N. C. He removed in early life to TENNESSEE, and later to KENTUCKY, where he entered the itinerancy in 1819. His utterly devoted Christian life, evidenced in early rising, regular reading, and secret prayer, enabled him, under God's blessing, to be wondrously faithful and useful through the privations and toils of a ministry of thirty-four years, half that time as a presiding elder. His preaching was expository, marked by long studies into the meaning of the Scriptures. He was mighty in prayer and exhortation.

One of the chief charms of his life was his rich, strong yet mellow, musical voice. "He sang exceeding well, for he made music a study, and perseveringly cultivated the fine voice God had given him." His songs and prayers thrilled and delighted all church meetings he attended. Someone said, "the singing was as the music of heaven."

In 1830, while visiting his father-in-law, William Adams, whose daughter Frances he married in 1826, Gunn was struck by lightning! "His clothes burnt to shreds, his boots rent, and his flesh fearfully lacerated." Yet God's providence gave him recovery to live and work for some twenty-three years after, greatly beloved by all his people and associates.

It was he who gave license to preach the gospel to A. H. REDFORD, Kentucky Methodism's famed historian, who said "we think we never knew a better man."

He died Sept. 3, 1853, at Lexington, Ky.

GUNPOWDER MEETING HOUSE, Harford County, Maryland, U.S.A., was "lately erected" when its one-acre lot was deeded by Joseph Presbury, March 13, 1773, to Methodist trustees. At Presbury's house, still standing in the vicinity, ASBURY preached Dec. 3, 1772, and on Dec. 22, he held a QUARTERLY CONFERENCE while on his first tour of MARYLAND. The residence and preaching house were prominent gathering places in early Maryland Methodism. The site was used into the twentieth century, although the white congregation moved to Edgewood, leaving the church to Negro Methodists. During World War I the U. S. Government took the property roundabout and both church and house are now within Edgewood Arsenal. The surviving one-story brick church, resembling a 1731 BALTIMORE Anglican edifice, may be the 1773 building. Although disused since hand grenade storage ceased after World War II, federal authorities desire its preservation for historic reasons. Meanwhile, in 1968 the reunited Edgewood and Magnolia Churches reassumed the original Presbury name for their new building on Edgewood Road.

GURNEY, SAMUEL (1860-1924), pioneer medical missionary of the M. E. Church in Southern RHODESIA, Africa, was born in Long Branch, N. J., and educated at Drew Theological Seminary. Gurney spent the years 1890 to 1902 as an ordained minister in the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE, serving churches on Long Island and in CONNECTICUT. While in Connecticut he studied medicine at Yale University, with the intent of going into missionary service. In 1902, having the M.D. degree from Yale, he was commissioned a medical missionary and assigned to Old Umtali, Southern Rhodesia. As the first medical man in that region, his was an uphill fight for recognition. But he won his way into the hearts of the people by his personal ministry to their needs. Once "medical work" was accepted in Old Umtali, Gurney moved further into the hinterland, paving the way for later medical men, nurses, teachers, and evangelists. By this process, he pushed missionary work out from Old Umtali and into such now-thriving stations as Mrewa, Mtoka, and Nyadiri. During half his twenty years in Africa, he suffered from a broken back—broken when thrown by a frightened mule: but, despite continual pain, he kept at his work. He died in Salisbury, Rhodesia.

GUYANA, formerly known as British Guiana, is situated on the northeast coast of South America, with an area of 83,000 square miles and a population of 692,000 (1968 estimate). Just over half the population is of East Indian descent; almost one-third are Negroes; there are large groups of people of mixed descent, many Amerindians, and smaller groups of Portuguese and Chinese. A majority of the population describes itself as Christian, but there are also large groups of Hindus and Muslims, all Indian. The constitution guaranteed freedom of worship, and Hinduism, Islam and Christianity have equal status. The country is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean, SURINAM (Dutch Guiana), BRAZIL and VENEZUELA. The capital is Georgetown, at the mouth of the Demerara River.

The history of Guyana during the colonial period is marked by competition between the Dutch, who founded their first settlement in 1593 and ruled from 1667 to 1796, and from 1802 to 1831; and the British who founded their first settlement in 1604, and ruled with interruptions until 1966, when the country became independent within the British Commonwealth. It became a republic in 1970.

Guyana is one of the few countries in the Caribbean in which followers of non-Christian religions form a substantial part of the population. It is also one of the few Caribbean countries in which race relations have been tense. Race, religion and politics are closely intertwined. The People's Progressive Party, under its East Indian leader Cheddi B. Jagan, held office from 1957 to 1964, and was then replaced by the People's National Congress, under its Negro leader, L. Forbes Burnham, in coalition with the small, multiracial United Force Party.

As in many other areas, Methodism in Guyana is older than Methodist missionary work. Two Methodist laymen from Nevis, William Claxton and William Powell, arrived in Guyana in 1801. A Moravian mission had been established in 1738, but it was not until 1815 that the first Wesleyan Methodist missionary, Thomas Talboys, arrived. Up to that time, there had been persistent opposition, especially to preaching by Negroes, but the membership of the church increased from 70 to 700 in the first year of Talboy's ministry. In the next sixteen years, large churches were built, especially in Georgetown and Kingston. Primary school work began in 1838, and enrolment doubled between 1853 and 1864.

The growth of Methodism during the nineteenth century took place despite the obstacles of tropical disease (two missionaries died of yellow fever in 1821); political disturbances (two hundred Negroes were killed in a slave rising in Georgetown in 1823); frequent changes of ministerial staff (there were four different chairmen between 1862 and 1874); personal differences between missionaries, and a high cost of living, the effects of which were heightened by the extravagance of one chairman in the late 1870's. There was an abortive attempt in 1857-61 to found a teacher training college. Work among the East Indian population was begun in 1852, but despite the long ministry (1860-1895) of a Tamil-speaking Ceylonese named Henry V. P. Bronkhurst, the vast majority of the East Indian community remained attached to Hinduism.

A Methodist secondary school was maintained in Georgetown from 1892 to 1930. From 1885 to 1904, Guyana Methodism formed part of the autonomous West Indian Conference. In 1938, the first branch of the Methodist Women's League was opened in Guyana, and a deaconess visited the country in the same year. A Women's Work Council was formed in 1953, and in the following year, the first permanent deaconess appointment was made.

Methodism is one of many denominations in Guyana, the largest being the Anglican Church with a constituency of about 400,000 and the Roman Catholic Church with about 100,000. Cooperation between churches goes back at least to 1924, when the free churches opened a joint Christian Literature Depot. A Christian Social Council, including Roman Catholics, was formed in 1945, and in 1954 Methodists joined with Congregationalists and Moravians in founding the Mackenzie United Mission, in which Presbyterians also cooperated at a later date. (Mackenzie is a growing bauxite mining area.) The Guyana Council of Churches was formed in 1968.

In 1967, Guyana became a founder district of the METHODIST CHURCH in the CARIBBEAN and the AMERICAS, under its Guyanese chairman, C. F. H. Alleyne. The church has agricultural and evangelistic work among the Capoeay Amerindians. In 1967, it had 53 places of worship with 5,452 full members and a constituency of 9,067. In 1968 it had 16 primary schools with 9,181 pupils. The A. M. E. Church and the A. M. E. Zion Church are also at work in Guyana.

GUZMAN, ANIBAL (1928-), Bolivian pastor and administrator, was born in La Paz and graduated from Union Theological Seminary (FACULTAD EVANGELICA DE TEOLOGIA) in BUENOS AIRES in 1954. He also studied at the School of Humanities, MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, and at DREW UNIVERSITY, U.S.A. He married Gladys Lauger, a secretary and bookkeeper from Uruguay, and they have three children. He began work in BOLIVIA under the Methodist Church in 1955, was pastor of several churches, then was superintendent of the Southern District of the Bolivia Annual Conference, and now is superintendent of the Northern District. He is also pastor of La Reforma Church in LA PAZ and executive secretary of the literature and literacy committee.

GWIN, JAMES A. (1762-1841), American patriot, soldier in the American Revolution, and a minister of distinction and pronounced ability, was born in Monroe County, Va., in 1762, the son of Mordecai Throckmorton Gwin and his wife, Elizabeth, whose ancient ancestry is traced through Colonel Hugh Gwin, Gloucester County, VIRGINIA, back to "one David, a ruler of the Highlands of Wales, and Sir Rowland Gwynn, a supporter of William of Orange."

James Gwin's family removed from Virginia to Orange County, N. C., and from that county "he and five of his brothers fought in the American Revolution."

In the years of 1790 and 1791 James Gwin entered into the territory of TENNESSEE, going through the wilderness to the Cumberland Settlements, with twenty families. Later he settled in Sumner County, and about NASHVILLE. He acquired large holdings of land in Tennessee and other areas, and became very wealthy. He gave a large tract of land to his close friend, Bishop WILLIAM MCKENDREE, for whom he later named a son. He had meanwhile become a Methodist preacher and was rated as an able evangelist in the pulpit. He became closely associated with the work of the first Methodist bishops—ASBURY and William McKendree—and was greatly admired by both.

He was also a life-long friend of Andrew Jackson, and served as chaplain under Jackson at the Battle of New Orleans.

He was the father of Colonel Samuel Gwin, appointed register of the land office at Mt. Salus, Miss., and father of the illustrious William McKendree Gwin—lawyer, doctor, senator and statesman of Tennessee, MISSISSIPPI and CALIFORNIA.

After 1833 James Gwin moved into the state of Mississippi, always continuing in the Methodist ministry, up to the time of death. He became pastor of the Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, in 1841, and died August of that year. He is buried in the family lot, Vicksburg, beside his wife, Mary McAdams Gwin.

GWYNNE, MARMADUKE, was the father-in-law of Charles Wesley. He kept a large establishment at Garth in Wales; it included his nine children, a chaplain, from ten to fifteen guests, and twenty servants. John and Charles Wesley stayed there a number of times between 1743 and 1749. As a magistrate Gwynne was able to use his influence to protect the Methodists, including HOWELL HARRIS, from persecution. In 1749 the family moved to Ludlow, Shropshire. Gwynne was a sincere Christian, and attended the second CONFERENCE, which was held at Bristol in August 1745.

HACKETTSTOWN, NEW JERSEY, U.S.A. The diary of EZEKIEL COOPER reveals that a Methodist class existed and preaching services were held in the home of Samuel Pew at Hackettstown as early as June 1786.

On Aug. 9, 1796, Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY laid the cornerstone of Asbury Chapel in NEW JERSEY and journeyed through Schooley's Mountain, which he mentions as properly a remnant of the Blue Ridge. "I thought it good not to be idle, as I went to Hackettstown, and preached on, 'The promise is to you, and to your children,'" he wrote.

Services also were held in the home of a Mrs. Kemple. LORENZO DOW once preached in her house.

However, it was not until 1832 that Methodism was formally organized in Hackettstown. On Dec. 1, 1832, a meeting was held at the home of Jacob Sharp, at which Jacob Hevener presided, and those present resolved to "build a house for the public worship of Almighty God." They further resolved to incorporate under the name of "Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Hackettstown," and adopted the seal of the cross as the symbol of their incorporation. This seal was recorded in the County Clerk's office at Belvidere, N. J., on Dec. 18, 1832.

The newly elected trustees purchased ground from Amos Moore on the east side of Main Street. On Jan. 10, 1833, at the home of Jacob Sharp, the trustees agreed to build a new church of wood, 30 x 48 feet, and awarded the contract to Martin Clawson for the sum of $1,575. Abram Gearhart was the preacher in charge.

In 1858 a new and larger church was erected at a cost of $6,500. A bell weighing 1,055 pounds was installed. The parsonage was built in 1852-53 under the pastorate of John N. Crane.

In 1867, Centenary Collegiate Institute, later CENTENARY COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, was founded by the M. E. Church. Again it became necessary to erect a new church building. This was completed in 1887, and was dedicated the following year by Bishop CYRUS D. FOSS. An educational building was dedicated in 1900. During the 138 years of Methodism in Hackettstown, the church has been served by fifty-six pastors and in 1970 had a membership of 745.

HADDAWAY, GEORGE WASHINGTON (1865-1947), American minister, was born May 22, 1865, in Oxford, Md. As a boy he united with the M. P. Church in his home town and made an early decision to become a minister.

He received his ministerial training at WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. After his graduation in 1888, he entered the MARYLAND CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church and was assigned as an assistant pastor in East Baltimore. All of Haddaway's ministry was served in MARYLAND, and for twenty-seven years he was pastor of Starr church in BALTIMORE. So close was he to his work at Starr Church that in 1917 he declined to accept the post of president of the Maryland Annual Conference rather than sever his connection with his church.

He remained as pastor of Starr Church until 1928, when he accepted the post of executive secretary of the M. P. Board of Missions. He guided the Board ably and patiently through the financially dark days of the depression. He held this post until he retired in 1939, the year of Methodist union.

Haddaway was elected as a delegate to eight GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. P. Church. As a preacher he was a forceful and emotional speaker whose sermons left a deep and lasting impression on those who heard him. As an administrator he displayed great skill in handling finances and in mediating difficult problems.

George Haddaway died in Baltimore, Md., on Aug. 18, 1947, and is buried in Baltimore's Loudon Park Cemetery.

HADDOCK, GEORGE CHANNING (1831-1886), American preacher, reformer and martyr, was born at Watertown, N. Y., Jan. 23, 1831. Converted at age fourteen, he later learned the printer's trade. He was licensed to preach at age twenty-one. Married to Cornelia Herrick in 1852, he worked as a printer in MILWAUKEE, Wis. Here he supplied pulpits in the vicinity and in 1860 joined the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE. He was a successful pastor at Oshkosh, Waukesha, Ripon, Appleton, Fond du Lac, Racine, Milwaukee and Bayview. He was presiding elder of the Fond du Lac District.

He fought against the wild lawlessness which dominated these frontier towns. In 1874, while serving Sheboygan Falls, he was attacked by hoodlums whom he routed, although he suffered a severe wound. In 1882 he transferred to the IOWA CONFERENCE and was stationed at BURLINGTON. In 1883 he went to Fort Dodge in the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE and in 1885 to First Church, Sioux City, Iowa.

At Sioux City gambling, prostitution and drunkenness prevailed and murder was commonplace. George Haddock denounced all this, formed a Law and Order League and held public meetings wherever possible. As he returned to his home after one such meeting he was assailed by a gang of thugs and shot to death Aug. 3, 1886. He was buried at Racine, Wis.

Although his murderers were never convicted, the impact of their murder was great throughout Iowa and the nation. It aroused the decent and frightened the vicious. The criminal element fled Sioux City. Temperance legislation was adopted by the Iowa legislature. Haddock was victorious although he lost his life. A marker is set into the pavement on the spot where he died in Sioux City and a plaque is in First Church which he served.

HADDON, ROBERT TAHUPOTIKI (1866-1936). NEW ZEALAND Maori minister, was the son of a Maori chieftainess and a Scottish pioneer. Haddon entered Wesley Three Kings College in 1898, and was received on probation in 1900 and ordained in 1904. Later he was drawn into association with leading Tohungas (priests of traditional Maori religions) and underwent a course of study in Maori mystic lore.

However, he always remained staunch to his Christian faith, and during his ministry did much to dispel the legacy of bitterness aroused by land confiscation after the Maori Wars. He was the first to hold the status of Senior Maori Superintendent, or senior man of the Maori circuit superintendents. Famed as an evangelist and as a temperance reformer, he wielded a gracious influence among both Maoris and Europeans.

HADDONFIELD, NEW JERSEY, U.S.A. Haddonfield Methodist Church is a historic edifice, colonial in its architecture and origins, in a suburban town settled in 1701. About noon on a June day in 1772, FRANCIS ASBURY arrived in Haddonfield to hold a preaching meeting. As he wrote in his Journal, he "addressed a few attentive hearers who seemed somewhat affected by the truths of God." In the months which followed, other great names were added to the list of those who preached in this community, men such as Philip Ebert, Caleb Pedicord, FREEBORN GARRETTSON, BENJAMIN ABBOTT, and EZEKIEL COOPER.

The meetings continued irregularly until 1829, when the first class was organized with thirty-two members. Haddonfield then became a station on the Burlington Circuit, and meetings were held in the Grove Street Schoolhouse. In the summer of 1835, the first building was erected at what is now the Methodist Cemetery on King's Highway East. Haddonfield was made a separate charge in 1843, with George A. Reybold as the first pastor. In 1856, ground was purchased for a new building at the corner of Grove Street and King's Highway East. This building still stands as the hall of the Haddon Fortnightly. A growing congregation found it necessary to build a new church, and land was purchased on the present Warwick Road site for that purpose. A gray stone edifice of Port Deposit granite, with Indiana limestone trimmings, was completed and dedicated on Nov. 3, 1912.

On Oct. 26, 1955, this building was completely destroyed by fire. The following Sunday, Oct. 30, a congregation of a thousand people gathered in the auditorium of the Haddonfield Memorial High School to witness their unity and spirit and determination to perpetuate the history of Methodism in this community.

Shortly thereafter, a decision was made to rebuild on the same site. Under the leadership of the senior minister, Lynn Hough Corson, a beautiful colonial design, prepared by the nationally-known architect Harold Wagoner, was adopted. The present church buildings, consisting of three educational buildings, a chapel, and the sanctuary, were completed in October 1958. The properties of the church are valued at present at approximately $2,000,000. The membership of nearly three thousand is the largest of the United Methodist Church in the state of NEW JERSEY.

The church has recently embarked on an imaginative program of Christian service through a professional marriage counseling program and urban out-reach into the adjacent metropolitan area.

CHARLES A. SAYHE

HAERTEL, ARMIN E. (1928-), bishop of the United Methodist Church CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF THE GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC, was born on June 4, 1928, in BERNSBACH, SAXONY. He was educated in the primary and Commercial High School of Plauen, Saxony, graduating there in 1948. Subsequently, he was trained for the ministry in the Methodist Theological Seminary in Frankfurt on Main. He became a probationer in the Methodist Church in 1948 and then, in 1951, after graduation from the seminary, he served as pastor until 1968. In that year he became district superintendent of the Dresden District where he served two years until on June 17, 1970, he was elected a bishop of the United Methodist Church in the German Democratic Republic. At that time East Germany, as it is commonly referred to, became a Central Conference of its own, apart from the former Central Conference which had its headquarters in Western Germany. Bishop Haertel resides in Dresden and from that city presides over the work of his conference. This conference cooperates fully with other Central and Annual Conferences of the United Methodist Church.

N. B. H.

HAGEN, ODD (1905-1970), United Methodist bishop of the NORTHERN EUROPE CENTRAL CONFERENCE, Stockholm Area, was born in Trondheim, NORWAY, on Dec. 16, 1905. He passed his student examinations (Artium) in 1925, graduated at Överås, the UNION SCANDINAVIAN THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL in GOTHENBURG, 1928. He studied at Oslo University and received the M.A. degree in 1938; Lic. Phil. at Gothenburg University in 1942. He has also been awarded the following honorary degrees: D.D., DEPAUW, 1953; LL.D., McMURRAY COLLEGE, Abilene, Texas, 1956; L.C.D., UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND, 1965; and D.D. by OHIO NORTHERN UNIVERSITY.

Ordained deacon in 1930, elder in 1932, he served as pastor in charge Hvittingfoss, Bodö, Kolbotn and Rjukan, Norway, 1927-1935. He went as teacher to Överås, Gothenburg, 1935-47, becoming principal of the same institution, 1947-1953. He was elected bishop by the Northern Europe Central Conference of The Methodist Church in 1953.

Hagen acted as secretary of the Norway Conference, 1935-39, and chairman of its Board of Examinations, 1945-49. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church in 1940 and 1948, at the Central Conferences of 1939, 1948, and 1953. He was elected a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL Executive Committee in 1955, and became president of the World Methodist Council for the 1966-71 term, being elected and inaugurated into this office at the World Methodist Conference in LONDON in August, 1966.

Bishop Hagen was also a member of the Board of the Swedish Bible Society, the Swedish Ecumenical Board, Swedish Free Church Council, Stockholm Theological Institute, Chairman of the Board of Union Scandinavian Theological School, member of the Board of Bethany Deaconess Institution, member of the Board of Trustees Assurance Company Ansvar, and a member of the Board of St. Lukes Institution.

Bishop Hagen wrote several books of philosophy, theology, dogmatics and sermons, among them Var Kristne Tro, Oslo, 1953; Preludes to Methodism in Northern Europe, Oslo, 1961; Tankens plats i trons varld, Stockholm, 1950; Kyrka och Sakrament, Stockholm, 1944; Kyrkans ambete, 1960; Tidens Oro och Kyrkans, 1962; as well as numerous articles in papers and magazines.

During World War II, Bishop Hagen was especially active in the Methodist Relief Work for Norway. He travelled widely in Africa and the United States, lectured at several universities and institutions, and aided Relief Work in Yugoslavia. He was decorated by the Swedish King in 1961 (Nordstjärnan, Chevalier of the North Star); and by King Haakon of Norway in 1947. He became a Swedish subject in 1953. He was decorated again by the King of Sweden (Commander of the North Star, 1966.) He was at the time of his death the honorary chairman of the committee of the World Methodist Council sponsoring the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

Odd Hagen was much beloved by all the other bishops of The United Methodist Church. He was host bishop at the World Methodist Conference which met in Oslo in 1961 and perhaps at his best presiding over and managing the various public programs of the conference in connection with Bishop FRED P. CORSON who was then president. It was largely by Bishop Hagen's influence that the World Conference was held in Oslo, and the King of Norway attended the conference and addressed it at his invitation. As a bishop he was a thoughtful and keenly observant over-pastor, keeping up with all the details of administration which fell upon him as president of the conferences in DENMARK, Norway, and SWEDEN, and also of the FINLAND Provisional, Baltic and Slavic Provisional, and Finland-Swedish Provisional Conferences. He managed at some risk to himself to visit certain of the congregations in the Baltic and Slavic Conference and was especially zealous to see that work in the weaker sections of his area was well cared for. His election as president of the World Methodist Council was by unanimous agreement and his world-wide travels to fulfill the responsibilities of that office made him a familiar figure over the entire Methodist world. He traveled extensively in Africa, Asia, Europe, North and South America on work of the Council and presided at its executive committee meetings in September 1968, at GENEVA, SWITZERLAND. He died suddenly on Jan. 28, 1970, in STOCKHOLM, Sweden, after a brief illness and before his term as president of the World Council had come near its end.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND, U.S.A. St. Paul's E. U. B. Church has been closely related to the beginning of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. The congregation was founded in 1790 by GEORGE ADAM GEETING, considered by some as the third bishop of the denomination. Nine pastors of St. Paul's later became bishops. Nineteen men who were pastors of the congregation became superintendents in seven different conferences. Other pastors distinguished themselves by becoming editors of church literature, executive secretaries of denominational boards, or college professors.

The first church building was dedicated May 24, 1805. It was patterned after a two-story log house. Five years later a brick building was erected on the site where the present edifice now stands. Bishop ASBURY of the M. E. Church preached in this building Aug. 27, 1812, during his last visit to Hagerstown. For twelve years the building was used alternately between the Methodists and the United Brethren.

On the present site a second building was erected in 1858 and dedicated by Bishop J. J. GLOSSBRENNER, a former pastor of St. Paul's. The church was enlarged and remodeled in 1884 during the pastorate of W. O. FRIES, who later became editor of church school literature for the denomination.

St. Paul's entered into a new era of achievement and development during the pastorate of A. B. STATTON, which began in 1897 and continued for twenty years, the longest pastorate in the history of the denomination up to that time. Foundations were laid which destined the church to become one of the strongest congregations in the former U. B. Church. Under Statton's leadership a new edifice was dedicated by Bishop E. B. KEPHART, Feb. 26, 1899. It was the first church building in the denomination to provide separate classrooms for Christian instruction. At the time of its erection the edifice was considered to be one of the finest in the denomination.

During the pastorate of S. C. ZIEGLER (1917-21), the church continued to flourish in membership and influence in the community and in the field of foreign missions in particular. Ziegler relinquished the pastorate to become the Foreign Missionary Secretary for the denomination.

F. BERRY PLUMMER's fruitful ministry of thirty-five years (1921-56) was the longest in the history of the congregation. During his leadership the church continued to enjoy marked growth in membership and in attendance. His ministry came to a climax in the dedication of a modern education building dedicated June 1, 1952 by Bishop GEORGE E. EPP at a cost of $300,000.

The congregation, which is referred to as an inner-city church, has a membership of 1,700.

HAGERTY, JOHN (1747-1823), one of the first Methodist preachers of colonial America, was elected and ordained as an elder at the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE. He was born in Prince George's County, Md., on Feb. 18, 1747, and in 1771 he was converted after a sermon preached by JOHN KING, who thereafter formed a society of which John Hagerty was made a leader. Hagerty commenced exhorting, and after a time "rather reluctantly" consented to preach. In 1779 he entered the traveling connection and was one of the members of the Christmas Conference, his brethren electing him as one of the twelve to be ordained elder. The next year, 1785, Asbury sent Hagerty to New York, but after occupying prominent positions, he located in 1794 on account of the serious illness of his wife. In preaching in NEW JERSEY in THOMAS MORRELL'S house at Chatham, Hagerty was instrumental in the conversion of Morrell, who later became a noted Methodist preacher.

Hagerty really belonged to the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, and after he located in 1794 because of his wife's health, he went back to MARYLAND where he continued to preach as opportunity permitted. J. E. Armstrong says of him, "His fine personal appearance, his devotion to Methodism, and his unselfish service in the Church, make his name memorable" (p. 48). Bishop JOSHUA SOULE witnessed his death in BALTIMORE on Sept. 24, 1823, and spoke to him about his approaching end. "Yes," Hagerty replied, "all is straight, the way is clear before me."

HÄGGMAN, JONAS WILHELM (1864-1946), a Finnish Methodist minister of Swedish descent, was born at Pedersöre in the north of FINLAND in 1864. He was converted in 1884 by a free-church minister, and then came into contact with B. A. CARLSON in HELSINKI and with other Methodist ministers. At that time Häggman was a chemist living in Pori, but he consented to be Carlson's assistant, both in Helsinki and in other places. In 1892-96 he studied theology at BOSTON UNIVERSITY. In 1897 he returned to Finland and started the Methodist Theological Seminary, at first in Tampere, and from 1907 in Helsinki. He was its leader for thirty-seven years. Also at times he was pastor in charge of the Finnish-speaking church at Helsinki, and district superintendent. He retired from active service in 1934 and died in 1946.

HAHN, HARVEY CHARLES (1902-), American E. U. B. minister, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 25, 1902. There he attended Fenn College (A.B., 1926), and later studied at Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1932). He was married to Rose Teufel in 1923, and they had one daughter. His wife died April 6, 1968 and he was remarried Dec. 12, 1970 to Mrs. Catherine B. Beavers, Dayton. He was ordained to the Christian ministry in 1930 by the Miami Conference, UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

Hahn was assigned to the Otterbein Church, DAYTON, OHIO in 1929 and has served it continuously until his retirement in 1969. The church which primarily serves a deprived neighborhood has grown to be one of the outstanding congregations of the area.

He has been a prominent civic leader, being chosen Dayton's Most Outstanding Citizen in 1955. He is on the nationally known Speakers Bureau of the General Motors Corporation. He is Protestant Chaplain for the Department of Public Safety for the City of Dayton and serves on the Boards of the Miami Valley Hospital, United Theological Seminary, Boy Scouts, and the Boys' Club of Dayton.

Dr. Hahn has received the following citations: OTTERBEIN COLLEGE, D.D., 1953; thirty-third degree in Masonry; Silver Beaver Award in Boy Scouts, and the Walter Winchell Award for work with the underprivileged. He continues to reside in Dayton.

ROY W. FISHER

HAIGH, HENRY (1853- 1917), British Methodist, was born at Ossett, near Leeds. After training for the Wesleyan Methodist ministry at Richmond College, he left for INDIA in 1874, serving in the Mysore District for twenty-seven years and becoming an accomplished Kanarese scholar. For five years he was reviser-in-chief of the Kanarese Bible, and also edited a successful weekly Christian newspaper in Kanarese, the Vrittanta Patrike. Returned to England, he was for nine years the Chairman of the Newcastle District. In 1910 he was an official representative at the General Conference of the Methodist Church in CANADA, and in 1911 was elected PRESIDENT of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference. As a General Secretary of the Missionary Society, he travelled constantly and widely, and he died in Hankow in 1917. His published writings include his Fernley Lecture on Some Leading Ideas of Hinduism.

JOHN NEWTON

HAIME, JOHN (1708-1784), British Methodist, was born at Shaftesbury, Dorset, on Feb. 18, 1708. He was converted while serving in the army and became a preacher to his fellow soldiers in Flanders, establishing Methodist societies. Through a lapse into sin he lost the joy in believing he had once known, but continued to preach. On discharge from the army he became one of JOHN WESLEY'S helpers and was appointed to a CIRCUIT. The story of his spiritual struggles and ultimate return to peace is vividly told in his memoir. He died at Whitechurch on Aug. 18, 1784.

HAINES, AARON WATSON (1847-1932), American minister and historian of Iowa Methodism, was born on Jan. 24, 1847, in Mullica Hill, N. J. His family moved to Iowa in 1848 and settled at Round Grove, near Pella, in 1854. After attending country school, Haines became a rural teacher in Wayne Township, Monroe County in 1866. Drawn into Methodism, he was admitted on trial to the IOWA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church on Sept. 4, 1869 and assigned a CIRCUIT of six churches near Oskaloosa. From 1870 to 1902 he served sixteen different congregations of the Iowa Conference, chiefly in rural areas. Following his retirement, he moved to ILLINOIS and did supply work until 1920. He died in Rockford, Ill., on Jan. 5, 1932.

Haines devoted considerable attention to writing religious prose and verse for church periodicals particularly the Northwestern Christian Advocate, and published Sacred Memories of a Circuit Rider. His most important work was The Makers of Iowa Methodism (Cincinnati: Jennings and Pye, 1900). This pioneer work on Iowa Methodism is chiefly a series of biographical sketches, organized in chronological groups. It provides important reference material for the study of the church in nineteenth century Iowa and reveals a personal awareness of the labors of frontier ministers.

HAINES, JOSEPH HARRY (1917-), American minister and son of Herbert Isaac and Maud (Gott) Haines, was born in AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, June 29, 1917. He obtained the A.B. degree from WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, 1948; S.T.B., WESTMINSTER (now Wesley) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1950; M.Th., Princeton Theological Seminary, 1956; and Th.D., Princeton, 1962. He was married to Loma Ruth Houseley, Aug. 4, 1944. Mr. Haines became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1949.

He was received on trial by the West China Conference, ordained DEACON and ELDER (1944) by the same body. He served as district superintendent and field treasurer, Chunking District, 1944-47; district superintendent, Central MALAYA District, 1950-60; pastor in Malaya at Ipoh, 1951-55, and Kuala Lumpur, 1956-60. From 1962-65, he was Asian secretary, Division of Inter-Church Aid, Refugee and World Service, WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; director, Department of the Advance, BOARD OF MISSIONS, 1965-66; and since 1966 executive secretary of METHODIST COMMITTEE FOR OVERSEAS RELIEF (MCOR), now known as United Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief (UMCOR).

Dr. Haines was the author of the study book Chinese of the Diaspora, published for the World Council of Churches. In 1954, he rewrote John Bennett's Christianity and Communism into basic English and translated it into Chinese.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

HAITI is a Republic occupying the western third of Hispaniola, an island of the WEST INDIES, the DOMINICAN REPUBLIC holding the eastern two-thirds. French and a creole patois are the languages in common use. The area is 10,714 square miles and the population 4,674,000 (1968 estimate). The capital is Port-au-Prince.

After the establishment of French authority for the Haitian area, scores of mulatto sons of French officials, merchants and planters were sent to FRANCE for education. In due time these became imbued with the principles of the French Revolution, returning home to establish the liberty, equality and brotherhood there proclaimed.

Francois Dominique Toussaint L'Ouverture (1743-1803), one of the ablest leaders the Negro race has produced, laid the foundation of Haiti's independence. He was treacherously arrested and taken to France, where he died in prison, but his spirit lived in the work of others. Henri Christophe made himself King of the northern part of Haiti, but Republican forms followed him. And so Haiti persisted—with the lure of "voodoo," the continuance of illiteracy and poverty and frequent overturn in government.

In 1816, under the urging of a Methodist sailor, Captain Reynolds, the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY sent John Brown and James Catts as missionaries to Haiti. Under the administration of Petion, they organized a society and advanced the work. However, in the winter of 1818-19, a shift in government took place; Roman Catholics came to enjoy special privilege, and Methodist missionaries were forced to withdraw. (A concordat with the Vatican was signed in 1860.) They left a society of less than forty persons and a congregation of about 100. Among these were two young local preachers, Pressoir and Evariste, and a mulatto class-leader Mme. Bauduy. Her young son, St. Denis, reached England and was trained there by the Missionary Society, his French tongue enabling him to preach in the CHANNEL ISLANDS. When the attitude of the government changed, St. Denis Bauduy returned to Haiti as a Methodist minister, giving continuous service until his death in 1861. He found that the society had nearly trebled in number during his absence, and he continued until John Tindall arrived from England in 1834.

Following Tindall were Mark B. Bird and Thomas R. Picot, who led the Mission for three-quarters of a century. Earthquake and other cataclysms destroyed much mission property. At least twice the major stations were burned in the riots and political turmoil, yet the Church finally received government recognition in 1952. By 1969, the Church had built up a membership of 2,757 and a community of 20,957 with 135 places of worship.

Despite the establishment of a schismatic Independent Wesleyan Church at Port-au-Prince from 1916 to 1929, evangelism continued, and was specially marked in the Petit Goave area and later around Jeremie. In 1939, Haiti Methodism became a section of the Jamaica district. As such, it entered the Conference of the METHODIST CHURCH IN THE CARIBBEAN AND THE AMERICAS in 1967, but it became a separate district in the following year. In 1948 the first Haitian minister for many years, Marco Dépestre, entered the ministry, and in 1970, H. Ormonde McConnell, an Irish missionary, left Haiti after thirty-seven years, and the first Haitian Chairman of the District, Alain Rocourt, took office.

Adult literacy work in Creole was begun in 1939, by the Methodist Church, and was later encouraged by Dr. Frank Laubach, who visited the island in 1943. In 1949, both literacy and agricultural work were begun in Petit Goave, and were extended to Jeremie in 1955, and to the island of La Gonave in 1965.

In 1960, the Nouveau Collège Bird was opened at Port-au-Prince, with the help of Swiss missionaries. By 1967, it had 1,192 students. In 1967, the church also controlled twenty-two primary schools with 1,421 pupils and one teacher training college with forty-five students.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church (USA) entered Haiti in 1948-49, taking over the property and constituency of the Hephzibah Faith Missionary Association. A. J. Calhoun was the superintendent. The stations were at Port Margot in the north and Petit Coan in the south. This mission had around 800 members with a community of over 2,000.

Free Methodist Church. On request of the Haiti Inland Mission (Independent), its churches, schools and Port-au-Prince headquarters came under Free Methodist sponsorship in 1964. There is a Bible school, girls' school, several elementary schools, and an evening school on the secondary level. Literacy work is being promoted. Several food relief centers are in operation. North American churches are assisting the Haitians in the erection of substantial church buildings that accommodate congregations of several hundred. This new work already reports approximately 1,000 members (1969). There are ten organized churches.

HALEY, JOHN WESLEY (1875-1951), was an ordained elder of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH in the South Africa Mission Conference. He married Esther Jane Hamilton, 1905. He was a pioneer evangelist in Saskatchewan prior to service in Africa, where he served as a missionary to MOZAMBIQUE, 1902-09; SOUTH AFRICA, 1917-34; RWANDA-BURUNDI, 1934-50. After a successful missionary career in Southern Africa, he pioneered and opened a new field in Rwanda-Burundi, following the indigenous principles he had been developing in other areas. An unusual revival movement developed that reached all missions of the area, especially the Anglican's C.M.S. work. This is one of the denomination's fastest growing churches. He was a frequent contributor to Missionary Tidings, and The Free Methodist. He was also the author of Life in Mozambique and South Africa, 1926, and But Thy Right Hand, 1949.

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia. WILLIAM BLACK, the founder of Methodism in Nova Scotia, first preached in Halifax, the provincial capital, in 1782. He soon organized a Society which, in 1785, came under FIEBORN GARRETSON'S direction. The first chapel, erected with the help of Philip Marchinton, a prominent layman, was opened at Easter, 1787.

Marchinton was expelled from the Society in 1791 and took the chapel with him. The people then built Zoar Chapel on Argle Street; it was opened Nov. 25, 1792 by William Jessop, the circuit preacher. The chapel was a rectangular building with galleries on all sides. The choir, accompanied by strings and woodwinds, occupied the front gallery; the communion table was at the back of the church.

Zoar Chapel continued to be used until 1852, when it was replaced by a new church on Grafton Street. This frame structure was burned in 1868. A year later a new brick building was opened, with A. W. Turner as minister. Through the efforts of some of its members, Coburg Road Mission Church was opened in 1874 to provide Methodist services for another area of the city. This in turn was succeeded in 1886 by the Robie Street Methodist Church, which became a separate circuit in 1890. For several years, T. W. SMITH, the historian of Methodism in the eastern provinces, was the circuit minister.

In 1924, the two churches, Robie and Grafton Street—faced with population movements and financial difficulties—came together as the United Methodist Church. Before a decision could be reached on a new building, the larger Union negotiations intervened. In July 1925, the United Methodist Church joined with the historic St. Andrew's Church (formerly Presbyterian). The new congregation took its place in a new St. Andrew's Church on Robie Street, on Oct. 16, 1927.

Thus, since 1925, the Methodist tradition established in Halifax by Black and Garretson, has mingled with the Presbyterian tradition founded by representatives of the Kirk and the Secessionist churches.

HALIFAX, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. Halifax Methodist Church goes back many years to the first circuit rider named William Ross. In 1801, he and Phillip Shepherd organized the first church class, which held its services at various homes in Halifax. In 1802, under the leadership of JACOB GRUBER, a church was built on land donated by Peter Rise—land that is now the cemetery. The church was known as the "Beehive" church because of its quaint shape. By 1803, the circuit territory begun by Ross included all of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties and parts of Lancaster and Schuylkill Counties.

From 1846 to 1849 plans were made to erect a new church building because the "Beehive" church proved to be inadequate. Under the pastoral care of James E. Meredith, the new church was built. In October 1851, the church was dedicated by JESSE I. PECK. This same building stands to the present day. Late in 1853, a parsonage was built.

In September, 1925, the church celebrated its 124th anniversary. Great strides were made up to this time, for the church membership reached 150 persons—a large congregation for the time. Nine years after the anniversary celebration, the parsonage was renovated, and in the early 1940's the interior of the church was remodeled. It was about this time that the WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE obtained its charter. The church's sesquicentennial was celebrated in 1951 when Billie Scott Mick was the pastor.

The Halifax Methodist Church has been served by more than 140 ministers from its beginning date.

HALIFAX CIRCULAR was a formal document signed in Halifax on March 30, 1791 (a month after WESLEY'S death), by WILLIAM THOMPSON, JOHN PAWSON, Robert Roberts, John Allen, RICHARD RODDA, SAMUEL BRADBURN, THOMAS TENNANT, THOMAS HANBY, and CHRISTOPHER HOPPER. This rejected any suggestion of a personal successor to Wesley, and advocated the "Conference Plan" of government by committees, with president, secretary, and stewards to be elected for one year only. It also suggested setting up of district committees with presidents (subject nevertheless to Conference), and the continuation of itinerancy. The 1791 Conference made William Thompson president, and many of the circular's proposals became accepted practice. In particular, in line with its suggestions, districts were first instituted in Methodism.

HALIFAX COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA, U.S.A. This Coastal Plains county has been a center of Methodist activity since the 1770's when Wesleyan evangelists from nearby Virginia began to conduct revival meetings here. It also was the site of strong ecclesiastical reform sentiment in the 1820's, culminating in the organization at WHITAKER'S CHAPEL, near Enfield, on Dec. 19-20, 1828, of the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church, the oldest annual conference of that denomination. In 1774, Halifax County became a part of the Brunswick Circuit, the first Methodist circuit established in Virginia. Between 1776 and 1783, DEVEREUX JARRETT, an Anglican minister from Dinwiddie County, Va., came regularly into Halifax County, preaching the doctrine of the "new birth." Along with Jarratt, THOMAS RANKIN came into the county to preach. In July 1776, Rankin recorded: "I rode toward North-Carolina. In every place the congregations were large, and received the word with all readiness of mind." On June 24, 1778, he wrote to John Wesley, concerning the revival of 1776-1777: "This revival of religion spread through fourteen counties in Virginia: and through Bute and Halifax counties in North-Carolina." On May 19, 1778, Halifax County's Methodist Societies, or churches, became a part of the newly-formed "Roanoke Circuit," a name in use until very recent years. As a result of the enthusiastic crusading Methodist evangelists, at least two Anglican parishes in the county endorsed the Wesleyan faith around 1776; these were Whitaker's Chapel, originally organized around 1740, and EDEN CHURCH, an outgrowth of an Anglican chapel dating from about 1760. (Eden Church was recognized by the North Carolina Conference [TMC] in 1966 as the oldest Methodist church in continuous operation in the Rocky Mount District.)

Other Halifax County congregations dating from this period include: Smith's Church, organized without a formal meetinghouse prior to 1791; Haywood's Chapel, built on land given by John Haywood, Attorney-General of North Carolina from 1791-1794; New Hope, begun as a brush arbor for CAMP-MEETINGS and to which in 1805 Stephan Pepper gave land for the first church structure; Union Church, dating from about 1798; the former Bradford's Church, established in the early 1800's and named in honor of HENRY BRADFORD, a distinguished Methodist (later M. P.) minister, who was a direct descendant of the famous Bradford family of Massachusetts; and Sampson's Meetinghouse. PHILIP BRUCE noted in 1804 that there had been revivals in many parts of the Roanoke Circuit, adding that at a camp-meeting on Oct. 23 of that year at Ebenezer Meetinghouse, "it was supposed we had about forty souls converted to God." JOHN DICKINS was appointed to the Roanoke Circuit in 1779-1781, and while here conceived the idea of establishing in America a school similar to Wesley's KINGSWOOD SCHOOL in England. The plans were endorsed by Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY, whose journal includes numerous references to Methodist homes and churches in Halifax County; and Gabriel Long and a Mr. Bustion of Halifax County became the first subscribers. The project developed into COKESBURY COLLEGE at Abingdon, Md.

Dickins married and settled in Halifax County near Eden Church in 1780. In 1785 he served the Bertie Circuit which was made up of a part of the old Roanoke Circuit, but he continued to live at his Halifax County home. In 1785, Bishop THOMAS COKE noted that there were 758 white and 321 Negro members in the Methodist churches in the Roanoke Circuit area. In 1821 the Roanoke District Conference of Local Preachers sent to the VIRGINIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE and other similar bodies in the United States a protest against regulations which were made by church officials without equal representation from all clergymen and laymen. Three years later a petition to allow lay representation was also sent to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. Early in November 1824, a Union or Reform Society (see ROANOKE UNION SOCIETY), the second such group to be founded in the United States, assembled at Sampson's Meetinghouse. This organization, whose purpose was to agitate for reform, had its second appeal for reform rejected at the General Conference of 1828, and the Society became the nucleus around which developed the North Carolina Annual Conference of the M. P. Church. This conference was composed of twenty-six persons—nine ministers, five local preachers and twelve laymen. The second meeting of the Annual Conference was held at Sampson's Meetinghouse in 1829. The conference met at Whitaker's Chapel again in 1830, 1833, 1842, 1845, and 1849. In 1836 and 1854 it was held at Bradford's Church; in 1862 at Bethesda Church, which had recently been erected under the leadership of WILLIAM HENRY WILLS; in 1879 the conference was held at the Temple Church and in 1859, 1865, 1874 and 1920 at the Enfield M. P. Church. Corinth Church, near Littleton, was established as a M. P. Church in 1829. Bishop DAVID SETH DOGGETT began his distinguished career as a traveling preacher on the Roanoke Circuit of the M. E. Church (after the split of the denomination there were two Roanoke Circuits, one for each branch of Methodism) in 1829, and remained there until 1831.

Robert O. Burton (1811-1891) played a prominent role in the work of the M. E. Church in Halifax County for over half a century. A powerful and impassioned orator, Burton was sent into the county in 1833 with headquarters at Weldon. He became a member of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the M. E. Church when it was organized in 1837. Three other outstanding M. E. ministers in the county during the late nineteenth century were: Thomas G. Lowe, William H. Bobbitt (1826-1890), and James B. Bobbitt (1835-1896). The Weldon Church was organized in 1846 and remained the only church in that town until 1874. Calvary Church near Littleton dates from 1852 and Pierce's Campground Church held religious services as early as 1829. The first building was erected about 1856. Tabor and Bethel Churches, both formerly associated with the M. E. Church, date from this general period. The NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church met in the town of Halifax in 1843. There were twenty-four Methodist churches in the county in 1850, with some 1,200 members, and thirty-nine Methodist churches with approximately 1,500 members in 1876. Among the former Methodist churches in Halifax County which are no longer in existence were Ringwood, Roseneath, Palmyra, Lee's Chapel. Since 1939 all the Methodist churches in the county have been affiliated with the Rocky Mount District of the North Carolina Conference.

The North Carolina Department of Archives and History has placed state historical markers at Whitaker's Chapel (1965) Eden Church (1966), and Bethesda Church (for Dr. Wills) (1967). In 1967, an outdoor marker was unveiled at Whitaker's Chapel commemorating the historic conference of December, 1828, and listing the names of its members. There were some 6,000 Methodists in Halifax County in 1967 with First Church, Roanoke Rapids (1,227 members) having the largest congregation.

HALIFAX MALE ACADEMY, Brinkleyville, N. C., U.S.A., a private boarding school, was in existence during the middle of the nineteenth century and was owned and operated by WILLIAM HENRY WILLS, a distinguished M. P. minister and educator, JESSE H. PAGE, son-in-law of Wills and a Methodist minister, served as principal of Halifax Male Academy as well as ELBA FEMALE SEMINARY. As a result of the influence of Wills and Page, special emphasis was placed on religious training. The two schools were located at "Rocky Hill," the home of Wills at Brinkleyville, and students boarded there and in other homes in the community. Located near the schools was Bethesda M. P. Church, erected in 1853 through the interest and efforts of Wills and others. Halifax Male Academy was the alma mater of Richard Henry Wills and his brother, George Whitaker Wills, who was a character in the book Rebel Boast, which dealt with the experiences of several Halifax County men in the Confederate Army. Halifax Male Academy and Elba Female Seminary were highly rated for the quality of their educational program and were patronized by many Methodist families in northeastern NORTH CAROLINA. Both schools received the enthusiastic endorsement of the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church, though both have long been discontinued.

HALL, DANIEL (1865-1926), Argentine minister and author, was born in BUENOS AIRES of Irish and French ancestors. At the age of thirty he was "converted by the power of God through the influential personality of JOHN F. THOMSON." After a short period of work as a layman in Buenos Aires churches and the Methodist day school, he became a member of the East South America Annual Conference.

His first pastoral charge was Central Church, ROSARIO, 1897-1901. Having developed tuberculosis, he was sent to the health resort city of Cordoba. There, while recovering his health, he overcame many obstacles to found a Methodist church and was its pastor for ten years. Sent back to Rosario, he erected the present building of Central Church. After one more year in Cordoba (1916), he was appointed to the church in La Plata, capital city of the Province of Buenos Aires. This appointment, 1917-20, was his last.

Beginning with his first stay in Cordoba, Hall was a prolific writer of pamphlets, booklets, magazine articles, and plays. At various times he was editor of the Methodist magazine, El Estandarte Evangelico, and was in charge of Methodist Sunday school publications. He was the first to launch a program of Christian literature in the Spanish language in South American Methodism. From 1920 until his death he was head of the Buenos Aires Methodist Publishing House (METHOPRESS) and editor of Methodist publications. Among his books are Cosas de mi tintero (From My Inkpot), Rayos de luz (Light Beams), and Llanos y montañas (Plains and Mountains).

HALL, EDMUND WILLIAM (1854-1940), New Zealand layman, arrived in Christchurch from Cambridge, England, on Dec. 22, 1867. Accredited as a local preacher in Timaru, 1874, he gave noteworthy service in the church. Returning to Christchurch, he established a successful business while performing Christian service. The site of the present Edgware Road Church, Christchurch, was his gift to the connection. He was elected vice-president of the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1905.

ARCHER O. HARRIS

HALL, ROBERT (1754-1827), British layman, was born in Nottingham on Feb. 25, 1754, and in his youth joined the Methodists. He entertained WESLEY, whose help he solicited toward the building of a chapel at Hockley. He assisted in founding the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION in 1797, edited the first Life of ALEXANDER KILHAM, was twice secretary of the New Connexion Conference, served as connexional treasurer, and was a CLASS LEADER for forty years. He died at Sneinton, Nottingham, on Aug. 6, 1827.

HALL, ROSETTA SHERWOOD (1865-1951), pioneer in medical education for Korean women, was born in Liberty, N. Y., on Sept. 19, 1865. Graduating from a normal school, she taught school, and then entered the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania at PHILADELPHIA, where she received her degree in 1889.

The next year she was sent as a medical missionary of the New York Branch of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY (ME) to KOREA where she became superintendent of the Methodist Woman's Hospital in SEOUL.

In 1892 she married Dr. William James Hall, Methodist medical missionary. Sent to open mission work in Pyenyang, they were the first Protestant missionaries to live in northern Korea. Her husband died in 1894 of typhus. After a brief period in America she was reappointed by the Woman's Society to continue the medical work she had started in Pyenyang.

In a land where women had been secluded, Dr. Hall campaigned for medical treatment of women by women. Barely on the field in 1890, she began teaching one Japanese and four Korean girls. One of these, Dr. Esther Park, later graduated from the Women's Medical College of Baltimore, and returned to Korea, in 1900, the first Korean woman trained in Western medicine. In 1913, with Dr. Mary Cutler, she began another training class, three of whom completed their work in the Government Medical College, in 1918, the first women physicians graduating in Korea. In 1928, Dr. Hall founded the Woman's Medical Institute in Seoul, thus giving Korean women a medical college of their own.

Dr. Hall also pioneered in work for the blind. She adapted the New York point system to the Korean language, and started a school for the blind in Pyenyang, the forerunner of many other schools for the blind in Korea. She retired from work in Korea in November 1933, and passed away in Ocean Grove, N. J., April 5, 1951. Interment was at the graves of her husband and her daughter in the Foreign Cemetery in Seoul, Korea.

Dr. Hall's son, Sherwood, returned to Korea in 1926, and in 1928 pioneered in opening the first Tuberculosis Sanatorium in Korea and in 1932 issued Korea's first Christmas seals.

HALL, WILLIAM NELTHORPE (1829-1878), British minister, was the pioneer METHODIST NEW CONNEXION missionary to CHINA. He was born at SHEFFIELD on April 19, 1829, and entered the New Connexion ministry in 1848. He served in several circuits, with indifferent health, but when the Conference of 1859 decided to send a mission to China he volunteered, together with John Innocent. They landed in China on March 23, 1860, and set up the Tientsin Mission. They baptized their first convert and built a chapel in 1862. Hall's first wife died in Tientsin in 1865; ill health compelled him to return to England in 1873; in 1876, however, he went back to Tientsin with his second wife. He died there on May 14, 1878. In 1907 the New Connexion Mission in China had about 4,600 members and eleven missionaries.

HALL'S CIRCUITS AND MINISTERS was an alphabetical list of the Wesleyan Methodist circuits in Great Britain with the names of the ministers stationed in each circuit, covering the years from 1765 onwards. It was prepared by Joseph Hall, a Wesleyan minister who died in 1902. The book must be distinguished from HILL'S ARRANGEMENT, which was an alphabetical list of ministers and the circuits which they had served. When first published in 1873, Hall's work was entitled The Wesleyan Methodist Itinerancy. The second edition of 1886 used the more familiar title, incorporating details up to 1885. To the third edition of 1897 was added an appendix covering the years 1886-1896, as well as details about ministers who had served the various departments of the Wesleyan Methodist Church and a table of annual membership returns. The whole work was revised and extended to 1912 by T. Calland Hartley, and in 1925 Hartley published a supplementary Hall's Circuits and Ministers covering the years 1913-1923.

HALLS, WILLIAM, JR. (1858-1933), American banker and philanthropist, was born Aug. 4, 1858 in BROOKLYN, N. Y. He was educated in the public schools of Brooklyn and graduated with high honors, having shown unusual ability as a mathematician. He was first employed by the firm of Prince and Whitely, cotton brokers, and then by the Hanover National Bank of New York as assistant cashier, thereby becoming the youngest bank official in New York at that time. He came to be vice-president of the Hanover Bank and settled in Summit, N. J., where he helped organize the Summit Trust Company. He was a devoted churchman and generous toward all its undertakings. Halls gave the administration building to the BROOKLYN METHODIST HOSPITAL, helped to found the Methodist Home for the Aged at Ocean Grove, was the largest donor in the building of the Oakes Memorial Methodist Church in Summit, and made substantial bequests to the Fund for Retired Ministers in both what were then the NEWARK and NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCES. He was generous in his support of missions, being particularly interested in the work of GEORGE A. SIMONS in northern Europe. He established trust funds for both the First Methodist and Oakes Memorial Methodist Churches in Summit. Halls died in PHILADELPHIA on Jan. 26, 1933.

HAM, HOWARD MILLER (1917-), American minister and son of Simeon Burwell and Almada (Miller) Ham, was born Aug. 27, 1917 in Auxvasse, Mo. He received the following degrees: A.B., Sterling College, 1943; Th.M., ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1946; Th.D., Iliff, 1947; Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1954. He was married to Mary Esther Underwood, June 26, 1938.

COLORADO CONFERENCE received him on trial, 1943; ordained him DEACON, 1945; and ELDER, 1946. He served pastorates in KANSAS, COLORADO, and ILLINOIS before becoming professor in religious education and psychology at Iliff in 1951. After nine years in this post he was elected professor of religious education at SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY in 1960, continuing until 1966, when he became General Secretary, Division of the Local Church, BOARD OF EDUCATION of The Methodist Church. He has continued in the same office in The United Methodist Church.

Dr. Ham served on area committees of Christian Education in Denver and Syracuse; consultant to General Board of Education; director of research project, weekly religious education in America, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; trustee, Liverpool, N. Y. Central Schools. Member: Academy of Religion; Religious Education Association of University Professors; and National Council on Family Relations. He is the author of Current Theological Thinking and Our Methodist Church.

HAMAN, CHRISTIAN S. (1832-1916), American Evangelical presiding elder and bishop, was born at Nazareth, Pa., March 14, 1832. He was converted in 1846 and licensed to preach in the Evangelical Association in 1854. His pastor was so impressed with his preaching ability that he presented Haman's name to the quarterly conference for a preacher's license without his knowledge, and every member in attendance signed the recommendation.

Haman was elected presiding elder in 1870 and was reelected every four years until he had completed thirty years in this capacity, except for the three years he served as bishop from 1891 to 1894.

Bishop Haman was privileged to preach more than ten thousand sermons before his death on Jan. 14, 1916, at Reading, Pa.

Bishop HARTZLER said of Bishop Haman and his work, "He was a man and a Christian of the old standard type, sound to the core, loyal in every fiber, without pretense, without guile. He loved the Lord; he loved the Church; he honored the holy ministry to which he gave his life. As a man, a Christian, a husband, a father, a friend, a preacher, a pastor, a presiding elder, a church representative, a bishop, Father Haman was 'all of a piece,' without patchwork—the same man all the way through."

HAMBLY, W. FRANK (1908-), Australian minister, was the son of the late Abraham Hambly. W. F. Hambly entered the ministry in 1931 and served in Tasmanian and Victorian circuits until he transferred to South AUSTRALIA in 1944. He was minister of the city church, Pirie Street, ADELAIDE, for eight years. He became foundation Master of the Methodist college, Lincoln College, in the University of Adelaide, in 1952, and still (1970) occupies that position. He was president of the South Australian Conference in 1955, secretary-general 1960-63, and president-general 1963-66. Since 1967 he has been deputy Chancellor of the University of Adelaide. In 1963 he received the D.D. degree from Melbourne College of Divinity, for his thesis on the Fourth Gospel.

HAMBURG, Germany. Methodist work in the Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg (now second largest city in GERMANY) was started by Karl E. Doering, who had come from the United States and was sent from BREMEN by LUDWIG S. JACOBY. For thirty-five years the work was mainly among children, and there was a flourishing Sunday school. In 1886 the first chapel was completed and dedicated. Under the care of Ph. Lutz the first Methodist deaconesses took up social work in Hamburg, nursing private patients. Progressive planning, the emphasis on both proclaiming the gospel and reaching out to do social work, remained a characteristic feature in Methodist circuit work in this city. Gradually five churches came into being, carrying the work into many parts of Hamburg. Methodists consistently became known and famed for their social work, as done by the Methodist deaconess motherhouse Bethanien and by two buildings with workers' flats (capacity of 130). The Second World War destroyed two of the Methodist churches. Soon after the war a building program was planned and carried out, with the result that three new churches were constructed, one of which was flooddamaged and destroyed again in 1962 but rebuilt in 1965.

The two thousand Methodists in Hamburg are organized into four churches and circuits. The Methodist Youth Department for Hamburg and the Northwest Germany Annual Conference is located in Hamburg; here the educational work done among young people is planned, with special attention to youth group-leadership training and social work for young people, including the "International Year for God" scheme via the "London-Hamburg-Link," establishing close cooperation between the British Methodist Youth Department/Methodist Association of Youth Clubs and the Northwest Germany Methodist Youth work.

ERICH BAASS

HAMILTON, DONA (1859-1890), first missionary to go from the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE (MES), was the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Hugh Hamilton. Her father died a month after her birth. She was educated in public school and in Mrs. S. C. Trueheart's school in NASHVILLE, Tenn. She was inspired to give her life to foreign mission work by Mrs. Ellen Downs Robinson, a former missionary to Indian girls in Indian Territory. She went to CHINA in 1884 as the first missionary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Texas Conference. She died in China in 1890 and was buried in Chin Kiang, China. A window in Scarritt Bible and Training School, Kansas City, was dedicated to her with this inscription: "For my name sake she hath labored and hath not fainted."

HAMILTON, FRANKLIN ELMER ELLSWORTH (1866-1918), American bishop and brother of Bishop JOHN W. HAMILTON, was born at Pleasant Valley, Ohio, on Aug. 9, 1866. He was educated at Harvard University and BOSTON UNIVERSITY, where he received the Ph.D. in 1900. He studied at BERLIN and Paris. In 1905-06 he made a trip around the world to study missions and comparative religions.

He was professor of Greek and Latin at Chattanooga University, 1887-88. He joined the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1891 and served as pastor in Newtonville, Mass., and First Church in BOSTON. In 1908 he became chancellor of THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY at Washington, and served in that capacity until he was elected bishop in 1916. He was assigned to PITTSBURGH, Pa., but did not serve the quadrennium. He died on May 4, 1918 and was buried in Milton, Mass. He was the author and editor of six publications.

HAMILTON, HAZEL (? -1956), NEW ZEALAND deaconess, was received as a deaconess probationer in 1918, and appointed to Wanganui, where she remained until 1924. In that year she was transferred to the DUNEDIN Central Mission, where she served the church and the community for sixteen years. She made so many personal contacts with the rich and poor, the sick and aged, the young people of the Bible classes and the youth of the community, that she became one of the best known and loved people in the city. In 1940, Sister Hazel left deaconess work, and later married J. T. Bryant, of Matangi, near Hamilton.

WESLEY A. CHAMBERS

HAMILTON, JAMES (1740-1827), was a Scottish medical doctor who practiced at Dunbar (1762-90), Leeds (1790-97?), and in LONDON, where he held the appointment of physician to the London Dispensary. A member of the Church of Scotland, he nevertheless joined the Methodist society at Dunbar, and gave medical attention to JOHN WESLEY when he was in Scotland in 1772. Hamilton, Wesley, and Joseph Cole are the subjects of the well-known print by John Kay, which shows the three men walking in Edinburgh, in 1790. While in London, Hamilton was a prominent member of the society at City Road, where his memorial may be seen.

HAMILTON, JAMES WALLACE (1900-1968), American preacher, was born at Pembroke, Ontario, Canada, May 4, 1900, the son of John W. and Elizabeth (Warren) Hamilton. He came to the United States in 1920 and studied four years at Moody Bible Institute. FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE awarded him the D.D. degree in 1940. He married Florence Newlan, June 24, 1930, and they had two sons and one daughter. He became a United States citizen in 1940.

After supplying briefly a pulpit in Baileyton, Tenn. and singing in a quartet that assisted with evangelistic services, in 1927 Hamilton was admitted on trial in the FLORIDA CONFERENCE (MES), and was appointed to Trinity Church, St. Petersburg. Actually it was a new situation where he was to organize a congregation. He was ordained DEACON in 1929 and ELDER in 1932. In 1929, Pasadena, another new project, was added to the Trinity charge, and Hamilton organized a congregation there and served both churches until 1931. The Pasadena Church then became a station and he was appointed there each year as long as he lived. When Hamilton organized the Pasadena Church it had thirty-four members; when he died thirty-nine years later it had 3,419. Both the church and its pastors became widely known because of its large "drive-in" congregations during the winter tourist season. On Sunday the 18-acre church parking lot often drew 3,000 cars bearing 5,000 to 11,000 worshippers.

Hamilton was a delegate to the 1960 and 1964 GENERAL CONFERENCES, and he served as a trustee of BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE and as a member of the board of counsellors of the Florida Presbyterian College. He received the Freedom Foundation award in 1960. He published five books: Ride the Wild Horses, 1952; Horns and Haloes in Hunan Nature, 1954; Who Goes There? 1958; The Thunder of Bare Feet, 1964; and Serendipity, 1965.

Always an able, forceful, and relevant preacher, Hamilton was nationally known and for years was in great demand as a speaker at colleges, seminaries, youth assemblies, ministers' conferences, and on established radio services. Over the years he was the platform preacher at forty-three annual conferences in the United States. He delivered the English lectures at Andover Newton Seminary and the Quillian lectures at EMORY UNIVERSITY. The late Charles Clayton Morrison rated Hamilton as one of the "six topmost representatives of the American pulpit." Throughout his ministry Hamilton adhered to a disciplined regimen of study and work, giving himself unstintingly to preparation for preaching. His unexpected death on Oct. 7, 1968, was mourned by his parishioners, his annual conference, and the entire church.

HAMILTON, JOHN WILLIAM (1845-1934), American bishop, was born at Weston, W. Va., March 18, 1845, the son of William C. P. and Henrietta M. (Dean) Hamilton. His father was a member of the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE, and his younger brother, FRANKLIN E. E. HAMILTON, also became a bishop in the M. E. Church. During the Civil War, John Hamilton served briefly in the Union Army and then was graduated with the A.B. degree from MOUNT UNION COLLEGE, Ohio, in 1865. He won the S.T.B. degree at BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1871. Several honorary degrees were conferred on him by different colleges and universities. He was twice married, first to Julia E. Battele, Dec. 24, 1873, and after her death in 1883, to her sister, Emma L. Battele, Dec. 18, 1888. There was a son by the first marriage and a daughter by the second.

Licensed to preach in 1865, Hamilton joined the Pittsburgh Conference on trial in 1866 and was appointed to Newport, Ohio, for two years. He was ordained DEACON in 1868 and ELDER in 1870. Transferring to the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1868, he served the following churches in MASSACHUSETTS: Maplewood, 1868-70; Somerville, 1870-72 and 1884-88; First Church, BOSTON, 1872-75; People's Church, Boston, 1875-84; and East Boston, 1888-92. It was said that he founded the People's Church without a member, a building, or a salary and then in five years made it the largest Methodist congregation in Boston. From 1892 to 1900, he was corresponding secretary of the FREEDMAN'S AID and Southern Education Society.

Hamilton was a delegate to five GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1884 to 1900. He was noted as a fund raiser, promoter, debater and protagonist for causes in which he believed. He crusaded especially for temperance, women's rights, and the colored race. When there was heated debate in the 1892 General Conference over seating women delegates, Hamilton cleverly moved to amend the second restrictive rule to read, "said delegates must be male members." His amendment was promptly voted down, as he knew it would be, and he then argued that the General Conference in refusing to say delegates must be male was in effect ruling that they might also be female! When vital issues were being debated, there was never any doubt about where he stood.

Hamilton was elected bishop in 1900 and was effective until 1916 when he reached the age for mandatory retirement. As an administrator he had a passion for raising money and building churches. At his death it was said that there were few M. E. churches in towns of 5,000 or more in America to which Hamilton had not directed or for which he had not raised funds. After retirement he served as the "white plumed chancellor" of AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, 1916-22, and raised $600,000 to save that institution. After eighty years of age he was chairman of the commission of American Methodists that raised money to restore John Wesley's room at Lincoln College, OXFORD, on the two hundredth anniversary (1926) of his election as a fellow.

With a striking face, flowing hair, booming voice, and erect, soldierly bearing, Hamilton was an impressive figure. He achieved distinction as a preacher, thinker, promoter, administrator, and advocate of worthwhile causes. He died in Boston, July 24, 1934, and was buried there.

HAMLETT, JAMES ARTHUR (1882-1962), fifteenth bishop of the C.M.E. Church, was born on April 10, 1882, at Henderson, Tenn. He received an A.B. degree from LANE COLLEGE in 1916; B.D. from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1922; M.A. from NORTHWESTERN in 1922; and Ph.D. from Northwestern in 1925. He held honorary D.D. degrees from Lane College, GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, and MORRIS BROWN COLLEGE. In 1900, he was ordained a DEACON and in 1906 an ELDER. He held churches in the West Tennessee and Kansas-Missouri Annual Conferences. The General Conference elected him editor of The Christian Index, the official publication of the denomination, in 1914. He held this position until he was elected bishop in 1922. Distinction came to him as a preacher, a writer, and the editor of several church papers. He was responsible for the "Young People's Jubilees," and in 1937 was a delegate to the Faith and Order Conference in Edinburgh. He founded Phillips School of Theology at Lane College (now in the Interdenominational Theological Seminary). He died on Feb. 17, 1962.

HAMLINE, LEONIDAS LENT (1797-1865), American bishop, was born at Burlington, Conn., on May 10, 1797, of Congregationalist parents. He taught school for a time, and, as a result of a nervous breakdown in 1815, he went to SOUTH CAROLINA for his health. On his return to New England he began the practice of law.

He was converted in 1828 and began to preach at various points in connection with his law practice, but in 1832 he joined the OHIO CONFERENCE. He served Grandville, Athens, Wesley Chapel in Cincinnati, and Columbus, and in 1837 was elected assistant editor of The Western Christian Advocate.

He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1840 and 1844. At the former he was chairman of a committee to establish a periodical for women and as a result of its report The Ladies Repository was established and Leonidas Hamline was made its editor. At the 1844 Conference he had a leading role in the debate on the Bishop ANDREW case, which led to the division of Methodism. His address on the constitutional authority of the General Conference was of great importance in the history of the Church.

In 1844 Hamline was elected a bishop in spite of the fact that physicians had advised against his attending the General Conference because of a heart ailment. He served for eight years, resigning in 1852. His actions raised the question of whether the episcopacy is an office of the Conference or an order that cannot be relinquished. There was a long discussion and the resignation was finally accepted, committing the M. E. Church to the view that the episcopacy is an office. Hamline's resignation was in line with his theory that a bishop was simply an officer of the church not an order for life.

He settled at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. He was married twice and had inherited some wealth from his first wife. He gave $25,000 to help establish HAMLINE UNIVERSITY, now at St. Paul, Minn., and an equal amount to establish Mount Vernon Institute in Iowa.

Two volumes of Bishop Hamline's works were published after his death and his biography was written by F. G. Hibbard. Hamline died at Mount Pleasant on Feb. 22, 1865. He was buried there but his body was later moved to Rose Hill Cemetery, CHICAGO.

HAMLINE UNIVERSITY, St. Paul, Minn., U.S.A., was chartered by the Territorial Legislature of MINNESOTA in 1854—Minnesota's oldest and, until 1869, its only college. A pioneer college, it was founded before Minnesota became a state and before there was any public school system. It was one of the first three or four coeducational colleges in the country. The charter provided that the college should be open to all qualified students, irrespective of race, creed, or color.

The college was named for Bishop LEONIDAS L. HAMLINE of the M. E. Church, whose gift of $25,000 made the institution possible. Located first in Red Wing, in 1880 it was moved to the present campus in St. Paul. It grants the A.B. and B.S. degrees. The governing board is made up of thirty-six members nominated by the board and elected by the MINNESOTA ANNUAL CONFERENCE. The president of the university and the bishop of the area are ex-officio trustees with full voting powers.

W. E. HAMMAKER

HAMMAKER, WILBUR EMERY (1876-1968), American bishop, was born at Springfield, Ohio, Feb. 17, 1876. He was the son of Oliver Grover and Rebecca (Hahn) Hammaker. He received the A.B. degree from Wittenberg College in Springfield, Ohio in 1898, and was a student in the Wittenberg Theological School, 1898-99. He received the B.D. degree from DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1901; honorary degrees awarded him were the LL.D. by Lincoln University, 1919; D.D. by MOUNT UNION COLLEGE, 1927; D.D. by Clark University, 1930; LL.D. from Mount Union College in 1939; and LL.D. from the UNIVERSITY OF DENVER in 1943.

On Aug. 15, 1901, he married Willamine Weihrach (deceased May 8, 1967) and to them were born four sons.

Wilbur Hammaker was ordained a minister in the M. E. Church in 1901, and served as pastor at Riverdale Church, DAYTON, OHIO, 1901-04; Broadway Church, Middletown, Ohio, 1904-08; Raper Church, Dayton, Ohio, 1908-15; Trinity Church, Youngstown, Ohio, 1915-36, in which year he was elected bishop by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. He was assigned to the Nanking Area of the M. E. Church in CHINA, where he served three years; and in 1939 was assigned to the DENVER Area, to which he was reassigned in 1940, serving there for eight years. He retired in 1948 but continued to serve as an active worker in the Board of Temperance of The Methodist Church. After retirement he took an active part in the work of the Temperance section of the BOARD of CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CONCERNS, and acted as ad-interim editor of Progress Magazine, 1955-57. Also, he was ad-interim administrator of the International Reform Federation, 1955-57.

Bishop Hammaker was Chairman of the Curriculum Committee of The Methodist Church for eight years, 1940-48. He was a trustee of Nanking Theological Seminary in China, and of the Hui Wen School for Girls at Nanking at that same time. He was a trustee of the Peking Theological Seminary and of the Peking Academy while he lived in China. In Denver he became a trustee and a member of the Executive Committee of the ILIFF SCHOOL of THEOLOGY at Denver and also a trustee of the University of Denver, 1940-48. Previous to his election as bishop he was a member of the General Conference of the M. E. Church five times, being elected chairman of his delegation three times. He was a member of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1931. After retirement, Bishop Hammaker continued to live in Washington where he took an active part in all moves for social betterment, especially in the committees and organizations of his own church which were forwarding these. He died on Aug. 11, 1968. Memorial services were held for him in both Denver and Washington, and graveside services in Springfield, Ohio.

HAMMER, AUGUSTUS W. (1856-1930), American minister, was born Dec. 26, 1856, in western VIRGINIA, the oldest of eleven children. His father was an officer in the Union Army. After the war, the family lived in ILLINOIS, KANSAS, and TEXAS. Here "Gus" began a cowboy career and followed it from MEXICO to CANADA for twenty-five years, driving herds of cattle from Texas north. In 1894 he drove a herd into the vicinity of Chinook, Mont. At a revival in Chinook, conducted by W. W. VAN ORSDER, J. A. Martin, and Allan Rodger in February 1895, he was converted. He was licensed to preach on Aug. 3, 1896, studied at Montana Wesleyan University and Taylor University, was admitted to the MONTANA CONFERENCE on trial in 1899, and was ordained elder in 1903. On Aug. 1, 1899, he married Alice Griffin. He built the Dupuyer parsonage and the Shelby church, and served circuits, some extending 350 miles, until 1912. He was superintendent of Epworth Piegan Indian Mission, 1912-21, after which he served the Brady, Collins, Dutton Circuit, 1921-24; Buffalo and Straw, 1924-29, and then Thompson Falls until his death at Montana Deaconess Hospital, Great Falls, Aug. 14, 1930. Burial was at Great Falls. A son and two daughters survived him.

Hammer was for twenty-one years the chairman of the Conference Board of Temperance. Van Orsdel often visited the Hammer home at the Indian Mission, and from the Hammers Stella Brummit obtained much of the material for her book, Brother Van.

ROBERTA BAUR WEST

HAMMER, CHARLES (1809-1887), American Evangelical pioneer preacher, was born near Orwigsburg, Schuylkill County, Pa., Dec. 7, 1809. He was converted Aug. 28, 1825, during the great Orwigsburg revival, was received into the itinerancy by the EASTERN CONFERENCE of the Evangelical Association in June 1830, and was assigned to serve with W. W. ORWIG on Lancaster circuit. "These two young men were united in the work like David and Jonathan." He was ordained as deacon June 6, 1831.

In 1832 Hammer was transferred to the Western Conference, stationed on Wooster circuit in OHIO, and ordained elder in 1833. He was appointed secretary of that conference in 1835. Bishop S. P. SPRENG listed Charles Hammer and JOHN SEYBERT as missionaries, "pushing the war to regions beyond." In 1836 Hammer was elected presiding elder in the place of W. W. Orwig and was largely responsible for opening the work in CANADA. In 1839 he was elected as one of the managers of the newly formed Missionary Society of the Evangelical Association. He served as publisher of the denomination two periods, 1839-42; 1854-67. Near the beginning of this second period the book establishment was moved from New Berlin, Pa. to Cleveland, Ohio. He served a second term as presiding elder, 1843-1847.

From 1868 to 1876 Charles Hammer was the Superintendent of the Ebenezer Orphans Home at Flat Rock, Ohio. "Father" Hammer, as he was affectionately called, was a pure-minded, gentle spirit, yet a man in the full sense of the word. He was godly, devout and humble, at the same time cheerful and optimistic.

He was a member of five GENERAL CONFERENCES in succession and served as the assistant secretary of the fourth of these.

Charles Hammer was noted for his power as a revivalist. He died Jan. 2, 1887 in Cleveland, Ohio.

GEORGE G. GOCKER

HAMMER, MINNIE LEE HANCOCK (1873-1959), American M. P. lay leader of Asheboro, N. C., was active in religious, civic, cultural and political affairs of the community, state and nation. She was born on Dec. 14, 1873, the daughter of J. M. and Jane Page Hancock and the granddaughter of James Page, doorkeeper in the Congress of the Confederate States of America.

Minnie Hancock graduated from Salem College, Winston-Salem, N. C., in 1893, and on Dec. 21 of that year married William Cicero Hammer, who served respectively as Solicitor, U. S. District Attorney, and member of the House of Representatives of the U. S. Mrs. Hammer assisted her husband in his various political activities and took an active part in the management of The Asheboro Courier, which they owned and published for more than forty years. For many years she was a member of the North Carolina Press Association and in 1938 was made an honorary life member. Following her husband's death on Sept. 26, 1930, Mrs. Hammer was asked by the Democratic Party to fill his unexpired term in Congress, but she declined because of her family and business interests.

She was for twenty-five years the president of the WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church, and when the Foreign and Home Missionary Societies were merged into the United Branch of Missions of the M. P. Church, she was made national president of that group. In 1910 she conceived the idea of the M. P. Children's Home. This was located first in Denton, and then in HIGH POINT, N. C. To hundreds of children in this home she was affectionately known as "Mother Hammer." She took an active part in the establishment of HIGH POINT COLLEGE by the North Carolina Conference of the M. P. Church. She was a charter member of the Asheboro M. P. Church, and for several years prior to her death was a member of the board of trustees of the Methodist Retirement Home of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE in CHARLOTTE.

Her one daughter, Harriette Lee Hammer Walker, died on Sept. 26, 1943, after a successful career as feature writer, editor and author.

Mrs. Hammer, generally regarded as "Asheboro's First Citizen," died on Oct. 30, 1959, and was buried in Asheboro City Cemetery.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

HAMMETT, WILLIAM (? -1803), British pioneer of WEST INDIAN Methodism, was apostolic in spirit and energy. His origins and childhood are untraced. He commenced itinerating at Lisburn, IRELAND, in 1784, and thereafter at Derry. WESLEY ordained him in 1786 for Newfoundland, but storms drove him to ANTIGUA with THOMAS COKE. Hammett was stationed at St. Christophers, 1787-88, raising there a society numbering seven hundred. At Kingston, JAMAICA, Hammett suffered persecution and legal intrigue, his chapel being dubbed a "public nuisance." When Coke visited the island in 1791, he found Hammett in a deplorable physical condition. At the suggestion of his physician, Coke took Hammett to America in order to restore his health.

The two men sailed from Port Royal, Jamaica, for CHARLESTON on Jan. 27, 1791, but as severe storms impeded their progress their ship was finally driven aground at Edisto, twenty-eight miles from Charleston. The two men finally reached Charleston, where Coke and Hammett preached, with Hammett's "effect on the local church and city being electrifying." The Methodist Society at Charleston then clamored that he be appointed their pastor, but ASBURY, who was endeavoring to establish itinerancy as an inflexible Methodist policy, and who did not believe in the people claiming the right to choose their own preacher, refused to appoint Hammett to the Charleston charge.

Neither Hammett nor the Society at Charleston would let the matter rest, as itinerancy was then not well established in the newly organized M. E. Church. Hammett himself, having been ordained by Wesley, and not having any great interest in Asbury or the Methodist Connection in the new world, was anxious to stay at Charleston.

An involved conflict thereupon came about between Asbury and Hammett, eventuating finally in Hammett leaving the regular church in Charleston and erecting Trinity Church, then at Hassell Street and Maiden Lane. He began to write against both Coke and Asbury in a series of pamphlets. Hammett developed his new church connection, which he called Primitive Methodists, and for a time was eminently successful. "In course of the next year, 1792, he drew off a great part of our society in that city," says JESSE LEE.

Hammett's stand, it turned out, was part of the great movement against the centralized power of the newly established American episcopacy which Asbury typified, and this stand found many supporters over the land. The death of Hammett in 1803, however, put an end to the Primitive Methodists of Charleston, who went back into the M. E. Church. Trinity Church remains today as a strong and loyal congregation, whose building is one of the most beautiful in America, in its perfect Greek architecture. The Hammett revolt and ideas which he promulgated and which were supported by other persons who did not like the "Asbury tyranny" was furthered by others who later on formed the M. P. Church.

Hammett was really a person who had difficulty in maintaining a peaceful relationship even with the preachers who joined in with him. He became a slaveholder after a time, in violation of the principles of the M. E. Church, and LORENZO DOW asserted that Hammett drank heavily. Hammett's son sued Dow for this statement later on, but while Dow was found guilty the whole episode seemed to have proved his point. Hammett was not the first nor was he the last of those brilliant, strong-minded, colorful, attractive, rule-or-ruin types who emerge occasionally, impatient of any discipline but their own, and whose records are found here and there on the pages of universal history.

HAMMOND, INDIANA, U.S.A., in Lake County near CHICAGO, was founded in 1873 by George Hammond, a meat packer. It is claimed that a Methodist preacher named Stephen Jones was sent into Lake County in 1836, but no church was established at that time. A Sunday school and church were organized in 1872 in a red school house, and a preacher named Williams who lived on a farm near Hammond and went to school in EVANSTON conducted services for three years. Then a minister named Baker came from Evanston and was in charge one year. Services were abandoned in 1879 and resumed in 1881 under S. E. Vinal. What became First Church was organized March 25, 1882, and in August 1883, Hammond was listed for the first time in the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE appointments (to be supplied). At first services were held in a hall where they were interrupted by the click of billiard balls and laughter from an adjoining room. Then M. M. Toole, Sunday school superintendent but not a member of the church, gave a lot, and a small chapel, the first in the town, was erected under Vinal's leadership. The chapel was quickly outgrown and Toole gave money for a larger sanctuary which was dedicated in 1883.

C. R. Streeter, often called the "dude" of the Northwest Indiana Conference because he visited his people wearing a tall silk hat and carrying a gold headed cane, served the church at Hammond, 1889-93. Later he built a home in Hammond and lived there until his death in 1944. A new church costing about $25,000 was completed in 1907.

A German Methodist church was organized in Hammond about 1881. Soon after the CHICAGO-NORTHWEST (German) CONFERENCE was merged in 1933, the Hammond church with about 300 members sold its building to the Hungarian Methodists and united with First Church.

Central Park Church, a small congregation, was established in 1888 and discontinued in 1949. Monroe Street Church (now Hyde Park) was organized in 1907. Centenary Church began in 1919. The most recent congregation to be formed, Woodmar in 1952, is now next to First Church in strength. First Church erected a new sanctuary and education building in 1947, and in 1969 the plant was valued at $1,053,300. The membership of the four churches in 1970 was: First Church, 1,501; Woodmar, 1,139; Hyde Park, 493; and Centenary, 252. The total value of their property was $2,089,056, and they raised for all purposes during the year $318,647.

HAMPSON, JOHN SR. (17? -1795), British Methodist, was one of JOHN WESLEY'S itinerants. He became a leading opponent of the DEED OF DECLARATION after its publication in 1784, and sent out a printed circular, An Appeal to the Reverend John and Charles Wesley; to all the Preachers who act in connection with them, and to every Member of their respective Societies in England, Scotland, Ireland, and America. At the Conference of 1785 Hampson's name appeared on the list of those who had ceased to travel, and he became an Independent minister at Southborough, Kent, although the Conference supplemented his stipend with an annual grant of twelve pounds from the Preachers' Fund.

HAMPSON, JOHN JR. (1753-1819), a British Methodist itinerant between 1777 and 1784, like his father opposed the DEED OF DECLARATION. The son was subsequently ordained in the Church of England, and at his death on Dec. 7, 1819, he had been rector of Sunderland for twenty-one years. Immediately after JOHN WESLEY'S death (1791), he published his Memoirs of the Late Rev. John Wesley, A.M., in three volumes, the first of such biographies to be written. In view of his previous relationship and his ignorance of Wesley's private papers, it is generally held to be defective. "His book is a sort of quiver, from which the detractors of Mr. Wesley generally select their arrows," says THOMAS JACKSON.

HAMPTON, VERNON B. (1897-), American layman, educator, and historian, was born at Dover, N. J., son of WILLIAM J. and Amelia B. Hampton. He holds the B.S. (1923), A.M., and Ph.D. (1933) from Columbia University, and Litt.D. from Webster University (1935).

During his teaching career Hampton served as headmaster of the lower school of Irving School for Boys, Tarrytown, N. Y., and as a teacher in the New Jersey and New York school systems. He was a regional research editor for the three-volume Journal and Letters of Francis Asbury, 1958; an official observer at the 1956 WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE; and vice-president of the Northeastern Jurisdictional Historical Society, 1958-64. In the NORTHERN NEW JERSEY (formerly Newark) CONFERENCE he has been at different times chairman of the campaign for Retired Ministers' Fund, president of the historical society, historian, and member of the commission on archives and history. He is the author of: Staten Island's Claim to Fame, 1925; Religious Background of the White House, 1932; Francis Asbury on Staten Island, 1947; Handbook for Parish Historians, 1951; Methodist Heritage and Promise in Staten Island, 1965; and a number of other books and articles. He is a member of the Butler, N. J. Methodist Church, and resides at 301 Hart Avenue, West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y.

HAMPTON, WILLIAM JUDSON (1866-1934), American minister and author, was born at Quakertown, N. J., on April 1, 1866, son of William Wharton Hampton and Susannah Baldwin. In 1892 he was a supply at Vernon and Glenwood in Sussex County, and in the same year he was admitted to the NEWARK CONFERENCE. In December 1892, he married Amelia Boyce of Vernon; Vernon Boyce Hampton, Methodist historian, is one of their six children.

Hampton served forty-two years in the Newark Conference. He was a delegate to the International Epworth League Convention at DENVER, Colo., in 1908 and to other conferences and conventions. He contributed for many years to The Christian Advocate, Zion's Herald, and publications of other denominations. Among his books were The Shrine Invisible, Dodging the Commandments, Our Presidents and Their Mothers, Religion of the Presidents, and Presidential Shrines.

Hampton retired in 1932 to Belvidere-on-the-Delaware, but continued preaching and writing. He died at Easton, Pa., on July 31, 1934, and was buried in Belvidere Cemetery.

HANBY, BENJAMIN RUSSELL (1833-1867), American U. B. minister, and song writer was born in Rushville, Ohio, the son of Bishop WILLIAM HANBY. His father's espousal of universal liberty and the "underground railroad" to help runaway slaves influenced young Hanby. It was not great preaching that was to bring fame to Ben Hanby, as much as his talent for writing music.

The dying of a runaway slave in 1842 at the "underground railroad" station in the Hanby home, one who was trying to escape to CANADA where he hoped to earn money to purchase the freedom of his beloved Nellie Gray, led Hanby to write the song, "Darling Nellie Gray." This song had a great influence in promoting anti-slavery sentiment in the north during the Civil War.

Hanby married Mary K. Winter upon his graduation from OTTERBEIN COLLEGE in OHIO, 1858. He served as college agent and then principal of an Ohio academy before accepting his first pastorate. During his ministry at New Paris, Ohio, Hanby's use of musical instruments in church and his liberal theology aroused opposition sufficient to force him from the pastorate. He opened a singing school for children, and because of the lack of funds, he composed his own music. His composition, "Up on the House Top," became a Christmas favorite.

In 1865, Hanby served one of the large musical publishers until his death from tuberculosis two years later. Sixty-eight songs are credited to his skill. His Christmas hymn, "Who Is He in Yonder Stall?" is sung throughout the world. He died at his home in Chicago, Ill., March 16, 1867, and was buried at Westerville, Ohio.

HANBY, THOMAS (1733-1796), British Methodist, was born at Bernard Castle, County Durham, on Dec. 16, 1733. He became an itinerant in 1755, and was appointed by Wesley a member of the LEGAL HUNDRED in 1784. He was ordained by JOHN WESLEY in 1785 to minister in Scotland, and continued to administer the Sacrament after Wesley's death. He was a signatory of the HALIFAX CIRCULAR, and was elected president of the Conference in 1794. At the time of his death on Dec. 29, 1796, he was the oldest preacher in the connection.

HANBY, WILLIAM (1808-1880), U. B. editor, bishop and abolitionist, was born on a poverty-stricken farm in Washington County, Pa., on April 18, 1808. At seventeen Hanby was apprenticed to a sadistic saddler from whom he ran away in 1828. Making his way to Zanesville and finally to Salem, Ohio, William worked at his saddler's trade and lived in the home of Samuel Miller, an earnest United Brethren who brought him to an experience of thorough conversion, and whose daughter, Ann, became his wife in 1830.

Hanby used his accumulated savings to pay off his indenture, then responded to a call to the ministry. His first charge in Scioto Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, contained twenty-eight appointments and paid a salary of $35. In 1837 he was elected a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE, where he was made Publishing Agent for the denomination. Later he also became editor of the Religious Telescope. From 1845 to 1849 he served a term as a bishop, but then returned to his editorship and remained at this post until 1853. He subsequently served in the pastorate until retirement.

As Publishing Agent, Hanby took charge of a printing plant in Circleville, Ohio, only three years old and heavily in debt. Slowly he turned it into a profitable enterprise. Hanby used the Religious Telescope to advocate abolitionism, temperance, anti-secret societies, and higher education. Although personally a gentle, quiet man, his home became a station on the "underground railway," a fact which had strong influence on his famous son, BENJAMIN HANBY, the songwriter. William Hanby himself compiled two hymnals for the church and wrote Part II to Spayth's pioneer History of the United Brethren In Christ. One of his chief services was to OTTERBEIN UNIVERSITY, of which he was one of the original trustees and in which he took a deep, personal interest until his death. Bishop Hanby died in Westerville, May 17, 1880.

HANCHER, JOHN W. (1856-1942), American educator, was born April 9, 1856, in Noble County, Ohio. Receiving an exhorter's license (1876) and a preaching license (1877), he united with the KANSAS CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, and spent ten years preaching. He went as missionary to SOUTH DAKOTA's Black Hills in 1887. He was president of BLACK HILLS COLLEGE, 1889-97, and was pastor at Grand Avenue Church, KANSAS CITY, Mo., and at First Church, Herkimer, N. Y., 1897-1901.

Becoming president of IOWA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in 1901, Hancher transferred to the IOWA CONFERENCE. He served as humanities professor, Iowa Wesleyan, 1908-11, and, while joining the Methodist Board of Education secretarial staff (1912), headed a fund-raising organization, 1911-32. Under his leadership, the Methodist Educational Jubilee raised $35,000,000. He secured about $70,000,000 as Methodist Centenary Director. This "Counsellor in Philanthropy" was honored with the LL.D., D.D., and Litt.D. degrees, while Who's Who in America carried his biographical sketch nearly forty years. He was an Iowa Conference delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1904, 1916, and 1920, and alternate in 1908. He died March 19, 1942, at PORTLAND, Ore.

HANDSWORTH COLLEGE, Birmingham, England, was one of the Theological Colleges of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, opened in November 1881, in an estate of over seventeen acres near the birthplace of FRANCIS ASBURY. The tutors and students have had a long association with Birmingham University, and Handsworth men could attend university lectures to prepare for Birmingham degrees. The Methodist Conference of 1968 decided to close the premises and to form the nucleus of the first English ecumenical theological college by uniting Handsworth with The Queen's College, Birmingham, an Anglican theological college.

NORMAN P. GOLDBAWK

HANDY, JAMES ANDERSON (1826-1911), American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in BALTIMORE, Md., on Dec. 26, 1826. His education was self-acquired. He was admitted to the Baltimore Annual Conference of his church in 1862, ordained DEACON in 1864 and ELDER in 1865. He held pastorates in the Baltimore Co. Ct., in WASHINGTON, D. C., VIRGINIA, NORTH CAROLINA, MARYLAND and LOUISIANA and was a presiding elder of the Baltimore District and Potomac Districts. As a general officer, he was financial secretary and elected bishop in 1892 from this office. In addition to being a member of a fraternal delegation to the M. E. Church, South, he was the author of Scraps of A.M.E. History.

Bishop Handy, especially during the time of his pastorates in Washington and Baltimore, was quite active in public affairs that affected his people. In March 1872, he led a group of Baltimore Conference members to the White House to meet President Grant. His name was connected with many charities, chief of which was the Handy Old Folks' Home of Baltimore and the cemetery attached thereto. Churches named for him were in Joplin, Missouri, and Decatur, Alabama.

HANHAM MOUNT, BRISTOL, England, was the first place in Kingswood at which JOHN WESLEY himself preached in the open air; this was on Sunday, April 8, 1739. In a letter he describes himself as preaching in a meadow on the top of a hill, about four miles from Bristol. Hanham Mount was to become his regular preaching place at eleven o'clock on Sunday mornings; as many as 3,000 people sometimes came to hear him. GEORGE WHITEFIELD had preached there in March, 1739, when he stood on a table because the ground was not high enough, and in fact the so-called "mount" is more a sloping piece of land which looks down into the valley of the Avon, ground which in Wesley's day was pastoral and beautiful. In recent years there have been threats to build on the spot, but so far the mount has been preserved as a memorial to the earliest days of John Wesley's evangelistic mission to the nation.

JOHN KENT

HANNAH, JOHN (1792-1867), British Methodist, was born at LINCOLN, Nov. 3, 1792. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1814. In 1834 he became the first divinity tutor of the newly established Theological Institution in London. In 1842 (and also in 1851) he was elected president of the Wesleyan Conference, and in the same year became divinity tutor in Didsbury College, MANCHESTER, which had just been opened. He remained there for twenty-five years, also frequently acting as chairman of the Manchester and Bolton District. Having been sent to America in 1824 as companion of Richard Reece, the first fraternal delegate from the British Conference to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he returned in 1856 as fraternal delegate with F. J. JOBSON as companion. He died suddenly on Dec. 29, 1867.

JOHN KENT

HANNON, JOHN (1845-1921), colorful American preacher and city pastor, was born in Montgomery, Ala., on Nov. 8, 1845. He was taught in the private schools in that city until 1862, when he entered the University of Alabama as a cadet. In the autumn of 1863 he entered the Confederate Army as sergeant-major in the Twenty-fourth Alabama battalion, Hammon's Brigade of Wheeler's cavalry. At the close of the war he became bookkeeper in the banking-house of Micour and Morgan. After two years of commercial life, he entered RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, then under the presidency of JAMES A. DUNCAN. After three years in the same class with the Chancellor, W. W. Smith, Hannon took his A.M. degree, and then joined the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (MES). He served one year at Culpeper Station, then was sent to BALTIMORE, where he remained four years. He was then transferred to NEW ORLEANS, where he succeeded WILLIAM E. MUNSEY as pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church. There he was caught in the dreadful yellow fever epidemic of that date and also suffered from malaria. Returning to Virginia, shattered in health, he was appointed to Park Place Church, RICHMOND, serving four years. While in this charge the University of Alabama conferred on him the D.D. degree. From Park Place he went to Memorial Church, Lynchburg.

In 1877 he was transferred to the PACIFIC CONFERENCE, over the protest of many friends, and served his Church four years in SAN FRANCISCO, four years in San Jose, three years in Ukiah, and two years in Alameda, an appointment just across the bay from San Francisco. It was while in San Jose, in 1893, that he brought an active partner into his work by marrying Lucy Haile, at that time studying at Stanford University.

John Hannon was the type of minister whose eccentric words and ways caused stories to gather about him, some almost legendary.

At the 1900 session of the Virginia Conference, he was received back by transfer from the Pacific Conference, and was warmly welcomed by a host of friends, clerical and lay. Bishop DUNCAN appointed him to Union Station Church, Richmond, where he and his wife met with a very enthusiastic reception. He died in Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 2, 1921.

MARTIN HANSEN

HANSEN, MARTIN (1826-1907), Norwegian Methodist, was born at Fredrikstad on Dec. 29, 1826. Like the founder of the Methodist Church in NORWAY, OLE PETERSEN, he was a seaman. Hansen joined the Methodist revival, and became a member of the Methodist Church in 1857. After a short while he became a CLASS LEADER, admonisher, and a local preacher. In 1863, he was appointed preacher at Halden. In 1870 he was ordained elder by Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON, this being the first ordination within the Methodist Churches in Scandinavia.

In 1870 he was appointed pastor in OSLO. In addition to his work as pastor, he prepared a catechism and a hymnbook for the Church. He also arranged for the acquisition of a building plot for the first Methodist church in Oslo, the capital of Norway. It was on his initiative that the first Sunday school magazine was published in 1871 and the official paper of the Church in 1872. This is still published under the name, Kristelig Tidende. It was on his initiative that the publishing house of the Church was set up in 1867. Also the founding in 1874 of the theological school, and of the first children's home in 1892, is due to his work. He was district superintendent, and in 1880 he was elected delegate to the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE in the United States. That was the first time a delegate from Norway had ever been sent.

Later the same year he formally transferred to America and was appointed first to a church in CHICAGO, and subsequently to BROOKLYN. But after an urgent request from the Norwegian Annual Conference, he returned to Norway in 1888 and became the head of the theological school. After that he was appointed district superintendent, until again he went to America and was appointed to SEATTLE, Wash. In 1898 he asked to be allowed to retire after thirty-nine years' service. He died on Sept. 29, 1907.

EILEEN BERNHARDT

HANSON, HARRY ALBERT (1888-), went to INDIA from the United States in 1916 as a missionary of the M. E. Church. His first assignment was at LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE as head of the department of economics. He held the degrees of A.B. (HAMLINE UNIVERSITY), M.A. (SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY), and S.T.B. (BOSTON UNIVERSITY). Later on furlough he was awarded the Ph.D. degree by Boston University and the D.D. degree by Hamline University. He was also a master carpenter.

He was ordained DEACON and ELDER in the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE while serving student charges. On June 29, 1916, he married Jean Dorchester, of a prominent New England Methodist family. In September they arrived in LUCKNOW. In addition to teaching economics, he served as warden of a large hostel and as vice-principal of the college. In 1922, he was appointed superintendent of the Sitapur District and drew the plans for and supervised construction of the Gracey Memorial Methodist Church, in Sitapur.

After furlough in America, he became manager of the Lodhipur Vocational School and of the Abbie Rich High School in Shahjahanpur. The high school was named for an uncle of Mrs. Hanson, who had given the money for its construction. In 1932, Hanson represented the NORTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE in the GENERAL CONFERENCE. His third term was given to the superintendency of the Garhwal District and the managing of Messmore High School in Pauri. In 1944, he was elected principal of the Lucknow Christian College, and after a reorganization of that premier educational institution of Indian Methodism, he was named president. The college consists of a network of schools, with separate principals or superintendents and a president who may be, as Hanson was, also principal of the college, teaching to the degree level in arts and sciences.

During the second World War, the four sons of Dr. and Mrs. Hanson were all officers in the armed forces.

In 1950, the serious illness of the third son made the Hanson's early retirement from India necessary. Hanson then became professor of religion and philosophy and dean of the chapel at OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY.

When the CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN ASIA

set up a judicial court, subordinate to the General Conference, Hanson was the only member elected on the first ballot and became its chairman. He was editor of the Daily Indian Witness during several Central Conference sessions, and served on the boards of governors of ISABELLA TIOBURN COLLEGE, the LEONARD THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, the BAREILLY Theological Seminary, the Vellore Christian Medical College, and the Woodstock School.

HANSON, JAMES M. (1783-1860), American minister, was born in Hampshire County, Va., and entered the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1809. While he served as Baltimore City Station pastor in 1827, dissension over MUTUAL RIGHTS forced trial and expulsion of eleven local preachers and twenty-two laymen. Subsequently, these became the Maryland nucleus of the M. P. Church. During four troubled BALTIMORE years, however, Hanson gained 1,173 members. He was a general conference (ME) delegate in 1828 and 1832, before assuming a twenty-year supernumerary relation in Washington. He died March 15, 1860 at Reistertown, Md.

HANSON, PERRY O. (1875-1967), missionary, was born in Darlington, Wis., Nov. 24, 1875, and in 1899 graduated from the University of Minnesota, an institution which gave him its Outstanding Achievement Award (1960) for his work in CHINA. His missionary career (1903-1951) was almost all spent in Taian, Shantung, where he was the chief builder of the Shantung Annual Conference. When he finally left China in 1951, after fifteen months detainment by the Communist authorities, he retired to Iola, Kan., where he died on Feb. 22, 1967.

HANSON, THOMAS (1733-1804), British Methodist, was born at Horbury, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire. In 1760, in response to a summons from the conference, conveyed to him by THOMAS OLIVERS, and without any initiative from himself, he began work as an itinerant preacher, and traveled for some twenty-two years. Ill health then compelled his retirement to Horbury, where he lived until his death. In 1780, in his brief autobiography, he described himself as "the poor man's preacher; having nothing of politeness in my language, address, or anything else. I am but a brown-bread preacher, that seeks to help all I can to heaven in the best manner I can." (T. Jackson, ed., Lives of Early Methodist Preachers.) His conference obituary describes him as "a plain, honest, faithful, zealous man."

JOHN NEWTON

HARBIN, ELVIN O. (1885-1955), American minister and recreational leader was born April 4, 1885, at Pleasantville, Ind. In his early childhood the family moved to LOUISVILLE, Ky. Here he grew up, attended the public schools, graduated from Male High School and was employed in the Louisville post office. While so employed he felt the call to the Christian ministry and entered the Presbyterian Seminary as a special student. He continued his employment at the post office at night while he attended classes at the seminary during the day. In 1918 he entered the YMCA war service at MEMPHIS, Tenn. The next year he joined the LOUISVILLE ANNUAL CONFERENCE and went to the Epworth League Board in Nashville, Tenn., as Director of Recreation. He remained in this position with the United Board of Education of The Methodist Church until his retirement three months before his death in 1955.

For more than thirty years he gave himself without reserve to the establishment of Christian recreation as a part of the on going program of the church. He was recognized as one of the leading recreational leaders and writers of America. He wrote for many recreational magazines and was the author of a series of books on recreation which are standards in this field. Included in his publications are Phunology, Fun Encyclopedia, The Recreational Leader, Paradology, Gay Parties, Games of Many Nations, and Games for Boys and Girls. His concern for the Christian use of leisure time taught thousands the true place of recreation in religious life.

HARRY R. SHORT

HARD, CLARK P. (1846-1925), was a talented and enthusiastic but somewhat eccentric early Methodist missionary in the SOUTH INDIA and BENGAL CONFERENCES. He was born in NEW YORK State, educated (B.A. and M.A.) in Genesee College (now SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY) and at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE. He arrived in Madras in December 1874, and when WILLIAM TAYLOR left Madras for work elsewhere, Hard was appointed presiding elder. It is recorded that his district was 700 miles long and 400 miles wide. He obtained railway passes and traveled almost continuously. His labors were prodigious. He seemed to be without inhibitions, doing whatever seemed to him to promise helpful results. Within a few years he was a legendary figure, calling upon governors and the viceroy of INDIA without appointments. He commanded respect and deeply influenced a vast number of people. The widow of an army major gave six months free work to the church. A leading lawyer, preaching in five languages, gave as much time to the church as to his profession. In 1877, Hard married a daughter of Van Someren of Madras, one of the prominent men of the city who had invited William Taylor to conduct meetings in Madras.

William, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Hard, became a famous magazine writer.

HARDIE, ROBERT ALEXANDER (1865-1949), father of the Korean revival, was born in Caledonia, Ontario, CANADA, on June 11, 1865. He attended high school and college in Caledonia. After teaching for two years he entered the medical school of Toronto University, where he graduated in 1890.

During medical college days, he joined the STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT, and after graduation he and Mrs. Hardie left for Korea under support of the students of the medical colleges of Toronto. After brief assignments in SEoul and Pusan, he was sent to Wonsan to open pioneer medical work. In 1898, the Canadian Colleges Mission was unable to adequately support the work, and transferred it to the Mission of the M. E. Church, South. Dr. Hardie joined that denomination. He was assigned briefly to Songdo and then to Seoul, but in 1900 again was sent to Wonsan for evangelistic and medical work, which soon changed to evangelistic and translation work. He was preacher in charge of the Wonsan circuit for eight years and presiding elder of the Wonsan District in 1908-09.

His special revival efforts attracted attention of the missionaries meeting in Wonsan in 1904, and soon he was leading revivals in the churches of Seoul, Songdo, and Pyenyang. These meetings had all the characteristics of those recorded in JOHN WESLEY'S Journal—weeping, conviction, confession, restitution—and swept thousands into the church.

In 1909, Hardie was assigned to the Methodist Union Theological Seminary in Seoul where he served as professor of Old Testament Literature until 1935, as president, 1913-22. He also served on both the Executive Committee and Board of Translators of the Korean Bible Society. For years he was editor of the Theological World, published by the Methodist Seminary, and later as editor of the Christian Messenger, published by the Christian Literature Society.

In 1923, he was assigned to the production of Christian literature in addition to his teaching duties, and served as a member of the editorial board of the Christian Literature Society until his retirement in 1935. He was president of the Society, 1921-27. Under his direction a total of sixty-two titles had been completed and forty-nine published when he retired from the field in May 1935, in his forty-fifth year of service.

He died at Lansing, Mich., June 30, 1949, and was buried in Deepdale Cemetery, Lansing.

PAUL HARDIN

HARDIN, PAUL, JR. (1903-), American bishop, was born at Joanna, S. C., on Nov. 7, 1903, the son of Paul and Harriet (Wannamaker) Hardin. He received the

A.B. degree from WOFFORD COLLEGE in 1924, and the D.D. in 1950; the B.D. from CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1927; and the D.D. from BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE in 1950. He married Dorothy Elizabeth Reel on Oct. 18, 1927, and they have three children.

Paul Hardin was ordained DEACON in 1929 and ELDER in 1931. His pastorates included (in NORTH CAROLINA): Matthews, 1927-29; Forest Hill, Concord, 1929-33; First Church, Waynesville, 1933-35; First Church, Wadesboro, 1935-39; First Church, Asheboro, 1939-43; Central Church, Shelby, 1943-45; Wesley Memorial, HIGH POINT, 1945-49; and in Alabama, First Church, BIRMINGHAM, 1949-60.

He was elected bishop on July 15, 1960, at the South-eastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE and has been the resident bishop of the COLUMBIA (SOUTH CAROLINA) Area since that time. From 1961 to 1964 he also had charge of the ALABAMA-WEST FLORIDA CONFERENCE following the death of Bishop HODGE.

Bishop Hardin has been a member of the General BOARD OF EDUCATION; of the General BOARD OF CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CONCERNS; and president of the COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE and Jurisdictional Conference of 1960. He is a member of the executive committee and program chairman of the LAKE JUNALUSKA ASSEMBLY, and a trustee of EMORY UNIVERSITY.

HARDWICK, THOMAS, early London Methodist, about whom very little is known. WILLIAM MYLES claims that he served as an itinerant preacher from 1742-49, but this may be questioned. It seems that he was a "LOCAL" PREACHER, and at the 1746 CONFERENCE was hesitantly listed among Wesley's Assistants, along with other outstanding local preachers such as James Jones and JOSEPH COWNLEY, the latter of whom did in fact become an itinerant that year. The manuscript minutes of the 1746 Conference note the summer stations of the preachers, Hardwick being set down for Yorkshire in June and at BRISTOL (under CHARLES WESLEY) in July. He was also present at the 1747 Conference, when again the list of Assistants reads: "perhaps Thomas Hardwick and James Jones." Although Jones was stationed in Wednesbury (his home area), no station was assigned to Hardwick. Later that year, however, he seems to have accompanied JOHN WESLEY on a preaching tour. To this event Charles Wesley refers in December, in a letter addressed to him as "Mr. Hardwick, Honecutter near the Bridge in Brentford, London." The letter refers also to his "past weaknesses" and "the late storm of temptation," though it does assume his presence at West Street Chapel in London every Sunday. The bridge was at the east end of Brentford, only eight miles or so from West Street, and at this time Brentford had no church of its own, though it was far from friendly to itinerant preachers. Thomas Hardwick seems to have been torn between the call to the full itinerancy and remaining a reasonably devout layman. The matter was probably clinched on Dec. 31, 1748, when Charles Wesley married him to Sally Witham, whose older sister Hannah was the wife of Wesley's London steward, THOMAS BUTTS. It seems highly unlikely that he itinerated after his marriage, though he remained on friendly terms with the Wesleys, especially Charles, for whom he continued to offer hospitality and to arrange transportation in the London area. In January 1750, his widowed mother went as matron to Wesley's KINGSWOOD SCHOOL, and served in the Bristol area until 1753 at least. No trace of Thomas Hardwick's connections with the Wesleys are known later than a letter from Charles Wesley to him in May 1750, again addressed to him at Brentford. It may well be that he left that town, for the society fell to pieces, and John Wesley's frequent preaching visits there ceased for a decade.

HARFORD, LILLIAN RESLER (1851-1939), American U. B. outstanding leader of women, was born at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., May 15, 1851. Her father, J. Resler, was a minister of rare vision in his day for he had much to do in launching higher education and mission in the Church of United Brethren in Christ.

Lillian's education began in a one-room school, and continued in OTTERBEIN COLLEGE, from which she was graduated in 1872. She taught for one year in LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE.

In 1875 she married Professor George Keister of Union Biblical Seminary (now UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY) in DAYTON, Ohio. She arrived in Dayton when there was strong agitation demanding that the women of the Church organize for Missions. On Sept. 29, 1875, six women met to consider calling a denominational meeting for this purpose and one of them was the young bride, Mrs. Keister. When the Women's Missionary Association was organized in October 1875, she became the first General Secretary.

Her life of service also included trustee, founder and first editor of the Woman's Evangel (World Evangel), vice-president, president, and president emeritus of the Woman's Missionary Association.

She was a delegate to the first WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE (1888) in LONDON, England and the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in NEW YORK CITY (1900).

In 1893 she married W. P. Harford and moved to OMAHA, Neb. She continued her official leadership in the WMA and also served as president of the YWCA in Omaha. For two years she served as national president of the YWCA.

The girls' boarding school in Moyamba, SIERRA LEONE, Africa is named the Harford School for Girls in her honor. Death came April 17, 1939, at the Otterbein Home near Dayton, Ohio, where she was residing, with burial at Westerville, Ohio.

HARGRAVE, RICHARD (1803-1879), American preacher and administrator, the son of William and Sallie (Ellis) Hargrave, was born in Caswell County, N. C., Dec. 5, 1803. His father was an abolitionist and in 1818 moved to INDIANA. In 1819 he was converted. In 1823 he joined the M. E. Church and was licensed to preach, preaching until 1870. He served twenty-one appointments, some of them the most significant, and was presiding elder for eight districts. He held his place in the admiration of INDIANA audiences with the best. When the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE was organized in 1852, Bishop OSMOND C. BAKER asked him to preach the sermon for the ordination service. He married Nancy A. Posey, March 10, 1829 and they had eight children.

He died June 23, 1879, at his daughter's home and was buried in Bethel Cemetery near Attica, Ind.

HARGREAVES, PETER (1833-1917), Wesleyan missionary in SOUTH AFRICA, was born in Burnley, England, on Dec. 11, 1833. On entering the ministry in 1857, he was immediately sent to South Africa, where he married Henrietta Dorothy, a daughter of W. J. Davis, on Feb. 3, 1863. She died in 1909 and he later married her half-sister.

Hargreaves' ministry was remarkable in that he had only two appointments in forty-four years. When he arrived at Clarkebury, Tembuland in 1858 he found the work in a bad way after two years without a missionary. Before his removal in 1880, the membership had increased nine-fold, several out-stations had been established, and the Training Institution had been in operation for four years. Hargreaves was deeply respected by the local chiefs and was frequently consulted by the Tembu paramount chief, Ngangelizwe, who had spent some time in his home as a young man. He consistently used his influence in the interests of peace, and was involved in the negotiations which led to the extension of colonial rule over Tembuland.

After furlough in England, Hargreaves moved to Emfundisweni, Pondoland, where he remained from 1882 to 1901. Pondoland was at this time an independent territory, frequently disturbed by tribal warfare and infested with white concession-hunters. Hargreaves maintained that cooperation with the Cape Colony and the exclusion of speculators was in the best interests of the Mpondo, but his advice often went unheeded and he himself was slanderously attacked. Nevertheless, the paramount chiefs turned to him in times of crisis, and he played a major role in bringing about an agreement with the Cape in 1886 and the peaceful annexation of Pondoland in 1894. During 1895 the paramount chief, Sigcawu, fell into disfavor with the authorities and Hargreaves averted certain bloodshed by persuading him to surrender voluntarily. It was as well for his reputation that the Cape Supreme Court vindicated the Chief and ordered his release.

Methodist work was moribund when Hargreaves arrived in Pondoland and the political situation prevented much development before 1894. After annexation, conditions were more stable and he was able to extend and consolidate the mission. He was chairman of the Clarkebury District (Transkei and East Griqualand) from 1885 to 1905 and travelled widely to supervise work. He served as president of the South African Conference in 1891 and was elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED (British Conference) in 1897.

Hargreaves was an outspoken north countryman and did not seek popularity. But his personal bravery, devotion to duty, and sympathetic understanding of the Africans more than offset his faults. He is still revered in the Transkei as a great missionary and a true friend of the African people. He died at Ludeke, Pondoland, on Aug. 19, 1917.

R. K. HARGROVE

HARGROVE, ROBERT KENNON (1829-1905), American bishop, was born in Pickens County, Ala., on Sept. 17, 1829. He was educated at the University of Alabama and Emory College, now EMORY UNIVERSITY, Atlanta, Ga. After teaching mathematics at the University of Alabama, he entered the pastorate. He represented the M. E. Church, South, on the CAPE MAY COMMISSION, which in 1876 declared that the Southern church was not a secession but was a legitimate branch of original American Methodism.

He was elected bishop of the M. E. Church, South, by the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1882. He became the president of the board of trustees of VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY in 1889 and president of the EPWORTH LEAGUE Board, 1894-98. He was responsible for the organization of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society in Southern Methodism. He died in NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 4, 1905.

WALTER N. VERNON

HARKNESS, KENNETH (1899-), American missionary and educator, was parsonage-born at Webster, S. D., Aug. 16, 1899, his parents being James Stuart and Wilhelmina Eleanor Harkness. World War I, in which he served as a lieutenant, interrupted his studies at DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY where he starred in athletics. Upon graduation in 1920, he and his bride, Marguerite Sherwood, began a ten-year service as missionaries in MOZAMBIQUE, Portuguese East Africa. This was followed by public school work in SOUTH DAKOTA and special work at Teachers College, Columbia University, leading to an M.A. in 1935.

Early in World War II, when Japanese-Americans were put in detention camps, Kenneth Harkness was made director of education of the camp at Tulelake in northern CALIFORNIA. Here he organized and administered pre-school, kindergarten, elementary, and secondary schools with a total enrollment of nearly 5,000. He also directed adult education for parents with a wide curricular offering, the enrollment exceeding 3,000.

His effectiveness at Tulelake led to his transfer in February, 1946 to JAPAN. As Textbook and Curricular Officer, he was responsible for setting up and directing the organization for rewriting all elementary and secondary textbooks used throughout Occupied Japan, with major emphasis upon geography, civics, and history. War destruction of pulp mills and printing presses with the resulting shortages of paper and electricity for printing added to difficulties of producing and distributing books, including higher education texts, which also was under his direction. As a member of the committee for the relocation of prisoners of war in KOREA, he was on temporary duty there from October 1950 to April 1951, when he was stationed in the Ryuku Islands as Education Officer for Civil Administration. Ten years later he was moved to NEPAL as Training Officer for Community Development for U.S. Aid, and served at Katmandu until retirement in 1963. The major project of his Nepalese service was supervision and completion of a training institute with planned enrollment of 400 boarding students to be operated on a self-help program, where most of the food used was raised by trainees.

For his work in Japan during occupation, Harkness received a citation from the Minister of Education. His published works include two junior high-level supplementary textbooks, co-authored with Lyman M. Fort, on The Uses and Abuses of Alcohol, and a teachers' syllabus to go with a text, Youth Studies Alcohol. He is a member of the board of trustees of his alma mater, Dakota Wesleyan.

LELAND D. CASE

HARLAN, JAMES (1820-1899), American local preacher, attorney, college president, United States senator and cabinet member, was born on April 26, 1820, in Clark County, Ill. Graduated from Indiana Asbury University (DEPAUW), on Aug. 20, 1845, he married Ann Eliza Peck. Harlan moved to IOWA to become president of the Methodist-sponsored but short-lived Iowa City College. In 1847 and 1848 he ran for the position of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was admitted to the Iowa Bar and opened a law practice in Iowa City. In April 1853, he became president of the Mount Pleasant Collegiate Institute, sponsored by the IOWA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. In two years he built a second building ("Old Main"), raised the instruction to university level, and obtained a revised charter for the school as IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. He resigned the presidency in 1855 to become U.S. senator, which position he held until 1865 and again from 1867-73. His senate career found him active in the matter of Public Lands, the Pacific Railroad Bill, the Homestead Bill and the Land Grant Act. He opposed the extension of slavery into KANSAS and NEBRASKA, working against the LeCompton Constitution and later made a major defense of President GRANT in the San Domingo affair.

As a close friend of President Lincoln, Harlan was appointed Secretary of the Interior on March 9, 1865, but did not take office until after Lincoln's death. Close ties were established between the Lincoln and Harlan families through the marriage of Harlan's daughter Mary to Robert Todd Lincoln on Sept. 24, 1868.

Harlan maintained close contact with Iowa Wesleyan College through his residence in Mount Pleasant, acting as a professor of law, and serving continuously as a trustee from 1855-99. He received the title of Chancellor in 1899. Following his senate retirement in 1873, he was active in Iowa Republican Party affairs. He served as Chief Justice of the Second Court of Alabama Claims (1882-1886), and gave time to promote the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in DES MOINES. He was in great demand as a speaker for Methodist occasions, was a delegate to the Iowa Annual Conference and to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1872 and 1896. Indiana Asbury conferred an honorary LL.D. upon him in 1865.

Harlan died on Oct. 5, 1899. His Mount Pleasant residence, the property of Iowa Wesleyan College, is maintained as an historical museum, the Harlan-Lincoln Home. In 1907 Harlan was selected as one of the two Iowans to be included in the National Statuary Hall in the United States Capitol, and his statue by Nellie V. Walker was placed there.

HARLEY, GEORGE WAY (1894-1966), an American medical missionary to LIBERIA, called by some "Methodism's Albert Sweitzer in Africa." He was born in ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 8, 1894, the son of George Gamewell and Lillie (Way) Harley. He was educated at DUKE UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1916), Yale, (M.D., 1923), D.T.M. and Hygiene at London University, 1925; and a Ph.D. degree at Hartford Seminary Foundation, 1938. Duke gave him an L.H.D. degree in 1957. He and his wife, the former Winifred Frances Jewell, were pioneer missionaries in Liberia. They built their own house, constructed a lumber yard out of which came wood to build a medical mission, and somewhat later built a factory to make furniture and set up also a pottery kiln. During Harlan's years of service he was a map-maker, road builder, surveyor, confidant of "witch doctors," and a research fellow on the faculty of Harvard University in the Department of Anthropology. Mrs. Harley published studies on the ferns in the part of Africa where she lived, as well as assisting her husband in his work.

Bishop STEPHEN TROWEN NAGBE of Liberia said, "Dr. Harley came to us in 1925. I don't know how he penetrated the jungles, but he went 175 miles inland and established his medical mission station. We were superstitious, ignorant and had many diseases. But Dr. Harley had what it takes when a man has Christ in his heart. The hospital he established is now one of the best in Liberia. Dr. Harley's greatness was that he invested his life in the lives of others. We now have eleven medical mission stations in Liberia staffed with people he trained. He was a practical man all of his life."

In Doctors Courageous, by Edward Hume, a book surveying the history of medical missions, only three of the 266 physicians presented are given a full chapter: Albert Sweitzer, David Livingstone, and George W. Harley. The WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, where Dr. Harley's father served as a pastor, has established a $100,000 memorial in honor of the medical missionary. The memorial includes an airplane with airfield improvements and transportation costs for three years, equipment for five medical clinics and an initial drug inventory, radio equipment, literacy and evangelism materials, and the $50,000 George W. Harley Memorial Social Center at Ganta, Liberia.

Harley died Nov. 7, 1966. Mrs. Harley survives her husband and resides in the United States.

HARMON, JOHN FRANCIS (1858-1943), American college president and church leader, born near Olney, Ill., May 1, 1858. His ancestors were MORAVIANS from GERMANY and Huguenots from FRANCE, who fled religious persecution.

As a lad, John Harmon listened to traveling preachers, and, puzzled by doctrinal controversy, searched the Bible himself. To him Methodism was the clearest interpretation, although in his career he cooperated with all denominations.

He first trained for public school leadership, but he became a preacher and was admitted to the SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE under Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON in 1882. Later he finished his education at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Evanston, Ill., 1888. Back in his home conference he served appointments at Hawthorne, Metropolis, Mt. Carmel, Mt. Vernon, and East St. Louis—at that time rated the second wickedest city in the world. His work was predominantly among men, in a day of city-wide corruption and race prejudice. "Nothing is too hard for the Lord!" is said to have been his motto.

In the twin cities of East St. Louis, Ill. and St. Louis, Mo., John Harmon came to be known in the underworld as their "Sky-Pilot." He was frequently phoned after midnight to come to hidden dives. They admired his fearlessness, and although he was offered a bodyguard, after learning the address he always set out alone. St. Louis reporters frequented his meetings, newspapers headlined his utterances, cartoonists twitted his ideas or his style.

In 1882 he had married Mary Catherine Murvin, a schoolteacher. They had six children.

Harmon was president of MCKENDREE COLLEGE, 1908-15; of KANSAS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1915-18; and was in Church Efficiency Research, 1918-26.

He was a member of five GENERAL CONFERENCES and for twelve years chairman of the Southern Illinois delegates. He was also a member of "Methodist Book Committee," 1904-12. Harmon died in Louisville, Ill., on June 27, 1943 and was buried at Shouse Chapel, Clay County, Ill.

HARMON, NOLAN BAILEY (1892-), American bishop, author, and editor, was born on July 14, 1892, in Meridian, Miss., the son of Nolan Bailey and Juliet (Howe) Harmon. He attended MILLSAPS COLLEGE (Jackson, Miss.), and received the A.B. degree in 1914, and a D.D. there in 1929; and from Princeton University (New Jersey), a M.A., 1920; he holds a number of honorary degrees. He married Rebecca Barry Lamar on June 20, 1923, and they have two sons, Nolan Bailey, III, and George Lamar.

Nolan B. Harmon was ordained in 1918, for the Army Chaplaincy. He was received in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, on trial in 1919; full connection, 1921. He served as pastor in Rockville, Md., 1920-24; Front Royal, Va., 1925-28; editor, Baltimore Southern Methodist, 1928-33; pastor, Greene Memorial, ROANOKE, Va., 1933-40; BOOK EDITOR of The Methodist Church, New York City, 1940-56. Elected bishop at the Southeastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE on July 12, 1956, he served the CHARLOTTE (N. C.) Area (including SOUTH CAROLINA), 1956-60; and KENTUCKY, 1960; and NORTH ALABAMA, 1961-64. He retired from the active episcopacy in 1964. Since that time he has been visiting professor, CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, EMORY UNIVERSITY, and the editor of the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

Bishop Harmon was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, 1930, '34, '38; to the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939; and then to the General Conferences of The Methodist Church, 1940, '44, '48, '52, and '56. He was a member of the Joint Commission of the Methodist Hymnal, 1930-34, and thirty years later served again in revising that book to produce the Methodist Hymnal of 1964; and has been since 1933 a trustee of Emory University.

He is the author of The Organization of The Methodist Church, 1948; The Rites and Ritual of Episcopal Methodism, 1926; Ministerial Ethics and Etiquette, 1928; Understanding the Methodist Church, 1955; Is It Right or Wrong?, 1938; and The Famous Case of Myra Clark Gaines, 1946. He was the editor of Religion in Life, 1940-56; of the Book of Discipline of The Methodist Church, 1940, '44, '48, '52, and '56; and general editor of the Interpreter's Bible, 1955.

HARPER, EARL ENYEART (1895-1967), American minister, educator and musician, was born at Coffey, Mo., on March 28, 1895. He was graduated from NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1918 with both a B.A. and B.M. degree. His specialty was piano and he contemplated a career in music, but decided against it to enter the BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY from which he received an S.T.B. in 1921.

He was admitted to the NEBRASKA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1918, and to full connection in the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1921, when he was ordained ELDER. From 1918-27 he served churches in Holbrook, Waltham and Auburndale, Mass., as well as teaching music at BOSTON UNIVERSITY and in the La Salle Junior College, Auburndale. He was elected president of EVANSVILLE COLLEGE, Evansville, Ind., in 1927 and continued in this post until 1936, when for two years he was president of SIMPSON COLLEGE, Indianola, Iowa. At that time he became a member of the IOWA-DES MOINES ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

In 1938 he became director of the School of Fine Arts and of the Iowa Memorial Union at the State University of Iowa, continuing in this post until his retirement in 1963. Here his musical and artistic talents found an outlet in the establishment of Iowa's first Festival of Fine Arts with an expanded program of music, drama and art exhibitions. Notable among his achievements were the Grant Wood exhibition of paintings, drama premiere of Paul and the Blue Ox, and the musical premiere of The Pioneers.

Earl Harper's musical abilities found a special focus in his continuous work to improve church music, hymnody and ritual. He edited the Junior-Intermediate Anthem Book (1924) and The Abingdon Hymnal of 1928. In 1924 he became the chairman of the first Commission on Music of the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE. He was a member of the Hymnal Commission which produced The Methodist Hymnal of 1934. Appointed on the "New Hymns" subcommittee of that body, with the aged but efficient hymnodist WILBUR FISK TILLET, Harper is said to have read 8,000 suggested hymn-texts in order to cull out and present to the full commission some 160 which he and Tillett felt worth careful consideration. Tillett publicly expressed to the commission his admiration for his much younger colleague. Harper again was appointed to serve in revising the 1930-34 hymnal by the Commission of 1960-64—he with Dr. James Houghton and Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON being the only members of the former commission appointed for the 1960-64 revision. Harper composed the tune Shirleyn for the hymn, "I Know Not How that Bethlehem's Babe Could in The Godhead Be," for The Abingdon Hymnal of 1928, and this supplanted an earlier tune. This hymn by Harry Farrington and Harper's tune appeared in both the 1939 and 1964 editions of The Methodist Hymnal. ROBERT G. MCCUTCHAN, in Our

Hymnody, states that Harper's "contribution to the present (1930-34) Methodist Hymnal was very great."

Earl Harper received an honorary D.D. from Nebraska Wesleyan, 1928; an LL.D. from CENTRAL COLLEGE, Missouri, 1935, and from Boston University, 1936; a Litt.D. from Evansville College, 1940.

Following Harper's retirement, he moved to St. Petersburg, Fla., where he died on March 1, 1967. His body was cremated and a memorial service was held March 3, 1967 in the First Church, Iowa City.

HARPER, MARVIN HENRY (1901-), was professor of Church history in LEONARD THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, Jabalpur, INDIA, and principal of the college, 1945-57. He was born in Atlanta, Ga., on Aug. 18, 1901, and was educated in EMORY UNIVERSITY, B.S., 1922; Yale University, B.D., 1926, and the University of Chicago, Ph.D., 1935. He married Emmie Bounds Ficklen on June 30, 1926, and they arrived in India as missionaries of the M. E. Board of Missions in September, 1927.

His writings include The History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, The History of the Expansion of Christianity, and, jointly with John T. McNeill, Environmental Factors in Christianity. During his principalship, and under his guidance, Leonard Theological College attracted students from other churches and became a union institution. He emphasized ecumenism and Indian national leadership. His successor as principal was an Indian.

Harper's contributions to the training of ministers of The Methodist Church in India are monumental. He served in positions of central importance at Leonard for thirty years. After returning to America in 1957, he became professor of missions and the history of religions in the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, Emory University, where he continues to serve.

HARPER AND BROTHERS (now Harper and Row), New York City, is one of the largest and most widely known American publishing houses. It was begun in 1817, and as the four Harper brothers who composed the firm were each strong and firm Methodists, Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON featured their publishing house in his Cyclopaedia. The House of Harper was founded by the two elder brothers, James and John Harper, and was known as J and J Harper until 1833, when the imprint was changed to Harper & Brothers to recognize the partnership of Joseph Wesley (1823) and Fletcher (1825).

In the beginning the four brothers printed books for other houses, including the Methodist BOOK CONCERN. Thayer's Religion Recommended to Youth, imprinted for Soule and Mason, Methodist Publishing Agents, was the second book they issued. They were the first to publish JOHN WESLEY'S Works in America. Volumes I-III were imprinted for Neal & Stockton, Philadelphia, and Volumes IV-X carried the Harper imprint alone. By 1830 the Harpers had the largest book manufactory in America, and by 1850 their Cliff Street, New York, output of books made them the largest publishers in the world. Three years later a disastrous fire destroyed all their buildings. Despite a million dollar loss, they began again, erecting two fireproof buildings, the first use of structural steel in a commercial establishment. The main buildings faced on Franklin Square, and this was for seventy years one of the best known publishing addresses in America.

The four brothers were third generation Methodists, and their father, Joseph Harper, often entertained visiting leaders of the church in his Newtown, Long Island home. They were members of the JOHN STREET CHURCH until moves uptown (in Wesley's case to Brooklyn Heights) brought other affiliations. When the John Street Church was rebuilt about 1840, James Harper was chairman of the building committee. He served a term as mayor of New York (1844-45), and was the city's first reform mayor. He supervised the firm's manufactory and spoke for the brothers on public occasions. John Harper was business and financial manager, and Wesley Harper was head of the literary department and handled most of the correspondence with authors. Fletcher Harper was responsible for most of the editorial and publishing decisions and successfully launched Harper's Magazine (1850), Harper's Weekly (1857), and Harper's Bazaar (1867).

Of the brothers' many Methodist connections mention should be made of JOHN MCCLINTOCK, who claimed Fletcher Harper not only as his publisher but also his most intimate friend; JACOB SLEEPER, two of whose daughters were in turn married to Joseph Wesley Harper, Wesley's son; JOHN P. DURBIN, whose daughter married Fletcher Harper, Jr.; three generations of the BANGSES, from NATHAN to John Kendrick Bangs, who were friends and authors, and in one case, legal counsel; WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Middletown, Conn., whose first four presidents wrote and edited Harper books; Bishop Matthew Simpson, who preached funeral sermons for at least two of the brothers.

Fletcher Harper outlived his three brothers, and even before his death in 1877, five sons of the brothers were carrying on the expanding publishing business. Their retirements and deaths in the 1890's caused withdrawals of capital for which adequate provision had not been made; such capital drains and business depressions of the decade were contributing factors to the failure of the House in 1899. Its chief debtor was J. P. Morgan, who said that Harpers was an American institution that should be saved, and Morgan placed Colonel George M. Harvey in control of the business. Not until the Morgan indebtedness was paid off in the early 1920's did the House regain a position of leadership in publishing, with nearly all categories of books being gradually introduced. In 1890 and again in 1900 its extensive textbook business had been sold to the American Book Company; to re-enter this field, the firm in 1962 merged with Row, Peterson and Co., a leading textbook firm, and imprint was changed to Harper & Row.

COSTEN J. HARRELL

HARRELL, COSTEN JORDAN (1885-), bishop of the Methodist Church, was born at "Holly Grove," Gates Co., N. C., Feb. 12, 1885. His parents were Samuel Isaac and Isa Costen Harrell. He was educated at Trinity College, now DUKE UNIVERSITY, where he received the A.B. in 1906 and the D.D. in 1940. At VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY he received the B.D. degree in 1910 and the M.A. in the same year. RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE awarded him the D.D. degree in 1929, BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN the Litt.D. in 1945, and AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, LL.D., 1953.

He married Amy Patton Walden of Athens, Ga. on June 6, 1917 and they had one son.

After serving for a time as a student supply pastor at Park Avenue in NASHVILLE, Bishop Harrell joined the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE (MES) in 1910. He was ordained a DEACON in 1911 while serving Epworth Church, RALEIGH, N. C., and ELDER in 1914 while he was serving as pastor of Calvary Church in DURHAM, N. C. Subsequently, he served Trinity Church, Durham, 1916-19; First Church, Wilson, N. C., 1919-20; then he went to First Church, ATLANTA, where he served from 1920-25; then Epworth Church, NORFOLK, Va., 1925-29; Monument Church, RICHMOND, Va., 1929-33; West End Church, Nashville, Tenn., 1933-44. In that year he was elected bishop by the Southeastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE and assigned to the BIRMINGHAM area. Subsequently he was assigned to the CHARLOTTE area in 1949.

Bishop Harrell enjoys saying that he served as pastor in four state capitals during his ministry.

In his episcopal service he presided over the CUBA, the ALABAMA-WEST FLORIDA, and the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCES and then over the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA and SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCES of the Charlotte area. He presided over the NEWARK CONFERENCE of the Northeastern Jurisdiction one year at the invitation of the bishop in charge there.

His special services include an instructorship in Bible literature and comparative religions at Trinity College; a professor in Homiletics at the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at EMORY UNIVERSITY in the summer of 1923; a professor of Old Testament interpretation in the summer of 1928. He was the fraternal messenger from the M. E.

Church, South to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church in Columbus, Ohio, in 1932. He served also as a member of the Commission on Budget and the Commission on Course of Study of the M. E. Church, South, and was an alternate to the World Conference on Faith and Order of that church. He was a member of the General Conference in 1938, 1940, 1944 and of the Uniting Conference in 1939. He was secretary of the General Commission on World Service from 1940-1944; and as bishop, became Chairman of the Commission on the Study of the Local Church, 1948-52, which commission presented a report on the reorganization of the local church which was adopted by the General Conference and embodied in the Book of Discipline. He was a member of the Board of Pensions and chairman of the Legislative Committee, 1948-1952. In the church-wide move, called the ADVANCE FOR CHRIST AND HIS CHURCH, Bishop Harrell was vice-chairman from 1948-56 at which time also he was chairman of the committee on Week of Dedication program. He was elected a member of the Executive Committee of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS for the year 1952-53. He became a trustee of Emory University in 1931 and was kept as an emeritus trustee after his resignation in retirement.

Bishop Harrell retired in 1956 from the active episcopacy by law of the Church and accepted a position as visiting professor in the Candler School of Theology at Emory University in that same year. He taught courses in Homiletics and in Methodist Polity and Discipline to the young ministers there.

Bishop Harrell has published a number of books, among them The Bible, It's Origin and Growth, 1926; Walking With God, 1928; In the School of Prayer, 1929; Friends of God, 1931; Prophets of Israel, 1933; The Radiant Heart, 1936; The Methodist Child's Membership Manual, 1940; The Way of the Transgressor, 1941; The Word of His Grace, 1943; The Local Church in Methodism, 1952; Christian Affirmations, 1961; and The Wonders of His Grace, 1966. He continues to take an active part in the work of the Jurisdictional Council of the Southeastern Jurisdiction, of the LAKE JUNALUSKA ASSEMBLY of which he is a trustee, and the activities of Emory University.

HARRELL, JOHN (1805-1876), an American missionary to and leader among the Indians, was born in 1805 in TENNESSEE. Admitted on trial in the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE in 1826, he transferred to the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, and was assigned to the ARKANSAS District for a beginning work among the Indians in 1831. He was a charter member of the ARKANSAS ANNUAL CONFERENCE when it was first organized in 1836. He joined the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE in 1850. He served in various capacities; three times he was elected president of the Conference in the absence of a bishop, was several times its secretary, and served for fifteen years as the presiding elder of the Cherokee, Choctaw and Creek districts. For five years he was superintendent of schools, first at Ft. Coffee and New Hope, and then at ASBURY MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL. During the Civil War, he was appointed superintendent of Army Missions. He was elected delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES), once from the Arkansas Conference, and four times from the Indian Mission. He died in Vinita, Okla., on Dec. 8, 1876.

OSCAR FONTAINE

F. M. HARRINGTON

HARRINGTON, FRANCIS MARION (1865-1908), founder of Methodist work in Bolivia, was born in IOWA and graduated from the law department of the State University of Iowa in 1892. He and his wife, Mary, and a small son went to IQUIQUE, Chile, to work in the Methodist church and Iquique English College in 1895. "It seemed like a great adventure, an adventure with God," Mary wrote later.

Francis contracted tuberculosis in CHILE, and the family returned to the United States in 1904. After he was pronounced cured, the Harringtons set sail back to Iquique in September 1905. There had been conversations in the Board of Missions and with Harrington about the possibility of opening work in Bolivia. After his arrival back in Iquique, it was decided—partly because of this interest and partly in hope that the dry climate would benefit his health—that the Harringtons would go to LA PAZ. They left Iquique for La Paz on April 3, 1906.

Harrington could not begin religious work immediately because of an old law that prescribed the death penalty for anyone practicing a religion other than Roman Catholic. As a trained lawyer, he set out to persuade government officials to change the law and allow religious liberty. He spent months in this effort, injuring his health through hours of waiting in the unheated anterooms of government offices. In the meantime, private services were being held in the Harrington home and a church was being made ready.

Harrington's effort was successful, and the anti-Protestant law was repealed. Soon after, on Aug. 20, 1906, the first Methodist church was organized with about ten members. Services were held in three languages: Harrington preached in English and Spanish and a converted priest in the language of the Aymara Indians.

The first victory obtained, Harrington began to talk with the Bolivian minister of education about the possibility of opening a mission school that would strive toward modern methods of education. After he had presented his plan, the official exclaimed, "If you carry this out, we'll build you a monument." He backed his approval with a government subvention, but it carried the stipulation that no religion was to be taught. The American Institute in La Paz (now Colegio Evangelico Metodisto)—primary, high school, and commercial sections—held its first classes in 1907.

Its purpose was: "to establish a Bolivian leadership which would eventually lead the way to highest plains of living; mental, physical and spiritual, and help the Bolivian people help themselves to better things. . . . Our dearest hope was that the boys be brought into vital, living touch with Christ." (Mary Harrington's Adventuring with God, as told to Vivian W. Perry, 1954.)

Francis Harrington's tuberculosis flared up again, and he died on Feb. 21, 1908. Mary later married J. C. Fremont Harrington, his brother, and returned to work at the Methodist schools in CONCEPCION, Chile.

HARRINGTON, KARL POMEROY (1861-1953), American classicist, organist, and hymnist, joint editor of The Methodist Hymnal of 1905, was born at Somersworth, N. H., on June 13, 1861. He was the son of M. E. Calvin Sears and Eliza Cynthia (Chase) Harrington. He graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY at Middletown, Conn., with an A.B. in 1882, and A.M. in 1885. On Nov. 25, 1886, he married Jennie Eliza Canfield of Middletown, who with their daughter Mabel (Mrs. George R. Potter) and three grandchildren, survived Harrington. After studying for a time in Rome, he became an organist for Wesleyan University, and later was organist at other institutions including the University of North Carolina, where he taught Latin at the same time. A Latinist of distinction, he was Professor of Latin at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (1891-99), at the University of Maine (1899-1905) and then went back to Wesleyan at Middletown and occupied the chair of Latin there until his retirement. He belonged to the American Philological Association; the Archaeological Institute of America; the New England Classical Association; and wrote a number of books dealing with studies in the classics. He published a number of books and three hymnals, including Songs of all the Colleges (Hinds and Noble, 1900).

Harrington served upon the joint Hymnal Commission of the M. E. Churches of 1905 and of 1934. He is best remembered as the author of the Christmas hymn "There's a Song in the Air." Members of the Joint Hymnal Commission of 1930-34 will not forget the occasion on the close of a long hot summer evening in which the Commission had been working in the intense heat of Washington City, when Bishop EDWIN H. HUGHES asked Dr. Harrington to go to the piano and play his Christmas song for the Commission to sing, and then to close the day with the benediction. Harrington died in Middletown, Conn., on Nov. 14, 1953.

HARRIS, ADAM CLARKE (1823-1889), an American M. P. local preacher and medical doctor, was the fourth son of Rev. and Mrs. Willis R. Harris of Granville County, N. C. He was born on March 5, 1823. His father, his uncle, Fletcher Harris, and two brothers, Samuel J. and S. P. J. Harris, were all ministers affiliated with the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church. His father served as president of the Conference in 1832 and 1833. In October, 1846, Adam Clarke Harris married Martha Ann Hunter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas C. Hunter of Halifax County, N. C., and soon thereafter began the study of medicine. He graduated from the University of Maryland and settled in Henderson, N. C., to practice his profession. Earlier, at the age of twenty-one, he had entered the ministry. In 1845 he was ordained as a DEACON and was appointed to serve as assistant to Caswell Drake on the Roanoke Circuit. He was reappointed to this work in 1846 and 1847. He served the Granville Circuit from 1848-55, and later served as a supernumerary on the North Granville Circuit. Sometime prior to the Civil War he helped to organize the Mount Carmel Church near Henderson. He assisted in many revivals throughout the North Carolina Conference. Most of his work as a minister was gratuitous. It has been said of Harris that "while ministering to the physical needs of his patients, their spiritual needs were not neglected." He was a regular attendant at annual conferences and served as Secretary of the North Carolina Conference in 1858, 1862, 1865, 1867-71. In 1874 he served as secretary of the M. P. GENERAL CONFERENCE which met in Lynchburg, Va. For several years prior to his death, Harris spent most of his time on the Halifax Circuit, where he held the relation of supernumerary assistant.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

HARRIS, CICERO RICHARDSON (1844-1917), educator, editor and bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, U.S.A. He was a native of Fayetteville, N. C., born there Aug. 25, 1844. At his father's death, when he was three years of age, his family moved to Chillicothe, Ohio, where he began his education. In 1854 the family moved to Delaware, Ohio, and three years later to Cleveland. He completed the course of study at the Cleveland Central High School in 1861. However, his life, it is said, was one of rigid study. Returning to Fayetteville, he joined the A.M.E. Zion Church in 1866, where his brother was teaching under a commission of the American Missionary Association. Cicero Richardson was licensed to preach in 1872 and in that same year joined the North Carolina Conference. (AME Zion) Two years later he was ordained a deacon and the same year, an elder. For several years he taught school, and was one of those instrumental in the founding of Zion Wesley Institute, later LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE, and it was he who was responsible for the school being located in Salisbury, N. C.

In 1880 he was selected the business manager of the Star Of Zion, the official publication of his church, and the general steward as well. Earlier, in 1876, he had been designated assistant to the General Secretary of the denomination and assumed this position in 1878. It should be mentioned as well, that Cicero Richardson Harris was the first principal of Zion Wesley Institute when it was moved from its Northern setting to NORTH CAROLINA. He was succeeded in this position by JOSEPH CHARLES PRICE. In 1888 he was elected and consecrated bishop of the Church and served until his death, June, 1917.

HARRIS, CORRA MAY WHITE (1869-1935), American authoress and journalist, was born at Farm Hill, Ga., on March 17, 1869. She was educated at home by her parents in the ways of the Old South. On Feb. 8, 1887, she married a Methodist minister, Lundy Howard Harris, who served circuits and small towns in rural north GEORGIA. She was widowed in 1910 and never remarried.

Her first published story appeared in the Atlanta Constitution, and in 1899 she began writing for a national magazine, The Independent. For several years thereafter she met with success in a series of stories in the American Magazine. Mrs. Harris was the author of more than twenty novels and scores of short stories. Among her novels were A Circuit Rider's Wife, 1910; In Search of a Husband, 1913; A Circuit Rider's Widow, 1916; Happily Married, 1920; House of Helen, 1923; Happy Pilgrimage, 1927. A Circuit Rider's Widow created wide discussion and was interpreted by some as an attack on the M. E. Church, South, in which her husband had served as an itinerant. A Circuit Rider's Wife was the basis for the movie, "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain," which was filmed in 1951. Corra Harris was an exponent of good will and simple virtues, and she expounded her faith in the Magazine Forum of 1928 in a debate with Dora Russell, wife of Bertrand Russell. From 1931 to her death she was a columnist for the Atlanta Journal.

Mrs. Harris received a Litt.D. from Oglethorpe University in 1921, and the University of Georgia also gave her a Litt.D. in 1927. She was honored with a L.H.D. from Rollins College in 1927. In 1931 she taught at Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla.

In 1913 she made her permanent residence at Rydal, Ga., where she bought and extended a log cabin built before 1830 by the Indian Chief, Pine Log. She died of a heart attack at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta, Ga., on Feb. 9, 1935.

HARRIS, FREDERICK BROWN (1883-1970), American minister and longtime chaplain of the United States Senate, 1942-46, and again in 1949 to 1969. He was born on April 10, 1883, in Worcester, England, the son of George Thomas and Ellen Griffiths Harris. He came to America when quite young, and graduated from the Pennington, N. J., Seminary in 1905. He received the A.B. from DICKINSON COLLEGE, 1909, the A.M. there in 1912, and the D.D. in 1923. DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY gave him the B.D. degree in 1912, and he was awarded honorary degrees by Lincoln Memorial University (Tennessee), 1937; the University of Tampa, 1952; the LL.D. by the University of Southern California; and by Seoul National University in SEOUL, KOREA, in 1956. He also held a number of other honorary degrees. His wife was Helen Louise Streeter, whom he married on June 4, 1914, and they had two children.

Harris went into the ministry of the M. E. Church in 1912 and was pastor at Greenwood Avenue Church, TRENTON, N. J., 1912-14; St. Luke's M. E. Church, Long Branch, N. J., 1914-18; Grace Church, NEW YORK CITY, 1918-24; at which time he went to Foundry Church, WASHINGTON, D.C., remaining as pastor there until 1955. He was National Chaplain of the Freedoms Foundation, a special ambassador to Korea, 1956, with official missions to TAIWAN and the PHILIPPINES, and was a member of the National Press Association. Through his connections in the United States Senate—elected chaplain first in 1942—he became widely known, not only in Washington, but throughout the nation. He is the author of The Blossoming Bough; The Candle and the Flame; Wings of the Morning: The Word Made Flesh, a volume of essays; Spires of the Spirit; and Footprints on the Sand, which last is a volume of verse. He long conducted a syndicated column known as "Spires of the Spirit," and also published four volumes of the prayers with which he opened the United States Senate at its sessions. He conducted the funerals of President Herbert Hoover, Senator Robert A. Taft, and General Douglas MacArthur. He continued to reside in Washington after his retirement and died there on Aug. 18, 1970.

HOWELL HARRIS

HARRIS, HOWELL (1714-1773), Welsh Methodist revivalist, was born at Trevecka, Wales, Jan. 31, 1714. As village schoolmaster at nearby Talgarth he experienced salvation in 1735, and immediately started to evangelize. His first societies were established in 1736, and thus was laid the foundation of WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISM. His acceptance of Calvinism was a factor in drawing him to associate with GEORGE WHITEFIELD. But this affiliation did not prevent him from also working with the WESLEYS, and in 1740 we find him acting as assistant at the FOUNDRY. Controversy darkened his later years. He founded a religious community at Trevecka on the pietist model in 1752, and died there July 21, 1773.

M. LAFAYETTE HARRIS

HARRIS, MARQUIS LAFAYETTE (1907-1966), American bishop, was born at Armstrong, Macon Co., Ala. March 8, 1907, the son of William E. and Estelle M. (Glenn) Harris. He was educated at CLARK UNIVERSITY (B.S., 1928), GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1929), BOSTON UNIVERSITY (S.T.M., 1930), and Ohio State University (Ph.D., 1933). The honorary LL.D., D.D., and L.H.D. degrees were conferred on him by Clark, Gammon, and Southwestern College, respectively. He married Geneva M. Nelson, Sept. 6, 1931, and they had one son.

Harris was an instructor at Clark University, 1927-29, and instructor and coach at CLAFLIN COLLEGE, 1930-31. He was dean at Samuel Huston College, Texas, 1933-36. Admitted on trial in the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE sometime in 1929, he was transferred to the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE, Dec. 8 of that year, and the minutes show that he was appointed to Kinsman Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, in April 1930. In April 1931, he was appointed to the Pennsylvania Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, where he served two years. He was ordained DEACON in 1928 and ELDER in 1932.

In 1936 at thirty-one years of age, Harris was elected president of PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE, a small poverty-stricken, Negro Methodist institution at LITTLE ROCK, Ark., and there in the next twenty-four years he did his greatest work. The annual Race Relations Day offerings for the college from the conferences in ARKANSAS, KANSAS, MISSOURI and OKLAHOMA were so small that heads of other schools expressed their sympathy to Harris. Harris said little, but he began cultivating his territory, attending the annual conference sessions and informing the preachers and laymen of the needs and the promise of their Negro Methodist college. Within a few years Philander Smith College was receiving so much more money than the other schools that their presidents wanted Harris to share its receipts with their institutions. During his presidency Harris was able to buy more acreage for Philander Smith's campus, erect additional buildings, and increase the size of the student body.

Harris was a member of five GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1940-56, and a delegate to the 1951 ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE. He served on numerous boards and commissions, among them the General Board of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, and his church's Commission on Church Union, General Board of EDUCATION, Quadrennial Commission on Higher Education, and COORDINATING COUNCIL. He was chairman of the boards of trustees of Clark, Claflin, and BETHUNE COOKMAN COLLEGES, and GAMMON SEMINARY. He held membership in the American Philosophical Association and the American Academy of Political and Social Science. A tall, powerful man, as a football player in college he won the coveted "All-American" designation in 1926. In Little Rock he was once named Man of the Year in Race Relations, and in 1957 he received the Phi Beta Sigma Social Action Award. He published several books: The Voice in the Wilderness, 1941; Our Tomorrow's World, 1945; To Magnify Thy Power, 1948; and Life Can Be Meaningful, 1951.

Elected bishop in 1960 by the Central Jurisdiction, Harris was assigned to the Atlantic Coast Area with residence in ATLANTA. Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON said that Harris was a "splendid man, particularly gifted as a college president. He understood perfectly all the conditions affecting his people and conferences in the deep South." He died Oct. 7, 1966 in Atlanta and was buried there.

HARRIS, MERRIMAN COLBERT (1846-1921), American missionary leader and missionary bishop in JAPAN, was born in Beallsville, Ohio. After serving in the 12th Ohio Volunteer Cavalry during the War Between the States (1863-65), he joined the PITTSBURGH ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church on trial, and completed the course at ALLEGHANY COLLEGE (1869-73). On the day of his graduation—and his wedding day to Flora Best—he set out for Japan where he and his wife arrived, Dec. 14, 1873. Already in the summer of that year the first missionaries of both the Canadian Methodist Church and the M. E. Church had arrived, to organize a mission and later a mission conference. The Harrises, who completed the circle of the founding group, had already received their appointment to the open-port city of Hakodate in Japan's northern island, Hokkaido, and arrived there Jan. 24, 1874.

Inhospitality of both climate and people caused hardships, but these were overcome by goodwill. Many of the leaders of the New Japan, then youths, came under the Harris influence. The famed Sapporo Band in the new national university at Sapporo received baptism from Merriman Harris. When on leave in the United States he wrote and spoke widely interpreting Japan to the West.

In 1886 he became superintendent of the Japanese mission of the M. E. Church serving Japanese residents and immigrants in the United States, chiefly in the Western States and on the Pacific Coast. Here he befriended innumerable persons who later became influential in the modern Japan. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1904 elected him resident missionary bishop in KOREA and Japan, and he served in Korea actively, and in Japan as an honorary bishop after the formation of the Japan Methodist Church (1907) until his retirement (1916). Bishop Harris' recognition throughout all circles of Japanese life was widespread. He was awarded a succession of Imperial decorations, the last of which was the highest granted any Westerner, the Order of the Sacred Treasure, Second Class. In a period of international tension he exercised a strong mediating influence, as well as breaking down barriers to mutual Christian understanding.

HARRIS, PIERCE (1895-1971), American minister and longtime pastor of city churches in FLORIDA and GEORGIA, was born on Sept. 21, 1895, near Rome, Ga. He was the son of Rev. S. A. and Lollie (Terry) Harris, and was educated at REINHARDT COLLEGE, at EMORY UNIVERSITY, and received the LL.D. degree from the Atlanta School of Law in 1940. He was ordained in 1915, and joining the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE was sent to Chickamauga Charge, 1919-23; Buford, Ga., 1923-27; First Church, Dalton, Ga., 1927-30; St. Lukes Church, Columbus, Ga. 1930-36. He then transferred to the FLORIDA CONFERENCE and became pastor of Riverside Park Church, JACKSONVILLE, 1936-40, after which he was transferred back to First Church in ATLANTA, Ga. There he was destined to remain for twenty-seven years, or until he retired in 1967.

Harris was a member of the Southeastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE of 1944, '48, '52, and '56. He served on the Board of Directors of Atlanta's Mission; the Board of Trustees of LaGRANGE COLLEGE; of Reinhardt College; and of Young HARRIS COLLEGE—all in Georgia. He was a columnist for the Atlanta Journal for many years, and people all over Georgia looked for the material under his by-line which regularly appeared. This was marked by practical guidance and a worldly-wise Christian viewpoint. He retired in the midst of the Conference year, 1965-66. He died in Atlanta, Ga., January, 1971.

WILLIAM L. HARRIS

HARRIS, WILLIAM LOGAN (1817-1887), American bishop, was born near Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 4, 1817, the son of James and Mary (Logan) Harris. His parents were Presbyterians, but after his conversion at seventeen in a camp meeting he became an earnest Methodist and looked toward the ministry. He studied two years at Norwalk Seminary, Norwalk, Ohio, was licensed to preach in 1836, supplied a circuit for a year, and in 1837 was admitted on trial in the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE which at that time included northern OHIO. Evangelistic in spirit, revivals attended his ministry while he was in the pastorate.

In 1844 the NORTH OHIO CONFERENCE appointed Harris to Delaware, and when OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY opened there the next year, he became a teacher in the school. In 1846 he returned to the pastorate and was sent to Toledo. Two years later, at the request of the conference, he became head of Baldwin Institute (now BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE) at Berea. Demonstrating ability as an educator, in 1851 he was called back to Ohio Wesleyan as head of the academic department. The next year he was appointed professor of chemistry and natural science, and though he had no college degrees, he filled the position acceptably for eight years. Somewhat of a genius at mathematics, he had an inquisitive mind, an unusual memory, and a seemingly inexhaustible capacity for work.

Known as a person of method, thoroughness, and accuracy, Harris served as secretary of his annual conference for many years. Without ever transferring, he was, due to divisions of territory and changes in names, a member of four annual conferences—Michigan, North Ohio, Delaware (Ohio), and Central Ohio—and he served as secretary of the last three. Harris was a delegate to five GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1856-72, and was elected secretary of the body each time. So impressive was his work as secretary that some said the General Conference had never really had a secretary before Harris. In 1860 the General Conference elected him as one of the secretaries of the Missionary Society and reelected him in 1864 and 1868. Elevated to the episcopacy in 1872, he was immediately elected secretary of the Board of Bishops.

A close student of Methodist history, Harris knew well its constitutional side. During the strenuous debates on the power of the General Conference to exclude slaveholders from church membership, he ably upheld the affirmative. He had a series of articles on the subject in the Western Christian Advocate, which came out as a book in 1860, The Constitutional Powers of the General Conference, with Special Application to the Subject of Slave-Holding. He worked for the admission of missionary conferences, and had an important part in preparing the way for LAY REPRESENTATION in the General Conference. He was a recognized authority on ecclesiastical and parliamentary law. In collaboration with William J. Henry, Harris produced Ecclesiastical Law and Rules of Evidence, with Special Reference to the Jurisprudence of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1879), and he was the author of The Relation of the Episcopacy to the General Conference (1888), lectures at DREW SEMINARY, published after his death.

Probably no man in the history of the M. E. Church up to Harris' time ever had a fuller knowledge of its missionary fields, and no one before him ever established so close a personal connection between the mission fields and the home church. As missionary secretary he did a prodigious work, and as a bishop he made extensive tours of the mission fields all over the world, presiding one or more times at all or nearly all of the missionary conferences. He became ill while overseas, returned to NEW YORK, and died there Sept. 2, 1887. He was buried in CHICAGO.

W. W. HARRIS

HARRIS, WILLIAM WADE (185?- ?), African Methodist preacher and pioneer, was born of pagan parents in LIBERIA. He went to a Methodist school and became a Christian. After training as a clerk, he took work as a deckhand. He was truly converted at Port Harcourt, age twenty-one, married, and worked as a schoolteacher for the American Episcopal Mission. He then became a leader in the anti-French rebellions in the Ivory Coast. On his third imprisonment at Cap Palmas prison he received a clear call to preach as the result of a vision in his cell. Known as "Prophet Harris," he preached throughout the Ivory Coast and in the Apollonia district of the Gold Coast. Thousands of his hearers burned their fetishes, gave up alcohol, built small mud churches and waited for "the white man with the Book" who would come after him. Harris was arrested on May 4, 1915, and deported as a political agitator to Liberia. He was said to be about sixty. Nothing further was ever heard of him. His converts remained faithful, though French Roman Catholic influence prevented Protestant missioning in the Ivory Coast until 1922, but in 1925 Edmund Horler and W. J. Platt were able to begin reaping the harvest of Prophet Harris's "mass movement." There has never been sufficient staff available to do the work fully.

HARRIS MEMORIAL COLLEGE, Manila, Philippines. Miss Winifred Spaulding opened the Deaconess Training School on the first of July, 1903, and had ten students through the first year. The courses in the beginning were very simple since the students had only three or four years of schooling. As more education became possible for young women there was a gradual rise in the requirement for entrance—from fourth and fifth grade to seventh, then first and second year of high school, and finally in 1936 the requirement was completion of high school.

The Kindergarten Department was begun in 1924. This was the first school in the PHILIPPINES to offer Kindergarten Training and the Kindergarten Schools are of a high standard. In 1947 the Bureau of Private Education gave permanent government recognition to this school. For more than thirty years Mrs. Brigida Fernando gave service to this work.

Harris Memorial College has had a change of location three times. It began in an old Spanish building on Nozaleda Street, now General Luna. Then it was located at 906 Rizal Avenue, next to Knox Memorial Church. In 1923 the school transferred to the new buildings on P. Paredes and España. Finally, in 1948 it was decided to reconstruct and occupy the former Hugh Wilson Hall building on United Nations Avenue.

The college is now recognized by the government as offering a B.A. degree with a major in Christian Education. There are about 130 students under training to serve as deaconesses in the United Methodist Church.

N. W. Harris of CHICAGO offered to give $5,000 in 1906 for a Training School in Manila if the WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY would raise a like amount. Miss Marguerite Decker gave leadership to the school for the greater part of its history. Dr. Prudencia Fabro has been the president since 1951.

BYRON W. CLARK

HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A., is the capital of the state of PENNSYLVANIA. It is a city of 65,828 population, situated on the east side of the Susquehanna River, which at this point is one mile wide. Greater Harrisburg, based on adjoining boroughs and townships within a radius of five miles, has a population of 286,000 with a projected population of 370,000 by 1975 according to the city planning commission. The area is highly industrialized and its great diversification of industry contributes to the security and growth of the community.

The first Methodist society was formed in Harrisburg in 1810. In 1820 the first Methodist church was erected on Second Street, and replaced by another church on Locust Street in 1838. In 1871 the congregation relocated again and built the present Grace Church on State Street just a few doors from the State Capitol building whose beautiful dome is modeled after that of St. Peter's in Rome. Grace Church has been the mother of Methodism in the city and at the same time one of the city's most influential churches.

There are ten other churches in the city of the Methodist Church, as follows: Calvary, Camp Curtin, Christ Church, Epworth, Fifth Street, Mitchell Memorial, Riverside, St. Paul's, Stevens Memorial, and Trinity. Total Methodist membership was 8,137 persons (1965). Twelve E.U.B. congregations in the city had 5,812 members (1968).

There are also two A.M.E. CHURCHES with a combined membership of 561 persons; two A.M.E. ZION CHURCHES with a combined membership of 358 persons; and a FREE METHODIST CHURCH with less than 100 members.

Harrisburg with its Methodist churches was in the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE until 1872, when the GENERAL CONFERENCE placed it in the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE which had been organized in 1869.

Harrisburg is also the residence of the bishop of the Harrisburg Area, which was constituted by the North-eastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in 1964. To the late Bishop NEWELL S. BOOTH went the honor of being assigned as the first episcopal leader there upon his return to the United States after serving for twenty years as a bishop in the CONGO.

The Area is composed of the Central Pennsylvania Annual Conference which is predominantly a rural conference. Altoona, Harrisburg, Hazleton, Williamsport, and York are the only cities. However, there are a goodly number of towns with a population in excess of 10,000, such as Carlisle, Chambersburg, Waynesboro, Lewistown, State College, Sunbury, Berwick, Bloomsburg, Clearfield, Huntingdon, etc., all of which have strong Methodist churches in the community.

The Harrisburg Area presently has a total of 625 organized churches which minister to 131,128 members. This represents 285 charges, of which 158 are circuits. The Area is bounded by the State lines on the north and south, and on the east roughly by Wellsboro, Hazleton, and Harrisburg; then westward to Altoona, Bedford, McConnellsburg, and Waynesboro. The area covered is approximately 125 by 175 miles.

The Harrisburg Area is located at the heart of the SUSQUEHANNA and EASTERN CONFERENCES of the E. U. B. Church and where they overlap the former separate denominations proved to be of equal strength. As the Annual Conferences involved, proceed with their merger in the United Methodist Church the Harrisburg Area is in the process of becoming one of the strong areas in the East having more than one-quarter million members.

EDGAR A. HENRY

Grace Church is the descendant of the first Methodist society organized there. JACOB GRUBER, pioneer preacher and presiding elder, preached in a house on Chestnut Street as early as 1808. A Methodist society was organized in 1818, and a church building was erected on Second Street in 1820. There were twenty members in 1819. Methodism grew slowly because it was Presbyterian and Lutheran country. However, by 1847 the Methodists were strong enough to build a church on Locust Street which had a larger seating capacity than any other building in the city.

In 1871 the congregation of 429 members relocated on State Street and erected a stone building which cost $100,000. Since that time it has been known as Grace Church. In 1897 the Pennsylvania state capitol burned and for a time Grace Church became the capitol, perhaps the only time in the nation's history when a Methodist church building has been put to such use.

St. Paul's Church was organized in 1860, and three others were soon started, Ridge Avenue in 1861, Mount Pleasant in 1869, and Fifth Street in 1871. Even so, Grace Church continued to grow. In 1877 it had 550 members, while the others in the order of their founding had 181, 286, 67, and 130 members. Through the years Grace has continued as a strong church in downtown Harrisburg. Of eleven congregations of the former Methodist Church in Harrisburg in 1970, Grace was the third largest in membership. For some time the church has maintained a vigorous six-month program of weekday Christian education which involves 100 to 200 children and some 37 instructors and administrators.

In 1970 Grace Church reported 1,450 members, property valued at $1,427,953 and $120,887 raised for all purposes.

Wesley A.M.E. Zion Church was organized in 1816. The congregation worshipped in a small log structure at Mulberry and Third Streets until 1838 when a brick church was begun at Tanners Avenue and South Street. For some years the basement of this building was used as the public school for Negro children. Up to the time of the Civil War, Wesley Church lent substantial aid to slaves who escaped from their masters in the South and fled North. The church was thus connected with the "Underground Railroad."

A larger brick church was built in 1862. It was remodeled in 1886, and it gave way to another new edifice in 1894. In 1915 the church was relocated at Forster and Ash Streets because the state took over the former site in order to extend and enlarge the capitol building.

In 1870 Wesley Church bought a nine-acre tract east of the city for a cemetery, and since that time it has been the sole owner of Lincoln Cemetery.

In 1865 the church was host to an Equal Rights Convention composed of Negro leaders in the state. The purpose of the meeting was to secure if possible equal rights for all American Negroes. Through the years Wesley Church has been active in the civic and political life of the community.

Three of Wesley Church's pastors have been elected bishops in the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH: E. D. W. Jones, Daniel C. Pope, and James Clair Taylor. Also, the church has had some outstanding laymen. WILLIAM HOWARD DAY served as General Secretary of the A.M.E. Zion Connection, secretary of the Philadelphia Conference, and president of the Harrisburg School Board. A strong worker for civil rights, he was considered by the Harrisburg Patriot News at the time of his death as one of the most prominent men of his race in America. Harriet McClintock Marshall, who was born in Harrisburg, Aug. 14, 1840, helped escaping slaves, feeding, clothing, caring for, and sending them on to another station. Her husband, Elisha Marshall, was an escaped slave. They were married in Wesley Church, June 9, 1864.

In August 1964, the state took Wesley Church's property at Forster and Ash Streets, and the congregation relocated at Fifth and Camp Streets. The present building was completed in April, 1966 at a cost of $245,000, including land and furnishings. In 1970, Wesley Church reported 217 members.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

A. W. HARRISON

HARRISON, ARCHIBALD WALTER (1882-1946), British Methodist, was born at Swindon, Wiltshire, in 1882. Entering the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1902, he was trained at Didsbury College, MANCHESTER, and married Grace Elizabeth ("Elsie"), daughter of JOHN S. SIMON, principal there. From 1921-30 he was vice-principal, and from 1930-40 principal, of WESTMINSTER COLLEGE for training teachers, and during the following five years served as secretary of the Methodist Education Committee. Trained as a historian, his major work was The Beginnings of Arminianism (1926), for which London University awarded him the D.D.; he also contributed the volume on Arminianism to the Duckworth Studies in Theology (1937). Other works included the FERNLEY-HARTLEY LECTURE on The Evangelical Revival and Christian Reunion (1942), and the WESLEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY Lecture for 1945—The Separation of Methodism from the Church of England. The best-known work of Mrs. Elsie Harrison (1886-1964) was a biography of JOHN WESLEY, Son to Susanna (1937). Harrison died suddenly on Jan. 8, 1946, during the term of his office as president of the Methodist Conference.

FRANK BAKER

HARROD, JOHN JOLLY (1785-1854), "Father of the Methodist Protestant Book Concern," was also, in 1828, the compiler of the first hymn book of the M. P. CHURCH. He was born in Harford County, Md., in 1785 and in 1806 opened a book store in BALTIMORE. He became interested in the reform movement within the M. E. Church during the early 1820's and joined the Baltimore Union Society. He became the publisher of the controversial Mutual Rights and in September 1827, he and twenty-one other laymen and eleven local preachers were expelled from the church. When the M. P. Church was organized he became the first agent of its Book Concern and periodical The Methodist Protestant, which was an outgrowth of The Mutual Rights. He was a member of the General Convention which met in Baltimore in November 1830, to form a Constitution and Discipline for the newly-organized M. P. Church, and he was closely associated with all the problems of establishing the M. P. denomination. He was elected secretary of "A General Home Missionary Society," organized in Baltimore on Aug. 4, 1831, with officers from every section of the church. At the first GENERAL CONFERENCE of the church, which met in Georgetown in May, 1834, he proposed that the denomination be given ten percent of the profits after all expenses had been paid from the Book Concern. He continued as editor of The Methodist Protestant until May 30, 1834. John J. Harrod died in Baltimore on Jan. 6, 1854, and was buried in the Greenmount Cemetery there.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

HART, EDWARD PAYSON (1835-1919), American FREE METHODIST CHURCH leader, was born in a Methodist home in Middlesex, Vt. He was greatly influenced by the preaching of JOHN WESLEY REDFIELD, M.D., a Methodist evangelist. Converted in 1859, he began preaching and was received on trial in the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. His first appointment was as junior preacher in a church near Rockford, Ill. He married Mattie Bishop in 1860. He first met B. T. ROBERTS, founder of the Free Methodist Church, in 1860 at a CAMP MEETING in St. Charles, Ill. He joined the Illinois Conference of the new church the same year. After two years in ILLINOIS he was requested by Roberts to enter MICHIGAN, as a pioneer evangelist. He was successful in establishing Free Methodism in that state. In 1871 he aided in founding SPRING ARBOR SEMINARY, Michigan.

In 1874 he was elected the second General Superintendent of the denomination. In 1908 he resigned because of failing health. He was an excellent administrator, a wise presiding officer, and a superior preacher. He died at Alameda, Calif., March 20, 1919.

He was the author of Reminiscences of Early Free Methodism (1913).

HART, SIR ROBERT (1835-1911), Irish Methodist layman who became inspector-general of Chinese Customs, 1863-1906. He was born near Portadown in the north of IRELAND. The Hart family was later associated with Priest-hill Methodist Church near Lisburn. After school at Hillsborough, Taunton (England) and WESLEY COLLEGE, DUBLIN, Robert Hart entered QUEEN'S COLLEGE, Belfast (now Queen's University) at the age of fifteen and one-half. Three years later, in 1853, he went out east as student interpreter to the British Consular Service. In 1863 he began his appointment under the Imperial Chinese Government in the marine customs service. He also founded the Chinese Postal and Lighthouse Services, and had a position of authority equal to that of the Viceroy of INDIA.

FREDERICK JEFFERY

HART, VIRGIL CHRISTOPHER (1840-1904), pioneer CHINA missionary, was born in Lorraine, N. Y., on Jan. 2, 1840, and was educated at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY and GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, receiving his B.D. degree in 1865. He had been urged toward missions by reading the life of David Livingstone. After ordination, and marriage to Adeline Gilliland in 1865, he accepted an appointment to China. The Harts arrived in Foochow in May 1866, and were sent to Kiukiang the following year to open new work in that Yangtze River port city. The next thirty-three years were given to the task of establishing the Christian church in the various cities along that great waterway. Missions were started in Chinkiang, Wuhu, Nanking, and Nanchang, work which later developed into the Mid-China and the Kiangsi Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church. In 1887, as Virgil Hart was about to start for America on a much needed furlough, he was recalled by his bishop to head a mission to West China, where he established Methodist work in Chungking and Chengtu.

Due to ill health he resigned in 1889 and retired to a farm in Ontario, but in 1891 the Canadian Methodist Church asked him to return to China and help establish their WEST CHINA MISSION. This he did, heading the mission in Chengtu and Chungking (1892-1900). He retired to Burlington, Ontario, and died there Feb. 24, 1904.

His literary works include Western China, a description of Szechuan Province and the chapter on Taoism in J. M. Reid's book, Doomed Religions.

FRANCIS P. JONES

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT, U.S.A., a New England city, capital and largest city (156,000) of the State of CONNECTICUT. It was settled in 1635 on the site of a Dutch Fort, the House of (Good) Hope, by English from Newtown (Cambridge), Mass., led by Thomas Hooker. In 1639 they adopted "the first written constitution known to history that created a government and it marked the beginning of American Democracy."

The first Methodist sermon was preached in Hartford by JESSE LEE, Dec. 9, 1789, during his first New England journey after being appointed to New England by Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY at the Methodist Conference held in JOHN STREET CHURCH, NEW YORK CITY. In 1790 Lee formed the Hartford Circuit, including towns on both sides of the Connecticut River; by 1791 there were twenty-eight members on the Circuit. When the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE was formed in 1796, there were 1,201 Methodists in Connecticut.

Hartford became part of the New Haven Circuit and the NEW YORK CONFERENCE and, in 1848, part of the

NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE. When in 1852 the Conference met in Hartford, there were 165 preachers and 20,718 members. At the 1960 Conference, Hartford's own son, Bishop FREDERICK B. NEWELL, presided at the First Methodist Church, his home church; the Conference had 364 preachers and 118,217 members.

Hartford, now part of the Connecticut Central District under Bishop LLOYD C. WICKE, is "port of entry" and focal center for Methodists in the greater Hartford Area. With the help of lay leadership from Hartford, new churches have been established in Newington (1955) and Bloomfield (1960). All of the surrounding town churches have grown by the addition of members from the Hartford churches. The churches have formed a Greater Hartford Mission Society to work and pray together as Methodists. In 1966 they united in an outdoor Sunday morning service to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of Methodist beginnings in America.

When in 1964, the New York and New York East Conferences rejoined (having been divided by General Conference in 1848), the Conference numbered 484 ministers and 198,021 members. Five Hartford Churches were reported in the Journal—Christ, First, North, St. Paul's and South Park with a total of 2,213 members and property valued at $1,600,000.

First Church. The establishment of the First Methodist Church in Hartford dates from 1829 when J. N. Moffitt began preaching in various places until the first building was dedicated May 24, 1821, at the corner of Trumbell and Chapel Streets. A second building was dedicated April 4, 1860 at Asylum and Ann Streets. The present church, dedicated Oct. 22, 1905, located at Farmington Avenue and Whitney Street, has a membership of 544. First Church members had a part in the creation of a number of other Hartford churches.

South Park Church was established in 1869 with the building of a chapel on South Main Street, the founding of a Sunday school with William Boardman as superintendent, and fifty-five members from First Church. The first pastor, H. G. Cheney, served from 1869-72. The sanctuary was dedicated April 1, 1875, and a new educational building added in 1957. At its Centennial, South Park finds itself in an inner city situation with most of its 466 members living in the suburbs. Community programs developing are an "Inn" for counseling narcotic addicts and a day nursery.

Christ Methodist Church was founded by German residents of the city in 1869. For many years it was the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, located in what is now the Hartford Hospital complex. Records show that Mark Twain used to attend the services with his daughter, that she might become acquainted with the German language. Moved to the present location on New Britain Avenue in 1959, with 201 members, the name was changed to Christ Methodist.

North Methodist Church was organized in 1871 as a Methodist Society in a Chapel on Windsor Avenue, now North Main Street. Neighborhood changes led to the present location on Albany Avenue and Woodlawn Street in 1923. Serving the still changing north end of Hartford, North Church has an integrated congregation of 308.

St. Paul's Church growing out of a class at First Methodist was organized as Parkville Church on May 10, 1893. The present brick building was dedicated Dec. 2, 1900; an education building was added in 1960. Many of 497 members reside in surrounding towns.

Three Negro Methodist churches flourish in Hartford. John W. Nance is at present pastor of the C.M.E. CHURCH, organized in 1932. The A.M.E. ZION fills the former North Church building; Alfred E. White is presently pastor. J. Blanton Shields is pastor of the A.M.E. CHURCH. These churches share in the greater Hartford Methodist Society and fellowship.

WILFRED HANSEN

HARTLEY, MARSHALL (1846-1928), British Methodist, was born of ministerial stock, educated at WOODHOUSE GROVE SCHOOL, and entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1868. He was appointed assistant tutor at RICHMOND THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, London. In 1888 he became secretary of the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY and remained in that office for thirty-one years, during which time as administrator of work overseas he visited SOUTH AFRICA, CHINA, and INDIA. For seven years he was in charge of CONNEXIONAL FUNDS. He served as secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference from 1895 to 1902, and in 1903 was elected president. He was also associated with the work for the London Mission and Extension Fund, the Minister's Children's Fund, and the Theological Institution Fund. He retired in 1926.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

HARTLEY, ROBERT (1817-1892), Australian minister of the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH, came from Lancashire, England to NEW SOUTH WALES in 1859. After four years in SYDNEY he was appointed to Rockhampton, Queensland where he served from 1864-1892. He established his denomination in the city and westwards for 200 miles—among new settlers, in mining villages and at railway construction camps. He was known for his good works, especially to newcomers to the country, and on his death a public monument was erected to his memory; this stands in the main street of Rockhampton today.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

HARTLEY, SIR WILLIAM PICKLES (1846-1922), British philanthropist and PRIMITIVE METHODIST layman, a native of Colne, in East Lancashire, was born on Feb. 23, 1846. From lowly business beginnings he became the founder of a famous firm of jam manufacturers at Aintree, near LIVERPOOL, and later in LONDON. Under a vow made in 1877 to devote a proportion of his income to the service of others, he established a scheme of profit sharing as one of the marks of his industrial policy. His benefactions included gifts to the university colleges of Liverpool and MANCHESTER; the Cottage Hospital and the Hartley Homes for the aged in his native town, of which he received the Freedom in 1909.

To Primitive Methodism he gave the first extension of HARTLEY COLLEGE, Manchester, in 1897, followed by a further extension in 1906. Interested deeply in ministerial education, he was the main instrument in securing ARTHUR S. PEAKE as tutor at the college. In 1896 he founded the Hartley Lecture. In 1892 he became vice-president of the Conference, and president in 1909. He served as general treasurer of the Missionary Society and was one of the founders of the CHAPEL AID ASSOCIATION. He received knighthood in 1908. In 1914, in commemoration of twenty-one years of Peake's tutorship, he enriched the Hartley College Chapel by the gift of three stained-glass windows. These were later destroyed by enemy action in 1941. Hartley was a merchant prince of exemplary character. He died in Southport on Oct. 25, 1922.

HARTLEY LECTURE. (See FERNLEY-HARTLEY LECTURE.)

HARTLEY VICTORIA COLLEGE is now the only Methodist theological college in MANCHESTER, after the transfer of DIDSBURY COLLEGE to BRISTOL, but various earlier institutions contributed to its formation. The buildings were originally the Primitive Methodist College. The oldest parts date from 1881, when they were opened on a more permanent basis for the training of PRIMITIVE METHODIST ministers, a task undertaken from 1865-68 at Elmfield College, York, and from 1868-81 at what became known as the Institute at SUNDERLAND. Through the generosity of WILLIAM P. HARTLEY, the Manchester buildings were twice enlarged, the dedication of the completed scheme taking place in 1906. When the college reopened after the First World War, it cooperated with the United Methodist College in Victoria Park, Manchester, joint classes being held for both groups of students, and the tutorial staffs sharing in the teaching. In 1934, after METHODIST UNION, Victoria Park College was closed, and its students, staff, and funds were transferred to Hartley, which thereupon was renamed Hartley Victoria College. The students and staff work in close association with the theological faculty of the University of Manchester.

Victoria Park College itself included two traditions. The UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES began to train ministerial students in Manchester in 1872, and the original building (a block of houses called Crescent Range, which was bought in 1876 and altered for college purposes) was given a new wing in 1879, after which it was called Victoria Park. The METHODIST NEW CONNECTION had a theological college at Ranmoor, Sheffield, beginning 1862-64. When the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH came into being in 1907, it was decided to retain both Victoria Park and Ranmoor for a time, but after the First World War only the former was reopened, the endowments of Ranmoor being transferred to Victoria Park.

HARTMAN, LEWIS OLIVER (1876-1955), American minister, editor, and bishop, was born on May 3, 1876, in LaGrange, Ind., the son of Samuel Brenton and Mary Elizabeth (Mason) Hartman. He was graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1899, and from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, S.T.B., 1903. His doctorate of philosophy was from BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1909. He married Helen Marian Nutter on Dec. 21, 1922, and their children were Mason Nutter and Richard Otts.

He was ordained in the ministry of the M. E. Church in 1903, and held pastorates in OHIO until 1910, when he became superintendent of Methodist Sunday school work in Ohio. For the next ten years, he held posts in the Board of Sunday Schools. From 1914 to 1920 he was director of the foreign department of the Board.

In 1920 he began his twenty-four-year career as editor of Zion's Herald. He gained prominence for his provocative editorials which stimulated discussion in many church issues. He championed reforms and often spoke for unpopular causes to give them a thorough hearing. He came to represent the liberal viewpoint within the M. E. Church, and Zion's Herald became a respected and influential journal of reform. He enjoyed the respect of his fellow editors of religious publications. In 1941 he was elected for a two-year term as president of the Associated Church Press.

The M. E. Church named him as its representative to the 1921 and 1931 WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCES. He was elected by the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE as a delegate to four GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. E. Church—1924, '28, '32, and '36. He was a delegate to the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939.

In 1944 he was elected bishop and assigned to the BOSTON Area. He served only four years, but during his service he helped develop a system of Central Conferences which gave Methodists abroad home rule, particularly in selection of bishops.

Following his retirement in 1948, Bishop Hartman became visiting professor of ecumenical Christianity at Boston University School of Theology, resumed his work as a writer, and served as librarian of the New England Methodist Historical Society.

From 1944 to 1947 he served as president of METHODIST FEDERATION FOR SOCIAL ACTION. One of the most influential figures in New England Methodism, Lewis O. Hartman died on June 30, 1955.

HARTRANFT, JUNE M. (1916-1965), American E.U.B. missionary, was born in Ephrata, Pa., June 19, 1916, to Clarence S. and Alice R. Meck Hartranft. By the age of fourteen she was determined to be a Christian missionary. She graduated from Millersville State Teachers College (Pa.) and obtained several degrees from the University of Pennsylvania. She did some teaching in the local public schools and served as deaconess at First Church, Ephrata, before going to SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, in 1945, as a missionary of the United Brethren in Christ. Since that date she served the Harford School for girls in Moyamba, Sierra Leone, as matron and teacher, and from 1950 as the acting principal and principal. Under her leadership the school grew in numbers and scholastic standing. Many of the alumni today are among the outstanding citizens and Christians of Africa.

One of the highest tributes to her distinguished leadership came on Oct. 20, 1963, when she was given a citation and honorary membership in the British Empire, conferred upon her by the Queen of England at the request of several African leaders. At that time only four Americans had received this honor.

Miss Hartranft returned to the United States in May, 1963, for extensive surgery and treatment and died in Ephrata, Aug. 13, 1965. A fund established in her memory has built a primary school for girls in Moyamba.

ESTHER L. MEGILL

HARTSOUGH, ISABELLA CORNISH (1828-1918), an American pioneer missionary worker in SOUTH DAKOTA and minister's wife, was born in Coventry, N. Y., on Sept. 12, 1828. She married a Methodist minister, LEWIS HARTSOUGH, on July 21, 1852, and proved to be a woman of unusual accomplishments.

Mrs. Hartsough was a distinguished evangelist, a speaker of ability, often assisted in REVIVAL MEETINGS, CAMP MEETINGS, and gave addresses for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She was a writer of both prose and poetry, and many of her articles were published in church papers. On the division of the Western Branch of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY (ME) in 1883, South Dakota was assigned to the MINNEAPOLIS Branch of the M. E. Church, with Mrs. Hartsough as the corresponding secretary. The following year she reported, "Rejoice—we have doubled the number of auxiliaries."

After eighteen years as Conference secretary and Christian leader, she left twenty-eight organized societies, to go with her husband who had been appointed superintendent of the Rocky Mountain Region. This gave Mrs. Hartsough opportunities to work among fallen women and outcasts living in wild mining towns of the midwest. She worked as an appointed agent of the Christian Commission, a forerunner of the later YMCA and the Red Cross Organization. Once with five women and six men, she served on a jury for a criminal case. When they retired, Mrs. Hartsough insisted that the deliberations be opened with prayer. At first the men favored the acquittal of the accused, but the offense and evidence was so clear, that a verdict of manslaughter was brought in. She proved herself able to meet most difficult experiences. She was a fine organizer and administrator, content with doing the work and leaving behind only a brief account of efforts and accomplishments. She died on July 25, 1918, and was buried in the cemetery at Mount Vernon, Iowa.

HARTSOUGH, LEWIS (1828-1919), American minister and the father of Methodism in UTAH, was born Aug. 31, 1828, at Ithaca, N. Y., where his early years were spent. He graduated from the then famous Cazenovia Seminary in 1852 and on July 21 of the same year was married to ISABELLA CORNISH. He had already been licensed to preach and had joined the ONEIDA CONFERENCE the year before.

He was ordained DEACON by Bishop SIMPSON in 1853 and ELDER two years later by Bishop AMES. During the next fifteen years, except for a brief interval devoted to the Christian Commission in connection with the Civil War, he served various pastoral charges in the Oneida Conference, the last being South Street, Utica. Then, because of impaired health, he went west. For a time he acted as "Railroad Man" for the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY distributing Bibles in railway stations and trains of the Union Pacific Railroad. Then he was appointed the first superintendent of the Utah Mission and presiding elder of Wyoming District (in 1869), thus having two large territories under his supervision. He moved to SALT LAKE CITY in December of 1869 and thus became the "father of Methodism" in Utah.

In 1871-73, as pastor at Epworth, Iowa, he was instrumental in bringing about two great revivals whose influence was long felt in that seminary town.

In 1874 Hartsough transferred to the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE, which then included the Dakotas. He served two years as presiding elder of the Sioux City District, then four years in charge of the Fort Dodge District. His experience in these pioneer fields and careful study of their needs led him, as a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1880 (ME), to secure the passage of the law establishing mission conferences, which have proven of great practical value in this country and abroad. The first two organized under this enabling act were the Dakota and the Black Hills Mission Conferences.

The challenge of the frontier again lured him to Dakota Territory where he served for the remaining years of his active ministry. In 1880 he became pastor at Sioux Falls and two years later was appointed to the newly formed Huron District. A six-year term on the Sioux Falls District concluded his active work in the ministry (1889). He continued to reside in SOUTH DAKOTA until 1895, when he and his wife moved to Mt. Vernon, Iowa, where they lived with their only daughter, Mrs. Alice H. Smith, until his death in 1919. Louis Hartsough was a hymn writer of note. The best known among several which became popular is the one beginning:

"I hear thy welcome voice
That calls me Lord to thee. . . ."

MATTHEW D. SMITH

JOSEPH C. HARTZELL

HARTZELL, JOSEPH CRANE (1842-1928), missionary bishop to Africa, was born near Moline, Ill., June 1, 1842, the son of Michael B. and Nancy (Worman) Hartzell. On deciding for the ministry, his father, his pastor, and his presiding elder urged him to enter it at once and trust the conference course of study for preparation. He insisted on academic training and pursued it for seven years, working his way. He won the A.B. at ILLINOIS WESLEYAN and the B.D. at GARRETT in the same year, 1868. Later several institutions conferred on him the honorary A.M., D.D., and LL.D. degrees. He married Jennie Culver, Nov. 14, 1869, and they had three sons.

In September 1868, Hartzell was admitted on trial in the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE and appointed to Pekin and was reappointed a year later. He had hardly begun work in ILLINOIS before Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON asked him to transfer to NEW ORLEANS. After due deliberation he agreed to go, and in January 1870, was appointed to Ames Chapel, the largest white congregation of the M. E. Church in that southern city. After three years at Ames Chapel his appointments were: New Orleans District, 1873-81; La Teche District, 1881-82; assistant corresponding secretary, FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY, 1882-88; and corresponding secretary, Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, 1888-96. In the latter position his headquarters were in CINCINNATI, Ohio. In 1873 Hartzell founded and for nine years was editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate. He then turned the property over to the church without compensation. He contracted yellow fever in the great epidemic of 1878. In view of the difficulties at the time, his work in New Orleans was notable. While he supported the Federal government, the fact that he did not condone the false representation of the Carpenters won friends among those who differed with him on social and political matters. In New Orleans he founded schools and a hospital for Negroes, and for several years he was a member of the city board of education. As a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE for twenty years, 1876-96, he was influential in securing favorable consideration for the work of the denomination in the South. As the executive officer of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, he was the administrator of more than $2,000,000, placed at his disposal by the General Missionary Society and other benevolent organizations. Conferences and institutions of his denomination came into being in the South because of his planning and the inspiration which he supplied. Forty-five institutions of learning, twenty-two for whites and twenty-three for Negroes, including medical colleges, divinity schools, and industrial centers, were administered under his direction.

In 1896 the General Conference elected Hartzell as missionary bishop for Africa to succeed the famed Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR. For twenty years Hartzell gave himself to that continental field with amazing energy and substantial success. He fixed his episcopal residence at Funchal, Madeira, and in two decades made thirteen tours of Africa, traveling 1,300,000 miles by ship, train, cart, oxback, donkey-back, and hammock. Statesmen whose nations had interests in Africa soon learned that Hartzell was a man to be reckoned with and trusted, for he coupled great knowledge of the continent with statesmanlike vision and the energy to materialize his dreams. He moved with ease among prime ministers and heads of foreign offices and their ministers plenipotentiary. He did not hesitate to present the problems of his church to influential statesmen, and he nearly always won his points along with their cordiality and cooperation. Cecil Rhodes granted 13,000 acres of land equipped with buildings for an agricultural mission in RHODESIA together with an annual grant for a school for the children of the white residents. In 1907 Premier Georges Clemenceau of France personally approved Hartzell's project for a mission under the French flag in North Africa, a venture which became a successful missionary enterprise. Hartzell organized and established missions, conferences, schools, medical work, printing establishments, agricultural enterprises, and mechanical shops in southern and central Africa for Negroes, and in the Madeira Islands for the white people.

Having reached the age limit, Hartzell was retired in 1916. When he took leave of the 1928 General Conference, the body stood to honor him, and representatives of his life work from various parts of the world came to the platform to pay tribute to his work and worth. On his eighty-sixth birthday he was assaulted by robbers in his home at Blue Ash, Ohio, and died there Sept. 6, 1928, from the effects of his injuries. He was buried in CHICAGO.

HARTZLER, HENRY BURNS (1840-1920), American Evangelical minister and bishop, was born near Yorkana, York Co., Pa., March 23, 1840. He attended the public schools of his community. Even in early life he gave evidence of becoming a sensitive and devout man. He took his favored books with him to the fields when plowing and would read several paragraphs while the horses rested at the end of a furrow. It was said that as a young minister, he would find shelter in a covered bridge during a thunderstorm and write poetry. During "moving periods," when the parsonage was topsy turvy and the furniture in chaotic state, he would find a perch on a store box and compose a poem on tranquility and the fitness of things. It seems there was no place where he could not adjust himself mentally and socially. He was gifted with the rich qualities of an editor and broke out into beautiful verses somewhat like a fountain. He wrote many enriching hymns, one of which was, "My Beautiful Bible."

The annals of his life include his license by the Central Pennsylvania Conference, Evangelical Association, in 1869, and his service thereafter in several appointments, including Trinity Church, York, 1873-74. He became assistant editor in that year of The Evangelical Messenger, serving as such until 1878 when he became editor, in which position he remained until 1886. He then went to Northfield, Mass., having accepted an invitation to teach the Bible in the Mount Hermon and Northfield schools, and thus became associated with the great evangelist, D. L. Moody. With the Church division, he entered the United Evangelical Church and became editor of The Evangelical, serving as such from 1894 to 1902, when he was elected bishop. His term as bishop ending in 1910, he again became editor of The Evangelical, serving until 1920.

His literary style was dignified, his interpretation of scripture discerning, discriminating and inspiring. His lectures on the Bible emphasized studies of Jesus. Those who knew him best admired him most. He was refined and dignified yet easy to approach. He was a favored preacher, a stirring evangelist, a real teacher, a gifted poet, an able author, an ideal editor, and a great bishop.

He published several books: Poems, 1920; Moody in Chicago, 1894; and Studies in the Acts, 1900. Bishop Henry Burns Hartzler died Sept. 3, 1920, in his home at Lemoyne, Pa.

ALFRED JOHN THOMAS

HARTZLER, JACOB (1833-1915), American Evangelical clergyman and missionary, was born in Lower Windsor Township, York Co., near Yorkana, Pa., Jan 18, 1833. In the summer of 1850, at a CAMP MEETING near his home, he was converted and united with the Evangelical Association. He was reared in a rural environment and went to the local schools. There were no formal educational advantages. Although thus handicapped, he applied himself to the books he could get and studied assiduously. By such earnest application, he became proficient and was certified to teach a rural one-room school. In his study for the ministry he spent whatever time he could find in the barn, in the field or wherever there was a rest period. He would open his book and read, even if only a few sentences or paragraphs, pondering what he read while he worked. In 1855 he was licensed to preach by the Central Pennsylvania Conference and served the following charges: York Circuit, 1855-56; Middlecreek, 1856-57; Wilkes Barre Mission, 1857-59; Columbia Circuit, 1859-60; Buffalo Circuit, 1860-61; Center Circuit, 1861-62; Agent for Union Seminary, 1862-63; Lewisburg, 1863-64; Agent for Washington, D.C. Mission, 1864-65; Glen Rock, 1867-70; Baltimore (Green Street), 1870-71; editor of The Evangelical Messenger, at Cleveland, Ohio, 1871-80.

Jacob Hartzler became superintendent of the Japan Mission in the Orient, 1880-87. In 1881 he and C. F. KRECKER were named members of the Bible Translating Committee which in 1888 presented such a "scholarly, idiomatic, readable, and rhythmic translation" that it remained the only complete version of the Old Testament in the Japanese language for more than half a century. In 1886 Jacob Hartzler was elected president of the Japanese Branch of The Evangelical Alliance, and the next year elected pastor of the Union Church in Tokyo. He remained with his annual conference in the church division and entered The United Evangelical Church, 1894, as a presiding elder. He served as delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1871, 1875, 1879. Jacob Hartzler was a successful editor, pastor and missionary. He was an astute scholar and delighted in theological discussions. He was superannuated in 1911 and died at York, Pa., 1915.

ALFRED JOHN THOMAS

HARVARD, WILLIAM MARTIN (17?-1857), British Methodist missionary pioneer in Asia, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1810 and responded to COKE'S appeal for volunteers to join his first mission to CEYLON and INDIA. On Coke's death at sea, in 1814, Harvard became the senior minister of the party and was responsible for arrangements for the mission after their arrival in Ceylon, where he himself was stationed in Colombo. He quickly became proficient in four languages, translated hymns and scriptures, began schools, and set up and managed a printing press for Christian literature. After a breakdown in health he returned to Britain in 1819 and served in English circuits. In 1836 Harvard was sent to CANADA as president of the Upper Canada Conference. In a period of dissension in both church and state he lost popularity through championing the "rights" of the British Conference to exercise control over Canadian Methodism, and after two years he was transferred to be chairman of the pro-British Lower Canada District. When the breach between the Upper Canadian Methodists and the British Conference was healed in 1847, he returned to England and served as house governor to the new RICHMOND THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE until his death. Able, courteous, scholarly, and greatly respected, he died Dec. 15, 1857, in London.

HARWOOD, THOMAS (1829-1916), a pioneer preacher and missionary to NEW MEXICO shortly after that territory had been opened to the United States. He was admitted into the Northwest Wisconsin Conference (ME), in 1865, and after graduating to elder's orders, was at Bishop EDWARD R. AMES instance transferred to the Colorado Conference which at that time embraced New Mexico. JOHN L. DYER, known as the snow shoe itinerant, was then the presiding elder in the Colorado Conference. He had known Harwood back in WISCONSIN, and begged him to comply with Bishop Ames' request and come to New Mexico. "He took my place," wrote Dyer in his autobiography, "and I have reason to thank God that the result has been so good" (Barclay's History, p. 238). In 1870, Harwood was formally appointed to New Mexico, and in 1872 the New Mexico Mission was created and from 1872 to 1884 Thomas Harwood was its superintendent. For considerable time he was stationed at La Junta, and he with the assistance of Mrs. Harwood opened a mission institute for the education of the children—especially a girls' school in New Mexico. When that territory was separated in 1872 from the Colorado Conference, Harwood was appointed superintendent of missions in New Mexico and held that position for several years. In 1890 on the release of another mission preacher to take charge of the newly formed Navajo Mission, Thomas Harwood was reinstated as superintendent until the Bishop "could find some one to superintend the work." He seems to have retired in 1907, as he made his final report to the conference on Oct. 23, 1907. His first wife Emily died in 1902 and on July 1, 1911, he was married to Mrs. Mary Emma (Mitchell) Clark who died in 1936.

Harwood was a great believer in mission schools in support of missionary progress and by 1886 six elementary schools had been established for 225 pupils and two academies—the Kit Carson Seminary at Taos and the Socorro Academy at Socorro, each with a Biblical department. Realizing that there was a need for reading and studying materials in Spanish, beginning in 1879 Harwood published a paper, El Abogado Cristiano, also Sunday school lessons, and many pages of tracts in the Spanish language.

Thomas Harwood left an indelible mark upon the Methodism of New Mexico and the Harwood School in ALBUQUERQUE is named for him and for his wife. He wrote History of New Mexico Spanish and English Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1850 to 1910. This was published at Albuquerque by his own El Abogado Press, Vol. I in 1908, and Vol. II in 1910. He died in 1916 and was buried in Albuquerque.

HASKINS, THOMAS (1760-1816), was the youngest American itinerant in attendance at the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE. He was a friend and correspondent of FRANCIS ASBURY, whose Journal he helped edit; one of the framers of the CHARTERED FUND; for many years a trustee and the treasurer of Old St. GEORGE'S M. E. Church in PHILADELPHIA; and one of the organizers of both Union M. E. Church and St. Stephen's M. E. Church in Philadelphia.

Haskins was born in 1760 near Preston, Carolina Co., Md. He was well educated and was studying law in Dover, Del., when in 1780 he was converted through the preaching of FREEBORN GARRETTSON and joined a Methodist Society. Asbury wrote of him on Dec. 8, 1780, "Thomas Haskins is a young man of learning, and has been studying the law: like William Spencer, he has given it up for grace and divinity. Glory be to God! I believe the Lord has called Thomas Haskins for a preacher; he was convinced in Dover some months ago."

Haskins was admitted on trial at the conference of April 1782, and into full connection in 1784. He had some misgivings about the organization of the M. E. Church in that year and wrote in his Journal that he feared many "unhappy consequences," believing that the critics would describe the preachers as "hunters after power and disturbers of the peace and good order of the Church and State." He successfully served at BALTIMORE, CHESTER, and Philadelphia, Summit and Talbot.

While on the Chester Circuit he met Martha Potts of French Creek in lower Berks County, Pa. She was the granddaughter of Rebecca Grace, the reputed friend of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin, whom she rejected in marriage because of his religious views. In 1786 Haskins married Martha Potts, and then located in Philadelphia and went into the wholesale grocery business with Colonel Caleb North of Revolutionary fame. The two men were active in the affairs of St. George's Church, Philadelphia, Haskins serving for many years as a trustee and treasurer. He drew up the original charter of the church.

He was one of the framers of the Chartered Fund in 1796, and also drew up the agreement between the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE, representing the BOOK CONCERN, and EZEKIEL COOPER; and presented it to the GENERAL CONFERENCE.

In 1797 his wife died and was buried in the church yard behind Old St. George's. Two years later he married Elizabeth Richards.

About 1800 a disagreement among the members of St. George's Church led Haskins and a number of other leaders of the church to establish a Society in the South End known as the Academy on Fourth Street. Later the Society became known as Union M. E. Church. This Church later moved to Diamond Street in Philadelphia and today is located in Brookline, a suburb of the city.

About 1811 Haskins and other prominent members of Union M. E. Church erected a Methodist church in Tenth Street below Market in Philadelphia, calling it St. Stephen's Church. Haskins is reputed to have secured a contribution for the building from Stephen Girard, and if so, Haskins is one of the few men to have secured financial assistance for a church building from the eccentric Philadelphia philanthropist. The church, however, was never successful.

Haskins died in 1816 and was buried in the rear of Union M. E. Church on Fourth Street. His widow survived him by about forty years, and at her death his remains were removed to the family plot of his second wife in a cemetery in NEW YORK CITY.

HASTINGS, RALPH GARTEN (1894-), American layman and insurance company executive, was born in Washington, Ind., on Nov. 24, 1894. His parents were Elmer E. and Bertha J. Garten Hastings. He was educated at the University of Indiana A.B., 1916. His wife was Helen L. Nehf, whom he married on June 10, 1922, and they have one daughter. He went into business in Washington, Ind. He served as Sunday school superintendent of the First Church, Washington, Ind., 1924-41, and became a member of the general Commission of WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE in 1930. He has been a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1956, '60; a member of the COORDINATING COUNCIL of The Methodist Church; president of the Methodist Home for the Aged, Franklin, Ind.; president of the Parsonage Trustees in the Vincennes District, and has been greatly active in all the affairs of the Church.

HASTINGS, NEBRASKA, U.S.A. First Methodist Church is the oldest church in continuous existence in Hastings. The present church building is an impressive Gothic type structure. The church was organized in 1872, two years after the founding of the town, in the freight house of the Denver and St. Joseph Railway. Shortly afterward a church building was erected at the corner of what is now Kansas Avenue and Second Street. This building was soon outgrown, and a new and larger church was built on the corner of Burlington Avenue and Third Street. Incidentally, in these later years, both of these earlier locations have become parking lots. A third church was erected in 1915 at the present location, Seventh Street and Hastings Avenue. This structure has been slightly remodeled in later years, and a new addition was made in 1955 and a parking lot added. The main tower of the church houses a set of ten bells, the gift of W. H. Lanning as a memorial to his mother, Mrs. Mary Lanning, who was a member of the Methodist Church all of her life. The church has been served by twenty-eight pastors in 100 years.

HATCH, JOHN WOOD (1864-1959), American preacher and educator, was born in Presque Isle, Maine, on March 2, 1864, was received on trial in the EAST MAINE CONFERENCE in 1895 and into full membership two years later. He served the following charges, all in the East Maine Conference; Kingman (1894-97), Easton (1898-99), Winterport (1900-03), Belfast (1904-06). He was appointed presiding elder in 1907 (changed in 1908 to district superintendent), and he served in this capacity through 1912. In 1913 he became principal of Montpelier Seminary (Methodist preparatory school), Montpelier, Vt., which position he held until his retirement in 1932.

While in VERMONT he belonged to the VERMONT CONFERENCE and retained his membership there until 1941, when that conference joined the TROY CONFERENCE; his membership was transferred to the MAINE CONFERENCE (the East Maine Conference united with the Maine Conference in 1923) in 1944. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1912, representing the East Maine Conference, and of the General Conference of 1924 representing the Vermont Conference.

Hatch received the B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Maine, studied at Harvard Divinity School and BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. The honorary D.D. degree was conferred upon him by WILMAMETTE UNIVERSITY, Salem, Ore.

Hatch married Isabelle G. Flye on Oct. 26, 1896. Three children were born to them. Mrs. Hatch died on Oct. 10, 1915. He married Miss Nellie Worth on Oct. 5, 1919, who survived him.

The eighteen years Hatch served as principal of Montpelier Seminary represent his outstanding achievement. He assumed the position at a time when the trustees thought the school might have to close its doors because of financial indebtedness. However, he brought the institution through its most difficult period and made it an outstanding school.

He died Jan. 26, 1959, at St. Petersburg, Fla., and was buried in Orono, Maine.

HATCHER, EUGENE CLIFFORD (1902-), an American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born on Sept. 2, 1902, in Eufaula, Ala. He was educated at Payne College (Ala.) from which he received the A.B. degree in 1930. Since that time he has received the honorary degrees of D.D. from Payne and WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY, the LL.D. degree from Shorter-Flipper-Curry College (Ark.), Wilberforce University and MORRIS BROWN College, and the J.U.D. from Nasson College (Maine). He was ordained deacon in 1924 and elder in 1925, held pastorates in FLORIDA, ALABAMA, served as professor of mathematics and chemistry, presiding elder and editor of the Southern Christian Recorder, 1940-52.

He was elected to the episcopacy in 1952 from the latter position. He presently resides at JACKSONVILLE, Fla. and supervises the work of the Eleventh Episcopal Area District, comprising eight annual conferences in the state of Florida.

HAUG, GEORG (1902-), German pastor and executive of the South Germany Annual Conference, was born

May 23, 1902, at Nuertingen. In 1922 he became a supply pastor, then a student at the Frankfurt theological seminary (PREDIGERSEMINAR). He served various local churches from 1929-47, including NUREMBERG and Munich. Since 1937 he has been a member of the board of managers of the deaconess motherhouse Martha-Maria. In 1943-45 he was in military service, but after the war was made district superintendent of the Stuttgart District (1947-56). Since 1947 he has been active in the organizing of the Youth Department of the Methodist Church in GERMANY and has also been a member of the Working Association of Evangelical Youth in Germany, acting for three years on its executive board. From 1949-58 he was editor of Der Kinderfreund (Children's Paper). Since 1952 he has been on the executive board of the South German Broadcasting Corporation. Other positions held: member of "action committee" for study and solution of employee problems since 1957; organizing Department of Social Work, Methodist Church in South Germany, since 1953, its managing director since 1956; member of the executive board of ecumenical committee of Baden-Württemberg; 1956 delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church.

HAUGHTON, JOHN, British Methodist, was a weaver who became one of JOHN WESLEY's helpers in 1742 and later an ASSISTANT. He ceased to travel in 1760 and became rector of Kilrea, IRELAND, where Wesley stayed with him in 1778.

HAUS UND HERD, a German language paper published officially by the M. E. Church for German Methodists in America. (See WILLIAM NAST; also METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.)

HAUSER, CARL (1866-1950), American E.U.B. publisher, was born in Aldingen, GERMANY, Feb. 5, 1866, and came to the United States as a youth. He committed his life to Christ at an early age and studied for the ministry. He was licensed by the Illinois Conference, Evangelical Association, in 1891, and served churches at Streator, Hampshire, CHICAGO (Dearborn Street), Freeport (Oak Avenue), and Oak Park.

He entered the publishing office in Cleveland in 1904 as junior publisher and became publisher in 1909 of a debt-ridden Publishing House. In spite of the decline in the use of German language materials, the transfer of the printing of English Sunday school materials to the Harrisburg, Pa. publishing plant, as well as rapidly rising material and labor costs during and following World War I, the debt of a quarter of a million dollars on the publishing house was finally paid.

Edwin G. Frye, formerly editor of the Evangelical Messenger, wrote: "He (Rev. Hauser) had gloriously achieved, though not without bearing through the years a heavy burden, not all of which was that laid upon him by the demands of the business and the meeting of financial objectives. Some of it was in the form of criticism and faultfinding for doing things that had to be done to meet the conditions which confronted him. To his credit it must be said that he had the courage and the grit to follow on until the task was done."

Hauser resigned in 1930 and with his wife Bertha spent twenty years in active retirement. He was also treasurer for part of his ministerial years of the Flat Rock Children's Home and of the Episcopal Fund. He died March 28, 1950.

HAUSER, GOLD CORWIN (Mrs. J P) (1877-), an American missionary, minister's wife, teacher, writer, translator, was born to the Rev. and Mrs. G. J. Corwin of Rapid City, S. D. in 1877. She graduated from DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY with a B.A. degree in 1899 and taught three years in a school in Scotland, S.D. She was a traveling secretary for the Woman's Christian Association in NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA and NEBRASKA. She became associated with the STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT for the Foreign Missions. She married J P HAUSER in 1905 and went to MEXICO to translate texts of graded lessons for church school into Spanish. She found pastors to translate or write children's songs. She also organized the Children's Churches and formed Woman's Missionary Societies and Wesleyan Service Guilds in Central Conference of Mexico.

In 1927, Mrs. Hauser was appointed as an instructor to Union Theological Seminary in Mexico City. Teaching religious education, modern missions and English, she helped train many who have become pastors, bishops, writers and leaders in Mexico and elsewhere. For twenty-five years, Mrs. Hauser was acting editor for an English magazine for use in mission work. She did work for the Board of Missions. On furloughs she studied at divinity schools. The Hausers were in Mexico during the Mexican Revolution and could witness to the effectiveness of what the missionary cause may do for churches in times of a national upheaval.

After she retired in 1949, she and Dr. Hauser returned to Mexico for two periods of six months each to work in Palmore Hospital in Chihuahua. She translated two textbooks for the nurses school, Dermatology and Surgical Nursing.

Mrs. Hauser enjoyed being a pastor's wife at Hitchcock, S. D. one year and Asbury Methodist Church in Sioux Falls. After formal retirement, she became hostess of Jenkins Methodist Home, as she saw great possibilities for work among elderly people. She and her husband lived in this home as hostess and chaplain until 1968. Dr. Hauser died in May of that year. Mrs. Hauser continues to be in touch with the home.

HAUSER, J P (real name) (1879-1968), American minister, missionary and teacher, was born April 27, 1879 at Fon du Lac, Wis., to John and Louise Marie (Pease) Hauser. They moved to Aberdeen, Dakota Territory in 1883. J P Hauser attended school at DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY at Mitchell, S. D. and received his B.S. and B.A. degrees in 1899. He attended BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in Boston, Mass. and graduated S.T.B. in 1902. He took postgraduate work at Divinity School University in Chicago 1921-27; GARRETT SEMINARY and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY at Evanston, Ill. in 1933 and SCARRITT COLLEGE, Nashville, Tenn. in 1944.

He was an accepted missionary from the NEW EN-GLAND CONFERENCE in 1902 and transferred the same year to MEXICO Annual Conference as an elder of the M. E. Church. Years later in 1925, he transferred to Dakota Conference, his home state. His first appointment for missionary work was pastor of the English Speaking Church of Mexico City. In 1904-05, he was appointed as teacher and treasurer of the Boys School of Puebla.

Hauser and GOLD CORWIN, who had been a classmate at Dakota Wesleyan, were married in 1905. Soon afterwards, he became manager of the Methodist Publishing House in Mexico City. In 1908, he was appointed as district superintendent of the Methodist Church of Miraflores. He was then appointed as district superintendent of the Eastern District from 1911-13. This followed a third appointment as district superintendent to the Central District, 1914-21. While Hauser was on the Puebla District, fire destroyed the Puebla Church and Student Center. He was assigned to supervise the rebuilding of the church.

In 1927, the Hausers again were sent to Mexico City to teach, Hauser as professor of Systematic Theology at Union Seminary, and treasurer of the Mission with power-of-attorney, to care for Methodist properties, because revolutionary conditions had caused great anxiety. The years the Hausers were in Mexico were spent in developing new churches with special emphasis on youth work.

After forty-six years for Hauser, and forty-three for Mrs. Hauser, they retired in 1949 and were appointed for one year to the Methodist Church at Hitchcock, S. D. From there to Sioux Falls, S. D. they went to organize a new congregation and help plan the building of Asbury Church. In 1956, he became chaplain and Mrs. Hauser became hostess of Jenkins Methodist Home for the elderly at Watertown, S. D. They retired in April of 1968 and Dr. Hauser died a month later on May 31, 1968.

HAVEN, ERASTUS OTIS (1820-1881), American bishop and educator, was born on Nov. 1, 1820, at BOSTON, Mass., and was a cousin of Bishop GILBERT HAVEN. He was graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1842 and taught school at Sudbury, Mass., where he started a private school in 1843. He began to preach there but did not join the NEW YORK CONFERENCE until 1848. He taught at the seminary in Amenia, N. Y., and was principal, 1846-48.

After joining the New York Conference he became pastor of the Twenty-Fourth Street Church, NEW YORK CITY, the Red Hook Mission and Mulberry Street Church. He remained five years in the pastorate.

In 1853 he was professor of Latin at the University of Michigan and the following year became professor of rhetoric and English literature. In 1856 he was made editor of Zion's Herald at Boston and remained in that post until 1863. Taking an active part in politics, he was a member of the State Senate of MASSACHUSETTS and of the Board of Overseers of Harvard University. In 1863 he became president of the University of Michigan and also professor of rhetoric and English literature, remaining in that position until 1869, when he became president of NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY at Evanston, Ill. In 1872 he was corresponding secretary of the Board of Education of the M. E. Church, and in 1874 he became Chancellor of SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY. As fraternal delegate to the British Methodist Conference in 1878, he secured the cooperation of the British in forming the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, which met first in 1881. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1868, 1872, 1876 and 1880. At the 1880 Conference he was elected a bishop and assigned to SAN FRANCISCO. He survived less than a year, dying at Salem, Ore., on Aug. 2, 1881, while presiding at an annual conference there. He was buried at Salem.

HAVEN, GILBERT (1821-1880), American bishop and radical abolitionist, was born at Malden, Mass., on Sept. 19, 1821, a cousin of Bishop ERASTUS OTIS HAVEN. He attended the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he was converted, and was graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1846. He spent five years as professor of Greek and German in the seminary at Amenia, N. Y., and was the principal of that institution for three years. He joined the NEW ENGLAND ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1851, and spent two years each as pastor in Northampton, Wilbraham, Westfield, Roxbury, and Cambridge.

When President Lincoln issued his first call for troops in the Civil War, Gilbert Haven, known as a strong abolitionist on the slavery issue, volunteered as a CHAPLAIN and was commissioned in the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment in 1861. Later he served as pastor of the Clinton Street Church, Newark, N. J. On his return from Europe in 1865, he was appointed pastor of the North Russell Street Church, which later became the First Methodist Church, BOSTON.

In 1867 he was elected editor of Zion's Herald. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1868 and in 1872 he was elected bishop and assigned to ATLANTA, Ga. His radical abolitionist views and his association with Negroes on the basis of equality made him unpopular with Southern people. He went to MEXICO in 1873 with WILLIAM BUTLER and helped to plant Methodism in that country. He visited LIBERIA in 1876, where he contracted a fever from which he never fully recovered. He died on Jan. 3, 1880 at Malden, Mass., and was buried there.

Bishop Haven was one of the most liberal-minded leaders in American Methodism. At a time when most liberals took very moderate positions on slavery he advocated not only abolition but social equality and racial amalgamation. In addition he was an early defender of civil rights, prohibition, women's suffrage and equality, and lay representation in the conferences of the church. He had no hesitation in taking these radical views into his southern episcopal assignment.

Among his writings were The Pilgrim's Wallet (1866); National Sermons (1869); Father Taylor, The Sailor Preacher, with Thomas Russell (1872); Our Next Door Neighbor: A Winter in Mexico (1875); Christus Consolator (1893); and several influential pamphlets.

HAVEN, WILLIAM INGRAHAM (1856-1928), American leader and general secretary of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, was born at Westfield, Mass., on Jan. 30, 1856, the son of Rev. (later bishop) GILBERT HAVEN and Mary Ingraham Haven. He was educated at Boston Latin School, Wilbraham Academy, and WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (B.A., 1877; M.A., 1880; D.D., 1899; LL.D., 1921), student DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1878-79; B.D. BOSTON UNIVERSITY, 1881. He taught at CLAFLIN UNIVERSITY, 1887-88. Haven was ordained DEACON, 1883, ELDER 1885. He was a member of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, 1881-1928. He was pastor of Eggleston Square, Boston, 1881-84; Newton Center, 1884-87; First, Boston, 1887-92; Saratoga Street, 1892-94; St. Mark's, Brookline, 1894-99; Corresponding Secretary (later General), American Bible Society, 1899-1928. He married Minna G. Speare (later president of the N. Y. Branch of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY) on April 25, 1894. He was a founder of the EPWORTH LEAGUE (vice-president 1889-1909); president, New England Epworth League, 1890; a member of the Board of Foreign Missions, M. E. Church, 1899-1924; ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, 1901, 1911; Edinburgh WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, 1910; a trustee of Wesleyan University; Boston University, Drew Theological Seminary; a founder of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1905; a Methodist representative thereafter; a member of the Administrative Committee, 1908-28 (chairman, four years); also its Committee on International Justice and Goodwill; and Chairman, Committee on Relations with the Orient for many years. "In the daily work of the Council through twenty years, few men have given more practical assistance or been more eagerly sought for advice and guidance" (Administrative Committee Resolution). In the American Bible Society, "in the multiplied tasks of a general secretary, his wisdom in planning, his skill in execution, his thoughtful courage in meeting emergencies and opportunities—such as the service of the Society in the great war (WWI)—his many friendships with leaders in all the churches . . . and his unflinching graciousness and good cheer have been of incalculable value to the Society . . . with (his) deep underlying zeal 'that men might read for themselves the redemp-tive message of the great book'" (Managers' resolution). He died in Summit, N. J., June 5, 1928.

HAVERHILL, MASSACHUSETTS, U.S.A. (population 45,643, U.S. Census 1970) is a manufacturing city of considerable enterprise situated on the Boston and Maine R.R. and on the Merrimack River. It was settled in 1640 and in its early history suffered from Indian depredations. Methodism was introduced into the adjacent country by JESSE LEE, in the summer of 1790, when he organized the Oxford Circuit with which this place became connected. It appears in the conference minutes of the M. E. Church in 1826, listing Ebenezer Ireson and Nathan Howe in charge.

On May 8, 1852, under the ministry of James Pike, First Church was organized and a Sunday school started with four officers and six teachers. In March of 1853 the use of the Town Hall was granted the growing flock. On March 3, 1853, the society was incorporated as The First Methodist Society of Haverhill, Mass. During the pastorate of G. W. H. Clark, 1853-54, a church was built at a cost of $10,000. This served until 1906, when it was sold to the Pentecostal Society. In 1866 seats in the church were a premium with many members giving up their own to others. After much discussion, ten men of First Church bought land on Winter Street, April 19, 1866, with the second church in view. Further steps toward organization were taken in February, 1870. L. D. Barrows was appointed to the new work in April 1870, and at the home of Dr. Chase a QUARTERLY CONFERENCE was held April 16 and the cornerstone was laid on Sept. 23. The following year Grace Church was completed and duly consecrated Sept. 21, 1871.

Giving attention to the Bradford Area south of the Merrimack, F. K. Stratton, then pastor of Grace Church, organized a class in 1882, which was later led by J. H. Chard, who cherished the desire to make it into a church. C. H. Stackpole, appointed by the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE, began work in 1891 and stayed three years. This church continues under the name of The People's Church. A new church building was completed and dedicated by Bishop RANDOLPH S. FOSTER, at the New Year, 1892.

A third church was organized on Sept. 25, 1893, in the Mount Washington Community, with members from both First and Grace, with F. C. Rollins as first pastor. A property on Washington St. was bought, the house used for a parsonage and a chapel was then built on the lot with the expectation that a church would come later. But community changes dictated otherwise, necessitating giving up the separate work in 1907, when Grace, First and Third were brought together.

Grace Church, then the second largest church in the Conference, became responsible for the Methodist work in Haverhill north of the Merrimack River and has continued in a great ministry. Ground was broken for a new church plant at 471 Main Street, the former site of Cale Hospital, on Oct. 1, 1961, and a consecration service was held on Oct. 20, 1963, with the completion of the chapel and the educational building during the pastorate of Norman T. Allers. The Webster Street parsonage, used since 1904, was sold in 1965, when a property at 7

Winona Avenue was purchased for $17,500. The Grace Church building on Winter Street was torn down and the site sold in 1966. Statistics given in 1970 are membership 499, church school 152, estimated value of church plant, equipment, and land, $290,221.

HAVIGHORST, EDWIN STANTON (1865-1952), German-American minister and educator, was born at Springfield, Ill., Nov. 7, 1865. He was graduated from both the MOUNT PLEASANT GERMAN COLLEGE, founded in 1873 by his father, Rudolph Havighorst, and from IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1887, and from the School of Theology, BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1890. Iowa Wesleyan University conferred an honorary D.D. upon him in 1899. Although he was English-trained, he devoted his life with fervent loyalty to German-American Methodism until it became absorbed in the American conferences. Admitted to the ST. LOUIS GERMAN ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, he served pastorates at Moberly, Mo.; Bloomington, Ill. and Burlington, Iowa (1890-97). In 1898 he was elected president of the Mount Pleasant German College, Iowa, and held this office for ten years. He brought the school to a peak of academic achievement, gathered a strong faculty, and edited a college magazine. In 1908 he became president for two years of German Wallace College, Berea, Ohio. Following a six-year pastorate (1910-16) at First German, Kansas City, Mo., he became pastor of the German Methodist Church and principal of the Enterprise Normal Academy, Enterprise, Kan. From 1917-27, he was professor and dean of the German Theological Department, Central Wesleyan College, Warrenton, Mo. Pastorates at Warrenton, La Plata and Weston, Mo. occupied him until 1948, when he retired at the age of eighty-two. He died in Moberly, Mo., on Dec. 11, 1952.

HAVRE, MONTANA, U.S.A., Van Orsdel Church. The earliest record book of the church says, "Rev. W. W. VAN ORSDEL, P. E. preached at Havre April 13, 1892. Rev. R. A. Armstrong was with him. Bro. Armstrong had preached at Havre once previous to this." The cornerstone of the first church, a frame building, was laid June 6, 1893 by Brother Van; the opening service was July 16, 1893. Membership then was six persons, it now ranks tenth in the MONTANA CONFERENCE (1970). A brick church was built in 1916 (basement opened Dec. 19, 1915, by Brother Van and Bishop NAPHTALI LUCCOCK; cornerstone laid May 24, 1916; church dedicated May 13, 1917 by Brother Van and T. C. ILIFF). This building burned in 1957, and a new structure, erected on the same site, was dedicated June 20, 1965.

The Havre church has been noted for its witness in music, its valiant fight against social evils of the area, its constant support of Kennedy Deaconess Hospital (at Havre, begun in 1916, dedicated Oct. 24, 1926 after seven years' drought; Miss Donna E. Watts, deaconess, in charge 1926-46); its band of faithful tithers (Dr. Charles Houtz being the first), its Easter Tithing Program (began in 1924-25, which culminates on Easter each year with a Processional Offering in which the members lay on the altar the title of the previous two months), its work with high school and college youth, and its radio ministry. Longest pastorate was that of John Morange, twelve years.

HAWAII, the fiftieth state admitted to the United States, consists of a cluster of islands in the mid-north Pacific Ocean some 1,600 miles from the mainland of North America. The total land area is about 6,400 square miles, and the population in 1970 was 748,575. Blessed with an equable climate, the main economic resources of the islands are sugar, pineapples, and tourism.

Discovered in 1778 by Captain James Cook, Hawaii, first known as the Sandwich Islands, was inhabited by people of Polynesian origin, and they practiced an animistic religion. Monarchy was the form of government, and the ruler was usually a powerful queen. In time Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, and Caucasians emigrated to the islands, and they soon outnumbered the Hawaiians. In 1893 the queen was deposed, and the next year a republic was formed. At the request of the islanders, the United States annexed Hawaii in 1898, made it a territory in 1900, and admitted it to the union in 1959.

Ten Congregational missionaries from New England entered Hawaii in 1820. They soon reduced the native language to writing and published the New Testament in Hawaiian. In 1827 a Roman Catholic mission was established. Today all the great religions of the world are represented in Hawaii.

Methodist work in Hawaii began in 1854 when William S. Turner, a minister from CALIFORNIA, went to Honolulu for his health. A year later, at the request of Methodists in Hawaii, the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE (ME) appointed Turner to Honolulu and attached the work to the SAN FRANCISCO District. Turner stayed three years and established a church in Hawaii.

At first the ministry of the denomination was to white people. Then in 1888 Japanese Christians in San Francisco raised money and sent a Japanese preacher by the name of KANICHI MIYAMA and two other workers to Honolulu to minister to the Japanese who had emigrated to Hawaii to work in the booming sugar plantations. The work thus begun was administered from the Japanese District in the California Conference. In 1905 a Hawaii Mission was organized, which in time came under the National Division of the BOARD of MISSIONS of The Methodist Church. The board gave guidance and financial help.

Methodism's ministry in Hawaii centers on Oahu, the island on which Honolulu is located, though there are some churches on the island of Kauai, Maui, and Hawaii. The church membership generally is about equally divided between Orientals and Caucasians, and the groups are well integrated. In addition, there are specialized ministries to immigrants from Samoa, to Filipinos and Koreans, and to a new wave of Japanese immigrants. There is a large rural ministry to village people on Oahu with eleven churches and preaching places. Suburban developments around Honolulu have created a demand for church extension; three new churches were organized there in the conference year 1966-67.

The denomination has three service centers in Honolulu—GOODWILL INDUSTRIES, Susanna Wesley Community Center, and the Pohai Nani Retirement Home. In 1967 the home had 126 residents, the Goodwill Industries employed forty handicapped persons, and the Community Center maintained a helpful ministry to children.

The 1964 GENERAL CONFERENCE gave the Hawaii Mission the right to become a provisional annual conference or to merge with the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE. It chose the latter course, and in June 1967, became the Hawaii District of that conference. In 1970 the district had twenty-seven pastoral appointments, 6,825 members, and churches, parsonages, and other property valued at $9,593,010.

The 1968 session of the Western JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE was held in Honolulu.

HAWAII LOA COLLEGE, Honolulu, Hawaii, was granted a charter in 1963, and opened in the fall of 1967. It is a joint enterprise under The United Methodist Church (Division of Higher Education and Division of National Missions), the United Presbyterian Church, the United Church of Christ, and the Episcopal Church.

JOHN O. GROSS

HAWK, EUGENE BLAKE (1881-1963), American preacher and theological dean, was born near Bristol, Tenn., on Sept. 6, 1881. His ancestry stretches back to a family which came from England, settling in MASSACHUSETTS in 1638. Growing up as a devout youth, he had no crucial conversion experience but in due time there arose in his heart "the inner assurance that he was a son of God and that he had a definite call to the ministry."

Formal schooling rewarded his efforts with an A.B. degree from EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE; a B.D. from VANDERBILT School of Religion; and honorary degrees of D.D. from ASBURY COLLEGE, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIversity, and BOSTON UNIVERSITY; and an LL.D. from McMURRY COLLEGE and one from Emory and Henry College.

KAILUA CHURCH, HAWAII

Licensed to preach in 1906, he was admitted on trial in the NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1909, and continued in active service for fifty years. With exception of two years, while at Fourth Street Church in LOUISVILLE, Ky., his appointments were all in the CENTRAL TEXAS CONFERENCE. There he was stationed at Blooming Grove, Walnut Springs, Grandview, Temple, Fort Worth Polytechnic and First Church, Fort Worth—this last 1925-31.

In 1933 he was invited to become Dean of the PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at Southern Methodist University, and remained in that capacity until retirement in 1952. At different times, while the Board of Trustees of S.M.U. waited to fill the vacancy of vice-president, or president of the University, Hawk substituted in these capacities.

From 1922 to 1944, he was delegate to seven GENERAL CONFERENCES, the UNITING CONFERENCE, and later to two JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES. Other responsible duties laid upon him were: president of the General Board of Church Extension, chairman of the Executive Committee of the United Texas Drys, and president of the Methodist Association of Theological Schools. In early 1963, Dr. J. D. QUILLIAN, JR. invited Hawk to return to the Perkins School and have an office as "advisor to the dean." This he did "closing his rich life as teacher, preacher, dean and consultant to young preachers," as his colleague W. W. Ward put it. He died suddenly in Dallas on Oct. 11, 1963.

HAWK, JOHN CRISMON (1878-1946), American minister and missionary, was born near Blountsville, Tenn., on March 12, 1878, and was educated at EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE and VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. He married Miss Jean Buckhanon of Glade Springs, Va., and they had four children, one of whom died in infancy. He went as a missionary to CHINA in 1905, and served in Harbin, Manchuria. He was presiding elder of every district in China and director of evangelism and social and hospital work.

When the Japanese invaded China he remained at his post to care for refugees. When Pearl Harbor was bombed in 1941, Hawk and his wife were interned at Wuhu until 1943, when they returned to the United States. They intended to return to China, but he died on April 5, 1946, in the Lee Memorial Hospital at Marion, Va.

HAWKINS, HAROLD LAWES (1897-), Australian minister, was born in MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA in 1897, was educated at Queen's College, University of Melbourne and ordained in the Methodist Church, St. Louis, U.S.A. in 1917, after which he served with the Methodist Church in Victoria, Australia.

In the Second World War he saw service with the A.I.F. and the American Red Cross. Since 1952 he has been the superintendent of the Leichhardt Methodist Mission in NEW SOUTH WALES. Because of his work for senior citizens he was awarded the Order of the British Empire. In America he was honored by CENTRAL COLLEGE, Fayette, Mo., with the honorary D.D. degree.

Through his organizing ability, Leichhardt has become a unique center of specialized service and at a cost of over $2,000,000 has established the following institutions: Leichhardt House, Annesley House, Annesley Hostel and the Harold Hawkins Court which house able-bodied senior citizens; also Werona Convalescent Home and the Aldersgate Geriatric Hospital. A feature of the Mission is the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES which employs many physically handicapped citizens.

HAWKINS, JOHN CLINTON (1903-), American layman and church executive, was born in St. Louis, Mo., on Sept. 25, 1903. He was the son of Charles O. and Alretta (Hardinger) Hawkins. He became interested in Y.M.C.A. work in St. Louis and eventually became the national program chairman of the Y.M.C.A.'s, 1956-57; then president of the National Council of that organization in the United States, 1958-59; also he has served as chairman of the National Board of the Y.M.C.A.'s in the United States since 1960; and was a member of the executive committee of the World Alliance of the Y.M.C.A.'s in GENEVA, Switzerland; of the World Council of the International Y.M.C.A. meeting in Kassel, Germany, in 1957, in Geneva in 1961, and in Gotemba, Japan, in 1965. In business he was the branch manager of a strong business concern in St. Louis, Mo. He married Marguerite L. Hartman on Jan. 2, 1926, and they had three daughters.

Hawkins became a member of the Board of Publication of The Methodist Church and was the lay leader of the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE of that church, 1948-58. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1948, '52, '56, '60, and '64, and chairman of the lay activities of the South Central Jurisdiction, 1952-56. CENTRAL COLLEGE, Fayette, Mo., awarded him the L.H.D. degree and George Williams College in Chicago, Ill., the LL.D. He has been a member of the United Churchmen of America and was the national president of that organization, 1954-57. He continues to reside in St. Louis.

HAY, SAMUEL ROSS (1865-1944), American bishop, was born at Decaturville, Tenn., Oct. 15, 1865, the son of William and Martha (England) Hay. His father was a member of the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE and his grandfather was a local preacher who came to America from IRELAND. Young Hay was educated at SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY (Texas). Later that school awarded him the D.D. degree, and CENTENARY (Louisiana) and SOUTHERN (FLORIDA) gave him the LL.D. He was twice married, first to Della Binford, June 11, 1889, and to Margaret Culick, Aug. 21, 1900. He had two sons by the first marriage and one daughter by the second. One son, Horace, is a member of the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE.

Hay was licensed to preach in 1886, and was ordained DEACON in 1889 and ELDER in 1893. He joined the North Texas Conference in 1887 and was under appointment as a traveling preacher for thirty-five years. In that time he served fifteen churches and three districts in five annual conferences and three states. However, all but two years of his ministry was in Texas. He served three districts—Dallas, Fort Worth, and Houston—two years each. His appointments were: First Church, Paris, junior preacher, 1887; Lamar Avenue, Paris, 1888; Oak Cliff, Dallas, 1889-90; Abilene, 1891; Trinidad, Colorado, 1892; Belton, 1893-94; Vernon, 1895-97; Corsicana, 1898-99; Shearn Memorial, Houston, 1900-03; Houston District, 1904-05; Centenary, St. Louis, Missouri, 1906; First Church, Beaumont, 1907; Fort Worth District, 1908-09; St. Paul's, Houston, 1910-13; First Church, Dallas, 1914-15; Dallas District, 1916-17; Amarillo, 1918; and First Church, Houston, 1919-21. He was elected bishop in 1922.

Hay was a delegate to five GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1906-22, and two ECUMENICAL CONFERENCES, 1911 and 1931. He was a member of the Board of Church Extension, 1910-32, and President of the Board of Missions (MES), 1932-34. The 1930 General Conference sent him to MEXICO to help set up the autonomous Methodist Church in that country. In 1930-34 he served as a member of the Commission which prepared the hymnal for the three branches of American Methodism. It was said that "Sam Hay," as he was familiarly called, was a "Texan, rough-and-ready, who ruled with a strong hand." Withal he had a sense of humor, and stories concerning him and his type of administration are still current in ALABAMA and FLORIDA, over which conferences he presided for the quadrennium immediately preceding his retirement in 1938. He died in Houston, Texas, Feb. 4, 1944.

HAY BAY, Canada. Construction of the first Methodist church in central CANADA began in May 1792, at Hay Bay near Kingston, Upper Canada. At that time, WILLIAM LOSEE was the circuit preacher, and probably at his instance a group of subscribers was gathered in February 1792. The resulting building was a rectangular frame structure 30 by 36 feet with a gallery. It appears to have been opened in the latter part of 1792.

HAY BAY CHURCH, ADOLPHOUSTOWN, ONTARIO

From 1792 until 1835, this church was in continuous use for Methodist services. Near it was held, in 1805, the first CAMP MEETING in Canada, in which HENRY RYAN, WILLIAM CASE and NATHAN BANGS took prominent parts. In 1835, the old church was reconstructed and enlarged and was used thereafter until 1860. At this point the building became obsolete, and was sold but fortunately was not destroyed.

Despite considerable interest in this historic edifice, it was not regained by the Methodist Church until 1910. In that year, a board of trustees appointed by the General Conference purchased the building and the land adjacent to it, and effected its restoration. Two years later, on Aug. 21, the official reopening service was held; on this occasion, Chancellor Burwash of Victoria University related the history of the church and its loyalist founders.

At Union in 1925, the Hay Bay Church became the property of The United Church of Canada and was placed under trustees responsible to the Bay of Quinte Conference. Under their fostering care, the church has been improved and has become the focus of an annual pilgrimage in August. It remains, as one said in 1892, "a visible embodiment of a hundred years of our history as a distinct people in this land."

HAYES, DOREMUS ALMY (1863-1936), American preacher and theological professor, was born May 17, 1863, at Russeluth, Ohio. He graduated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY with Phi Beta Kappa honors, A.B., 1884; M.A., 1886. The BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY granted him the S.T.B. degree in 1887. He studied abroad at the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin. He received the Ph.D. in 1889, and S.T.D. in 1906 from BOSTON UNIVERSITY.

On July 28, 1887, he married Hester Juvenal, to whom one son, James Juvenal, was born.

Following the completion of his academic and professional training, he served one year as pastor of the M. E. Church at San Leandro, Calif.; then for three years as professor of Greek Language and Literature at the UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC; and three more years as pastor at Napa, Calif. He became professor of Biblical Theology at ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, Denver, Colo., in 1895.

Hayes was elected professor of the English Bible at Garrett Biblical Institute (now GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY) in 1896. As professor of New Testament Interpretation, he taught at Garrett until 1934. For twenty years he acted as librarian.

Inevitably such a creative spirit as Hayes found an outlet in the written word—partly as a means of extending his classroom work but also to express that for which there was too little time in the teaching process. In addition to articles written for professional journals, dictionaries and encyclopedias, Hayes published a total of fifteen books. Some of these are: Paul and His Epistles; John and His Writings; The Most Beautiful Book Ever Written (Luke); The Resurrection Fact, and a series on the Heights of Christian Love—Unity, Living, and Devotion.

The wide range of his interests may be noted by the societies to which he belonged. Some of these were: Society of Biblical Research, The Religious Education Association, The American Peace Society, The American Institute of Civics, and the Chicago Theological Faculty Union, of which society he served as president for one term.

Hayes was a fascinating teacher, though his methods would cause a present-day teacher or student to smile. His lectures were written out meticulously, and read with preciseness, but with enthusiasm as well. The lecture of one day was reviewed in a quiz at the beginning of class on the following day. The final examination, from which students who had fared well in the quiz periods were excused, called for a rather formal repetition point by point of some of the lectures. Despite its mechanical quality, his students have found that much of what these lectures covered remains across the years. He threaded his way confidently through all the maze created by New Testament scholarship, especially in the heady days of Higher Criticism. He had a reason for the faith that was in him—as critics in the classroom or elsewhere throughout the church found out quickly.

His love for the Greek language knew no bounds. He looked forward to the possibility of continuing classes in Greek in the "heavenly world" with the confessed hope that the Master himself might drop in occasionally.

Charles Reynolds Brown, for many years dean of Yale Divinity School, wrote of Hayes, who was his classmate, calling him "one of the most spiritually minded men I have ever known."

Doremus Almy Hayes died May 20, 1936.

HORACE GREELEY SMITH

HAYES, HELEN ELIZABETH THOMSON, "Sister Nellie," (1874-1950), NEW ZEALAND Methodist deaconess, was born on the Isle of Man, and came to New Zealand about 1900. In 1908 at the Young Women's Bible Class convention in Palmerston North, she was dedicated with Sister Julia Benjamin, late of the Papua Mission field, to pioneer deaconess work among the Maori people. Both were trained as nurses and later opened a training institute for Maori girls at Okaiawa.

The first girl to be trained was Huia Tuatini, a Wang-anui princess, who later entered the deaconess order. Sister Nellie learned the language, etiquette, and customs of the Maori people, and accustomed herself to their foods. Until the Hawera people provided her with a horse and gig, all her traveling was done by bicycle. Overwork caused a breakdown in health and her retirement from Maori work in 1917. Until 1920 she was deaconess to Wesley Church, Hawera, when she resigned from the deaconess order and subsequently married L. J. Williams of Hawera.

During the 1918 influenza epidemic, Sister Nellie established an emergency hospital in Hawera, where she nursed scores of Maori people under canvas. Largely through her advocacy, a petition was presented to Parliament supported by the Bible classes of all denominations, which resulted in the compulsory registration of births, deaths, and marriages among the Maori people.

HAYES, JULIANA GORDON (1813-1895), American mission leader of the M. E. Church, South, was born at Font Hill, Northumberland Co., Va., May 3, 1813, and married Rev. Thomas C. Hayes on March 9, 1843. Taking an active interest in the affairs of the church, she was appointed president of the General Executive Association of the M. E. Church, South, on May 23, 1878, by the COLLEGE OF BISHOPS. This organization was looked upon with suspicion at that time by the leaders of the Church in the South who had not been accustomed to women taking such a prominent part in the church. Mrs. Hayes managed to lay the foundation of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M. E. Church, South, firmly during her tenure. She was sixty-five years old when appointed to undertake this supervisory work and she traveled continually over the South in its interests. Her husband died on Sept. 26, 1858. He was a member of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. Mrs. Hayes enjoyed the high regard both of the bishops and other leaders of the M. E. Church, South, and her work was greatly appreciated. She died June 2, 1895, in Baltimore, Md.

HAYES, LUCY WARE WEBB (1831-1889), wife of the nineteenth president of the United States of America and a member of the Methodist Church, was born on Aug. 28, 1831 in Chillicothe, Ohio, to James and Maria Webb. Although her parents were members of a Presbyterian Church, she united with the M. E. Church while she was attending Wesleyan Female College, which later became part of OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. Following her graduation she married a young lawyer, Rutherford Birchard Hayes, on Dec. 30, 1852. They had seven sons and one daughter, but three of the sons died in infancy.

Rutherford Hayes left his law practice to serve as a major-general in the Civil War. When he was wounded, Lucy brought the family to the encampment where she nursed him and gave help and comfort to others among the wounded. After the war, Rutherford served a term in the U. S. Congress and three terms as governor of Ohio. In 1876, he was elected president of the United States over his opponent, Samuel J. Tilden, in a disputed election which finally went to Hayes by one electoral vote.

When they entered the White House, the Hayeses chose to attend the nearby FOUNDRY M. E. CHURCH. President Hayes attended regularly with Mrs. Hayes but never became a member of any church. A strong believer in the temperance movement, Mrs. Hayes acquired the nickname

"Lemonade Lucy" because of her insistence that only lemonade or other soft drinks be served at White House receptions.

On June 25, 1889, Lucy Webb Hayes died at their estate, Spiegel Grove, in Fremont, Ohio. The funeral service was conducted by Lorenzo Dow McCabe, who thirty-seven years earlier had read the marriage service for Lucy and Rutherford Hayes. She was buried on the grounds of the estate where three years later she was joined by her husband.

HAYES, SOUTH DAKOTA, U.S.A. Hayes United Methodist Church is thirty-five miles west of the Missouri River and Pierre, South Dakota's capital, on the old historic trail to Deadwood in the Black Hills, scene of the 1876 gold rush. During the lush ranching era of the '90s and the "naughty noughts," Hayes was a rough cowboy town. In 1909 when homesteaders, sometimes called "honyockers," were setting up tarpaper shacks over the prairies, twelve Methodists met in a schoolhouse to organize under leadership of C. M. Weirauch, himself a homesteader. They purchased a small building the next year and it served until 1922 when they erected a modest but attractive church. The building is not in town but some three miles west. Local folklore has it that women members, who cast the majority vote, thought that location would offer fewer temptations for the abstention of males during services.

Named "The Little Brown Church on the Trail," it recalls the much older "Little Brown Church in the Vale" at Nashua, Iowa, made famous by a rhythmic Sunday school song of that name. As ranching and homesteading have given way to diversified ranch-farm economy, membership has recently stabilized at approximately one hundred. But the church has a wide following throughout the countryside with a reputation as a Gretna Green for parson-school couples.

HAYGOOD, ATTICUS GREENE (1839-1896), American bishop, educator, and editor, was born Nov. 19, 1839, in Watkinsville, Ga. In 1852 his family moved to ATLANTA where his father, Greene B. Haygood, became a member of the bar and helped found Trinity Church. Atticus Haygood received most of his education from his mother. He entered the sophomore class of Emory College in 1856. He was licensed an exhorter on May 8, 1858, and was licensed to preach four months later. In June 1859, he became junior preacher on the Oxford Circuit, and the same month he married Mary Fletcher Yarbrough. He was graduated from Emory on July 29, 1859, and was admitted on trial by the GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

Except for a short term as CHAPLAIN of the Fifteenth Regiment of Georgia Infantry in 1861, and another brief tour as missionary chaplain with Longstreet's Corps in Tennessee (1863-64), he remained in the pastorate until 1870. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South in 1870 elected him Sunday school secretary and first editor of Sunday school publications. At NASHVILLE, he pioneered in the preparation of attractive and effective literature. In 1873 he became associate secretary of the BOARD OF MISSIONS, with the editorship of the monthly magazine, Our Mission. Mrs. Haygood's health required that the family return to GEORGIA in 1874 and Haygood resigned his editorial duties.

In 1868 he was chosen a trustee of WESLEYAN Female COLLEGE at MACON, Ga., and in 1874 he was made a trustee of Emory. He became the eighth president of Emory in 1876. In 1878, he was back in editorial work with The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, which was the official organ of both Georgia Conferences and the FLORIDA CONFERENCE. In 1880 he was named fraternal messenger to the General Conference of the M. E. Church. He was further honored by appointment as delegate to the ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE in London in 1881.

He was elected bishop in 1882, but he declined ordination. He then accepted appointment on a part-time basis as agent for the Slater Fund, which had been set up to aid Negro education in the South. In 1884, he resigned the presidency of Emory and became full-time agent for the Slater Fund. He had been criticized at Emory for introducing such vocational subjects as telegraphy, book-keeping, and manual arts, but his administration saved the college from economic ruin and set its face towards a new era.

In 1889 he accepted the presidency of a projected university for girls at Sheffield, Ala., to be financed by the Sheffield Land Company. The company did not fulfill its promises, and within five months, he was again elected to the episcopacy and assigned to CALIFORNIA, the fourth Georgian to be so honored. He accepted, and resigned his college presidency and the position as agent for the Slater Fund. His principal work as bishop was to strengthen Methodism in California. Haygood died on Jan. 18, 1896, and was buried at Oxford, Ga.

His most significant accomplishments were in education. He pioneered Negro education at a time and place where such work was unpopular. PAINE COLLEGE in Augusta, Ga. is a monument to his work.

In 1881, he published his views on the education of the Negro in a book, Our Brother In Black, which, according to H. D. Parish, did more than any other work of the post-bellum era "to bring both sections sanity in thinking concerning the Negro problem." He exerted a significant influence for progressive causes, even though his position was often unpopular. He spoke against the convict lease system, and had some influence in the passage of a six-month school law for Georgia children. He fought for federal aid to public schools, was an ardent prohibitionist, and an outspoken opponent of lynching.

HAYGOOD, LAURA A. (1845-1900), American missionary to CHINA and sister of Bishop ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, was born in Watkinsville, Ga., on Oct. 14, 1845, but spent most of her youth in Atlanta, Ga. She entered Wesleyan Female College at Macon, when she was seventeen years old, and finished the course work in only two years. Meanwhile her father had died, and the Haygoods, driven from Atlanta by Sherman's army, were living at Oxford, Ga. Here at the Palmer Institute from 1862 to 1866, Laura began her teaching career.

In 1866 she opened a private school for girls in Atlanta. This she conducted until 1872, when she became an instructor in the new Girls' High School; in 1877 she became the principal. Along with her teaching, she took an active part in church and home missionary activities. When in 1884 there was a call for a woman of experience and administrative ability to help direct the work for women in Shanghai by the Woman's Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, Miss Haygood offered her services. Of massive frame, great energy, and accustomed to directing others, she was well fitted by her training and character for her work.

Even though she was almost forty years old, she began to learn the language. "The Chinese," she wrote in a letter home, "pay great deference to my age and size and spectacles." She was put in charge of the Clopton School for girls which she developed into a normal school to train Chinese girls for teaching. She also organized a system of day schools. Her most memorable achievement, however, was the establishment of the McTyeire Home and School. The home was a place where new missionaries could come and learn the language, and receive training for their work. The school was designed to give Chinese girls a broad education, both in Chinese and Western learning. In May, 1889, she succeeded YOUNG J. ALLEN as agent for the Shanghai district of the Woman's Board. Her health required her to spend two years in the United States (1894-96). Upon her return to China, she became agent for the entire work of the Woman's Board in China. Illness brought her activities practically to a close in the summer of 1899. Refusing to return to the States, she died on April 29, 1900, and was buried in Shanghai. The Laura Haygood Home and School in Soochow was established as a memorial to her.

HAZENFIELD, HAROLD H. (1911-), American E.U.B. minister and editor, was born at Brownstown, Ill., Aug. 26, 1911, the son of Arthur M. and Pearl Hazenfield. He received the B.A. degree from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE, Naperville, Ill., the B.D. from EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of Naperville, and an honorary D.D. from WESTMAR COLLEGE, Le Mars, Iowa. He was ordained by the Indiana Conference of the Evangelical Church, in 1935, and served pastorates at Wolcottville, Ind.; Carmi, Ill.; and Indianapolis, Ind. (New York Street). He was conference superintendent, Indiana Conference, 1950-51, and served as associate editor of Sunday church school publications, 1951-58; and as executive editor from 1959-68. Dr. Hazenfield is active in the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, serving as chairman of the Graded Curriculum Committee and a member of the Administrative Committee of the Cooperative Curriculum Project.

In The United Methodist Church, Dr. Hazenfield became editor of Program Materials, Division of Interpretation, PROGRAM COUNCIL, and retained his membership with the North Indiana Conference.

KENNETH KRUEGER

HEAD, NELSON (1811-1902), American minister of the old BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, son of George and Mary Head, was born at Leesburg, Va., Feb. 3, 1811, and educated at Leesburg.

He joined the conference in 1834, and was ordained DEACON by Bishop HEDDING and ELDER by Bishop MORRIS. He transferred to the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1838, but returned to the Baltimore Conference in 1840.

Head became prominent in the Baltimore Conference, 1844 to 1848, by trying to get the Conference to join the southern branch of Methodism. Failing in this he withdrew from the Baltimore Conference and was received into the Virginia Conference which had gone with the Southern Church. He served several churches and one district in the Virginia Conference. After the Baltimore Conference came into the M. E. Church, South, in 1866. Head transferred back to it in 1868, and continued in active service until 1886.

Head's first wife was Margaret Morton, and they had two children. His second wife was Frances Meade, who was a solace to him as his health declined.

He was a trustee of Randolph-Macon College, and a member of the General Conference of 1866.

Head was a grave, but genial man, and a scriptural preacher. Many of his analyses of texts were surprisingly good. He was noted for his scholarship, exactness, punctuality and pastoral oversight of his church members. He could overflow with tenderness and shout the praises of God. He considered the conversion of sinners the chief work of his ministry, showing tender sympathy for the penitent. He preached and lived his religion.

He was a great sufferer during his last weeks but he continually said: "It is all bright—all bright." He died June 15, 1902.

HEALDTOWN INSTITUTION (South Africa), near Fort Beaufort, Cape Province, was founded in 1855 as part of Governor Sir George Grey's plan to civilize the African people by promoting public works, school and hospitals. Government aid was provided for an industrial institution at which instruction was given in such trades as wagon-making, shoemaking, smithing and carpentry. Until 1861 the governor of the Institution was JOHN AYLIFF, who had long been associated with the Fingo people whom it served. His successor, Gottlob Schreiner (father of the novelist Olive Schreiner and the Cape Premier W. P. Schreiner), was not enamoured of the administrative and educational aspects of the work; teachers followed one another in rapid succession; the government grant was withdrawn; and the institution was closed in 1865.

William Impey, who was WILLIAM SHAW'S son-in-law and his successor in the chair of the Grahamstown District, investigated the successful Seminary of the Free Church of Scotland at nearby Lovedale, and then reopened Healdtown in 1867 as a center for theological and teacher training. In following years it became one of the leading African educational centers in South Africa and the pattern for further Methodist ventures. Impey remained in charge until 1878. Among his successors, notable contributions were made by Richard Hornabrook (1890-98; 1903-17), J. M. Watkinson (1917-27); A. A. Wellington (1927-44), and E. W. Grant (1945-50).

The theological school proved a failure and was moved to Lesseyton in 1880. On the other hand the Teacher Training School was well established by George Baker (1866-75; 1879-83) and built up a fine reputation under W. R. Caley (1897-1932). Girls were admitted in 1898 when the Ayliff Institution at Peddie was discontinued. A high school course (providing academic instruction to matriculation level) was added in 1925, while a practicing school has provided primary education to many day scholars and practical experience for teachers in training. When the schools were taken over by the government in 1956 in terms of the Bantu Education Act of 1953, the Methodist Church retained control of the hostels. The acute problems of transition were ably handled by S. G. Pitts, who had become governor in 1951 and left in 1964 to become minister of the Central Church, Johannesburg. In 1967 the enrollment in the hostels was 761, comprising 356 boys and 405 girls. In addition there were 38 day scholars in the training and high schools and over 600 in the practicing school.

HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTRIES, BOARD OF (The United Methodist Church). The Uniting Conference of 1968 adopted this as the name for what has been known in The Methodist Church as the Board of Hospitals and Homes. Though this agency was known by this name from 1939 to 1968, helping and healing ministries have been a part of Methodist work even before the establishment of The Methodist Church. Dispensaries, child care services, social work with the widow, the fatherless, and the imprisoned, were among the health and welfare ministries of early Methodism.

This work, which was begun in England, was basic to Methodism's life from the start of the movement in America. While preachers and exhorters proclaimed high moral and spiritual standards in a rough and ready pioneer world, the hand of kindness and compassion was always stretched forth to minister to those whose lives were bent and broken. Because the needs of the children were especially crucial in the early colony of GEORGIA, GEORGE WHITEFIELD established the first Methodist health and welfare agency in America in the BETHESDA "orphans house" there.

From that beginning of Methodist child welfare service in 1741, other agencies have been established as the nation grew—until today there are three-score agencies for children and youth, affiliated with the Board of Health and Welfare Ministries. Fifteen and more similar agencies, formerly related to the Woman's Division of Christian Service, are now affiliated with the National Division of the BOARD OF MISSIONS. The scope of service offered by these agencies is broad and varied. Very few orphan children now live in these agencies, because orphan children are now usually adopted into normal families. Pre-school children are seldom found in these agencies because there is a broad recognition that normal young children should be living in a family setting, rather than in group care. Instead, these Methodist agencies for children and youth give care to children with special needs. Boys and girls whose families have been broken by tragedy and divorce, emotionally disturbed children, hurt and troubled youth of all types and stations now receive special services.

In 1850 an agency was established in NEW YORK CITY which was to be the first of many homes for aged persons under the auspices of the M. E. Church. The "Methodist Episcopal Church Home in the City of New York" opened its doors that year in a rented house, and twenty-three elderly people entered for care at $1.00 each per week. Still operating today, this agency was the forerunner of many agencies which were to follow. Today there are approximately 150 homes for the aging affiliated with the Board of Health and Welfare Ministries of The United Methodist Church.

The programs of these agencies have changed through the years as the needs of the persons served changed. Some Methodist agencies today render service primarily to the aged who are chronically ill; others to the indigent aged. Still others provide an atmosphere of a comfortable retirement where persons can find stimulating group life in a church-related home. There is a rapid movement today in these agencies attempting to serve the aged in the community as well as those who live in homes. A given agency with 100 residents may serve another 100 older persons who live independently in the nearby community with services which may meet dietary, medical, recreational and social needs.

The first hospital organized directly under Methodist sponsorship was the METHODIST HOSPITAL OF BROOKLYN, N. Y. Before organization in 1881, the organist of the M. E. Church in Stamford, Conn., was injured and died for lack of immediate and adequate care. The pastor of the church at once began an investigation of hospital resources in various American cities. He was convinced that the time had come when Methodists should enter the field of hospital service, and he published a provocative article in the Christian Advocate (New York). Starting with a gift of lots valued at $40,000 and $100,000 in cash, with the stipulation that the service shall be open to "Jew, Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, even an infidel on the same terms," after much labor and difficulties, the doors of the hospital opened Dec. 15, 1887. Today there are over eighty Methodist hospitals in America which as temples of healing say to the community, "In the name of Christ and The United Methodist Church, we care for you."

An important parallel movement in American Methodism during the latter half of the nineteenth century was the rise of the DEACONESS MOVEMENT. The involvement of these Methodist women in health and welfare agencies was central to their mission as these ministries unfolded in service to children, to the aged and in nursing and hospital care.

Through these same years there was the development of homes for business women in the cities of the land. Many of these were sponsored by the Methodist churches and rendered great service. However, with the passing of the years, patterns of life have changed, and there is not the great need for such residences today. In this time, when young women come to the cities for employment, they sometimes need structured, protective environment for a period of time. However, this is increasingly rare and the duration of their stay in such settings is usually limited to only that amount of time necessary to secure financial foundations with which to move into more independent apartment living.

With nearly 300 hospitals and homes affiliated with the Board of Health and Welfare ministries of The United Methodist Church, there is provided a constant opportunity to witness with Christian love and concern to the many persons who come to these agencies for care. In one given year, over 1,750,000 persons received such service. Each one faces a crisis, and each one is especially open to a witness of love and care.

In order to offer a ministry similar to that portrayed in the story of the Good Samaritan, the Church today faces the challenge of offering its love in the context of a highly complicated, scientific setting. The Annual Conferences are presently asking for a closer relationship on the part of the General Board with their helping and healing agencies.

In The United Methodist Church with the union of The Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren Church in 1968, the combined work of the two former Churches in this field was placed under the control of the Board of Health and Welfare Ministries of The United Methodist Church.

The Board is incorporated in the state of ILLINOIS with headquarters at EVANSTON in that state. The management of the board is vested in the Board of Directors and membership upon which is specified by disciplinary provisions, as also the work of the Board through its officers and executive committee. For the complete outline of the work and direction of this Board, the Discipline of 1968 may be referred to.

The work of the E.U.B connection will be indicated in the general presentation of that Church's life and work. At present, the pending correlation and combination of the work in this field on the part of the two former connections is not complete and therefore exact statistics may not be given. (For complete listing of hospitals and homes and kindred institutions under the sponsorship of The United Methodist Church, see the Appendix.)

HEARD, WILLIAM HENRY (1850-1937), an American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born a slave in Elbert County, Ga. on June 25, 1850. His early education was self acquired but he attended later the University of South Carolina, CLARK COLLEGE, Atlanta University (Ga.), Reformed Episcopal Seminary (Pa.), and the University of Pennsylvania. The honorary D.D. degree was conferred upon him by ALLEN (South Carolina) and WILBERFORCE (Ohio) Universities and the L.L.D. by Campbell College (Miss.). Ordained deacon in 1881 and elder in 1882, he held pastorates in SOUTH CAROLINA, PENNSYLVANIA, DELAWARE, LIBERIA (Africa), NEW YORK and GEORGIA. He served a term as presiding elder and as a general officer. In 1880 he was elected to the South Carolina State Legislature and in 1895 he was appointed United States Minister Resident and Counsel General to Liberia, Africa. Heard was elected to the episcopacy in 1908 and served the Fourteenth, Eighth, Third and First Episcopal District Areas. He died in 1937.

HEARN, EBENEZER (1794-1862), pioneer American minister and one of the four original presiding elders of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE, was born Sept. 25, 1794, in Montgomery County, N. C. He moved with his parents to Wilson County, Tenn., where he was converted in 1807. In 1813 he enlisted and fought in the Creek and Indian War under Andrew Jackson. In 1815 he was licensed to preach and in 1816 joined the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE which then served north Alabama. In 1818 he was appointed to the Butthatchie Circuit in the upper valley of the Tombigbee River, and he extended his circuit to Columbus, Miss., being the first preacher ever there. In 1820 he transferred to the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, then serving south Alabama, and was instrumental in forming a circuit of seven hundred miles.

Ebenezer Hearn was a colorful character whose moves as narrated in Lazenby's History of Methodism in Alabama are very interesting. He served as presiding elder of the Alabama, Cahaba, and Tombigbee Districts in the Mississippi Conference, and later was the presiding elder of the Mobile, Irwinton (Eufala), Talladega, Gadsden, and Montgomery Districts of the Alabama Conference. He served as agent for Centenary Institute and LA GRANGE COLLEGE, and as a missionary to the slaves. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1832.

Hearn died on Dec. 24, 1862, at Montgomery, Ala., as he was traveling by train from Annual Conference at Auburn. He was buried at Camden.

HECK, BARBARA RUCKLE (1734-1804), American and Canadian Methodist lay organizer, referred to as the "Mother of Methodism in the New World," was born in 1734 at Ruckle Hill, Ballygarrane, Limerick, IRELAND, in the community settled by refugees from the German Palatinate. She grew up in a Methodist environment and was converted at eighteen. In 1760, she married Paul Heck and set out with a group of Irish Palatines for America, arriving Aug. 11, 1760, in NEW YORK where they settled.

In their new environment these emigrants seemed to lose their zeal for religion. It was Barbara Heck, who, in deep dismay at the spiritual poverty apparent in New York, needed PHILIP EMBURY into forming a Methodist class in 1766. Under his revitalized leadership, and with Barbara Heck's relentless prodding, the first Methodist meetinghouse in America was built on John Street circa 1768, and dedicated on October 30.

In 1770 the Hecks moved with some of their fellow Palatines to the Camden Valley, near Lake Champlain, where again a Methodist class was initiated. During the American Revolutionary War the Heck family suffered much and finally fled to CANADA in 1778, settling in Montreal, where once again they gave active leadership in establishing a Methodist class. In 1785, along with other Loyalists the Heck family took up land in Augusta township, not far from the present city of Brockville, Ontario. There, true to her providential mission, Barbara Heck became the founder of the first Methodist class in Upper Canada. That those foundations were well laid is borne out by the religious history of Augusta township, where devotion, revivals, and stable organization continued for a century.

The Heck house became a center of Methodist activities. Probably in 1799 the Heck family moved to a new site on the St. Lawrence River and began to construct the famous "Heck House," a rubble stone structure which was dismantled in April 1963. It is being restored by the Barbara Heck Foundation as an Ecumenical Christian Center on a site five miles east of Gananoque and about thirty-five miles west of its original location. The Heck Foundation, centered at Gananoque, is engaged in extensive historical research.

Paul Heck died in 1795 at the age of sixty-five. Barbara died Aug. 17, 1804, at the age of seventy. Both are buried in the Old Blue Church Cemetery on the bank of the St. Lawrence River near their original home.

HECK MARKER, BLUE CHURCH CEMETERY, PRESCOTT, ONTARIO

Barbara Heck possessed physical beauty, mental acuteness, and deep piety. She is reported to have been of thoughtful and serious habits of mind—calm and self-controlled, quiet but resolute. In spite of her assurance of salvation, she had intervals of sadness and severe mental conflict from which she was lifted by reading her Bible and by habitual prayer.

ABEL STEVENS has noted that eighteenth-century Methodism was rich in female characters. Barbara won her high place in his estimation because she had the capacity to arouse lethargic and degraded people of mixed backgrounds to an awareness of religious truth.

HECKMAN, EDGAR ROHRER (1875-1948), American minister, was born at Ennisville, Pa., Feb. 11, 1875, the son of the Rev. Isaac and Annie Rohrer Heckman. He was educated at Williamsport Dickinson Seminary, and at DICKINSON COLLEGE, Carlisle, Pa. (A.B., 1897; M.A., 1898; and D.D., 1917).

In 1898 he was admitted into the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church and served as college instructor, pastor of eight important charges, superintendent of the Altoona and Harrisburg Districts, and from 1936 to 1946 was superintendent of The Methodist Home for the Aged, at Tyrone, Pa.

Seven times he was elected a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his church and was also a member of the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939. In 1920 and 1924 he was an assistant secretary, and from 1928 through 1944 he was first assistant secretary of the General Conference. He was associate general secretary of The Uniting Conference of 1939. From 1924 to 1948 he gave conspicuous service as a member of the General Board of Pensions and Relief (later the BOARD OF PENSIONS). He was recognized as an authority, at various conference levels, on the pension program of Methodism.

A few hours after giving an address at the session of the Central Pennsylvania Annual Conference on the occasion of the semi-centennial of his membership in that body, he was instantly and tragically killed in an automobile accident which also took the life of his wife.

HEDDING, ELIJAH (1780-1852), American bishop, was born at White Plains, Dutchess Co., N. Y., on June 7,

ELIJAH HEDDING

1780. When he was eleven years old, his parents moved to Starksborough, Vt., then a frontier settlement. He was converted at eighteen under the preaching of BENJAMIN ABBOTT, and became an exhorter in 1799. He took the place of the noted and eccentric LORENZO DOW on the Essex circuit, and after that served the Plattsburg and Cambridge circuits.

In 1801 he was admitted on trial in the NEW YORK CONFERENCE. He was ordained a DEACON by Bishop WHATCOAT and an ELDER by Bishop ASBURY. He was sent first to the Plattsburg circuit and then to the Cambridge and Bridgewater circuits.

In 1805, due to a change in boundaries, he became a member of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE. His appointments were: Hanover, Barre, Vershire, BOSTON, Nantucket, Lynn, Portland, and the New Hampshire, New London, Portland and Boston Districts.

On Jan. 10, 1810, he married Miss Lucy Blish of Gilsum, N. H. While in Boston in 1823 he helped establish Zion's Herald.

He was a member or bishop in all the GENERAL CONFERENCES after 1808. In 1808 his moderating influence helped to carry through the proposal for a delegated General Conference. He was favorable to the proposal to make the presiding eldership an elective office, though his views later changed. He opposed the extreme abolitionist Methodists of New England.

He was elected bishop in 1824 and in the office traveled in most of the states. He published several sermons and addresses in pamphlet form, among them his famed Discourse on the Administration of the Discipline, in 1842. He is considered one of the great constitutional lawyers of American Methodism.

He died on April 9, 1852, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and was buried there. Hedding College at Abingdon, Ill., was named for him in 1856.

O. G. HEDSTROM

HEDSTROM, OLAF GUSTAV (1803-1877), Swedish missionary in SWEDEN and the United States, who was converted in 1829 and entered the Methodist ministry in 1835, when he joined the New York Conference on trial.

He was assigned to the BETHEL SHIP in 1845 and remained there as the Bethel Ship Society's pastor until his death on May 5, 1877.

HEEDE, ELEVINE (1820-1883), Norwegian Methodist, was born at Arendal in 1820. Her father was a watchmaker, and she was an only child. On the occasion of a study trip to FRANCE, she stayed with the family of a Wesleyan minister and was converted to God. Having completed her studies, she became a teacher at the Arendal Girls' School, and occasionally visited Methodist meetings. Among the people she met there was MARTIN HANSEN. He suggested that she move to OSLO and continue her work there, and she responded to Hansen's request.

In 1874 she was appointed teacher of Norwegian and English at the theological school, and at the same time she became editor of the Sunday school magazine. Her most significant work was Stons Harpe, a book of chorales, which is still in use. She wrote and partly translated from the English and the German at least two hundred hymns and chorales. Many of her chorales have also become incorporated in the collections of chorales used by other churches.

She died on May 6, 1883.

EILERT BERNHARDT

HEIDT, JOHN WESLEY (1841-1909), American minister and educator, was born at Macon, Ga., on July 12, 1841, the second son of Emanuel and Frances Grayson Heidt. He received his education from private tutors and from Springfield Academy. In September 1856, he entered the sophomore class of Emory College at Oxford, Ga., where he was a classmate of ATTICUS HAYGOOD and YOUNG J. ALLEN. He graduated in 1859 with distinction.

After teaching a year, Heidt entered the Law School of the University of Georgia and graduated in 1861. He then enlisted in the Confederate Army in the Chatham Artillery. Governor Joseph Brown relieved him from military service by appointing him Solicitor General of what was then the Eastern Circuit. On June 23, 1864, he married Miss Eliza Villard. Six children were born to them.

In 1866, Heidt determined to enter the Methodist ministry, and he became a member of the old GEORGIA CONFERENCE. When the Conference was divided that same year into NORTH and SOUTH GEORGIA, he adhered to North Georgia, and thus began a long and varied career of distinguished service to the church. Six times he served as presiding elder. From 1881 to 1885 he was president of LA GRANGE FEMALE COLLEGE at La Grange, Ga. While serving as pastor of Trinity Church in ATLANTA, Ga., in 1881, he was chosen by the Georgia Senate as chaplain. Heidt left La Grange and became Regent of the SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in Texas. He was honored with a B.L. from the University of Georgia and a D.D. from Trinity College, North Carolina.

Heidt was a member of four GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. E. Church, South, a delegate to the International Sunday School Conference in Toronto, Canada, in 1881, and a delegate to the ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE in Washington, D.C., in 1891. For many years he was a trustee of La Grange College and WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE, and president of the Board of Trustees of REINHARDT COLLEGE at Waleska, Ga., all of which were Methodist colleges.

Heidt succeeded Atticus Haygood as secretary of the North Georgia Conference and served as such for thirty-three years, longer than any other man. At every General Conference that he attended, he was chosen one of its secretaries. In 1901 and 1902, he was associate editor and business manager of the Georgia Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

At the time of his death, Heidt was presiding elder of the Augusta District of the North Georgia Conference. He died in Atlanta, Ga., on Jan. 23, 1909. Few men have served the Church so long and so well in so many different positions.

HEIL, WILLIAM FRANKLIN (1857-1930), American Evangelical bishop, was born at Berlinville, Pa., on May 1, 1857. Licensed to preach by the East Pennsylvania Conference of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION in 1880, he was elected presiding elder ten years later. His polemical publications during the internal struggle in his denomination aligned him with the faction that created The UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH in 1894. Heil served the latter body as bishop (1902-10), presiding elder (1910-18), and bishop once again (1918-22). In the latter period he became a leader in the minority in his denomination which refused reunion with the Evangelical Association and served as bishop (1922-26) of the resultant EVANGELICAL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. He died in Allentown, Pa., on Nov. 6, 1930, preceded in death by his wife, Annie Louisa Reed Heil, but survived by their two daughters. His emphasis on practical theology made Heil a champion of the Social Gospel in his denomination.

HEINA, EDWIN (1876-1951), American E.U.B. layman and lifelong member of Calvary Church, Cleveland, Ohio, was born on Oct. 14, 1876. He became known as "the fifth bishop in The Evangelical Church" due to the time he invested in general church interests and his trustworthy judgment on so many matters of import. For many years he was a member of the Board of Missions of his church and its executive committee. He served a number of terms on the Boards of Publication and the Pension Fund. He was treasurer of the Forward Movement, handling approximately $2,500,000 for the Evangelical Association. Thirty-five times he was lay member of the Ohio Annual Conference and eight times a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1919-46. He was active also in the Laymen's Missionary Movement. In his local church he was financial secretary and treasurer for more than twenty-five years. Later he was president of the Board of Trustees and Chairman of the Stewards.

Heina was born in Cleveland of parentage who came from Czechoslovakia. His formal education consisted of grade school and high school. He never attended college. He advanced in the Perfection Oil Stove Co., Cleveland, to become factory manager in charge of production, eventually treasurer, and finally vice-president of the company. At his death he was a member of the Board of Directors and of the Executive Committee which met weekly. This firm later became known as the Cleveland Metal Products Company.

He was married to Nellie Bennett who was responsible for his becoming a tither. Out of their largesse they gave thousands of dollars, particularly to the missions work of the church, as well as a $15,000 pipe organ to Calvary Church, Cleveland. Their two daughters both married ministers.

Heina died March 29, 1951. He is buried in Lakeview Cemetery, Cleveland, Ohio.

HAROLD R. HEININGER

HEININGER, HAROLD RICKEL (1895-), American E. U. B. minister and bishop, was born at Lima, Ohio, Aug. 13, 1895, to Rev. and Mrs. John Wesley Heininger. A grandfather and two uncles as well as his father served in the ministry. Calvary Church, CLEVELAND, Ohio licensed Harold Heininger in August 1919. The Ohio Conference of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION ordained him deacon in 1921, and he received the elder's orders from the same conference in 1923.

Western Reserve University conferred upon him a B.A. degree in 1917. Then he was drafted and served fifteen months during World War I, rising to the rank of First Lieutenant. Following studies at EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, he received the B.D. degree in 1921. After two years at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, he received the S.T.M. degree in 1923. The same year he became Professor of New Testament Exegesis and Interpretation, Evangelical Theological Seminary, continuing his graduate studies at the University of Chicago, from which school he obtained the Ph.D. degree in 1933.

On his birthday, Aug. 13, 1925, he was married to Erma Martin of Webster, N. Y. Following the death of its president, Evangelical Theological Seminary inaugurated Dr. Heininger in 1940 as its administrator. He served as president until The EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN GENERAL CONFERENCE elected him bishop in 1954 and assigned him to the Northwestern Area, where he served until his retirement in 1969. NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE conferred an honorary LL.D. in 1955.

Bishop Heininger made three episcopal visits to Europe and one to Southeast Asia. He was delegate in 1937 to the Conference on Life and Work, Oxford, England; to WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Amsterdam (1948) and Evanston (1954). He was president of the MINNESOTA Council of Churches for one term and for a period held the same office for the Chicago Theological Faculties Union. With retirement he and his wife returned to Naperville, Ill. to live. The new Academic Center, an assembly hall at the Evangelical Theological Seminary, was named in his honor as Heininger Hall.

HEINMILLER, CARL (1892-), American E. U. B. minister and administrator. Except for a few years, Carl Heinmiller's ministry was devoted to the reformulation and expansion of the missionary operations of his denomination. Under his discerning and wise leadership, mission structures, programs and relationships were adopted marking a new and fruitful chapter in denominational history.

Born in a minister's home, Carl Heinmiller turned to the Christian ministry after preparing himself professionally for a career in forest engineering. Following graduation from EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Naperville, Ill., he served first as pastor, then as conference superintendent in the Oregon-Washington Conference of The Evangelical Church.

From the superintendency he was called by the General Conference in 1934 to be Field Secretary of the denominational Missionary Society. In 1943 he was elected Executive Secretary and treasurer of the Missionary Society. With the union of United Brethren and Evangelicals into the E. U. B. Church in 1946, he was elected executive secretary of the Board of Missions and director of World Missions, and in this position he continued until his resignation and retirement in 1961.

Through his efforts the missionary structure of the denominations was immeasurably strengthened. He was obliged to cope with the multiplying problems of mission administration occasioned by the expansion of communist power in Asia and by World War II in Europe and Japan. At the same time new undertakings were initiated in South America.

In his early retirement he taught in the Inter-American University, San German, PUERTO RICO. His membership is with the PACIFIC NORTHWEST (EUB) CONFERENCE.

PAUL H. ELLER

HEINMILLER, GOTTLIEB (1853-1922), American Evangelical bishop, was born in Albany, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1853. At the age of fifteen he moved with his parents to Iowa, where in his seventeenth year he was converted and felt the call to preach. He attended NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE in Naperville, Ill. in 1872, and was licensed to preach by the Iowa Conference, Evangelical Association, in 1874.

For reasons of health he went to GERMANY in 1878 where he joined the Germany Conference of his Church.

Serving several pastorates, he became director of the Evangelical Theological Seminary in Reutlingen, serving also as a presiding elder and the editor of the Evangelische Botschafter. Representing his conference at the 1891 GENERAL CONFERENCE in Indianapolis, Ind., he was elected editor of the German language paper of his denomination, DER CHRISTLICHE BOTSCHAFTER, with residence in Cleveland, Ohio for the next twenty-four years. The General Conference of 1915 elected him bishop, and he held this office until his death at Cleveland, Ohio, 1922, a few days following the formation of The Evangelical Church.

Perhaps he was one of the most internationally minded bishops of his Church due to his service in America and Germany. This gave him a pronounced standing in missionary circles.

He was three times married. The first time on March 29, 1877 to Mary E. Hamm in Illinois. She died within ten months. In Germany, he married Louise Mueller, an Evangelical, in 1880. Following her death in 1909, he married Mrs. Emma Kaechele.

Bishop Heinmiller was a man who had remained aloof from the many petty quarrels in the Church, exemplifying a true Christian understanding.

HEINZ, HENRY JOHN (1844-1919), manufacturer and philanthropist, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 11, 1844, the son of Henry and Anna M. (Schmidt) Heinz. He was for many years an active layman in the M. E. and M. P. Churches. After his marriage to Sarah Sloan Young in 1869, they joined the M. E. Church, and he served as a steward, trustee, and Sunday school superintendent. Around 1872, Heinz and his wife transferred to the Grace M. P. Church which was near their home. Some twenty years later when Heinz moved to PITTSBURGH's east end, he joined a nearby Presbyterian Church.

Believing "that the Sunday school was the supremely useful instrumentality for the instruction of those whom the church is set to reach and rear," Heinz was active in the Sunday school movement on the local, national, and international levels for sixty-four years. He was president of the Allegheny County Sabbath School Association, twenty-four years; president of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, twenty-four years; member of the International Sunday School Association, seventeen years (vice-president, 1918-19); and member of the executive committee of the World Sunday School Association, fifteen years (chairman, six years). At the second ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1891, Heinz and W. K. Gillespie initiated a laymen's movement which became the Laymen's Bureau for church extension. Heinz was especially interested in Kansas City University, a M. P. institution in KANSAS CITY, Mo. He served as president of the board of trustees, and saw the school through several financial crises. In 1896 when the M. P. GENERAL CONFERENCE met in Kansas City, Heinz hosted the delegates at a banquet. He gave about $40,000 and advanced a loan of $65,000 to the university. Interested also in underprivileged children, Heinz and his son Howard launched a program in 1901 which resulted in 1915 in the dedication of a club for boys and girls, called the Sarah Heinz House, in Pittsburgh. Heinz and C. E. Wilbur visited M. P. work in JAPAN in 1913 and made recommendations to the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY concerning its property in Yokohama. At his death Heinz bequeathed large sums to the Sunday school associations of which he had been a member and to the University of Pittsburgh, asking the latter to establish a chair for training Sunday school teachers. Heinz died May 14, 1919 and was buried in Pittsburgh.

HEISLER, JOHN S. (1867-1953), an American Evangelical Congregational minister, served as editor of The United Evangelical, 1934 to 1942, and also as a conference administrator in the Evangelical Congregational Church. He came from Lewistown (near Tamaqua, Pa.) in the anthracite coal regions, where he was born Dec. 6, 1867, and exhibited a strength of body and character that made him respected and highly regarded by his fellow ministers and laymen. He was licensed to preach in The United Evangelical Church in 1889 and served as a pastor until elected presiding elder in 1927. He served as a leader in the organization of the Evangelical Congregational Church and exemplified a loyalty to principles that would be unusual in many respects. He led in the organization of the Rosedale Campmeeting near Reading, Pa. Death came to him June 27, 1953 at Reading, Pa. and his body was laid to rest in a cemetery in Lehighton, Pa.

HEISTAND, SAMUEL (1781-1838), American U. B. minister and bishop, was born in Page County, Va., on March 3, 1781. His parents were Jacob and Elizabeth Heistand. These people were devout followers of the Moravian faith and three of their sons became ministers of the Gospel.

Samuel professed religion early in life, but was really converted under the preaching and influence of George Benedum, an itinerant, serving in PENNSYLVANIA and Ohio. In 1819, the Miami Conference, United Brethren in Christ, granted Heistand a license to exhort and in 1820, to preach.

In 1808, Samuel Heistand was married to Miss Margaret Raudabaugh and to the couple seven sons and four daughters were born.

Heistand was secretary of the GENERAL CONFERENCE held in 1821. He was also a member of the Conference of 1825, in which he had a voice in such important matters as the mode of baptism to be practiced by the denomination; placing presiding elders on full-time work basis; and discontinuing the ordination of bishops.

In 1824, he became a member of the newly formed Scioto Conference in Ohio and served there as an itinerant until the General Conference held in 1833, when he was elected bishop.

As a bishop, he was efficient and effective, both as a preacher and administrator. He was re-elected to this high office in 1837, but died before the end of his term, on Oct. 9, 1838.

HELENA, MONTANA, U.S.A. Inter-Mountain Deaconess Home for Children, located at Helena, MONTANA, is a Christian home for hurt and troubled children unable to live in their own homes, because of death, separation, or divorce, physical or mental illness, alcoholism, or any other reason. The Home is operated under the auspices of the MONTANA CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church.

First known as Montana Deaconess School, it was founded by W. W. VAN ORSDEL ("Brother Van") and Miss Louise Stork, Deaconess, as a school and home for children under fourteen. It was formally opened Oct. 14, 1909, housed in the former home of Montana Wesleyan University. Miss Stork was the first superintendent; Fletcher Van Orsdel had charge of the furnace and the farm. Miss Stork was followed by Miss Roxanna Beck, Deaconess, 1910-29, and Miss Helen C. Piper, Deaconess, 1929-50. Since then the administrators have been men.

When the earthquake of 1935 completely wrecked the old building and also damaged the Van Orsdel Memorial building, the school was moved into Helena, and in 1937 bought the three damaged buildings of Intermountain Union College, vacated by the quake. Mills Hall, the dormitory, was repaired for occupancy in 1937 and still houses the Home. In September 1954, the children entered Helena public schools and the institution was re-named Inter-Mountain Deaconess Home for Children. Sometimes the children in residence have numbered seventy-five; the usual number is about forty.

St. Paul's Church. In 1864, four prospectors took one last chance at finding gold in a gulch 150 miles from their Virginia City, Montana mines. They struck it rich, and within weeks the Helena strike was one of the wildest on record.

On March 26, 1865, young E. T. McLaughlin stood on a pile of logs at what is now the northwest corner of Joliet and Cutler Streets and preached the first sermon in the booming mining camp. From those logs the first Methodist church was built and dedicated on July 30.

When a new structure was completed on the corner of Broadway and Ewing four years later, the original building was sold as a dwelling. A century later it came back into the possession of the church and now serves as a coffee house outpost of the present St. Paul's United Methodist Church. Operated by young people, its name recalls the early mining days, the Diggin's.

In 1872 this second structure was destroyed by fire, and this time the congregation, led by W. C. Shippen, built with brick. On Shippen's property the already famous "Hanging Tree," used by the Vigilantes for several executions, was cut down by the pastor to avoid the coming of sightseers. Still people came to the Methodist church, and by 1888 the brick church gave way to a larger building of native stone, modeled after the St. Paul's Methodist Church in CINCINNATI, Ohio, hometown of pastor A. D. Raleigh.

Today's church was built after the earthquake of 1935 wrecked the Broadway stone church. Relocated on its present site of Logan and Lawrence Streets, and completed in 1938 with much work done by the congregation as volunteer labor, St. Paul's Church began a new program of expansion at the beginning of its second century.

The congregation divided and established a new church called Covenant Methodist, thinking of the new church as an experimental part of the congregation able to try new organization and methods. A neighborhood Sunday school has also been established in a low cost housing area. Plans are being made now to pioneer a new ecumenical approach in the growing valley area on the north edge of Helena.

The pioneering spirit still dominates the Methodists who live around Helena's original gold camp, "Last Chance Gulch."

HELM, LUCINDA BARBOUR (1839-1897), American home missionary leader and founder of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, was born on Dec. 23, 1839. She was the daughter of John Larue Helm. As the church extension work of the M. E. Church, South, expanded, a need for parsonages (which were considered to be a home mission field), came to be apparent, and Bishop R. K. HARGROVE asked in 1885, "Why could not the good women of the Church be induced to go into the work of building parsonages?" In May of 1886 the GENERAL CONFERENCE itself acted, setting up under the Board of Church Extension the Woman's Department of Church Extension which operated as such for a time. Miss Helm, taking the lead in this field, worked devotedly and used what influence she had to get this department created into a separate connectional organization, which in time came to be called the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society. The publication Our Homes, the official organ of the society, came to be quite a connectional organ in southern homes. Miss Helm continued in this work until her death on Nov. 15, 1897. The society, after a few changes, was later put under the general board of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

HELMS, EDGAR JAMES (1863-1942), American minister, founder of GOODWILL INDUSTRIES, superintendent of Morgan Memorial Co-Operative Stores and Industries, superintendent of the Bureau of Goodwill Industries-Board of Missions of The Methodist Church, and secretary-emeritus of Goodwill Industries of America, Inc.; was born in Malone, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1863, the son of William and Lerona (Sherwin) Helms. He was graduated from CORNELL COLLEGE in Iowa in 1889 and from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1892. He held honorary doctorate degrees from Cornell College and Boston University and was retired from the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1942, after having been reappointed continuously since 1895 to the Morgan Memorial Church of All Nations which he established in Boston's sprawling South End.

In addition to being the founder and first superintendent of Goodwill Industries, a nationwide and international employment for handicapped people, Helms was the founder of Hull Street Mission, BOSTON, 1892; superintendent of the Boston City Missionary Society, 1893-95; professor of evangelism, Boston University School of Theology, 1916. He was also the founder and first dean of the National Training School for Goodwill Industries Workers, 1939. He served as a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE and was the author of Pioneering in Modern City Missions, Purposes and Policies of Goodwill Industries, Prospectus and Manual of Morgan Memorial, and the Goodwill Industries—A Manual.

Helms was married to Jean Preston of Eagle Grove, Iowa, in 1892, who died in 1899. Helms had two daughters and one son by this marriage, and three daughters and six sons by his marriage to Grace Preston whom he married in 1901. He died on Dec. 23, 1942.

HELPER; RULES OF A HELPER. JOHN WESLEY's traveling preachers (as distinct from the preachers who assisted him only in a single place) were first defined in the Conferences of 1744 and 1745, where they are called "Assistants" in the BENNET MINUTES and "Helpers" in the version of the Minutes prepared by HENRY MOORE. The 1812 edition of the 1744 Minutes also uses the term Helper. The Helper of 1744 was described as an "extraordinary Messenger," called by God to stir up the regular clergy to holy emulation and to care for the souls that the clergy neglected. The fundamental point of their office was, "in the absence of the Minister, to feed and guide, to teach and govern the flock"—thus the Bennet Minutes, but Henry Moore omits the vital words "in the absence of the Minister." The minister here referred to was the ordained clergyman who assisted the Methodist societies. In the Minutes for 1749 John Wesley clearly distinguished between Assistants and the remainder of the traveling preachers: the business of the Assistant was first of all "to see that the other Preachers in his Circuit behave well, and want nothing," a definition which made the Assistant the equivalent of the later Circuit Superintendent. These early definitions of the role of the traveling preacher gradually changed as John Wesley found it more and more difficult to prevent the itinerants from becoming in effect "Methodist ministers"; in the 1780's he consented to ordain a limited number of them, an action that represented a breach with his view of their office in 1744-45. The famous "Rules of a Helper," originally drawn up in 1744, were intended as a guide to the general behavior of the itinerants, and not as a description of their place in the Methodist constitution—then still, in any case, in an embryonic stage. The Bennet Minutes give them as follows:

1. Be diligent, never be unemployed for a moment, never be triflingly employed, (never while away time) spend no more time at any place than is strictly necessary.
2. Be serious. Let your motto be, "Holiness unto the Lord." Avoid all lightness as you would avoid hellfire and laughing as you would cursing and swearing.
3. Touch no woman; be loving as you will, but hold your hands off 'em. Custom is nothing to us.
4. Believe evil of no one. If you see it done, well; else take heed how you credit it. Put the best construction on everything. You know the judge is always allowed ["supposed" is here substituted in Wesley's handwriting] to be on the prisoner's side.
5. Speak evil of no one; else your word would eat especially as doth a canker. Keep your thoughts within your own breast, till you come to the person concerned. 6. Tell everyone what you think wrong with him, and that plainly, and as soon as may be, else it will fester in your heart. Make all haste, therefore, to cast the fire out of your bosom. 7. Do nothing as a gentleman; you have no more to do with this character than with that of a dancing-master. You are the servant of all, therefore. 8. Be ashamed of nothing but sin: not of fetching wood, or of drawing water if the time permit; not of cleaning your own shoes or your neighbour's. 9. Take no money of anyone. If they give you food when you are hungry, of clothes when you need them, it is good. But not silver or gold. Let there be no pretence to say, we grow rich by the Gospel. 10. Contract no debt without my knowledge. 11. Be punctual; do everything exactly at the time; and in general do not mend our rules, but keep them, not for wrath, but for conscience sake. 12. Act in all things not according to your own will, but as a son in the Gospel. As such, it is your part to employ your time in the manner which we direct: partly in visiting the flock from house to house (the sick in particular); partly, in such a course of Reading, Meditation and Prayer, as we advise from time to time. Above all, if you labour with us in the Lord's Vineyard, it is needful that you should do that part of the work we prescribe ["direct" is substituted here in Wesley's handwriting] at those times and places which we judge most for his glory.

The Conference of 1745 added the famous words: "You have nothing to do but save souls. Therefore spend and be spent in this work. And go always, not only to those who want you, but to those who want you most." In what may be called the final version of the Rules, Number 10 was dropped out, and the addition of 1745 became a new Number 11. Number 12 remained as it is given above, but to it were added words which come from the version of the Minutes prepared by Henry Moore:

Observe, it is not your business to preach so many sermons, and to take care of this and that society; but to save as many souls as you can; to bring as many sinners as you possibly can to repentance; and with all your power, to build them up in that holiness, without which they cannot see the Lord. And remember, a Methodist preacher is to mind every point, great and small, in the Methodist discipline. Therefore, you will need all the sense you have, and to have your wits about you.

The "Rules of a Helper" have never been forgotten; certain phrases among them may be said to have haunted generation after generation of Methodist traveling preachers; if John Wesley had never written another word, he would have left his mark on the history of the Christian Church.

Helpers (in American Methodism). When the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE organized the M. E. Church in America in 1784, the Minutes outlining the organization said "we will form ourselves into an episcopal church under the direction of superintendents, elders, deacons, and helpers, according to the Forms of Ordination annexed to our liturgy and the form of Discipline set forth in these Minutes." The helpers mentioned were all members of the Annual Conference in those early years. Helpers were really in the position of junior preachers. In the Wesleyan Minutes in England the duties of a helper were: "In the absence of a minister to feed and guide the flock; in particular, to meet the society and the bands weekly; to visit the sick, to meet the elders weekly." In the United States the term helper was kept for a number of years, but was finally merged into the word preacher, and the title of assistant was changed to that of preacher-in-charge. The title has not appeared in any Discipline for well over a hundred years, and really belonged to the early formative period when the Methodists in America were changing slowly from a society into a church and were not altogether easy about the clerical terms which should be used.

HELSINKI (Helsingfors), the capital of FINLAND, with about 523,051 inhabitants (1970), was founded in 1550 by Gustavus Vasa, King of SWEDEN. The place was obscure until in 1812 it was made the capital of Finland by the Russian czar Alexander I, instead of Turku (Åbo), the former capital. After a devastating fire, the university, founded in 1640, was moved from Turku to Helsinki in 1827. Especially after the Second World War has Helsinki rapidly grown, but the percentage of the Swedish-speaking population has decreased.

In 1884 B. A. CARLSON was sent to Helsinki and founded the first Methodist church. He rapidly came in contact with many Swedish-speaking people—among the first a master of the university, O. E. Florell, whom he had met in America some years earlier.

In 1897 a simple house was bought, and on the same site in 1906-7 a church building, Emanuel, was constructed, destined to face many troubles. KARL JAKOB HURTIG was pastor of the Swedish-speaking work from 1904 until his retirement in 1943. During his long pastorate in Helsinki, Emanuel Church became remarkable for influential religious and social work. For many years a wonderful spirit of awakening rested over the congregation. The church was crowded at almost every service, and hundreds were brought to salvation. Another great church, Christ Church, was built in 1927-28; but the world-wide depression in the 1930's brought financial strain, and the old church, Emanuel, had to be sold.

CHRIST CHURCH, HELSINKI

Three chapels were also erected in the neighborhood. In 1912 a children's home was started in the suburb of Kaunijainen (Grankulla), where more than a thousand children have since been brought up. In connection with the new church, a hospital, and an old people's home, and even a columbarium were instituted.

OLD PEOPLE'S HOME, OMAKOTI SAATIO

In 1934-35 the total membership in the Swedish-speaking church reached over 500, but there was always a large group of outside friends eagerly sustaining the many-sided work of the church. The figure in 1965 was 495, including baptized children and other "legal" members not in full connection.

For many years the financial situation was really dangerous, but the congregation by means of the income from its estate every year presently helps other churches and church enterprises throughout the land. The pastor in charge is Sergei Dubrovin, brought up in the same congregation.

In his first year, Carlson tried to reach out to the Finnish-speaking people, who were "the vast majority."

FINNISH METHODIST CHURCH, HELSINKI

He got a helper in Gustaf A. Hidén, also a Swede, who remarkably enough pretty soon learned to master the difficult and quite alien Finnish language. Some young men assisted Carlson in this work, and in 1894 a separate Finnish-speaking congregation was organized. Matti Lehtonen and Matti Försti were among the first leaders and they experienced great revivals, but both of them died early.

In 1907 JONAS W. HÄGGMAN moved with the Finnish Methodist Theological Seminary to Helsinki; and the following year a valuable site was purchased, where twenty years later the great Central building for the Finnish-speaking Methodists was built. By the action of the mother church in America it was saved from dangerous depression in the thirties. Able and gifted preachers have been in charge of this important church, among them Niilo Tuomenoksa, Toivo Rajalinna, and Toivo Rajamaa. The two first mentioned left the church for other denominations. The latter during the war was pastor of the Vuoksenlaakso Church. The 1965 report showed 233 Finnish-speaking members in Helsinki.

In 1953 the Northern Europe Central Conference was held in Helsinki, Bishops THEODOR ARVIDSON and A. FRANK SMITH presiding. Bishop Arvidson retired at this session. ODD HAGEN, rector of Överås, the UNION SCANDINAVIAN THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, Gothenburg, was then elected bishop. The election session was held in the Finnish-speaking Central Church and the consecration service in the Swedish-speaking Christ Church.

HEMINGWAY, LAWRENCE HENRY (1884-1954), an American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Conway, S. C., on June 5, 1884. He received the degrees of A.B., B.D., and D.D. (honorary) from ALLEN UNIVERSITY (South Carolina). He was admitted to the Northeast South Carolina Annual Conference in 1910, ordained a deacon in 1912 and an elder in 1923. He served in the South Carolina Conference as pastor and presiding elder (1931-38); general officer (secretary-treasurer) of Church Extension (1938-48); and was elected bishop in 1948. More than 3,000 were converted under his ministry of approximately twenty-five years. Regarded as an excellent preacher and businessman, he accumulated a small fortune as a candy manufacturer.

Bishop Wright said of him: "Bishop Hemingway appeared to have no 'colored blood'; he came from a community where there was much interracial association. He traveled freely throughout the country in Pullman cars and stayed in first class hotels, where his colleagues of a darker color could not in those days get service. He did much to open hotels in Washington, D.C. to Negroes during an important meeting of the Women's Missionary Society there. In spite of his color, no one ever accused him of disloyalty 'to his race.' Both of his parents were colored. He was about five feet eleven inches and weighed around 200 pounds." Hemingway Temple in Washington, D.C., is named for him. He died in 1954.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

HENDERSON, ARTHUR (1863-1935), British statesman, was born at Glasgow in 1863. The family removed in 1873 to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and he grew up at Elswick Road Wesleyan Methodist Church, where his chapel associations encouraged him to read, and he became a local preacher. In 1880 he joined the Friendly Society of Iron

Founders, one of the oldest trade unions in the country. Having entered politics by way of full-time work as a trade union official, he was a Labor M. P. for various northern constituencies from 1903 to 1931. In the wartime Coalition Government, he was president of the Board of Education (1915-16), and a member of Lloyd George's five-man War Cabinet (1916-17). His influence in the formation of the modern Labor Party was considerable. He was secretary of the party from 1911 to 1934, and leader of the Parliamentary Labor Party 1914-18. The war had split the party, and in 1918 Henderson worked successfully to bring together the Pacifist wing, led by MacDonald and Snowden, and the non-Pacifists, headed by himself and J. R. Clynes. He was largely responsible for the new party constitution of February 1918, which transformed the Labor Party from an association of Socialist groups and trade unions into a national party, with local branches and individual members, as well as large-scale union support, and a clearly socialist program. He was Home Secretary in the first Labor Government (1924), and Foreign Secretary in the second (1929-31). When MacDonald alienated the Labor Movement by forming a National Government (with Conservatives and Liberals), the party expelled him, and Henderson became leader (1931). As president of the World Disarmament Conference, from 1932 until his death in 1935, Henderson worked ardently for peace. He enjoyed widespread popularity in the Labor movement, being, in the words of M. Beer, "one of the finest products of British trade unionism and Gladstonian tradition; genial and loyal as a co-worker, a model chairman, tactful, sympathetic, and never at a loss for a shrewd reply to an opponent; a man of peace and reform, and disposed to settle differences by friendly discussion. One could not have wished for a better man at the head of a Labour Government." (A History of British Socialism, 434f.)

His political ideals and service were the direct outcome of his religious convictions. His biographer records of him that he could pass naturally, "from preaching on Sunday to Trade Union or political organization on Monday. He took the spirit of his church into unionism, and found many men who did the same."

JOHN NEWTON

HENDERSON, THEODORE SOMMERS (1868-1929), American bishop, was born in Milburn, N. J., May 14, 1868, the son of William H. and Louisa (Sommers) Henderson. He was educated at Centenary Collegiate Institute (now CENTENARY COLLEGE), HACKETTSTOWN, N. J., WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1892), and DREW SEMINARY (B.D., 1895). He held the D.D. degree from ALLEGHENY COLLEGE (1909), and the LL.D. from four institutions. He married Dora Mooney, July 31, 1896, and they had one son.

Admitted on trial in the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE in 1893, he was ordained ELDER in 1894; he received ordination as DEACON in 1890. His appointments, all in the New York East Conference, were: Rockville Center, Long Island, 1893; Janes Church, BROOKLYN, 1894-95; Flushing, 1896-97; Simpson Church, Brooklyn, 1898-1903; East Side Parish, New York, 1904; Stamford, Conn., 1905; Hanson Place, Brooklyn, 1908-12. In 1906-07 he was General Field Secretary of the General Conference Commission for Aggressive Evangelism.

Henderson was a delegate to the 1912 GENERAL CONFERENCE and was elected bishop by that body. In 1917-18 he was Executive Secretary of the War Council of his denomination. He served as a trustee of OHIO WESLEYAN and OHIO NORTHERN UNIVERSITIES; the Methodist Children's Home, Worthington, Ohio; and the White Cross Hospital in Columbus. His episcopal residence was in CHATTANOOGA four years, and in DETROIT eight. He went to CINCINNATI in 1924 and his residence was there until his death.

He was preeminently an evangelist and worked enthusiastically in that field. As Chairman of the Commission on EVANGELISM, he wrote many articles for the religious press, including a page each week throughout his episcopal career in one of the Christian Advocates. He compiled two booklets—Building an Evangelistic Church and The Fellowship of Redemption—which were widely circulated. He was also an ardent prohibitionist. Those who knew Henderson felt that as a young man he was marked out as a leader. He was a man of apparently untiring industry. Bishop EDWIN H. HUGHES said he was the most strenuously energetic of all the bishops he knew. An excellent administrator, he was regarded as an able bishop. He died Feb. 11, 1929, in Cincinnati, and was buried there.

EUGENE R. HENDRIX

HENDRIX, EUGENE RUSSELL (1847-1927), college president and American bishop, was born at Fayette, Mo., on May 17, 1847, the son of Adam and Isabel Jane (Murray) Hendrix. The controversy over slavery was raging in Missouri when his parents came there from PENNSYLVANIA and MARYLAND. When he was ready for college, they sent him to WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in Middletown, Conn. He did advanced work at Union Theological Seminary, New York. Back in Missouri, he was assigned to Leavenworth, Kan., as his first conference appointment. The small southern church in Leavenworth was overshadowed by the triumphant northern church in the same town. The young minister was glad to leave after a year, and was assigned to Macon, Mo. After that, he served a four-year pastorate at the Francis Street Church, St. Joseph, Mo. He married Annie E. Scarritt on June 20, 1872, and their children were Evangeline, Mary, Nathan, and Helen.

In the autumn of 1876, he traveled around the world visiting missions with Bishop ENOCH MARVIN. He returned to the pastorate at Glasgow, Mo., 1877-78. The next year, he was elected president of CENTRAL COLLEGE at Fayette, Mo., and there he remained until 1886 when the GENERAL CONFERENCE elected him a bishop. He continued to secure large gifts for Central College.

During thirty-six years in the episcopacy, Bishop Hendrix served in every section of Southern Methodism. For a time he was in charge in MEXICO, the Orient, and in South America. He was chairman of the Board of Curators of Central College and chairman of the Board of Trustees at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. He opposed the other bishops of the Church who brought suit in court for a tighter control by the Church over the university.

Interdenominationally, he became widely known and highly regarded. He was the first president of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES of Christ in America in 1908. At the time of the merging of the Federal Council with other bodies to form the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, the Hendrix family presented through Bishop ARTHUR J. MOORE the gavel which Bishop Hendrix had used at some of its first sessions.

He was tireless in his work for the union of the two Methodisms, North and South, and delivered a great address in 1916 at the General Conference of the M. E. Church at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Bishop EARL CRANSTON, presiding over that Conference, grasped his hand at the conclusion of his address and said, "We must bring our Churches together."

Bishop Hendrix helped greatly in the early development of Barnes Hospital in ST. LOUIS, MO. At a missionary rally that was part of the LAKE JUNALUSKA ASSEMBLY program, he raised $151,000 for missions. Among his books were Around the World, The Master as a Lad in the Temple, Our Elder Brother, Skilled Labor for the Master, The Religion of the Incarnation, The Personality of the Holy Spirit, Christ's Table Talk, and If I Had Not Come.

Although feeble from age, he continued active in presiding over Conferences. He held the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South in 1920 at Mt. Vernon Place Church, Washington, D. C. He died on Nov. 11, 1927, and was buried at Mt. Washington Cemetery, Kansas City, Mo.

HENDRIX COLLEGE, Conway, Ark. was founded as Central Collegiate Institute in 1876 at Altus, Ark. The institution came under Methodist control in 1884 and the name was changed in 1889 in honor of Bishop E. R. HENDRIX of the M. E. Church, South. In 1890, it was moved to Conway. Henderson-Brown College, Arkadelphia, merged with Hendrix in 1929, and Galloway Women's College, Searcy, in 1933. It is the only college under the sponsorship of both conferences, LITTLE ROCK and NORTH ARKANSAS. In 1961 an alumnus, H. F. Buhler, gave the college $2,500,000 for endowment. This was the largest gift made by an ARKANSAS resident to higher education.

In May 1966, the college began construction of an underground library designed by Philip Johnson of New York City. Although many libraries have made extensive use of one or more levels below the surface, this is the first such underground library building among the nation's colleges and universities. It accommodates 420 readers and 100,000 volumes.

In June 1966, Hendrix was awarded a challenge grant of $1,500,000 from the Ford Foundation. This is the largest grant ever made to an institution in Arkansas by a private foundation. Degrees granted are the B.A. and B.M. (Music). The governing board has thirty-six trustees, sixteen elected by the Little Rock and North Arkansas Annual Conferences, five by alumni, twelve at large, and three ex officio.

JAMES W. HENLEY

HENLEY, JAMES WALTON (1901-), American bishop, was born on July 14, 1901, in Cleveland, Tenn., the son of Charles Walton and Teresa Dowthett (Johnston) Henley. He is a graduate of EMORY UNIVERSITY with the A.B. degree, 1923, and D.D., 1946, and holds the B.D. from Yale Divinity School, 1926. He did graduate work at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and received the LL.D. from BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE, 1963; D.D. from FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE, 1967; L.H.D. from LYCOMING COLLEGE, 1968. On Dec. 31, 1931, he was united in marriage to Huldah Jo Chapin—their children are James Walton, Jr. (minister—Holston Conference) and Chapin. Mrs. Henley died in Nashville, Tenn. on Oct. 22, 1968.

James Walton Henley was ordained to the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, in 1926 (HOLSTON CONFERENCE); ordained DEACON, 1928; ELDER, 1930; and consecrated bishop in 1960 following his election by the Southeastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in its session at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C. His pastorates include in the Holston Conference: Spring City, Tenn., 1926-27; Crossville, Tenn., 1927-28; Harriman, Tenn., 1928-29; Morristown, Tenn., 1930-31; Knoxville, Tenn., 1932-37; Chattanooga, Tenn., 1937-44; and in the TENNESSEE ANNUAL CONFERENCE; West End Methodist Church, NASHVILLE, 1944-60. He has been bishop of the FLORIDA Area since 1960. He also has visitatorial responsibility for Methodist work in CUBA.

He is a member of the General Board of Education of The United Methodist Church; TELEVISION, RADIO AND FILM COMMISSION, and the PROGRAM COUNCIL of The United Methodist Church. He is a trustee of SCARRITT COLLEGE for Christian Workers; Florida Southern College; Bethune-Cookman College; WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Macon, Ga., and is on the Board of Governors of WESLEY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. He has written: Sermons of Our Lord's Prayer, 1952; His Twelve Apostles, 1958; Jesus Christ is Lord, 1961. He resides at 127 Lake Hollingsworth Drive, Lakeland, Fla.

HENRICHSEN, MARGARET KIMBALL (1900-), American woman minister and district superintendent in The United Methodist Church, was born at Plainfield, N. J., on Nov. 23, 1900. She was the daughter of James E. and Louise A. (Lewis) Kimball. She obtained a teacher's certificate from the National College of Education at EVANSTON, Ill., in 1921, and the D.D. degree was given to her by Colby College of Waterville, Me., in 1954. She married Christian Henrichsen on Sept. 3, 1930, and after teaching for a time in Evanston, Ill.; Springfield, Mass.; and being the executive secretary of the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE from Chicago, 1922-25, she was ordained a DEACON in The Methodist Church in 1947, then an ELDER in 1949. When women were granted membership in the Annual Conferences of The Methodist Church by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1956, she joined the MAINE CONFERENCE on trial and came into full connection in 1958.

From that time Mrs. Henrichsen served as pastor of the North Sullivan (Maine) Circuit in which she had been serving as a supply since 1944. She is a trustee of the Maine Coast Memorial Hospital at Ellsworth, Maine; of the Standwood Wildlife Foundation at Ellsworth; and the recipient of the Alumni Achievement Award of the National College of Education in 1956. She was cited by the Maine chapter of the American Association of University Women in 1964. In 1953, she published the book My Seven Steeples, telling of her work as a minister. In Religion in Life—the Spring issue of 1952—under the title "The Woman Minister" she told of her work as pastor of several small crossroads churches in Down-East Maine—a parish comprising four townships. "If a woman has a real and vital experience of Christ in her own life," she stated, "a devotional spirit, and some measure of human common sense coupled with spiritual insight, and if she knows herself to be called of God, she has no other choice." (Note: She meant no choice but to be a minister.)

Mrs. Henrichsen's husband died in 1943 and subsequently she became active in a wide variety of civic affairs. Bishop JAMES K. MATHEWS appointed her superintendent of the Bangor District of the Maine Annual Conference at its session in May, 1967, and in that post as superintendent she has presently the supervision of about fifty churches.

HENRY, JOHN (1765-1872), the founder of HENRY'S CHAPEL in Arkansas, U.S.A., and for over a half century a leader in ARKANSAS Methodism, was born in NORTH CAROLINA in 1765. He lived for a while near Columbia, Tenn., then moved into MISSOURI where he lived a few years. He was licensed to preach before 1810, and elected to deacon's orders before he moved to Arkansas with his family about 1815.

LITTLE ROCK was a mere village then, but John Henry stopped for a time and preached there; then travelled on to Hot Springs, where he preached to the few settlers there. After some time he went on southwest into what is now Hempstead County, and settled about five miles northwest of Washington, in what was then known as Mound Prairie. In later life he moved to Center Point, Ark., where he died Sept. 17, 1872. A modest marker stands at the head of his grave in Center Point cemetery. He was an active and indefatigable co-laborer with the noble and sweet-spirited WILLIAM STEPHENSON, who was the apostle of Methodism in Arkansas. "In the estimation of the church and of the world, John Henry stood almost without a peer in the Church of God in Arkansas for the last half of a century."

HENRY, WAIGHTS GIBBS (1879-1960), American minister and JUDICIAL COUNCIL member, was born Jan. 31, 1879 in Pickens County, Ala. He was admitted on trial in the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE 1902, and into full connection 1904. As a minister, he prepared himself most adequately intellectually, earning the A.B., M.A., B.D. and Ph.D. degrees. He took graduate work at the University of Chicago and Harvard University. He completed a course in law at MILLSAPS COLLEGE in Mississippi. He served on the faculty of CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, EMORY UNIVERSITY, Atlanta, Ga., for six years. His fellow ministers elected him to GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1922, 1926, 1930. He served on the Judicial Council of the M. E. Church, South and continued on that of The Methodist Church, 1934-52, and was vice-president his last four years. He was delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE four times. Henry's scholarly achievements caused him to be recognized in many biographical directories.

His appointments included Tuscaloosa First Church; Galloway Memorial, JACKSON, Miss.; superintendent, Huntsville District, North Alabama Conference; superintendent Atlanta District, ATLANTA, Ga.; Norwood Church, BIRMINGHAM, Ala.; Anniston, Alabama, First Church; district superintendent, Tuscaloosa District, North Alabama Conference.

He took voluntary retirement in 1948, but filled interim assignments as pastor, district superintendent, and teacher at Athens College, Athens, Ala., and in other work until his death on Aug. 25, 1960. He was buried in Elmwood Cemetery, Birmingham, Ala.

HENRY'S CHAPEL, located about five miles southwest of Washington, ARKANSAS, in Hempstead County, was the first Methodist church and the first Protestant church of any denomination to be built in Arkansas south of the Arkansas River.

This church was organized by JOHN HENRY in the winter of 1816-17, and was built sometime in 1817. It was erected of hewn pine logs, and was about 28 x 30 feet in size. A door in one side faced the pulpit. There was a large fireplace with a chimney at one end. The church continued to serve a large section of the country for more than fifty years. Finally the membership was moved to Ozan, about five miles northwest, where a marker is located with the names of some of the pioneers. The old church was abandoned.

Some of the names of these pioneers have been preserved: Rev. John Henry, Rev. J. Reede, Rev. Solomon Ruggles, James Alexander, Reece Alexander, Rev. Gilbert Clark, and the circuit preachers of that time—WILLIAM STEPHENSON and John Harris. These probably made their headquarters in this community while they traveled the country hundreds of miles in every direction.

In 1917 a small marker was placed on the spot where the old church stood. A larger granite marker was placed at this same spot in September 1961, by the Historical Society of the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE. It was dedicated Oct. 10, 1961. The marker reads:

HENSON, GEORGE (1872-1952), American preacher and executive of the PHILADELPHIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE and an important General Conference figure, was born at Ruddington, Nottinghamshire, England, Jan. 9, 1872. In 1882 his parents migrated to America where he was educated, later becoming a Methodist minister and joining the Philadelphia Conference. For nineteen years he was pastor of the Gethsemane Methodist Church, which he built up from a small station to a church of commanding importance. For fifteen years he served as a district superintendent, and for twelve years as executive secretary of the (Philadelphia) Methodist Hospital. In 1937 he was elected president of the OCEAN GROVE Camp Meeting Association. When still a young man he was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1908, and thereafter he was elected to every General Conference, with the exception of 1912, until 1944. He was widely noted as a parliamentarian and often served as chairman of the Committee of Chairmen of the General Conference. Short of stature, with matted white hair and twinkling blue eyes, he became more familiar to General Conference delegates than most bishops. His keen logical mind and his grasp of parliamentary procedure were important aids in the smooth working of the General Conference itself. He died at Ocean Grove, Aug. 2, 1952.

HEPHZIBAH FAITH MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION was a small holiness sect formed by several independent congregations in Glenwood, Iowa, in 1892. It was typically holiness, though extremely emotion-centered in its preaching of the work of the Holy Spirit. Its ministers were unsalaried.

In 1948, it merged with the WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH.

HERBEN, STEPHEN JOSEPH (1861-1937), American minister and editor, was born in London, England, on May 11, 1861, and was brought in early life to Jersey City, N. J. Educated at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY and GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, he entered the printing and newspaper field. In 1895 he became assistant editor of The Christian Advocate, was editor of The Epworth Herald from 1904 to 1912, and editor of The Daily Christian Advocate for the GENERAL CONFERENCE (ME) of 1916, 1920 and 1924.

In 1899 he joined the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE but transferred to the NEWARK CONFERENCE in 1912, serving churches in Orange and Westfield through 1918.

He was a captain overseas in the American Red Cross during World War I and at its close became director of the Literature Department of the Interchurch World Movement. From 1921 to 1932 he was director of the Book Publishing Department of The Methodist Book CONCERN. He retired in 1933 and died in Maplewood, N. J. on Feb. 22, 1937 and was buried in Restland Cemetery.

HERESY is a term which has been applied in a general way to any deviation from the established tenets of the Christian Church. It originally meant a division or schism with no specific references to doctrinal differences. John Wesley insisted that St. Paul "uses the word heresies, as exactly equivalent with the word schisms. 'I hear,' says he, verse 18, 'that there are schisms among you, and I partly believe it;' he then adds, verse 19, 'for there must be heresies' (another word for the same thing) among you, that they which are approved among you may be made manifest. . . ." WESLEY added, "This word, therefore, [heresy] which has been so strangely distorted for many centuries, as if it meant erroneous opinions, opinions contrary to the faith delivered to the saints;—which has been made a pretence for destroying cities, depopulating countries, and shedding seas of innocent blood;—has not the least reference to opinions, whether right or wrong. It simply means, wherever it occurs in Scripture, divisions, or parties, in a religious community." (Wesley in his sermon "On Schism.")

Nevertheless, while Wesley was correct in his interpretation of what the Apostle had written, the word in time did come to mean a deviation from the prescribed orthodox norm of Christian belief. Heresy has not, however, been considered as heinous a sin as infidelity (a failure to believe in the Divinity of Christ); or atheism (the denial of belief in God); or agnosticism (publicly expressed doubt and professed ignorance). It is commonly held to be a breaking away from the commonly held fundamental, orthodox doctrines of the Christian church. The New Catholic Dictionary (Roman Catholic) defines heresy flatly as "deciding for oneself what one shall believe and practice instead of accepting the truth taught by Christ, and his moral teachings; e.g., Arianism, denying the divinity of Christ." (New Catholic Dictionary, New York: University Knowledge Foundation, 1929.)

Methodists have sometimes expressed pride in the fact that they "have no heresy trials." In listing actionable offenses the book of Discipline does not name heresy as such, but states as one of the offenses for which a bishop or traveling or local preacher may be tried, "the disseminating of doctrines contrary to the ARTICLES OF RELIGION or other established Standards of Doctrine of the church" (Discipline, 1964, Paragraph 921.e.). The general charge against such a person, should he be brought to trial, would no doubt be called heresy, somewhat loosely, but the specification of such charge or charges against him would probably avoid the word heresy. It would simply use the disciplinary language and state that the person being accused had "disseminated doctrines contrary to the Articles of Religion." One cannot be brought to trial for holding erroneous or heretical doctrines unless it be clear that he disseminates them.

The HINCKLEY G. MITCHELL case in Boston was an exception to the Methodist claim of "no heresy trials." The genius of Methodism has been an emphasis upon Christian activity and zeal, rather than in carefully maintaining formulated doctrinal positions. Doctrines and standards of doctrine, or course, there are, and these are carefully set forth, and it is possible for one to be tried, and if found guilty of disseminating doctrines contrary to these doctrinal standards to be expelled for such offense.

N. B. H.

In British Methodism there is provision for a charge to be made against a minister or local preacher of disloyalty to the doctrinal standards of the church. (Constitutional Practice and Discipline of the Methodist Church, Spencer and Finch, 1957, pp. 30-1, 114, 189.) On the whole, and fortunately, this constitutional machinery for doctrinal appeal has rarely had to be used, chiefly on account of the circumstance that in matters of doctrinal controversy it has been the prevailing tendency of British Methodists to adopt central and moderate views, and thus to preserve the cohesion of the Church. It would be accepted as an important principle of Methodism that there is in reserve this provision for exercising discipline upon a preacher who is disloyal to the doctrinal standards of Methodism, for a Methodist preacher is not free to teach what he likes, and continue as a preacher. Nevertheless, there is also a salutary recognition that "heresy-hunting" is not a very effective way of defending the truth, if only because in a hostile and critical world it is apt to bring public notice to the "heretic," and excite public sympathy with him.

There is a leading element of self-discipline in the circumstance that every minister is required annually to respond to the question, "Do you believe and preach our doctrines?" and a similar question is asked in the Local Preachers' Meeting (ibid., 183-84, 189). The generally accepted ethos of this procedure is that a preacher who finds in his mind doubt about some article of the Christian faith is on the one hand not called upon to conceal his opinion, but is on the other hand expected, while he continues as a preacher within the Connexion, to show corporate public respect for the doctrinal standards which his Church is committed to uphold. He cannot claim the right to use the facilities of the Methodist Church to spread a matter of divergent private opinion. Thus he may be accorded some liberty to speak of it in a restrained way in personal conversation or academic writing, so long as he shows to his hearers that the accepted standard of the Church is otherwise. But he is not to disturb the peace of the Church by strident public controversy, particularly in public worship. If he feels so strongly that the main principles of Methodist teaching are in error that he cannot avoid publicly controverting them, he is under a moral obligation to resign.

A recent illustrative case in point is that a minister volunteered the opinion that he did not "believe and preach our doctrines," yet claimed that the Church ought to continue him in connexion. After much delay for conciliation he was finally expelled from the ministry, the general feeling being that while it was extremely regrettable that a man should thus be lost to the ministry, it was equally regrettable that a minister should be found so self-opinionated and lacking in connexional loyalty as to expect the doctrinal standards of the Church to be emptied of content in order to accommodate his individual view. This is not to say that the peace and cohesion of the Church are more important than theological truth, but that truth may only be known if those who hold various views study to maintain courteous and disciplined fellowship with one another, and with the general body of the Church, exercising responsibility for the welfare of all simple believers.

JOHN LAWSON

HERETINI, TE TUHI (1857-1933), New Zealand Methodist Maori minister, was born at Whirinaki, Northland. In early manhood he came to be recognized as the religious leader in his district. At the age of thirty-nine he was received into the ministry and worked among the people of his own tribe until his death. A church built at Whirinaki in 1907 owed its existence largely to his efforts and generous gifts.

HERING, JOSHUA WEBSTER (1833-1913), American layman and M. P. General Conference president was born near Johnsville, Md., son of Daniel Saylor and Margaret Orr Hering. At the age of eighteen he came to Westminster, Md., remaining there until his death. His church life began in the Johnsville M. P. Church, later transferring to Westminster. His business career began as a clerk in a merchandizing establishment. On the side he began the reading of medicine under practicing physicians. He later enrolled at the University of Maryland, graduated in 1855 and began his medical career. His many outside activities, however, overshadowed his practice, which he discontinued in 1867 when elected cashier of the Union National Bank, a position he held until his death.

He was one of the founders of WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, serving for over forty years, first as treasurer of the Board of Trustees and later as its chairman.

In 1892 he was elected president of the GENERAL

CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church, holding that office eight years. In 1895 and 1897 he was elected state senator; in 1899 he was elected comptroller for MARYLAND, holding that office for three terms. By appointment of the Governor of Maryland he became a member of the Public Service Commission for three years.

In 1855 he was married to Margaret Henrietta Trumbo, who died in 1883. Four children were born to them. In 1888 he married Catharine E. Armacost, who survived him. Hering died on Sept. 23, 1913.

ULISES HERNANDEZ

HERNANDEZ, ULISES (1932-), first Methodist missionary to ECUADOR in recent years, was born in MEXICO, the son of a physician, and studied medicine at the National University in Mexico City. He then undertook theological study at Union Seminary, Mexico City, finishing in 1961. He served for one year at La Santisima Trinidad Church in Cante 5, Mexico City, then two years at Leon, Guanajuato. When it was determined that Latin American Methodists should send a missionary to Ecuador, he was selected from the five Mexican ministers who volunteered. He and Mrs. Hernandez arrived in Quito on March 10, 1965. They work with the United Evangelical Church of Ecuador and are supported by Methodist and Waldensian churches all over Latin America.

HERRICK, PAUL M. (1898-1972), American E. U. B. bishop, was born in rural Kansas, April 3, 1898. His father was a minister in the KANSAS CONFERENCE and he had two sisters serving as missionaries under the Board of Missions of the denomination.

He held degrees from Kansas City University (A.B., 1922); Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1927); Phillips University (M.A., 1935) in Enid, Okla.; York College (D.D., 1937), York, Neb.; OTTERBEIN COLLEGE (LL.D., 1960), Westerville, Ohio.

Pastorates were served in MISSOURI and OKLAHOMA under the Mission Board of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. He was pastor of Otterbein Church, TOPEKA, Kan., 1935-41. and First Church, DAYTON, Ohio, 1941-58.

In 1922, he was married to Miss Ruth Porter, from which union three children were born.

Paul M. Herrick was elected bishop in 1958 and served the Central Area with residence in Dayton, Ohio. In The United Methodist Church he was assigned to the VIRGINIA Area, RICHMOND being the headquarters of the area. In 1970 he retired and moved to Dayton, Ohio, where he died Nov. 23, 1972.

HERRNHUT, "The Lord's Watch," was the model religious community founded by CHRISTIAN DAVID for Moravian refugees in 1722 on COUNT ZINZENDORF's estate of Berthelsdorf in Saxony, Germany. From this settlement developed the "Renewed Church of the United Brethren" or MORAVIANS. JOHN WESLEY visited Herrnhut after his conversion in 1738 (cf. John Wesley's Journal, ii. 3-63).

HERSTAL METHODIST CHURCH in Belgium (French) was begun with the establishment of a social center in 1921. The church was built in 1938 at 126 rue Gillaume Delarge, but was destroyed by a V bomb in December, 1944, Mrs. Pierre, the pastor's wife being very seriously wounded and their little boy killed. The church was beautifully rebuilt in 1947 by H. H. STANLEY. Pastors have been F. Cuenod, 1922-26; M. Geva, 1927-28; J. Schyns, HERVEY, JAMES (1714-1758), British clergyman, born Feb. 26, 1713 or 1714, was a student at Lincoln College, Oxford, when JOHN WESLEY was a fellow there. Hervey joined the OXFORD METHODISTS or "HOLY CLUB." In 1752 he became the incumbent of Weston Favell. Hervey published books of meditations and reflections. The last of his works, published in 1755, was entitled Theron and Aspasio or A Series of Dialogues and Letters on the Most Important Subjects. He stated that his purpose in writing was to recommend "to people of elegant manners and polite accomplishments" the theology of JOHN CALVIN. Before publishing, he submitted his work to various friends, including John Wesley, for their criticism. Wesley adversely commented on Hervey's insistence on the doctrine of "The Imputed Righteousness of Christ" as leading inevitably and obviously to ANTINOMIANISM. Hervey took great offense at this and broke off all communication with Wesley. They never met again. Hervey died on Dec. 25, 1758.

HESTER, ELIZABETH FULTON (1838-1929), an American missionary, teacher and leader in the work of missions in the OKLAHOMA Indian Territory. She was the daughter of D. T. Fulton, a missionary preacher among the Cherokees in GEORGIA.

Educated in Southern Masonic Female Seminary, Covington, Ga., she came as a teacher in 1857 for the children of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Harlan at Tishomingo, Indian Territory, where she also served in mission work of the M. E. Church, South. After her marriage to George B. Hester, her home was at Boggy Depot, where her husband was a prominent merchant and trader.

Mrs. Hester organized the first WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY in the Territory. She promoted the work of the church and Sunday school with great vigor. She also taught the neighborhood school for several terms during the war between the states. Out of twelve Indian boys who came under her instruction as a teacher, five afterwards became chiefs of their nations. Her later years (she died in 1929) were devoted to philanthropy and to activities as a leader in the Methodist Church in her home town of Muskogee where she was one of the founders of the day nursery school. Her daughter, Daisy Hester, became the wife of Hon. Robert L. Owens, a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, and first U. S. Senator from the State of Oklahoma.

HEWITT, ARTHUR WENTWORTH (1883-), American minister, author and lecturer of New England, was born on June 22, 1883, at Riverton, Vt., the son of Arthur Lee and Florence Elnor (Eddy) Hewitt. He married Nina Aletha Battles on Sept. 18, 1907, and they lived for a great part of their lives in what Dr. Hewitt always refers to as the "Highland Manse" situated near Riverton, Vt.—a house which had been built by his grandfather. Arthur Hewitt was educated at Montpelier Seminary, graduating in 1904; Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt., gave him a D.D. in 1923; and Norwich University (Northfield, Vt.), a Litt.D. in 1956. He joined the TROY CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, on trial in 1908; (full connection, 1910; ordained DEACON, 1904; ELDER, 1908). His appointments were Glover, Vt., 1904-08; Plainfield, 1908-33; Moretown, Vt., 1933-36; Northfield and North Falls, Vt., 1936-56; MacKenzie Methodist Church, Riverton, Vt., 1956 until retirement. He was the headmaster of the Montpelier Seminary, also president of Vermont College from 1935-38. and headmaster of the Montpelier Seminary 1935-38. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church—1920, '28, '32, and '36; of the North-eastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of 1948 and 1952; and was put upon the UNIVERSITY SENATE of the BOARD OF EDUCATION of his church in 1936. He also served on the General Conference Commission to Study Reorganization of the Church, 1932-36; was the president of the Vermont Council of Religious Education for three years, and in his early life was elected a member of the Legislature of VERMONT, serving 1912-16. He also served upon certain state bodies by gubernatorial and legislature appointment. He is the recipient of the First Alumni Award given by Vermont College in 1946, and received the quadrennial award of honor, Methodist National Town and Country Conference, 1959.

Dr. Hewitt is widely known as an author, publishing Harp of the North in 1916; Bubbles, 1920; Song of the Sea, 1923; City of Joy, 1926. His Steeple Among the Hills, 1926, and Highland Shepherds, 1939, gave him a wide reading all over the country, and during later years he was in constant demand as a lecturer. Subsequently he wrote God's Back Pasture, 1941; The Shepherdess, 1943; Jerusalem the Golden, 1944; The Bridge, 1948; and Mountain Troubadour, 1962.

Dr. Hewitt's private library which he had amassed in his travels, especially in the old world, contains a number of rare volumes beloved by book collectors. He is especially proficient in Latin, and has written articles interpreting the expressions of the Vulgate for certain church publications. Since retirement he has continued to live in the Highland Manse.

HICKMAN, ERNEST LAWRENCE (1903-), an American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Fayetteville, Tenn., on June 8, 1903. He was educated at Turner College (Tenn.) which granted him the B.D. degree in 1928. In 1948 he was awarded the D.D. degree by SHORTER COLLEGE (Ark.) and in 1953 the same degree by Payne Theological Seminary (Ohio). In 1956 WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY granted him the LL.D. degree. He was ordained deacon in 1925 and elder in 1928, held pastorates in TENNESSEE and KENTUCKY, and was presiding elder of the Louisville District in Kentucky. He was elected to the episcopacy in 1956 from the pastorate of Quinn Chapel, LOUISVILLE, KY. He presently resides in ATLANTA, Ga. and supervises the work of the Sixth Episcopal Area District comprising six annual conferences in the state of GEORGIA.

HICKMAN, FRANKLIN SIMPSON (1886-1965), American theologian, university preacher and dean of the Chapel at DUKE UNIVERSITY, was born on Sept. 14, 1886, at Fort Wayne, Ind. He was the son of John Wesley and Emma Jane (Tessier) Hickman. He received the A.B. degree from DEPAUW UNIVERSITY in 1917; S.T.B. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1920; A.M. from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1922; Ph.D. in 1923; and the D.D. from DePauw in 1950. Hickman served for a time as pastor at Fremont, Ind.; Harmony-Staunton; Fillmore, Ind.; Nahant, Mass.; Albion, Ind.; and Epworth Memorial at South Bend, Ind. After this he devoted himself to teaching and for a time was the professor of religious education at HAMLIN UNIVERSITY, St. Paul, Minn. He then became pastor of First Church, MINNEAPOLIS, but in 1927 went to Duke University, DURHAM, N. C. where he became widely known as a teacher and preacher. He became dean of the stately Duke chapel in 1938.

Hickman was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, 1934, where he exerted enormous influence by his several appearances upon the floor in support of proposals for a better trained ministry. His debate with the strong and dramatic HENRY CLAY MORRISON, then president of ASBURY COLLEGE, proved a colorful and noteworthy event on the floor of the General Conference—Hickman favoring and Morrison opposing a measure that would stipulate high educational requirements for those entering the ministry. The Conference supported Hickman after his compelling words. He was also a member of the UNITING CONFERENCE, 1939, and of the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE of the Southeastern Jurisdiction in that same year. He wrote Introduction to the Psychology of Religion, Education and Religion, Christian Vocation, The Possible Self, and Signs of Promise. Hickman in his later years was in demand as a teacher in various pastors schools, and was always a renowned preacher, at his best in dealing with the theological vertices. He died on Nov. 18, 1965.

HICKMAN, LEON EDWARD (1900-), American lawyer, business executive, and churchman, was born at Sioux City, Iowa, July 27, 1900, the son of Charles A. and Edith W. (Fogg) Hickman. He won the B.A. degree at MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE (Iowa) in 1922, and the LL.B. at Harvard in 1925. He holds honorary degrees from several institutions. He married Mayme Hoyt, Aug. 12, 1926, and they have two sons.

Admitted to the PENNSYLVANIA Bar in 1926, Hickman was a partner in the law firm of Smith, Buchanan, and Ingersoll in PITTSBURGH, 1930-51. He is executive director, chairman of the finance committee, and a member of the executive committee of the Aluminum Company of America. In addition, he serves as a director of another business and as counsellor to a law firm.

Hickman became a church member in 1912, and he has been in the Mount Lebanon Methodist Church, Pittsburgh, since 1928. He was a delegate to the 1960 and 1964 GENERAL CONFERENCES and to the 1952-64 North-eastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES. In 1964 he was elected a member of the JUDICIAL COUNCIL of The Methodist Church and was made vice-president of the Council in 1968. He is chairman of the board of trustees of Morningside College and a member of the boards of trustees of ST. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, METHODIST; and of WESLEY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

HICKSVILLE, NEW YORK, U.S.A., Hicksville Church. This church was originally organized in 1900 as a fringe group in a community of German immigrants almost all of whom were Roman Catholics or Lutherans. After the Second World War, as an immense number of new people began to move into this area, the Methodists erected a new church on the side of the village nearest the largest home developments.

Not knowing what proportion of the new population would be Protestant, or even non-Jewish, and knowing by experience that any kind of population around New York City may quickly change with the constant movement of groups of people, the church deliberately built small and rather inexpensively. If the building should not accommodate the congregation, then multiple services of worship would be offered. Instead of investing large amounts of money in probably unnecessary building, money was to be spent liberally for effective professional leadership while, and so long as, necessary. Adequate workers of ability would be able to contact new people quickly, enlist them, and assimilate them.

The church first offered two morning services, then three. And since this community is one of small homes, popular with young parents with babies and small children, the church offered baby care, in a large and adequate room, and Sunday school classes for all ages up to sixteen simultaneously with the three services of worship.

In spite of the fact that many of these young people move away to larger homes as they begin to prosper, the Hicksville Methodist Church grew in ten years, 1950-60, from a membership of 400 to more than 2,000. Its total budget increased twenty-five fold, its missionary giving, forty fold.

The church building, even though relatively inexpensive, is of beautiful Ohio sandstone. It stands on Old Country Road, a wide thoroughfare, at Nelson Avenue, at almost the exact center of Nassau County, in Hicksville, N. Y. Membership in 1970 stands at 1,569.

HIGGINS, SAMUEL RICHARD (1896-1961), an American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Laurens, S. C., on July 6, 1896. He received the A.B. degree from Howard University in 1925, B.D. from Union Theological Seminary (N.Y.C.) in 1928 and D.D. (honorary) in 1936 from ALLEN UNIVERSITY. He was admitted to the New York Annual Conference in 1927 and ordained an elder in 1928. He held pastorates in SOUTH CAROLINA and was college president of Allen University (1937-56). He was elected bishop in 1956 and died in 1961. He was the initiator of the building of the largest A.M.E. church in GHANA, West Africa, and served his denomination in LIBERIA with distinction.

HIGH POINT, NORTH CAROLINA, U.S.A., a prosperous industrial city of 60,919 which got its name as the highest point on the Goldsboro to Charlotte railroad, was incorporated in 1859. Characterized by a spirit of boundless enterprise, High Point has grown to become a major manufacturing center chiefly of furniture and hosiery.

As early as 1750 members of the Society of Friends were in the region—antdating any other religious group by a full century. Deep River Meeting was established in 1760, remaining to this day a flourishing church located about a mile outside the present city limits of High Point. It was the forerunner of other "meetings" which make the city one of the dominant centers of the Quakers in the United States.

PETER DOUB, a figure of uncommon ability, preached perhaps the first Methodist sermon in the settlement of High Point in 1856, under the trees, we are told, on what became Washington Street. High Point was a conference appointment that year. The first church building was of brick. In 1890 a new and grander building succeeded the first one, and in 1914 on a new site in the heart of the growing city, a splendid edifice was raised to be known by the present name of Wesley Memorial.

Meanwhile other Christians were establishing churches of their choice. Presbyterians followed hard on the heels of the Methodists, organizing in 1859, and the Baptists the same year. All major communions, including Roman and Greek Catholic, in time became firmly established in High Point.

Additional Methodist churches founded as the city grew have resulted in sixteen appointments with 8,933 members (1970) under the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. A M. P. Church was established in 1895 with W. R. Lowdermilk, pastor. This is now First Methodist. The Methodist Protestants founded HIGH POINT COLLEGE in 1924, a coeducational four-year liberal arts institution, enrolling in the current year more than 1,100 students. The WESLEYAN METHODISTS founded their first church, Hayworth Memorial, in 1924, of which there are now seven churches. Negro churches representing the various major communions, are strong in the city.

A spectacular program of church building was undertaken by Wesley Memorial during the pastorate of Walter J. Miller (1952-57). The succeeding pastorate of Chesley C. Herbert, Jr. (1957-63), saw the erection on nineteen and one-half acres of land a complex of Gothic-style buildings, including educational and fellowship provisions, together with an impressive chapel. With the construction of the great sanctuary, the whole represents a cost of $3,500,000 and will be one of the noteworthy Methodist church edifices in the country.

First Church, the downtown church of High Point and a strong church of the Western North Carolina Annual Conference, was organized as the First M. P. Church on Oct. 20, 1895, and in 1936 was the site of the last GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church. W. R. Lowdermilk was responsible for the establishing of the church, and the first building was erected on the south side of the present church edifice. The original valuation of the church property was $3000. The church was dedicated on Sept. 4, 1896, by F. T. TAGG of BALTIMORE, Md. The Sunday school, originally organized as a union school with sixty-five members, had 146 members by 1900.

In 1924, during the pastorate of George R. Brown the congregation decided to erect a new church building at an estimated cost of $200,000. The church was formally opened for worship on April 26, 1925, by Brown, T. H. LEWIS, and A. C. DIXON. Following Methodist union in 1939 the church became the "First Methodist Church" of High Point. When the church was dedicated on Dec. 26, 1944, the membership was 910.

During the ministry of W. KENNETH GOODSON (now bishop) (1948-53), the need for additional educational space became evident and plans were made to acquire more land and erect a new building. A modern educational building was completed in Feb. 1961, and in the following year renovation of the sanctuary and the old educational building was completed. Among the distinguished pastors who have served the church are: J. S. WILLIAMS (1903-04); C. L. WHITAKER (1904-06); J. D. WILLIAMS (1906-08); A. C. DIXON (1908-17); George R. Brown (1917-26); J. Clay Madison (1934-41); Robert G. Tuttle (1953-58); A. C. Waggoner (1958-62). Membership now is 1,467.

Wesley Memorial Church is a modified Gothic structure of crab orchard stone with symbolic limestone carvings and trimmings. The church has 24,000 square feet of floor space, spread in three directions, on nineteen and one-half acres of land on the western edge of High Point.

Methodism began in High Point in 1857, three years before the town received its charter, when PETER DOUB preached once a month, "weather permitting," to a small group, sitting on hand-hewn log benches in a grove, on what is now East Washington Street.

WESLEY MEMORIAL CHURCH, HIGH POINT, NORTH CAROLINA

Sometime in 1856 a small brick room was built on this same spot, and for thirty years all activities of the church were carried on in this room. Thirteen pastors served during these years. In 1860-61 a "class" of seventeen—ten women and seven men—was recorded. By 1888 the membership had grown to 154.

Between 1888 and 1890, during the pastorate of E. H. Davis, a larger church was erected on approximately the same site. From its location it derived its name, "Washington Street Church." For twenty-five years this church, with twelve successive pastors, served the congregation.

By 1914 the membership had grown to 950, and on a larger lot on North Main Street a larger church was built. J. H. Barnhardt was pastor. By vote of the congregation, the name "Wesley Memorial Church" was chosen. Formal worship in the new church began in January 1915, with GILBERT T. ROWE, as pastor.

By 1950 the membership was around 2,100, and plans began for removal to the present site on Chestnut Street. On Sunday, Oct. 23, 1960, the first formal service was held. Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON preached in the morning, and the late G. Ray Jordan, a former pastor, preached at night. Among the other former pastors who preached in the evenings of the ensuing week was Bishop PAUL HARDIN.

The sanctuary was included in the architectural plans, but was not then built, the fellowship hall acting as temporary sanctuary. The building of the sanctuary was completed in 1969.

The chapel and nearby Asbury reception hall are at present the building's major showplaces, as each of the richly-colored stained glass windows in the chapel has six medallions, each portraying a series of scenes from Christian history. The twenty-six windows of the sanctuary are patterned after the manner of the rich jeweled windows of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The whole membership of the church has had a hand in this undertaking, and there have been many personal gifts and memorials.

The congregation of 1970 numbered 2,279.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE, High Point, N. C., traces its beginning to YADKIN COLLEGE, North Carolina, founded by the M. P. Church in 1854. In 1924, when High Point College opened, Yadkin College was closed in order to give the church's total support to the new institution. It is now related to the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA and NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCES. The growth of the institution since unification is reflected in the increase of values since 1939, when the physical plant was worth $886,553, and the endowment $4,900. In 1970 the physical plant was valued at $6,710,341, and the endowment at $2,570,476.

Degrees granted are the B.A., B.S., A.B.T. (Teaching). The governing board of thirty members is a self-perpetuating board with ten laymen and five ministers of The United Methodist Church, the resident bishop of the Western North Carolina Conference, and the balance at large.

JOHN O. CROSS

HIGHTOWER, TED (1906-), American minister, city pastor and member of successive GENERAL CONFERENCES of The Methodist Church, was born in Troy, Ala., Nov. 5, 1906. He holds the A.B. and D.D. (honorary) degrees from BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE. He married Ivan Jo Williams in 1928, and they had two children. Admitted to the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE on trial in 1927, he continued there until 1940, and then transferred to the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE where he served Trinity Church, MEMPHIS, 1940-44, and Broadway Church, Paducah, Ky., 1944-49. Transferring to the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE, his pastorates there have been: St. Paul Church, LOUISVILLE, 1949-66, and State Street Church, Bowling Green, 1966—. Hightower was a member of the 1960, '64, '66, '68 and '70 General Conferences, leading his conference delegation in 1960. He was a member of each JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE from 1948 to 1968, except 1952. A member of the General Board of CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CONCERNS since 1960, he has served on its executive committee, and as chairman for one quadrennium of its committee on the United Nations. He has been president of the Southeastern Jurisdictional Board of Temperance, and a member of the advisory Council of the Commission on Inter-Jurisdictional Relations. Author of The Gospel According to Jesus, 1957, and The Windows of St. Paul, 1964.

HILDT, JOHN MELCHIOR (1775-1862), early American United Brethren clergyman, was born in POLAND, Sept. 21, 1775. Enlisted in the war then raging, he joined General Kosciusko of American Revolutionary War fame in the defense of Warsaw. Ten thousand Polish patriots fought valiantly for eight hours against fifty thousand Russians. When General Kosciusko was wounded and taken prisoner, Hildt jumped from the ramparts, and swam the Vistula River at night. Later he emigrated to the United States, landing in BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 26, 1800, after a stormy voyage of twenty-two weeks. Being a well educated and attractive person he soon won a good standing in the cultural and business circles of Baltimore.

On Good Friday, 1800, he heard PHILIP WILLIAM OTTERBEIN preach, was converted, and joined Otterbein's church the following Easter. He married Mary Weller, 1802, a prominent Baltimore lady. Of their nine children, two sons entered the ministry: one in the United Brethren in Christ, the other in the M. E. Church. His wife died in 1825; later he married Mary Wolgamuth, who also preceded him in death, Mary 27, 1857.

Hildt received a local preacher's license shortly before Otterbein's death; joined the PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, in 1817; served as itinerant minister, presiding elder, and secretary of the GENERAL CONFERENCE. He moved to Dover, Ohio, where he joined the Muskingum Conference.

In 1829, he traveled by horseback from OHIO to Hagerstown, Md., to confer with Bishop CHRISTIAN NEWCOMER about the translation of the Bishop's journal from German into English. This Journal, published in 1834, covered the period, 1795-1830, and became one of the most valued historical documents in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

John Hildt died April 4, 1862 and was buried at Dover, Ohio.

HILL, BENJAMIN OGILVIE (1883-), American missionary to CUBA and long-time president of Colegio Pinson, CAMAGUEY, was born Dec. 15, 1883, in Hills Prairie, Texas. His parents were Dr. A. M. and Sarah Elizabeth (Holmes) Hill, and he was educated at SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, Georgetown, Texas, and at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, Texas. On April 11, 1910 he married Ethel Star Ellis of ATLANTA, Ga., and to them were born twin boys, who died in Cuba, and two daughters. In 1907 he was appointed to Cuba where he served as pastor of La Gloria, Matanzas, Santa Clara, Cienfuegos and Guantanamo, until in 1912 he was appointed president of Colegio Pinson in Camaguey. He held this position for sixteen years, during which time he also organized a community church for all denominations which served the large English-speaking population in that city.

In 1929 he left Cuba for family health reasons and was sent to the LYDIA PATTERSON INSTITUTE, El Paso, Texas, where for eighteen years he was professor of Bible and in charge of the seminary work done by Spanish-speaking students, most of whom were in connection with the RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE. In 1946 he joined the faculty of PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas, as professor of missions and counselor of Latin American seminary students; also he was director of S.M.U. Extension Work at Texas College, Tyler, until his retirement from active duty in 1956. He presently lives in Georgetown, Texas.

HILL, DAVID (1840-1896), distinguished British Methodist missionary, was born in York, England, Dec. 18, 1840, the son of gracious and wealthy Methodist parents. In 1864 he was ordained into the Wesleyan ministry at York, after training at RICHMOND COLLEGE, and sailed for China with William Scarborough, who remained his colleague until 1887. Hill was deeply saintly, as his letters and diaries prove, and was everywhere revered by his Chinese people. Compassion and prayer characterized his life as a missionary, spent in the Hupeh district. His main stations were Hankow, Wuchang, Wusueh, and Kwangtsi, and he became chairman in 1885. He gave generously from his own wealth to the funds of the MISSIONARY SOCIETY and supported some of the institutions he began by his own gifts. For some time he worked closely with Timothy Richard, the great Baptist missionary. Among Hill's creations were the Prayer Union Letter, the Central China Lay Mission, an Old Peoples' Home, and the Hankow Blind School, all exemplifying his devotion and love for the unprivileged and the non-Christian. He died in Hankow April 18, 1896, from typhoid.

HILL, "MAJOR" GREEN (1741-1826), American local preacher and Revolutionary soldier, was born in the present Franklin, then Granville and later Bute, County, N. C. He married Mary Seawell, daughter of Benjamin Seawell, June 3, 1773. They had eight children: Green III, Lucy Hill Cannon, John, Thomas, Sally, Mary Hill de Graffenreid, William, and Joshua. Hill was about thirty years of age when he became interested in the Methodist movement, probably through the influence of JOHN KING, his brother-in-law. Hill became a local preacher, and so far as is known he was the first native North Carolinian to serve in that capacity.

He was an elected representative from Bute County to all of the NORTH CAROLINA colonial assemblies, including the one at HALIFAX when North Carolina became the first of the American colonies to sever relations with England. He served on the committee to draft a civil constitution for North Carolina. Also he was a major in the militia. In 1779 Hill introduced the first bill in North Carolina, making provision for the indigent. In 1781 he enlisted in the Continental Army as a CHAPLAIN. After the war he was elected treasurer of the Halifax District and later served as Counselor of State under Governor Caswell.

GREEN HILL HOUSE, LOUISBURG

Major Hill's house was selected by Bishops ASBURY and COKE as the meeting place for the first conference following organization of the M. E. Church at BALTIMORE in 1784. The conference was held April 20-24, 1785, and twenty preachers were present from VIRGINIA, North and SOUTH CAROLINA. It was at this conference that Coke spoke pointedly against slavery. Hill was a large land owner and owned a number of slaves. Three other Methodist conferences were held in the Hill home in North Carolina—January 1790, December 1791, and December 1794. The house, which was designated a national Methodist historic SHRINE by the GENERAL CONFERENCE, has been well preserved. There were five rooms in the basement, four on the middle level, and one large room in the attic where the conference was actually held.

In 1796 Hill crossed the mountains to the westward and settled in what is now middle TENNESSEE. He moved his family in 1799 to another fine home, "Liberty Hill," which he built about twelve miles from NASHVILLE. The house was located on part of the land now occupied by the Nashville airport. There in October 1808, Hill entertained the WESTERN CONFERENCE, the first conference presided over by WILLIAM MCKENDREE after he was elected bishop.

Hill died at Liberty Hill on Sept. 11, 1826, and was buried near his home. The Tennessee Historical Society has placed a marker at the entrance to the cemetery.

HILL, RAFAEL R. (1899-), Uruguayan youth leader and physician, was born in MONTEVIDEO. Hill contributed to Uruguayan Methodism in two ways.

For more than twenty years he was the acknowledged youth leader of Methodist churches not only in his own country, but for all South America, and to a large extent of all Protestant young people of the continent. He helped to found and sustain the Latin American Federation of Evangelical Youth. He was the editor of La Idea, longest-lived of the Protestant youth journals. Under Hill's leadership, Methodist young people were active in street preaching, debates on political and social topics, in camps and institutes, and in writing, translating, and publishing Christian literature.

As a physician, Hill was one of the founders of the Evangelical Mutual Aid Society, whose members pay a monthly stipend and receive medical care, including hospital, physician's fees, and prescribed medicines.

One of the goals of the Mutual Aid Society was to build a first-class hospital. This was realized in the development, from 1935 until its opening in 1964, of the Evangelical Hospital in Montevideo. It is in a sense a monument to Hill.

EARL M. SMITH

ROWLAND HILL

HILL, ROWLAND (1744-1833), British evangelical, was the sixth son of Sir Rowland Hill of Hawkstone, Shropshire, and brother of Richard Hill. He was born on Aug. 23, 1744. At Cambridge he led a holy club similar to that of the Wesleys at Oxford. Ordained deacon in 1774, Hill was refused priest's orders because of his persistent itineration. Thus he was compelled, as he put it, to go through life "wearing only one ecclesiastical boot." He preached for the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON until in 1781 she withdrew her patronage. Surrey Chapel was built for him in 1783. Hill, despite his eccentricities, provided a unique link between the Anglican and Dissenting elements of the revival. His principal work is Village Dialogues (London, 1801; 34th ed. 1839). He died in London, April 11, 1833.

HILL, WILLIAM WALLACE (1788-1849), American minister referred to as the "Luther of the Methodist Reform movement" of the 1820's, had the distinction of serving as the first president of both the NORTH CAROLINA and ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCES of the M. P. Church. He was born in HALIFAX COUNTY, N. C. on July 21, 1788. Described as "zealous, educated, and eloquent," William W. Hill was not only an able preacher but a lucid writer and scholar. He was preaching on the Matamuskeet Circuit in North Carolina when he joined the ROANOKE UNION SOCIETY in April 1825. Because of his desire to bring about reform in the M. E. Church government, he was called to trial on Aug. 7, 1825, but due to his convincing argument in his own defense, he was acquitted instead of expelled from the church. At the first meeting of the North Carolina Annual Conference, held at WHITAKER'S CHAPEL, near Enfield, N. C., William W. Hill was elected president and traveling agent for the state (Dec. 19, 1828). He was a delegate to the first GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church in Baltimore, on Nov. 12, 1828. His "zeal, learning, talents and eloquence . . . placed him amongst the most distinguished" ministers of the new denomination. In 1835 he moved to Alabama where he became a leader in organization for the M. P. Church and in 1846 he was elected president of the Alabama Conference of the M. P. Church and in the same year was chosen as a representative to the General Conference, though he did not attend the latter. Historian T. H. COLHOUSER said of Hill: "Mentally he was profound in thought, clear in comprehension, positive in conviction, and fearless in expression." He was listed as a member of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church in 1848 and he died in Mississippi on Sept. 7, 1849.

HILLCREST CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, first known as Regina Bible Institute, was founded in 1941 at Regina, Saskatchewan in CANADA as an institution of the Evangelical Church. It began under the direction of a pioneer in Western Canada, Peter Allinger, with the facilities of Calvary Evangelical Church providing the original campus. F. S. Magsig became the first president in 1941 and continued leadership until 1954.

In 1947 the school was relocated at Medicine Hat, Alberta, the center of concentration for the conference. That same year the name of the school was changed to Hillcrest Christian College.

For the first fourteen years in Medicine Hat, the college carried on its program in a large brick building previously used as an armory building and a fire hall. In 1960-61 the first step in a major building program was completed and the college relocated to the outskirts of the city of Medicine Hat on a twenty-acre campus. The new plant and facilities include an Administration Building and a Student Dormitory. Total assets of the college are $400,000. The annual budget totals $115,000.

Enrollment over the past four years has ranged from eighty to the one hundred mark. There are seven full-time faculty members.

The curriculum offerings include High School, Liberal Arts, and Bible. The High School Program consists of full grade eleven and twelve with the option of either the general diploma course or the university preparatory course.

In the Bible Department a concentrated one-year course is offered as a preparatory experience for students who will be going on for training on the large secular university campus. The three-year Bible College course is designed to provide lay leadership and preparatory training for a Christian vocation. The Liberal Arts Department provides the full first and second year program transferable toward the Baccalaureate Degree.

There are four hundred alumni members, a large percentage of whom are serving the church as ministers, missionaries, and educators.

HILLER, HARLEY E. (1900-), American E. U. B. minister, was born Nov. 17, 1900.

He was married to Mildred L. Hauk Aug. 18, 1926. The couple have two children, Harley, Jr., and Margaret.

Dr. Hiller received the B.A. degree from WESTMAR COLLEGE in 1924, the B.D. degree from EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Naperville, Ill. in 1926 and the D.D. degree from Westmar College in 1947. Having been licensed to preach in 1923, he served student pastorates in IOWA and ILLINOIS. He was ordained an elder in the MINNESOTA CONFERENCE, The Evangelical Church, April 29, 1927.

His service to his Church has included the following: pastor of St. Paul (Faith), Blue Earth, and Duluth congregations and conference superintendent. He was member of GENERAL CONFERENCE five times. He became treasurer of the Board of Pensions of The E. U. B. Church, Feb. 16, 1959, and was elected its Executive Secretary, Jan. 1, 1963. In addition, Dr. Hiller served on various Minnesota Conference and General Church Boards and Agencies, as well as Councils of Churches in St. Paul, Duluth, and the Minnesota State Council of Churches.

In The United Methodist Church Dr. Hiller was elected Associate General Secretary of the Board of Pensions. He retained his membership in the Minnesota Conference. With retirement in 1970 he moved to Dayton, Ohio where he presently resides.

HILLIARD, HENRY WASHINGTON (1808-1892), American lawyer, educator, minister, Confederate general, representative in congress, was born Aug. 4, 1808 in Fayetteville, N. C.; graduated from South Carolina College; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1829; practiced law in Athens, Ga., 1829-31; came to ALABAMA as professor at University of Alabama; was appointed charge d'affaires to BELGIUM by President John Tyler, 1842-44; served three terms as member of the United States House of Representatives from Alabama. An ardent opponent of secession, he met William L. Yancey in debate on the subject, but when Alabama seceded, he gave the State his strong support and in 1862, he was made a brigadier general, raised Hilliard's regiment of about 3,000 men and entered the Confederate States Army service with it. In 1877, President Hayes appointed him U. S. Minister to BRAZIL serving 1877-81. He was author of five published books. At the second session of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE in 1832, he was admitted into the Conference. His first appointment was professor of the Wesleyan Female Academy, Tuscaloosa. At the following conference, he was ordained deacon and appointed pastor. The closing years of his life, he was a lawyer in Georgia, and died in Atlanta, Dec. 17, 1892.

HILLIARD, WILLIAM ALEXANDER (1904-), elected to the episcopacy of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH in Buffalo, N. Y. in May 1960, is a native of TEXAS, born Sept. 14, 1904, the son of John H. and Carrie (Hicks) Hilliard. At an early age his parents took him to Kansas City, Kan. where he spent several years. Later, the family moved to Des Moines, Iowa, where William Alexander completed his elementary school training. His high school education was completed in Kansas City, Kan. His college work was done at Western University in Quindlers, Kan., and his seminary training at the same institution. Later he did additional work at Wayne University, Detroit, Mich. In 1948 he was honored with the D.D. degree from LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE, Salisbury, N. C. for outstanding service in the denomination. In 1927 he married Miss Edra Mael of Kansas City, Mo.

Bishop Hilliard served as pastor of the following churches before being elevated to the episcopacy: St. Matthew Church, Kansas City; Mt. Zion, Argentine, Kansas; Metropolitan, Kansas City, Mo.; Metropolitan, Chester, S. C.; St. John, Wilson, N. C. and St. Paul, Detroit, Mich. His first episcopal quadrennium was spent supervising the work of the denomination in GHANA and NIGERIA as the resident bishop of that area.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

HILLMAN, JOHN LINNAEUS (1865-1957), American minister, educator, and college president, was born in Licking County, Ohio, on July 8, 1865. He was a student at the Academy of OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY when he was converted at sixteen following a religious experience that made a deep impression upon him. He continued his college work at Ohio Wesleyan University and graduated in 1886 with the B.A. degree. That same year he entered the CENTRAL OHIO CONFERENCE on trial. His theological training was received at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. After his graduation in 1889 he returned to his home conference until 1896.

Hillman displayed great ability as an evangelist. At one evangelistic meeting in Marion, Ohio, 1,000 persons professed conversion under his ministry.

After five years in the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE, Hillman returned to OHIO in 1909 to accept the pastorate of Youngstown Trinity Church. His emphasis on evangelism led to an increase in the church's membership by 800 in three years. And when he took the pastorate of a Des Moines, Iowa church in 1912, he was able to double the church's membership and retire its outstanding indebtedness through his personal evangelism and able management.

In thirty years, Hillman was credited with having brought over 6,000 converts into the M. E. Church.

In 1917 Hillman was named president of SIMPSON COLLEGE, Indianola, Iowa, a post he held with great distinction for seventeen years. After his retirement he continued as president-emeritus and professor of Bible.

During Hillman's administration, the entrance and graduation standards were increased, the college gained considerable recognition for the quality of its students and faculty, the endowment funds were doubled, and the administration building (later to be named in his honor) was built.

Hillman was one of the first to notice the work of George Washington Carver, and Simpson College gave the great Negro scientist the first honorary degree he ever received.

Greatly admired by his colleagues in the church, Hillman was elected as a delegate to five GENERAL CONFERENCES. From 1918 to 1936 he held membership in the UNIVERSITY SENATE of the M. E. Church. From 1924 to 1936 he was a member of the Book Committee in charge of the church's BOOK CONCERN. He was twice chairman of the General Conference Committee on Education and was active on the General Conference's Commission on Evangelism.

Hillman's work in the church and education won him recognition by a number of colleges and universities which awarded him honorary degrees. BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE and Ohio Wesleyan University conferred the D.D. degree upon him, and College of the Pacific awarded him the LL.D. degree. Simpson College gave him the L.H.D. degree.

HILLMAN, JOSEPH (1823-1890), prominent American author and layman, was born in Schoharie County, N. Y. When thirteen years old, he joined the Methodist Church in Troy, N. Y. A successful businessman, he devoted himself to the work of the church throughout his life. Associated with the Congress Street Church in Troy, he was variously Sunday school superintendent, exhorter, steward, and trustee. In 1858 he organized the "Troy Praying Band." With other laymen he began the Round Lake Camp Meeting Association and was its president for several years. A director of the Manufacturers' National Bank, an agent of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, a member of the United States Electoral College of 1876, he was also a promoter of contemporary benevolent societies. He published the "Round Lake Journal" and was the author of numerous books including The History of Methodism in Troy, How Can I Be Saved?, Sunday School Hymns and Choruses, and The Revivalist.

The latter book of 600 hymns and tunes was very popular; over 150,000 copies of it were sold.

He died in Troy on June 14, 1890.

HILL'S ARRANGEMENT is best defined in terms of the original title of the volume published in 1819 by William Hill: An Alphabetical Arrangement of all the Wesleyan Methodist Preachers, and Missionaries, who are now travelling in Great-Britain, and in distant parts of the globe, with a view of all the circuits and stations, to which they have been appointed by the Conference, from the commencement of their itinerary to the present time. The book was printed in Bradford; there were 765 itinerants and fifty-three supernumeraries recorded. A second edition was published at Rotherham in 1824, and it is probable that William Hill was responsible for these two editions only; he seems to have died in 1827. Nevertheless, he is described as the editor of the third, fourth, and fifth editions. In 1847 the sixth edition was edited by John P. Haswell; the editor of the intervening editions is unknown.

The book was reedited from time to time throughout the history of Wesleyan Methodism, the twenty-fifth edition appearing in 1926; from 1824 it became the custom to print a list of all ministers who had died in the work, and of presidents of the Conference. By 1926 the title had become Ministers and Probationers in Connexion with the British and Irish Conferences, etc. After Methodist Union a new edition was prepared, published in 1932. This added the records of the PRIMITIVE METHODIST and UNITED METHODIST ministries to that of the Wesleyan Methodist ministry, and publication has continued at irregular intervals. The book is of great value to the Methodist historian, and is still often called "Hill's Arrangement." The edition of 1964, revised to the Conference of 1963, was edited by J. Henry Martin and J. Bernard Sheldon.

HINDE, THOMAS (1734-1826), an English and American leader, Thomas Hinde's work is associated with Clark County, Ky. Born in Oxfordshire, England, July 1734, he received his training in medicine and surgery there. Before migrating to America, he served his native country as a surgeon in the Royal Navy. In 1767 he married Mary Todd Hubbard of VIRGINIA. They located in Hanover County, Va., where he established his practice in medicine. During his residence there, Dr. Hinde was physician to the Patrick Henry family.

Mary Todd Hubbard Hinde was one of the early converts to Methodism. Her husband regarded the Methodists as fanatical zealots and suspected that their preaching was affecting his wife's mentality. To bring her to her senses, he put a blister plaster on her neck. When he discovered this treatment was not producing the desired results, Hinde told her he thought she would feel better if she joined the Methodists. Later he, too, was converted and became a devout and dedicated Christian. Around 1800 the family moved to KENTUCKY.

The Hinde Family are remembered in Kentucky especially for their works and for the influence their descendants had upon Methodism. Prominent among them were Bishop H. H. KAVANAUGH and three of his brothers, who were members of the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE. Hinde's grandson, Edward L. Southgate, was a member of both the Kentucky and LOUISVILLE conferences. Hinde died at the home of his daughter in Lexington, Ky. in 1826.

HINES, GUSTAVUS (1809-1873), American pioneer preacher in the Pacific Northwest, was born in New York State, Sept. 16, 1809. In 1830 he married Lydia Bryant, and moved shortly afterwards to western New York where they took up residence in a small log cabin. He entered the Methodist itinerant ministry in 1832, and traveled the pioneer circuits of western New York. He served several important appointments. In 1839 he accepted the call to become a member of the OREGON MISSION, and arrived in OREGON on the ship Lausanne in 1840.

He traveled with JASON LEE to visit the Umpqua Valley, but did not settle there. His first work with the mission was with the Indians, and he was given charge of the Mission Manual Labor School. Later he was pastor at many of the principal settlements. He served as presiding elder, and represented his Conference at the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1868. When Jason Lee was preparing for his last trip to the East, he entrusted his motherless daughter to the care of Lydia and Gustavus Hines. After the death of Lee, the little girl was reared as their own.

In 1845 Gustavus Hines returned to New York by way of the Sandwich Islands, CHINA, and SOUTH AFRICA. He resumed his labors in the GENESEE CONFERENCE, where he remained until the winter of 1852, when he again transferred to Oregon. He crossed the plains in the summer of 1853, reaching PORTLAND in October of that year.

He wrote the book, Oregon and Its Institutions, which was published in 1868. He died at Salem, Ore., Dec. 9, 1873, and was buried at the Lee Mission Cemetery at Salem.

HINES, HARVEY K. (1828-1902), American pioneer preacher, editor and legislator in the Pacific Northwest, was the youngest of twelve children of James and Betsy (Round) Hines. He was born in Herkimer County, N. Y. in 1828. His early life was spent in Oswego County, N. Y., to which the family moved when he was three years old. In his fourteenth year he was converted and before he was sixteen he was licensed to exhort. Later he moved to western New York, and was employed as a supply on the Eden Circuit of the GENESEE CONFERENCE. When he was twenty he was admitted on trial to that conference.

He was married at Wyoming, N. Y., 1852, to Elizabeth J. Graves. In December 1852, he was transferred to the OREGON CONFERENCE, which was then a mission conference. The following summer he crossed the plains with an ox team reaching PORTLAND, Oct. 3, 1853. At the first session of the Oregon Annual Conference, 1853, he was appointed by Bishop EDWARD R. AMES to a charge in Portland. Of his thirty-nine years of active service, he spent eleven on stations, sixteen years as presiding elder, one year as college agent, eight years as editor of Pacific Christian Advocate, and three years as a theological professor. He traveled in the service of the church about 180,000 miles, preached about 6,000 sermons, held 900 Quarterly Conferences, and dedicated 54 churches.

He served two years as a member and president of the upper house of the Washington Territorial Legislature, and one year as CHAIRMAN of its House of Representatives.

He wrote many books. Probably his greatest contribution to church history was his Missionary History of the Pacific Northwest, which was published in 1899.

HINMAN, CLARK T. (1819-1854), American educator, was born in Kartwright, N. Y., Aug. 3, 1819. He graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Middletown, Conn., in 1839 and came in the same year to Newbury Seminary, Newbury, Vt., where he taught mathematics, Greek and intellectual science for seven years. He assumed administrative leadership of the Seminary in 1844 and carried these duties for two years in addition to his work as an instructor.

He was elected to the principalship of Wesleyan Seminary at Albion, Mich. in 1846. In due course he became the first president of ALBION COLLEGE. He was elected the first president of NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, Evanston, Ill., June 23, 1853. The strenuous work involved in raising funds and recruiting students proved to be more than Hinman's health could stand and he died at Troy, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1854, while en route to Newbury.

Hinman was an orator by nature and cultivation. His method of teaching was to awaken thought in the minds of his students by setting them to investigate, assisting them when necessary, but leaving them to draw their own conclusions. Hinman Street in Evanston, on which the first church property there stands, was named for Hinman.

Hinman's wife, Martha Morse, was the daughter of Timothy Morse, one of the incorporating trustees of Newbury Seminary. Dr. and Mrs. Hinman are buried at Newbury, Vt.

HIRAIWA, YOSHIYASU (1856-1933), bishop of the JAPAN Methodist Church, was born in TOKYO, where he spent most of his ministry. He was led to Christ and baptized in 1875, by George Cochran, founder of the Canadian Methodist Mission. He answered the call to full-time Christian service and served pastorates in Shizuoka and Kofu, as well as Tokyo. When the YMCA was started about 1880, he was prominent among leading Japanese Christians in sponsoring it.

In 1907 the missions and Japanese churches of the M. E. Church, the M. E. Church, South and the Methodist Church of Canada united to form the Japan Methodist Church. Hiraiwa had been active in promoting the union and was chairman of the joint committee which drafted the constitution. He was the first chairman of the Evangelism Committee of the new Church.

In 1912, on the death of Bishop HONDA, Hiraiwa was elected to succeed him, and thus became the second bishop of the Japan Methodist Church. He was re-elected in 1915. After his term expired in 1919, he founded the Asagaya Methodist Church in Tokyo and guided it to full self-support.

HISTORICAL SOCIETIES, ASSOCIATION OF METHODIST, the official historical agency of The Methodist Church, began in May 1923, when a few interested persons met in BALTIMORE, Md., to discuss Methodist historical matters. Conscious of the need of a general Methodist historical agency, they organized an "Association of Methodist Historical Societies" in which annual conference and city historical societies of different branches of American Methodism could hold membership.

At the call of EDWARD L. WATSON of the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE (ME), the first annual meeting of the Association was held in PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 10, 1925. Watson was elected president, holding the office until his death in 1936. Other officers were H. K. Carroll (New York), first vice-president; C. S. Nutter (Boston), second vice-president; Charles F. Eggleston (layman from Philadelphia), secretary-treasurer. The executive committee included C. T. Collyer, BALTIMORE CONFERENCE (MES) and W. H. Litsinger, MARYLAND CONFERENCE (MP), along with representatives from Methodist historical societies in BOSTON, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and NEW YORK. A constitution was adopted which said the purpose of the Association was "cooperation in the preservation, presentation and display of Methodist historical material and the dissemination of information concerning the same." Affiliated societies were assessed a membership fee of $10 per year. Beginning in 1925 the Association met annually.

The Association was given official recognition, but no funds, by the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. E. and

M. P. Churches in 1936, and by the General Conference, M. E., South in 1938.

In 1940 the first General Conference of The Methodist Church recognized the Association and authorized the formation of historical associations in the Jurisdictions and historical societies in the annual conferences. In 1944, ELMER T. CLARK was elected president of the Association. Clark gave vigorous leadership to the organization and sought funds for its work. His report to the 1948 General Conference pointed out that Historical Associations had been organized in the Northeastern, Southeastern, and North Central JURISDICTIONS, while seventy-five annual conferences had more or less active historical societies. Also, the report noted that an INTERNATIONAL METHODIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY had been organized at the 1947 ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, with Bishop PAUL N. GABBER as president and Clark as the American secretary. The 1948 General Conference approved an appropriation of $6,000 per year for the Association, the first help it received from general church funds.

In 1948, Bishop IVAN LEE HOLT was elected president, and Clark was made executive secretary. In that year the Association began printing occasionally the bulletin entitled World Parish, which consisted of reports from Methodist correspondents in different parts of the world. In 1963, World Parish became exclusively a publication of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

In 1952, a new constitution for the Association was adopted by the General Conference, and since 1956 the constitution has been published in the Discipline. The annual appropriation for the Association was increased in 1952 to $12,000, and headquarters were established at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C. In that year Clark began to give full time as executive secretary of both the Association and the World Methodist Council; Mrs. Kenneth Stahl (later Mrs. R. C. QUEEN, JR.) was made office secretary and then editorial assistant. Under Clark's direction both the Association and the Council grew in importance and usefulness to the church. In 1955, he led in raising funds and erecting at Lake Junaluska the World Methodist Building, which houses both the Council and the Association. Several volumes of significance for Methodist history have been published, including, in 1958, an annotated edition of the Journal and Letters of Francis Asbury.

Succeeding General Conferences raised the annual appropriation for the Association; the more adequate budget enabled the organization to join the World Methodist Council in gradually building up a good Methodist historical library of more than 12,000 volumes, along with valuable Methodistica and Wesleyana. The latter includes a fine collection of Wesley art objects, many prints, and several Salisbury portraits of WESLEY, ASBURY, and other Methodist leaders. The Association and the Council are indebted to Clark for adding his own extensive library of Methodist history and Methodistica to the collection. The World Methodist Building and its contents have proved to be of interest and value, not only to persons doing serious work in the field of Methodist history, but also the thousands of visitors who come to Lake Junaluska every year.

Historical Associations were organized in the South Central Jurisdiction in 1952, and in the Western Jurisdiction in 1964. The Association established the quarterly periodical Methodist History in 1962. In the same year it began encouraging all Methodist historical organizations in America to contribute funds toward the WESLEY WORKS

EDITORIAL PROJECT, a fifteen-year undertaking sponsored by four American Methodist universities to bring out an annotated, indexed edition of all the prose works of John Wesley. In cooperation with the UPPER ROOM Library and the Methodist Librarians' Fellowship, the Association began in 1964 the preparation of a Union Card Catalog of all Methodist historical materials. The Association, in cooperation with the World Methodist Council, provided funds for the sponsorship of this Encyclopedia of World Methodism (see Preface to this work).

By direction of the 1960 General Conference, the thirty-two-member executive committee of the Association was responsible for formulating the plan for the celebration of the BICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM in 1966. As a feature of the celebration, the Association established an annual prize of $1,500 for the best book-length manuscript on Methodist history, along with $1,000 in grants-in-aid to seminary students for special study projects in the same field.

Bishop T. OTTO NALL became president of the Association in 1960 and was reelected in 1964. On the retirement of Elmer T. Clark in 1963, ALBEA GODBOLD was elected as executive secretary, and on his retirement in 1968, JOHN H. NESS, JR. was elected executive secretary. Bishop ROY H. SHORT was elected president in 1968.

ALBEA GODBOLD

HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF THE EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN. E.U.B. historical interest is nearly as old as the Church. Each former denomination—The Church of the United Brethren in Christ and The Evangelical Church—authorized histories to be produced within the first fifty years of their organized life. There was no official attempt however to preserve the records of the Church except through individuals or agencies.

The earliest organized effort was in 1885 when the leaders of the United Brethren in Christ formed a Historical Society and incorporated it in Ohio. Paid memberships were solicited and space was provided for a depository by the publishing agent in Dayton, Ohio. After a number of years, when leadership and a room for the depository became available at Bonebrake Theological Seminary in the same city, the society was moved.

The first effort toward a historical organization among Evangelicals was in the Central Pennsylvania Conference of The United Evangelical Church. During the 1909 annual session a membership society was formed, which was legally incorporated in Pennsylvania in 1917. With the union of the Evangelical Association and The United Evangelical Church in 1922, this conference society became the parent Historical Society of The Evangelical Church. Its charter was amended in 1927 to harmonize with the General Conference action of 1922. The depository was located at the Evangelical School of Theology, Reading, Pa. In 1934, the General Conference recommended that the Albright Chapel, Kleinfeltersville, Pa., erected adjacent to the grave of Jacob Albright, become the property of The Historical Society. Its ownership was invested in the East Pennsylvania Conference, but transfer of custodianship was effected in 1939.

When the E.U.B. Church was formed in 1946, authorization was granted by the General Conference to the creation of The Historical Society, a legal successor to the respective societies of the two former denominations. It was incorporated in Ohio. Then in 1954, the two depositories were joined at one location, the upper floor of the library of United Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio. Within ten years this space became too cramped for The Historical Society and also proved to be needed for the seminary library. In 1965 the depository and offices were moved into the three-floor wing of the new Board of Publication Center, 140 South Perry Street, Dayton, Ohio. At the same time the historical libraries of the Board of Publication, located at the two publishing houses (Harrisburg, Pa. and Dayton, Ohio), were moved to and placed under the care of The Historical Society. This provided a central depository, well equipped with the records of the Church. The holdings in 1967 amounted to more than 11,000 accessioned volumes and 100,000 manuscript pieces.

The society was managed by a trustee board of fifteen members, eight of whom were elected by the General Conference. The remaining persons were members by virtue of their general church responsibilities. An executive committee of five members, elected by the board, transacted business between sessions of the board. There were no society memberships and the agency was amenable to the General Conference of the denomination.

With the formation of The United Methodist Church in 1968, The Historical Society united with the Association of Methodist Historical Societies to form The Commission on Archives and History (see ARCHIVES—HISTORY, COMMISSION ON).

HISTORIES OF METHODISM. JOHN WESLEY himself wrote both A Short History of Methodism (1765) and a much fuller "Short History of the People called Methodists" in volume four of his Concise Ecclesiastical History (1781). These were produced partly in defense of this evangelical phenomenon, partly as examples of his favorite theme, "What hath God wrought!" It is not surprising that succeeding generations in all countries have followed his lead. The early nineteenth century histories of Methodism in various places were very few, however. One of the pioneers of detailed local histories in England was JAMES EVERETT, whose Historical Sketches of Wesleyan Methodism in Sheffield (1823) and Wesleyan Methodism in Manchester and its vicinity (1827) remain standard works, though rare. Of similar eyewitness value are JESSE LEE'S Short History of Methodism in the United States of America (1810), and W. M. HARVARD'S Narrative of the Establishment and Progress of the Mission to Ceylon and India, founded by the late Rev. Thomas Coke (1823).

Most of these early histories of Methodism, however, of necessity lacked historical perspective, and being prepared long before the rise of the careful study of historiography suffered from an uncritical approach and a lack of documentation. Before any of their conclusions are accepted at face value each should be studied carefully and tested by the contemporary documents now available. This is true also of the surge of centenary histories which first arose in England during the nineteenth century, and later grew into a flood of works commemorative of various anniversaries throughout the world in many languages, ranging from small brochures published by tiny congregations to lengthy documents emanating from mission boards and volumes like R. Ernst Grob's Die Bischöfliche Methodistenkirche in Schweiz, 664 pages, published in Zurich in 1931 to commemorate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the M. E. Church in SWITZERLAND. Unfortunately critical standards of historiography have influenced only an infinitesimal percentage of such commemorative works (though they nevertheless have their value), and the same has been true of local histories in general until the present generation, when this subject has become an acceptable project for a university dissertation.

Truly adequate histories of Methodism in most communities and countries throughout the world remain to be written, and most of the commendable ones need bringing up to date. Brief though valuable guides to writing them have been issued, in England by the WESLEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY—How to write a Local History of Methodism, by Wesley F. Swift (1964), revised by Thomas Shaw—and in the U.S.A. by the COMMISSION ON ARCHIVES AND HISTORY—How to write and publish the history of a Methodist Church, by Wallace Guy Smeltzer (1967).

With local histories, however, whatever their importance, we dare not here concern ourselves, for their name is legion. It would be impossible even to list all the national histories of Methodism, let alone the sources from which they must be compiled—innumerable local histories, biographies, official reports, manuscript diaries and minute books, newspaper accounts, articles in periodicals learned and popular, monographs on special topics. Those interested in the history of Methodism of any special branch in any special area should consult this Encyclopaedia, noting the bibliography appended to the relevant articles. All that is possible here is to refer to some of the basic general works with which a study of Methodism might well begin; in many instances a brief characterization has been added. From histories of world Methodism we move to studies of Methodism in Great Britain, its divisions, offshoots, and missions, and thus to the U.S.A., its divisions, offshoots, and missions, with a final glance at Methodism and the ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT. In thus proceeding from the general to the particular—and back to the general in closing!—there will be almost no cross-referencing, and readers should note that the best history of Methodism in some denomination or country may well be found in one of the more general histories.

Histories of world Methodism insofar as this was an aspect of the missionary enterprise of either the British or the American church are noted later; histories of world Methodism, so far as may be documented, seem for long to have been the preserve of American writers, possibly influenced by the fact that in 1844 their own Methodism had been split cleanly in two. ABEL STEVENS was the pioneer in this field, with the three volumes of his History of the Religious Movement of the Eighteenth Century called Methodism, considered in its different denominational forms and in its relation to British and American Protestantism (New York, Carlton and Porter, 1858-61), a work of shrewd observations and valuable documentation for its day. (This must be distinguished from his four-volume history of episcopal Methodism, noted below.) This work went through several editions in varying forms and with varying titles, including The Illustrated History of Methodism, of which an English edition edited by RICHARD GREEN brought events up to 1882 (Nottingham, Haslam, n.d., in 2 vols.).

MATTHEW SIMPSON'S Cyclopaedia of Methodism (Philadelphia, Everts & Stewart, 1878), covered similar ground, but with an alphabetical arrangement, and with the assistance of other writers. In 1879 W. H. DANIELS brought out his Illustrated History of Methodism in Great Britain and America, which also went through several changes, including enlargement such that "and Australia" could be added to the title from 1883; in 1896 this work was translated into Japanese. Both Stevens and Daniels wrote from the standpoint of the M. E. Church. Bishop H. M. McTYRE published his History of Methodism (Nashville, 1884) from the viewpoint of the M. E. Church, South; this was frequently reprinted, even as late as 1924. In 1887 appeared A. B. HYDE'S The Story of Methodism (Greenfield, Mass., Willey), in two volumes, later combined into one, of which the second enlarged edition of 1889 and onwards is especially valuable, though the flowery title of later editions (70th thousand, Toronto, 1894) issues its own warning to the critical scholar: "The story of Methodism throughout the world, tracing the rise and progress of that wonderful religious movement, which, like the Gulf Stream, has given warmth to wide waters and verdure to many lands. . . ." In 1900 appeared The Illustrated History of Methodism ("written in popular style and illustrated by more than one thousand portraits and views") by JAMES W. LEE, NAPHTALI LUCCOCK, and JAMES MAIN DIXON (St. Louis and New York, Methodist Magazine Publishing Co.). For its time this was a valuable work, and included a still useful folding table showing the formation and development of Methodism throughout the world.

The Illustrated History was speedily overshadowed by a much more ambitious all-inclusive work, A History of Methodism in seven volumes published by JOHN FLETCHER HURST. This also is a lavishly illustrated work written in a popular style, Bishop Hurst being the editor rather than the author. It is in three sections, each of which has separate pagination. The first three volumes (London, Kelly, 1901), were devoted to British Methodism, an excellent survey by Thomas E. Bridgen, of which the early chapters, slightly abridged, were reprinted in 1903 as John Wesley the Methodist, By a Methodist Preacher—the latter usually, but incorrectly, identified by librarians as Hurst himself. The three volumes on American Methodism (New York, Eaton and Mains, 1903), largely the work of JAMES R. JOY, are of similar size and character. The concluding volume is on "World-Wide Methodism" (New York, Eaton and Mains, 1904), and is of composite authorship, though no authors' names are given. It comprises eight sections, dealing in turn with British America, Australasia, Mexico and the West Indies, South America, Europe, Southern Asia, Eastern Asia, and Africa.

Although British authors touched up some of these American works, or (in the case of Hurst's) served as ghost-writers, the first major British work in this field did not appear until 1909, another composite work, this time in two volumes, A New History of Methodism (London, Hodder and Stoughton), edited by W. J. TOWNSEND, H. B. WORKMAN, and George Eayrs. This had far fewer illustrations, but they were of reasonably high quality for the time, and the work was somewhat more scholarly in approach than several of its predecessors. The main emphasis was upon British Methodism and its branches, which occupied the first volume. The second volume was devoted to "Methodism beyond the seas" (including chapters on Ireland, Europe, three on American Methodism and its branches, British America, Australasia, and South Africa), "Methodist Foreign Missionary Enterprise" (in two chapters dealing respectively with British and American societies), and "Methodism today." This still valuable work is enriched by a good index and a general bibliography, as well as by bibliographies prefixed to most chapters.

The most attractive one-volume work in this field is The Story of Methodism (New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1926), by HALFORD E. LUCCOCK and PAUL HUTCHINSON, balanced in perspective and popular in style and outlook. In 1949 it was brought up to date by ROBERT W. GOODLOE, and is still deservedly in print. Other smaller works cover the ground in various ways, including Part Three of FRANK BAKER'S A Charge to Keep: an Introduction to the People called Methodists (London, Epworth Press, 1947).

The early story of British Methodism was frequently told (often well told) by the biographers of John Wesley, and this continues to be the case. The major early examples are the works of THOMAS COKE and HENRY MOORE (1792), JOHN WHITEHEAD (2 vols., 1793, 1796), Robert Southey (2 vols., 1820), Henry Moore (2 vols., 1826), RICHARD WATSON (1831), and LUKE TYERMAN (3 vols., 1870-71). Of those who attempted to write Methodist history with Wesley as an incidental figure, three men stand out above others—WILLIAM MYLES, Joseph Nightingale, and JONATHAN CROWTHER. Myles published a pamphlet entitled A Short Chronological History of the Methodists in 1798, and the following year expanded it to A Chronological History of the People called Methodists. This was both enlarged and greatly improved in subsequent editions, far the best being the fourth, published by the Conference Office, London, in 1813, which included dated lists of the preachers and the preaching places. Joseph Nightingale (1775-1824) occasionally served as a Wesleyan LOCAL PREACHER, but became a Unitarian minister before he published A Portraiture of Methodism: being an impartial view of the Rise, Progress, Doctrines, Discipline, and Manners of the Wesleyan Methodists (London, Longman, etc., 1807). Although this drew the criticism of many loyal Methodists for its somewhat unsympathetic treatment in parts, it still offers many valuable insights. In 1810 one of the senior Wesleyan preachers, JONATHAN CROWTHER, tried to remedy its defects by issuing a much more sympathetic work along similar lines—A Methodist Manual; or, A Short History of the Wesleyan Methodists, including their Rise, Progress, and Present State. This was revised the following year as A True and Complete Portraiture of Methodism, which was reprinted in New York in 1813. This work was still further enlarged in a second edition (the fullest and best) imitating Nightingale's title more obviously, A Portraiture of Methodism (London, Edwards, 1815).

The works of Myles, Nightingale, and Crowther remained standard for half a century, and still have their use. As general histories of Methodism, however, they were displaced by GEORGE SMITH'S three-volume History of Wesleyan Methodism (London, 1857, 1858, and 1861), which remained in print with little change until past the turn of the century. This is annalistic in approach, and is still important not only for its own insights but for the appendices added to each volume. The successor to Smith was Bridgen's three-volume work in Hurst's History, noted above under World Methodism, though it contained far less detail. Even before this had appeared, however,

J. Robinson Gregory had embarked on a replacement for Smith, intended to cover other British denominations as well as the Wesleyans. Published two years after the New History, this work was both overshadowed by its great predecessor and reduced to dealing with Wesleyan Methodism only. Gregory's A History of Methodism (London, Kelly, 2 vols., 1911) is nevertheless of value for its unity of viewpoint and treatment, as well as for its greater detail in some areas, though in most it is not as full as Smith's History. These works are in turn being succeeded by another composite work, A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, edited by RUFERT DAVIES and E. GORDON RUPP, of which volume one, dealing with Wesley's century, appeared in 1965 (London, Epworth Press).

Of the divisions within British Methodism the most important was the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CONNEXION. A short history of this denomination was written in 1823 by HUGH BOURNE, but much fuller and more valuable is The History of the Primitive Methodist Connexion by JOHN PETTY (London, Davies, 1860), of which the best edition is the third (London, Dickenson, 1880). This was supplanted only by H. B. KENDALL'S History of the Primitive Methodist Church, which remains the standard work. This was issued in parts in 1905, and then in two volumes (London, Bryant, n.d.). Kendall also wrote a smaller History, first published in 1888, and in a revised edition in 1919.

Amalgamating with the Wesleyan Methodists and the Primitive Methodists in 1932 to form the Methodist Church was the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH. (The United Methodist Church here is not to be confused with The United Methodist Church, largely U.S.A.) This was itself a union dating from 1907, its subsequent history told in The Story of the United Methodist Church, edited by Henry Smith, John E. Swallow, and William Treffry (London, Hooks, 1933). The oldest constituent denomination of this church, the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, has been somewhat poorly served by conventional histories, the best being two composite works, the first issued in 1848 under the title The Jubilee of the Methodist New Connexion, and the second The Centenary of the Methodist New Connexion, 1797-1897. F. W. BOURNE wrote the standard history of another constituent—The Bible Christians: their Origin and History (1815-1900) (London, 1905). An attractive new study of their history and ethos is to be found in Thomas Shaw's The Bible Christians, 1815-1907 (London, Epworth Press, 1965). MATTHEW BAXTER wrote a lively and valuable account of the third constituent in his Methodism: Memorials of the United Methodist Free Churches, but this appeared in 1865, somewhat too near to the events which it describes to be objective. A more complete, scholarly, and balanced account is to be found in Oliver A. Beckerlegge's The United Methodist Free Churches (London, Epworth Press, 1957); the subtitle, "A Study in Freedom," reveals that this also has its minor "slant."

Two small Methodist denominations did not join in the British METHODIST UNION in 1932, the INDEPENDENT METHODISTS and the WESLEYAN REFORM UNION. The story of the former is told in Arthur Mounfield's A Short History of Independent Methodism (Wigan, 1905), and in James Vickers' History of Independent Methodism (Bolton, 1920), and of the latter in Origin and History of the Wesleyan Reform Union (Sheffield, 1896), and

William H. Jones, History of the Wesleyan Reform Union (London, Epworth Press, 1952).

In WALES Methodism developed its own ethos and a denomination independent of the Wesleys, the WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISTS, whose story was told most fully in the three volumes of John Hughes, Methodistaeth Cymru (Wrexham, 1851, 1854, 1856). Much briefer, but much more helpful for those who like John Wesley have little acquaintance or patience with the Welsh language, is William Williams, Welsh Calvinistic Methodism (2nd edition, London, 1884). The story of Wesleyan Methodism in the Principality was told at length in David Young's The Origin and History of Methodism in Wales and the Borders (London, Kelly, 1893), but a more scholarly study is that by A. H. Williams, Welsh Wesleyan Methodism, 1800-1855 (Bangor, 1935). For Scotland the best work, though a small one, and dealing only with the first century, 1751-1851, is Wesley F. Swift, Methodism in Scotland (London, Epworth Press, 1947). Ireland has been far better served (as was merited) with the monumental work by CHARLES H. CROOKSHANK, History of Methodism in Ireland, whose three volumes (Belfast and London, 1885-1888) take the story a year at a time from 1747 to 1859. The following century was covered in volume four on a much smaller scale (a decade at a time) by R. LEE COLE (Belfast, 1960).

There have been several general histories of the overseas missions of British Methodism since the pioneer work of William Moister, A History of Wesleyan Missions, issued in parts from 1869-71. JOHN TELFORD wrote A Short History of Wesleyan Methodist Foreign Missions in 1906, and in 1913 appeared G. G. FINDLAY's popular survey entitled Wesley's World Parish. More recently Cyril J. Davey summarized the whole story of British overseas missions in The March of Methodism (London, Epworth Press, 1951). Dwarfing all the rest, however, is The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society by G. C. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth (London, Epworth Press, 5 vols. 1921-24). Although not documented sufficiently for very scholarly tastes, this makes extensive use of voluminous primary sources, both printed and manuscript, and remains the standard authority for most of the areas which it covers. Each volume contains its own index. Volume one deals with the formation and development of the Society and its work both in the U.S.A. and in Canada. Volume two treats of the West Indies, volume three of Australia, New Zealand, and the South Sea Islands, volume four of the Women's Missionary Auxiliary, Africa, and Europe, while volume five deals with Ceylon, India, and China. In only a few areas have modern studies really added anything except a little popularization and modernization, together with a slightly different viewpoint. THE METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY, however, is preparing a new official history, covering more recent developments.

The mainstream historiography of American Methodism pure and simple is fairly easy to follow. Jesse Lee's Short History of 1810 was superseded by a four-volume work by NATHAN BANGS, A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which began as a two-volume work covering the years 1766-1816, to which in 1841 were added two more volumes bringing the story down to 1840 (New York, Mason and Lane, 1838-41). This was frequently reprinted with little change until replaced by the four volumes of Abel Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church (New York, Carlton and Porter, 1864-67). Two other one-volume works from this period remain of value for their independent documentation of the early history of American Methodism: J. B. WAKELEY, Lost Chapters recovered from the Early History of American Methodism (New York, 1858), and JOHN LEDNUM, A History of the Rise of Methodism in America (Philadelphia, 1859).

Stevens' work remained the standard history of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The disruption between northern and southern episcopal Methodism, combining with the solid contribution of Stevens, seems to have persuaded later American Methodist historians to forsake denominational history in order to offer their contributions in the wider realm of world Methodist history, as noted above, or in the narrower field of regional histories or special themes such as doctrine or polity. Noteworthy among the latter was JOHN J. TIGERT's A Constitutional History of American Episcopal Methodism (Nashville, 1894), whose value was by no means diminished by JAMES M. BUCKLEY's Constitutional and Parliamentary History of the Methodist Episcopal Church (New York, 1912). Of somewhat greater worth was Buckley's attempt to tell the whole story of American Methodism, including its divisions, in his A History of Methodism in the United States (New York, Christian Literature Company, 2 vols., 1898). In this task he had been preceded by JOHN ATKINSON's Centennial History of American Methodism (New York, 1884), which is still of value. Other one-volume histories of American Methodist history have continued to appear, but the best is by WILLIAM WARREN SWEET, his Methodism in American History (New York, 1933), revised in 1953 (Nashville, Abingdon, 1954).

Some denominational histories did appear, however. In 1894 GROSS ALEXANDER published his brief History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South (Nashville, Smith and Lamar). McTyre's History of Methodism mentioned above was continued to 1916 by H. M. DUBOSE in a large volume under the same title but having "special reference to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South" (Nashville, Smith and Lamar). E. J. DRINKHOUSE indulged in polemics as well as history in his two-volume History of Methodist Reform, synoptical of general Methodism, 1703 to 1898; with special and comprehensive reference to its most salient exhibition in the history of the Methodist Protestant Church (Baltimore, 1899). Several of the smaller Methodist denominations produced their own histories. A. T. Jennings recounted the History of American Wesleyan Methodism (Syracuse, 1902), now superseded by Ira F. McLeister's History of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America, revised by Roy S. Nicholson (Marion, Indiana, 1959). The History of the Free Methodist Church (Chicago, 2 vols., 1915) was told by WILSON T. HOGUE, and more recently by LESLIE R. MARSTON, in From Age to Age a Living Witness: a Historical Interpretation of Free Methodism's first century (Winona Lake, Ind., 1960).

The Negro denominations of American Methodism have not been quite so prolific in producing histories as the parent body, with the major exception of the AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Of this the fullest account is DANIEL A. PAYNE's History of the African Methodist Episcopal Church (Nashville, 1891), edited by CHARLES SPENCER SMITH, who also published a supplemental volume covering events to 1922 (Philadelphia, 1922). Other later works of some importance were JAMES A. HANDY's scraps of African Methodist Episcopal History (Philadelphia, 1901), John T. Jenifer's Centennial Retrospect History of the African Methodist Episcopal Church (Nashville, 1916), and the historical articles in the Centennial Encyclopedia of the African Methodist Church (Philadelphia, 1916), edited by RICHIARD R. WRIGHT and John R. Hawkins. A more scholarly recent work is George A. Singleton's The Romance of African Methodism: a study of the African Methodist Episcopal Church (New York, 1951), which has a large bibliography.

The story of the other major Negro denomination was told in JOHN J. MOORE'S History of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church (York, Penna., 1884), and in JAMES W. HOOD'S One Hundred Years of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church (New York, 1895); a biographical study; the best recent work is David H. Bradley's History of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 1796-1872 (Nashville, 1956), which has a good bibliography. The best historian of the CHRISTIAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was CHARLES H. PHILLIPS, whose History of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America (Jackson, Tenn., 1898) was much enlarged for its third edition of 1925.

In 1968 the formerly German-speaking denominations forming the EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN joined forces with the parent body of American Methodism to form The United Methodist Church. The Evangelical United Brethren were themselves the result of an amalgamation between two major bodies, the United Brethren and the Evangelical Church. A good account of the United Brethren is to be found in AUGUSTUS WALDO DRURY, History of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ (Dayton, Ohio, 1924). The Evangelical Church came from the reunion in 1922 of the United Evangelical Church and The Evangelical Association; the story of the original church, of its divisions and amalgamation, and subsequent progress, forms the subject of Raymond Wolf Albright's A History of the Evangelical Church (Harrisburg, 1942), which has a bibliography. In 1946 the Evangelical Church and the United Brethren came together, and their joint history is briefly recounted in Paul H. Eller, These Evangelical United Brethren (Dayton, Ohio, 1950, enlarged 1957.)

American Methodism has been well served in this generation by a composite three-volume work edited by EMORY STEVENS BUCKE, The History of American Methodism (Nashville, Abingdon, 1964). This falls into five parts, "The Colonial Period: 1736-1785," "A New Church in a New Nation: 1785-1844," "A Divided Church in a Divided Nation: 1844-1876," "A Flourishing Church in a Prospering Nation: 1876-1919," and "A Maturing Church in a Maturing Nation: 1919-1960." Chapters and sub-chapters are devoted to various themes as well as to a chronological record of events and personalities. Inevitably with a work prepared by forty-four writers there is some unevenness, but all have striven to arrive at a happy blend of carefully documented scholarship and readability, and on the whole with remarkable success. Each volume contains a gathering of illustrations, a valuable bibliography, and an index.

The History of American Methodism deals with all major branches of Methodism in America, and includes a major chapter on "The Missions of American Methodism," as well as a sub-chapter on "Methodism and the Ecumenical Movement." To understand the missionary outreach of American Methodism, however, it is necessary to read many more volumes than this. The basic tools are in fact the annual reports of the various missionary societies, though the essence of these has been distilled in several valuable histories, beginning with the pioneer work by Nathan Bangs, An Authentic History of the Missions under the care of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church (New York, Emory and Waugh, 1832). All that is practicable here is to list the main works dealing with the parent societies themselves.

In 1879 appeared The Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church (New York, Hunt and Eaton, 2 vols.), by J. M. Reid. This was in ten sections, each describing a different part of the work; to this was added in 1896 a third volume by J. T. Gracey. ALPHEUS W. WILSON published A History of the Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South (Nashville, Tenn., 1882), and JAMES CANNON III, A History of Southern Methodist Missions (Nashville, 1926), but a definitive account of this work is still awaited. T. J. Ogburn prepared Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church (Baltimore, 1906), L. L. Berry, A Century of Missions of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, 1840-1940 (New York, 1942), and Paul H. Eller, A History of Evangelical Missions (Harrisburg, 1942).

A key function in missionary advance has been the work of women's societies, who have had their own historians, notably Frances J. Baker, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-95 (Cincinnati, 1896), and MABEL K. HOWELL, Women and the Kingdom: Fifty years of Kingdom Building by the Women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South (Nashville, 1928), largely superseded by Noreen Dunn Tatum, A Crown of Service: a Story of Women's Work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from 1878-1940 (Nashville, 1960).

The enormous industry of WADE CRAWFORD BARCLAY is gathering the many strands of the whole story of American-based Methodist missions together into a monumental six-volume work entitled History of Methodist Missions, of which the first three volumes have been published. The first part ("Early American Methodism, 1769-1844") is in two volumes (New York, 1949, 1950), the first of which retells in documented detail the "Colonial Planting, 1769-84" of Methodism, and then its extension into missions at home and overseas, while the second concentrates upon Indian missions from 1820-44 and upon Methodism "as an agency of moral and social reform." Part Two is to deal with the missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of this the first masterly volume is completed (New York, 1957), dealing with the period 1845-95, first at home, then with successive descriptions of foreign missions in China, India and Malaysia, Japan and Korea, South America and Mexico, Africa, and Europe. Like its companion work in British Methodism, this presents the most readily available, sometimes the fullest, and usually the best account of Episcopal Methodism in many areas. Each volume contains a valuable index and bibliography, as well as voluminous notes. Volume four is planned to cover the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1896-1936, Volume five (Part Three), "Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1845-1939," and Volume six (Part Four), "World Outreach of Methodist Missions in Education, Literature, Medical Service, and Cooperation." Following the decease of Dr. Barclay work on this gigantic compilation is presently being carried on by J. Tremayne Copplestone.

The ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT has been described as "the great new fact of our time," and in this venture worldwide Methodism has played a worthy part. Methodism has had its own ecumenical movement from 1881, whose history can best be gathered from the Proceedings of the Ecumenical Methodist Conference held in City Road Chapel, London, September 1881 (London, 1881), and its successors. These assemblies have been gatherings of the dispersed and sometimes severed members of the Methodist family, who thus came to know and understand each other better, to cooperate more fully, and frequently to enter into formal union with each other or with non-Methodist bodies. The story of this organization has been told by IVAN LEE HOLT, in The Methodists of the World (New York, Board of Missions, 1950), and more recently by LEE F. TUTTLE in the Handbook of Information of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL (Lake Junaluska, N. C., 1966).

An important part of the history of world Methodism during this present century is to be found in the history of the united denominations of which Methodism has become a constituent, thus sacrificing its smaller identity for the larger Christian good. Notable examples are the United Church of Canada (1925), the Reformed Church of France (1938), The Church of Christ in Japan (1941), The Church of South India (1947), and The United Church of Zambia (1965). A brief summary of the coming together of Methodists with each other and with other denominations was prepared by Ivan Lee Holt and ELMER T. CLARK in The World Methodist Movement (Nashville, The Upper Room, 1956). Henceforth the history of Methodism will need increasingly to be sought in the histories of other major Christian churches in countries throughout the world, a point demonstrated in a recent volume of essays edited by Paul M. Minus, Methodism's Destiny in an Ecumenical Age (Nashville, Abingdon, 1969).

HISTORY, BRITISH METHODIST LOCAL. It was natural that the writing of Methodist local history in Britain should have begun in the early nineteenth century, and characteristic of the Methodist local system that its original basis should have been the circuit, and not the individual local chapel. The best-known early work is probably that of JAMES EVERETT on Wesleyanism in the vicinity of MANCHESTER (1827), and many others were to follow. The field broadened as Methodism got older. The centenaries of chapels and Sunday schools produced anniversary brochures, of varying value, but often containing material quite unobtainable elsewhere. The subject lacked prestige, however, and it is significant that the New History of Methodism, edited by W. J. TOWNSEND, H. B. WORKMAN, and George Eayrs (2 vols., London, 1909), did not refer to any local Methodist historical works in its admittedly inadequate bibliographies. The foundation of the WESLEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY in the 1890's did something to stimulate fresh interest, but the Society's primary concern was with the Wesleys and the eighteenth century, and its journal, The Proceedings, has never published much local history proper, though it has normally recorded the publication of new local histories, and a valuable bibliography of this kind is contained in its files. Since the second World War Methodist history has been more frequently studied at university level; most these have covered general topics, but some have been on local history: Michael Edwards on Cornish Methodism (Birmingham University); Methodism in the North Staffordshire Potteries before 1820, by Reginald Moss (London University); Methodism in West Yorkshire, 1740-1830, by J. F. Wilkinson (Birmingham University), for example. Much more needs to be done to examine the social, economic and cultural history of Methodism at the local level. Older works on Methodist local history include a few of genuine distinction, such as L. A. Court's book on EXMOOR, which caught the spirit of the BIBLE CHRISTIAN movement as nothing else has; W. Jessop on Rosendale; and J. W. Laycock's essential study of Haworth and early Methodism. Anyone who contemplates the study of a particular area during the modern period would be able to discover many brief, paperbacked accounts of particular chapels and Sunday schools.

HITT, DANIEL (1765?-1825), American pioneer preacher, presiding elder, and book steward, was born in Fauquier County, Va. about 1765. In 1790 he entered the traveling ministry and served as assistant one year each on the Lancaster, Allegheny, and Ohio Circuits. Thereafter his appointments were: Pittsburgh Circuit, 1793; REDSTONE CIRCUIT, 1794-95; Western District (nearly all of the work west of the Alleghenies), 1796; Fairfax and Alexandria, 1797; Pittsburgh District, 1798-1800; Alexandria District, 1801-04; Baltimore District, 1805-06; traveling companion of BISHOP ASBURY, 1807 until the 1808 GENERAL CONFERENCE; assistant book steward, 1808-10; book steward, 1810-16; Schuylkill District, 1816-19; Monongahela District, 1820-21; traveling companion of Bishop MCKENDREE, 1822; Potomac District, 1823-24; and Carlisle District, 1825.

As a pastor Hitt was faithful and efficient. Between 1793 and 1795, JOHN DICKINS, book steward in Philadelphia, wrote Hitt a number of letters thanking him for selling many books on his circuits and promptly forwarding the money. As a presiding elder Hitt was regarded as a safe counselor and a dependable leader. Asbury liked and trusted him. He made Hitt his traveling companion in 1807, and later he named him as one of the executors of his will. While traveling with Asbury, Hitt compiled a hymnbook, A Selection of Hymns from various authors, designed as a Supplement to the Methodist Pocket Hymn Book, compiled under the direction of Bishop Asbury and published by order of the General Conference. The volume was published in 1808.

The 1808 General Conference, probably at the suggestion of Asbury, made Hitt the assistant book steward. In 1810 the book steward, John Wilson, died and Hitt took his place. The 1812 General Conference, which elected Hitt as its secretary though he was not a member of the body, continued him as book steward for another quadrennium.

Students of the history of the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE agree that as book steward Hitt was not a success. They wonder why the General Conference reelected him in 1812, and they are surprised that the Book Concern did not fail before 1816. In dress (he was Quaker-like in appearance and costume), in methods of operation, and in accounting procedures, Hitt was apparently too conservative to meet the demands of the expanding era in which he served as book steward. His report to the 1812 General Conference was so incomplete that the committee named to examine it reported that it was unable to determine the exact condition of the establishment but was sure the assets were not as great as indicated. When JOSIUA SOULE became book steward in 1816, he found the concern heavily in debt and approaching bankruptcy. Soule had to borrow money to begin operations, and he spent the first year or so recouping finances.

After stepping down as book steward in 1816, Hitt spent the remainder of his life as a presiding elder in the BALTIMORE and PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCES, except for the year 1822, when he traveled with Bishop McKendree. Stricken with typhus fever in Greencastle, Pa., he died in Washington County, Md., in September, 1825.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, Madisonville, Tenn., was chartered in 1850 as a senior college on what had been camp ground since 1815. In 1848 the principal of Fork Creek Academy was given permission to use the camp ground buildings. It became associated with the HOLSTON CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, in 1870, and in 1907 was reorganized as a junior college. Hiwassee College operates a large self-work program utilizing part of its four hundred acres of farm land. The governing board has fifty members nominated by the Holston Annual Conference and elected by the board to four-year terms. This same board serves the other two colleges related to the conference: EMORY AND HENRY, and TENNESSEE WESLEYAN.

HLA SEIN (1917-), bishop of the Union of BURMA (Lower Burma), now an autonomous church affiliated with The United Methodist Church in the United States. He was born in 1917 and ordained in 1949 and has been serving on a general assignment as a traveling preacher for the Burmese district of the Church, and in this capacity he served among the nine Burmese-speaking congregations. He formerly was pastor of the Methodist churches in Pegu and Thongwa. Bishop Hla Sein has been the convenor of the Conference Jurors—or the church's Committee on Investigation. He has also served as registrar of the Board of Ministerial Training and Qualifications, and the statistician and chairman of the Nomination Committee. He is one of the delegates of the Methodist Church in the Union of Burma in its negotiations for union with the Upper Burma Methodist Church, which latter Church grew out of British Methodist missionary efforts. At age fifty-two, he was elected bishop on the second ballot at the annual meeting of the Burma Church on Sept. 30, 1969, in Rangoon. He was elected for a two-year term and succeeds Bishop LIM SI SIN who retired after two consecutive two-year terms. Bishop Hla Sein presently presides over 2,800 members. If there should come about presently a united Methodist church in Burma, there would be about 17,000 members altogether.

HOBART, CHAUNCEY (1811-1904), American preacher, was born near St. Albans, Vt., on June 9, 1811. He married Miss Betty Ticknor in 1834. He was received on trial in the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1836. After serving various churches in the Illinois Conference, he was transferred to the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE and appointed pastor of the Clark Street Church, CHICAGO. At the Rock River Conference, in 1849, Bishop JAMES said: "Someone must go up to the new Territory of Minnesota." Hobart responded, "Here am I, send me!" Henceforth his life and labors were identified with the MINNESOTA CONFERENCE. He served for a few months as CHAPLAIN of the Third Minnesota Regiment in the Civil War. He was the Chaplain of the first MINNESOTA legislature. He traveled widely in Minnesota, successfully conducting many revival meetings. At his own request, he was superannuated by the Minnesota Conference in 1885, after forty-nine years of active ministry. He died Jan. 3, 1904, and was buried in Red Wing, Minn.

JOHN HOBBS

HOBBS, JOHN (1800-83), New Zealand minister, was born at St. Peters, Thanet, in Kent, the son of a Wesleyan local preacher, four of whose five sons became local preachers. Missionary zeal led him to Tasmania in 1822, where he was soon received on probation and appointed to NEW ZEALAND, where he arrived in 1823. When the Wesleydale (Whangaroa) mission station was destroyed by hostile Maoris in 1827, Hobbs was one of those forced to leave. Returning to SYDNEY, he was ordained and married Jane Brogreff. Late in the same year, with three assistants, he returned to New Zealand and established a station at Mangungu on the Hokianga River.

Later William White was appointed superintendent; and following strained relations between the two, Hobbs transferred to TONGA in 1833, where he spent six years. Returning to New Zealand in 1838, he spent the next twenty years laboring among the Maoris of the Hokianga District.

Ill health and increasing deafness led him to withdraw from the active work in 1858. A long retirement spent in AUCKLAND ended with his death on June 24, 1883. In 1898, a church in his memory was erected at Bayfield, Auckland, by his son Richard.

HOBBS, NEW MEXICO, U.S.A., First Church was started by circuit riders—not the conventional horsemen of the Wesley-Asbury tradition, however, but a latter-day version mounted on motorcycles. In 1920 Rev. Whidden, on the Lovington Circuit, helped a group of Methodist homesteaders, ranchers and townspeople in Hobbs, N. M., near the TEXAS border, to organize. He was followed by W. M. Beauchamp, H. L. Thurston, and W. R. Burnett. In 1930 Hobbs became a station, with Presiding Elder A. L. Moore quick to recognize the significance of the discovery there of a rich oil field.

A one-room parsonage was built on one of three lots donated by the townsite company, and the pastor, C. A. Ridge, whose first-year salary was $1,000, preached in a theater or schoolhouse until a loan from the Board of Church Extension firmed up a decision to build a church on a do-it-yourself plan. To achieve it, rig builders and pipe liners from oil companies joined other volunteers including, a church historian recorded, "a lot of oil field rough necks who never expected to come to a church." With a building contractor also contributing his time as boss, the job was done.

As the Hobbs area has prospered, First Church has grown both in physical plant and in membership. The present sanctuary was completed in 1948 and commodious educational facilities and two parsonages have been added. First Church had 1,976 members in 1970. James W. Miller was appointed pastor in 1968, following H. L. McAlester who had filled the pulpit for eight years.

HOBILL LIBRARY. G. A. K. Hobill of London, a member of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, spent many years collecting literature illustrating the history of Methodism. At the Conference of 1894 he presented his library to the connexion, whence at the union in 1907 it came into the possession of the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH and of The Methodist Church upon further union in 1932. The Hobill Collection has been housed in various places, including the Nether Green Church, SHEFFIELD, and Victoria Park United Methodist College, MANCHESTER. Since the amalgamation of the latter institution with the former PRIMITIVE METHODIST theological college as HARTLEY-VICTORIA COLLEGE, Manchester, it has formed a part of the library there.

The Hobill Collection consists not only of books and pamphlets, but also of many mounted newspaper cuttings. Most of the material is bound into volumes, and a catalogue is available. There is a very strong nucleus of contemporary editions of the writings of the WESLEYS, and also of the literature attacking and defending early Methodism. Mr. Hobill also collected material dealing with the controversies within Methodism, with the history and leaders of its various offshoots, and with its overseas missions.

BACHMAN G. HODGE

HODGE, BACHMAN GLADSTONE (1893-1961), American pastor and bishop, was born in Renfroe, Ala., on Feb. 21, 1893, the son of Edmund Armstrong and Louise (Cate) Hodge. He was educated at BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE and the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. Honorary doctorates came to him from this last and from four other institutions.

Admitted on trial to the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, in the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE in 1921, he was appointed to a pastorate in BIRMINGHAM. Later he served in OWENSBORO and LOUISVILLE, Ky., in the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE; and in NASHVILLE, TENN. (TENNESSEE CONFERENCE), where he was superintendent of the Nashville District. He was pastor of CENTENARY METHODIST CHURCH in CHATTANOOGA, TENN., when he was elected a bishop by the Southeastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in 1956 and assigned to the Birmingham Area. Bishop Hodge had served as a CHAPLAIN in the United States Army during the first World War, and at one time either from wounds or illness, was given up for dead. Fortunately, he regained his health by careful nursing.

Bishop Hodge was a tall and impressive looking man with a genius for friendship and for brotherliness, and one who enjoyed the good will and appreciation of his many brethren. He married Mary Brown Buckshaw on Feb. 6, 1923, and their children were Mary Louise and Carolyn Jean.

Early in his second quadrennium as a bishop, he died after a lengthy illness. His funeral was conducted in the First Church, Birmingham, Ala., by Bishop CLARE PURCELL, with Bishops HARDIN, HARMON, and SHORT, and Dr. HARRY DENMAN participating. Interment was in the Jefferson Memorial Gardens outside Trussville, a suburb of Birmingham, Ala.

HOEHNE, FREDERICO CARLOS (1882-1959), Brazilian layman, botanist, scientist, and authority on orchids, was born in JUIZ DE FORA, on March 1, 1882. His parents, Augusto and Elizabeth, were of German descent and originally Lutherans; but Augusto, under the influence of Herman Gartner, became a Methodist and Bible colporteur. Young Hoehne made his profession of faith as a boy. He studied at INSTITUTO GRANBERY, paid part of his way by waiting on tables, neither then nor now a common procedure among Brazilian students. From early childhood, he had loved plants and flowers—and that opened the way for him to study at the National Museum and Botanical Gardens of RIO DE JANEIRO.

Hoehne, continuing in this field, became internationally recognized as a botanist, and was named honorary member of many scientific institutions both in BRAZIL and abroad. Though Hoehne never graduated from a superior school, he was given a Ph.D. by Goettingen University, GERMANY; he spoke and read in several foreign languages, and became proficient in Bible languages that he might the better teach the Book. For over twenty years he taught an adult Bible class, and served in many other capacities in Central Church, SÃO PAULO.

As a public official, he was chief horticulturist for the National Museum in Rio de Janeiro, and became director of the Botanical Institute of the state of São Paulo. In 1921, Hoehne was named director of the Botanical Division of the Roosevelt-Rondon expedition that explored the River of Doubt in the heart of Brazil. He also worked with the famous Butantan (Snake-Farm) Institute in São Paulo, becoming an expert in poisonous and medicinal plants.

By 1951, Dr. Hoehne had published four small books and over 700 articles. After retirement, he completed the twelfth volume of Flora Brasílica, for which he made the 400 drawings and illustrations. His Album on Orchids of Brazil is undoubtedly the most authoritative and widely known volume on the orchids of that country.

Firm in his Christian convictions, yet liberal in outlook and principles, Hoehne gave consistent and eloquent witness before civil and religious authorities. He died March 16, 1959, and was survived by his wife, Frida Kuhlmann, and five children.

ISNARD ROCHA

HOFFMAN, JOSEPH (1780-1856), American U. B. itinerant preacher and bishop, was born in Cumberland County, Pa., on March 19, 1780. He was licensed to preach by the Church of the United Brethren in Christ in 1803, and became an itinerant the following year. Records tell us that he was one of three preachers ordained by PHILIP WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, Oct. 2, 1813, with the laying on of hands. After Otterbein's death Hoffman took charge of that congregation nearly four years. In 1817 Hoffman moved to Fairfield County, Ohio, and joined the Miami Conference.

He was elected bishop in 1821 for one term of four years. Apparently Hoffman retired from the office of bishop in the prime of life, although he regarded himself as a bishop for life since he had been regularly ordained as such. Twice married, he was the father of eleven children, five sons becoming United Brethren ministers. He died Nov. 8, 1856, and is buried in the local cemetery at Lewisburg, Ohio.

HOGUE, WILSON THOMAS (1852-1920), American FREE METHODIST editor and bishop, was born near Franklinville, N. Y. He was converted at age of nine and called to the ministry at eleven, which he entered at nineteen. He married Emma L. Jones, Dec. 29, 1874. He joined the Genesee Conference in 1875 where he served as pastor and district elder, and was the first president and founder of GREENVILLE COLLEGE, Greenville, Ill., 1892-1904. He became editor of The Free Methodist and served 1894-1903. He received the Ph.B., A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. A prime mover in establishing the Publishing House in Chicago, he was also editor of Sunday school literature. His church elected him bishop, 1893-95 and again 1903-19.

A prodigious worker, he wrote: Hogue's Homiletics and Pastoral Theology; G. Harry Agnew, a Pioneer Missionary; Hymns That Are Immortal; The Class Meeting as a Means of Grace; The Holy Spirit—A Study; a monumental, two volume History of the Free Methodist Church; and several booklets, Christian Science Unmasked; The First Day Sabbath; and a Catechism for use in Sunday school work; a gift volume entitled The Believer's Personal Experience in the Process of Salvation. He compiled a volume of Missionary Hymns and Readings, 1907 and edited a Symposium on Scriptural Holiness. He presided over conferences and continued with his literary activities even after a stroke and partial paralysis. He is generally considered after the founder, B. T. ROBERTS, to be the outstanding character of Free Methodism and by far its greatest pulpiteer. Hogue died at Springfield, Ill., Feb. 13, 1920.

HOLCOMB, WALTER BENTON (1877-1965), American preacher and evangelist and founder of the Sam Jones lectures at EMORY UNIVERSITY, was born on July 29, 1877, at Winston-Salem, N. C. He was the son of Virgil Bloom and Rebecca (Kirkman) Holcomb. He was educated at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, Cumberland University, Chicago University and Harvard University. CENTENARY COLLEGE in Louisiana conferred the D.D. degree on him in 1928.

He was converted after a fight with another boy in school. In prayer he told God that if he would forgive him for losing his temper and for fighting, that from then on God's will would be first in his life. He preached his first sermon at seventeen years of age and held a revival that year in Richmond, Va. He became associated in early life with SAM JONES, the famous Southern evangelist, who asked Walt Holcomb to travel and preach with him. "For about five years," the Atlanta Constitution stated (Feb. 18, 1965), "—until Jones died in his arms in 1906—they conducted revivals together." Subsequently Holcomb preached in every state in the Union and held preaching missions in Europe, Japan, Korea, China, and Latin American countries.

He was married to Julia Jones, a daughter of Sam Jones, and they had three children.

Holcomb wrote four books, Modern Evangelism and Ancient Environment, 1924—sermons preached in Europe after the first World War; Sam Jones, A Biography, 1947; Best Loved Sermons of Sam Jones, 1950; The Gospel of Grace, 1955.

In honor of the man he so greatly admired, Holcomb established at Emory University the Sam Jones Lectureship, which recurrent lectures have become a feature in the School of Theology at Emory.

After retirement from an active career, Holcomb lived in Atlanta, where he died on Feb. 16, 1965. Funeral services were held in Durham Chapel at Emory and were in charge of Dean—now Bishop—William R. Cannon. He was buried in the Oak Hill Cemetery, Cartersville, Ga.

HOLCOMBE, WILLIAM J., M.D. (1798-1867), prominent VIRGINIA physician and local preacher, a founder of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE of the M. P. CHURCH, was born in Amelia County, Va., on March 1, 1798. He graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania and practiced his profession in Powhatan County, Va. for three years and in Lynchburg for twenty years. In 1822 he united with the M. E. Church and afterward he was licensed as a LOCAL PREACHER. He became interested in the reform movement in the church during the mid-1820's and though he preached regularly, he was refused ordination because he was a "reformer" and a patron of The Mutual Rights. He was one of two local preachers expelled for participating in a reform meeting in Lynchburg on Sept. 18, 1828. He was later received as a licensed preacher in the Associated Methodist Church, which in 1830 became known as the M. P. Church. In 1840 he emancipated all his Negro slaves and when he later inherited about 100 more slaves from a relative, who declared them free unless Holcombe resided in a slave state, he moved to INDIANA. In 1855 he returned to Virginia, purchased a home in Amelia County and farmed and continued his medical practice. At the close of the War between the States he established two congregations of freedmen. Dr. Holcombe was rated by the Richmond, Va., Medical Journal as being at the head of his profession. He wrote an octavo volume of poems which was published late in his life. He died in Amelia County on Feb. 21, 1867, and was buried in the Presbyterian Cemetery in Lynchburg.

HOLDCRAFT, PAUL ELLSWORTH (1891-1971), American E.U.B. preacher, was born in Frederick, Md., Sept. 22, 1891. He was granted Quarterly Conference license to preach by the Frederick Church in 1908. Membership in Pennsylvania Annual Conference, United Brethren in Christ, followed in 1909 and ordination in 1913. He married Miss Lola Grace McDonald, of Frederick, who shared his ministerial labors on the following charges of the conference; Rayville (Md.); Walkersville (Md.); Keedysville (Md.); York (Pa.); BALTIMORE, Third (Md.); Hagerstown, Emmanuel (Md.); and OLD OTTERBEIN, Baltimore (Md.). He retired in 1953, but continued limited service as pastor emeritus and co-pastor of the last named church.

Paul Holdcraft attended LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE,

Annville, Pa.; Eastern College, Manassas, Va.; and WESTMINSTER (Wesley) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Westminster, Md. His degrees are A.B., B.D., and S.T.D. In 1938, Lebanon Valley College conferred upon him the D.D. degree, alumnus honoris causa. In 1946, Wesley Seminary alumni named him to charter membership in the John Wesley Honor Society with a plaque and citation for distinguished service. In 1970 the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE Historical Society elected him an honorary life membership.

Elected to five sessions of the GENERAL CONFERENCE, Holdcraft served on a number of boards and commissions. For twenty years he edited the promotional paper of his conference, and for a like period contributed a weekly column to the denominational Sunday School literature. He also served his conference twenty-five years as historian. He wrote and/or compiled twenty-one books in the field of Church History and Practical Theology, which sold more than 570,000 copies.

Holdcraft died on Feb. 24, 1971 in Baltimore, Md. Burial was in Frederick, Md.

JOHN H. NESS, SR.

HOLDEMAN, RALPH M. (1906-), American E. U. B. minister, was born and reared on a farm near Wakarusa, Ind., May 8, 1906. After graduating from New Paris High School, he received his B.S. degree from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE and B.D. degree from EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. Mr. Holdeman received the following honorary degrees: WESTMAR COLLEGE, D.D., Findlay College (Ohio), L.H.D.; and PAUL QUINN COLLEGE, LL.D. He was licensed by the Indiana Conference, The Evangelical Church, in 1928 and ordained an elder in the same conference in 1934.

After serving pastorates for fifteen years he became assistant to the general secretary, Christian Education and Evangelism. With the formation of The E. U. B. Church in 1946, he became the director of Church School Administration and associate secretary of Evangelism. In 1955, he was elected Executive Secretary, Board of Evangelism, which position he retained until 1963. At that time he was appointed the associate secretary of Evangelism for the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST in America. Four years later he became the Executive Secretary of Evangelism for the National Council.

Dr. Holdeman's great concern for youth led to the planning and pioneering of youth evangelism experiments, such as Youth Evangelism Service, Youth Mission to Youth, Athletic Ambassadors, and Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

Ralph Holdeman has written scripts for and produced motion and sound films in evangelism and Christian education. Painting and sculpturing started as a hobby, but he eventually used them successfully in his work. His sculpture has been exhibited in CHICAGO, ATLANTA, NEW YORK, Moscow, and Etchmiadzin (Armenia).

He retains his United Methodist membership in the North Indiana Conference.

HARRY O. HUFFMAN

HOLDEN, A. T. (1866-1935). Australian minister and Methodist chaplain-general who came from the Home Mission Station of Newnham in the Lancefield (Victoria) Circuit in AUSTRALIA. He entered the ministry in 1887.

In the year 1904 he was chosen to assist Rev. Bickford, General Secretary of Home Missions, but within four months Bickford died, and A. T. Holden was appointed secretary.

The young man gave himself to his task with great thoroughness, devotion, and self-sacrifice. As the years passed there began to unfold in the life and work of Holden evidence of one of the great personalities that God has given to Methodism and indeed to Australia. A man great in all the dimensions of manhood, far-seeing, broad-minded and spacious-hearted, he comprehended all the factors and forces in an ever-growing Church. He possessed the rare and divine quality of patience in a unique degree. Men felt strong when he was near. Conferences, Synods, Committees and Commissions felt safe under his guidance. He possessed a mind swift and accurate in analysis. He built loftily on the wide and deep foundations of his predecessors.

During his regime the Home Missionaries' Training College was established, and largely owing to his courage and initiative the great adventure known as the Methodist Inland Mission was inaugurated.

Holden served as a Chaplain in the South African War and after his return was affectionately known for many years as "Major." This later became "Colonel" when he was promoted on his appointment as Methodist Chaplain-General of the Military Forces in Australasia in 1913. He held this position for twenty-two years. On him devolved the duty of nominating CHAPLAINS to serve with the Australian Imperial Forces. In 1916 he went overseas on active service to visit the chaplains in England and at the front. He returned to Victoria in 1917.

He was elected president-general of the Conference held in Sydney in 1932. He was chosen as delegate of the Methodist Church of Australasia to attend the consummation of METHODIST UNION in London in 1932. On his return it was discovered he was afflicted with a dangerous illness, but he carried on his work with patience and heroism. In 1934 the University of Toronto conferred on him the honorary D.D. degree. Ten years prior to Holden's retirement, owing to the growth of the department, conference appointed an ordained minister to assist him.

HOLDEN, WILLIAM CLIFFORD (1813-1897), Wesleyan minister in SOUTH AFRICA, was born in Derbyshire, England, entered the ministry in 1836, and was sent to the Cape in 1839. Apart from four pioneering years in Natal (1847-51), his entire ministry was spent in the Eastern Cape Province. During his term at Annshaw (1871-74) he helped the tribe of KAMA to resist the alienation of a portion of its land by the colonial government. He was the author of three books: History of the Colony of Natal (London, 1855); The Past and Future of the Kaffir Races (London, 1866); and A Brief History of Methodism and of Methodist Missions in South Africa (London, 1877). Retiring in 1881, he died at Grahamstown on Oct. 14, 1897.

HOLDING INSTITUTE, Laredo, Texas, began in 1883 as an orphanage and school for Mexican children in the old town of Laredo, on the Rio Grande River along the Mexican border. It was located on "the burning sands of Laredo's waste"—a vulnerable site which led to destruction of its plant in 1954 when the flooded Rio Grande crested at sixty-three feet. After a less damaging flood in 1948, however, the executives of the Woman's Division of Christian Service (TMC), under which the school operates, had bought sixty-three acres in North Laredo, and there the school has been rebuilt. It has an enrollment of approximately 200—"A bridge of understanding between two nations and two cultures."

Originally, the Institute was called Laredo Seminary, but in 1913 the name was changed to honor its founder, Miss Annie Holding, then retiring, who had begun it long before with five Mexican children in a four-room house. In 1886 boys were admitted on a military plan though this was abandoned in 1915. The plant had grown to seven brick buildings valued at $400,000 with a beautiful campus before the 1954 flood struck. After that disaster, it was reorganized as a coeducational junior and senior high school and is under the ownership and administration of the Division of National Missions of The United Methodist Church.

Holding offers basic training to children in English, specializing in classes in English as a "foreign" language. Laboratory and audio-visual methods are utilized. Stress falls on giving to each student "an understanding of himself as a person with unique potentialities and responsibilities," undergirded by appreciation not only of his cultural heritage but "God's action in history." Three-fourths of its students indicate an affiliation with the Roman Catholic Church. The Institute regards itself "as a small but important part of the Church's universal mission."

Currently the superintendent of Holding Institute is Maurice C. Daily.

HOLE, JOHN WESLEY (1903-), American lay church executive, was born in Burns, Kan., Aug. 19, 1903, the son of David B. and Lucretia E. (Storer) Hole. He is a graduate of the Los Angeles Manual Arts High School. Samuel Huston College (Texas) conferred on him the honorary LL.D. degree in 1947. He married Velma E. Edwards, Sept. 20, 1924, and they have a son and a daughter. In Los Angeles he served as purchasing agent, 1925-28, for one business firm, and office manager for another, 1928-34. Since 1934 he has been executive secretary-treasurer of the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE. In that office he handles more than $5,000,000 annually and has fiscal oversight of forty conference agencies and institutions.

Hole joined the Methodist Church in 1908. He has been elected a delegate to nine GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1940-70, and a delegate to and treasurer of every Western JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE since its organization in 1940. He was on the board of directors of the Methodist Hospital, Arcadia, Calif., 1955-65. He has served, or is serving, on the following boards and agencies of the church: BOARD OF PENSIONS, 1940-44; 1964—; COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE, 1944-48; BOARD OF MISSIONS, 1956-64; and General Conference Entertainment Committee, 1940—. He is assistant recording secretary and a member of the executive committee of the Board of Pensions. He was vice-president of the National

Division of the Board of Missions, 1960-64. For many years he was secretary of the General Conference Entertainment Committee, and is now a member of its executive committee. In 1964 Hole was elected secretary of the General Conference, the only layman ever to hold the position. He declined re-election in 1968, but agreed to serve as an assistant secretary. In 1970 when the secretary, CHARLES D. WHITE, resigned, Hole consented, at the request of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS, to become again the secretary of the General Conference.

Hole believes that the fiscal affairs of the church should be in the hands of the laymen. Asked to comment on ministers as businessmen, he replied, "The percentage of good businessmen in the clergy is about the same as the number of businessmen who can preach."

HOLINESS, Br. (See DOCTRINAL STANDARDS OF METHODISM; also CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.)

HOLINESS METHODIST CHURCH is a result of the "holiness" revival movement that swept the United States and the Methodist Church in the late 1800's. The Northwestern Holiness Association was formed at Grand Forks, N. D., on March 24, 1909, as a fellowship of those following the holiness way. This informal association changed its name to the Holiness Methodist Church in 1920, recognizing that the association had become a denomination.

The church has a loose connectional system. The principal legislative body is the general council, composed of all general superintendents, district superintendents, deacons' superintendents, elders, deacons and lay delegates (one per church). It meets quadrennially. The executive board, consisting of the district and general superintendents, makes the annual appointments of pastors and deaconesses and has ultimate control of all church property.

The doctrine of the church is of a general Wesleyan nature, ADAM CLARKE being the direct source of its Articles of Religion. Peculiar to the Holiness Methodist Church are their detailed statements concerning both grace and eschatology. Man's earthly life is described as a probation with the chance of "falling from grace" an ever present possibility. The soul, which is immaterial and immortal and can exist independently of the body, may, however, be purified from all sin in this life.

The Holiness Methodists, quickly seeing the value of education, launched an Academy for the training of preachers and deaconesses, in the fall of 1913 at MINNEAPOLIS. This Academy became the Holiness Methodist School of Theology in 1920, and the Wesley Bible College in 1964.

At present there are approximately 1,000 members in four districts in the Midwest and the Northwest. There is one mission station in BOLIVIA. There are also three campgrounds for the promotion of holiness evangelism, the main emphasis of the church.

A publication board handles all books and printed matter that the church uses. They publish the Holiness Methodist Advocate, a monthly periodical.

The Holiness Methodist Church participates in both the National Association of Evangelicals and the National Holiness Association.

J. GORDON MELTON

HOLINESS MOVEMENT was a movement in 19th century Protestantism which centered upon the believers' experience of a second instantaneous work of grace termed variously sanctification, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, or CHRISTIAN PERFECTION. This reception of entire sanctification was intended to relieve the Christian of what WESLEY called the "sin in Believers," going beyond forgiveness to an actual purifying of the heart.

During the early 19th century an emphasis on sanctification grew out of the experience of Charles Finney, president of Oberlin College. The first phase of the holiness movement could be said to date from Finney's sanctification in 1839. With the able help of Asa Mahan and the Oberlin students, a wave of holiness preaching and writing swept the land for the next twenty years. In 1844 Mahan published his Christian Perfection which became the major statement of the Oberlin position. Other major products of the Finneyite phase include T. C. Upham's Principles of the Interior Life (1846), William Boardman's Higher Christian Life (1858), and A. B. Earle's Rest of Faith (1859).

The revival of 1858 could be pointed to as the time when the Finneyite phase gave way to the Methodist phase of the movement. Though Finney, Mahan, and their followers continued to preach and publish, the real thrust of the movement passed into Methodist hands. Prior to 1855, only one Methodist gained a wide reputation in the holiness movement, TIMOTHY MERRITT, editor of the Guide to Christian Perfection (Vol. 1, 1839). But in 1851 RANDOLPH S. FOSTER had published his Christian Purity and in 1857 JESSE T. PECK published his The Central Idea of Christianity. This activity culminated in the efforts of PHOEBE PALER, a laywoman at Allen Street Methodist Church in New York City. Her "Tuesday Meeting for the Promotion of Holiness" became the focal point of a growing revival of second blessing experiences in a Wesleyan context. Interrupted by the Civil War, the holiness movement picked up real momentum as soon as it was over. In 1866 Phoebe Palmer and her husband Walter, then owners of Merritt's Guide, toured the country establishing centers of holiness everywhere they preached. At EVANSTON, Ill., FRANCES WILLARD, the temperance reformer, was among many NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY students affected by the Palmers.

The prime structure within which the holiness movement functioned was the CAMP MEETING. In 1867 William Osborn of the South New Jersey Conference and JOHN S. INSKIP of New York set up a national camp meeting at Vineland, N. J. At this meeting the "Campmeeting Association for the Promotion of Holiness" was formed. Inskip was elected president. In 1870 WILLIAM McDONALD became editor of the Advocate of Holiness, a national organ. As the movement grew, many local campgrounds and associations formed to carry on the work which was now a nationwide phenomenon.

The movement gained ground in Methodism during the 1870's and 1880's. In 1872 Jesse T. Peck, Randolph S. Foster, STEPHEN MERRILL, and GILBERT HAVEN, all decided friends of the holiness movement, were elected bishops, and official sanction of the movement was given repeatedly through both the church press and official statements. Many outstanding Methodists in positions of influence professed sanctification. These included DANIEL STEELE, first president of SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY and later professor of systematic theology at Boston; WILLIAM NAST, father of German Methodism; Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR; and layman WASHINGTON C. DEPAUW. Many ministers emigrated who gained fame as holiness preachers: BEVERLY CARRADINE, J. A. Wood, ALFRED COOKMAN, John L. Brasher, M. L. Haney.

There is no definite date for the beginning of the third phase of the holiness movement, the establishment of separate holiness denominations. Needless to say, however, even though many high authorities in the church favored the holiness message, many others were hostile to it. Men like J. M. Boland, author of The Problem of Methodism, attacked the second blessing doctrine maintaining that sanctification was accomplished at the moment of conversion. JAMES MUDGE in his Growth In Holiness Toward Perfection or Progressive Sanctification argued for progressive as against instantaneous sanctification. While others like BORDEN PARKER BOWNE dismissed the whole sanctification issue as irrelevant.

The real cause of trouble was the appearance of radical and fanatical forms of the holiness revival, and this embarrassed many who were strongly attached to the Wesleyan tradition. Many independent-minded leaders, chafing under the yoke of indifferent and sometimes hostile leadership, bolted the church and established their own organizations. Among the first to leave was John P. Brooks of ILLINOIS. In 1887, two years after leaving the church, he published The Divine Church, in which he developed the concept of "Come-outism." By the 1890's many had left the church and joined Brooks in setting up independent groups. Such denominations as the CHURCH OF THE NAZARENE, PILGRIM HOLINESS, Church of God (Anderson, Ind.), HOLINESS METHODIST CHURCH and the Christian and Missionary Alliance represent "comeout" groups.

The movement out of the church put pressure on those who remained to justify their position. Thus the 1890's saw the development of an entire literature devoted to arguments for staying in the established denominations. M. L. Haney advocated the continuance and strengthening of the holiness associations and labeled the new denominations as hindrances to the cause. Carradine favored the establishment of independent schools. Most notably Taylor University and ASBURY COLLEGE, were founded.

In the early years of the 1900's, the movement gradually faded. The new churches solidified their strength and still exist today, a few as strong vital bodies. A general National Holiness Association gives them a contemporary forum and a unified witness. Within the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, only remnants of the holiness revival remained in the forms of isolated campgrounds such as the BRASHER SPRINGS CAMPGROUND in ALABAMA, and the DES PLAINES CAMPGROUND in ILLINOIS. The main body of Methodists became isolated from holiness thought.

British Holiness Movement. In the late 1850's the American fervor for holiness spread across the sea to England. Boardman's Higher Christian Life was a great success, and visits by the Palmers and JAMES CAUGHEY firmly planted a solid core of holiness on British soil. Two forms emerged which gave the most lasting expression to the movement. The Keswick Convention grew up to serve primarily Anglican and Congregational advocates. Their revision of the meaning of the second blessing terms of a "giving of power" instead of an "eradication of sin" was later to affect American come-out groups.

The second emerging form was the Salvation Army. WILLIAM BOOTH had, it was affirmed, been sanctified under Caughey's preaching and formed the Army to wage an endless war on sin and poverty in the poorer sections of London. The Army represented in the best way a continuance of Wesley's social concern as well as the best example through the holiness revival of positive response to the growing urban complex.

The Army was exported to the U. S. in 1880. About 1885, Samuel Logan Brengle, a student of Daniel Steele's at Boston, joined the Army and soon became the organization's spiritual leader. His Helps to Holiness is still an important statement of holiness thought. Two other groups, the Volunteers of America and the American Rescue Workers, are patterned after the Salvation Army.

HOLLAND, HENRY (1859-1944), was a New Zealand layman. The name of Holland is closely associated with the life and development of Christchurch city and Canterbury Province. Arriving from England in 1863 and settling in West Melton, Holland entered business in 1889 in Christchurch, where later he became mayor for seven years. At the same time, he was the member of Parliament for Christchurch North for nine years.

He held every office in the church open to a layman, including that of vice-president of the Conference in 1913. He was never absent from his place in church on Sunday unless it was physically impossible for him to be there. He never lost his first love.

ARCHER O. HARRIS

HOLLAND, WILLIAM (d. 1761), a member of the Church of England, was one of the original members of the FETTER LANE SOCIETY in London. He was largely instrumental in the conversion of CHARLES WESLEY, whom he introduced to Luther's Preface to the Epistle to the Galatians. It has been thought that it was Holland who read Luther's Preface to the Epistle to the Romans at ALDERSGATE STREET on May 24, 1738, when JOHN WESLEY experienced his evangelical awakening. Holland became the first elder of the MORAVIAN congregation in Fetter Lane, but left the Moravians in 1747, being unwilling to separate from the Church of England.

HOLLISTER, JOHN NORMAN (1888-), second-generation American missionary to INDIA, educator, district superintendent, author, and historian, was born in Kampotee, Central Provinces (now Madhya Pradesh), India. He graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (B.Sc., 1911; M.A., 1912) and Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford, Conn. (Ph.D., 1946). He came to India in mission service in 1912 and taught in LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. He joined the NORTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE in 1915.

His appointments included: superintendent of Bijnor and Kumaun Districts, principal of the Methodist Boys' Industrial School and Teacher-Training School, principal of Lodhipur School (now Lodhipur Institute), principal of Ingraham Institute at Ghaziabad, agent of the Lucknow Publishing House, and official historian of the first hundred years of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia. His book, The SHIA of India, is recognized as an example of scholarly, objective research and lucid writing. His later book, The Centenary of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia, has the warmth of a full participant and committed Christian writing about the work of his associates among the people he loves. He has contributed many articles on Methodist history in India to The Indian Witness, and has been a consultant on Methodist work in India for this Encyclopedia.

HOLLISTER, WILLIAM H. (1858-1948), American minister and missionary to INDIA, was born Jan. 3, 1858, in Beloit, Wis. He joined the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE in 1884. He married Emma Hodge, and with her went to India, reaching Bombay in January 1888. He was then transferred to the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE and appointed to Nagpur as pastor of the English church. In 1891, he was assigned to Kolar, where twenty-seven of his thirty-two years as a missionary were spent.

Early in his missionary career he had a serious bout with fever. As his strength slowly returned, he saw very clearly the outlines of his work. The place of industrial education was laid upon his heart. He believed in self-help, because of what it does in a student as well as for him. He believed that economic spirit and achievements of nations and persons constitute their spiritual life. In addition to the Boys' Boarding School, the varied industries then in operation—tailoring, carpentry, masonry, and farming—later merged into the fuller program of the industrial education department and were in William Hollister's charge.

His talents were varied. All the buildings erected during his years in Kolar were of his planning and constructed under his direction. He also served as superintendent of the Bangalore district. He returned to America upon his retirement in 1921, and died in April 1948, in Beloit, Wis.

HOLLOWAY, FRED GARRIGUS (1898-), American college president and bishop, was born on March 28, 1898, in Newark, N. J., the son of Frank DeMott and Alice (Garrigus) Holloway. He was married on April 12, 1923, to Winifred Maxwell Jackson, and to them were born Fred C., Jr., and William Jackson. He received the A.B. degree, 1918, and the D.D., 1932, from WESTERN MARY-LAND COLLEGE; he was a student at WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1918-19. He received the B.D. from DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1921; was a Fellow of Drew University, 1921-23; received the honorary degrees of LL.D., DICKINSON COLLEGE, 1936; L.H.D., BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE, 1947; Litt.D., KANSAS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1957; L.H.D., Rider College (Trenton, N. J.), 1959; D.D., ADRIAN COLLEGE, 1959; D.D. from WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN, 1962; and the LL.D. from Western Maryland College in 1962.

Fred C. Holloway was ordained elder by the M. P. Church in 1921. His pastorates include: First Church, Wilmington, Del., 1921-23; Wilton Heights Church, Baltimore, Md., 1923-26; Cherrydale, Va., 1926-29. He was professor of Biblical Languages, Westminster Theological Seminary, 1927-35, and president there, 1932-35; he became president of Western Maryland College, 1935-47; dean of Drew Theological Seminary, 1947-48; and president of Drew University from 1948 to 1960, at which time he was elected bishop of The Methodist Church and assigned to administer the WEST VIRGINIA Area.

Bishop Holloway was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church of 1936; the Uniting Conference of Methodism, 1939; General Conferences of The Methodist Church 1940, '44, '48, and '52, and to the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES since 1956. He was a ministerial delegate to WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Second Assembly, Evanston, Ill. in 1954, and past president of the National Association of Schools and Colleges of The Methodist Church and the Association of Methodist Theological Schools; a former member of the BOARD OF EDUCATION of The Methodist Church, and former president of The Methodist Church Board of Hospitals and Homes. He is a member of the BOARD OF MISSIONS, Interboard Committee on Christian Vocations; a former president of the Council of Protestant Colleges and Universities. He has been on the Board of Directors of Union Protestant Hospital, Clarksburg, W. Va.; a trustee of Wesley Theological Seminary, Washington; of West Virginia Wesleyan College, Buckhannon; of MORRIS HARVEY COLLEGE, Charleston; of AMERICAN UNIVERSITY (Washington, D. C.); and is a member of the American Academy of Religion. He is retired, but was appointed to the Marshall Evans chair of English at Morris Harvey College in Charleston, W. Va., and is at present in that position.

HOLMES, MERRILL J. (1886-1962), American educator and board secretary, was born in Indianola, Iowa. His college education was at SIMPSON COLLEGE there, where his father had been president. His graduate work was at NORTHWESTERN and Harvard, and theological training at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE. His interest in education is shown by a year of teaching at the Colegio Metodista, Rome, 1908, and at Garrett from 1912-14, and DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1919-24. World War I found him as a chaplain in FRANCE.

The M. E. Board of Education called him as secretary of Institutes and Lifework in its EPWORTH LEAGUE Department, 1925-28; and as secretary of Negro Institutions until 1940. This latter service was recognized by CLARK COLLEGE, Atlanta, Ga., in its naming a dormitory after him. The next eighteen years found him at ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, first as vice-president in charge of developing new campus buildings, then as president on the death of W. E. SHAW in 1947. Many new buildings and enlarged assets attest his successful administration.

In his ministerial relationships we find that he joined the DES MOINES CONFERENCE in 1908, transferring to the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE in 1942, and was retired in 1958. In the Conferences, as in his executive positions, his advice and wisdom was sought.

HOLMGREN, LATON EARLE (1915-), executive secretary of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, was born on Feb. 20, 1915, the son of Frank A. and Freda I. (Lindahl) Holmgren. He was educated at ASBURY COLLEGE, A.B., 1936; DREW UNIVERSITY, B.D. summa cum laude, 1941; and did postgraduate work at Edinburgh University in 1947. He was given the D.D. degree by ILLINOIS WESLEYAN in 1956. He served for a time as the associate minister of Calvary Methodist Church in East Orange, N. J., 1940-42, and then associate minister for Christ Church, New York City, from 1943-48. He then became pastor of the Union Church in Tokyo, Japan, where he remained from 1949 to 1952, and was a lecturer in the international department of the Tokyo University; adviser to the Japanese foreign office, Tokyo, 1951, secretary of the Asia American Bible Society, New York City, 1952-54, and its executive secretary from 1954-63, at which time he became general secretary of the American Bible Society.

Dr. Holmgren has been a member of the Far Eastern Office Area Commission; of the Division of Foreign Missions of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; the chairman of the Japan Committee of the National Council of Churches; a member of the executive Board of the Division of World Ministries, 1963; and a member of the COUNCIL OF SECRETARIES of The Methodist Church, 1960. He was given the simulated rank of brigadier-general on a special mission for the United States Army Chaplain Corps in KOREA in 1951. He is a member of the Japan Society, the Asia Society, the English Speaking Union, the Union League. He edited the Japan-Christian Yearbook, 1950-51, and has been a contributor to various publications.

L. H. HOLSEY

HOLSEY, LUCIUS H. (1842-1920), born in slavery, this man became the fourth bishop of the C.M.E. CHURCH in 1873. He exerted great influence throughout the South among both races. His special field of concern was for education. From 1858 until the beginning of the Civil War he lived on the campus of the University of Georgia where his owner, Richard Malcolm Johnston, was a professor. It was while there that Holsey managed to evade the law and learned to read. He recounted his experience in this and other matters in his Autobiography published in ATLANTA in 1897. He lived in Sparta, Ga., during the Civil War, and during this time he was married to a servant girl in the house of Bishop GEORGE FOSTER PIERCE, with the bishop himself performing the ceremony. After the war the bishop helped prepare young Holsey for the Methodist ministry. He was pastor of Trinity C.M.E. Church in Augusta, Ga., when a called session of his Church met there and elected him bishop. He continued to reside in Augusta, where he helped to found PAINE COLLEGE in 1882. He was the first vice-president of the Board of Trustees of this institution. He and Bishop ATTICUS GREENE HAYGOOD were the primary founders of this remarkable southern school dedicated to Negro education. Its Board of Trustees was an inter-racial body from its first meeting in 1882. (For details of the life of Holsey see John B. Cade, Holsey—The Incomparable. New York, 1963.) Bishop Holsey was also the founder of the Holsey Industrial School. During his episcopacy, he revised the Book of Discipline and the Manual of Discipline and compiled the church hymnal known as the "Holsey Hymnal." Bishop Holsey died in August 1920, after serving as bishop for forty-seven years.

HOLSTON CIRCUIT. The Holston River country in the post-colonial period in the U.S.A. was the gateway to the West and Southwest. Emigration flowed to and through Holston, and so, as R. N. Price wrote in his Holston Methodism, "from these heights Methodist gospel light radiated to the 'dark and bloody ground' of Kentucky, the fertile plains of Ohio, the great Northwest, and the broad and beautiful savannahs of the Southwest." It was four years after the Holston territory was set off as a separate circuit before Methodist missionaries made their way into the Cumberland country, now Middle TENNESSEE.

Early Holston country consisted of the wilderness region of VIRGINIA, lying west of New River, and the part of Tennessee lying between the Allegheny and Cumberland Mountains. It was filled with many valleys, wide rivers, and fertile, cheap land. This region, watered by the Holston, New, Watauga, French Broad, Nolichucky, Pigeon, Powell, and Clinch rivers, was the scene of continuous wars between settlers and Indians.

Stephen Holston settled near the head of the river (which was to bear his name) about the year 1748. Historic settlements were made at Black's Fort and at Watauga in 1769, and in 1770 the towns of Abingdon and Jonesboro were founded.

Among the first emigrants from the "advanced settlements" in Virginia and NORTH CAROLINA to the region of Holston and Watauga were families which had been reached by Methodism. At times, a few Methodist families located in the same region and gathered themselves into Societies. Occasionally local preachers, exhorters, and those who had acted as CLASS LEADERS in the older communities formed part of the little company in the new settlement, and thus regular religious services were instituted, and Methodism was actually planted before the itinerant preacher had visited the locality.

Where there were no local preachers or other official members, zealous laymen took the responsibility for organizing and leading. Devout Methodist laymen like EDWARD COX and Edward Morgan among the first settlers opened their homes for preaching, and from these centers Methodist influence spread in all directions.

Edward Cox, converted by FRANCIS ASBURY's preaching, came from Baltimore County, Md. and settled in the Holston country in 1773. Edward Morgan had probably come to New River at an earlier date and was active in the building, about 1773 or 1774, of the first church in Holston, PAGE'S MEETING HOUSE. The church seems to have been built about ten years before the coming of a circuit rider, but probably local preachers were working before the traveling preacher arrived. Page's Meeting House represents the first Methodist Society west of New River, being in Pulaski County, Va.

Holston Circuit first appeared in the Minutes in 1783, with JEREMIAH LAMBERT the appointee. He was the first Conference appointed preacher west of the Alleghenies. Thus regular circuit work began in Holston country in 1783. Lambert's circuit embraced all the settlements on the Watauga, Nolichucky, and Holston rivers, including those in what is now Greene, Washington, Carter, Johnson, Sullivan, and Hawkins Counties, Tenn.; and Washington, Smyth, Russell, and perhaps Scott and Lee Counties, Va.; with one or two appointments on the headwaters of New River, in Grayson County, Va., or Ashe County, N. C. (These Counties are so named in 1908.)

ably by local preachers. In 1785 a class was organized in Sullivan County, Tenn., near where Blountville now stands, and the following year a house was built, probably the first Methodist church built in Tennessee. It was called ACUFF'S CHAPEL. Nelson's Chapel was the third chapel of which we have any account in the Holston country, and the second in Tennessee. It was situated in the vicinity of the present site of Johnson City, Washington Co., Tennessee. The fourth Methodist meeting-house in the Holston country, and the third in Tennessee, of which we have any account (and one of the first in East Tennessee) was a Society organized in the residence of Benjamin Vampelt, in Greene County. Vampelt's Chapel was built before 1792. Many more Societies and meetinghouses followed.

In 1787 Holston Circuit was divided into Holston and Nolichucky Circuits, the two constituting a district. Holston Circuit was extended to the settlements along New River and Clinch River, and retained very little of its original territory, most of the old Holston Circuit falling to Nolichucky. The list of appointments to the Holston Circuit was sixteen in number and were all in private homes. The circuit had no stewards, no leaders, no exhorters, and only one local preacher.

The old Holston Circuit was eventually divided due to the rapid growth of population by immigration and the large increase in the membership of the Church.

The first conference west of the Alleghenies was held in Holston country at the home of Stephen Keywood in Washington County, Va. on about May 13-15, 1788. The second Conference known certainly to have been held in the Holston country was held at the home of Michael Huffaker in 1792. BISHOP FRANCIS ASBURY, in his Journal, wrote of holding a Conference and preaching at Keywood's and Huffaker's. Asbury was intimately associated with Holston Methodism to the time of his death in 1816.

By 1801 the Western District in Holston country had been organized, consisting of four circuits with 1,044 members. In 1801 it became part of the newly organized WESTERN CONFERENCE. In 1812 Holston country became part of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE and reported 6,335 members in nine organized circuits, with ten preachers and a presiding elder appointed to the work.

HOLSTON CONFERENCE was formed in 1824. At the GENERAL CONFERENCE meeting in Baltimore, Md., in 1824, it was decided that the number in membership, the great distance to be traveled in the Tennessee Conference, and the homogeneous social, economic, and cultural problems of the mountain areas justified the formation of Holston Conference. It was to be composed of that part of the Tennessee Conference lying east of the Cumberland Mountains, covering all of East Tennessee and all of Virginia west of New River and the portion of North Carolina around ASHEVILLE and Black Mountain.

STEPHEN G. COBB

HOLSTON CONFERENCE (ME and MES), named for Stephen Holston who settled before 1784 in what is now

Smyth County, Va., was organized at Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 27, 1824 in a house belonging to Hugh Lawson White, Bishop ROBERT R. ROBERTS presiding. At the time the conference included all of TENNESSEE east of the Cumberland Mountains, all of VIRGINIA west of the New River, all of western NORTH CAROLINA, and parts of SOUTH CAROLINA and GEORGIA.

From the beginning the conference was greatly interested in education, establishing Holston College (later Holston Seminary) at New Market, Va. The school continued until 1850. Another educational venture, out of which came EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, was more successful. Established in 1836, the College opened its doors for students in the spring of 1838, and it continues as a strong Methodist institution.

The Holston Conference grew rapidly, its membership in the first nine years increasing from 14,934 to 24,950, and by the time of the bisection of the M. E. Church in 1844, the conference had seven districts, fifty-seven charges, and 39,479 members.

Notwithstanding strong anti-slavery sentiment in the Holston region, the conference adhered South after 1844. It suffered only a small decrease in membership during the Civil War, from 52,077 members in 1860 to 50,650 in 1865. But in 1865 the Northern Church, taking advantage of the anti-slavery feeling in the region, organized a HOLSTON CONFERENCE of its own. That fall the Southern Church reorganized its Holston Conference, and at the next session in October 1866, it reported only 24,107 members, a decrease of more than 26,000 from the preceding year. The loss was of course due largely to the formation of the Holston Conference (ME).

In spite of grave problems, the Holston Conference (MES) grew and prospered after the Civil War. In 1870 it had some 30,000 members, 38,000 in 1875, about 47,000 in 1885, and in 1889, the year before the organization of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE took away a large slice of its territory, the Holston Conference reported more than 55,000 members. It continued its emphasis on education, at one time operating nine colleges and a dozen academies and secondary schools. At unification in 1939 the conference brought 126,066 members into The Methodist Church, as compared with 52,086 for the Holston Conference (ME).

Today the Holston Conference maintains HIWASSEE Junior COLLEGE at Madisonville, a number of WESLEY FOUNDATIONS and campus ministries at colleges and universities in its region, several retirement homes, a children's home at Greenville, and Oak Ridge Hospital at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

In 1970 the conference had thirteen districts, 580 ministers, 538 charges, 198,804 members, and property valued at $96,544,081.

HOLSTON CONFERENCE (1865-1939), of the M. E. Church was organized at Athens, Tenn., June 1, 1865 with Bishop DAVIS W. CLARK presiding. The territory of the conference included east TENNESSEE and western NORTH CAROLINA, but unlike the Holston Conference (MES) it did not take in southwest VIRGINIA and a small part of north GEORGIA. The Northern Church was able to organize a conference at the close of the Civil War in the area already covered by a strong Southern Church conference because of much anti-slavery sentiment among the people. Soon after the formation of the Northern Church body, the numerical strength of the southern one was cut in half. (See HOLSTON CONFERENCE [MES]).

When organized the Holston Conference (ME) had 6,107 members and 100 churches. The next year it reported 18,211 members and 150 churches. Thereafter its growth was not so rapid. In 1880 the conference set off its Negro membership and ministry as the East Tennessee Conference. (See TENNESSEE-KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.)

The Holston Conference supported TENNESSEE WESLEYAN COLLEGE at Athens, Tenn. In 1939 the conference merged to help form the Holston Conference of The Methodist Church. It brought to the merger 450 churches and 52,086 members, as compared with 770 churches and 126,066 members brought by the Holston Conference (MES).

HOLT, DAVID BRAINERD (1855-1934), American minister and administrator, was born in Weld, Maine, on Sept. 19, 1855, was received on trial in the EAST MAINE CONFERENCE in 1879 and into full membership in 1881. He served the churches of Exeter, Stetson and Corinna, 1879-80; Sebec and Bowerbank, 1881. In 1882 he transferred to the MAINE CONFERENCE where his pastorates were: North Anson and Madison, 1882-84; Fairfield, 1885-87; Skowhegan, 1888-90; Kents Hill, 1891-95; Bridgton, 1896-1900; Bath, Wesley Church, 1901-08. Following sixteen years as district superintendent he was pastor at Rumford, 1925-28. After his retirement in 1928, Holt served as executive secretary of the Conference Claimants Commission, traveling about the state raising funds for the cause he so well represented. He continued in this work until the time of his death.

Though Holt was a "pulpit prophet of the highest order" and a beloved pastor, he was more widely known as an eminently effective administrator and for his wise counsel in committees and boards throughout the state of MAINE and beyond.

For six years, 1909-14, he was superintendent of the Portland District and for ten years, 1915-24, of the Augusta District. A contemporary described him in these words: "For sixteen years as District Superintendent, he traveled over 6,000 miles a year by train, electric car, steamboat, stage coach, buggy, sleigh, and on foot throughout the length and breadth of his territory." People as they came to know him loved him and the ministers always felt that they were in safe hands. He was described as "dignified in bearing, calm and unruffled in conflict, wise in counsel, gracious in spirit." In his tribute to Holt, Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes wrote, "I counted him in the inner circle of my esteem and love . . . Somehow he often reminded me of the Pine Tree State (Maine). He was tall and sturdy like its trees; and rugged like its coasts . . . (He) had a fine and penetrating mind . . . When I urged that Syracuse give him the D.D., Chancellor Day said, 'I have never presented a worthier case.' His dry humor and pungent wit were unique. Someone described it in these words: 'He could plunge his audience into convulsions of mirth while maintaining himself the utmost gravity.'"

Within the Conference he served on innumerable boards and committees. Six times he was sent to GENERAL CONFERENCES: 1900, 1908, 1912, 1916, 1920, 1924. "He might easily have served at the Los Angeles session in 1904, but with rare modesty and grace declined to have his name used in balloting, and in favor of an elected lay delegate, who, he thought, was entitled to this honor beyond his own deserving." He served the church at large on boards of Foreign Missions, Home Missions and Church Extension, EPWORTH LEAGUE, and the FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY.

In 1878 he was graduated from the Maine Wesleyan Seminary at Kents Hill. On Jan. 1, 1879 he was married to Cora G. Ellis. They celebrated their golden wedding in 1929.

Holt died July 26, 1934, at his home in South Portland and was buried at Wilton, Maine. He was survived by Mrs. Holt, who died Sept. 16, 1950, and their daughter, Mrs. Herbert S. Waterhouse. As a memorial his friends raised $6,000, which was added to his personal gift of $4,000, a total of $10,000 for Conference Claimants. The Conference Year Book of 1935 was dedicated to the memory of Dr. Holt, an honor that has not been conferred on any other member of the Maine Conference.

IVAN LEE HOLT

HOLT, IVAN LEE (1886-1967), American bishop and WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL leader, was born at DeWitt, Ark., on Jan. 9, 1886, the son of Robert Paine and Ella (Thomas) Holt. He was educated at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, receiving the A.B. degree in 1904, and from the University of Chicago, Ph.D., 1909. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by the University of Chicago. He traveled and studied in Europe in 1911, and in 1921-22. He also received honorary degrees of D.D. from CENTRAL COLLEGE, Missouri, in 1918; DUKE UNIVERSITY, 1933; and Victoria College, in Toronto, Canada, in 1947; the LL.D. from Southern College, 1929; the LL.D. from EMORY in 1934, and from the University of Arkansas in 1937; OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY awarded him the Litt.D., 1935, and SYRACUSE, the S.T.D. in the same year. He married Leland Burks (deceased, 1948) on June 6, 1906, and to them was born one son, Ivan Lee, Jr., who became a judge in St. Louis, Mo. After the death of his first wife, Bishop Holt married Mrs. Starr Carithers of Georgia in 1950. After her decease in 1958, he married Mrs. Modena McPherson Rudisell of Duluth, Ga.

A scholar, Ivan Lee Holt was first a professor of Greek and Latin in Stuttgart Training School, Arkansas, 1904-07. He gave up teaching for the pastorate of University Church, Sr. Louis, where he served from 1909 to 1911, then he became pastor of Centenary Church, Cape Girardeau, Mo., 1911-15. In that year he went to SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, as professor of Old Testament Literature, chairman of the theological faculty and chaplain of the university. In 1918 he was back in the pastorate of St. John's Church, St. Louis, where he remained for twenty years. He was elected bishop at the last GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, in 1938. His Episcopal Area was Texas and New Mexico for one year, then the Dallas Area until 1944. In that year he came back to the Missouri Area to serve until retirement in 1956.

He was well known as a preacher abroad. Among his assignments were: the American Church in Paris; the Community Church in Shanghai; the Egremont Presbyterian Church at Wallasey, Cheshire, England; the American Church in BUENOS AIRES; Scott's Church in MELBOURNE, Australia; City Road Chapel and Central Hall, LONDON; and also in the Union Churches in Peking, Tokyo, Mexico City, Monterrey, Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo, Lima, and the Canal Zone.

As author Bishop Holt wrote the Babylonian Contract Tablets; The Return of Spring to Man's Soul; The Search for a New Strategy in Protestantism; The Methodists of the World; Eugene Russell Hendrix, Servant of the Kingdom; and The Missouri Bishops.

He acted as trustee of Southern Methodist University, of Central College in Missouri and of the Carnegie Church Peace Union. Actively concerned in interdenominational affairs, he was a delegate to the first assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in Amsterdam, 1948, and the second assembly of the World Council in Evans-ton, Ill., 1954, when he had charge of the World Com-munion Service. He was fraternal messenger to the Unit-ing Conference of British Methodism in 1932, and to the General Conference of AUSTRALIA in 1935, when Method-ists there celebrated their centennial. He also attended the All-European Methodist Conference in COPENHAGEN, Denmark, in 1939, and the several WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCES at London in 1921; ATLANTA, Ga., 1931; Springfield, Mass., 1947; OXFORD, England, 1951. He was elected president of the World Methodist Council and held the position as president-emeritus while he lived.

Bishop Holt was also president of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES IN AMERICA, 1935-36, and was a member of the committee which drew up the charter for the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES which was later organized. He was a member of the joint Commission on Unifi-cation of the Methodist Church, having charge of the preparation of the ritual, which was later adopted by the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939. He served as president of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church and also as president of the BOARD of PENSIONS of The Meth-odist Church for some years. He was chairman of the Methodist Commission on Church Union. A tribute paid him during the 1956 General Conference stated that Bishop Holt had "contributed as much to ecumenical Christianity as any other single figure in our generation."

He died in Atlanta, Ga., on Jan. 12, 1967, and was buried in St. Louis after impressive services.

HOLT, IVAN L., JR. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

HOLT, JOHN ALLEN (1852-1915), prominent M. P. educator, lay leader, and statesman, was born near Hillsdale, Guilford Co., N. C., on Dec. 18, 1852. He was the son of John Foust Holt and Louisa J. Williams Holt. For forty-one years he was a teacher and for thirty-nine years he was principal and senior proprietor of Oak Ridge Institute, a non-denominational preparatory school with close ties to the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. CHURCH. Holt was educated at Oak Ridge Institute, Williams College in Massachusetts, and OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY and the Ohio Business College, from which he graduated in 1875. In 1875 he began his association as a teacher with Oak Ridge Institute and he was joined there in 1879 by his brother, MARTIN HICKS HOLT. In 1884 the Holt brothers purchased the institution and they operated it until their deaths in 1914 and 1915. John Allen Holt headed the commercial department at the institute. He was interested in the mercantile business and in banking. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina, and in 1898 he was elected president of the Association of Academies of North Carolina. He was a member of the state senate in 1907-08, where he served as chairman of the committee on education and a member of the committees on railroads and finance. The Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer once observed "(Holt) has killed the old idea that the teacher is not practical." Frequently a delegate to the North Carolina Annual Conference of the M. P. Church, John Allen Holt was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of that denomination in 1884, 1900, 1904, and 1908. As a result of the strong religious convictions of the Holt brothers there was a standing offer of free tuition to ministerial students of the M. P. denomination at Oak Ridge Institute and to the sons of M. P. ministers in the North Carolina Conference.

John Holt married Sallie Josephine Knight (Sept. 13, 1853-April 23, 1946), daughter of Pinkney Knight, on Dec. 29, 1881, and they had three children. One son, Earle Holt, was for some years a teacher at Oak Ridge Institute. John Allen Holt died on June 15, 1915, and was buried in Oak Ridge.

HOLT, MARTIN HICKS (1855-1914), prominent M. P. educator, lay leader and statesman, brother of Professor JOHN ALLEN HOLT, was junior principal and head of the academic department of Oak Ridge Institute, Guilford County, N. C. He was born on Jan. 9, 1855, and was the son of John Foust Holt and Louisa J. Williams Holt and a great-nephew of the distinguished antebellum NORTH CAROLINA educator and statesman, Archibald D. Murphy. Martin Hicks Holt and John Allen Holt were associated as teachers and joint proprietors of Oak Ridge Institute for a period of about thirty-five years. As a result of their strong religious convictions, there was a standing offer of free tuition to ministerial students of the M. P. Church at Oak Ridge Institute and to the sons of M. P. ministers in the North Carolina Conference. Martin Hicks Holt was educated at Oak Ridge Institute, received a bachelor's degree from the University of North Carolina and the M.A. degree from WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE. For a while he studied law. In January 1879, he joined his brother at Oak Ridge Institute and in 1884 they purchased the school.

Holt was a member of the North Carolina General Assembly in 1893 and served as chairman of the committee on education and as member of several other committees including finance and corporations. He was responsible for raising the tax rate for public education and was instrumental in increasing the appropriations for the educational and charitable institutions of the state. He became an initial director of the North Carolina Deaf and Dumb School at Morganton and served continuously for many years. From 1893-97 he served as a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina. Frequently a delegate at the North Carolina Annual Conference of the M. P. Church, Martin Hicks Holt was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. P. Church in 1888 and 1912. He was considered to be "a speaker and a debator of more than ordinary ability . . . of poetical temperament, and . . . (one who delighted) in (the) study of the classics." In 1878 he married Mary A. Lambeth of Guilford County and they had three children. One son, John Harvey Holt, was for some years a teacher at Oak Ridge Institute. Martin Hicks Holt died on Nov. 26, 1914, and was buried in Oak Ridge.

HOLT, NANCY REBECCA (1859-), American missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Norfolk, Va., on Feb. 18, 1859. She graduated from RANDOLPH-MACON WOMAN'S COLLEGE in 1912; studied at Scarritt College in Kansas City and at the Biblical Seminary in New York City. During various furloughs, she took special courses at these schools, and at Union Theological Seminary (Richmond, Va.) and Hartford Seminary (Conn.)

After three years in social service centers in the United States, Miss Holt went to Brazil in 1916, under the Women's Missionary Council. She served until 1946—in educational institutions, in social service and as editor of the children's magazine, the Bem-Te-Vi.

At the Instituto Centraldo Povo (People's Institute) in RIO DE JANEIRO, she secured in 1924 the cooperation of the federal government in locating one of its baby welfare centers at the institute.

Upon her retirement from Brazil, Miss Holt served in the editorial offices of the Women's Division of Christian Service in New York. She resides in Wesley Woods Towers, Atlanta, Ga.

HOLT CHAPEL CASE (British Methodist) was an incident in the struggle between Wesleyan Methodism and the WESLEYAN REFORMERS in 1849-57. It concerned the Wesleyan Methodist chapel in the small Norfolk town of Holt. The Wesleyan Reformers were led by THOMAS ROWLAND and William Cozens-Hardy (1807-95), a prominent local layman who financed the legal battle over the chapel for the Reformers, refusing their offer to repay his considerable expenses.

Cozens-Hardy, who was a trustee of the Holt Chapel property (there were actually two chapels involved), had been expelled from the Wesleyan Methodist membership for his support of the Reformers. He was expelled by a Special District Meeting and never accepted his expulsion as constitutional. He then attempted to use the rights which he had in the Holt Chapel property as a mortgagee to obtain the use of one of the buildings for the Reformers. In May, 1851, the Court of Chancery (presided over by Lord Cranworth as Lord Chancellor) decided that the rights of the mortgagee were paramount to all other rights, and must be upheld whether they were in favor or in opposition to the trusts of the deed. This meant that the Wesleyan connection had to pay off the mortgages in order to retain control of the property. The case did not, however, have any lasting significance. It is of interest that Cozens-Hardy's son became the Right Honourable Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy, Master of the Rolls.

HOLTER, DON WENDELL (1905-), American missionary, teacher, and president of ST. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, was born in Lincoln, Kan., March 24, 1905, son of Henry O. and Lenna (Mater) Holter. He was educated at BAKER UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1927; D.D., 1948; GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, B.D., 1930; University of Chicago, Ph.D., 1934.

He was admitted on trial into the KANSAS CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, 1929, was ordained DEACON in 1930, and then admitted in full connection and ordained ELDER in 1931.

To the PHILIPPINE ISLANDS he went as a missionary, serving from 1934 to 1945. From 1940 to 1945 he was president of Union Theological Seminary at MANILA. Thence he came to the pastorate of Hamline Methodist Church, ST. PAUL, Minn., 1946-49. He was a professor in Garrett Theological Seminary, Evanston, Ill., 1949-58. Since 1958 he has been president of St. Paul School of Theology-Methodist, Kansas City, Mo. Dr. Holter was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE (TMC) of 1964 and '66 as a delegate from the Kansas Conference; and then of the Uniting Conference of 1968. At that Conference he was made the chairman of the Committee on the Ministry, and had served as vice-chairman of the same Committee in the 1964 and 1966 General Conferences. He is a member of the BOARD OF MISSIONS for the 1964-72 term, and of the Commission on Ecumenical Affairs for the same eight-year period. He was a delegate to the MADRAS CONFERENCE, 1938, and the GHANA CONFERENCE, 1957-58. He is the author of Fire on the Prairie, Methodism in the History of Kansas—a history authorized by the Conferences there. His wife was Isabelle Elliott whom he married on June 20, 1931, and they have three daughters.

HOLY CLUB. One of the nicknames given to the small group of students (and later "dons") who were gathered together by CHARLES WESLEY at Oxford University early in 1729, and came under the leadership of JOHN WESLEY when he returned to Oxford in November 1729 (see OXFORD METHODISTS).

HOLY SPIRIT. The third person of the Trinity, is also known in the Bible as the Spirit (Matt. 4:1), the Spirit of God (I Sam. 10:10), the Spirit of Christ (I Peter 1:11), the Spirit of grace (Heb. 10:29), the Spirit of truth (John 16:13), the Paraclete, or Comforter (John 15:26), etc. The trinitarian relation of the Spirit is discussed under TRINITY. Here we shall briefly consider the historical development of this doctrine.

Biblical. In the Old Testament the Spirit is an agent of God in creation (Gen. 1:2), who guides representative leaders of the covenant community in their functions as prophet, priest, and king (Judges 3:10; 6:34; I Sam. 11:6; 16:13). The prophets spoke of a day in the future when God would pour out his personal Spirit upon everyone (Joel 2:28). There was never a time when the Holy Spirit was not active on the level of creation, and in God's redemptive work within the people of Israel.

In the Gospels, the Holy Spirit is active in the generation (Luke 1:35), baptism (Matt. 3:16), and ministry of our Lord (Matt. 4:1; 4:18). In his last discourses Jesus referred repeatedly to the Holy Spirit, and made the promise that he would come upon the disciples (John 16:7; Acts 1:8, etc.). The Holy Spirit will be Christ's representative on earth after his physical departure, unfolding the truth of Christ (John 14:16; 15:26; 16:13), accompanying and guiding the church in all times and places (John 14:16).

This special gift of the Spirit from the Father at the request of and representing the Son, comes on the Day of Pentecost, ten days following the Ascension (Acts 2). At Pentecost and thereafter the Holy Spirit led men to acknowledge Jesus as Lord (Acts 2; I Cor. 12:3), convinced them of sin (Acts 2:37; John 16:9), worked regeneration (John 3:5), promoted sanctification (I Cor. 6:11), endowed the Church with the power of witness (Acts 1-3) and the gifts and graces of the Christian life (I Cor. 12-14; Rom. 14:17; Eph. 2:18)

Early Church. The Holy Spirit was given relatively little controversial attention in the early years of the Church's doctrinal development. This is reflected in the Apostle's Creed where the third article is briefly stated: "I believe in the Holy Spirit." Athanasius insisted upon the divinity and personhood of the Holy Spirit over against the unitarian emphases of Arius. The Nicene—

Constantinopolitan Creed of 318, contains a fuller statement of the Church's faith than the Apostle's Creed. "And (we believe) in the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of life, who proceedeth from the Father, and with the Father and Son is to be adored and glorified, who spake by the holy prophets." The Western Latin Church later added words to this Creed which insisted upon the procession of the Spirit from both the Father and the Son. Both branches of Christendom had always affirmed that the Spirit proceeds from the Father. Only thus could the allowance be made for the activity of the divine Spirit as recorded in scripture prior to the Incarnation. But that the Comforter proceeds equally from the Son as well is exactly what the East would never allow. To this day this remains one of the doctrinal points of division between the Orthodox Churches and the churches of the West.

The Reformation. Roman Catholic development of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit subsequent to the creedal formulations of the fourth and fifth centuries dealt primarily with the infallible inspiration of scripture and tradition and the ex cathedra pronouncements of the Roman pontiff.

With the Reformation "break-through" we see a renewed emphasis upon the work of the Holy Spirit in the personal experience of believers. The authority of the church was replaced by the authority of scripture, and its validation inwardly in the heart of believers became the ground of Christian certainty and faith. But in spite of this re-emphasis upon the Spirit's work of faith and assurance, the doctrine of the Reformers, especially that of Luther's, confined the revealing Spirit to the word of Scripture and the elements of the sacraments. Calvin provided more freedom for the Holy Spirit to work redemptively outside Word and Sacraments. The Anabaptists, continental pietists, Quakers, and Methodists followed Calvin in this emphasis upon the freedom and universal operation of the Holy Spirit.

John Wesley. The father of Methodism emphasized the redemptive work of the Holy Spirit in the evangelical revival and his own doctrinal reflection thereon. He accepted the formulations long considered orthodox in the western church with regard to the Holy Spirit within the Trinity, the personhood and procession of the Spirit from the Father and the Son. His concern with these doctrines is decidedly non-metaphysical; he relates these doctrines immediately to man's redemption. The Holy Spirit is the triune God immanently present in human life to administer the justification and sanctification of all who will respond. Furthermore, the Spirit is willing to assure man of the work he has accomplished in him. Wesley's major contribution to our understanding of the Holy Spirit is seen in his optimism of grace. For he believed, and Methodists have continued to teach, that the influence of the Holy Spirit is a dynamic enabling Christians to live in the holiness and righteousness of love like unto that which is in Christ Jesus. What is impossible for man, is possible for God working through the responsible cooperation of man.

Contemporary American Methodist doctrine. Among the doctrinal standards of The United Methodist Church today are the twenty five ARTICLES OF RELIGION which Wesley extracted from the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion of the Church of England. Article Four, "Of the Holy Ghost. . ." reads, "The Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, is of one substance, majesty, and glory with the Father and the Son, very and eternal God."

The Confession of Faith of the former Evangelical United Brethren Church, now a part of United Methodism's doctrinal statement contains "Article Three.—The Holy Spirit: We believe in the Holy Spirit who proceeds from and is one in being with the Father and Son. He convinces the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment. He leads men through faithful response to the gospel into the fellowship of the Church. He comforts, sustains and empowers the faithful and guides them into all truth."

In addition to these doctrinal statements, The United Methodist Church has authorized two ancient creeds and three contemporary creeds for use in public worship. The statements of the APOSTLE'S CREED and the NICEAN CREED on the Holy Spirit have already been referred to. In "A Modern Affirmation" we read the minister's address to the people: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is the one true Church, apostolic and universal. . ." The third article of this Modern credo affirms "We believe in the Holy Spirit as the divine presence in our lives, whereby we are kept in perpetual remembrance of the truth of Christ, and find strength and help in time of need."

HOME AND MAORI MISSION DEPARTMENT (New Zealand), with headquarters at Auckland, was established under a full-time general secretary in 1909. It developed from the committee which had previously supervised the Maori Mission and the Home Mission and Church Extension activities. The Maori Mission was begun as a foreign mission field of the British Methodist Conference in 1822. Later in the century it was carried over into the care of the colonial church as part of its domestic task. It is responsible to the New Zealand Conference for a wide variety of activities.

It supervises the whole work of the Maori Mission, including the employment of all ministerial and deaconess appointments in Maori circuits, and the running of Maori youth hostels and centers. On the European side, it gives financial assistance and oversight to aided circuits, administers a literature and colporteur society, and generally guides church-extension policy. The work includes:

Rangiatea Maori Girls' Hostel, New Plymouth, was established in 1959, at Spotswood, on the outskirts of the city, and involves the Robert Tahupotiki Haddon Library, a memorial to a former superintendent of the Maori Mission. The original plan was to establish a residential school for girls, but this was abandoned, and half the land was sold to the government for the establishment of a coeducational post-primary school. The hostel has a school on either side, so that every provision exists for the education of the residents.

Seamer House, Remuera, Auckland, New Zealand, is a hostel for Maori girls established in 1954. It was named for A. J. Seamer, a general superintendent of Methodist Home and Maori Missions.

Te Rahui (W), Hamilton, New Zealand, is a hostel for Maori girls opened in 1944. It is a center from which district Maori mission deaconesses carry out their work among the Maori people of the surrounding area. Te Rahui means "the place of gathering together," and "W" stands for Wahine, or woman.

Te Rahui (T), Hamilton, New Zealand, is a hostel for Maori boys opened in 1953. The Maori boys who live there are taking apprenticeship courses for skilled trades or are employed in government offices. Te Rahui means the place of gathering together, and "T" stands for Tane, or young men.

The Literature and Colporteur Society, of Auckland, New Zealand, was founded in 1926 as a subsidiary of the Home Mission Department, which has directed the development of the work to its present stage. The society specializes in the importing and purchase of Christian literature, study textbooks and Sunday school supplies. It also owns and administers the Wesley Circulating Library, and operates Epworth Bookroom (Auckland) as its retail outlet.

GEORGE I. LAURENSON

HOME MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION, BOARD OF (See MISSIONS.)

HOME MISSIONS DEPARTMENT (British). A committee for "home missions" was first set up in Wesleyan Methodism by the Conference of 1856. The original minute of 1856 defined its purpose as "the spread of the Gospel in Great Britain and Ireland," and its formation was an admission that Methodism was no longer expanding smoothly through the traditional circuit system. A minute of 1859 instructed the committee to pay "specific attention to the neglected and careless portion of the population of our large towns and the rural districts." The first secretary was CHARLES PREST. The first plan was simply to release selected ministers from the normal work of the circuit system, so that they might spend their whole time in the evangelization of a particular district. For the sake of discipline, for years they were required to keep a journal in which they recorded the number of visits paid and services held, the number of people persuaded to attend worship or to accept membership, the number of children added to the Sunday schools, etc. These methods were changed by the FORWARD MOVEMENT and by the influence of HENRY POPE—the Central Missions were formed—in MANCHESTER in 1886, in LONDON in 1887. Here the work was centralized; the missionary was allowed to remain in the same place for as much as thirty years; and the preaching of the Gospel was supplemented by social work of all kinds. Henry Pope became secretary of the Home Mission Committee in 1897; it was he who agreed to the committee's taking over CLIFF COLLEGE in 1903 as a center for the training of lay agents. In the twentieth century the work of the department expanded enormously; it is at present responsible for the raising of the Home Mission Fund and its use through dependent circuits, for prison CHAPLAINS and industrial chaplains, for the control and training of lay pastors and lay workers, for the METHODIST WOMEN'S FELLOWSHIP, and for chaplains in the armed forces. The most distinguished recent secretary of the department was W. EDWIN SANGSTER (1955-59). Many new methods have been tried, such as film evangelism, the use of caravan teams in rural areas, experiments with "team ministry," as at Notting Hill, London. Since 1932, however, when the Wesleyan Home Missions Committee was amalgamated with the similar committees of the PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH and the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH, no methods have served to check a steady decline in the membership of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, and it may well be that much more drastic changes in the traditional system of Methodism are now needed.

HONDA, YOITSU (1848-1912), Japanese bishop and the foremost personality in the founding of Methodism in JAPAN, was born a Samurai of the Tsugaru Clan, in Hirosaki its capital, in northern Japan. Sent by his chief to Yokohama to study Western language and culture, he was converted, baptized and admitted to the Kaigan Church of Christ, Yokohama, the first Protestant church in Japan (1872). He returned to Hirosaki (1874) to become principal of the clan school, To-O Gi-Juku, and together with John Ing, an American former CHINA missionary, he led a group of fourteen students into the Christian faith, and organized them as a branch of the Yokohama Church. He served as voluntary elder-pastor. In 1876 the group became a part of the M. E. Church, and Yoitsu Honda was given a local preacher's license and appointed pastor. He was ordained local deacon in 1877, local elder in 1883, and in 1890 was admitted to full membership in the Japan Annual Conference. Meantime his interest in Japan's modern revolution led to his election to the Aomori Provincial Assembly (1881), where he served as speaker, 1882-1886.

He was called to TOKYO as the first Japanese principal of the Methodist institution in 1887, later the school became AOYAMA CAKUIN UNIVERSITY, and he became its first president, serving until 1907. He studied in the United States, at Northfield Seminary, Mass. and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (1888-1890). While there he decided to withdraw from the national political scene, to devote himself entirely to the Christian ministry. Largely by his influence, a merger of the forces in Japan of the Canadian Methodist, the M. E. and the M. E., South, Churches was accomplished in 1907. The autonomous Japan Methodist Church became the successor of them all, with Honda as its first bishop.

In 1895, he was the first Japanese ministerial delegate of the Japan Annual Conference to the GENERAL CON-FERENCE of the M. E. Church in the United States. After the Japan Methodist Church was founded, he often represented it abroad, as well as representing Japan in numerous other international conferences. He was the first national president of the Japan Y.M.C.A., was active in inter-church movements, and together with some half-dozen other Christian leaders, exercised a formative influence, not only upon early Protestantism, but on the entire moral and spiritual life of Japan.

He died March 26, 1912 at Nagasaki after presiding over the West Annual Conference of the Japan Methodist Church. The local church he founded in his native city, Hirosaki, went on to send more than 200 persons into fulltime Christian service.

HONDURAS, BRITISH, is a small British colony in Central America. It is a self-governing territory of an area of 8,867 square miles. The population is approximately 120,000. The capital is Belize City. Tradition says that a Scotsman named Wallace settled at the mouth of the river now called Belize River and the Spaniards pronounced his name as "Baliz" hence "Belize."

The earliest civilization was that of the Mayas, which overspread much of Central America. Several Mayan edifices have been uncovered. Spain laid claim to the region, and British settlers came about 1642. By 1700 they were well established, engaged in lumbering for mahogany and logwood. Spain acknowledged British rights in treaties of 1763 and 1783. The Spaniards were repelled at the Battle of St. George's Cay, Sept. 10, 1798, by the colonists with the aid of the British. The territory was ceded to Great Britain. The boundaries remained the same after 1798 as they were before, and were ratified by the Convention of 1859. In 1862 the territory was given colonial status. In 1931 and 1961 there were major hurricanes which devastated Belize City and other areas and halted development. The Colony gained home rule in 1964 and full independence is planned. A new capital is being built some fifty miles inland.

In 1824, a British Methodist layman named William Jeckel, who served in the mercantile field in Belize City, reported to the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY in LONDON the religious work he was doing, and requested missionary aid. The Society sent out Thomas Wilkinson in 1825, Thomas Johnston in 1827, and William Wedlock in 1829. Both Wilkinson and Johnston died on the field, but the work was soundly established. When Wilkinson arrived there were three societies (churches), one in Belize City, another at Burrell Boom, a settlement on the Belize River, and one at Freetown, a settlement on the Sibum River for freed slaves.

Approach was made to the natives working in the forest. Many of these were descendants of African Negroes from the WEST INDIES and white settlers. Later Carib Indians who came from St. Vincent via Nicaragua and the Republic of Honduras settled in the south of the colony, and they too were approached by the Methodist missionaries. In 1845 a congregation was established in Roatan, an island off the coast of the Republic of Hondurans, and 120 miles from Belize City where other Methodist Negroes settled. In the south, the Toledo Settlement was formed by Americans who had migrated from the Southern States during the Civil War in the 1860's. They were led by a minister of the M. E. Church, South, the Rev. Levi Pearce. They had indentured East Indians to work in the sugar cane plantations. Later this work was passed to the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society of London, and together with their work in Punta Gorda and other places formed the Toledo Circuit. The East Indian population now numbers some 1,600 people.

In 1859 the district received the first missionary of the Women's Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, Miss Susannah Beal.

The Honduras District of the Methodist Church now extends to both British Honduras and the Republic of Honduras which is Spanish-speaking. Methodism in the Republic is now centered in the Bay Islands off the coast. In 1908 most Methodist schools in the Bay Islands were closed because they were unwilling to submit to government regulations which required the teaching of Spanish, and in 1918 all Methodist Churches in the Bay Islands were closed for fifteen weeks and the minister, Percy Hayworth, was put in jail by government order. In 1930 the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society withdrew from the mainland of the Republic of Honduras and closed the Corozal and Toledo Circuits. In 1932 the District was attached to the Jamaica District, but retained a sub-Synod. In 1952 it was again elevated to full District status. The Toledo and Corozal Circuits were reconstituted, and in 1967 work was reopened at San Pedro Sula in the Republic of Honduras.

In 1961 a small secondary school (Utila College) was opened and medical work begun at Utila, Bay Islands. Another secondary school was established (Fletcher College) at Corozal, and the oldest secondary school in the country (Wesley College, founded 1882) is still active.

Education is largely in the hands of the denominations and the Methodist Church runs twenty-one primary schools in British Honduras and a small vocational school in Roatan, Republic of Honduras. There are 4,000 pupils in Methodist primary schools and about 448 students in Methodist secondary schools. The Government of British Honduras pays the full salaries of all primary school teachers and gives a grant of up to fifty percent for plant, property and maintenance. The Government also pays the salaries of the principal and one teacher of the secondary schools and also the salary for one teacher for the Sixth Form.

In 1967 the Honduras District became a founder district of the autonomous METHODIST CHURCH IN THE CARIBBEAN AND THE AMERICAS, under a West Indian Chairman, C. Leonard Carty, M.B.E.

In 1969, the District had thirty-seven places of worship, 2,423 members and a constituency of about 15,000.

HONG KONG is a British crown colony consisting of Hong Kong Island, the Kowloon Peninsula directly opposite the Island, the "so-called" "New Territories," consisting of 365 square miles of mainland adjoining Kowloon, and a whole archipelago of small islands.

The Methodists were working in CHINA for more than one hundred years, but there was no work in Hong Kong, a small peninsula jutting down from the mainland, with some 200 islands clustered about, until the early 1950's. The FREE METHODISTS came in 1951. The Chinese Methodist Church, with which British Methodists had worked in Canton and environs since 1870, soon followed. The American-based Methodists came afterwards, in the winter of 1952, to minister to Mandarin-speaking refugees from Communist China.

The Free Methodists, cooperating with workers of the Holiness Movement of CANADA, formed street chapels and started schools. The Chinese Methodists built churches and a hospital. The United Methodists also formed churches (one of them beginning in a garage and another in a YMCA), developed refugee villages and industries, organized rooftop schools in the huge resettlement estates in which the Hong Kong Government housed the hundreds of thousands of newcomers.

There were no pastors or members of the E. U. B. CHURCH in Hong Kong, but the Church of Christ in China, made up of eight denominations working on the Mainland, included representatives of both Evangelical and United Brethren strains. In 1952, churches that had been transplanted to Hong Kong formed a new synod and adopted the name, "the Hong Kong Union of the Church of Christ in China." Five years later, Dr. Peter Wong, a product of the South China Mission, became general secretary and led his people in developing primary and secondary schools, in addition to clinics and social welfare projects. To this church the E. U. B. board assigned its missionaries.

Although most Methodists worked together in the Hong Kong Christian Council, they were too busy with medical, educational and social service programs to think much about church union. The Yang Social Service Center, contiguous to Ward Memorial Methodist Church in Kowloon (named for Bishop RALPH A. WARD, who pioneered United Methodist work), developed new patterns in community service. Its counselling center became one of the first in the Hong Kong complex. Through the assistance of the Theodore Plummer Fund, a fishermen's village (appropriately named for St. Andrew) was established and 250 families were moved from the odorous hulks where they had lived for twenty years in the back-waters of Tai Po Bay. Meanwhile, Epworth Village, established by the Chinese Methodist Church, had grown to 350 cottages housing more than 2,000 people.

Talk of church union grew louder, and the United Methodists and Chinese Methodists, representing Mandarin-speaking and Cantonese-speaking segments of the Hong Kong population, formed a joint committee on church union and developed an outline, which was carried to the 1970 structural congress of COSMOS—the Commission of the United Methodist Church on the Structure of Methodism Overseas. Mandarin-speaking congregations of the United Methodists and the Church of Christ in China came together in a jointly-sponsored church, and discussion of union began.

In the early days of the Hong Kong mission of United Methodism, work was started by Bishop Ralph Ward in TAIWAN, also among Mandarin-speaking refugees. Soon the chapels and churches were more numerous than in Hong Kong. For reasons of geography, as well as politics, the two were separated into distinct provisional Annual Conferences, but in one episcopal Area, under one bishop.

Taiwan Methodists were looking toward autonomy in 1972, as they prospered along with their growing country. Hong Kong was prospering too, with little thought given to the 1997 deadline, when, according to terms of a 99-year lease, the New Territories into which the urban sprawl of the city had spilled out, might be returned to Mainland China.

All branches cooperate in various kinds of relief work, such as the building of Wesley, Asbury and Epworth Villages, and in the support of Chung Chi College (a full four-year college program) and Chung Chi Theological Seminary. The literature needs of Chinese Methodists, as well as of other Protestants, are served by the Chinese Christian Literature Council and its publications, centered in Kowloon. Both Methodist Churches support financially and with personnel, the social work of the Hong Kong Christian Council through its Christian Service Department.

The Free Methodist Church has a provisional conference organization. A large elementary school has been established with government assistance. Capable Chinese leaders administer rooftop schools which are located on the large flat roofs of big refugee housing units. Plans are going forward for a multistory secondary school which will also be government aided. A growing educational-evangelistic center is located on the island of Macao. Free Methodist membership is about 1,100.

HOOD, JAMES WALKER (1831-1918), American bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born May 30, 1831, in Kennett Township, Chester Co., Pa., the son of Levi and Harriet Walker Hood. His father was a tenant farmer and local Methodist preacher. The boy had opportunity to attend school only a few months but succeeded in educating himself to an extent that later warranted honorary degrees from Lincoln University and LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE.

After a period of doubt he came to a firm faith at eighteen. At twenty-five he felt a call to preach, secured a license, and set about to prepare himself. The New England Conference of the A.M.E. Zion Church received him on trial in 1859 and the following year sent him as a missionary to Nova Scotia. Then in 1864, during the Civil War, the New England Conference sent him to NORTH CAROLINA to evangelize the emancipated slaves behind the advancing Union Army—the first of a small band that within a few years established A.M.E. Zion churches throughout the South. During the period following the war he served as a member of the convention drawing up a new constitution for the state of North Carolina in 1868, and at the same time was appointed assistant superintendent of public instruction for the state.

Hood was elected bishop by the General Conference of the A.M.E. Zion Church in 1872. He established his episcopal residence at Fayetteville, N. C., which remained his home for the rest of his life. He was one of the incorporators of Livingstone College, Salisbury, N. C., under its original name, Zion Wesley Institute, and was for thirty-six years chairman of its Board of Trustees. He was a delegate to the first two ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES, at London in 1881 and Washington, D.C., in 1891, and spoke on both occasions. President Theodore Roosevelt consulted him on matters affecting the Negro. He was the first American Negro minister to publish a volume of his sermons (1884) and was author of a denominational history, One Hundred Years of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church (1895), and two other books. He lived to become the oldest active bishop of any American church and died at Fayetteville on Oct. 30, 1918.

HOOLE, ELIJAH (1798-1872), British Methodist missionary, was appointed to INDIA in 1819, but was shipwrecked off the CEYLON coast and landed in Madras almost without possessions. He was a useful missionary, working in Madras and Bangalore, and he easily learned Tamil and spent much time distributing the Scriptures and working in villages. He was hampered by the indecision of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society about whether to use its small staff to minister to Europeans or to evangelize Indians, but his beginning of work in Bangalore in 1821 was decisive for the beginning and development of Kanarese work in Mysore. Owing to ill health, he returned to England in 1828, and became one of the missionary secretaries in 1834, retaining this position for thirty-eight years. He died June 17, 1872.

HOOPER, THOMAS LEROY (1894-), American M. P. leader, pastor and co-editor of the first Discipline of The Methodist Church (1939), was born in Plymouth, Pa., Dec. 30, 1894, the son of Thomas H. and Katherine (Cornelius) Hooper. He was educated in the public schools of Shickshinn, Pa.; WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, A.B., 1917; WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, S.T.B., 1922; M.A., 1923; University of Pittsburgh, M.Ed., 1935; (hon. D.D.).

Admitted to Eastern M. P. Conference and ordained elder, 1922, his appointments were: Mt. Lookout, Cincinnati, Ohio, 1922-24; Temple, Fairmont, W. Va., 1924-31; Knoxville, Pittsburgh, 1931-36; president, Pittsburgh M. P. Conference, 1935-39; superintendent Washington District, Pa., 1939-44; Butler, Pa., 1944-47; pastor Wesley Church and director W. Va. University Wesley Foundation, both in Morgantown, 1947-57; executive secretary Board of Education, W. Va. Conference, 1957-67, retired, 1967.

A delegate to the UNITING CONFERENCE, 1939, GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1940, 1944, Dr. Hooper later served as trustee of WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN and Union Protestant Hospital (Methodist) both in West Virginia. He was editor of the Teachers Journal (M. P.), 1928-36; also one of the three editors of the Discipline, 1939, the Book Editors of the two episcopal Methodist churches being the other two.

On May 24, 1921, he married Laura P. Hutton and they had two children, Thomas L., Jr. and Laura Marilyn.

HOOPLE CAMP, THE, outside the village of Hoople, N. D., was organized in 1893. In 1927 the present tabernacle was built under the leadership of H. J. Empie of the Methodist Church. Since that time CAMP MEETINGS have been held for ten days every June. At the present the leadership of the Camp is Interdenominational—administered by a Hoople Camp Association. A multitude of youth have entered full-time church-related vocations through the influence of the Hoople Camp.

HOOTON, CARADINE RAY (1895-1966), American minister and general secretary of the BOARD OF CHRISTIAN SOCIAL CONCERNS of The Methodist Church, was born at Hughes Spring, Texas, the son of William Matthew and Mary Emma (Hervey) Hooton. He was educated at SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY at Georgetown, Texas, receiving a B.A. in 1921; at Texas University, Austin, Texas, LL.B., 1922; and later on received honorary degrees from Southwestern University, D.D., 1942, and from OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY in 1953, the LL.D. degree.

He married Lila Maude Eberhart on Nov. 1, 1922, and their children were William Eberhart, Mary Lila and Annabel Hooton. The son was killed serving his country as a pilot in World War II.

He served as pastor and district superintendent in various Methodist churches in TEXAS from the time he entered Conference in 1925 until 1949 when he was elected general secretary of the Board of Temperance of The Methodist Church. At that time he was pastor of First Methodist Church, OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.

Hooton was a member of the Texas Bar Association and was also admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court, thus combining legal knowledge with his ministerial status. He served for a time in the first World War in the Quartermaster Corps. His Conference elected him to membership in the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES) of 1938; to the UNITING CONFERENCE, 1939; and to subsequent General and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES.

Always interested in human welfare, he served for a time as president of the Commission for Decent Publications; assisted in the establishment of the first marriage clinic in OKLAHOMA; created a counseling service in connection with his pastorates; helped to establish a first National Consultation in Pastoral Care of Addicts and the training of young ministers for effective work with alcoholics. He also helped to organize the first churchwide consultations among seminary social ethics professors, and helped to set up the first National Seminar on Legislation and the first General Convocation on Temperance and General Welfare in 1953. This last was after he became Executive Secretary. He also helped to call Methodism's first National Convocation on Christian Social Concerns in 1961. He was in great demand as a speaker and frequently called upon over the whole church for this work.

When the Board of Temperance of The Methodist Church merged into the Board of Christian Social Concerns in 1960, Hooton was elected general secretary to serve until 1963 when he retired. He then became executive director of the American Council on Alcohol Problems. He lived in Washington, D. C. and Arlington, Va., until his death in 1966. A man of genial spirit and broad compassion, he gave leadership to the cause of temperance in a difficult day.

HOOVER, JAMES M. (1872-1935), a pioneer American missionary in SARAWAK, Borneo. He was born in Kansas in 1872, but after being educated in the States decided to become a missionary and was admitted on trial in the Malaya Annual Conference in 1900 and appointed to Penang. He went to Borneo in 1903 and from that time on stamped the progress of Christianity in that Island "indelibly with his personality."

One who wrote of his life said that the history of Tuan Hoover's work in Sarawak is the history to a great extent of the Rejang River, which owes its present development to his efforts. He placed thousands of Chinese who, in their native Fukien, lived wretched lives on the borderline of starvation, in a new country, fertile and friendly, where under a benevolent Government, they could settle and prosper, and where their standard of living could be enormously improved. From the moment of arrival of the first colonist, he devoted himself, heart and soul, to the welfare and progress of these people. As the Foo-chow colony increased, his labors grew, but he was equal to every demand upon his time and good nature. He was here, there and everywhere, guiding, instructing and safeguarding his people. His amazing energy never flagged for a moment. One day he might set out on a twenty-mile walk to visit settlers in the rubber-growing areas; he would sleep perhaps in a Chinese coolie hut and the next morning he would set out on another arduous round, over hills, rough clearings and jungle. And then perhaps he would dash off down the river in a motor launch to advise one of his friends, regarding a scheme for communal padi-planting or the installation of a traveling rice mill, or a better method of manufacturing jelutong. Here a church might be falling into disrepair through lack of funds, somewhere else the attendance at a school might be falling off as a result of a slump. Tuan Hoover was off like a shot to advise, encourage and reorganize. Every detail of his mission had his personal attention. Nothing was too big for him and nothing too small. Even while he was busy planning the spiritual and material advancement of thousands of Chinese, he always had time to attend to the troubles of the most humble member of his flock. He was never known to turn anyone away, and no one who went to him for help and advice ever failed to come away comforted and encouraged.

Tuan Hoover, as he was always called, became a legend in the Island to whose people he gave his life in such a large open-handed way. He died in Kuching, Sarawak, on Feb. 11, 1935.

HOOVER, THERESA (1925-), American church executive and daughter of James Cortez and Rissie (Vaughn) Hoover, was born Sept. 7, 1925 in Fayetteville, Ark. She received her A.B. degree from PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE, 1946; M.A., New York University, 1962, with special studies also at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Miss Hoover became the associate director, Little Rock Methodist Council, 1945-48; field worker, Women's Division, BOARD OF MISSIONS, 1948-58; associate secretary, Christian Social Relations Section of the Division, 1958-65; assistant general secretary, section for program and education for Christian Mission, 1965-68; and associate general secretary, Women's Division of the Board, 1968 to present.

She has been a delegate to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES Assembly, chairman of the Nominating Committee, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES General Board, and a member of the Y.W.C.A. National Board (since 1963). In 1970, Miss Hoover was the first woman to give the FONDREN lectures at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY. In the same year she was listed among "America's Seventy-Five Most Important Women," as presented in the January issue of Ladies Home Journal.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

HOPKEY, SOPHIA, niece and ward of THOMAS CAUSTON, director of supplies and chief magistrate of SAVANNAH, Ga., when the Wesley brothers arrived in America. She was a lovely girl of eighteen, and JOHN WESLEY was charmed by her natural modesty and readiness to learn. He taught her French, superintended her devotional reading, and quickly discovered that he was in love with her. Wesley's companions warned him of the dangers of marrying her, and on March 4, 1737, by the drawing of a lot, it was determined that he should "think of it no more." Sophy was already turning elsewhere, and although on March 8 she maintained that she would not take any important step without consulting him, on the following day she became engaged to Mr. Williamson, who lodged with Causton. Four days later they were married in a neighboring church without any publication of the banns. So careless and informal a wedding would hardly seem legal to Wesley, and his appeal to the Bishop of London's commissary bore fruit, because future marriages without banns were forbidden. Four months passed by, during which Wesley lamented what he believed to be Sophy's insincerity, as well as her absence from religious worship. These faults he plainly stated in a letter to her on July 5. As no satisfactory answer came, nor any indication of repentance for her falsehoods, when on August 7 she appeared for Holy Communion, he repelled her. Sophy's husband charged Wesley with defaming his wife's character, and once the processes of law had been set in motion, John Wesley's usefulness to GEORGIA was at an end. Causton was enraged, and the whole colony was forced to take sides. Wesley gave notice that he was leaving Savannah, and though he went sadly and under a cloud, this crisis in some ways prepared him for the evangelical conversion of May 24, 1738.

O. K. HOPKINS

HOPKINS, OLMSTEAD KEY (1879-), an American missionary to CUBA, was born in Louisville, Ga., Feb. 28, 1879. While a student at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, the national Student Volunteer Convention met in Nashville, Tenn. Another student volunteer at the convention who was preparing to go to the mission field under the Woman's Division, was Sara Barr of Statesboro, Ga. They were married in 1909 and went to Cuba the same year. To their union were born two girls and one boy.

Previously he had been admitted to the annual conference in 1902 and went to Cuba as an ordained elder. During his thirty-three years in Cuba he had a variety of experiences and appointments. In addition to serving on many Conference Boards and Committees he was pastor of four different charges, director of a school, and three times district superintendent.

Photography was his hobby and many pictures of church gatherings and local scenes of special interest were due to his artistic ability.

His calm good judgment and friendliness won a never forgotten place in the hearts of his Cuban brethren. For health reasons he retired January 1943, and lives in Durham, N. C.

HOPKINSVILLE, KENTUCKY, U.S.A., Freeman Chapel C.M.E. Church played an important role in the organization of the C.M.E. CHURCH IN KENTUCKY. The organization of this congregation dates back to 1866, when a small group of members started meeting in the basement of First M. E. Church, South. The church is named for Peter Freeman, a charter member and faithful steward.

The Hopkinsville District and the Kentucky Annual Conference of the C.M.E. Church were organized in 1868 in Freeman Chapel Church.

HOPPER, CHRISTOPHER (1722-1802), British Methodist, was born at Ryton, County Durham. Converted by Methodist preaching, he was appointed a CLASS LEADER by JOHN WESLEY and labored as preacher and schoolteacher in the Dales. In 1750 Hopper became a regular itinerant and was the first to go with Wesley to Scotland in 1751. He traveled extensively for forty years in circuits in England, Ireland, and Scotland. At the Conference of 1780 he was appointed to preside when John Wesley was absent, and his name appeared in the DEED OF DECLARATION of 1784. Hopper signed the HALIFAX CIRCULAR. He died on March 5, 1802, the oldest preacher at the time.

HOPPER, PHILEMON B. (1791-1858), American jurist and local preacher, was born in Queen Anne's County, Md., on Jan. 23, 1791. He joined the M. E. Church at the age of nineteen. He studied law and was admitted to the bar. He was elected to the MARYLAND legislature and from 1826-50 served as judge of the second judicial district.

He was one of the founders of the M. P. CHURCH, a regular contributor to the Methodist Protestant, a member of the Convention in 1830 which formed the Constitution of that church, and was frequently a delegate to the Annual Conference and GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Hopper was married three times and was the father of twenty children. In 1813 he married Miss Rebecca Carter; in 1822 he married Miss Margaret A. Thomas, and in 1829 he married Miss Ann Baggs. He died on March 28, 1858.

HORN, WILLIAM (1839-1917), American Evangelical bishop, was born in GERMANY, May 1, 1839, and came to the United States in 1855, settling in WISCONSIN. In 1866 he was converted at an EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION altar in Lomira, Wis. He was licensed to preach in 1861, ordained ELDER in 1866, elected presiding elder in 1871 and later the same year was elected editor of the Evangelische Magazine, a German literary magazine, and of the German Sunday-school literature. In 1879 he was elected editor of Der Christliche Botschafter, the oldest German church paper in America, serving in this capacity until 1891 when he was elected bishop. As bishop he made six visits to Germany in the interest of the Church.

Bishop Horn was a serious student of German literature, especially poetry, and was a master of classical German, and ranked as one of the greatest German writers in the nation. He was a poet by the grace of God, translating many of the great English church hymns into German. He also wrote many original hymns and spiritual songs in German, and published a handsome volume of fine poems. All his life he was a prolific writer.

In 1915 he voluntarily retired from active service, and died April 27, 1917. Many of the institutions of the Church profited by his wise counseling, especially the Ebenezer Orphan's Home at FLAT ROCK, Ohio.

HORNECK, ANTHONY (1641-1697), Anglican devotional writer, was born at Bacharach on Rhine, studied at Heidelberg, and came to England about 1661. He became a member of Queen's College Oxford, in 1663, and vicar of All Saints, Oxford, in 1664. In 1671 he was made vicar of the Savoy Chapel in LONDON, and became widely known. Around 1678, with Richard Smithies, he started the RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, which strongly influenced young Anglican laymen, and formed part of the background from which Methodism was to develop. A devotional writer, his Happy Ascetic (1681) was reprinted in part by JOHN WESLEY in his Christian Library (vol. xvi). Horneck died in London, Jan. 31, 1697.

HORNER, JOSEPH (1824-1917), book agent, was born at Boroughbridge, England, March 23, 1824, the son of a Methodist local preacher. Coming to PITTSBURGH, Pa. in 1842, he entered Western University of Pennsylvania and was graduated with honors. The D.D. degree was conferred on him by ALLEGHENY COLLEGE in 1869. Admitted on trial in the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE in 1850, he remained on the effective list sixty-two years. While in the pastorate he served several strong appointments, the last one being Sewickley, in the Allegheny District, 1867-69. In the latter year he became agent or manager of the Book Depository in Pittsburgh and served ably in that capacity for forty-two years, retiring in 1911. He was a frequent contributor to Methodist periodicals, writing principally on the Bible and the doctrines and polity of Methodism. Though considered ultraconservative, his sincerity and good nature won him many friends. He was a delegate to the 1872, '76, '84, and 1904 GENERAL CONFERENCES (ME), and for many years was the efficient treasurer of the Pittsburgh Conference. He died in Pittsburgh, Jan. 12, 1917.

HORSCHACK BARROSO, DULCE M. (1908-), Cuban social welfare director, was born in Cardenas, Matanzas Province, May 12, 1908. Her parents were Augusto Horschack Borrell and Adelaida C. Barroso. She was educated in the Colegio Progresiva of Cardenas, Irene Toland Colegio, Matanzas, Buenavista and CANDLER COLLEGE, Habana, and the University of Habana. Her major studies were in the field of social welfare. She was fortunate in being supported by scholarships of the Methodist Church. During her collegiate years she served in vacations as assistant pastor in Bauta and Hoyo Colorado and under the direction of Benjamin F. Gilbert.

After graduation she served for nine years as associate director of the Christian Social Center in Matanzas. Then as associate pastor in Baganos for six years. From 1956 to 1957 as director of women in the Agricultural Industrial School of Mayari, and from 1957 to 1959 as director of the Evangelical Elena Clinic of Holguin (when the latter was closed because of Communist pressure).

From 1959 to 1967 she was social welfare director under the government in Oriente. At the same time she served as assistant pastor in Holguin, District President Woman's Society of Christian Service and several conference offices.

HORTON, JOHN (? -1802), British Methodist, was one of JOHN WESLEY's executors, and has been variously described as: dyersalter, silk dyer, and merchant. He was a member of the common council of the City of LONDON. John Wesley married him to Mary Durbin in 1780 at Bedminster Church, BRISTOL. She was the daughter of Henry Durbin, a trustee of the Old Room, Bristol. She had two children by him and died within the next six years. Wesley dined with Horton at 25 Highbury Place, Islington several times in 1783-87. He was present at Wesley's deathbed. He left Methodism after Wesley's death, moved to Bristol in 1800, and died in 1802.

V. E. VINE

HOSIER, HARRY, also known as "Black Harry," was born a slave near Fayetteville, N. C. He was manumitted, converted, and became the first African local preacher of his newly found faith. Although FRANCIS ASBURY's initial encounter with Hosier in NORTH CAROLINA is not recorded in his Journal, Asbury's entry of June 29, 1780 indicates that he believed their meeting to have been providentially arranged.

Harry became the most eloquent exhorter of his day. Those who heard him agree that he demonstrated unusual intellectual capacity, remarkable retention, and creative ability. He was able to reproduce in dramatic form the messages of the educated divines with rare freshness, power, and magnetic vitality. Frequently, his name was used to draw an appreciable audience for the eminent itinerants whom he excelled in popularity. He shared preaching opportunities with many proclaimers of the gospel, among them being Asbury, COKE, GARRETTSON, WHATCOAT, BOEHM, WALKER, and COLBERT. No singular personage of the Asburian period of Methodism espoused a more genuine biblical approach to the Methodist message, or presented the cause of Christ more convincingly, than Harry Hosier, traveling companion and servant-guide of Francis Asbury.

Watson's Annals of Philadelphia provides insight on practices of early Methodism when it was recorded that: "They did not as a people value or expect an educated ministry." After conversion, "the call" was the paramount indicator of readiness to proclaim the gospel. Formal education for leadership in the Societies was appreciated but not required. Harry had no reason to feel out-classed academically by the few formally-trained Methodists.

According to Raybold in Reminiscences of Methodism in West Jersey, Hosier resisted learning to read and write because, in his own words: "When he tried to read he lost the gift of preaching." To the inquiring and amazed people, his frequent answer was, "I sing by faith, pray by faith and do everything by faith; without faith in the Lord Jesus I can do nothing." He thus discontinued academic achievement in order to be a clear channel for the divine declaration of the gospel.

It was Harry who was selected by Asbury in November 1784 to take the newly arrived Thomas Coke on an orientation and inspection tour of the Delaware-Maryland Peninsula, prior to the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE, after JOHN WESLEY's plan for the liberated colonies had been made known. In the meantime, Freeborn Garrettson was also "sent as an arrow" to call the absent brethren to meet at Lovely Lane Chapel in Baltimore on Christmas Eve. Harry, too, was among the Methodists who gathered there to organize the M. E. Church.

Later he traveled with Garrettson up the Hudson territory in 1789; continued with him into New England, and was present when he first met JESSE LEE on their triumphant circuit expansion journey in 1790. Even though he was "very uncivilly" received in Hartford, at BOSTON Harry was warmly received and boarded with Prince Hall, the Master Mason of the Africans.

It is said that "the first notice of Methodism in New York City" appeared in the New York Packet, Sept. 11, 1786, telling about an African "whose excellent preaching excited more interest than that of the Bishop." The BALTIMORE newspapers, it is related, gave more attention to the "singular Black man," than to the Methodist bishop.

Henry Boehm, leader of the German Methodists, stated that many would rather hear Hosier than Asbury. It was his preaching in WILMINGTON, Delaware, when Methodists were unpopular, that helped create a favorable atmosphere for them in a hitherto hostile territory. It is recorded that when the bishop was expected, and Harry was also present to preach, Old Asbury Chapel was not large enough to accommodate the crowd. Those who gathered outside could not see the preacher, but listened to the preaching of the gospel with great satisfaction. One who had come to heckle the Bishop remarked, "If all the Methodist preachers could preach like the Bishop, we should like to be constant hearers." Someone nearby replied, "That was not the Bishop, but the Bishop's servant." He retorted, "If such be the servant, what must the master be?"

The Quakers recognized Hosier as one who preached "immediate inspiration" of the spirit of God.

The scholarly Thomas Coke, after serious meditation, having heard Harry preach several times, exclaimed: "I really believe he is the best preacher in the world. There is an amazing power attends his preaching. . ."

Benjamin Rush, of high standing in Philadelphia, boasted: "Harry is the greatest orator in America." Dr. Sargent of Philadelphia, upholding the prevailing opinion, declared: "He was the greatest natural orator I have ever heard." JOHN LEDNUM, early Methodist historian, wrote: "Harry was a more popular speaker than Asbury or almost anyone else in his day." William Colbert, in his unpublished journal, bears witness of his usefulness to Methodism when he records: "Harry gave a powerful exhortation. . . excellent discourse . . . spoke with life and power. . ." Harry's preaching affected the people. On one occasion, although Colbert had been ailing and had not preached for some time, upon hearing one of Harry's soul-searching gospel messages, he wrote: "After him, I felt freedom in speaking for about ten minutes." Listening to a discourse from Revelation 3:20 on another occasion, Colbert reasoned and inscribed: "This is not a manmade preacher. It is really surprising to hear a man that cannot read, preach like this man."

Bishop Asbury assigned him to visit the Trenton Circuit with John Walker in 1803. The seasoned veteran was not acceptable to a lady in the home in Hackettstown where the preacher was staying. She expressed objection to the presence of the "black." Hosier, having overheard the conversation, withdrew to the garden where he took her before the throne of grace in prayer until the appointed hour of the meeting. While Reverend Walker preached, Harry was seated in front of him keeping a silent vigil. After the message, Harry arose and began his exhortation. He spoke of sin as a disease; saying that all were affected and the Lord had sent a remedy by the hands of a physician, but, alas! he was black! and some might reject the only means of cure because of the hands by which it was sent to them that day. It is said that he continued to speak in a humble manner until all were moved. After a fervent prayer, the lady's conscience was disturbed, and she, too, was converted with others.

He was a popular person at CAMP MEETINGS, quarterly meetings, and LOVE FEASTS. Wherever Methodists gathered to witness, Harry was present to share in the proclamation of the word of redemption. He was the one African of the eastern frontier who acted out with earnest devotion the urgent commission of John Wesley to his disciples. . . . "I let you loose on the great continent of America. Publish your message in the open face of the sun and do all the good you can." Harry covered the Methodist itinerant-trail from the Carolinas to New England, preaching the good news of salvation to all.

Recently, a document found in Old St. GEORGE'S CHURCH revealed the concern of nineteen preachers of the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE for Harry as they united in petitioning the bishops and M. E. Conference which was to assemble in Chestertown, Md., May 1, 1805. This stated "that they believe Harry Hosier, an African, a man that would be very useful if the Bishop and Conference in their wisdom could without establishing a bad precedent direct him."

Harry's increasing popularity and independence led Asbury to record in his journal the following statement after vainly seeking to induce him to accompany him on a trip into Virginia. "Harry seems to be unwilling to go with me. I fear his speaking so much to white people in the city has been, or will be injurious; he has been flattered and may be ruined."

Although he became a back-slider, it was not because of flattery, but due rather to the power of wine. However, he did not remain outside of the Christian fold for long. He experienced forgiveness through an all-night soul-wrestling vigil under a tree in the Southwark section of Philadelphia. Like Jacob at the break of dawn, he gained a new blessing and reclaimed his spiritual freedom, evermore to be victorious over that temptation.

Harry suffered much for his faith and preaching. William Colbert, presiding elder, was moved by the recitation of the crosses he had borne. Said he, "I was very much affected at some of the experiences of Harry Hosier which he in private conversation related."

On Harry's homebound journey, Colbert visited him several times. After his first call he declared: "He believed Hosier to be in favour with God" (March 22, 1806). On the next occasion, "he was happy in the Lord and to appearance within a few days of eternity" (April 30, 1806). On his final visit he said, "Harry appears to be for a short time for this world but happy in God" (May 1, 1806). Attending his funeral, May 18, 1806, Colbert said, "The people were affected." After a suitable Methodist service, a mighty procession, black and white, followed his bier for interment at the Palmer Burying Ground, Philadelphia, Pa.

No account of the beginning and expansion of the Methodist movement in America would be complete without numbering Harry Hosier among its unsung pioneer preachers. Future unbiased historians will accredit him as the first ecumenical preacher of American Methodism. He, more than any other itinerant of his time, fused large interdenominational audiences through the gospel according to Methodism. He possessed the dynamic which dissolved the boundaries of separatism, making all one in Christ. His preaching partnership with Francis Asbury provided Methodism an outreach to the enslaved and the free, the poor and the rich, the churchless and the church-going.

JOSHUA E. LICORISH

HOSKINS, FERMIN LINCOLN (1865-1935), American United Brethren in Christ (Old Constitution) bishop, was born at Scio, Ore., of pioneer stock, on June 8, 1865. While still a boy he was an extensive reader of good books, and this became a life-long characteristic. His formal education was obtained from a private secondary school at Huntsville, Wash. and Philomath College, Philomath, Ore. He received the A.M. from Huntington College (1910) and was awarded the D.D. by the same school in 1905. His specialty in school was mathematics and languages, and he later became one of the best parliamentarians of his time.

He taught in the public schools of WASHINGTON, OREGON and IDAHO for thirteen years. He also served as principal of Eastern Oregon State Normal School one year; and as president one year each of Washington Seminary, Edwards College and Huntington College.

His wife was Minnie Simenton, who was a direct descendant of John and Priscilla Alden. There were four daughters.

Hoskins was converted while in school at the age of nineteen and began his active ministry in 1858. He was pastor and presiding elder in the Walla Walla Conference. In the latter office he traveled over the western states as a revivalist, organizing new societies.

At the suggestion of Bishop MILTON WRIGHT, he was elected bishop by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1905 and served for eight quadrenniums. In this office he also served as a member of the general boards of the denomination. He made fifty trips across the continent in the pursuit of his duties.

He possessed a voluminous library and his reading bore fruit in his sermons and also in his writings. He was the author of gospel songs and numerous pamphlets, the outstanding one being "Our Position," a concise presentation and defense of the doctrinal and moral reform principles of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ (Old Constitution).

The Church elected him bishop emeritus in 1933, but his period of inactivity was not very long. He passed away Feb. 18, 1935 at Myrtle, Idaho. The funeral and burial was at Albion, Wash.

HOSKINS, JOHN (1718- ?), was born in England in 1718 and became a member of the BRISTOL Methodist Society in 1746. In 1774 he left England on a vessel bound for Newfoundland, with the intention of going to New England to teach school. On his arrival at Trinity, Newfoundland, he wished to earn money to continue his journey and was directed to Old Perlican, a community of fifty families, twenty-one miles distant.

Here he opened a school and was invited to read prayers and a sermon. The people of Old Perlican, who still regarded themselves as Anglicans, applied through WESLEY to Bishop Lowth of London to ordain Hoskins as their minister. Hoskins went to England with the hope of being ordained, but ordination was refused. He returned to Old Perlican and continued as schoolmaster and LOCAL PREACHER.

As the result of a revival, the congregation grew and a church was erected. The influence of the revival spread to Lower Island Cove a few miles away; a Methodist society of thirty members was formed there and a church built. A solid foundation of Methodism was laid in this area by the lay ministry of this pioneer.

HOSPITALS AND HOMES, BOARD OF. (See HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTRIES, BOARD OF.)

HOSS, ELIJAH EMBREE (1849-1919), American bishop, was born near Jonesboro, Tenn., on April 14, 1849. He was educated in the Jonesboro schools, OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, and EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE, where he was graduated in 1869. Licensed to preach at Jonesboro in 1866, he was admitted on trial in 1869, and appointed to Jonesboro.

He was appointed to KNOXVILLE in 1870. He transferred to CALIFORNIA in July 1872, and was stationed at SAN FRANCISCO. In 1875 he was transferred back to the HOLSTON CONFERENCE and stationed at ASHEVILLE, N. C., then in that Conference.

He became a professor at Martha Washington College in southwest VIRGINIA in 1879 and was elected president of the college that year. Then he became a professor at Emory and Henry College in 1881, and in 1885 was made president there. He then went to VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY where he taught from 1885 to 1890, at which time he was elected editor of The Christian Advocate (usually called The Nashville Christian Advocate), the official organ of the M. E. Church, South. During his tenure as editor and following his association at Vanderbilt, he became involved in the Vanderbilt controversy championing the control of the Church over this university and against the chancellor and trustees who finally through the courts managed to take Vanderbilt from the Church. Certain of the ministerial graduates of Vanderbilt, among them some of the Southern bishops, believed that Hoss had forced an issue where none should have been made and rather blamed him for loss of this institution to their Church.

Bishop Hoss was by all accounts a strong and often somewhat partisan type, championing powerfully whatever position he took.

A born fighter, a great-grandson of the famous Revolutionary War hero John Sevier, Hoss consistently during his lifetime was a champion of causes. These ranged in order and type from the stand taken early in his career that the Northern Church had no right to confiscate and hold pulpits in established Southern churches during and after the Civil War, to the advocacy of the Church's right to complete control over Vanderbilt University.

When he found that the Protestant Episcopal bishop in NASHVILLE signed himself "The Bishop of Tennessee." Bishop Hoss said not inaptly, "But I am the bishop of the Tennesseans." This was after 1902 when he was elected bishop by his Church. Before that he had been a member of the five preceding GENERAL CONFERENCES. As bishop he was assigned BRAZIL in 1908 and to the Orient in 1910, though he had other episcopal assignments in his own land.

He was married to Abbie Clark of Knoxville, Tenn., in November, 1872. They had three children. He was retired in 1918 by his General Conference over his own bitter and public objection to the Conference so retiring him. He died during the influenza epidemic on April 23, 1919, in Muskogee, Okla., where he is buried.

HOTT, JAMES W. (1844-1902), American U. B. minister and bishop, was born Nov. 15, 1844, near Winchester, Va. He had the advantage of a good common-school education, and the benefit of his father's library.

At the age of seventeen he was granted a quarterly conference license to preach, and a year later was received into the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, Church of the United Brethren in Christ. During the Civil War he was compelled many times to cross the lines of the two armies. Great dangers and hardships were encountered. After serving important charges in VIRGINIA, he was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1869 and 1873. At the latter he was elected treasurer of the Missionary Society.

Hott was married to Miss Martha A. Ramey on May 31, 1864. This home was blessed with four daughters. After being elected editor of the Religious Telescope (the official publication of the former United Brethren Church) in 1877, he exerted a broader influence upon the entire church. The General Conference of 1881 made him a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in LONDON. He extended this journey to Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, and published the volume, Journeyings in the Old World.

He was elected bishop in 1889, and re-elected at three succeeding General Conferences. He became the supervisor of the work of the Pacific District. Later he was assigned to the Ohio District, and made DAYTON his home. He died Jan. 9, 1902, after serving the church many years.

HOUGH, LYNN HAROLD (1877-1971), American preacher, educator, and author, was born at Cadiz, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1877, the son of Franklin M. and Eunice Giles Hough. He was educated at Scio College (A.B., 1898) and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1905), and was the recipient of ten honorary degrees. He married Blanche Horton, the widow of the Rev. Stephen van R. Trowbridge, on Oct. 13, 1936.

Hough joined the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE in 1906. His pastorates included King's Park, 1906-07; Third Church, Long Island City, 1907-09; Summerfield Church, BROOKLYN, 1909-12, and Mt. Vernon Place, BALTIMORE, 1912-14. He was professor of historical theology at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, 1914-19; president of NORTH-

WESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1919-20; pastor of Central Church, DETROIT, Mich., 1920-28; American Presbyterian Church, Montreal, 1928-30; and professor of homiletics and Christian criticism of life, Theological School of DREW UNIVERSITY, 1930-47 and dean, 1934-47. He was visiting professor at Emmanuel College, Victoria University, Toronto, Canada, 1947; Chancellor's lecturer, Queen's University, 1947; president, Detroit Council of Churches, 1926-28; vice-president, Religious Education Association, 1926-28; president, Association of Methodist Theological Schools, 1942; executive committee, FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1936-48; a member of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis and the Society of Midland Authors; and president, Religious Education Council of Canada, 1929-30.

He was the author of forty-six books, including The Significance of the Protestant Reformation, Free Men, The Christian Criticism of Life, The Dignity of Man, and The Living Church. It was said of him that his "evangelical humanism combined the deepest truth of evangelical Christianity with the cultural richness of our classical heritage."

Following a heart attack at his home in New York City, he died July 14, 1971.

HOUGH, MARY R. (1877-), American E. U. B. ecumenical churchwoman, was born in Annville, Pa., May 26, 1877. At the age of five her mother enrolled her in the Cleaner's Band, the children's organization auxiliary to the Women's Missionary Association of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. As a little girl she sold her mother's homemade candy to the students of LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE to earn her pennies for missions. This was the beginning of a life devoted to the world-wide task of the Church.

Graduating from Lebanon Valley College in 1897, she married Ira E. Albert. After a short pastorate in PENNSYLVANIA they went to SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, in 1899. Following her husband's death in Sierra Leone in 1903, Mrs. Albert and her little daughter returned to the States.

In 1905 she became editor of the Woman's Evangel, (1905-14), a trustee of the Women's Missionary Association (1906-45), national president of the WMA (1927-41); member of Women's Council of The E. U. B. Church (1947-51) and president emeritus.

In 1914 she married S. S. HOUGH, Foreign Mission secretary, United Brethren in Christ, later secretary of the General Council of Administration.

Mrs. Hough was always found in the forefront of any movement for unity as the transfer of mission work administered by the women's board to the General Mission Boards of the Church; on the interdenominational committee which decided upon a World Day of Prayer; one who worked for the union of the Evangelical and United Brethren women's work. Mrs. Hough frequently says, "This is a glorious day in which to live and to serve." She presently is a resident of Otterbein Home near Lebanon, Ohio.

MARY McLANACHAN

HOUGH, SAMUEL STRICKLER (1864-1944), American U. B. ecclesiastical statesman and missionary leader, was born Oct. 4, 1864, near Smithton, Westmoreland Co., Pa.

Elementary education was obtained in the county public schools, followed with Glasgow Normal School, Kentucky (B.S.), 1887; Bonebrake (UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Dayton, Ohio (B.D.), 1892; OTTERBEIN COLLEGE, Westerville, Ohio (D.D.), 1905. He married Mrs. Mary Albert (1914), a former missionary in Africa and a missionary leader in the United Brethren in Christ.

After a few years of public school teaching in Pennsylvania Hough received quarterly conference license in 1887; joined Allegheny Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, in 1890. He served Madison Circuit, 1892-94; Madison Station, 1894-95; and Altoona, Second Church, 1895-05 in Allegheny Conference. He was elected general secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, 1905-19; and general secretary, Board of Administration, 1919-37, serving with distinction until his retirement. The late Bishop A. R. CLIPPINGER wrote in the Religious Telescope, 1944, "The Board of Administration was very largely the creation of his (Dr. Hough) own mind . . . It can be said advisably that the Board of Administration has done more to solidify the denomination than any other one institution in all its history." Hough died July 15, 1944 and is buried in Woodland Cemetery, Dayton, Ohio.

Hough held membership on many denominational and interdenominational boards and committees. He was a prolific writer. Most popular of his books are Our Church Abroad; and Christian Newcomer—His Life, Journal and Achievements.

HOUGHTON, WILLARD J. (1825-1896), American WESLEYAN METHODIST minister and educator, became the founder of Houghton Seminary, later Houghton College. Working in western New York, he founded and supported Sunday schools and nurtured them into churches. He used the techniques of child evangelism, tract and scripture distribution and rallies long before they became common. In 1883, the Denominational Agent, D. S. Kenney, dedicated a church near Houghton Creek, which Houghton had started. At that time he asked Houghton to consider starting a school in western New York for the denomination. Houghton Seminary was dedicated and opened in 1884. Christian businessman O. T. Higgins, of Rushford, N. Y., was an early supporter of Willard Houghton, sending him to school at Chautauqua, N. Y. and helping in all of his work thereafter. Though lacking polish, Houghton was much sought after as a revivalist in his day. He died in Houghton, N. Y., April 21, 1896.

HOUSTON, RALPH McINTIRE (1903-), American minister and member of the JUDICIAL COUNCIL of The United Methodist Church, was born on Nov. 21, 1903, in New York City, the son of Hough and Zora Belle McIntire Houston. His wife was Margaret Elizabeth Cloke whom he married on June 24, 1929, and their children are David C. and Susan M. He was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1924, D.D., 1949; Union Theological Seminary, New York, B.D., 1927; and joined the NEW YORK CONFERENCE at about that time, being appointed to the Washington Square Church in New York, 1926-27; Central Valley, New York, 1928-29; First Church, Yonkers, 1930-37; Trinity Church, Newburgh, 1938-43. He became the superintendent of the Newburgh District in 1944 where he served until the next year when he became superintendent of the New York (city) District, 1945-49. He was then sent to St. James in Kingston, 1950-1953, and to Hempstead, N. Y., 1954, where he has remained. Dr. Houston was a member of the North-eastern JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE of 1940 and '44; president of the New York Preacher's Meeting, 1935; registrar of the New York Conference; secretary of the Commission on World Service and Finance of his Conference; a member of the Conference Board of Missions and Church Extension and of the Philippine Commissions of Foreign Mission Conferences. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1948 and '52, and was elected to the Judicial Council by the General Conference for the term 1952-60. He was secretary of the Judicial Council, 1956-60; elected as an alternate to the Judicial Council in 1960 and returned to the Council in 1966 to fill a vacancy. Then he was elected by the General Conference of The United Methodist Church to a full term on the Judicial Council in 1968.

He continues to serve in the New York Conference, though is presently at Hempstead, N. Y., as pastor in charge, which appointment formerly belonged to the New York East Conference before the New York East and New York were made one Conference.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, U.S.A., the largest city in TEXAS and sixth largest city in the nation, with a population of 1,213,064 in 1970. It was founded in 1836 by A. C. and J. K. Allen and named for Sam Houston, first president of the Texas republic.

The city has 120 parks and playgrounds, Rice University, The University of Houston, Texas Southern University, Houston Baptist College and South Texas College. Located here is the famed Texas Medical Center, covering 160 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Hough Roy Cullen gave $4,500,000, to four of the hospitals. The Methodist Hospital, a part of the center, is an outstanding institution with a world-wide reputation, especially in the field of "open heart surgery" under the renowned Dr. Michael DeBakey.

Houston's Astrodome and air-conditioned Astrohall provide the largest facility in the world for conventions and trade shows.

Six major railroads serve the city and the Port of Houston is the third largest seaport in the U.S.A. The city ranks first in the nation as a refinery center, "as manufacturer and distribution of petroleum equipment," and in pipeline transmission. Houston is at the heart of a fertile livestock and agricultural area and raises cotton and rice. It leads the nation in livestock exports.

Methodism was first organized in Houston with a class of fourteen members by Robert Alexander in 1837, and was continued in 1838 by LITTLETON FOWLER. In the fall of 1841 it was organized as the Houston Methodist Church. The first Quarterly Conference was held in 1842.

At the first session of the TEXAS CONFERENCE on Christmas Day in 1840, THOMAS O. SUMMERS was appointed to the Houston-Galveston Circuit. Houston became a station Dec. 12, 1842, and T. O. Summers was the pastor. Summers, a native of England, was later BOOK EDITOR of the M. E. Church, South, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, secretary of the GENERAL CON-

ERENCE and professor of systematic theology at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

The first church building in Houston was completed in 1844-45, and part of the cost was raised by Summers on a tour from NEW ORLEANS, through NASHVILLE and KENTUCKY to CINCINNATI, Ohio. ORCENETH FISHER, pastor 1846-47, made a tour through certain southern states and collected enough money to pay off the church building debt.

FIRST CHURCH, HOUSTON, TEXAS

First Church. A. C. Allen gave the church a half block in the city. In 1909 the church was named First Church, Houston, and the first unit of the present church plant was completed in 1910 with W. F. Packard as pastor. The present building occupies a half block in the heart of downtown Houston. In 1970 First Church had 9,663 members, being the oldest and largest church in the city, with property valued at $7,851,800. Dr. Charles L. Allen has been pastor since 1960.

Five former pastors of First Church have been elected to the episcopacy: H. M. DuBose, pastor from 1885-86; SETH WARD, 1897-99; SAM HAY, 1901-04; A. FRANK SMITH, 1923-30; and W. KENNETH POPE, 1949-60.

Three other bishops were once pastors of other churches in Houston: W. C. MARTIN, pastor of Grace Church; McFERRIN STOWE, Campus Pastor, University of Houston; and O. EUGENE SLATER, of Bering Memorial.

A new Methodist Headquarters building for the Houston Area was completed in 1967 at a cost of approximately $400,000, under the administration of Bishop PAUL E. MARTIN.

Bishop KENNETH W. COPELAND is presently the bishop of the Houston Area, which comprises the Gulf Coast Conference and the Texas Conference, both centered in Houston.

The Houston Board of Missions owns two demountable church buildings, called a Pioneer Church, built in eight sections, but modern. The building seats 190 plus three Sunday school rooms, etc., and is moved onto the property of a newly organized church, and can be used free for two years, paying a nominal rent. When the first unit of the new church is ready for use, the Pioneer Church is then moved to another church location.

The two Houston Districts in the Texas Conference had 98 white churches in 1969 with 98,840 members and property valued at $36,879,425. There were 24 churches in the Houston District of the Gulf Coast Conference in 1969 with 7,182 members. This makes a total of 122 United Methodist churches, not counting one FREE METHODIST, one EVANGELICAL METHODIST, and a number of A.M.E. and C.M.E. churches.

In 1970 the city had eight churches with a total of 34,816 members, and property valued at $22,535,630 as follows:

First Church had 9,663 members and property, $7,851,800; St. Luke's, 5,796 members, and property of $4,326,659; St. Paul's, 5,434, and $4,847,376; Bellaire, 4,004 and, $1,183,846; Westbury, 3,758 and, $777,046; Bethany, 1,855 and, $1,068,654; Cethsemane, 2,007 and, $1,358,995; and Park Place, 2,299 and, $1,121,254.

Bellaire Church is one of the younger Methodist Churches (1946-1970) in a rapidly growing metropolitan area. It is located in an incorporated townsite surrounded by the City of Houston. The church was organized in 1946 and in the fall of that year the membership numbered 202. Now after twenty-four years the membership has passed the 4,000 mark. At present it is fourth in size of the Methodist churches of the greater Houston area.

From the time of its organization it has been difficult for the church to keep pace with the building needs of a rapidly expanding congregation. Three years ago the present plant was completed, which was carefully planned for a seven-day week program. Since 1952 two identical Sunday school sessions and morning worship services have been necessary to care for the attendance of the congregation. A school for little children is carried on Monday through Friday during the school year, and a neighborhood program for children and youth throughout the year.

A notable characteristic of the church is the all-around nature of its program. Being a family church, it has a planned program for children, youth and adults. The choir program includes over four hundred persons. The Youth Choir sings at the 9:30 Sunday morning worship service, and numbers over one hundred voices each Sunday. The chancel choir enjoys great repute in the city.

Approximately twenty-five percent of the people who have united with the Bellaire Church have been received on profession of faith, and ten percent from other denominations. The membership includes people of all walks of life, and different racial backgrounds are represented—Mexican-Americans, Orientals, and Negro.

Though several other new Methodist churches have been organized in this section of the city, Bellaire United Methodist Church continues to grow.

In its twenty-four years the church has had four pastors, Frederick W. Marsh, W. Darwin Andrus, Don F. Pevey, and the present pastor, A. C. Bell.

The Methodist Hospital is a university-affiliated general hospital in the Texas Medical Center, organized and owned by the TEXAS CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church. The Board of Trustees, consisting of forty voting members plus ex officio members of the auxiliary organizations, operates this non-profit, voluntary hospital. Although most of the Board members are Methodist, several other faiths are represented and all are approved by the Texas Conference of The United Methodist Church.

The Methodist Hospital was founded upon and continues to operate for three basic purposes: to care for the sick and injured; to teach doctors, nurses, and other persons participating in allied health professions; and to conduct research in order to improve the care of patients.

The Methodist Hospital opened June 12, 1924, at its first location on 3020 San Jacinto, with the total capacity of ninety beds and ten bassinets. The present hospital was opened in 1951, with 304 beds. In 1963 a major expansion more than doubled the capacity to over 700 beds. Today's Methodist Hospital, with the opening of the new Fondren and Brown Orthopedic and Cardiovascular Clinical and Research Centers, comprises more than 1,000 beds.

Upon moving to the Texas Medical Center, The Methodist Hospital became affiliated with Baylor College of Medicine with a view of maintaining a superior patient care, teaching, and research program. Five institutions in the Texas Medical Center have combined as the "Baylor College of Medicine Affiliated Hospitals Residency Training Program" to share and rotate experiences in a number of specialties, in order to give the best possible experience to trainees. All active medical staff members of The Methodist Hospital are required to have a clinical teaching appointment at Baylor College of Medicine. These active medical staff members make rounds, serve on committees, and conduct the teaching program at the Hospital. Doctors are not paid for this work and many other hospital duties which they perform—it is a part of their duty as staff members.

The Methodist Hospital, classified as a general hospital, offers patient care in numerous medical specialties. It has become a referral hospital on a regional, national, and international scale, especially in the following areas: cardiovascular surgery, orthopedics, neurosurgery, ophthalmology, otolaryngology, and areas of internal medicine such as hematology, renal problems, and infectious diseases.

Many dedicated persons have supported The Methodist Hospital with their interest, energy, and financial resources. Among the major contributors who have helped to enhance patient care, teaching, and research are Mrs. WALTER W. FONDREN, a loyal supporter since the hospital's beginning; and beside other private individuals have been the M. D. Anderson Foundation; Houston Endowment, Inc.; The Moody Foundation; and The Brown Foundation, Inc. Hundreds of ladies, members of three volunteer groups, have made generous donations and provided free hours of service that would cost the hospital thousands of dollars per year.

The Methodist Hospital, since its opening, continues to be an institution of the community. Through its outreach it has become internationally known. Its motto is "The Patient Comes First."

TED BOWEN

St. Luke's Church was organized on Nov. 11, 1945, with 220 members. A master building plan of three units, to be embodied in Georgian Architecture, was adopted in September 1948. The entire master plan was completed in 1949, six years ahead of the original schedule, all buildings located on fifteen acres facing a main thoroughfare.

The church has property valued at approximately $5,000,000, including main church plant and beautifully landscaped grounds, Wynn Blanton Memorial Youth Center, completely equipped gymnasium, lighted athletic field, and paved parking area of approximately seven acres. The church owns three parsonages, completely furnished.

St. Luke's has a staff of thirty, with four ministers, a full-time Director of Christian Education and Organist-Choirmaster and assistant. Two worship services are conducted each Sunday morning, with far-reaching live television ministry and radio coverage. Two sessions of the church school are conducted each Sunday. A pre-kindergarten day school is provided from September through May, and a complete day camp for children is conducted through the summer months. The youth minister directs a year-round full-time activities program for the children and youth of the membership and the community.

An annual St. Luke's Lectureship was established in 1961, which brings to St. Luke's and Houston outstanding national theologians. During the fall and winter months a hospitality night program is held on each Wednesday night, planned to interest every family member.

St. Luke's has an extensive music program, with a chancel choir and six children and youth choirs. The chancel choir of over one hundred members has performed many of the great musical works, including Handel's Messiah every December. The sanctuary, seating 1,300 people, is equipped with a Moller pipe organ of 3,848 pipes.

St. Luke's has been a church with a vision and a sense of mission, having one of the largest missionary budgets in the Church. Its membership, built through dynamic evangelism, is presently 5,796, and while the church is only twenty-five years of age, it appears to stand upon the threshold of a great future of ministry and service, in one of the fastest growing cities in the world.

St. Paul's Church is the Cathedral Church of Houston. It sits in the geographic center of the metropolitan area of this great city. It is located at 5501 South Main Street in the vicinity of Texas Medical Center, Rice University, and the Museum of Fine Arts. The church was organized in 1906 and now has a membership of 5,434 persons. The sanctuary building occupies one complete block of land, with a full block for parking area directly east of the church. The block north of the church has a youth and activities building upon it. It is considered to be one of the most beautiful churches in the denomination. The present building was erected in 1929.

Terrace Church is a fast growing suburban church. It was begun Easter of 1951 when forty-eight prospective members met in a neighborhood school. Gathering the people together was C. E. Clark, a retired minister who had previously started over thirty Methodist churches.

A five-acre site was bought during the first assigned pastorate, the minister being Bill Leediker, and the congregation joined in erecting the first unit of the building. Ten years later Joe S. Strother was appointed to Terrace and led in erecting the sanctuary building. The rapid growth of members soon led to dual sessions of both the church school and morning worship. At the fifteenth birthday the forty-eight membership had increased to 2,750 and with this growth the addition of a considerable staff became necessary.

HOVERMALE, ULSIE PERKINS (1893-1960), American E.U.B. executive, born Aug. 15, 1893, son of T. P. Hovermale in Morgan County, W. Va. While attending Shenandoah Collegiate Institute (Dayton, Va.) he responded to the call to the ministry. He married Miss Jennie Viola Thompson of Raleigh, N. C., in 1918. He graduated from OTTERBEIN COLLEGE with a B.A. (1921) and joined VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, United Brethren in Christ, 1921, and with his wife was ordained in 1924. He served as supply pastor at Toms Brook, Va. (1924) and then was appointed pastor at ROANOKE, Va. During his pastorate there he built the church in use today (1970). He was then assigned pastor of the college church at Dayton, Va., and remodeled the church and Sunday school annex. He was elected conference recording secretary (1924-30); then elected conference superintendent continually until 1938. In 1937 he was elected unanimously from the floor, the first person so elected in 130 years of conference history. In 1938 he was chosen to fill an unexpired term as general secretary of the Department of Home Missions and Church Erection with offices in Dayton, Ohio. He continued in this position until the uniting GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1946 elected him as the first executive secretary of the newly formed Division of Home Missions and Church Extension of the E.U.B. Church. While ill and seeking retirement, he filled this position until his death occurred on Oct. 4, 1960 in Sarasota, Fla.

HOWARD, ALFRED TAYLOR (1868-1948), American E.U.B. bishop, missionary, seminary president, was a MICHIGAN farm boy who became a world citizen and Christian witness to the uttermost parts. He was born March 12, 1868, in Kalamazoo County, Mich. and planned to study medicine. He was a football player, directed a church choir, and served as editor while at OTTERBEIN COLLEGE. He was married to May Day Stevenson on their mutual graduation day, in 1894. They sailed as missionaries to SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, 1894-98; then served in JAPAN, 1898-1912. In 1912 Howard was made superintendent of Japan, the PHILIPPINES, and CHINA. In 1913, he was elected bishop to supervise the foreign fields, namely, Japan, China, the Philippines, Sierra Leone (West Africa) and PUERTO RICO. As bishop, he visited Africa three times, Puerto Rico three times, PANAMA once, the Far East twice. In 1918 he assumed the office of general secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society.

In 1921 Alfred T. Howard accepted the call to the presidency of Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Dayton, Ohio, then in a state of transition. He also served as head of the Department of Missions and Sociology.

Each summer he continued his education at the University of Chicago and at nearly seventy spent one year of study at the Hartford School of Missions and Religious Education. At his suggestion, a new president for the Seminary was found, and Bishop Howard returned to the classroom; however, after four years the new president resigned, and Howard was called to the presidency on a temporary basis, which lasted from 1933-38. He returned to his classroom 1938-42, at which time he retired.

His six remaining years were devoted especially to his local church, where he called on the sick, sang in the choir, taught a boy's class. He lectured widely.

His eldest son, J. GORDON HOWARD, is a United Methodist bishop.

Alfred T. Howard died Nov. 12, 1948 at Dayton, Ohio. Burial was in Lewisburg, Ohio.

HOWARD, HENRY (1859-1933), was a world-famous Australian preacher and author during the early years of this century. Educated in MELBOURNE he spent some years in Wesleyan circuits in Victoria before being appointed to Pirie Street, ADELAIDE, in 1902. He remained at Pirie Street until 1921. Crowds flocked to hear him each Sunday.

From Adelaide, Howard went to England and then to America where he was co-pastor of New York's First Avenue Presbyterian Church, 1926-33. Several volumes of Howard's sermons were published, the best known being The Conning-Tower of the Soul, The Summits of the Soul, and The Shepherd Psalm. In 1933, he died of throat cancer.

HOWARD, JOHN GORDON (1899-), American E.U.B. author, college president, and bishop, was born in TOKYO, Japan, Dec. 3, 1899, of missionary parents, Alfred Howard (later a bishop) and May Howard. He graduated from Stivers High School, Dayton, Ohio, in 1918, and attended OTTERBEIN COLLEGE, where he was active in journalism, debate, and athletics. He earned an A.B. at Otterbein College in 1922, a B.D. from Bonebrake Theological Seminary (now UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY) in 1925, and an M.A. from New York University in 1927. Otterbein College gave him an honorary D.D. in 1936, and ALBRIGHT and LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGES each an LL.D. in 1952 and 1968 respectively.

Licensed by Miami Conference in 1924 and ordained in 1925, Dr. Howard served as Youth Director in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ for thirteen years (1927-39), and then for five years as editor of Sunday school literature. During this period he wrote four books and numerous periodical articles. In 1945 he was elected president of Otterbein College. During the next twelve years he greatly strengthened that institution, became first chairman of the Ohio Foundation of Independent Colleges, served as president of the Ohio Council of Churches, and successively as president of the Ohio-West Virginia Area Council, and a vice-president of the National Council of the YMCA.

On Aug. 1, 1957, Dr. Howard was elected a bishop of The E.U.B. Church and assigned to the East Central Area with offices in Pittsburgh. In 1968 Abingdon Press published his book, Small Windows on a Big World.

Gordon Howard and his first wife, Rhea McConaughy (who died in 1965) had two daughters, Gloria Mae and Sarah Ellen. In 1967 Bishop Howard married Katherine Higgins Shannon, the widow of Bishop PAUL E. V. SHANNON, and they presently reside in PHILADELPHIA. In The United Methodist Church he was assigned to the Eastern Pennsylvania Area in which Philadelphia is the episcopal seat.

HOWARD, WILBERT FRANCIS (1880-1952), British New Testament scholar, was born at Gloucester. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1904, serving in English circuits until 1919, when he became New Testament tutor at Handsworth College, BIRMINGHAM. From 1943 until his retirement in 1951 he was principal. He was perhaps the leader of a generation of Methodist scholars whose interests were biblical and linguistic rather than theological. His Fernley Lecture, The Fourth Gospel in Recent Criticism and Interpretation (1931), won him an international standing, which was enhanced by his Christianity According to St. John (1943) and his introduction and exegesis of this Gospel in The Interpreter's Bible (vol. 8, 1952).

He served as a fraternal delegate to the 1932 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church and was joint chairman of two ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES, in 1947 and 1951. He was president of the British Methodist Conference in 1944; and when his successor, ARCHIBALD HARRISON, died in January 1946, he took office again until the following Conference. He obtained a D.D. from London University and was elected a fellow of the British Academy in 1949. He died in Cambridge on July 10, 1952.

HOWARD PLESTED GIRLS INTERMEDIATE COLLEGE, Meerut, India. Howard Plested died when he was a boy, but his parents, from a limited estate, gave funds to the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY to buy a beautiful property for a school in his memory at Meerut, India. Mrs. PHILO M. BUCK started the school in 1893. By 1930 it had become a high-grade middle school with seventh and eighth standards and a teacher training department. It was coeducational through the primary classes. In the 1940's high school classes were added. It is now an intermediate (junior) college with a reputation for academic excellence and for character training.

Among many missionaries who have made notable contributions to this outstanding institution have been ANNA E. LAWSON, MELVA LIVERMORE, L. A. Bobenhouse, Gertrude Richards, and Mildred Shepherd. Each of these women is remembered for devoted service in other institutions as well, and Misses Lawson and Livermore exercised wide influence throughout Indian Methodism.

HOWE, CHARLES PRESTON (1883-1949), was an active American layman who was a newspaper publisher in western PENNSYLVANIA. He was born in Tarentum, Pa., Feb. 27, 1883, lived in and served the Tarentum community his entire life, and died there March 18, 1949. After attending ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, on June 27, 1904, Charlie Howe began the editing and publication of a new newspaper titled The Valley Daily News. From its inception the paper took a pronounced Christian moral stance. All liquor, tobacco, and off-color advertising was rejected, and church and moral enterprises were strongly supported. The paper continues today under the same policies under the management of Eugene Simon, his son-in-law. It has a circulation of 36,000 in the four-county area of the Allegheny-Kiski valleys in western Pennsylvania.

Charles Howe was an active churchman. As an officer in his First Church in Tarentum, as a Sunday school teacher of the Pentagon Class in the church for over thirty years, as a leader in the Tarentum Campmeeting Association, and as an active participant in all community religious and moral enterprises he was the most influential churchman of his community for a generation. The Church at large used and honored him. He was elected a delegate of the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1924 and 1940, and to the Uniting Conference of 1939. From 1940 until his death in 1949 he was a lay member of the Pittsburgh Conference and served the Conference as chairman of the important COMMISSION ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE. On Aug. 15, 1917 he was united in marriage to Mildred Powell. Mrs. Howe and three daughters survived him. His pastor said of him, "He was a great soul and a great Christian. His Lord and his Church had absolute priority in his life."

HOWELL, MABEL K. (1874-1957), American educator and missionary, was born in South Orange, N. J. in 1874. She received the Ph.D. degree from Cornell University in 1896, and the M.A. degree later from the School of Theology at Chicago University. She taught in Madison Institute, Richmond, Ky., from 1896 to 1900. There she became a close friend of Miss BELLE H. BENNETT, who was responsible for her going to teach at Scarritt Bible and Training School in 1903 at Kansas City, Mo. In 1918 she was elected by the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES) as administrative secretary of the Woman's Missionary Council, with special responsibility for oriental fields. In 1926 she was named professor of foreign missions at SCARRITT COLLEGE, by this time located in NASHVILLE, and there she remained until retirement in 1943. She made several visits to mission fields, especially to KOREA and JAPAN. She was the author of Women and the Kingdom. In 1949 the Alumni Association (of Scarritt) launched a program to establish a Mabel K. Howell Chair of Missions at the college. She died May 18, 1957.

HOWLAND, CARL L. (1881-1964), an American ordained elder of the Arizona-Southern California Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was editor of The Free Methodist for twenty-four years. He held the degrees A.B., GREENVILLE COLLEGE; M.A., Texas Christian University. He was pastor, superintendent and college professor in ILLINOIS, NEW YORK, TEXAS and CALIFORNIA. He served as the very successful editor of The Free Methodist, 1931-55. He was an efficient church organizer, a tireless worker, and committed servant of Christ and His church. He died in 1964 at Whittier, Calif.

BYRON S. LAMSON

HOYT, CLAIRE CLINTON PATTERSON (1906-), American minister, was born in Storm Lake, Iowa, Feb. 2, 1906 to Fred and Eva (Patterson) Hoyt. He was on trial in UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE, 1924, and served annual appointments until entering higher education. He received the following degrees: A.B., Upper Iowa University, 1928; B.D., GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, 1930; M.A., NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1931; and LL.D., IOWA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, 1966. On Nov. 25, 1961 he was married to Velna Oliver Garner.

Following his education, Dr. Hoyt served churches at Dayton, Lovell, Laramie, and Cheyenne, Wyo.; Beatrice, Neb.; and Pueblo, Colo. He was the ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE treasurer, 1959-63, and has been General Secretary, General Board of PENSIONS since 1963.

Dr. Hoyt was chairman, Commission on World Service and Finance, WYOMING STATE ANNUAL CONFERENCE, 1945-54; member of the General Board of Pensions, 1952-63; Director, WESLEY FOUNDATION at Laramie, Wyo., 1936-42; chaplain, Wyoming Senate, 1947-48; and part-time instructor, LUFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1959-63. He has contributed many articles to the church school publications and ministers' journals of the denomination.

HOYT, FRANCIS S. (1822-1912), American educator and missionary, was born in Lyndon, Vt., Nov. 5, 1822. He was the son of Benjamin Hoyt, one of the founders and a charter member of the Board of Trustees of Newbury Seminary, Newbury, Vt. He prepared for college at Newbury and graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Middletown, Conn., in 1844. After serving as the first principal of Springfield Wesleyan Seminary, Springfield, Vt., in 1846, he became principal of Newbury Seminary in 1847.

Francis Hoyt and Phoebe Martha Dyar, preceptress at Newbury, were married Dec. 24, 1848. Following their marriage, Hoyt taught at Newark Wesleyan Institute, Newark, N. J. In 1850 he and Mrs. Hoyt were appointed missionaries to the Oregon Institute that JASON LEE and his associates had founded in the Northwest. Under Hoyt's leadership, the Institute became WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY in 1856. The Hoyts were in charge of these institutions for a period of eleven years.

In 1861 Hoyt joined the faculty at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Delaware, Ohio, and remained ten years in Delaware. He was elected editor of the Western Christian Advocate by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1872 and served twelve years in that capacity. He also taught for a time at Baldwin University, Berea, Ohio. He was a member of the General Conference of the M. E. Church on five different occasions. He lived to the age of ninety and died in Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 28, 1912.

HSUN TAO HUI, the Chinese name of the mission work of the Methodist churches of Great Britain as they united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church in 1932 to form the Methodist Church—as this name is in English. (See CHINA.)

HUANCAYO, Peru. is a rapidly growing market city of more than 46,000 inhabitants. It is situated in a large valley high in the Andes mountains at an altitude of 10,600 feet. The city is the economic and political center of central Peru. The largest Methodist church in the sierra is located here, with a membership of 170. A series of rural churches surround the town.

Colegio Andino is a coeducational Methodist school. Located at a commercial center in the heights of the Andes mountains, the school is at an altitude of 11,000 feet and serves children from Huancayo and towns and villages in the area.

Founded as an elementary school and opened in 1914, Colegio Andino in 1966 had both elementary and secondary classes. At the time the high school department was added, a hostel (dormitory) was built to care for boarding students. The hostel is the center for a training program to prepare leaders for rural churches of the region. Courses in Bible, music, Christian education, and church organization are conducted in the hostel, and deputation teams go out to assist rural churches.

HUBBARD, CLEMENT EVANS (1894-), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Rockmart, Ga., on March 31, 1894. He received his A.B. from Emory College in 1916 and for a year taught science at REIN-

HARDT COLLEGE, Waleska, Ga. After serving two years (1917-19) in the U. S. Army, he spent three months in graduate studies at Cambridge University, England. After a period of teaching on June 7, 1921, he married Patience Elizabeth Stroud; and on July 27 they sailed to Brazil as missionaries.

He served first as pastor in the interior or "Far West" zone of the state of SÃO PAULO. Twice he was a district superintendent. After founding the Instituto Americano de Lins in 1928, he devoted his life to the educational field, a purely personal venture, for Hubbard received no financial aid from the Mission Board until 1936.

The Instituto made a tremendous impact upon that part of the state with scarcely any educational facilities, because of the new ideas and techniques it introduced as well as its great stress on character development. Its graduates are now scattered over Brazil, as preachers, teachers, deaconesses, lawyers, dentists, politicians, and ministers.

Hubbard retired in March 1959. Before leaving Brazil, he was named an honorary citizen of LINS and of its city council. Since then, the grateful city of Lins again honored Hubbard, naming a street after him and proclaiming him citizen of the year. The Hubbards have five children—Patience, William Evans, David Stroud, Joseph Carroll, and Anita, all married. They now live at Wesley Wood Towers, in Atlanta, Ga.

EULA K. LONG

HUBBARD, ELMER E. (1861-1937), an American lay missionary and founder of the Asilo Industrial Orphanage, Cardenas, Cuba, was born in Pierce, Ill., April 1, 1861. Graduating from the University of Michigan, he was approached by a representative of the Japanese government who was looking for Christian teachers to go to JAPAN on five year contracts. Soon he found himself in Toyotsu, Japan, teaching English. While there he read the biography of George Mueller of England, and was so impressed by Mueller's faith and life, and his marvelous work in founding and sustaining his orphanages, that Hubbard felt called to dedicate his life to a similar kind of work.

Returning to the States at the end of his contract in 1897, he began work among the children of the poor areas of NEW YORK CITY. On hearing of the conditions of the Cuban children then suffering in the concentration camps under General Weyler, he turned over his work in New York to others and as soon as the War of (Cuban) Independence was ended went to CUBA and applied to the Methodist Church for orphanage work, Feb. 16, 1899.

He had saved $400 from his work in Japan which he invested in his first orphanage in MATANZAS.

After three years in Matanzas, Juan G. Hall, a Presbyterian missionary from Mexico, then serving his church in Cardenas, invited Hubbard to transfer his orphanage to Cardenas. Financial offers were made by various organizations, and the Methodists being unable financially to help him, the orphanage was moved to Cardenas where it was named El Asilo de Niños Casa Industrial.

Meantime his assistant director in Matanzas, Laura Weir, became his lifetime companion and the two of them continued for many years, one of the most unique contributions in the field of child welfare. Many church and state leaders had their early training in the Asilo.

The strain of administration in the constant search for food and clothing for the inmates, and the personal care of the children wore down Hubbard's physical well-being. Doctors advised that he seek some activity outside his beloved Asilo. He became a colporteur for the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY and traveled extensively throughout the island. Finding an evangelical family in some remote area the name would be given to the nearest preacher, and many churches were thus formed. He traveled great distances on foot selling Bibles; if a family was too poor to pay cash he would take produce of any kind in payment. It was common for him to return to his center of operation (usually the home of a friendly pastor) loaded with such produce.

A friend said of him, "modest, unassuming and kind, he quietly went about his Father's business." With unlimited faith and consecration, and a depth of unsurpassed piety and humility, Hubbard made a lasting imprint on the evangelical movement in Cuba.

HUBBELL, CHARLES HENRY (1872-1915), M. P. youth secretary, was born at Adrian, Mich., Nov. 20, 1872. He graduated from ADRIAN COLLEGE in 1893, and united with the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church in 1896. The same year he married Miss Alma Wilcox of Adrian.

After five years in the pastorate his enthusiasm for the Christian Endeavor movement led to his election as field secretary of the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union. When his own Church organized a Board of Young People's work in 1908, he became its general secretary, remaining in the position until his death on Dec. 26, 1915.

JAMES H. STRAUGHN

HUDSON, ALBERT MERRIAM (1843-1895), hymn writer and lay evangelist in ARGENTINA, was a professor of English and French and a licensed lay preacher. He was converted under the influence of WILLIAM GOODFELLOW and dedicated himself to evangelistic work from the middle 1870's until 1894, when his health failed.

Hudson cooperated frequently with JOHN F. THOMSON in evangelization work in the Spanish language, conducting evening Bible classes and collaborating in the editing of the official Methodist organ, El Estandarte Evangelico, which had been founded in 1883.

He composed a number of hymns, of which four were included in the Spanish hymnal compiled by HENRY C. JACKSON. Hudson was the first Argentine composer of gospel hymns in the language of the country. Over the years members of many congregations became so familiar with the Hudson hymns that they could sing most of them by heart.

HUDSON, THOMAS M. (1799-1881), a leading American minister of the M. E. Church in western Pennsylvania during the middle years of the nineteenth century. He was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1799. His youth was a time of toil and hardship, his father having died in 1814 leaving to his widowed mother the care of eleven children. His parents were Presbyterians. Converted at a CAMP MEETING near his home in his seventeenth year, he soon thereafter united with the M. E.

Church. He was admitted on trial in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1821; full membership and deacon in 1823. In 1825 he became a charter member of the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE, organized that year, and was in the first class ordained ELDER in that Conference. He served leading appointments in the Pittsburgh Conference until he retired in 1872, fourteen years being spent as a presiding elder in four different districts. He was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE sessions of 1836, 1840, 1852, and 1868, and a reserve delegate in 1856. In his latter years he was the honored "father" of the Conference. In 1870 he wrote and published his autobiography in a 354-page volume entitled Life and Times of Rev. Thomas M. Hudson (published 1871), which contains much valuable data on the Methodism of western Pennsylvania. He died Dec. 16, 1881.

HUELSTER, AUGUST (1837-1913), American Evangelical presiding elder and itinerant preacher, who preached fifty-three years in WISCONSIN, MINNESOTA, and NORTH DAKOTA. He was born Feb. 10, 1837, at Fredeburg, Westphalia, GERMANY. In 1848 with his parents he came to the United States where they settled on a farm at Lomira, Wis. in 1850. Converted from the Catholic faith, he was licensed to preach by the Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Association in 1855, became a charter member of the Wisconsin Conference in 1856, and in May 1857 was assigned to assist Andrew Tarnutzer on the St. Paul and St. Peter Missions in Minnesota. Although sharing the work, August Huelster did most of the itinerating to the south and west of St. PAUL, as far as New Ulm. In 1858 he was assigned to St. Peter Mission with John Schmitt as assistant. At the end of this second year he reports traveling nearly 5,000 miles, preaching more than 200 times, receiving eighty-nine new members and having fifty-seven conversions. In just two years he had established congregations in five counties: Carver, Rice, Le Sueur, Nicollet, and Brown. This work under the leadership of August Huelster, together with the other two missions in Minnesota, is described by the Wisconsin historian (Fritche) as having no parallel in the history of the denomination up to that time. In 1859 he was assigned to Madison, in 1860 to Winona, and from 1861 to 1880 again to fields in Wisconsin. Then he served in Minnesota and North Dakota until 1908, retiring at the age of seventy-one.

When the Dakota Conference was organized in 1884 he continued on the Fargo District as presiding elder for four years. The 479-page story of his life was published in German in 1908 under the title Gnadenwunder (Miracle of Grace). He died Sept. 26, 1913, in Santa Ana, Calif., where he was buried in Fairhaven Cemetery.

HUESTIS, STEPHEN F. (1835-1928), Canadian Methodist minister and publisher, was born in Wallace, Nova Scotia, May 8, 1835. Converted by W. C. Beals in 1850, he attended Mount Allison Academy in 1855, and was received on probation in 1858.

Ordained in 1862, he was a circuit preacher for twenty-two years prior to his appointment as book steward in Halifax, a post he held until 1908. In this position he did much to strengthen Methodism in eastern Canada. From 1908 to 1912 he was immigration chaplain for the Methodist church at the Port of Halifax.

During his career Huestis occupied many positions in his church. He was president of the Nova Scotia Conference in 1879, a member of the committee which paved the way for the establishment of the Methodist Church of Canada in 1874, and was selected for the committee which prepared the Basis of Union for the UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA. It was fitting, therefore, that he was given the D.D. degree by MOUNT ALLISON in 1900. Huestis died at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, in 1928.

HUFFMAN, LAWRENCE L. (1899-), American E.U.B. attorney and publisher, was born at Tyner, Ind., Jan. 14, 1899. After graduating from Chicago Kent College of Law in 1925, he practiced law in Hammond, Ind. until 1945. He was married to Mary Agnes Buckner. Their children are John David and Mary Elizabeth.

In May 1945 he was elected publisher of THE OTTERBEIN PRESS, Dayton, Ohio. His election as publisher of The E. U. B. Church in 1962 entrusted him the supervision of the total printing business of his church. This brought the EVANGELICAL PRESS, Harrisburg, Pa. and The Otterbein Press, Dayton, Ohio, under his direction. Under his supervision the three-story Board of Publication Center was built across the street from The Otterbein Press in 1965.

Along with his publishing responsibilities, Mr. Huffman has served on the Board of Christian Education, the General Council of Administration, and the Board of Trustees of INDIANA CENTRAL COLLEGE, serving as president of the latter board beginning in 1940. He was also active in interdenominational and civic affairs, serving on a number of departments and committees of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He has been president of the Protestant Church-Owned Publishers Association; on the Board of Directors of the American Red Cross (Dayton Chapter); and on the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Dayton, Ohio.

He retired from his office as publisher in 1967.

HAROLD H. HAZENFIELD

HUGHES, EDWIN HOLT (1866-1950), American bishop, church statesman, and one of the chief architects of Methodist union, was born in Moundsville, W. Va., Dec. 7, 1866. His father, T. B. Hughes, was an itinerant in the WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, and young Hughes grew up in various parsonages in that state. The region was bitterly divided in the Civil War, and later Edwin Hughes declared that his paternal and maternal grandmothers, favoring opposite sides in the conflict, were a bit difficult to reconcile. Hughes attended West Virginia University and Grinnell College (Iowa), was graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN in 1889, and won his seminary degree at Boston in 1892. Through the years he was awarded five honorary degrees. T. B. Hughes transferred to the IOWA CONFERENCE in 1885, and there Edwin was admitted on trial in 1887 and served a charge for one year. In the spring of 1892, as he was graduating from the seminary,

EDWIN H. HUGHES

Hughes transferred to the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE and was appointed to Newton Center, Mass. Four years later while still only twenty-nine, he was sent to the strongest Methodist church in New England, Center Church, MALDEN, Mass. It was his last pastorate. After seven years at Malden he became president of DEPAUW UNIVERSITY, and, in 1908 at the age of forty-one, was elevated to the episcopacy on the fifteenth ballot after what he referred to as "six days of voting." Years later in conversation with Bishop W. W. PEELE of the Southern Church, Bishop Hughes said, "Walter, you were elected bishop on the first ballot, were you not?" Peele answered affirmatively. Hughes then said, "Oh!—Anybody can be elected on the first ballot, but it takes a real good man to stand up to fifteen!"

Bishop Hughes' brother MATTHEW was elected bishop in 1916, after he had served as a pastor under the appointment of his younger brother. Edwin Hughes married Isabel B. Ebbert of ATLANTA on June 1, 1892, and to them were born eight children. His care of her during her long terminal illness in 1938 was exemplary and beautiful. Notwithstanding his far-ranging public life, Hughes managed to devote much time to his family.

In his five years as president of DePauw University, Hughes saved that institution from bankruptcy and assured its future as a first-rate Methodist college. Later he served as the acting president of BOSTON and AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES. However, he did not regard administration as his forte; he was a preacher and orator par excellence. He was a master of both wit and pathos, and as such he confirmed the saying that if a public speaker can make people laugh or cry, he is a success, and if he can make them both laugh and cry, the world is his. Believing in the thorough preparation of sermons and addresses, Hughes wrote them carefully and then spoke without referring to his manuscript. Asked what he considered the worst fault of preachers generally, he replied, "Extemporaneousness!" His own pulpit style was to begin in quiet even tones which could scarcely be heard, and then warm up to a rare combination of strength, fire, and intellectual fervor as he rose to an enthusiastic climax. In 1930 as his church's fraternal delegate to the English and Irish conferences, Hughes made a most favorable impression. During his career he filled important lectureships at several universities.

The contribution of Edwin H. Hughes toward the union of American Methodism in 1939 was probably greater than that of any other man North or South. Grieved over the divided Methodist loyalties which he knew as a youth in WEST VIRGINIA, he was keenly aware of the desirability of unification, and in time it became his obsession. In 1922 he was appointed to the Northern Church's Commission on Unification and, save for a brief interlude, continued as a member. On the death of Bishop WILLIAM F. McDOWELL in 1938, Hughes was made chairman of the Commission. In the 1930's he traveled extensively in the South where he captivated large audiences as he pled for the PLAN OF UNION. Bishop FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL wrote, "I think he has spoken to more Methodists than any other preacher I have ever known. . . . The Hughes oratory was the largest single personal force from the Northern Church in creating the sentiment for unification in Methodism." Bishop JOHN M. MOORE, Chairman of the Southern Church's Commission on Unification, said, "From the standpoint of his knowledge of Methodism, its history, structure, genius, laws, doctrines, spirit, practice, and objectives, and from the standpoint of episcopal administration and denominational perspective and strategy, Edwin Holt Hughes stands at the top."

On May 10, 1939 at the UNITING CONFERENCE in KANSAS CITY, Bishop Hughes delivered an address on "The Methodists Are One People," before fifty bishops, 900 delegates, and 14,000 people. It was the most dramatic and probably the greatest platform utterance of his long and distinguished career as a preacher and orator. On that occasion an appropriate picture of Bishop Hughes clasping hands with Bishop John M. Moore of the Southern Church and Bishop JAMES H. STRAUGHN from the M. P. Church was made. Later the photograph was distributed all over the Methodist world as the symbol of the unification of American Methodism.

As a member of the Joint Commission for revising the Methodist hymnal in 1930-34, Bishop Hughes contributed balance and wisdom based on a thorough knowledge of and love for Methodist people and what they liked. When the hymn, "Sweet Hour of Prayer," was under attack on the ground that the line, "This robe of flesh I'll drop while passing through the air," had a disembodied spirit shouting, Bishop Hughes declared, "Brethren, you cannot take 'Sweet Hour of Prayer' out of a Methodist hymnbook. Methodist people will never stand for it!" That settled it; "Sweet Hour of Prayer" remained in the hymnal.

During his active episcopal career of thirty-two years, Hughes was the resident bishop in SAN FRANCISCO, CHICAGO, BOSTON, and WASHINGTON. His life and work are admirably summed up in his significant autobiography, I Was Made a Minister. He was the author of ten other books.

Bishop Hughes and Bishop McConnell, two of the ablest men ever elected to the episcopacy in American Methodism, were close friends for more than half a century. After Bishop Hughes' death, Bishop McConnell, in addressing the COUNCIL of BISHOPS on some matter, said, "I meant to talk to Ed Hughes about that." Then pausing impressively, he added, "But that can wait." Bishop Hughes died Feb. 12, 1950, and was buried on the campus of DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind.

HUGHES, HENRY MALDWYN (1875-1940), British Methodist, was born at Trefeglwys, Montgomery, on Sept. 17, 1875. Educated at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, and at Jesus College, CAMBRIDGE, he entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1898, and served in several circuits. In 1921 he was appointed as the first principal of the new Wesleyan theological college, Wesley House, Cambridge. He remained there until his retirement in 1937, having a deep influence on many able students. He was the last president of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, for he presided over the Conference of 1932. He wrote many books, including The Ethics of Jewish Apocryphal Literature (1908); The Theology of Experience (1915); The Kingdom of Heaven, which was the Fernley Lecture of 1922; What is the Atonement? (1924); The Christian Idea of God (1935). Perhaps his most influential book, however, was Christian Foundations (1927), a manual of theology with liberal tendencies which for many years was the almost official textbook for local preachers and candidates for the ministry in the Methodist Church. He died on Aug. 20, 1940.

HUGHES, HUGH PRICE (1847-1902), British Methodist, was the founder of the Methodist Times (1885). He was born at Carmarthen on Feb. 8, 1847. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry, studying at Richmond College, LONDON, 1865-69. After serving in various circuits, including OXFORD (1881-84), he was chosen as the first superintendent of the new West London Mission (1887), one of the successful experiments of the FORWARD MOVEMENT, of which he was the recognized leader. An ardent politician, he became prominent in 1890 when he attacked the Irish nationalist leader, Charles Stewart Parnell, after the famous divorce case. In the same year he was involved in the Missionary Controversy, and his part in this explains why he was not elected president of the Wesleyan Conference until 1898. In 1892-95 he shared in the private Grindelwald conversations between Anglicans and Free Churchmen. He was one of the principal founders of the National Evangelical Free Church Council, of which he was the first president in 1896. Hughes did much to swing Wesleyan Methodism closer to the older Free Churches and to the Liberal Party; at the time of the South African War, however, he alienated some of his friends by coming out as a Liberal Imperialist. Publications included: Social Christianity (1889); The Philanthropy of God (1890); Ethical Christianity (1892); and Essential Christianity (1894). He died in London, Nov. 17, 1902.

HUGHES, JOHN (1776-1843), Welsh Methodist, was born at Brecon, WALES, May 18, 1776. His father was a member of the Methodist society at Brecon, but he was disappointed that his son chose to become an itinerant preacher (in 1796) rather than to proceed to Anglican orders. In 1800 the younger Hughes was appointed as an assistant to OWEN DAVIES in the newly formed mission to North Wales. When the work spread to South Wales, Hughes was appointed to Swansea in 1805, still under the general superintendence of Owen Davies. Hughes argued that the work in South Wales could not prosper as long as it remained under the control of a minister who resided in the North. It appears that the Wesleyan Conference of 1806 decided at one state to put the work in South Wales under John Hughes; but when some of the other Welsh preachers protested, he applied to be transferred to England and was appointed to Dewsbury, in Yorkshire, moving to BRISTOL in 1807. He returned to Wales on his appointment to Ruthin in 1808, but before the end of the year he removed to London to prepare for the press a Welsh translation of an abridgment of Coke's Commentary on the New Testament. Hughes experienced so much difficulty with this work that he eventually resigned and was thereupon sent to an English circuit. He spent the rest of his ministry in England, retiring in 1832 and going to live at his wife's home at Knutsford, where he died May 15, 1843. He was never entirely at home in the Welsh language, but he became a student of Welsh antiquities, publishing a number of works on the subject, the most important being Horae Britannicae (1818-19). By the standards of those days, his antiquarian works were quite scholarly. He edited the first collection of hymns for the use of Welsh Methodists, Diferion y Cysegr (1802). He is remembered as one of the founders of Welsh-speaking Methodism.

HUGHES, MATTHEW SIMPSON (1863-1920), American bishop, was born in West Union, Va. (now W. Va.) on Feb. 2, 1863. He attended the University of West Virginia and received honorary D.D. and LL.D. degrees from HAMLINE UNIVERSITY. He was ordained to the ministry of the M. E. Church in 1887 and was assigned to Chestnut Street Church in PORTLAND, Maine, Wesley Church in MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Independence Avenue

Church in KANSAS CITY, Mo., and First Church, PASADENA, Calif. In 1908 he became professor of practical theology in the University of Southern California. During the Spanish-American War, he was chaplain of the First Minnesota Regiment.

He was elected a bishop in 1916 and given episcopal supervision of the Portland area, and died there at the end of his first quadrennium, on April 4, 1920.

HUGHES, THOMAS BAYLES (1836-1917) and LOUISA HOLT (1838-1927), the parents of Bishops EDWIN H. HUGHES and MATTHEW S. HUGHES, were able and dedicated servants of the M. E. Church. Thomas Hughes was born in Fayette County, Va., now W. Va., Jan. 20, 1836, the son of Francis T. and Phoebe J. Hughes. He had only two years of formal schooling. He never saw a train until he was seventeen. In footracing he was said never to have lost the 100-yard dash. He and Louisa Holt were married March 21, 1861. They had five sons and two daughters, and all save one son lived to mature life. Though of Southern heritage, Hughes joined the WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (ME) in 1857 and in the next fifty years served thirteen pastorates and the Buckhannon District there, and five pastorates and the Oskaloosa District in the IOWA CONFERENCE. In both conferences he served some of the larger pastorates, such as Morgantown, Parkersburg, and Wheeling in West Virginia, and Bloomfield and Grinnell in Iowa. An effective evangelistic preacher, he received 132 members on one Sunday and won thousands during his entire career. He was one of the founders of WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE. His brethren elected him to lead the West Virginia Conference delegation to the 1880 GENERAL CONFERENCE. He transferred to Iowa in 1885. He died in Pasadena, Calif., July 28, 1917, and was buried at Bloomfield, Iowa.

Louisa Holt was born at Weston, Va., now W. Va., April 11, 1838, the daughter of Matthew and Abigail (Bennett) Holt. Like her husband, her background was Southern. They were married just four months before the Civil War began. They passed the entire period of the war in a section where Southern sentiment was strong, and they endured hardship and peril; at one time their parsonage was burned and they were homeless. A good manager, as well as devoutly religious, she cared well for her growing family even when salaries were small. At one period her husband received only $100 for four years, and only $17.50 for another year. She died at Bloomfield, Iowa, Oct. 31, 1927.

Thomas B. and Louisa H. Hughes are the only couple in American Methodism who lived to see two sons elected to the episcopacy.

HUGHES, WILLIAM ALFRED CARROLL (1877-1940), American bishop, was born at Westminster, Md., June 19, 1877. His father, Singleton R. Hughes, also a preacher, was the first Negro appointed as a teacher in Carroll County, Md. His grandfather, Singleton R. Hughes, Sr., was a "slave preacher" who organized and built the first Methodist church for Negroes in MARYLAND. The grandfather bought freedom for himself and his family.

W. A. C. Hughes was graduated from MORGAN COLLEGE and attended GANNON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. Taylor University gave him the Ph.D. degree in 1901, and Morgan College conferred on him the D.D. While in school Hughes won several oratorical contests. He married Mary Butler of BALTIMORE, and they had three daughters and one son.

Licensed to preach at seventeen, Hughes was admitted on trial in the WASHINGTON CONFERENCE in 1897 and attended school the next two years. In 1899 he was transferred to the DELAWARE CONFERENCE and appointed to Hudson, N. Y. In 1901 he transferred back to the Washington Conference. His appointments were: Leigh Street, RICHMOND, Va., 1901-02; Lynchburg, Va., 1903-04; Sharp Street, Baltimore, 1905-11; Baltimore District, 1912; Washington District, 1913-16; and secretary for Negro Work, Board of Home Missions and Church Extension (ME), 1917-40. Among other duties in the latter position, he aided young Negroes as they prepared for the ministry. During the years as a church board executive he became one of the best-known leaders of his race in America.

Hughes was a delegate to seven GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1916-40, and to the Uniting Conference in 1939. He led his conference delegation in 1939 and 1940. Though he was in poor physical health, the Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE elevated him to the episcopacy, June 23, 1940, the first man so honored by that body after unification. Nineteen days later, July 12, 1940, Hughes died at Baltimore.

HUGUENOT CHAPELS. Huguenot refugees fleeing from FRANCE after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, settled in many parts of England, especially in LONDON, where their chief center was Spitalfields. They built many churches where worship was conducted in French, but many of these became redundant as their members gradually became assimilated with the local Anglican parish churches. In this situation JOHN WESLEY discovered a neat solution for one of his ecclesiastical problems. The early Methodists met for fellowship and for exhortations in their own "society-rooms" and "preaching-houses," but were too frequently refused communion at their local parish church. Yet Wesley, an ordained priest of the Church of England, and in many respects remaining a high churchman, felt both the urgency of ensuring that his followers frequented the Lord's Supper, and the impropriety of administering communion in buildings unconsecrated by a bishop.

In 1741 J. L. Deleznot, a Huguenot minister, invited Wesley to preach for him and to bring his followers to share communion at his church in Great Hermitage Street, Wapping. For several Sundays Methodists from all around attended in batches of two hundred. This pointed the way to a permanent solution of Wesley's problem, the leasing in 1743 of a disused Huguenot church in West Street, Seven Dials. Here Wesley held his first major Methodist communion service on Sunday May 23, 1743, lasting from 10:00 A.M. until 3:00 P.M. This and similar redundant Huguenot churches which came under Wesley's control were known to him and his people as "chapels" because they were consecrated buildings, but of them all, West Street remained pre-eminently "the chapel" for London Methodism. The best known of the other Huguenot chapels acquired by Wesley was that in Grey Eagle Street, Spitalfields, where in 1755 he conducted his first covenant service for about 1,800 people.

HULL, HOPE (1763-1818), American pioneer preacher and often called the Father of Georgia Methodism, was born in Worcester County, Md., on March 13, 1763. He was received on trial at the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in June, 1785, the first conference held after the organization of the M. E. Church. He was appointed to Salisbury, N. C., and subsequently to the Amelia Circuit, Va., but before the year was out he was sent to the Peedee Circuit, S. C. In 1788 he was sent to the Washington Circuit, Ga., and was thus one of the ten men present at the first conference held in GEORGIA in 1788. The next year he was on the Burke Circuit below Augusta, Ga. In 1790 ASBURY sent him to SAVANNAH, Ga., to form a society, but he encountered such opposition that he was forced to leave and return to the Burke Circuit. Asbury sent him to CONNECTICUT to aid JESSE LEE in 1792, but in 1793, Hull was traveling the Savannah Circuit and laying siege to the town of Savannah. He was Asbury's traveling companion in 1794, but located in 1795. On March 13, 1796, he married Anne Wingfield. They had three children.

Hull's early education was limited, but during the ten years of his traveling ministry, besides making himself a good English scholar, he acquired a knowledge of Latin. He promoted the Wesley and Whitefield School which the second GEORGIA CONFERENCE decided to establish as the first educational venture of the Methodist Church in Georgia. The school failed, and when Hull located in 1795, he opened Succoth Academy three miles from Washington, Ga., near Coke's Chapel, which was still a house of worship in 1966. Asbury records in his JOURNAL: "Next morning (March 19, 1796) I rode to the school at Coke's Chapel; where, after preaching, I partially examined the scholars." The school was for all ages of both sexes. Hull divided his time between teaching and preaching.

Hull was called the "Broad Axe preacher" because of the power of his sermons. He often astonished his hearers in his exhortations, because he had the uncanny ability to tell them what they thought and what they did with such exactness that many thought that he had learned their secrets from others who knew them. His clothing had one requirement, that it did not fit. "As old as Hope Hull's hat" was a proverb in northeast Georgia.

In 1803, Hull and his brother-in-law, General David Meriwether, moved to Athens, Ga., and built a log church twenty-three by twenty-four feet in 1804. He was instrumental in arousing public enthusiasm for the state university, then called Franklin College, which opened its doors in Athens in 1801 (now the University of Georgia). Hull served as a trustee, and for a while was acting president. He raised funds for a chapel for the college in 1807-1808. Hull's Meeting House was built in the environs of Athens in 1810, and was used until his death. He died on Oct. 4, 1818, and his funeral was preached by LOVICK PIERCE.

HULL, England. The population of Hull, a port and manufacturing city in eastern England, rose sharply between 1771, when it was still only 15,000, and 1801, when it was 30,000. By 1901 it had become 230,000. The town had already displayed a strong nonconformist influence, and Dagger Lane (1698) was one of the first meetinghouses to appear in the north of England. Throughout the nineteenth century, Hull was a stronghold of both the Wesleyan and PRIMITIVE METHODISTS, and even in 1966 there were twice as many Methodist societies as those of all the other principal nonconformist denominations. In 1746 Elizabeth Blow of Grimsby, whose family had been influenced by JOHN WESLEY in his first journeys, visited friends in Hull named Midforth; these were the first Hull converts. The society met in Black Ropery (probably off the present Humber Street) and then in a larger room in the Shambles, near the parish church. In 1757 the Baptists vacated a meeting room in the gatehouse of the Suffolk Palace, and the Methodists used this until 1771.

Hull was then in the York Circuit and ALEXANDER MATHER ministered in the town from 1759-60. In 1771, however, Hull became a circuit town; and the first chapel, Manor Alley, was built. It was a small, galleried structure used until 1787 when George Yard replaced it. Ministers there were JOSEPH BENSON and Benjamin Rhodes, who wrote the hymn, "My heart and voice I raise." John Wesley himself first visited Hull in 1752, preaching on Myton Carr, near Great Thornton Street; he came at least twelve more times before his final journey to George Yard on his last birthday.

George Yard Chapel (1787) was built for £4,500, probably by William Hutchinson the elder, a noted local craftsman-designer. It was rectangular, and the pulpit was central on a long wall. A second Wesleyan Methodist chapel, Waltham Street (1815), was designed by the minister-architect William Jenkins, who was responsible for many large chapels displaying delicate late-Georgian treatment. It is reputed to have been the largest Methodist chapel of its time and was the first to provide accommodation for an organ, though actual installation was delayed for some years. The first free library in the town was established here, and under Richard Reece's ministry it is believed to have been the last chapel to have held a 5 A.M. service. JOSEPH BEAUMONT died in the pulpit while conducting worship in 1855. The present Central Hall (1960) was built on the same site.

The Wesleyan societies divided into the George Yard and Waltham Street circuits in 1839. Kingston Circuit, formed from George Yard, was eventually absorbed into Hull East in 1933; Coltman Street, formed from Waltham Street, joined Hull West about the same time; and Queen's Road, also formed from Waltham Street, became part of Hull North. The first Gothic Revival chapel built in Hull was Newland (1857); three large mission centers were built—Queens Hall (1905), Kings Hall (1910), Thornton Hall (1909).

The spearhead of Primitive Methodist activity in Hull was WILLIAM CLOWES, who had at one time worked in a Hull pottery before he returned to Staffordshire where he was later converted. Open-air preaching brought him back to Hull in January 1819, where he met the Woolhouse family and "Praying" Johnny Oxtoby. A room in a North Street factory was used for meetings, and by May a CAMP MEETING in the town was attended by several thousand. Hull was made a circuit town in June, and Mill Street (later known as West Street) Chapel was opened later in the same year. In two years the Hull Circuit reported nearly 5,000 members, and 3,000 were added the following year. Hull had seen the first Primitive Methodist Conference in 1820; and at the Hull Conference of 1830, it was calculated that the Hull Circuit had raised more than a third of the membership of the young connection.

Illness forced Clowes to retire in 1842, and he died in Hull in 1851, a few weeks before Clowes Chapel was opened in Jarratt Street. In the first two decades of Primitive Methodism, Hull was one of the two main missionary centers—the other being in Staffordshire under the leadership of BOURNE.

John Bywater, one of the building pioneers of Primitive Methodism, was superintendent in Hull when Clowes died and had opened Great Thornton Street two years before Jarratt Street. Other prominent chapels were Bright Street (1863) and Jubilee (1864), both designed in a flamboyant Italianate style. Of all the Primitive Methodist chapels, only Williamson Street (1872) and Lambert Street (1894) were still in use in 1966, though Spring Bank (1959) was erected on the site of the former Jubilee. Seven Primitive Methodist circuits were formed from the original Hull circuit, and all these after METHODIST UNION in 1932 disappeared into united circuits.

As for the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, although an open letter which became known as "the signal gun from Hull," was partly responsible for the breakaway which resulted in the formation of the New Connexion, the influence of this movement was not felt greatly in Hull itself. A small building in Dagger Lane was used by the first New Connexion society, and replaced, in 1799, by Bethel, Charlotte Street. This was a small classical building, enlarged in 1875 to hold 500 people. This Hull Circuit had associations with WILLIAM BOOTH, who had a very successful ministry in the city, so that the June 1857 Quarterly Meeting of the Hull New Connexion Circuit passed a resolution affirming that, should the Conference decide to continue the evangelistic labors of William Booth in coming years, the Hull circuit would be happy to avail itself of his services. Booth, however, could not stand the circuit discipline of Methodism, and went away to become an independent evangelist, and to found the Salvation Army.

Hull was among the worst damaged of British cities during the air raids of the Second World War. Most of the Methodist buildings in the city were either destroyed or damaged. Since much housing was also devastated, redeployment of churches became a postwar problem, and new chapels were built at strategic centers. Of the hundred or so Methodist chapels built in the nineteenth century, only seven were still in use in 1966. The city was divided into five circuits, and there were just twenty-nine chapels within the city boundary. An International House, for the care of university students, and a Methodist Home for the Aged have also been established in recent years.

BERNARD BLANCHARD

HULME, SAMUEL (1806-1900), British preacher, was born at Longton, Staffordshire, on Oct. 24, 1806. He was trained under THOMAS ALLIN and entered the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION ministry in 1828. After early retirement from circuit work because of infirmity, he became a college tutor for two years and missionary secretary for sixteen years. He took a leading part in defense of the Gospel at the time of the controversy over JOSEPH BARKER, and as a result was elected president in 1842, 1855, and 1866. He started the mission in CHINA. He superintended the production of the Jubilee volume in 1847, and wrote a memoir of WILLIAM COOKE. Hulme died in Manchester in 1900.

HUMBERT, RUSSELL JAY (1905-1962), American preacher and educator, was born May 26, 1905 at Barborton, Ohio. He was the recipient of the following degrees: B.S., Wooster College, 1928; S.T.B., BOSTON UNIVERSITY, 1932; S.T.M., Boston University, 1933; D.D. MOUNT UNION COLLEGE, 1945; LL.D., Wabash College, 1952; Litt.D., University of Akron, 1953. He was ordained a minister in the M. E. Church in 1930 and was elected president of DEPAUW UNIVERSITY in 1951, which office he held at the time of his death. In 1948 he was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. He was the author of a book, A Man and His God, and various articles for periodicals. He was an interesting and pleasing speaker, of a strong dynamic type. He died at Traverse City, Mich., June 8, 1962.

HUMPHREY, JAMES L. (1828-1910), American missionary to INDIA. He, with Mrs. Humphrey and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Pierce, constituted the first quartet of missionaries to join WILLIAM BUTLER in the mission to India. They sailed from New York on June 1, 1857 and arrived in CALCUTTA, September 22. Because of the disturbed condition of the country, they remained five and a half months in Calcutta to study Hindustani. When the Sepoy rebellion ended, Butler went to Delhi to cash a bill of exchange. From Meerut, soon after Christmas, he wrote to Humphrey and Pierce to meet him at Agra. Arriving there on March 11, they received from British officials quarters in a building connected with the Taj Mahal, and there the superintendent and his new colleagues held services of prayer, praise, and planning for the work to which God had called them. They soon proceeded to Naini Tal. In September, Humphrey preached his first sermon in Hindustani. In October, the cornerstone of the first M. E. Church in India was laid by the heroic British layman, Sir Henry Ramsey.

At the first annual meeting of the mission Humphrey was appointed to BAREILLY. He preached often in the bazaar and gave much attention to the holding of worship services and to the organization and administration of schools. He and Mrs. Humphrey participated in every phase of mission work—evangelism, boys' and girls' schools, orphanages, Bible translation, publishing, missionary education in the homeland, theological education, music, and medical service. Mrs. Humphrey made rich contributions to the music of the church. She translated some hymns, and prepared the copy for the M. E. hymn-book to be published in India.

He was so impressed by the need of the people for medical treatment, and by the attention Jesus gave to healing, that during his furlough, extended for the purpose, he studied medicine and thereafter combined preaching, teaching, and healing in a remarkable ministry. Henry Ramsey then placed the central hospital in Naini Tal and three rural dispensaries under Humphrey, the government providing the medicine and the staff. A Hindu, the deputy commissioner in Kumaun, suggested that he train some women in midwifery and diseases of women and children. The civil surgeon objected, but the Annual Conference approved. The governor thought it was worth trying. Henry Ramsey promised financial backing. Humphrey decided upon a coeducational effort and admitted a class of ten women and six men. After approximately eighteen months, the trainees were examined by a government committee, one member of which was the provincial director general of hospitals. All were awarded certificates. The women were authorized to "practice as midwives," and to undertake to treat fractures, dislocations, and ordinary diseases. Both men and women were readily employed by the government or the mission. The most decisive result was the proof afforded that Indian women, including representatives of the most backward elements in the population, were able to receive medical education and through it to serve the national welfare. This result made possible the great work that was to follow when the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M. E. Church brought CLARA SWAIN to India, and she opened at Bareilly the first hospital for women and children in India. Humphrey died in the United States, Sept. 5, 1910.

HUMPHREY, JOHN D. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

HUMPHREYS, GIDEON IRELAND (1881-1963), American M. P. educator and religious leader, president of HIGH POINT COLLEGE, was a native of Elton Head Manor, Maryland, born on Nov. 5, 1881. He was a graduate of WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE and WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY and held the D.D. and LL.D. degrees from Western Maryland College. He served pastorates in M. P. churches in BALTIMORE and Salisbury, Md.; and in WASHINGTON, D.C.; and was for three years president of the MARYLAND ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church. He later served as president of the General Board of Education of his denomination. He was a member of the UNITING CONFERENCE in 1939 at Kansas City and served on various boards and committees in both the M. P. Church and The Methodist Church.

In 1930 he accepted the presidency of High Point College, which was striving to survive the economic depression that had then paralyzed the nation's economy. "His shrewd business management and his sincerity inspired confidence. Not only did he keep the college alive during those difficult days, but during the nineteen years that he served as its president he saw the student enrollment grow from three hundred to above eight hundred. He saw a tremendous expansion in its physical facilities, and when he retired from the presidency the college was completely free of indebtedness. In a very real sense this college stands today as a monument to his faith, courage and leadership, and to the loyal cooperation of those who were associated with him during this period of financial struggle." After the unification of the major Methodist churches, Humphreys became a member of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. Upon his retirement in 1949, he moved to Gainesville, Fla., where he died in 1963.

HUMPHREYS, JOSEPH (1720- ?), early British lay preacher was born at Burford, Oxfordshire. His father was a Dissenting minister there for nearly thirty years. Joseph was educated at Fairford Grammar School, Gloucester, and at a Dissenting Academy in LONDON. In 1737 he became a member of the Independent Church there, whose minister was John Guye (1680-1761). In June 1738, he began to preach, and in May 1739, came under the spell of GEORGE WHITEFIELD, whom he heard preach at Kennington Common. He professed conversion under Whitefield, extended his preaching activity to the Academy—in a large dancing room—and formed a Religious Society of some 140 members. By his own account, his enthusiasm led to his expulsion from the Academy on Dec. 25, 1739. He found refuge in J. Eames' Academy, Moorfields, and while continuing his studies there gave pastoral oversight to the Religious Societies of Deptford, Greenwich and Ratcliffe. He records under the date Sept. 1, 1740: "I began to preach at the FOUNDERY in London, to Mr. Wesley's congregation, and many a powerful opportunity there was. In the private society also we had many sweet meetings. At this time, I had a very great intimacy with the Rev. Mr. John Wesley. We were together almost continually night and day. There were many things very exemplary in him—worthy, indeed, of every minister's and every Christian's imitation. But on account of some important doctrines of grace wherein we differed, I was obliged, on April 25, 1741, to separate from him." Humphreys had in fact become a Calvinist, and sided with Whitefield against Wesley in the controversy on Free Grace. He became a contributor to John Lewis' penny paper, The Weekly History, founded as a Calvinist organ at this period, and on Jan. 5, 1743, together with Whitefield, DANIEL ROWLANDS, HOWELL HARRIS and JOHN CENNICK, he shared in the formal constitution of WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISM. He published in 1742 a pamphlet entitled, An Account of Joseph Humphreys' Experience of the Work of Grace upon his Heart, which Wesley apparently read nearly half a century later. Wesley records in the Journal for Sept. 9, 1790: "I read over the experience of Joseph Humphreys, the first lay preacher that assisted me in England in the year 1738. From his own mouth I learn that he was perfected in love, and so continued for at least a twelvemonth. Afterwards he turned Calvinist and joined Mr. Whitefield, and published an invective against my brother and me in the newspaper. In a while he renounced Mr. Whitefield, and was ordained a Presbyterian minister. At last he received Episcopal ordination. He then scoffed at inward religion, and, when reminded of his own experience, replied, "That was one of the foolish things which I wrote in the time of my madness!" The prima facie claim of Humphreys as the prototype of Wesley's lay preachers must be treated with reserve, since Humphreys (writing in 1742) dates his own preaching for Wesley from 1740, whereas Wesley's dating (1738) is the recollection of an old man written in 1790. Humphreys appears never to have been a Methodist, and the contenders for the title of first Methodist Lay Preacher would seem to be John Cennick and THOMAS MAXFIELD.

HUNGARY is a "People's Republic" within the Soviet sphere of interest. It is bordered on the west by AUSTRIA, on the north by CZECHOSLOVAKIA, on the northeast by the Ukrainian Republic of the USSR, on the east by Rumania, and on the south by YUGOSLAVIA. The area is 85,918 square miles; the population 10,295,000 (1969). The population of Budapest, the capital city, is estimated at 2,000,000 (1970). Other important towns are Miskolc (180,000), Debrecen (160,000), Pecs (140,000), and Szeged (130,000). About two thirds of the population of Hungary belong to the Roman Catholic Church. Protestants include members of the Reformed Church (1,954,000), Lutherans (432,000), and Baptists (14,000).

METHODIST HEADQUARTERS, BUDAPEST

The work of the Methodist Church in Hungary began in that section of the country which now is a part of Yugoslavia, in the Batschka. German-speaking inhabitants had received Methodist periodicals and wrote to the Methodist minister in Vienna, Austria, asking him to come and preach to them. The work began to prosper when F. H. OTTO MELLE (the later German bishop) went to Srbrobran, a town with about 15,000 inhabitants, and preached there in German. Other ministers followed, and the work expanded. During the winter of 1904 it first became possible to have services in the Hungarian language.

In 1905 the first successful attempt was made to have meetings in Budapest. In 1907 the work of Austria-Hungary was organized as a district within the North Germany Annual Conference. In 1908 it became a separate mission. A good step forward was taken when, in 1916, it was possible, with the help of American friends and in spite of the war, to purchase the beautiful house at Felsőerősor 5 in Budapest.

After the First World War and the collapse of the Hapsburg monarchy, it was necessary to organize the Hungarian work as a separate mission. With the exception of the Budapest circuit, all the circuits were in the new Yugoslavian state or in Austria. But under the efficient leadership of Martin Funk the work grew anew. In 1927 the statistical report showed four churches and eighteen other buildings, thirteen ministers, 779 members, and twenty-three Sunday schools with 483 children.

In 1947, after the Second World War, the church was recognized by the state government as the autonomous Methodist Church in Hungary. This could not stop friendly relations to world Methodism, especially with the GENEVA episcopal area. Part of the property of the church was confiscated. They now receive government subsidies under agreement which allow freedom of worship, but the anti-religious propaganda is intensive.

During and after the Second World War, about half of the church members had to leave the country or left voluntarily. But a real religious awakening filled the ranks anew. Eight of the present ten ministers were converted and called into the ministry after the war. The ministers get their training at the Reformed Theological Academy. One of them received his at the Methodist Theological Seminary in Klosterlausnitz, East Germany.

Since the war the work is being done mostly in the Hungarian language. The German-speaking mother church in Budapest was dissolved. Since 1943 three new circuits were organized. Ten ministers, two of them women, proclaim the Gospel to about 2,000 members. The attendance at the services is at present increasing. The work among the youth is only possible in the form of "Divine services for young people," but confirmation classes are possible and are held.

Hungary Provisional Annual Conference. Administratively the Methodist work in Hungary has been administered first—as stated above—as a district within the North Germany Annual Conference. Then in 1920 the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church established it as the Hungary Mission, with Bishop JOHN NUELSEN presiding. In 1924 the work was reorganized as the Hungary Mission Conference. At a later date it became the Hungary Provisional Annual Conference and as such it is listed in the 1968 Book of Discipline (UMC).

This conference is administered as a part of the Geneva area within the CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN EUROPE CEN-TRAL CONFERENCE. After the General Conference of 1956 allowed women to be received into annual conference membership, Bishop FERDINAND SIGG ordained five ministers as deacons, including one woman, at a meeting of the Hungary Provisional Conference.

HUNT, AARON (1768-1858), pioneer American preacher who introduced Methodism into parts of New England and New York, was born in Eastchester, Westchester Co., N. Y., on March 28, 1768. When he was nearly seventeen years old, he went to New York City where he was employed as a store clerk. There he prided himself in just dealing and good morals, and generally attended divine worship in the Protestant Episcopal Church. When he was nineteen years old, Hunt heard a Methodist preacher for the first time in the old JOHN STREET CHURCH in New York, and two years later he was converted. In May 1791, he was admitted on trial into the NEW YORK CONFERENCE and appointed to Fairfield Circuit, Conn. He was ordained a DEACON by ASBURY in 1793. The next year Hunt was forced to locate on account of ill health, but he returned to the itinerancy in 1800 and was ordained an ELDER. He located his family on a small farm at Redding, Conn. and gave himself fully to the work of the ministry. At that time, all property belonging to ministers was exempt from taxation. Demands, however, were made upon Hunt. He remonstrated, but paid the tax. The next year he was again taxed because the authorities did not consider a circuit rider to be covered by the statute. Hunt then presented a petition to the State Legislature for himself and his ministerial brethren. The legislators, aware of Hunt's popularity, modified the petition by omitting what pertained to other itinerants and restricted the privilege to himself only, a remarkable concession to his popularity.

In 1802 Hunt was appointed to New London, Conn. The next two years he labored on the New Rochelle Circuit, N. Y., and from 1805-06, he served Forsythe Street Church in New York City. In 1806 Hunt heard of the custom already adopted by the CAMP MEETINGS in the South whereby penitents were summoned to the altar to meet apart from the great congregation. Hunt adopted the procedure (the "altar call") which soon became general, and he is credited with introducing it to the North.

Aaron Hunt is given credit for the compulsory "time limit" in Methodist appointments. According to JAMES BUCKLEY, there was a preacher at Albany whom Asbury did not wish to reappoint there, but the pressure to keep him there was so strong that Asbury felt he must. This being discussed among the brethren, Aaron Hunt was bold enough to suggest to Asbury that the GENERAL CONFERENCE should pass a regulation forbidding the appointment of any minister for a term longer than two years. "So then you would restrict the appointive power," Asbury asked pleasantly enough, but realizing what the suggestion of Hunt really meant.

"Nay, sir," was Hunt's reply, "we would aid its execution, for in the present instance it seems deficient." Asbury made no particular objection, and Hunt with Totten, of the Philadelphia Conference, presented to the next General Conference (1804) a resolution asking for a three year time limit and this was passed. Subsequent General Conferences extended the limit and finally took it off altogether, but the right of the General Conference to pass such a regulation had been admitted and put into effect before 1808.

Hunt remained in the itinerancy until 1823. When he returned to New England as supernumerary, he continued to preach as he was able. Hunt died on April 25, 1858, in Sharon, Conn.

HUNT, AVA F. (1886-), is a retired Methodist missionary with a record of forty-eight years of distinguished service in INDIA. She was born at Erie, Pa., Feb. 23, 1886. She completed high school studies in an academy in EVANSTON, Ill., and was graduated with a B.S. degree from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1909. A year later she went to India, and after two years of teaching in Queen's Hill School at Darjeeling, she was appointed to the CALCUTTA Girls' High School. After that she became principal and, except for a furlough of less than two years, served in that office until her second furlough was due at the end of 1925. Postgraduate study in 1926 brought her a M.A. degree in education from the University of Chicago.

In January 1927, she became a member of the faculty of ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE in the school of Teacher Training, first teaching in the graduate department, where she instructed many young women who have become leaders in the educational upsurge of India's women. She often served as acting principal of the college, first during the illness of a principal, later between the principalships of MARY SHANNON and MRS. PREM NATH DAS, first Indian principal. During the principalship of SARAH CHAKKO, she was vice-principal and acting principal on the frequent occasions when Dr. Chakko's ecumenical responsibilities took her away from India. On the death of Dr. Chakko, in January 1954, Miss Hunt again accepted the call to take charge, and she served effectively until Evangeline Thillyampalam became the eighth principal in July 1955. Miss Hunt returned to America in 1957, and after serving the BOARD OF MISSIONS in deputation work and varied assignments, retired in September 1957, to Robincroft, Pasadena, Calif.

HUNT, JOHN (1812-1848), British Methodist Missionary pioneer to Fiji, was a countryman, born near Lincoln, England, June 13, 1812. He became a farm laborer at Swinderby, where he was converted and began to preach. Already his spiritual gifts were evident, and he was accepted for the Wesleyan ministry in 1835. He immediately offered for work overseas. That year he was sent to Hoxton Theological Institution, opened the previous year. With no educational advantages, Hunt showed himself a fine scholar, and his quest for Christian perfection marked him out from even the best of his contemporaries. After marrying Hannah Summers, one of the noblest of missionary wives, Hunt left for Fiji in 1838 to join DAVID CARGILL and WILLIAM CROSS, who had begun the mission there in 1835. Hunt was stationed at Rewa in 1839, Somosomo from 1839-42, and Viwa from 1842-48, becoming chairman of the district in 1842. Cannibalism was found at its worst in Fiji, and the Hunts had to witness violence and feasting which their protests could not avert. His preaching and personal life brought a new spirit to the islands and began the conquest of Christ over cannibalism. He was a powerful preacher, a heroic missionary, a scholar who gave Fiji its first New Testament, a lover of the Fijians. Above all, he was a saint of God, as his Letters on Entire Sanctification (1848) clearly show. He died in Fiji, Oct. 4, 1848.

HUNT, L. CLARENCE (1873-1948), American Evangelical Congregational minister, served as president of ALBRIGHT COLLEGE at Myerstown, Pa., 1915-23. Following graduation from DICKINSON COLLEGE (1897) and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (1904), he was licensed to preach by the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the United Evangelical Church. Later he transferred to the East Pennsylvania Conference and served as pastor in a number of their churches. He received the D.D. degree from Dickinson College. When the United Evangelical-Evangelical Association merger took place in 1922, he remained with the minority which later organized the EVANGELICAL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. He occupied a position of leadership in that denomination heading the Board of Missions and Board of Education. His kindly Christian spirit, backed up by educational advantages, caused his fellowmen to look up to him for spiritual leadership. Hunt was born July 30, 1873 in York County, Pa. and died Aug. 18, 1948 at Lititz, Pa. His body was laid to rest in a cemetery in Mt. Joy, Pa.

ROBERT S. WILSON

HUNTER, ANDREW (1813-1902), American clergyman, and southern church leader, was born in Ballymony, County Antrim, IRELAND, Dec. 6, 1813. During childhood the family settled in PENNSYLVANIA, where he grew up and joined the Methodist Church, Jan. 31, 1833. He became a schoolteacher at Manchester, Mo. in 1835, and preached his first sermon near Muskogee, Okla., Jan. 11, 1836. His first appointment was to a missionary school in November 1836, there to begin a ministry of sixty-six years. He never located, and never transferred. His ministry more nearly covered the state of ARKANSAS than perhaps that of any other man. He was first a presiding elder at the age of twenty-nine and was elected to go to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1844 when he was thirty. He served practically every important station in what is now the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE, many circuits, and was probably more often a presiding elder than any other man in Methodist history. He was a delegate to twelve sessions of the quadrennial General Conference, a record greater than that of any other man in Arkansas history. Twice after he was retired was he elected a delegate from his conference. He was twice appointed a member of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, but was too feeble to attend the session in 1901.

During the war between the states, when LITTLE ROCK and a good part of Arkansas was occupied by Federal Troops, President Lincoln appointed Isaac Murphy as Governor of Arkansas, and a legislature was elected, with Hunter one of the senators. This legislature elected him U.S. senator, but the Congress would not seat the senators thus elected from Arkansas.

In 1849, though only thirty-six years old, he was elected to preside over the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE in the absence of a bishop. He again was so honored in 1859, 1862, 1863, 1865—five times in all. He received the D.D. degree by some small and short-lived college, about 1870. The name of the college is unknown, but that matters little, as Andrew Hunter honored the degree more than the degree honored him. He retired in 1888 and died June 3, 1902.

HUNTER, JAMES (1767-1831), American pioneer minister and leader in the establishment of the M. P. Church in N. C. in the 1820's, was born in VIRGINIA on May 16, 1767. In early manhood he moved to HALIFAX COUNTY, N. C., where he was received into the M. E. Church in 1792. On Dec. 14, 1797, he was married to Martha Elizabeth Crowell, sister-in-law of HENRY BRADFORD. He "located" in 1810.

He early became identified with the movement in his area for more liberal principles in church government and actively supported The Wesleyan Repository. He was present at the first meeting of the ROANOKE UNION SOCIETY on Nov. 6, 1824, which met at Sampson's Meeting House, Halifax County, N. C., and at the second session of the society, held later that month, Hunter was elected secretary pro-tem. In April 1828, he was summoned to trial by the M. E. authorities for his membership in this society and for patronizing The Mutual Rights. On Dec. 19-20, 1828, he attended the organizational meeting of the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church at WHITAKER'S CHAPEL near Enfield, N. C. He and Henry Bradford were assigned to serve the Roanoke Circuit in 1829.

During some forty years as a Methodist minister, James Hunter served as a traveling preacher, presiding elder and member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE. He died on Dec. 5, 1831.

HUNTER, WILLIAM (1728-1797), British Methodist, was one of JOHN WESLEY'S preachers. He was born in Northumberland. As a young man he was deeply affected by the preaching of CHRISTOPHER HOPPER, and he became an itinerant in 1767. John Wesley said of Hunter, in a letter dated July 25, 1774, "I had conceived him to be not the best, though not the worst, of our preachers." A short autobiographical account of his conversion and of his experience of Christian perfection is included in The Lives of Early Methodist Preachers (ed., T. Jackson, ii); it was written in 1779. He died at Newhead, Alston Moor, on Aug. 14, 1797.

HUNTER, WILLIAM (1811-1877), preacher and editor, was born in IRELAND, May 26, 1811. In 1817 the family emigrated and settled near York, Pa. He was educated at Madison College, Uniontown, Pa. Licensed to preach in 1832, he supplied the Blairsville Circuit for a year, and was admitted on trial in the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE in 1833. In 1836 he was named editor of the Pittsburgh Conference Journal, the forerunner of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, and served four years. Later, by election of the GENERAL CONFERENCE, he had two more tours of duty as editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, 1844-52 and 1872-76. Between his periods of service as an editor, he was assigned to districts and pastorates in WEST VIRGINIA and to a professorship of Hebrew and biblical literature in ALLEGHENY COLLEGE. The section in Whedon's Commentary on the Book of Proverbs was compiled by Hunter. He published several books, chiefly devotional in nature. A hymnal entitled Select Melodies (1838), which included some songs written by him, went through several editions and sold more than 150,000 copies. He was a member of the commission which revised the hymnal of the M. E. Church in 1876, and two of his compositions are included in that work. One of them, "My heavenly home is bright and fair" with its refrain, "I'm going home to die no more," was a popular gospel song for many years.

Hunter was a delegate to the 1844, '52, '60, and '72 General Conferences. When he failed of reelection as editor in 1876, he became pastor at Cadiz, Ohio, EAST OHIO CONFERENCE. A year later he was appointed to the Cleveland District, but died suddenly a month afterward, Oct. 18, 1877.

COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON

HUNTINGDON, COUNTESS OF (Selina) (1707-1791), called by Horace Walpole "the patriarchess of the Methodists," was born Aug. 24, 1707. She was converted under the influence of her sister-in-law, LADY MARGARET HASTINGS. She joined the FETTER LANE SOCIETY and supported the WESLEYS. Later she was even more closely associated with GEORGE WHITEFIELD, having embraced Calvinistic views after correspondence with HOWELL HARRIS. On the death of her husband in 1746, she devoted herself unreservedly to the work of the revival, opening her LONDON home for evangelistic services. Several prominent Anglican Evangelicals served as her chaplains, and from 1760 onward chapels were built which eventually formed the Countess of Huntingdon's connection. In 1768 she founded a college at TREVECKA for the training of preachers, which in 1792 was removed to Cheshunt and then to Cambridge. In 1781 her chapels were registered as dissenting places of worship, after two of her chaplains had been prohibited in the consistorial court from preaching in a converted theater. On her death, June 17, 1791, the connection was maintained by a trust appointed in her will.

HUNTINGDON COLLEGE, Montgomery, Ala., began its work in 1854 as Tuskegee Female College. The property was purchased in 1872 by the ALABAMA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, and the name changed to the Alabama Conference Female College. It continued at Tuskegee until 1909, when it relocated in Montgomery as the Woman's College of Alabama. In 1935 it was named Huntington College in honor of Selina, the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON, of Bath, England, one of the first persons of noble birth to join the Methodist movement. In 1946 it became a coeducational institution. Degrees offered are the B.A., B.S. and B.M. (Music). The governing board has twenty-four members, twelve ministers and twelve laymen, elected by the two Methodist conferences in Alabama.

HUNTINGTON, DEWITT CLINTON (1830-1912), American minister and educator, born in Townsend, Vt., April 27, 1830; he began preaching soon after his conversion at seventeen and was admitted to the VERMONT CONFERENCE in 1851. He transferred to the GENESEE CONFERENCE, New York, 1857, where he served several pastorates, including Rochester and Syracuse; was presiding elder three years; transferred to the NEBRASKA CONFERENCE in 1891, to serve Trinity, LINCOLN. After two years as presiding elder of Beatrice District he became chancellor and professor of Bible literature at NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1898. After ten years, at the age of seventy-eight, he resigned as chancellor but continued as professor of Bible literature until his death, Feb. 8, 1912.

He was a graduate of Genesee College and SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY in New York. Nine times he was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, twice elected delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST Conference and once the fraternal delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South.

He was the author of the gospel hymn: "O Think of the Home Over There"; and of three books, Sin and Holiness, Half Century Messages, and Is the Lord Among Us? Many of his sermons were printed in leaflet form.

HUNTINGTON, WILLIAM EDWARDS (1844-1930), American minister, educator, and university president, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., on July 30, 1844. He was brought up on a farm, for which, in retrospect, he was grateful. The Civil War broke out when he was seventeen and he enlisted, and served until its close. Then he enrolled in the University of Wisconsin. Upon graduating there he entered BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY to prepare for the Methodist ministry. After graduating with the degree of S.T.B., he spent a year in advance study at the Universities of Leipzig and Goetthegen, in GERMANY. Then he spent eight years in the pastorate.

In 1882, at thirty-eight years of age, Huntington was appointed dean of the BOSTON UNIVERSITY College of Liberal Arts, in which position he served twenty-two years. Then, in 1904, he was elected president of Boston University, which office he held with distinction until 1911. On his retirement he was appointed dean of the graduate school, where he served six years more. After his final retirement, he reflected upon his early self-dedication to the Methodist ministry, and said: "I look back upon my 35 years of service in Boston University as truly a time of ministering as were the years in the pastorate."

HUNTINGTON, WEST VIRGINIA, U.S.A. Methodism penetrated southwestern WEST VIRGINIA, where Huntington is located, in 1803. The Guyandotte Circuit, which included the region, was organized in 1804 with ASA SHINN as the preacher in charge. It is believed that Shinn built a church in Guyandotte (now a part of Huntington) in 1804. The Guyandotte Circuit reported twenty-five members that year. THOMAS A. MORRIS, later bishop, traveled the circuit in 1816. Before the division of the M. E. Church in 1844, the Kanawha District, which included the work in southwest West Virginia, was in the KENTUCKY and OHIO CONFERENCES at different times. The Guyandotte Circuit reported 358 members in 1824 and 1,208 white and 102 colored members in 1843. Because many members adhered South in 1845, the membership of the Guyandotte Circuit (ME) that year dropped to 400 whites and fifty Negroes, and in 1864 the total membership was seventy. During the Civil War, Captain EARL CRANSTON, later bishop, used the M. E. Church in Guyandotte as his headquarters. After the war the M. E. Church gradually resumed its work in the region. In 1870 the Guyandotte District was formed, and in 1872 Guyandotte and Huntington became stations. Before unification in 1939, the M. E. Church built three churches in Guyandotte. First Church, Huntington was organized in 1872, and reported seventy members and sixteen probationers the next year. Its first building was completed in 1875, and its second, costing about $15,000, was dedicated in 1891. The present sanctuary of First Church dates from 1914. An education building was completed in 1960. In 1892 a second church called Seventh Avenue was established in Huntington, and the next year it had 113 members. The WASHINGTON CONFERENCE (Negro) had one congregation of 125 members in Huntington in 1939. At unification in 1939, the M. E. Church had nine churches in Huntington, including Guyandotte, with a total of 4,622 members.

The Kentucky Conference (MES) organized a Guyandotte District in 1846, and the next year it reported 359 white and 14 Negro members. In 1849 the Southern Church erected a brick church in Guyandotte. During the Civil War the Union Army used the building for storing supplies, and it burned. Later the United States Government paid damages. A frame church was erected in 1870. The M. E. Church, South built two churches in Guyandotte before unification.

In 1872 the WESTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (MES) formed the Huntington District, and Huntington appeared for the first time in the appointments. First Church (MES) Huntington was organized in 1871. Both Guyandotte and Huntington became stations in 1880, and the next year the one reported ninety members and the other sixty-five. First Church, Huntington, grew to 307 members by 1888, and the next year Second Church (MES) was organized. J. W. Johnson served as pastor of First Church, 1888-89, and twenty years later its name was changed to Johnson Memorial. U. V. W. DARLINGTON, pastor of Johnson Memorial, 1909-13, was elected bishop in 1918. At unification in 1939, the M. E. Church, South had six churches in Huntington, including Guyandotte, with 3,874 members.

In 1970 the fifteen United Methodist churches in Huntington reported 10,143 members, property valued at $6,778,580 and $727,401 raised for all purposes. The two largest congregations were Johnson Memorial and First Church with 2,137 and 1,359 members respectively.

Johnson Memorial Church, a former M. E. Church, South, congregation and the largest United Methodist Church in the state, traces its beginning, according to tradition, to visits made by FRANCIS ASBURY to the Guyandotte region between 1788 and 1804. In the latter year the Guyandotte Circuit was formed and ASA SHINN traveled it. Methodism grew in Guyandotte. After the division of 1844, the members who adhered South built a church on land donated by Robert Holderby. During the Civil War Union troops used the building and it burned while in their hands. The congregation later recovered damages from the Federal government.

In 1866 members of the Guyandotte church who lived west of the town acquired Marshall Academy, the forerunner of Marshall University, and used it jointly with the Presbyterians as a place of worship. In 1870 the two groups built a chapel at Holderby's Grove, and in time the Presbyterians withdrew. First Church, Huntington (later Johnson Memorial), was organized in 1871. In 1878 the congregation, desiring a larger and more conveniently located building, rented Crider's Hall in the downtown area. In 1880 Huntington was made a station appointment. The next year when it had sixty-five members, a building was erected. J. W. Johnson, pastor 1888-89, for whom the church is named, was planning a new edifice for the present location when he accidentally lost his life. The building was completed in 1892 when the church had 254 members. Though damaged by fire, the structure was repaired and used until 1913 when another new building was completed. In 1900 the church had 286 members, and thereafter it grew steadily; its membership reached or surpassed 500 in 1908, 1,000 in 1914, and 2,000 in 1939. In 1935 the church building was destroyed by fire, but a new one rose in its place in 1937. In 1962 the church facilities, except the sanctuary, were renovated at a cost of more than $250,000. U. V. W. DARLINGTON, pastor 1909-13, became bishop in 1918.

In 1970 Johnson Memorial Church had three ministers appointed by the conference and a paid staff of several lay workers. It reported 2,137 members, property valued at $990,000 and $96,208 raised for all purposes during the year.

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA, U.S.A. Methodism in Huntsville dates to 1803 when the first settlers arrived in this area before the land was ceded to the United States by the Chickasaw and Cherokee Indian nations.

First Church is the outgrowth of a Society established by John S. Ford, an itinerant Methodist minister of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. This Society became a station when a church was built on the extreme western border of the town in 1821. In 1832, the present lot, in the heart of the city, was purchased where First Methodist continues to grow with the city.

In 1840, N. Pitts Owens established a station at Ditto's Landing (Whitesburg), on the banks of the Tennessee River. When river traffic failed to develop as anticipated, this church moved five miles north to be near the railroad at Farley. The original church served the Farley community from 1906 to 1961. The inclusion of this region in the metropolitan area resulted in the present Latham Memorial Church.

McDonell's Chapel was built in 1856, also under the guidance of Owens. The government installation of Redstone Arsenal in 1940 necessitated the relocation of this church, but it continues to serve Methodists in the original neighborhood.

Because of the need of a church in the mill district east of Huntsville, the First Church bought land from the Huntsville Cotton Mills in 1892 for the sum of $1.00 and established Epworth Mission. In 1921, this property was deeded to Epworth Church. Because of the extended barriers of Huntsville, the church moved farther east in order to accommodate the growing congregation.

In 1896, Monte Sano (Mountain of Health) was a summer resort which attracted people from all parts of the surrounding country. Consequently Monte Sano Union Chapel was built, and thus became a Methodist church in 1943. Reorganization in 1957 created the present Monte Sano Church.

St. Paul Church, in the western section of Huntsville, was established in 1900 to meet the needs of Methodists in the village of Merrimac Cotton Mill. The church moved in 1963 to a more central location and enlarged its facilities to meet the needs of that community.

Land was acquired on East Holmes Street in 1905 and Holmes Street Church had its beginning. The enlarged church remains in the same location.

With the assistance of Rowe Knitting Company, West Huntsville Cotton Mills, and Low Manufacturing Company, the West Huntsville Church was built in 1907. This church has continued in the same location, growing with the community.

Another mill church was built in 1925 in Lincoln Village. In 1961, it was reorganized and became the Wesley Methodist Church.

The Esther Class of the First Methodist Church established a mission on Wells Avenue in 1937. This church was deeded to the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE in 1957 and became Esther Chapel.

The growth of Huntsville due to the government installation of Redstone Arsenal, necessitated the building of churches in various residential sections.

Trinity Church was built on Airport Road in southeast Huntsville in 1956. It has had a remarkable growth within the past ten years and the latest statistics indicate a membership of 2,284.

Lakewood Church originated in 1959 on Mastin Lake Road in northwest Huntsville. Highlands Church on Broadmor Road, Northwest, was erected in 1960. In 1963, University Church on University Avenue, West, was established. The latest congregation (1965) is Valley Methodist in Joines Valley, Southeast.

There are the fifteen Methodist churches in Huntsville, within the North Alabama Conference of The United Methodist Church.

A FREE METHODIST CHURCH congregation was organized in 1964. The church is located on Mastin Lake Road. A SOUTHERN METHODIST congregation was organized in 1965. The church is on Whitesburg Drive.

The Negro churches in Huntsville date from 1866, when the GENERAL CONFERENCE recommended that "pastoral charges" for Negroes be organized, "wherever they prefer it." Immediately, First Church acquired a lot on Pump Street for the sum of $1.00 and built the first Negro church.

In 1868, First Church bought a church building which the Episcopal Church had discarded. This was moved to Jefferson Street and became the Lakewood Church, which is still in use. Lowe's Chapel is located on Holmes Avenue, West, Center Grove is on Jordan Lane, East. These churches are in the Alabama Conference of the Central Jurisdiction which is now in process of dissolution. These churches are to become a part of the North Alabama Conference of The United Methodist Church.

Phillip's Chapel on Church is a C.M.E. Church. St. John's on Church Street is an A.M.E. Church.

First Church. White settlers began very early to move into that region of the MISSISSIPPI Territory which was to become a part of the state of ALABAMA. In 1805 John Hunt moved from Tennessee and settled in the beautiful fields in the bend of the Tennessee River, where one day a thriving city would rise. He built a log cabin by the side of "Big Spring"—so named by the Indians whom he found there. That spring is still pointed out to visitors. In a short while the city of Huntsville, named for John Hunt, was on its way.

The people who moved into this North Alabama section were religiously minded. Many were Methodists. JAMES GWINN was appointed by the WESTERN CONFERENCE as a missionary to this section as early as 1808. He served the Flint Circuit in 1812, and Huntsville was on that circuit. THOMAS STRINGFIELD was appointed to the circuit in 1821. Then in 1822 Huntsville became a station, and Stringfield served it in 1822-23. First Church has become one of the great churches of the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE. In 1970 it had a membership of 2,723.

Madison County, of which Huntsville is the county seat, was most favorable for farming in its early days—especially the raising of cotton. It was the first town in the South to open its doors to textile mills, having at one time ten mills in the county. For many years the Huntsville growth was gradual. In 1950 Huntsville's city limits encompassed less than five square miles. By 1970 it had grown to 136,102, the third largest city in Alabama, as it had become the "Rocket City"—the home of the Huntsville and Redstone Arsenals. Indeed the coming of the Redstone Arsenal and the bringing in of scores of government engineers and scientists, coupled with the research and actual building and planning for space age rocketry today going on, has been responsible in a large measure for the recent great expansion of the city.

Huntsville is the seat of a district of the North Alabama Conference (SEJ) and of a district of the Central Alabama Conference (CJ). It presently reports fifteen Methodist churches in Huntsville the city, with 11,390 members registered in the district. First Church, Huntsville reports a membership of 2,723, while Trinity, which has grown very rapidly of late years, has 2,284.

GEORGE F. COOPER

HURLBUT, JESSE LYMAN (1843-1930), American minister, author, educator, and one of the founders of Chautauqua Institution, was born in New York City, Feb. 15, 1843, and was a descendent of Thomas Hurlbut of Scotland who settled in Connecticut in 1635. In 1864, he graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (Conn.) and was admitted into the NEWARK CONFERENCE on trial in 1865. During the seven years following, he transformed the Sunday school into an educationally effective Bible school. This attracted the attention of JOHN H. VINCENT, executive secretary of the Sunday school department of the M. E. Church, and Hurlbut became his associate. With others, they organized the EPWORTH LEAGUE and Hurlbut became its first corresponding secretary. Then Vincent, Hurlbut, and a layman LEWIS MILLER, who was the father of Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, founded the Chautauqua movement, a pioneering adventure in bringing religious knowledge and general culture to the American people through institutes which offered a program of class instruction, lectures, drama and concerts. Hurlbut wrote The Story of Chautauqua, and is honored by a bronze statue in the Hall of Fame in Chautauqua, N. Y.

A prolific writer, he was the author of A Handy Bible Encyclopedia, The Story of the Christian Church, Studies in the Four Gospels, Sunday Half-hours with Great Preachers, Our Church, What Methodists Believe and How They Work, Teacher Training Lessons, and a vast number of articles in the field of religious education. His best known work, The Story of the Bible, published in 1904, has gone through many editions and been translated into many languages. Few books have had more popular appeal or exerted a wider influence. It is still published. In 1901, Hurlbut returned to the pastorate and served churches in Morristown, South Orange, and Bloomfield, N. J. After serving for two years as district superintendent of Newark District (1914-15), he became teacher of English Bible in Centenary Collegiate Institute. He, with Bishop Vincent, was a major figure in changing the educational outlook and methods of the Sunday schools of his time, and in elevating the cultural interests of the American public. To Hurlbut and his wife, née Mary M. Chase, seven children were born. After sixty-five years in the ministry he passed away in Newark, N. J. on Aug. 2, 1930. He is buried in Montclair, N. J.

HENRY L. LAMBDIN

HURST, JOHN (1863-1930), an American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. He received his education at WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY, where he earned the B.D. degree. He was ordained deacon in 1886 in BALTIMORE, Md., and elder in 1887 at Port-au-Prince, Haiti. He was a pastor in the Baltimore Conference and was also presiding elder there. He was elected to the episcopacy in 1912 from the Baltimore Annual Conference. He holds the distinction of having been a member of the staff of the Haitian Embassy in Washington, D. C. ca. 1900.

JOHN F. HURST

HURST, JOHN FLETCHER (1834-1903), American bishop, was born in Salem, Md., Aug. 17, 1834. After graduating from DICKINSON COLLEGE in 1854, he pursued his studies in GERMANY. He returned to the United States in 1858, and was admitted on trial at the first session of the NEWARK ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He preached at Irvington and Passaic, and after being ordained DEACON in 1860, he served Passaic and Fulton Street, Elizabeth, N. J. Elder's orders were granted him in 1862, and he was assigned to the Water Street Charge in Elizabeth.

In 1866 he began a distinguished career as a teacher. For five years he served as principal of the Methodist Theological School in Germany. In 1871 he was teaching at DREW SEMINARY, and after one year was elected president, following President RANDOLPH S. FOSTER, who had been elected bishop. Hurst filled this office until 1880, when he himself was elected bishop of the M. E. Church.

Scholar and administrator, Bishop Hurst worked for higher standards of ministerial training. The Christian Advocate of May 13, 1903 said of him: "Few men knew more of books and authors than did Bishop Hurst." His monumental History of Methodism in six volumes, published by the BOOK CONCERN in 1902, is considered authoritative in many ways.

He died at Cedarcroft, the home of A. B. Browne, in Bethesda, Md., May 4, 1903, and was buried at Rock Creek, Washington, D. C.

FREDERICK G. HUBACH

HURTIK, KARL JAKOB (1870-1947), a Swedish Methodist minister, was born in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), Russia. His father was a Swede and his mother came from FINLAND. He spent some years in his boyhood in Finland, but the family then returned to SWEDEN. He was converted in Oskarshamn in 1886, became a Methodist in Lidköping, and went through the theological school in Uppsala in 1892-95. He served as pastor in Emmaboda-Skruv, Nyköping, and the STOCKHOLM St. Marks Church until 1904, when he was sent by Bishop WILLIAM BURT to take care of the important task as a Methodist minister in HELSINKI, the capital of Finland. He stayed there for thirty-nine years until his retirement in 1943. He died in 1947.

His was not only a long but also a very significant pastorate, as he was a man of great courage and power both physically and spiritually. Already in Emmaboda and Stockholm he had built churches. Two great churches in Helsinki—Emanuel Church, 1907-38, and Christ Church, dedicated in 1928—and three other churches in the neighborhood are lasting monuments to his work. He was a great preacher, gathering crowds to hear the word of God, a spiritual guide for hundreds and thousands, a helper for people in need, both material and spiritual. He founded a children's home, for many years collecting himself all the money needed for the great family, as well as a deaconess institution and a hospital, Konkordia (1928-64). Besides all this he wrote articles and books, and was the editor of the church magazine, Nya Budbäraren, for more than twenty years. He was the recognized leader of Swedish-speaking Methodism in Finland, acting as district superintendent and as superintendent for the Finland Swedish Mission Conference in 1924-31. He visited the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1924 as a superintendent, and was a delegate to that body in 1932 and to that of The Methodist Church after union in 1940.

He was also a strong free-church leader, bravely fighting for the religious rights of the free-church minority in Finland. He identified himself completely with the Methodist work in Finland and its people in years of struggle and need. He was awarded the Order of Finland's Lion. He married an English Methodist, Mabel Wade, in 1899. She died in 1928.

The brother of Karl Hurtig, John Hurtig (1868-1941), was also a Methodist minister in Stockholm. After serving some charges in 1898-1903, he worked as editor of the Swedish Methodist magazine, Scenska Sandebudet, for more than thirty years (1903-37).

HUSTON, ROBERT WILLIAM (1920-), American minister and son of T. Scott and Ruth (Smith) Huston, was born Sept. 9, 1920 in Tacoma, Wash. He received degrees as follows: UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND, A.B. (1949); BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, S.T.B. (1953), Th.D. (1964). He was issued a certificate for studies from the Graduate School of Ecumenical Studies, Bossey, SWITZERLAND (1954). He was married to Miss Frances Henrietta Terry, May 24, 1944.

He was received on trial by the PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE (1949) and ordained DEACON (1950). The NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE ordained him ELDER (1952). For nineteen years he served pastorates in the states of WASHINGTON and MASSACHUSETTS. Then in 1965 he was elected General Secretary, Commission on Ecumenical Affairs for The Methodist Church. In The United Methodist Church he has continued in this office.

Dr. Huston held a number of offices in the New England Conference; and he served on the board of directors, Amherst WESLEY FOUNDATION. He served with the USNR, 1942-45. He presently is located with his office in New York City.

HUSTON-TILLOTSON COLLEGE, Austin, Texas, is a joint enterprise of The United Methodist Church and the United Church of Christ. It was formed in 1952 through the merging of Tillotson College, founded in 1877 by the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church, and Samuel Huston College, established by the WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1900. Both of these institutions were originally founded for the education of Negroes. Degrees given are the B.A. and B.S. The governing board has twenty-eight members, ten elected by the Board of Education of The United Methodist Church, ten by the American Missionary Association, and eight at large.

HUTABARAT, DAVID (1893-1954), a pioneer Batak Methodist worker, was born in Butar, Sumatra, INDONESIA, May 1, 1893. His father, an early convert to Christianity, served as a successful evangelist with the Rhenish Mission.

In 1910 David heard about Methodist work in SINGAPORE and was particularly interested in the Jean Hamilton Training School in that city. With some other young men from his village he set out on foot and walked several days to reach the harbour of Tandjong Balai, from where he sailed to Singapore, where he became a Methodist and a student. Upon graduation he was sent to JAVA to serve with the Methodist Mission. As a very able speaker he was particularly popular with young people. In 1920 he was ordained and became a member of the Annual Conference.

He returned to his native island, Sumatra, in 1921, to become one of the leaders in the newly opened work among the jungle-dwelling Bataks on the East Coast. For thirty-three years he served faithfully as pastor, evangelist and teacher among his own people. Hutabarat was the first Indonesian to be elected secretary of the Annual Conference, and served as such 1944-52. He was one of the very first Bataks to be appointed district superintendent, which happened in the midst of the Indonesian revolution 1945. He was elected delegate to the South Sumatra Central Conference, 1950. At the time of his death he was working on a revised Hymnal in the Batak language. He translated several hymns from English and wrote some hymns, all of them to Western tunes, however.

Pandita David—as he was usually called—served as a Methodist leader among the Indonesian and Chinese people for more than forty years. He died in Tebing Tinggi, Oct. 13, 1954.

HUTABARAT, LUTHER (1893-1959), a leading Batak Methodist minister in Sumatra, Indonesia, was born in Pagar Sinondi on the high plateau of Batakland, Sumatra, Oct. 21, 1893. His parents were new converts to Christianity.

In 1910 his future father-in-law, Lamsana Lumbantobing, who had become a member of the Methodist Church in Singapore, visited Pagar Sinondi and inspired Luther, and several other young men, to seek admission at the Jean Hamilton Training School in Singapore. With this group Luther made the long trip on foot to the nearest harbor and sailed for Singapore, where he became a Methodist, and registered as a student in the Jean Hamilton Training School. After his graduation he was sent to JAVA to work as pastor, teacher and evangelist. When Methodist work in Java was closed down in 1928, he was transferred to Sumatra where he served churches in Kisaran, Tebing Tinggi, Tandjong Balai and Medan. He served as editor of the Methodist paper, Parsemon-anta, for a number of years, edited a revised version of the Batak Methodist Hymnal, was a delegate to the Southeast Asia Central Conference three different times, served as treasurer of the "Central Kas" and was Conference treasurer. He was the very first Batak to be appointed a district superintendent; this happened in the midst of the Indonesian revolution when the last missionary had to leave. He was the Methodist representative on the Indonesian Council of Churches, and was one of the men who held the Methodist Church in Sumatra together during the revolution. After the revolution he built a new Batak Church in Medan, which later has been named "The Luther Christolina Methodist Church." His wife and very able co-worker, Christolina, was killed in an accident June 15, 1959, and two weeks later Luther's years of service came to an end. He died June 29, 1959. He and his family stand as able pioneers for Methodist work in Indonesia.

HUTCHINSON, FORNEY (1875-1957), American preacher and evangelistic city pastor of notable power, was born at Center Point, Ark., Sept. 28, 1875, where he joined the Methodist Church at the age of eleven. He was licensed to preach in 1895, and immediately went to HENDRIX COLLEGE, where he graduated with an A.B. degree in 1899. In the same year he joined the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE (MES). He was admitted into full connection in 1901.

Following a pastorate at Hunter Memorial Methodist Church in LITTLE ROCK, he went to VANDEBILT UNIVERSITY, where he received the B.D. degree in 1905. He returned to Hunter Memorial Church, and during this pastorate was married to Miss Bertie Anderson. He then served Central Methodist Church, Fayetteville, and the First Methodist Churches of Little Rock and Texarkana.

Hutchinson was appointed to St. Luke's in OKLAHOMA CITY, where he served with distinction from 1918-32. During these years he was one of the state's great forces for spiritual uplift and zeal. His wide influence reached into educational and political circles. In 1930 at the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, he was being put in strong nomination for the episcopacy but withdrew his name from the balloting. He then transferred to the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE to become pastor of Mt. Vernon Place Church in WASHINGTON, D. C. for three years. Returning to OKLAHOMA, he served Boston Avenue in TULSA, where he was much beloved and respected. After a sabbatical year, he closed his ministry at St. Paul's in Shawnee. Hutchinson died in 1957 in Tulsa. During his ministry thousands were brought into the church and tens of thousands were blessed by his preaching, while multitudes felt the warmth and power of his heart.

HUTCHINSON, PAUL (1890-1956), American editor and author, was born in Madison, N. J., Aug. 10, 1890, the son of Charles X. and Annie M. (Petrie) Hutchinson. His father was a minister who served in the NEWARK and GENESEE CONFERENCES. Paul was educated at Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, N. J. (1907), Lafayette College (Ph.B., 1911), and GARRETT (B.D., 1915). The honorary degrees of D.D., Litt.D., and L.H.D. were conferred on him by several institutions. He married Agnes Mitchell, June 24, 1915, and they had four children.

While still a seminary student, Hutchinson served as assistant editor of the Epworth Herald in Chicago (1914-16), and went on to become one of the most distinguished religious editors of his day. He went to CHINA as a missionary, and immediately became editor of the China Christian Advocate in Shanghai (1916-21). Other positions which he held were: executive secretary, China Centenary Movement (MEC); secretary, Epworth League in China; and chairman, China Christian Literature Council (1920-21); employee in publicity department, Board of Missions, M. E. Church in the United States (1922-24); managing editor of the Christian Century, 1924-47; and editor, 1947-56. During Hutchinson's connection with the Christian Century, its circulation rose to 40,000 with subscribers in every part of the world. As an editor, he endeavored to make religion relevant to social conditions and to national and world affairs. A prolific writer, he produced twelve books and co-authored two more. He became widely known for The Story of Methodism (1926) which was written in collaboration with HALFORD E.

LUCCOCK. Among his more important books were: Guide to Mission Stations in Eastern China (1919); The Spread of Christianity (1922); China's Real Revolution (1924); The United States of Europe (1929); Men Who Made the Churches (1930); The Ordeal of Western Religion (1933); and From Victory to Peace (1943). He died in Beaumont, Texas, April 15, 1956.

HUTCHINSON, KANSAS, U.S.A. Trinity Church, because of its central location and fine facilities, is a favorite meeting place for Methodists of the Kansas Area. Trinity Church had its beginning in 1923 when over 400 members of First Church in Hutchinson, in order to make possible a new and needed Methodist church, left the mother church to found Trinity.

In March of 1923, A. E. Henry was appointed to be the pastor of this new congregation. On September 1, of that year, a call went out for volunteers to give money and labor for the construction of a temporary church building. From September 24-28, 250 people working in groups of fifty, under the direction of Curtis E. Peugh, erected a frame building to house the congregation.

On Nov. 4, 1925, the contract was let for the construction of a permanent sanctuary unit. It was dedicated Oct. 3, 1926 by Bishop E. L. WALDORE. On Sept. 24, 1929, the contract was awarded for the erecting of an educational unit. Due to the collapse of the stock market, resulting in the great financial depression, part of the building was left unfinished and was not completed until 1937.

Owing to the growth of the membership and program of the church, efforts were launched in 1957 to undertake still another building program. On April 9, 1961, the consecration service for a beautiful educational addition, as well as the remodeling of certain parts of the existing structure, was held.

From its beginning, Trinity Church has been a strong supporter of the mission program of Methodism. Before the church was a year old, the Missionary Society voted to send Miss Garnet Everly, a charter member and a teacher in the Hutchinson schools, to INDIA as a missionary. Through the years the church has continued its sponsorship and support of missionaries, as well as contributing to many other mission causes.

Trinity Church now has several sons in the ministry in both the Kansas annual conferences, as well as in other conferences and churches. Each year the church plays host to the Area Pastors' School, takes its regular turn at entertaining the Annual Conference and hosting numerous other meetings and conferences. With a present membership of 2,522 the church continues to grow in size, but more important, in its witness for the Kingdom of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

HUTCHINSON, MINNESOTA, U.S.A. Vineyard Church still owns the gift received from MARTHA'S VINEYARD—a bell which bears the inscription, "A present to Vineyard M. E. Church by Boston Friends, 1874."

Methodism began in Hutchinson in 1856 with Dr. A. McWright, Glencoe physician and elder, preaching. In 1857 a Methodist society was organized by Dr. McWright and John Pugh, and in 1860 Mr. Judd became the first regularly appointed pastor of the church. In 1869 Lewis Harrington gave twenty acres to the village of Hutchinson for park purposes, lots being set aside for the first community church. The "Town Father," Asa Hutchinson, contributed and spearheaded efforts leading to the erection of Vineyard Methodist Church, the first community church there. The "singing" Hutchinsons traveled "East" in 1870-1874, giving concerts to raise money for the new Methodist church, and it was the CAMP MEETING in Martha's Vineyard, Mass., which responded with the prized historic bell and a love offering of $400.

The first church was dedicated in 1873 during the pastorate of L. P. Foster. In 1892 this church building was moved and a new sanctuary was added.

A building committee was formed in 1955 to investigate expansion, and in 1960 the church accepted a gift of five acres of land from the Enevoldsen family. In 1961 a financial campaign was conducted with emphasis on a building fund. In May, 1964, the goal of $100,000 in cash was met, and plans proceeded and ground was broken on September 13 of the same year, the cornerstone being laid on June 13, 1965. The congregation worshipped in the new edifice, with the sanctuary seating about 475—on April 3, 1966.

HUTTON, JAMES (1715-1795), British MORAVIAN and son of the Rev. John Hutton, neighbor of JOHN WESLEY'S brother SAMUEL, was born in Westminster on Sept. 3, 1715. He was much influenced by John Wesley, under whose preaching he was converted in 1735, and wanted to accompany the Wesleys to GEORGIA. Instead he set up in business as a bookseller; and it was at his bookshop, the Bible and Sun, that the "little society" was formed which afterward met at FETTER LANE. He was persuaded by PHILIP MOLTER to become a Moravian, but remained on good terms with the Wesleys, whose hymns and other books he continued to publish. As the first English Moravian, Hutton was esteemed the most influential of their number in the eighteenth century. He died near Godstone, Surrey, on May 3, 1795.

HYATTSVILLE, MARYLAND, U.S.A., traces its existence from the second year of George Washington's first administration and can properly be regarded as one of the oldest Methodist churches in America. Quite early circuit riders were periodically visiting southern MARYLAND, one of whose principal towns was the then busy port of Bladensburg. This is a few miles below Washington on the Anacostia River just off the Potomac. A number of these circuit riders, including FRANCIS ASBURY, visited and preached to small groups in the area as these met for worship in private homes—including that of Shadrack Turner, who is honored as a principal founder of the Bladensburg M. E. Church, the direct and original church ancestor of First Church, Hyattsville. Since it was formally accepted into the old BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1793, the Hyattsville church has occupied six structures at six different locations and has survived the several divisions which took place within the denomination.

First Church has played an important part in the founding of four new area churches, and there are eight men now serving in the Methodist ministry who went out from First, and six of its young men are presently planning to go into ministry. The present church building was dedicated in May 1962. Erected at a total cost of slightly more than $1,000,000, a $100,000 annex to the educational wing and a $110,000 Moller pipe organ have already been added. The two panel facade stained-glass window in the sanctuary is executed in one of the new techniques developed to beautify the contemporary style of church architecture. Of heroic size, the window measures twenty-five by forty-six feet. It was planned to be read on several depths. The largest forms tell of the TRINITY. A closer view reveals the multiplicity of smaller and larger figures which tell the history of Christianity with special emphasis upon Methodism. With a membership of 2,668 the church has grown with the area it serves. Its people say: "The best way for a church to grow is to lose itself in something bigger."

DORIS M. JUDD

HYDE, AMMI BRADFORD (1826-1921), American minister and historian, a Greek and Oriental scholar, and a recognized Biblical exegete, was born at Oxford, N. Y., March 13, 1826.

He studied at Oxford Academy and WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, becoming professor of ancient languages at Cazenovia Seminary in 1844. He joined the Oneida Conference in 1848, where he was listed as "Professor in Oneida Conference Seminary." In 1862 he resigned his professorship, and transferred to the East Genesee Conference to become pastor at Rushville, also serving in the United States Sanitary Commission at City Point. In 1864 he transferred to the ERIE CONFERENCE to become professor of Greek at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE. In 1867 he was elected a member of the American Oriental Society, and in 1885 he became a professor in DENVER UNIVERSITY, transferring at the same time to the COLORADO CONFERENCE. For one year (1889) he was chancellor of the University, returning to his professorship the following year. He became professor emeritus in 1905, retired in 1912.

In spite of his extensive work as an oriental and Biblical scholar, he is best known to most Methodists for his book, The Story of Methodism Throughout the World . . . From the Beginning to the Present Time . . . and Giving An Account of its Various Influences and Institutions of To-day (New York: Hazen and Co., 1887; Revised and Enlarged in 1888). The volume is entertainingly written and is especially valuable for its many now rare illustrations, including pictures of eighteen early bishops of the A.M.E. Church; 280 new illustrations appear in the revised edition of 1888. The book was unfortunately printed on a poor grade of paper. He died March 23, 1921 in Denver, Colo., having completed seventy-three years in the ministry.

HYDE, EVA LOUISE (1885-), American educator and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Dalton, Mo. on April 15, 1885. She attended Scarritt Bible and Training School, graduating in 1909, and went to Brazil as a missionary in October 1912, under the Women's Board. On furloughs, she won an A.B. from the University of Chicago in 1919, and a M.A. from Teachers' College, Columbia, in 1933.

Her first appointment was to Colegio Mineiro in JUIZ DE FORA, Minas Gerais; second to Colegio Americano in Petropolis, RIO DE JANEIRO, and last to Colegio Bennett Rio, of which she was appointed Reitora (principal) in 1920. This position she held until retirement in 1952. In 1938, Miss Hyde was a delegate of the Methodist Church of Brazil to the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE in Madras, India. For many years, she was a member of the Federation of Evangelical Schools, of the Evangelical Confederation, and of the Brazilian Educational Association. Her outstanding work was at Bennett. She gave it an enviable reputation in all of South America. She raised it to junior college standing in 1940, the first such school in Brazil.

Upon retirement in December 1952, Miss Hyde was decorated by the president of Brazil with the National Order of Merit, the first foreign woman to receive this honor usually reserved for distinguished diplomats and military leaders. She was also awarded an "Honor to Merit" gold medal by the national radio of Brazil. Finally, in 1960, on a return visit to Brazil, she was made an honorary citizen of Rio de Janeiro.

Now in retirement she lives at Meadows Manor, Boulder, Colo. (1970).

HYDE, MELVIN WATSON (1905-), American college president, was born at Hazel, S. D., on March 17, 1905, the son of Orlow Miner and Anna Lucinda (Watson) Hyde. He was educated at DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, receiving the B.S. in 1926; the A.M. from Columbia University in 1930 and the Ph.D. in 1932. He married Claudia Marie Bray on Aug. 28, 1929, and their children were James Stewart and Joanne Marie. After teaching for a time in high schools in SOUTH DAKOTA, he became head of the Department of Education of Dakota Wesleyan University in 1931 and then dean the next year, serving there until 1936. He was dean and head of the Department of Education of MOUNT UNION COLLEGE, Alliance, Ohio, 1936-49; assistant president, Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, 1949-55; president of the UNIVERSITY OF EVANSVILLE (Ind.), 1955 until retirement. He served as a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, 1936; of The Methodist Church in 1948; and of the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of the North Central Jurisdiction, 1948, '60, and '64. He also served on the executive committee of the Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of his Church. He retired in 1967.

HYDE, PRESTON SHEPHERD (1876-1954), was an American missionary of the M. E. Board of Missions in North India, from 1901-30. He was born in Hannibal, Mo., Feb. 13, 1876, and graduated from Moore's Hill College in 1898. His first appointment in India was to the pastorate of the Lal Bagh Methodist Church in LUCKNOW. While servicing there he also taught English in the LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

On Aug. 9, 1904, his fiancée, Irene Martin, arrived in Lucknow from America, and they were married the next day. (She was also a graduate from Moore's Hill College.) His subsequent appointments included the superintendency of the Garhwal, Lucknow, and Litapur districts; the principalship (presidency) of the Philander Smith College in Naini Tal; the pastorate of the Naini Tal English Language Church; and a professorship in the Bareilly Theological Seminary.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Hyde possessed a rare wealth of graciousness in manner and speech and used it unsparsingly in the service of God's people in and out of the church. His alma mater conferred on him the D.D. degree in recognition of the superior quality of his service. During his furloughs he did advanced study at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE and BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. He discontinued his work as a missionary for compelling family reasons, but continued an active ministry, serving as pastor of the Methodist church in LeRoy, Ohio, for sixteen years and as associate pastor of First Church, Warren, Ohio, for six years.

He was killed in an automobile collision on Feb. 2, 1954, while leading a procession to a cemetery where he was to conduct burial rites.

HYDERABAD, India, is considered the capital of one of the greatest centers of Muslim influence. The city is said to have been founded in 1589 by one of the kings of Golconda. The modern city covers thirty square miles and has a population of 1,262,085. Methodist work was started there as a result of the WILLIAM TAYLOR revivals in 1872 and 1874 (see HYDERABAD CONFERENCE). The bishop of the Area lives in the city.

Methodist Boys Multi-Purpose Higher Secondary School in Hyderabad is the largest Methodist boys' school in India, and one of the largest schools of any church. It had its beginning in the Methodist Girls' School in 1919, when Alice Evans admitted a few boys in the lower classes. At first they were housed in a former stable. The church felt that a separate school for boys was needed. It was opened in 1921 by John Patterson, who was born in IRELAND, educated in the United States, and sent to INDIA by the M. E. BOARD OF MISSIONS.

GABRIEL SUNDARAM became headmaster and joined forces with GEORGE GARDEN, a second generation missionary of the M. E. Church, and with Mrs. Garden (Elsie Simester, of a missionary family in China) to establish it as a powerful force in the life of the city of Hyderabad and the annual conference. The enrollment now exceeds 3,500. In addition to the usual high school courses in arts and science, it provides instruction in civil engineering, electrical engineering, commerce, and woodwork.

The leading men of the Hyderabad Conference, both ministerial and lay, with rare exception have been students in this institution. The principal now is Elia Peter, a former Crusade Scholar in the United States.

Stanley Girls Multi-Purpose Higher Secondary School at Hyderabad is the largest Christian girls' school in India. Its student enrollment exceeds 3,000. It was started in 1895 with funds contributed in India to educate Anglo-Indian girls. It took over a small school that had been started in 1880 by an independent Methodist minister from America. The next year Alice Evans became principal and began a connection with the school which continued for twenty-five years. She changed the small English-language school into an Anglo-vernacular school, open to girls of all communities. The school set the standards for girls' schools throughout the state.

Toward the end of Miss Evans' leadership, Stanley Girls School became a recognized and aided high school. The year she left, three of her girls who had completed high school were studying in ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE at LUCKNOW, two in the Woman's Christian College in Madras, and six were studying medicine in the Vellore and Ludhiana Christian medical colleges.

Two other woman missionaries of the M. E. Church served as principals. These were ELIZABETH J. WELLS and Margaret Morgan. Both served ably and with devotion. But it was under Indian leadership, recruited from former students, that the school advanced most rapidly. The first Indian principal was Edith DeLima, appointed in 1936. She was succeeded by CHANDRA CHRISTIDAS, now joint secretary for India and NEPAL in the Board of Missions, New York. The present principal is Ratna Sudershanam. Students who complete the higher secondary course are able to graduate from the universities of India in three years.

The school has a boarding department, or hostel, with an enrollment of 275 girls, mostly Christians. Few institutions in India have produced so many Christian women educators or other women prominent in church life and service.

HYDERABAD, Pakistan (population 434,000), is a large city of PAKISTAN one hundred miles northeast of Karachi. Hyderabad is an important center for the railway system and has a college and large hospital. The Anglican Church has there a Bible Training Institute. The local Methodist congregation supports its own pastor, but has no church building or parsonage, yet.

HYDERABAD CONFERENCE is a conference of India covering Andhra Pradesh and the environs of Sironcha in Maharashtra on the Deccan plateau. The principal languages are Telugu, Marathi, Kanarese, and Urdu. Within the conference is a population of 31,260,000 people. HYDERABAD itself is a very large city with a population of 1,262,085.

Methodist work was begun in Hyderabad in 1873, and the annual conference was organized in 1926. Up to that time it had been a part of the SOUTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE. The conference has seven districts, with Hyderabad the largest of these. The other districts are Bidar, Chiddaguppa, Daulatabad, Tandur, Sironcha-Venkatapur, Vikarabad, and Zaheerabad. At last reporting there were 26,117 full members and 68,836 preparatory ones on the conference rolls, with thirty-five ordained and 105 supply pastors.

HYER, ROBERT STEWART (1860-1929), American educator, scientist and college president, was born at Oxford,

ROBERT S. HYER

Ga., the son of W. L. Hyer, locomotive engineer, and Laura (Stewart) Hyer, daughter of a Methodist minister. He was of Huguenot and Scotch-Irish ancestry. His mother was an invalid, so her sister cared for the boy while he attended school. In 1881 he graduated from Emory College with honors. At the age of twenty-two he became professor in SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, and ten years later he began a series of experiments in X-ray and other waves. A report in Transactions of the Texas Academy of Science (Vol. ii, 1899) indicates these experiments in ether waves antedated those of Marconi.

As first president of SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in 1911, he planned the campus, determined the architecture of its first buildings, and obtained an endowment of $300,000. Having resigned as president in 1920, he retained his professorship until his death, May 29, 1929. During those years he began experiments to determine the location and character of petroleum deposits by use of electrical instruments.

Though deeply involved in other activities, Hyer's real life interest was teaching, particularly the Bible. He published numerous articles in science publications and in the Methodist Quarterly Review. He was a lay delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, London, 1901, and Toronto, 1921, and was a member of the Joint Committee on Unification of Methodism.

HYMN WRITERS. Although the outstanding contributions in British Methodist hymnody were made by CHARLES and JOHN WESLEY, there are others who deserve recognition, even if only for a solitary hymn. THOMAS OLIVERS, one of Wesley's preachers, based his noble "The God of Abraham praise" on the medieval Hebrew doxology, which sets forth the thirteen articles of the Jewish creed. The dignified melody he adapted also comes from Jewish sources. A schoolmaster, John Bakewell (1721-1819), contributed "Hail Thou once despised Jesus"; and another preacher BENJAMIN RHODES, wrote "My heart and voice I raise."

The nineteenth century produced greater Methodist preachers than hymn writers. WILLIAM M. BUNTING, son of the redoubtable JABEZ BUNTING, is not known outside Methodism. His long penitential hymn, "Holy Spirit, pity me," contains some striking phrases, but is more suitable for private devotion than public worship. "Blessed are the pure in heart" forms an apt meditation on the Beatitude. WILLIAM M. PUNSHON'S morning and evening hymns, "Come, let us with our Lord arise" and "We rose today with anthems sweet," are still widely used. JAMES SMETHAM, the noted class leader, is remembered by his sensitive "While evening nature grieves."

Of somewhat later writers, THOMAS B. STEPHENSON, founder of the NATIONAL CHILDREN'S HOME AND ORPHANAGE, produced "Lord, grant us like the watching five." Edward Brailsford's (1841-1921) "All things which live below the sky" has become popular with adults as well as children, and Ellen T. Fowler's (1860-1929) "Now the year is crowned with blessing" regularly makes its appearance at harvest time. More prolific than either of the foregoing was Henry Burton (1840-1930), whose simple, unaffected verses, chief of which are "Have you had a kindness shown?" "There's a light upon the mountains," and "Break, day of God, O break," have not lost their popularity. James R. Batey (1878-1940) wrote little, but his "I bow in silence at Thy feet" has found a permanent place in our services.

Coming to the contemporary scene, R. Wilfrid Callin (1886-1935) has written many acceptable hymns for children and young people, chief of which is "O Lord of every lovely thing." Osborn Gregory (b. 1881) has enriched the Communion Service with "Spread the table of the Lord." THOMAS TIPLADY wrote extensively for the Lambeth Mission, and his attractive "Out of dust Thy word creative" finds a place in the School Hymn Book. His verses have been much more widely appreciated in America and Canada than in England. F. Pratt Green's sensitive poetic gift has found expression in a few hymns and carols, "Let my vision, Lord, be keen and clear this day" being the best known.

Methodism has produced no great musicians. Those who have achieved distinction, such as Benjamin Dale and George Oldroyd, have not remained within her fold. The first composer of note was James Leach (1762-98), whose tune "Egypt" is given a place in the present British Methodist Hymn Book. The first musician who was also a Methodist preacher was JOHN BEAUMONT, whose "St. Ignatius" has found acceptance in other denominations as well. Methodist musicians in the nineteenth century wrote little that has survived. James Ellor's (1819-99) "Diadem" is still sung. In later years, stretching into the twentieth century, JAMES T. LIGHTWOOD, LUKE WISEMAN, George Blanchard, and Alfred Beer have all written tunes containing a popular appeal.

SAMUEL WESLEY (1766-1837) and SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY (1810-76), son and grandson respectively of Charles Wesley, were both distinguished church musicians, but neither of them were Methodists.

HYMNAL COMMISSIONS OF AMERICAN METHODISM.

The Methodist Hymnal has made three appearances in the twentieth century, one for each generation. The first issue came off the press in July 1905, with the copyright listed for the same year. It was entitled Official Hymnal of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Commission of 1905. On the authority of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the two churches, the bishops of the M. E. Church appointed the following eleven members, composed of laymen and clergy: Bishop D. A. GOODSSELL, S. F. UPHAM, C. M. STUART, C. M. Coburn, Bishop R. J. COOKE, C. S. Nutter, Bishop W. A. QUAYLE, H. G. JACKSON, C. W. SMITH, C. T. Winchester, J. M. Black, with Bishop Goodsell serving as chairman. The bishops of the M. E. church, South appointed these eleven members: Bishop E. E. Hoss, George B. Winton, H. M. DuBOSE, W. F. TILLET, Paul Whitehead, JOHN M. MOORE, Edwin Mims, H. N. SNYDER, F. S. PARKER, James Campbell, R. T. Kerlin, with Bishop Hoss as chairman. There were no musicians as such appointed by either Church.

These Commissioners, meeting as one body, selected as musical editors Professors KARL P. HARRINGTON of WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (author of the Christmas hymn, "There's a song in the air") and Peter C. Lutkin of NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY. Harrington was for many years a professor of Latin and Greek at Wesleyan. He also served as a regular member of the 1935 Joint Commission thirty years later. It may be added here that others who served on both the 1905 and 1935 Commissions were W. F. Tillett of VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, Henry N. Snyder of WOFFORD COLLEGE, F. S. Parker, and Bishop John M. Moore.

As recorded in the Preface of the Hymnal, "the double purpose" was to provide "a worthy manual of song for use in the public and private worship of Almighty God, and to testify to the world the essential unity of the two great branches of Episcopal Methodism." It was noted further "that the hymns of the Wesleys were given prominence" as should be the case in any Methodist hymnal. Included also were hymns from the pens of other distinguished writers of the eighteenth century, such as Cowper, Doddridge, Montgomery, Newton and Watts, as well as hymns of earlier and later periods.

Commission of 1930-34. The Methodist Hymnal of 1905 was well received by the Churches issuing it, but by the time the 1920's were ending, there was an insistent call over all Methodism for a revision of the Hymnal. Indeed there is a theory that the Hymnal ought to be revised about every twenty-five years. The M. E. Church, therefore, appointed a new Commission in 1928, consisting of five bishops, five ministers, and five laymen. The bishops were WILLIAM F. ANDERSON, EDWIN HOLT HUGHES, FREDERICK D. LEETE, H. LESTER SMITH, and TITUS LOWE; the ministers, HENRY HITT CRANE, JOSEPH M. M. GRAY, EARL E. HARPER, John W. Langdale, and

OSCAR THOMAS OLSON; the laymen, Karl P. Harrington, James R. Houghton, Howard Wilder Lyman, ROBERT G. MCCUTCHEAN, and ALBERT RIEMENSCHNEIDER.

The M. E. Church, South appointed a similar Commission at its General Conference of 1930. The bishops were WARREN A. CANDLER, John M. Moore, URBAN V. W. DARLINGTON, SAM R. HAY, and A. FRANK SMITH; the ministers, NOLAN B. HARMON, IVAN LEE HOLT, D. N. Hotchkiss, Fitzgerald S. Parker, and Wilbur Fisk Tillett; the laymen, Walter Kirkland, J. Abner Sage, GUY E. SNAVELY, Henry N. Snyder, and Charles C. Washburn.

This Joint Commission was first called to order in the latter part of 1930 by Bishop William F. Anderson, who with Bishop Warren A. Candler, were elected joint chairmen. It proceeded to its work with the appointment of four subcommittees: one on "old hymns" or hymns to be retained; one on "new hymns" or those which might be sought for the new book; one on "old tunes" which was charged to report on the tunes which ought by all means to be kept; and one on "new tunes" which was to seek out and find better harmony or better tunes for hymn texts which were to be retained or obtained.

It should be noted that this was the first time musicians of stature in the church had been called upon to act upon such a Hymnal Commission. Early hymnals were drawn up by bishops, book editors, and the like, but in 1930-34, the respective churches participating for the first time put church musicians on the Commission to have charge and responsibility for that aspect of the hymnal building.

The M. P. Church, a few months later but before conclusive work had been done, accepted an invitation to participate in the preparation of this hymnal—an invitation extended at the time of the organization of the Joint Commission. The M. P.'s appointed these ministers as their representatives: JOHN C. BROOMFIELD, HUGH LATIMER ELDERDICE, HARLAN LUTHER FEEMAN, CHARLES EDWARD FORLINES, John W. Hawley, and Eugene C. Makosky.

Robert G. McCutchan was elected Editor of the Hymnal. Part of the work of the Commission was to get a better series of Responsive Readings for congregational use. The Order of Worship was placed in the very front pages of the Hymnal. It should be noted that in the APOSTLES CREED "Holy Ghost" was changed to "Holy Spirit."

There was an extensive examination of the hymns of the past. Some old ones were included, while others not frequently used were omitted. The same can be said with respect to tunes. Among the new inclusions were hymns for children rather than about children. A section of the book was devoted to hymns for special seasons and services.

This Hymnal Commission presented the new hymnal to their respective General Conferences in 1934 and 1936. Since the Commission had been given full power, their report and the Hymnal itself were adopted with thanks and without debate.

Commission of 1960-64. At the General Conference of 1960 a move was made to revise the Book of Worship of the Church and also the Hymnal. There was some debate on the Conference floor as to the value of a revision, and the question of finances was raised. However, in an atmosphere of some uncertainty and by a not very large majority, the Commission on Worship was asked to revise the Book of Worship during the quadrennium, and to prepare a new Hymnal, reporting back to the 1964 General Conference. This put the responsibility for the hymnal content upon the full General Conference rather than upon a small committee, as had been the case in previous revisions.

The Commission on Worship was directed to add to its own members those who should and might help in its work. The members of this last Commission, composed of laymen and clergy, were LEON M. ADKINS, EMORY STEVENS BUCKE, Warren A. Bugbee, HENRY M. BULLOCK, Paul Burt, WILLIAM R. CANNON, Virgil Y. C. Eady, Bishop EUGENE M. FRANK, Bishop MARVIN A. FRANKLIN, JOHN O. GROSS, J. Robert Hammond, Bishop Nolan B. Harmon, Earl E. Harper, Charles S. Hempstead, Will Hildebrand, James R. Houghton, Bishop GERALD H. KENNEDY, J. De Koven Killingsworth, Bishop JOHN WESLEY LORD, Austin C. Lovelace, Bishop NOAH W. MOORE, LOVICK PIERCE, JOSEPH D. QULLIAN, JR., Bishop RICHARD C. RAINES, Daniel L. Ridout, Mrs. Floyd W. Rigg, AMOS A. THORNBURG, Bishop EDWIN E. VOIGT, and Carlton R. Young. Bishop Harmon, E. E. Harper, and J. R. Houghton had served on the former Commission.

The Commission selected the following to serve as consultants: PAT BEAIRD, V. Earle Copes, Philip R. Dieterich, WILLIAM F. DUNKLE, JR., Fred D. Gealy, Alfred B. Haas, Cecil D. Jones, Cecil E. Lapo, GERALD O. McCULLOH, J. Edwin Moyer, William C. Rice, and Bliss Wiant.

Bishop Voigt was elected chairman. Paul Burt was chosen secretary. Carlton Young of the Southern Methodist University faculty was selected as editor. Bishop Harmon was chosen chairman of the Committee on Texts, and Austin Lovelace, organist of Christ Church, New York, was made chairman of the Committee on Tunes. Will Hildebrand served as chairman of the Committee on Psalter and Ritual, and Earl E. Harper was made chairman of the Executive-Editorial Committee.

Sixty-five previously published hymnals were examined along with 2,000 original manuscripts. A 515-page report on the content of the revised hymnal was mailed to each General Conference delegate ninety days in advance of the conference sessions at PITTSBURGH, beginning April 23, 1964. The first order of business of the General Conference was the report of the Hymnal Committee. It won unanimous approval for its work. Two years after this approval and final authorization were spent in the editorial work and production of the hymnal, which enjoyed an unprecedented advance sale of 2,150,000 copies.

This hymnal is an extension of the broadly conceived format of the 1935 edition. Gospel hymns, Wesley hymns, and hymns from the Latin, Greek and German traditions were increased in number. Some twentieth century texts were included, but most of these that were examined by the committee were but pale reflections of the great hymnody of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Musically, the hymnal is held to be the most singable ever provided the church. Of particular import is the great abundance of folk music, including Negro spirituals which appear in an official American hymnal for the first time. The Hymnal Committee also commissioned a new setting of the Choral Version of The Lord's Supper, and a dozen new hymn tunes by contemporary composers. The English tunes of Vaughan Williams and the rich treasures of melody from the German Chorale, Psalter and Plain Song traditions are also found in increasing number. The service music, including the musical settings of the Canticles, was completely overhauled for use by congregations rather than primarily for choirs.

The hymnal also continues to excerpt material from both the Book of Worship and the Discipline, and has a large section of Acts of Praise, readings from scripture, prayers, collects, a lectionary and four services, The Order of Worship, Holy Communion, Baptism and Reception into Church Membership (Confirmation).

An important departure from the historic topical format of American Methodist hymnals is the inclusion of the Christian Year as one of the major sections of the hymnic portion of the book. Other sections are The Gospel and Christian Experience; The Church; and Times, Seasons and Occasions.

TITLE PAGE, CHARLESTOWN HYMNAL

HYMNODY. American Methodist. JOHN WESLEY'S first hymnbook, Collection of Psalms and Hymns—the "Charles-town Collection," printed in South Carolina in 1737—was reprinted in England but found little use in America. WHITEFIELD brought to his American meetings the Wesley's Hymns and Sacred Poems (1739) and had it reprinted in PHILADELPHIA in 1740. PHILIP EMBURY and ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE probably made use of Wesleyan hymns and hymnbooks in their American work. In 1781 Philadelphia printer Melchior Steiner bound together, for use in ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, the three Wesley hymn collections: Hymns for Those That Seek and Those That Have Found Redemption (1742); A Collection of Psalms and Hymns (1741); Hymns and Spiritual Songs (1753). Isaac Collins in Burlington, N. J., had previously reprinted the collections in 1771 and 1773, perhaps at the direction of FRANCIS ASBURY. Hymns for Those That Seek and Those That Have Found Redemption was reprinted by James Adams in Wilmington, 1770.

The chart of hymnbooks provides a record of the "authorized" hymnals of the three main branches of American Methodism. Three English publications head the list, and their importance and influence are traced by dotted and solid lines.

A Collection of Hymns for the Use of the People Called Methodists, commonly called the "large hymnbook of 1780," was not to influence American hymnody until after the 1820's, and more fully in 1849. The second collection, the hymns that were bound with the 1784 Sunday Service, never found popular use. The "renegade" collection of 1781—A Pocket Hymnbook, compiled by ROBERT SPENCE—proved most influential. This goes far to explain the apparent lack of interest on the part of early Methodism for the definitive 1780 collection.

The M. E. Church was quick to make use of the Spence Pocket Hymnbook (1781), and various editions and variations sufficed until 1821.

The 1780 collection was studied in detail by the compilers of the 1821 hymnbook, and the 1836 and 1849 editions as well saw more use of basic Wesleyan hymnody.

HARROD's collection (1830) proved of value in affording the Methodist Protestants with a popular collection of their choosing, but it does not reflect their editorial work. STOCKTON's work on the 1837 book was the first serious effort by this group to compile a hymnbook of their own. The content of this collection is reflected in all three of the books produced by the two divisions within the M. P. ranks. When the church reunited, the adoption of the Tourjee hymnal (1882) served as a stop-gap until the next, and last, definitive collection in 1901.

Four hymnbooks, dated 1847, 1874, 1880, and 1889, were authorized by the General Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, before the joint hymnal of 1905. The two editions of Songs of Zion, 1851 and 1873, were supplements to the hymnal and had semi-official approval and enjoyed a wide use. The church's effort to meet the needs of all its people through the publication and distribution of "unauthorized" hymnals and songbooks, in addition to the approved hymnal, continues to this day.

In the Northern Church a strong reaction against the great size of the 1849 edition produced the authorization in 1876 of a book containing fewer hymns. In consequence, the number of Wesley hymns was drastically reduced, and was reduced in each succeeding hymnal until the 1964 edition.

The 1905 hymnal was produced by a joint committee of the Northern and Southern Churches, and served both churches for thirty years. Beginning in 1928 the Northern Church began to urge revision. A joint committee was constituted and included by 1934 all three of the churches. The publication of the 1935 edition in anticipating the eventual union (1939) of the three branches is very significant. The approach of other denominational mergers in post World War II has been along similar lines; first agree upon a common hymnal and then move toward administrative merger. Significant in the content of this hymnal is the controversial section called "songs of salvation" or commonly referred to as "gospel songs." Long the property of private publishers these "songs" from the revival era were for the first time included in the hymnal and their presence explains to some extent the wide use of this edition until 1960 when the new revision was authorized. The format of the hymnal was quite similar to the previous edition, but one change was the attempt to put all texts between staves of music. The "social gospel" hymn and the twentieth century English hymn tune were other distinctive features of content. Translations from the Greek, German and Latin and eighteenth century hymns were strongly represented, although the number of texts from the Wesleyan tradition were cut almost in half.

In 1960 the GENERAL CONFERENCE authorized a committee to revise the hymnal, and this edition was published in 1966. (For more detailed information in regard to the 1905, the 1935 and the 1966 Methodist hymnals, see above HYMNAL COMMISSIONS OF AMERICAN METHODISM.)

The musical aspects of hymnody so important to John Wesley were not fully appreciated by first-generation American Methodists. There was limited use of the Wesley Foundery Collection (1742) and Butts, Harmonia Sacra (c. 1753, reprinted at Andover in 1816). The names of the tunes appropriate for each hymn began to appear in hymnbooks as early as the 1790 Pocket Hymnbook.

A bold attempt to produce an authorized and standardized book of hymn tunes, David's Companion, part of which was printed in 1807, was given tacit approval by the 1808 General Conference. It was revised in 1810 and 1817, but never enjoyed official sanction. The chaotic situation was somewhat improved with the publication of The Methodist Harmonist in 1821. This tune collection, revised in 1833 and 1837, cross referenced to the 1821 hymnal.

Other tune collections with some degree of official approval were The Devotional Harmonist (1849); Hymns for the Use of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with tunes for congregational worship (1857); and The Wesleyan Hymn and Tune Book (1859), used with the Southern Church's 1847 hymnal. The work of Rigdon M. McIntosh as music editor of the Southern Church's 1874 hymnal is especially noteworthy. The M. P. Church never produced a tune book, but cross referenced to as many as a dozen collections in a tune index in the back of the 1859 hymnal.

After the publication of the 1874 hymnal of the Southern Church, all three branches of Methodism made provision for placing the tunes on the page with the texts. This development culminated in the publication of the 1901 M. P. hymnal—the first Methodist hymnal to be printed in only the tune-text format. Today, in the twentieth century, this tune-text format is standard in all denominational hymnals.

CARLTON R. YOUNG

The Tribute of Praise and Methodist Protestant Hymn Book (1882) was authorized by the GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. P. Church in 1880 and was aimed toward promoting "in every possible way congregational singing in all our Churches." It was the first hymnal of the M. P. denomination to include both music and word editions and was the first M. P. hymnal to be published following the unification in 1877 of the M. P. Church and the Methodist Church (comprised of those northern and western M. P. conferences that had suspended official relations with the General Conference in 1858). A committee of fifteen members, including L. W. Bates, chairman, S. B. SOUTHERLAND, J. L. Michaux and ANCEL H. BASSETT, was appointed to compile the hymns to be used in the book. The "Introduction" noted the extensive preparation involved in the selection of hymns and recommended a revival of the ancient method of chanting by choirs and congregations. It made specific suggestions for the effective use of music in religious services. The hymnal was edited by Eben Tourjee and was published by the Board of Publications of the M. P. Church. Bassett noted, "It is an excellent collection, containing the choicest hymns and spiritual songs, both old and new . . . and it gives general satisfaction." A second edition of the hymnal was published in 1884. The Tribute of Praise was in general use in M. P. churches until the General Conference of 1900 authorized the compilation of The Methodist Protestant Hymnal.

That hymnal of 1900 (with later editions) was the last official hymnal of the M. P. Church. The General Conference of 1900 accepted a recommendation from the Conference Committee on Publishing Houses that "a committee of five be appointed to compile, adopt or otherwise secure for the use of the church a hymnal that shall bear the title of the 'Methodist Protestant Church Hymnal,' and also the imprint of our Board of Publication." THOMAS H. LEWIS was appointed to serve as the chairman of this hymnal committee, which also included S. S. Fisher and William Walls of the Muskingum Annual Conference, M. D. Helmich of the West Virginia Conference, and the Hon. J. W. Hering of the Maryland Conference. Nearly 50,000 copies of the hymnal had been sold by 1904. The music edition was the only style in which the book was published.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

British Methodist. John Wesley's first two hymnbooks were both entitled A Collection of Psalms and Hymns, though they were quite distinct compilations. That published at CHARLESTON, S. C., in 1737, was the first American hymnbook—previous American publications had contained metrical psalms only. The second appeared in London in 1738. Both depended heavily on the psalms and hymns of ISAAC WATTS. Neither had a large circulation. They were followed by three books entitled Hymns and Sacred Poems, appearing in 1739, 1740, and 1742, each edited jointly by John and Charles Wesley. In the 1739 volume, hymns of Charles Wesley appeared in print for the first time. It will be noted from the title that these works contained not only "hymns" for singing in public worship, but "sacred poems" for private meditation. The first Hymns and Sacred Poems was widely used, going through three editions in 1739 and an American edition in 1740. They continued to be printed in varying forms throughout the century, and contain many of the classic hymns of Charles Wesley.

In 1741 John Wesley published a third Collection of Psalms and Hymns, to which in its second edition of 1743 were added many contributions by Charles, as well as his name on the title page. This collection became very popular, and by 1789 had gone through seventeen editions, including three in America. It was superseded by the Collection of Psalms and Hymns for the Lord's Day, added to the Sunday Service from 1784 onwards.

Reaching even wider circles were many small collections of hymns for special occasions, usually festivals in the Christian year. The first major work of this kind was Hymns on the Lord's Supper, a magnificent collection preceded by an abridgment of Daniel Brevint's Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, on the scheme of which the hymnbook was prepared. This volume first appeared in 1745 and was reprinted every few years, passing through nine editions by the time of Charles Wesley's death in 1788. Much smaller in size were the publications for different festivals: Hymns for the Nativity of our Lord (twenty-nine editions from 1744-91, including the first Methodist publication in America, by Dunlap of Philadelphia in 1769), Hymns for our Lord's Resurrection (twelve editions 1746-91), Hymns for Ascension Day (eight editions 1746-89), Hymns of Petition and Thanksgiving for the Promise of the Father, often called "Whit-sunday Hymns" (ten editions 1746-86), and Gloria Patri, &c., or Hymns to the Trinity (nine editions 1746-75). Other pamphlet hymn collections were connected with special national days of prayer or thanksgiving. Still others were written for aspects of the Christian life of special importance to the Methodists: Funeral Hymns (two series, of which the first went through eight editions, 1746-84); Hymns for those that seek, and those that have, redemption in the blood of Jesus Christ (nineteen editions 1747-88, including three in America from 1770); Hymns for the Watchnight, extracted from still another collection of Hymns and Sacred Poems, and going through at least thirteen or fourteen editions from about 1749; and Hymns for New Year's Day, of which there were fifteen editions 1749-91.

John Wesley published his first more general hymnbook in 1753, eighty-four hymns under the title Hymns and Spiritual Songs, intended for the use of real Christians of all denominations. This passed through no fewer than thirty-three editions by 1786, including four in America, where it was frequently bound with the Collection of Psalms and Hymns of 1743 and the Redemption Hymns of 1747 to form the first composite comprehensive hymnbook of American Methodism. His next such venture was published in 1761, entitled Select Hymns: with tunes annex: designed chiefly for the use of the people called Methodists. This was the first Methodist hymnbook with tunes, though he had published a small tunebook in 1742. The 1761 volume included a twelve-page section furnishing a musical primer, and appended was a page with Wesley's well known "Directions for singing." Select Hymns went through four hymn-and-tune editions up to 1773, and was superseded by another hymnbook with tunes, Sacred Harmony, published in 1780. The words section of Select Hymns continued in use a little longer, going through six editions by 1787.

The major event in Methodist hymnody was Wesley's successor to Select Hymns, published in 1780, the same year as Sacred Harmony. This was A Collection of Hymns for the use of the people called Methodists, a selection of 525 hymns designed to replace the many smaller hymn pamphlets as well as the Collection of Psalms and Hymns, Hymns and Spiritual Songs, and Select Hymns. In his preface, dated Oct. 20, 1779, Wesley stated that the book appeared in response to requests over many years. He noted that in its arrangement according to the various spiritual states of a Christian this general hymnbook was unusual: "The hymns are not carelessly jumbled together; but carefully ranged under proper heads, according to the experience of real Christians. So that this book is in effect a little body of experimental and practical divinity." History has confirmed his hope that "all persons of real judgment" would find both the spirit of poetry and the spirit of piety "breathing through the whole collection." This work went through seven editions during Wesley's own lifetime, and hundreds later, many of these later editions having themselves been published in several different formats. It is quite impossible to estimate the millions of copies of Wesley's collection which have been published, let alone its derivatives in different Methodist denominations and in many parts of the world.

The 1780 Collection was pirated by a Methodist bookseller of York, ROBERT SPENCE, but in 1785 and 1787 Wesley in his turn took up Spence's idea of a smaller Pocket Hymn Book. Although Wesley's second Pocket Hymn Book went through many editions, however, it was nothing like as popular as Spence's, which became the true parent of the mainstream of American Methodist hymnody.

Wesley's Collection formed the basis for all the general hymnbooks used by the Wesleyan Methodist Church, with major supplements published in 1831 (209 hymns) and 1876 (with 487). The majority of the 1,026 hymns in the 1876 book were still by the Wesleys, 724 being noted as from the pen of Charles, and twenty-six as by John. Not until the twentieth century was there a change in title, in contents, in arrangement. The Wesleyan book of 1904 was entitled The Methodist Hymn-Book; John Wesley's name was dropped from the title page; of the 981 hymns fewer than half (only 446!) were credited to Charles Wesley, twenty-nine to John. The remainder came from various sources, mostly from eighteenth and nineteenth century English writers, of various denominations. Wesley's original plan of arrangement by the various stages of a Christian's life was deserted for more conventional sections of hymns on "The Glory of God," "The Christian Life," "The Gospel Call," "The Church," "Time, Death, Eternity." The title was the more apt in that other Methodist denominations were associated with the Wesleyan Methodists in the book's publication—the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, the WESLEYAN REFORM UNION, and the associated Wesleyan Methodist Conferences in IRELAND and AUSTRALIA.

The Methodist Hymn-Book of 1933 was modelled upon that of 1904, with a further reduction in the hymns of the Wesleys in order to make room for others both ancient and modern. This book, of course, was designed for all British Methodists, most of whom had come together in METHODIST UNION in 1932.

The PRIMITIVE METHODISTS came into the 1932 union with their own strong traditions of robust hymn-singing. As early as 1809 HUGH BOURNE had provided A General Collection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs for Camp Meetings, and Revivals, adapted from a similar collection published by LORENZO DOW in 1806 and 1807. In 1821 Bourne enlarged his book by the addition of original hymns by himself and another Primitive Methodist preacher; this was copyrighted, and went through many editions as A Collection of Hymns for Camp-Meetings, Revivals, &c. In 1824 Bourne published still another book on a broader scale, with "hymns for sacraments and the general varieties of meeting and worship." This contained 536 hymns, and was entitled Large Hymn Book for the use of the Primitive Methodists. The 1821 Collection with its 154 hymns was frequently bound up behind the Large Hymn Book, and so became known as the "Small Hymn Book." In each about half the hymns were by Charles Wesley, so that even among the Primitive Methodists there was a strong nucleus of Wesleyan hymnody. In 1853 JOHN FLESHER prepared The New and Enlarged Hymn Book for the use of the Primitive Methodists, containing 852 hymns. The title was soon changed to The Primitive Methodist Hymn Book, and in 1864 it was revised by WILLIAM ANTLIFF. This was replaced in 1887 by The Primitive Methodist Hymnal containing 1,052 hymns selected by a committee appointed by the 1882 conference. Greatly strengthened by a 295-hymn Supplement published in 1912, this book remained in use until after Methodist Union in 1932.

The other denomination uniting in 1932 was the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH, itself the union in 1907 of the Methodist New Connexion, the BIBLE CHRISTIANS, and the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES. In 1798 the Methodist New Connexion issued from its publishing house in Nottingham its own version of Wesley's Collection, differing very little from the original, and within two or three years added an appendix of 276 hymns entitled A Collection of Hymns for the use of the Methodist New Connexion. Selections from this augmented book and from the 1831 Wesleyan Supplement were published in 1835 as Hymns for the use of the Methodist New Connexion. This was replaced in 1863 by Hymns for Divine Worship, with 1,024 hymns and anthems, which served until 1904, when the New Connexion officially adopted the Methodist Hymn Book, in whose preparation it had cooperated with the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The Bible Christians also retained much of Wesley's Collection. In 1820 WILLIAM O'BRYAN prepared a small Collection to supplement Wesley's, and in 1823 selected 612 hymns from both books to form A Collection of Hymns for the use of the people called Arminian Bible Christians. This book was enlarged in 1838 (with "Arminian" dropped from the title), and revised in 1862, yet it remained substantially the same as Wesley's 1780 Collection until 1889, when it was revised and completely rearranged, being issued under the same title with 1,004 hymns and the Te Deum.

The WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION also adopted Wesley's Collection, adding their own Supplement, and this practice continued with varying supplements after the formation of the United Methodist Free Churches in 1857. Not until 1889 did an independent and rearranged book appear, Methodist Free Church Hymns, with 1,042 items. This served until the union in 1907 with the Methodist New Connexion and the Bible Christians to form the United Methodist Church.

The United Methodist Church agreed at the outset to use the Methodist Hymn Book prepared in 1904 by the Wesleyan Methodist Church in collaboration with the Methodist New Connexion and the Wesleyan Reform Union, which latter small denomination also shared the preparation of the Methodist Hymn Book of 1933. Some congregations continued their former practice of using the Methodist Free Church Hymns of 1889, which was republished as The United Methodist Church Hymnal. To this a Supplement was issued in 1927, though the preface spoke hopefully of either a new hymnbook "for our own Church, or, if Methodist Union be consummated, for the one Methodist Church."

Seven children's hymns were included in Hymns and Sacred Poems of 1742, including "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild," and a few years later a separate pamphlet was issued by Charles Wesley, entitled Hymns for Children. The same title was used for a volume published in 1763, three times reprinted, which contained 100 hymns. From this in 1787 John Wesley made a selection of 44, which also went through three editions. This special provision for children's song was taken over from the Wesleys by JOSEPH BENSON, especially in view of the rapidly proliferating SUNDAY SCHOOL movement. In 1806 Benson issued a small book with a very large and revealing title: Hymns for children and young persons, on the principal truths and duties of religion and morality, selected from various authors, and arranged in a natural and systematic order. To this he added in 1811 Hymns for children, selected chiefly from the publications of the Rev. John and Charles Wesley, and Dr. Watts. Both went through several editions in England and America, until superseded in 1835 by A Collection of Hymns for the Use of Wesleyan-Methodist Sunday Schools, prepared by THOMAS JACKSON and RICHARD WATSON. This in turn gave way in 1857 to The Wesleyan-Methodist Sunday-School Hymn-Book, edited by WILLIAM H. RULE. This was followed in 1870 by The Methodist Scholars' Hymn-Book, and in 1879 by one of the best books available at the time, containing 589 hymns by many authors—The Methodist Sunday-School Hymn-Book. This was used also by the Methodist New Connexion. It was not replaced until 1911, by The Methodist School Hymnal, the joint product of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, the United Methodist Church, and the Wesleyan Reform Union. After Methodist Union this in turn was replaced by The School Hymn-Book of the Methodist Church.

The other uniting bodies had used their own children's hymnbooks until 1911, the Primitive Methodists beginning earlier and continuing later. Hugh Bourne published a Sunday-Scholar's Companion for them in 1823. This was twice revised and went through many editions, being replaced by one prepared at the request of the 1863 Conference, the Primitive Methodist Sabbath-School Hymn Book, edited by WILLIAM ANTLIFF. This gave place in 1879 to the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Union Hymn Book, which was succeeded in 1900 by the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Hymnal, which remained in use until after Methodist Union. The Bible Christians published The Child's Hymn Book for Sunday Scholar's Companion in 1832, and an enlarged edition appeared in 1863. For a time the Methodist New Connexion used Sunday School Melodies, but in 1862 this gave way to The Juvenile Hymn Book, edited by John Stokoe. From 1879 onwards the connexion used the official Sunday School hymnbooks of the Wesleyan Methodists. The United Methodist Free Churches published their Sunday-School Hymns from 1860, superseded in 1888 by Methodist Free Church School Hymns. As noted above, the United Methodist Church cooperated with the Wesleys in preparing the new Methodist School Hymnal of 1911.

IDAHO, sometimes called the "Gem State," is in the northwestern part of the United States. It is bounded by CANADA on the north, MONTANA on the east, UTAH and NEVADA on the south, and WASHINGTON and OREGON on the west. With an area of 83,557 square miles, it is about the size of England and Scotland combined. Originally Idaho was in the "Oregon Country," which was claimed by Russia, Spain, England and the United States. But due partly to its claim based on the explorations of Lewis and Clark in 1805-06, the United States became sole possessor of the territory in 1846. In 1860 gold was discovered on Orofino Creek, Idaho, and in 1862 in the Boise basin, bringing, in both instances, large numbers of immigrants to the region. The presence of miners and ranchers unsettled the Indians, resulting in Indian wars which were not concluded until around 1880. In 1884 the discovery of quartz in the northern part of Idaho brought many more immigrants, and on July 3, 1890, Idaho was admitted into the Union. Its most important industries are farming, livestock, mining, and lumbering.

The first Methodist sermon in what is now Idaho was delivered by JASON LEE at Fort Hall on June 15, 1834, while he was with a wagon train en route to Oregon. It was the first Methodist sermon preached west of the Rocky Mountains. Some thirty-eight years later WILLIAM WESLEY VAN ORSDELL (Brother Van) of Montana expanded his Montana Circuit to Salmon City, Idaho. In 1872 Van Orsdell began what is reputed to be the first Methodist church in Idaho. However, in the same year another preacher, R. M. Quinn, led in forming a Methodist society in Boise City. In 1876 the Idaho work became a part of the COLUMBIA RIVER CONFERENCE which included parts of Oregon, Washington, and "all of Idaho Territory lying directly north of Nevada." In 1884 the IDAHO CONFERENCE was organized. At the time it was composed of the counties of Union, Baker, and Grant in Oregon, and "all that part of Idaho Territory lying north of the State of Nevada and west and south of the Salmon River Range of mountains."

In 1924 the name of the conference was changed to Inter-Mountain, and it took in "all of the State of Idaho not embraced in the Columbia River Conference" together with six counties in Oregon—Baker, Malheur, Harney, Grant, Wallowa, and Union. In 1928 the name reverted to Idaho Conference.

The northern part of the state through Idaho County is in the PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE. Lemhi County became a part of the Montana Conference in 1961.

Noting that the Idaho and Oregon Conferences had voted that they would like to unite and form one conference, the 1968 Western JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE adopted an enabling act authorizing the merger.

In 1968 there were approximately 20,000 Methodists in Idaho, some 3,000 of them being in the Pacific Northwest Conference, about 400 in the MONTANA CONFERENCE, and the remainder in the Idaho Conference.

IDAHO CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church was organized Sept. 17, 1884, at Boise City with Bishop CHARLES H. FOWLER presiding. When formed, its territory included the part of IDAHO north of NEVADA and west and south of the Salmon River range of mountains, plus three counties in eastern OREGON—Union, Baker, and Grant. Four years later Malheur and Wallowa counties in Oregon were added. In 1892 the part of Idaho north of UTAH was incorporated in the conference. After that date there was little change in the conference boundaries, except that in 1961 Lemhi County became a part of the MONTANA CONFERENCE. From the beginning northern Idaho through Idaho County was a part of the Columbia River Conference and its successor, the PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE. (See IDAHO for account of early Methodism in the state.)

At the outset the Idaho Conference had twenty-four pastoral charges and only 632 members. In 1895 there were twenty-two preachers, thirty-three charges, and 1,520 members. The conference began with two districts, had one to three at different times between 1890 and 1922, and continued with two after the latter date. Because of pockets of population separated by mountains and deserts, five sub-district groupings of churches were made—Upper Snake River, Lower Snake River, Boise Valley, Magic Valley, and Grande Ronde in Oregon. The sub-districts have ten to fifteen churches each.

The Jason Lee Memorial Church in Blackfoot has a number of mementos of Lee's first Protestant sermon west of the Rocky Mountains. First Church, BOISE, one of six Methodist congregations in the city, has over 2,000 members and its edifice occupies a city block. The conference has one Japanese church at Ontario, Oregon. The church at LaGrande, organized in 1864, is the oldest Methodist congregation in Oregon.

The conference has three camps—Sawtooth north of Gooding, McCall at Payette Lakes, and Wallowa at Joseph, Oregon. The higher education work of the conference is channeled through an ecumenical board in the Idaho Council of Churches. Participating denominations share proportionately in a campus ministry at Idaho State University and five colleges.

In 1968 the Idaho Conference had 56 ministers, 48 pastoral charges, 62 churches, 18,719 members, and property valued at $9,800,238.

At its 1968 session the conference voted to unite in 1969 with the Oregon Conference, the new body to be called the Oregon-Idaho Conference.

IHUMATAO, Auckland, New Zealand, was an early mission station on the shores of the Manukau Harbor at Mangere. Following tribal warfare on the Manukau Peninsula in the mid-1840's, H. H. LAWRY arranged for the building of a mission house and school at Ihumatao. An educational work was done at Ihumatao which gradually outstripped Pehiakiura in importance. The property passed from Methodist hands in 1872, but the church still ministers to Maori people in the area.

ILIFF, JOHN WESLEY (1831-1878), American rancher and theological school benefactor, was born near Zanesville, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1831. His prosperous father wanted him to remain in OHIO, but the pull of the West prevailed and he set out for KANSAS with a gift of $500 from his father. Learning of the gold mining in COLORADO, he and two of his friends proceeded to DENVER. He eventually branched into the cattle business. His range stretched for more than 100 miles, with nine cow camps and many cowboys—all sober because Iliff held to the policy that cows and whiskey "didn't mix"—running 28,000 head of cattle.

On Jan. 11, 1864, he was married to Sarah Elizabeth Smith of Kansas, whom he met on a return visit there. They had a son, William Seward Iliff. His wife died within the year. On March 3, 1870, he was married to Elizabeth Sarah Fraser. They resided for a while in Cheyenne, Wyo., but removed to Colorado.

Iliff did not belong to a church and found it difficult to attend church on the frontier. He had been named for the founder of Methodism and had been reared a Methodist. Often in the cow camps he led his fellow-workers in prayer. He was deeply concerned about the shortage of ministers in the West and once mentioned to his wife "how grand it would be" if there could be established a theological school west of the Mississippi.

John Wesley Iliff died a wealthy man at the age of forty-six, on Feb. 9, 1878. His widow took over the estate and managed it well. About six years after her husband's death Mrs. Iliff married Bishop HENRY WHITE WARREN. She had her stepson, William Seward Iliff, and two daughters, Edna and Louise Iliff. A son, John Wesley Iliff, Jr., had died. Bishop Warren, a widower, had two daughters and a stepson.

Both the bishop and Mrs. Warren were interested in the then struggling UNIVERSITY OF DENVER. Mrs. Warren, keeping faith with her first husband's expressed interest in theological education, put up $100,000 for the University of Denver to establish under M. E. Church auspices a school to educate persons west of the Mississippi for the ministry. Conditions included the finding by the University of $50,000 additional for the school. The conditions were met and Iliff's son, William Seward Iliff, gave the university an additional $50,000 to erect a building to house the theological school. The cornerstone of ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY was laid June 8, 1892.

JOHN SNYDER

ILIFF, THOMAS CORWIN (1845-1918), American minister, was born at McLuney, Perry Co., Ohio, Oct. 26, 1845, the fourth of the seven children of Wesley and Harriet Teal Iliff. He was converted at the age of sixteen.

In June 1862, he enlisted with the Union forces and served three years, participating in sixty engagements including Sherman's march to the sea.

He graduated from Ohio University in 1870. Before his graduation he was licensed as a local preacher and later entered the OHIO CONFERENCE. He married a cousin of Bishop McCABE on March 22, 1881, and they started to MONTANA via CORINNE, UTAH, by train, then 500 miles by stagecoach to HELENA. That fall he was assigned to Missoula, where he built their first church. Forty years later he dedicated their next new church. In 1873 he went to Bozeman; in 1874 he was pastor at Virginia City and presiding elder of the S. E. Montana District. After this he was presiding elder of the Salt Lake District and superintendent of Utah Mission for twenty-five years. In 1901 he became assistant secretary of the CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY. He lectured widely on "Mormonism" and continued through 1917 to raise funds and dedicate churches. In May 1917, he dedicated the Havre and Redstone churches on W. W. VAN ORSDDEL's district in Montana; then the two attended the State EPWORTH LEAGUE Convention in Missoula, where Iliff had begun his Montana work forty-six years earlier. Iliff and Van Orsdel had been much in demand at the 1916 GENERAL CONFERENCE for their singing. They were called the "Heavenly Twins."

Iliff died in Denver, Feb. 23, 1918. Interment was in Mount Olivet Cemetery, SALT LAKE CITY. During his ministry he either dedicated or assisted in dedicating 600 churches and raised over $3,000,000 for that purpose. He won fame in 1899 by successfully opposing the seating of a polygamous congressman-elect from Utah.

ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY was founded in 1892 at Denver, Colorado, by Bishop HENRY WHITE WARREN, Mrs. Elizabeth Iliff Warren, William S. Iliff, and Miss Louise Iliff. Opened as a school under the UNIVERSITY OF DENVER, in 1904 it was established as a separate institution. It was named for JOHN WESLEY ILIFF, an early cattleman of the Western country. In 1966, his daughter, Miss Louise Iliff, one of the founders and a member of the board since 1904, died leaving most of her estate to the school.

The school offers the degrees of Master of Theology, Master of Religious Education, Master of Sacred Theology, and Doctor of Theology. The campus of Iliff is adjacent to the University of Denver, and Iliff students have access to the offerings of the university leading to M.A. and Ph.D. degrees. The governing board consists of forty-two trustees elected by the ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE on nomination of the Board of Trustees.

ILLINOIS is a state of the United States located south of the Great Lakes on the great central plain of North America. It covers an area of 57,926 square miles and in 1970 had a population of 10,977,908. Originally it was the home of a number of Indian tribes, most importantly the Iliniwek tribe of the Algonquians, from whom the state's name is derived.

The first non-Indian settlers were the French under LaSalle, who established a settlement near present-day PEORIA. Illinois remained French until 1763, when it was transferred to Britain by the Treaty of Paris. In 1772 Jean Baptiste Pointe DeSable, a black man, established a fur trading center at what was to become CHICAGO. After the War for American Independence, Illinois became part of the United States. It was recognized as a territory in 1809 and admitted to the Union in 1818.

Into this land of Roman Catholic hegemony, Protestants entered slowly. James Smith, a Baptist preacher, came to New Design in 1787. Among his converts were Captain Joseph Ogle and his family. In 1793, Joseph Lillard of KENTUCKY became the first Methodist minister to preach in Illinois. He organized a class at New Design and appointed Captain Ogle as its leader. In 1797 Hosea Rigg, the first local preacher in Illinois, settled in American Bottom, St. Clair County. He found Ogle's class disorganized, and he re-formed it. In 1803 Rigg visited the WESTERN CONFERENCE in session at Mount Gerizim, Ky., to ask for a minister. BENJAMIN YOUNG was appointed at that time as missionary to Illinois.

In 1805 the first church building by Methodists was erected in the Goshen settlement south of Edwardsville. It was named Bethel Church. In 1806 JESSE WALKER first entered Illinois. Under his leadership the first CAMP MEETING in the state was held in 1807. This meeting resulted in the organization of the first permanent Methodist society. In 1812 Illinois became part of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE, a relationship it retained until 1816 when it was transferred to the MISSOURI CONFERENCE. By 1813 the work in Illinois had grown so that it was made a district, with Jesse Walker as the first presiding elder. During these years Indian treaties opened the land to white settlement.

The Illinois Conference, comprising Illinois and Indiana, was formed in 1824. The first session was held at the home of William Padfield, St. Clair County, with Bishop ROBERT R. ROBERTS presiding. Bishop MCKENDREE and SOULE were also present. There were ten circuits in Illinois proper, and 3,212 members were reported for the conference as a whole. In 1832 Indiana was separated from the Illinois Conference, but the Northwest Territory had by this time become an Illinois responsibility. In 1840 the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE was formed to include all of the state north of the Illinois River, along with WISCONSIN, MINNESOTA and IOWA. In 1852 the SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE was organized in the southern third of the state. In 1856 the Peoria Conference, which became the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE in 1859, was carved out of the Illinois and Rock River Conferences. Thus by 1860 the M. E. Church was represented by four annual conferences in Illinois.

Other branches of Methodism were formed in the state prior to the Civil War. The first M. P. CHURCH was organized in 1829 in Morgan County. The A.M.E. CHURCH entered in the 1840's, and its first church, Quinn Chapel, was established in 1847 in Chicago.

The EVANGELICAL CHURCH arrived in Illinois in 1834, in the person of Daniel Stanger, who settled on the Des Plaines River northwest of Chicago. Over several years settlers from PENNSYLVANIA joined him, and in 1837 the first class was formed in Aux Plaine, Du Page County. Jacob Boaz preached the first sermon in Stanger's home in 1837. In 1838 the Illinois Mission was constituted by the Western Conference. In 1839 the first church was built near Wheeling, Du Page County. The ILLINOIS CONFERENCE was organized in 1844. The first session was in 1845 with Bishop SEYBERT presiding. There were eighteen traveling ministers to initiate the conference work.

The UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST were first represented in Illinois by John Denham and Joshua Williams, who worked in McLean County in 1830-31. The Illinois Conference was established in 1845, and the first session held at Mackinac Church near Lexington on August 20, with Bishop RUSSEL presiding. There were seventeen ministers in the traveling connection. In 1853 the conference was divided, and the Rock River Conference was created in the northern part of the state. The Central Illinois Conference was formed in 1867, but in 1901 it united with the Rock River Conference to form the Northern Illinois Conference.

The M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH was organized in Illinois in 1864 when some Southern sympathizers, expelled members of the M. E. Church, formed the "Illinois Christian Association." In 1867 the group voted to join the M. E. Church, South. The first session of the new conference was held at Nashville, Ill., Oct. 16, 1867, with Bishop DAVID S. DOGGETT presiding.

Other branches of Methodism entering Illinois and forming conferences which still exist were the FREE METHODIST CHURCH (1861), the WESLEYAN CHURCH (1845), the C.M.E. CHURCH, and the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH.

From 1939 to 1968 three national mergers and several regional and local ones consolidated the conferences of the M. E. Church, M. E. Church, South, the United Brethren in Christ, The Evangelical Church, and the M. P. Church into the present NORTHERN ILLINOIS, Southern Illinois, and Central Illinois Conferences of The United Methodist Church. Included in these mergers were a part of the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE of the former Central Jurisdiction (TMC) and various segments of the Swedish, German, and Danish-Norwegian work in the state.

Among the many educational institutions in the state established by Methodists are: GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (Evanston, 1855), EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (Naperville, 1875), NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY (Evanston, 1855), ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (Bloomington, 1850), MCKENDREE COLLEGE (Lebanon, 1828), Illinois Female College (Jacksonville, 1847), NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE (Naperville, 1861), MACMURRAY COLLEGE (Jacksonville, 1930), and KENDALL COLLEGE (Evanston, 1934). The first WESLEY FOUNDATION in American Methodism was established at the University of Illinois in 1913 by JAMES C. BAKER (later bishop).

A branch of the Methodist BOOK CONCERN was established in Chicago in 1852 and began publication of the Northwestern Christian Advocate in 1853. Benevolent institutions include the Methodist Hospital (Peoria), Wesley Memorial Hospital (Chicago), Holden Hospital (Carbondale), Alton Memorial Hospital, and the Chicago Deaconesses Home.

In 1970 Illinois Methodism reported 500,500 members in 1,639 congregations.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE (EUB) embraced the entire geographical area of ILLINOIS and was divided into three superintendents' districts: Eastern, Western, and Southern. It was formed in 1953 by merging the two state-wide conferences of the former Church of the United Brethren in Christ and The Evangelical Church.

The Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Church had its beginning in Du Page County in 1837, when Jacob Boaz, a circuit rider, formed a class of twenty-eight members at Des Plaines. Two other classes were formed in the southern part of the state in Wabash County. In 1838, the Illinois area was constituted a mission of the Western Conference, later called the Ohio Conference; and in 1839, the first church building in Illinois was erected east of Wheeling. The Illinois Conference, which included appointments in INDIANA and WISCONSIN, was organized in 1844, one year before the organization of the Illinois Conference of the United Brethren Church. The division of the denomination in 1891 into the Evangelical Association and The United Evangelical Church caused the formation of two state-wide conferences of Evangelicals until they were united in 1927.

The Illinois Conference of the United Brethren Church was formed by changing boundaries within six different conferences. The Wabash Conference in Indiana was the parent of the work in Illinois, which began in 1831 when John Denham organized a class in the Moats home in McLean County, north of Bloomington. In 1858, it was divided into the Lower and Upper Wabash Conferences, both of which extended into Illinois. Rock River Conference, in northern Illinois, and the Central Illinois Conference were organized in 1853. Illinois Conference, in the western part of the state, was organized in 1865 and Southern Illinois Mission Conference was organized in 1872. From all these conferences the Illinois Conference finally came to embrace the entire state. The last realignment took place in 1918 when the state line was made the boundary for conferences in Illinois. The first conference in Illinois was held in the "Mackinaw Church," near Lexington, Aug. 28, 1845. At the time of the merger of the Evangelical and United Brethren Conferences (1953), a small number of churches in Illinois that had been part of an Indiana Conference were transferred into the Illinois Conference.

The Evangelical Association established two educational institutions in the northern part of the state. NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE, founded in 1864 at Plainfield and known as Northwestern College, was moved to Naperville in 1870. It is a liberal arts college with an enrollment of approximately 900. A fully accredited seminary with an enrollment of 105, EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY was established in Naperville in 1873.

Three educational institutions were founded within the state by the United Brethren in Christ. Two were very short lived: Blandinsville Seminary, founded in Blandinsville, McDonough County, in 1850 survived only five years; a little known academy started in 1882 at Dover in Bureau County apparently failed for lack of support. The story of Westfield College in Clark County is quite different. Founded as an academy in Westfield in 1861, it became a liberal arts college in 1865 and graduated a fine group of clerical and lay leaders in the central west before it was discontinued in 1915 because of an inadequate endowment and a decline in student patronage.

Christian education has received strong emphasis through Sunday church school, children, and youth activities, and summer camps located at three major sites: Oakdale in Stephenson County, south of Freeport; Seager, near Naperville; East Bay Camp on Lake Bloomington in McLean County. The latter is an interdenominational camp which the Illinois Conference has supported since the early 1930's.

In 1966, the Illinois Conference had 233 organized congregations in 181 charges with 179 elders under appointment and more than 45,000 members. Property value amounted to $23,381,618 and total giving for all purposes was $3,555,877.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE (MP). Methodist Protestantism in ILLINOIS began Feb. 13, 1829, when two preachers, Reddick H. Horn and James Sims, and thirteen laymen organized a society in the home of James Ross in Morgan County. This work was placed under the guidance of the OHIO CONFERENCE (MP), which had its first session in October 1828. In 1836 the Ohio Conference was divided and the Illinois Conference was constituted. The first session was on October 25 at Alton, Ill. Elijah McDaniel was the first president of the conference. There were 344 members being served by twelve ministers.

In 1843 the Northern Illinois Conference was set off from the Illinois Conference. The first session was held at Princeton, and P. J. Strong was the first president. The Southern Illinois Conference was set off in 1853, and held its first session September 3 at Brooks Campground, where Richard Wright was elected president. When most of the northern conferences of the M. P. Church designated themselves as the Methodist Church in 1866, this Southern Illinois Conference adhered to it, and a second Southern Illinois Conference, which associated with the M. P. Church, was formed. E. C. G. Nickens was prominent in organizing this second conference. The two conferences merged in 1877 when the Methodist Church and the M. P. Church united to form again the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH covering the entire nation.

In 1868 the Illinois Conference merged with part of the Iowa Conference to form the Illinois and Des Moines Mission Conference. This mission conference was absorbed by the Northern Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri Conferences in 1877. In 1898 a German work was begun when the Methodist Protestants organized the Chicago German Mission. This mission was absorbed by Northern Illinois in 1904.

In 1923 the Southern Illinois Conference and the Northern Illinois Conference merged to form the Illinois Conference. This Conference lasted until unification in 1939, when it merged to help form the Illinois conferences of The Methodist Church. At the time of merger the Illinois Conference had thirty-eight charges with 3,982 members and twenty-three ministers.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South was formed as a result of disagreement between northern and southern sympathizers in southern ILLINOIS during the Civil War. Many of the southern sympathizers were expelled from the M. E. Church. At a meeting at Lacon, Ill., Jan. 21, 1864, the Illinois Christian Association was formed. A second group met at Salem, Ill., June 22, 1864, and formed the Evangelical Church. On Sept. 12, 1865, a joint meeting of these two bodies was held at Xenia, which resulted in the establishment of the Christian Union Church.

On June 8, 1867, following a year of negotiations, the Christian Union Church voted to join the M. E. Church, South. The first session of the new conference was held Oct. 16, 1867, with Bishop DAVID S. DOGGETT presiding.

The first church building in the Illinois Conference was at Xenia. Slow but steady growth in the face of a generally hostile environment was the history of this conference over the seventy-year period of its existence. In 1939 the Illinois Conference became part of the SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. At that time it had two districts, thirty-one pastoral charges and eighty-five churches. There were twenty-three ministers and twenty-eight local preachers serving 7,690 members.

ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Bloomington, Illinois, was founded in 1850 as Illinois University. The name was changed in a few months when it came under the sponsorship of the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. It was chartered in 1853. It is organized as a College of Liberal Arts and four professional schools: music (1911), art (1946), drama (1947), and nursing (1958). Its School of Law, opened in 1874, was closed in 1926. The university emphasizes undergraduate work, although some graduate work is offered.

Listed among its founders was PETER CARTWRIGHT. JOHN WESLEY POWELL, distinguished naturalist of the nineteenth century and discoverer of the Grand Canyon, was once a member of the faculty. Chaddock College, Quincy, Ill., was merged with Illinois Wesleyan in 1874, and Hedding College of Abingdon, Ill., in 1928.

Degrees given are the B.A., B.S., B.M., B.M.E., B.S.M. (Bachelor of Sacred Music), B.S. in Nursing, B.F.A. (Fine Arts), M.M. (Music), M.M.E. (Music Education), and M.S.T. (Science Teaching). The governing board has thirty-six trustees and twelve official visitors, nominated by the board and elected by the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE. The official visitors are vested with the authority to nominate the president of the university.

IM, YOUNG BIN (1900-), Korean minister, was born on Feb. 15, 1900, at Whang Hai Do in what is now North Korea. He graduated in 1917 from Songdo High School, founded by the first member of the M. E. Church, South, in Korea. For the next three years he taught in Songdo Primary School. From 1923 to 1926 he served as secretary to A. W. WASSON, president of Songdo High School. He attended VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY from 1926 to 1929. When Wasson returned to America and a professorship at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Young Bin Im transferred there and received the A.B. degree. In June, 1932 he received the M.A. degree (with a thesis on a "Comparative Study of the Teachings of Jesus and Confucius"), and in August, 1932 received the B.D. degree. Returning to Korea he was appointed a staff member, Board of Education, Korean Methodist Church, editing the Korean Methodist Bulletin and the Korean edition of The Upper Room, and serving as co-editor of a Korean version of The Abingdon Commentary. He was ordained in 1935. In 1940 he was appointed a staff member by the Editorial Board of the Korean Literature Society. From 1941 to 1945 he was a professor in the Korean Methodist Theological Seminary, and in the following year was an instructor in the Military Language School established by the U.S. Armed Forces. In 1947 he was appointed general secretary of the Korean Bible Society, a position he held until retirement in 1966. In this work he supervised (1) the revision of the Bible in Korean, using the new spelling system of the language called Hankul; (2) the distribution of over 800,000 copies of the scriptures to the armed forces; (3) wide distribution of the scriptures among prisoners, lepers, and orphans; (4) distribution of the entire Bible in Braille to 30,000 literate persons who were blind. Altogether, during his secretaryship, 2,000,000 copies of scriptures were distributed. As secretary he visited England, America, Scotland, India, Australia, and New Zealand, lecturing on Bible Society work. He is the author of several books for Sunday school and Bible teachers and the translator of two others.

In 1970 he and his wife moved to San Francisco, Calif., to live near their daughter and her family.

IMPOSITION OF HANDS (Lat. imponere; to place upon, or lay upon, or to impose), denotes the placing upon or laying on of hands as a religious rite, especially in connection with the admission of persons into the church; and also in the ordination of persons into the diaconate, priesthood, eldership or episcopate.

The action is mentioned in the Old Testament in connection with the patriarchs who would bless their children in this manner; and it is also indicated in the consecration of priests. The laying on of hands was continued by the early church, and when Matthias was chosen to take the place of Judas, the Apostles evidently laid their hands on him and so inducted him into their ranks. Certainly when the deacons were chosen (Acts 6:6), the Apostles laid their hands upon these and so ordained them. In the Roman Catholic and Eastern Churches this rite is employed in the Sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation, Extreme Unction and Holy Orders, and in many blessings which the bishop in certain situations is allowed to give.

In the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, the bishop places his hands upon the heads of persons who are to be confirmed, and also imposes his hands upon deacons when he ordains them. In the ordination of priests in these churches, the bishop is joined by other priests, who thus form a presbytery and so conduct the rite.

JOHN WESLEY ordained by his own hands WHATCOAT and VASEY, and thus set them apart (upon one day to become DEACONS, and upon the next day ELDERS). He did not favor nor retain the term priest in the Methodist Connection—he “formed a presbytery” with THOMAS COKE and JAMES CREIGHTON, as he tells us in his Journal. These men then laid their hands in ordination upon Whatcoat and Vasey. On the next day after these ordinations, Wesley imposed his hands upon Thomas Coke, who was already a priest, and so “set him apart” to be a superintendent for the Methodists in America. He then sent over with Coke and his attending presbyters the Ordinal of the Church of England which calls for the imposition of the hands of a bishop in the ordaining of a deacon; and of the hands of a bishop and elders (priests) in ordaining an elder (or priest); and of the hands of a superintendent and elders together in setting apart a man for the office of superintendent—or bishop, as American Methodism now calls it. The Rite of ORDINATION from that day to this in American Methodism has been conducted always with the imposition of hands as described above. (See also CONSECRATION.)

Within recent years, first in the M. E. Church and subsequently in The Methodist Church, imposition of hands has been used by pastors when they receive members into full church membership. Wesley provided no form for the reception of members in the abridged Prayer Book which he sent to American Methodism, and it is not known by what rite or ceremony members were received into the early M. E. Church—that is up until after the middle of the nineteenth century, when regular “forms for the reception of members” were placed in the Methodist ritual. These forms, however, did not specify the imposition of hands, and in the M. E. Church, South it was customary for the minister to receive new members by giving them what had become traditional as the “right hand of fellowship.” This was also the traditional practice in the E.U.B. Church. However, the revised Ritual of The Methodist Church, following unification, suggested and now directly specifies that the minister shall lay his hands “upon the head of each severally” as persons are received into church membership, and by this act give them a formal investiture into membership itself.

The British Practice. The British Methodist Conference at Wesley's death consisted of the traveling preachers in full connexion, the great majority of whom were nominal laymen, though they were engaged in full-time ministerial work, for only a few had been ordained by Wesley by the laying on of hands. Significantly ordination was allowed to lapse at this time, though a few preachers proceeding to missions overseas were ordained by imposition of hands. New traveling preachers were simply admitted to full connexion by vote of the Conference. Following the PLAN OF PACIFICATION of 1795, these traveling preachers increasingly assumed in Methodist preaching houses the ministry of the sacraments as well as that of the Word. In 1836 increased awareness of the fact that the Methodist Connexion was in fact a separate Christian Church, and no longer a Religious Society, led to the adoption of the New Testament rite of laying on of hands at ordination to the separated ministry, and this has continued since, though there were some variations in usage in the less ecclesiastical separated Methodist Connexions. Thus the ministerial continuity of British Methodism lies in the continuity of discipline and doctrine exercised by a closely-knit corporate Conference, rather than in the symbol of an unbroken succession of imposition of hands.

British Methodist ordinations by custom take place at the time of the Conference, the service being presided over by the President for the year, assisted by the Secretary of the Conference. Additional services on the same night are presided over by ex-Presidents. Each ordinand is allowed to bring with him one supporting minister, and as each group of ordinands kneels all the respective supporting ministers, together with the President and Secretary, lay hands on each, thus “forming a presbytery.” Deaconesses are also ordained by imposition of hands, at the hand of the President of the Conference, and the Warden of the Order, who are ministers, and of a senior deaconess. The participation of Methodist missions in united churches in various countries, having episcopally ordained ministries, involves that ministerial missionaries are now received into full connexion at home, but proceed for ordination to the church abroad which is to be their scene of labor.

IMPRESA METODISTA, publishing house of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, began under the name of Casa Publicadora, financed by the sale of bonds and under the initiative of J. W. WOLLING in 1894. It was first located in SÃO PAULO, but in 1896 it moved to RIO DE JANEIRO, where it functioned unevenly with limited equipment until 1913. In that year, under John Wesley Clay, an experienced printer sent from the United States to act as manager, it was moved to JUIZ DE FORA in the State of Minas Gerais. With substantial aid from the American church, its equipment and efficiency were increased, and in 1920 it return to São Paulo where under the name of Imprensa Metodista it occupied new quarters especially built for it. Clay returned to the States in 1925, leaving the work, now greatly developed, in the hands of Claude L. Smith. Under his direction and that of successive Brazilian managers, the work of the press expanded so that the installations in São Paulo became inadequate. With the Week of Dedication offerings and with the moral and financial support of JAMES E. ELLIS, executive secretary of the Board of Missions for South America, land was acquired in the suburban community of São Bernardo do Campo, near the theological seminary, and the James E. Ellis Building was erected. There the Imprensa has been adequately installed since 1957. A bookstore is maintained in downtown São Paulo.

The Imprensa publishes the official periodicals of the Methodist Church of Brazil, books and literature for all of the General Boards, and the official documents of the church. It also serves Brazilian Protestantism, printing church school literature, and the official hymnals for the Evangelical Confederation of Brazil, Testaments and portions for the Bible Society of Brazil, and some non-denominational Christian literature. Some outside commercial printing work is also undertaken.

The Imprensa Metodista is administered by a board of nine trustees elected by the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil and Central Council, and through a manager elected annually by the trustees. It is one of the few institutions of the church that has juristic personality distinct from that of the Association of the Methodist Church.

INCH, JAMES ROBERT (1835-1912), Canadian layman and educator, was born in Petersville, New Brunswick, April 29, 1835. He was educated at Gagetown High School and the Provincial Teacher Training School, from which he graduated in 1850.

In 1854 he joined the staff of the MOUNT ALLISON Male Academy. Thus began a term as teacher and administrator at Mount Allison which was to last until 1891 and left its mark on all three of the Mount Allison institutions. During the first few years of the university's existence, he completed his education, receiving the B.A. in 1864 and the M.A. in 1867. He became vice-principal of the Ladies' College in 1864, principal in 1869, and president of the university in 1878. He taught French, rhetoric, German, logic, and English literature.

During his fourteen years with the Ladies' College, the heavy debt encumbering the institution was paid off, and the buildings were renovated, enlarged, and refurbished. His thirteen years as president of the university saw an increase in the endowment fund from $35,000 to $100,000, and the erection of Centennial Hall.

In 1891 the government of New Brunswick appointed Inch chief superintendent of education and president of the senate of the university, a position which he held until his retirement in 1909. After his retirement he lived in Sackville until his death.

He was honored by Mount Allison (LL.D., 1878) and by the University of New Brunswick (LL.D., 1909). He was vice-president of the Dominion Educational Association (1895), member of the Geographic Board of Canada (1905), and delegate to the Imperial Educational Conference (1907). During his term of office he contributed much to the school system of New Brunswick.

Through the years Inch was an informed and active layman of the Methodist Church. A delegate to all General Conferences from 1878 to his death, he served on the church Union Committee of 1906, and the board of management of the Church Educational Society. He was a liberal supporter of the BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY, and served on the executive of the Canadian Auxiliary.

His wife, the former Mary Alice Dunn of Keswick, was a great help to him in his work with the students. She predeceased him in 1904.

INDEPENDENT AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was organized in 1897 at Jacksonville, Fla., by eight ministers of the A.M.E. CHURCH who found themselves in disagreement with their relationship to the presiding elder. They organized in a similar manner to the parent body, with bishops, quarterly, annual and general conferences. The annual conference ordained deacons, and the general conference ordained elders and bishops as well as providing general oversight of the church.

The church retained the doctrines of the parent body, and the Book of Discipline. In 1936 the church reported twenty-nine congregations in five states—FLORIDA, NEW JERSEY, VIRGINIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, and GEORGIA—with 1,064 members. Later statistics are not available.

INDEPENDENT METHODISTS. Owing to its isolation the Methodist society in Warrington, Lancashire, regularly held cottage meetings and was dependent upon its own resources for office bearers, government, and edification. In 1796 proposals reached the society that these cottage meetings should be discontinued. One such meeting disregarded this mandate and so became no longer regarded as part of the society. Yet it continued to meet and make provision for its own growth; there was no formal separation, but by continuing to meet the members formed a separate society, assembling as Methodists in a grocer's shop in Bridge Street. They resolved that there should be no paid ministry and that the society should be self-governing, independent of any external authority. They sought to copy the pattern of the early church. In a short time this meeting was strengthened by the addition of some members of the Society of Friends. As yet without a distinct name, the members of this meeting began to adopt the Quaker mode of speech and dress, and eventually became known as the QUAKER METHODISTS—by some, however, the name "Singing Quakers" was used. At the end of five years, three new meetings had been formed in Cheshire. PETER PHILLIPS gave shape to the societies. In 1802 the Quaker Methodists built their first chapel at Friars Green, Warrington. A number of other societies in the area, not bearing the same designations but with common convictions concerning the ideas of self-government and an unpaid ministry, eventually coalesced, taking the title of Independent Methodists. Into this new denomination the Warrington society of Quaker Methodists became merged. They remain a small independent Methodist denomination in England.

INDIA. The India which challenged the first Methodist missionaries in the nineteenth century included both of the countries now known as India and PAKISTAN. On Aug. 15, 1947, India was divided into these two autonomous sovereign dominions when granted independence from Great Britain. Later the Dominion of India became the Republic of India on January 26, 1950 with its capital in New Delhi. It encompasses about four-fifths of the area formerly called India. Pakistan, divided into two separate sections in east and west, occupies the remainder of the peninsula with its capital in Rawalpindi.

The area of the Republic of India is 1,261,813 square miles. Its population in 1968 was estimated at more than 511,000,000, of whom about 12,000,000 are Christians and just over 600,000 are Methodists.

Through much of its long history of over four thousand years, India received a steady flow of immigration from the northeast with varied influences. From the northwest came both invasions and immigrations. Best known among these immigrants were the Aryans who eventually controlled upper India and the broad plains of the Ganges-Jumna River system. There was much intermingling of peoples. New dialects were formed and developed into languages. The cult of Hinduism slowly developed, characterized by a multiplicity of deities. The Hindu writings grew into the corpus of sacred scriptures, and the social order of caste, displaying uncounted ramifications in its structure, became the actual creed of orthodox Hinduism which pervades the country and forms a nexus to make it one.

Not all the peoples of India became Hindu. There has always been a residuum of animists. There is also a minority of Muslims descended from the Muslim invaders and converts made during the Mughal rule. Efforts to reform Hinduism have resulted in new religions such as Buddhism, Jainism and Sikhism, and in new sects such as the Brahma Samaj and the Arya Samaj.

European influences reached India with the arrival of Vasco da Gama at Calicut in 1498. A decade later, Goa, on the west coast south of Bombay, was captured by the

YADGIRI METHODIST CHURCH

Portuguese whose control there continued until the Republic of India evicted them in 1962. Francis Xavier made Goa the base of his widespread Christianizing order, claiming thousands in India. French, Dutch and British traders followed hard upon the Portuguese.

The British East India Company was founded in 1600 for the development of trade with India and the Far East. Fortified trading posts were set up at BOMBAY, CALCUTTA and MADRAS. Wars were fought with the contending European powers and with the native princes, resulting in British dominance. In 1826 Lord Amherst announced in Delhi that hereafter the Company would be the paramount power in India. It remained so until 1857.

However, a clause in the charter of the company prohibited it from sending out missionaries to India and it gave no help to missionary work. So long as there were no innovations in religion it was felt that India might continue to be governed with ease.

The charter was subject to review by Parliament at intervals of twenty years and to such revision as seemed necessary. In 1813, when the charter came up for renewal, in response to 900 petitions, Parliament provided that Christian teachers might reside in any part of the company's territories. The first missionary of the American Board had been prevented from landing in Calcutta and had returned to Bombay. Now he could venture forth again.

This policy was further liberalized in the revision of the charter in 1833, at which time missionaries of the American Board from CEYLON crossed over and opened work of this mission in Madura.

Although the policy of the company was unsympathetic and almost hostile to any evangelistic work, certain British officers initiated reforms of practices which were abhorrent to the conscientious Christian. Lord William Bentinck, Governor General from 1828 to 1835, instituted reforms to suppress the practice of inhuman rites and thagi, to forbid the aiding and abetting of sati or the burning of a widow on her husband's funeral pyre, and to forbid infanticide. Other officers were zealous in organizing prayer groups among their men and in conducting private evangelistic campaigns among servants and tradesmen.

The National Uprising of 1857 (commonly known as the Sepoy Mutiny) resulted from a culmination of many fears and grievances. Most prominent of these was the general apprehension and suspicion that it was the deliberate object of the government to convert Indians to Christianity by subtle means, both fair and foul. This was evidenced in the enforcement of rules which cut across lines of caste and social acceptance. This uprising seriously threatened British sovereignty. After it was suppressed, the East India Company was dissolved and India became a crown colony with a Secretary of State directly responsible for the government of the country. Assurance was given to the people that the Crown disclaimed any right or desire to impose its convictions on any subjects and at the same time declared that none should be favored because of their religion but all should have equal and impartial protection by laws.

When THOMAS COKE sailed from England for Ceylon with his group of pioneer missionaries in December 1813, the establishment of British Wesleyan Methodist work in India was planned. A license had been obtained from the East India Company permitting one of the group to preach in India, preferably at Madras. The death of Coke on shipboard handicapped the enterprise. His companions, including among them JAMES LYNCH, continued on to Ceylon, continuing their efforts there. In January 1817, Lynch left Ceylon for Madras. He preached at several places en route and was well received by the British community in Madras where he preached for the first time on March 2, 1817. A Methodist society of twelve persons awaited him, led by a merchant named Dumford. There were also some small Methodist groups among British soldiers in South India. These were bound together, and the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY thus founded the first organized Methodist effort in India.

Development of the British Wesleyan work was slow, limited by lack of funds, delays, misunderstandings, accidents and illness of personnel. Work with the English-speaking communities and the necessity of providing much self-support made difficult the acquiring of language and the approach to Indian national groups. This was particularly true in Madras.

However, since the British Mission was located in South India it suffered little from the National Uprising, and the establishment of Crown rule with emphasis on education aided the growth and training of an indigenous ministry. A careful study of indigenous education at the beginning of the nineteenth century had revealed that although there was considerable opportunity for education in general, there was almost no education of females and that the opportunity which existed was not for those of the low or depressed classes. The filling of this gap was a challenge to government and mission alike.

During the first half century in the Madras area, much was accomplished for the English-speaking community. The second half century witnessed much more rapid growth in the vernacular sectors of work, development in extent of territory, and establishment of the indigenous church. Mackenzie Cobban and William Goudie were leaders, and the work increased from 256 members and two Indian ministers in 1880, to 2,242 members with 1,200 baptized persons under seventeen Indian ministers in 1913.

Expansion beyond the Madras District pushed the work south to Nagappattinam and Tiruchchirappalli and westward to Bangalore in Mysore State, where by 1880 the membership was about 600 with more than 2,000 on probation and 5,000 pupils in the schools. By the turn of the century the Mysore District had a membership approaching three thousand with an equal number in training. Two high schools and seventy village schools were established, and the Mission Press turned out over three million pages of Christian literature annually. Hospitals were located at Hassan and Mysore City.

The extension of British Methodism into Hyderabad State, northwest of Madras, occurred in the mid-1870's, when a sergeant in the British army, a class leader and local preacher, arrived at the cantonment at Secunderabad. He wrote to Henry Little, missionary at Madras, and WILLIAM BURGESS was sent to survey and establish the work. From the start in 1878 to the Centennial in 1913, the sergeant's small class of soldiers had grown to 183 preaching places, 15 missionaries, 226 Indian staff, 3,663 members, 7,512 members on trial, a community of 17,000 and 4,134 pupils enrolled in schools.

Early work in or near Calcutta was so difficult and fruitless that it was abandoned. Finally, about 1880, a group of missionaries was sent, and foundations were laid and success began. Besides Calcutta, centers were located at Bankura, Barrackpore, and among the primitive Santals in the jungle country west of the Ganges. By 1913, there were 3,000 members and baptized probationers, and 2,000 in schools.

The Lucknow and Benares District (now Varanasi and Lucknow) was constituted in 1879, having early been a weak offshoot of the Calcutta enterprise. By separation from distant Calcutta, and concentration of effort in Lucknow, Benares, and Faizabad, the work was cultivated. At the beginning of the Mass Movement period, earlier contacts with the primitive Gonds and depressed Chamars, and particularly the Doms of Benares, showed rapid increases. In 1892, a Brahman convert, trained in the ministry, went to the Fiji Islands to work with the Indian coolies employed there. In 1909, two Australians went to this district to study the language and open an Australian Methodist Mission.

The first British Methodist work at Bombay was among the troops. Wesleyan preachers as military chaplains performed notable service, not only for the men in their commands, but also for the English civilians where they were stationed.

In 1885, William Burgess of the Wesleyan Mission and General A. H. C. Campbell of the British Army held evangelistic services for the employees of the railroad at Igatpuri, near Bombay. Among the converts was a Hindu, Samuel Mahator. He began preaching among his own Marathi-speaking people. His congregations and schools grew in number and influence. Finally in 1913 his work was incorporated into the Wesleyan Mission.

By 1914 the British Wesleyan Methodists had carved out fields which they had divided administratively into seven districts—(1) Madras, (2) Negapatam and Trichinopoly, (3) Mysore, (4) Hyderabad, (5) Bengal, (6) Lucknow and Benares, (7) Bombay and the Panjab.

In later years British Methodism grew to large proportions in the south of India. In 1947 the (United) Church of South India was formed, composed of the Presbyterian, Anglican, and British Wesleyan Methodist missions. The Methodist contribution was 175,000 members, a much larger worshiping community and many schools. This United Church holds fraternal relations with the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

The districts in the north remained in the British church; these had more than 4,000 members and many more baptized adherents, over a hundred churches, a college, four high schools, over thirty-five village schools, three hospitals and a number of leprosy units.

The decade of the coming of the missionaries of the M. E. Church to India was marked with events and developments that carried consequence for both the country and for missions. In the renewal of the East India Company's charter in 1853, there was issued a despatch which gave impetus to secondary education and, indirectly, to primary education. It led to the establishment of universities, the grant-in-aid system and to provincial departments of education. Under the terms of this despatch the new Mission was able to establish its extensive educational program.

In 1851 the telegraph was introduced and soon became used to connect the main cities. Postage rates had been so high as to be prohibitive. Then India joined the Latin Union which was the first to fix international rates.

Railroad construction commenced in 1853. With the railway came bridges across the rivers. The large irrigation canals were constructed, improving agriculture but damaging the superstitious belief that the holy Ganges River would not allow itself to be channeled by foreigners.

The M. E. Church sent its first missionaries to India in 1856. These were Rev. and Mrs. WILLIAM BUTLER. When James Lynch, who had carried the British Wesleyan Methodist work to India in 1817, returned to IRELAND after thirty years of labor, William Butler served as his assistant in circuit work. From Lynch, Butler caught the spark of missionary zeal for India. When the Board called for volunteers in 1856, Butler, having emigrated to America and joined the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE, came forward to take up the enterprise.

The Butlers reached Calcutta in September and decided to enter Oudh and Rohilkhand provinces, a compact area having but one major language. The chief cities were Lucknow and Bareilly (Bareilly). Butler obtained the aid of JOEL JANVIER as interpreter and helper. Janvier was an Indian minister of the Presbyterian Mission which had trained and educated him as an orphan. He served Methodism until his death in 1900. They reached Lucknow in November but proceeded to Bareilly where property was available.

The National Uprising broke out in 1857, centering in this section. The Butlers escaped to Naini Tal in the Himalayan foothills but Butler lost all his personal effects including his library. Janvier escaped with his wife and child, walking mostly at night, 300 miles to Allahabad. Rev. and Mrs. RALPH PIERCE and Rev. and Mrs. JAMES L. HUMPHREY arrived during the Uprising, joining Butler in the hills.

After the Uprising subsided and a crown colony status was proclaimed for India, the Americans resumed work in both Bareilly and Lucknow. Other recruits arrived in 1859 including EDWIN W. PARKER, JAMES W. WAUGH, and JAMES M. THOBURN, later a bishop. These continued in service for forty years.

The period of 1856-64 was devoted to pioneering and foundation laying. In 1860 converts were made from the Muzabi Sikhs from which the first large group came in the Mass Movement of later decades. Waugh set up a press in Bareilly in 1861, moving it to Lucknow in 1866. It became the outstanding press for many missions throughout India.

Sufficient growth was achieved by 1864 to organize an Annual Conference of three districts. The work radiated from nine centers: Bareilly, 1856; Naini Tal, 1857; Lucknow, 1858; Moradabad, 1858; Shahjahanpur, 1859; Bijnor, 1859; Budaun (Budaun), 1859; Sitapur, 1861; Rae Bareilly, 1864. Property valued at $73,000 had been accumulated by 1864. There were nineteen mission houses, six schools, ten chapels, two orphanages, and the press. Membership approached 200 and there were 1,300 enrolled students. At the 1864 Conference, four Indian ministers, including Janvier, were received into Conference membership and ordained. The Indian ministers were granted "equal dignity, privilege and responsibility with those sent from America." The establishment of a trained and responsible indigenous ministry was the most important development of the first decade of work. In 1865, Butler returned to America.

The period following 1864 was marked by rapid expansion. Thoburn was the leader, and he moved beyond the first provincial boundaries. When he passed the Ganges River in 1870, he declared he had crossed Methodism's "India Rubicon." WILLIAM TAYLOR (later bishop) arrived on a preaching tour, and his aggressive evangelism carried the work into new areas and levels of society. He remained for four years, attracting great congregations of all classes of people. Many English-speaking churches were established, serving the Anglo-Indian community. Thoburn once said that Taylor's work "initiated an era in the history of Methodism in India."

In the late 1860's there was a movement in the American church for a society of women to serve the women of other lands. The leadership and efforts of Mrs. Butler and Mrs. Parker (on furlough from India) helped in the organization of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY in 1869. Action was taken to send two extraordinary women to India, the first to be commissioned by the new society, ISABELLA THOBURN, sister of James M. Thoburn, and CLARA A. SWAIN, a physician. The educational work for girls and women, pioneered by Isabella Thoburn, brought into existence the college in Lucknow that bears her name, the first college for women in Asia. Dr. Swain's medical work for women was established in Bareilly in 1870. A hospital named in her honor in 1874 was the first women's hospital in Asia.

Accessions to Christianity from the Brahman and other high castes of Hinduism were infrequent but there were some families from the middle castes who sought baptism. However, mass movements in religion had been common in India for centuries. There are many examples in the Roman Catholic missions, in the conversion of large numbers to Islam, in the birth of the Sikh religion, and, much earlier, in the spread of Buddhism in India. Protestant mass movements occurred in Travancore, Tinnevely, Kistna, Guntur and Vellore districts before 1850. The earliest mass movement in the M. E. Church was that of the Mazhabi Sikhs starting in 1859. Caste-controlled or oriented groups are accustomed to group action on all issues of major importance. Religion is, undoubtedly, one of these issues.

Economic factors were determinative in many instances of movement into Christianity, and the oppression of the caste system caused others to want baptism. However, a deep moral urge moved many and spiritual hunger promoted others who were denied access to the shrines of the Hindu gods.

Mass movements of people into another religion necessitate group instruction, group confessions, group therapy and group conversions. A major problem became the provision of adequate leadership—pastors, Bible women, teachers—and such facilities as chapels and schools for the multitudes seeking baptism.

The M. E. Church scattered its efforts over a large portion of India but its numerical growth was unevenly distributed. The chief gains were in its earliest Indian field, the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE and what it termed its Northwest Conference. In 1914 more than four-fifths of the members and nearly two-thirds of its probationers were in these two conferences. The increase had been mainly from the depressed classes and by mass conversions. These mass movements were also seen in Gujerat and Hyderabad.

Statistics in the Minutes of the SOUTHERN ASIA CENTRAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church show the early mass movement growth:

The history of the mission of the M. E. Church in India is marked all the way by the founding of orphanages and schools. The first orphanage for girls was opened at Bareilly in 1858, the first for boys a few years later.

The schools ranged from low grade where the teachers were often scholars who could read and write only a little better than the ones they taught, to colleges for higher study. In 1875 there were 228 schools of all kinds. In 1881 E. W. Parker made a plea for little schools to teach the people while at the same time maintaining good central schools to which the best boys could be promoted. His request was met with instant response and many of these small schools were opened. They furthered the goal of the Methodists that every Methodist should be taught to read and that pupils should be trained to meet the various problems, religious, agricultural, economic, and social, which confronted their communities. Thousands of people have gone forth from these schools to become field pastors, sub-pastors, pastor teachers, leaders and Bible women.

The 1884 General Conference of the M. E. Church enacted legislation of significance to all foreign mission fields: "When in any of our foreign mission fields there is more than one Annual Conference or Mission . . . it shall be lawful to organize a Central Conference." An unofficial consultative body had operated in India since 1880, and this was lifted to the status of a Central Conference at Bareilly on Jan. 13, 1885, under the presidency of Bishop JOHN F. HURST. It was named the Central Conference of Southern Asia and originally included, not only what is now the Republic of India, but also what is now Pakistan, BURMA, then administered as a part of India, MALAYA and the Dutch East Indies. In time, SARAWAK and the PHILIPPINE ISLANDS were added.

The 1930 Central Conference elected JASHVANT RAO CHITAMBAR as the first national Methodist bishop in India. He had also been the first Indian president of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. By 1963 each bishop of the four areas of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia was a national. Statistics showed a membership of over 400,000 and a community of 300,000. Two Methodist colleges were being operated at Lucknow and there were two others on an interdenominational basis; two seminaries were also being operated on an interdenominational basis; there were hundreds of primary and secondary schools, numerous training schools for teachers, preachers, nurses and other specialists, eighteen hospitals and many clinics and village health centers including three leprosy colonies. There were pioneer projects in technical training, and a publishing house was being maintained at Lucknow.

By 1963 the Woman's Society of Christian Service (TMC) had been organized in India and was actively supporting projects throughout the country. The church was a national. Statistics showed a membership of over active part of the National Missionary Society with work in NEPAL.

Free Methodist Church. The Free Methodist Church of the United States assumed partial support and responsibility in 1885 for the "faith mission" established in 1881 by Rev. and Mrs. ERNEST F. WARD, who had gone from the Illinois Conference of that denomination as self-supporting missionaries to India. In 1885 Mary Ranf and Julia Zimmerman joined the Wards, having been sent by the newly organized General Missionary Society of the Free Methodist Church. They suffered great privation, attempted work at several locations, and finally in 1891 secured a headquarters location at Yeotmal in Maharashtra Province, 125 miles southwest of Nagpur. They assumed responsibility for the evangelization of 1,700 villages and one million people living in a 7,000-square mile area. Ghandi's famed Ashram at Warda is forty-two miles north of Yeotmal. Other stations were established at thirty-mile intervals at Darwha, Umri, and Wani. This last station, located on the edge of the Telegu area, is the present base of operation for a more aggressive outreach to these people.

Umri is a small village, central to the whole area and on the main north-south highway. Here the hospital was built in 1922. It has been greatly expanded since 1951. All of the nurses, the director, and most of the doctors, are Indians. They annually treat more than 30,000 patients. The program is seventy-five percent self-supporting. An elementary boarding school, with several buildings, is on a separate campus, adjacent to the hospital. Secondary education is provided through scholarships at another mission or at the government schools. The liberal arts program is a department of the the seminary.

Union Biblical Seminary, Yeotmal, is a show-place of Evangelical cooperation and is an outgrowth of the Free Methodist Bible School. Here some thirty missions provide the faculty, send the students and underwrite the building program and annual budget. Free Methodists have relinquished control, contributed their buildings and campus. There are approximately 150 students. Graduates are serving strategic churches throughout India and doing evangelistic work in areas where the missionary cannot go. The growing library is housed in a new library-administration building. The school is accredited to grant the B.Th. and B.D. degrees. Overseas students from Africa, Japan, and the Philippines are in residence.

Free Methodist membership, after eighty-five years, is under 1,500.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church of the United States established work in 1910-11, at Pardi and Sanjan, towns in the Surat and Thana districts, about 100 miles north of Bombay. Congregations developed with village schools and clinics in several related localities. In 1962 there was a membership of 300 and an additional community of over 500.

As noted above, two Australian Methodist missionaries, J. H. Allen and F. L. Nunn, arrived in 1909 to establish work in a section of upper India in cooperation with the British Wesleyan Mission. This Methodist Church of North India grew to a membership of 3,500. (See also CHURCH OF SOUTH INDIA.)

Anglo-Indian Church Workers, ministers and laymen, have reinforced the leadership of the Methodist Church in India early and often, especially during the first fifty years. Most of them were nominal Christians before they experienced conversion in Methodist services. Among the more prominent are Maria Bolst, STEPHEN S. DEASE, Charles B. Hill, Bishop W. F. OLDHAM, DENNIS OSBORNE, PHOEBE ROWE, and GRACE STEPHENS. The term "Anglo-Indian" is here used in its most inclusive sense, embracing Eurasians and Europeans born in India.

In Bombay, George K. Gilder and Francis W. C. Curties, converted under WILLIAM TAYLOR's preaching, resigned from government service, and were ordained in 1876. Gilder became a presiding elder.

In Calcutta James P. Mills, also converted under Bishop JAMES THOBURN's preaching and ordained in 1884, became superintendent of Bengali language work in Calcutta and opened a Bible Training School for Bengali workers. H. W. Butterfield, William E. L. Clarke, Charles C. Elsam, Thomas E. F. Morton, Charles W. Ross de Souza, Claudius Harrison Plomer, C. R. Jeffries, Fawcett E. N. Shaw, A. S. E. Vardon, Charles W. Christian, James Shaw, F. J. Blewitt, and Mathew Tindale traveled widely, ministering to small groups of English-speaking people, organizing churches, and often initiating the first organized effort of Anglo-Indian people to present the Gospel to non-Christians.

Among the laymen were church educators like principal R. C. Busher of Philander Smith College; vice-president Robert Fleming of the same institution; Elizabeth Moore and Constance Hannah (Mrs. Thompson Wells) in the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE; Mrs. E. H. Hutchings of Poona; T. R. Toussaint, C. N. Weston and his sister, May Weston, principals respectively of Baldwin Boys' and Baldwin Girls' Schools; their brother-in-law, R. A. B. Anderson, also principal of Baldwin Boys' School; Horace C. Fritchley and his son-in-law, Clifford Hicks, in the Calcutta Boys High School; and Charlotte Oram in Dwarahat. Some of the women were full-time evangelists: Muriel Bailey in Gujerat, Ruth Partridge in Hyderabad, Ella McLeavy in Northwest India Conference. Invaluable associates in primary education, alike in boarding schools and day schools, have been Angie McMullen, Mrs. G. F. Mathews, Alice Pottinger, Mattie Ramsbottom, Ruth Gantzer, and Mrs. Worthington.

UNION BIBLICAL SEMINARY, YEOTMAL

Of laymen not employed by the church, but making valuable contributions to church growth, a few representatives can be mentioned. Mr. and Mrs. George Miles were among the twenty-one charter members of the first Methodist church organized in Bombay. The first fellowship band, out of which that church grew, met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Miles. Others were James Morris and E. W. Fritchley, architects; Arthur and William Wright, railway officers, all of Bombay; Henry Bailey, a police inspector in Poona; James Condon, civil surgeon in the United Provinces; Philip Gordon, lawyer in Madras; Walter Winkler and A. C. Davis, engineers in Hyderabad; W. E. Crawshaw and T. R. James of Lucknow, successive superintendents of railway workshops (Crawshaw represented the Anglo-Indian Community on the United Provinces Governor's Advisory Council); C. J. A. Pritchard and Robert Laidlaw of Calcutta.

Christian Councils. The National and Regional Christian Councils in India had their beginnings in the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE held at Edinburgh in 1910. As chairman of the continuation committee, JOHN R. MOTT visited India in 1912-13. He held many conferences with groups and individuals, culminating in a national convention that was widely but not equitably representative of Christian forces in India. Missionaries from abroad outnumbered Indian nationals, and British missionaries, especially Anglicans and Scotch Presbyterians, were proportionately much better represented than the more numerous non-British missionaries. Those who were present had been invited to attend by Mott and his counselors in the name of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh Conference. They were so appreciative of the values, dimly but hopefully glimpsed, that they proceeded to arrange for a National Missionary Council and a network of associated provincial councils. Strict limitations upon the authority of these councils were imposed. They represented the missionary organizations rather than the Indian churches, and their functions were only advisory.

The M. E. Church was at that time alone among the participating bodies in not having a separate missions organization. The missionaries exercised no authority except such as was given to them by virtue of their positions in the church. At times that reduced their representation in the councils, but it offered some advantages to their church.

In a little more than a decade the missionary councils gave way to Christian Councils, which were much more representative of the churches. Thereafter Indian membership in the councils grew steadily. Likewise Methodist influence grew in the councils, and Methodists in increasing number were elected to office in the councils and their executive committees.

Bishop JOHN WESLEY ROBINSON was vice-president of the National Council, and later Bishops JARRELL WASKOM PICKETT and SHOT KUMAR MONDOL served as presidents of the Council. Many Methodists have served as presidents or secretaries of the Provincial Christian Councils, and their successors, the Regional Christian Councils.

Christian Mass Movements is a time-honored but inaccurate and unfortunate term for designating the process by which many groups of people in India and Pakistan have come to Christian discipleship. The word "mass" suggests very large groups, or even the entire population of an area. Over a period of decades or generations, very large groups participate in these movements, but the decisions that produce public avowal of Christian faith and purpose are made by relatively small numbers of people who know each other well and are accustomed to joint action on issues of major importance. Other and more appropriate names are "group movements," "community movements," and "people's movements," but then other names have not won wide acceptance. It is perhaps better now to continue to use the term that churchmen and sociologists have accepted, and explain the sense in which it is employed.

It has been estimated on the basis of careful studies that eighty percent of Protestant Christians in India and ninety-five percent in Pakistan are Christians now because they or their parents or earlier ancestors came to Christian faith by decisions made jointly with their neighbors or kinsmen in closely knit caste or tribal groups.

Missionaries from Western countries—where the bonds of community life are not so strong as in India and Pakistan, and are continuously being weakened by the increasing urbanization, fragmentation, and mobility of populations—have been slow to recognize the reasons for and validity of group actions in religion. Many missionaries have persistently sought to induce separate individual decisions after the pattern commonly made in revival meetings in their homelands. But others have learned that the new convert needs social support if he is to live the good life, and that social support is rarely adequate unless it comes from people who understand him and whom he can understand. The individual whose conversion leads to a break with his former associates is in grave danger of tragic social dislocation and a moral break, and his former associates may be driven to resentment that makes it very difficult for them to come to Christ. However, when the group decides to act jointly, each individual is helped by the others. And the witness which the new converts as a group give to their relatives and neighbors concerning Christ is enhanced by the fact that the group has not been disrupted.

Christian Mass Movements in India began long before the first Methodist missionaries arrived in the country. It seems highly probable that the ancient Syrian Church of South India was produced by a strong mass movement. It is certainly true that through mass movements Roman Catholicism in India has won most of its people. Early mass movements associated with Protestant missions occurred among the Sambavars and Nadars in Travancore, the Oraons and Mundas in Chota Nagpur, the Chuhras in the Punjab, and the Malas and Madigas in what is now Andhra State. These were helped by foreign missionaries and Indian ministers of Congregational, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Anglican, and Baptist churches.

The first experience of the M. E. Church with these movements came in dealing with a relatively small group known as Mazhabi Sikhs. Later they received into their fellowship considerable numbers of converts through group decisions by people belonging to the Chamars, Sweepers, and Himalayan Doms of Uttar Pradesh, the Chuhras of the Punjab, the Madigas and Malas of Andhra, the Mahars of Maharashtra, the Santals of Bengal, the Dhuisiyas of Bihar, the Dheds of Gujerat and perhaps twenty other castes and tribes scattered widely over Southern Asia.

Sanatoriums. Tilaura. The first tuberculosis sanatorium in India was opened at Tilaunia, Rajasthan, by Dr. Edna Beck, later Mrs. Mott Kieslar, in 1906. It was for women and girls only and was supported by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church. Girls' boarding schools in all parts of India had been struck again and again by epidemics of tuberculosis. Large advantages were gained from the very beginning, although at the time successful treatment by chemotherapy and surgery had not been developed. Isolation of sufferers from the dread disease repeatedly arrested epidemics and saved many lives. Dr. Kieslar was followed by a succession of able and devoted lady doctors and nurses.

Taragarh. Another early sanatorium was opened atop a mountain that towers 800 feet above the city of Ajmer. The first physician was Dr. W. W. Ashe, a missionary of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions. Taragarh was a poor location, hard and expensive to reach and very short of water.

Madar. In 1923 the Taragarh property was sold and a tract of forty-five acres was purchased at Madar, five miles from Ajmer. Dr. Ashe continued as the physician-in-charge until 1925. Dr. O. G. Taylor followed and remained until 1931. Tilaunia united with Madar in 1938. In 1940, Drs. Sherwood and Marian Hall, who had opened the first tuberculosis sanatorium in Korea and were unable to continue because of the hostility of the Japanese rulers, joined the staff, and an era of rapid expansion began. Additional land was obtained and many new buildings were erected. Various churches and missions joined in the management of the sanatorium, but at all times more than ninety percent of church and mission support has come from Methodists. Assistance has been obtained from Indian charitable organizations and persons, as well as the railways. Madar first introduced the Christmas seals to India. The government adopted the plan later, but allows Madar to publish its own seals.

Thoracic surgery was introduced by Dr. Rita Tower, and has become a notable feature of the work of the sanatorium. The present superintendent is Dr. John Wells, an Anglo-Indian who joined the Madar staff after graduating in medicine from Punjab University. He studied for some time in America, took thoracic surgery under Dr. Reeve Betts at Vellore, and earned the title of Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in England.

INDIAN FIELD CAMPGROUND, near St. George, S. C., U.S.A., was first used as a meeting place for religious services in 1838, although the title to the land was not recorded until 1847. A meeting under the auspices of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE and at the direction of the CHARLESTON district superintendent and board of trustees, is held annually during the week that ends with the first Sunday in October.

Today there are ninety-nine rustic two-story frame "tents" arranged in a circle of about one mile in circumference. They are owned by individual families and are passed down from generation to generation with the approval of the trustees. The other tent, the only one with only one story and no cooking facilities, is known as the "preachers' tent." It is used by the district superintendent and the visiting clergymen. These ministers eat with the regular tent holders.

In the center of the circle is the more than one hundred year old tabernacle, an open-air building made of hand-hewn pine logs pegged together and containing handmade pews. It, like the tents, has a dirt floor covered with pine needles or straw. Here are held three services a day and people are called to them by the blowing of an old-fashioned, handmade, six-foot tin horn. From the early days of CAMP MEETING there have been fires on the ground at night; at first they were burned to give light; today they are burned to add atmosphere.

In 1838 Methodists arrived around St. George felt the need for more religious fervor since it was difficult for the people to get together often for worship; therefore, the camp meeting was started. Today, even though the true significance of the camp meeting is not forgotten, it is a time for vacation, family reunions, feasts, fellowship, romance, and friendships. Camp meeting today proves a bond of sympathy, understanding, fellowship, and religion for people who share a common heritage.

INDIAN MANUAL LABOR TRAINING SCHOOL, sometimes called the Jason Lee Indian School, opened for classes on the Willamette River in Oregon in September, 1835. The instructor was Cyrus Shepard who crossed the continent with Jason Lee in 1834. During the fall of 1834 and spring of 1835, Shepard was employed at Fort Vancouver, north of the Columbia River, as instructor of the children connected with the Hudson's Bay Company there.

By 1836 Shepard had enrolled nineteen Indians in his classes. Shepard organized the first Sunday school in Oregon, in connection with his other duties, in April 1835, and by October 1836, had fifty-three pupils enrolled. It has been said that Shepard was ideally equipped for his role and called "Oregon's first great teacher."

Because of the decrease in the Indian population in the Willamette Valley, the school did not flourish as had been hoped. Shepard and Lee both early saw that the hope for reaching the hearts of the Indians was through their children. Soon teaching turned toward manual labor training. When, in 1841, the school was transferred to Chemeketa, North Salem, a building costing $10,000 was erected to house the Indian Manual Labor Training School. When Rev. George Gary succeeded Jason Lee as superintendent of the Oregon Mission, in 1844, one of his first acts was to sell the school building, its equipment and one square mile of land to The Oregon Institute, later Willamette University, for the sum of $3,000. The project thus came to an end.

INDIAN MISSION, [OKLAHOMA] (MC), was organized at Thlophlocco Church in the Creek Nation, near Okemah, Okla., Sept. 22, 1939 with Bishop A. FRANK SMITH presiding. It was a continuation of the Indian Mission of the former M. E. Church, South, and it included the distinctively Indian pastoral charges and missions in OKLAHOMA. WILLIAM U. WITT was appointed superintendent. When organized the Indian Mission had three districts, Choctaw, Creek, and Kiowa. There were 101 local preachers and 3,294 members.

Methodist mission work among the Indians in what is now Oklahoma dates back to 1829-39 when the Federal government removed 60,000 to 90,000 Indians, several thousand of whom were already Methodists, from east of the Mississippi River to Indian Territory. In 1830 the MISSOURI and MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCEs established several missions in Indian Territory which were continued by the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE when it was organized in 1836. Four of the major missions were: Cherokee Mission, West; Choctaw Mission, West; Creek Mission, West; and Chickasaw Mission, West. The Missouri Conference also established the Shawnee and other missions in KANSAS. In cooperation with the Federal government, a number of schools for Indians were established in the mission territory.

In 1844 the Indian work centering in Oklahoma was organized as the Indian Mission Conference of the M. E. Church. The organizing session was held in Riley's Chapel, near Tahlequah, Okla., with Bishop THOMAS A. MORRIS presiding. A bronze plaque has been erected at the site. At the time the conference had 26 preachers, 27 local preachers, and 2,992 Indian, 85 white, and 133 Negro members. The conference had three districts, Kansas River, Cherokee, and Choctaw.

When the Indian Mission Conference was organized, the 1844 GENERAL CONFERENCE had already voted to divide the M. E. Church into northern and southern branches, and though the border conferences generally did not vote on adhering North or South until their 1845 meetings, the Indian Mission Conference voted at its organizing session in 1844 to cast its lot with the southern branch of Methodism that was yet to be organized. Thereafter the body was recognized as the Indian Mission Conference of the M. E. Church, South. Financially, adhering South was costly to the Indian Mission Conference. In 1844 it received nearly $15,000 from the Missionary Society in New York, whereas the appropriation from the M. E. Church, South in 1846 was only $6,000.

The Indian Mission Conference grew. New schools were established, such as ASBURY MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL near present Eufaula, Chickasaw Academy near present Ada, Choctaw Academy, and Bloomfield Academy. By 1855 there were four districts, 30 preachers, 38 churches, 4,264 members, 28 Sunday schools, and nine schools with 489 pupils. From 1844 to 1855 the board of missions spent $128,316 on the Indian work.

In 1850 the Kansas River District of the Indian Mission Conference was made a part of the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE. The Civil War disrupted the work of the mission conference. In 1859 there were 20 charges and 4,392 members, while the 1867 statistics show only 14 charges and 1,776 members. After the war the board of missions was unable to resume appropriations to the mission. In 1866 Bishop E. M. MARVIN saved the work from complete collapse by personally raising $5,000 over the church to help pay the preachers.

Central Oklahoma was opened to white settlers in 1889, and soon there were white preachers and churches in the Indian Mission Conference. In 1897, the last year the conference listed statistics for Indian members, there were 4,309 Indian and 15,998 white members. The conference was losing both its Indian and its mission character. It was becoming an annual conference predominantly for white people. So at its session in TULSA on Nov. 16, 1906, it officially changed the name to the Oklahoma Conference. However, the Indians continued in the conference, and they had their own quarterly and district conferences.

For the next twelve years Methodism declined among the Indians, indeed it almost died out among them. All of the Cherokee churches were lost, and nearly all other Indian churches lost members. In 1908 the Oklahoma Conference placed all of its Indian work in three Indian districts, Choctaw and Chickasaw, Creek and Seminole, and Kiowa. The Kiowa District was merged with the Choctaw and Chickasaw District in 1908. In 1910 the Oklahoma Conference was divided to form the East and West Oklahoma Conference and at that time all of the Indian work was placed in the East Oklahoma Conference, except the Kiowa part which was attached to the Lawton District of the West Oklahoma Conference.

Under authority of the 1918 General Conference, twenty-six Indian and white preachers and laymen met at Shawnee, Okla., Nov. 8, 1918 and organized the Indian Mission (MES). ROBERT THOMAS BLACKBURN was the first superintendent. The mission began with eighteen charges and 2,672 members and grew slowly until after unification in 1939. In 1941 D. D. Etchieson was appointed superintendent of the Western District of the Indian Mission, and in 1947 he was made superintendent of the mission. In 1944 W. ANGIE SMITH became the presiding bishop in Oklahoma. Under the leadership of these two men the Indian Mission trebled in membership by 1968. It reached out to include a few churches in Texas and Kansas. The 1967 Report of the Board of Missions says, "The Oklahoma Indian Mission is the largest Methodist Indian mission program. . . . Strengthening church leadership within the Indian community shows exciting promises for the future." The mission is needed as long as the Indians have special language, economic, and social needs.

In 1969 the Oklahoma Indian Mission Conference reported four districts, sixty-two charges, 12,586 members, and property valued at $1,879,394.

INDIAN MISSIONS OF NORTH AMERICA. JOHN WESLEY was presumably the first of those we call Methodists to preach to the Indians of North America. When he came to GEORGIA in 1736 as a missionary to the colonists he also had as one of his aims "to convert the Indians." He was partially supported by the London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. In this effort to convert the American Indians he was, of course, singularly unsuccessful.

In more recent years anthropologists have carefully studied such questions as whether the Indians in America, before the white man arrived, believed in a Supreme Being, or what concept of the soul they had, or whether they believed in life after death. Many learned studies on these matters have been made—with little unanimity of judgment. No such questions troubled the early Methodists, for they considered every human being a fit candidate for God's mercy, and they proposed to offer it to all who would listen.

Beginning of Missions to the Indians. In 1789 three Indians were recorded as members of the M. E. Church, and THOMAS COKE in that year indicated his determination to introduce the gospel among the Indians. Sporadic preaching was undoubtedly carried on in the following years, but the first sustained mission effort among Indians was that of JOHN STEWART in 1815 among the Wyandotte Indians in OHIO.

Stewart was a free-born mulatto who was also part Indian. He was converted in a Methodist CAMP MEETING, and soon felt a call to carry the gospel to the Indians. He began preaching to the Wyandotte Indians at Upper Sandusky; he soon aroused interest and gained numerous converts among them, including some of the chiefs.

This work grew steadily and soon involved the whole settlement. The OHIO CONFERENCE at its 1819 session assumed responsibility for the mission and in 1821 appointed JAMES B. FINLEY as its missionary. In a short time he had three of the chiefs serving as exhorters. In 1823 a manual labor school was established on land provided by the government, and an effective work was done in evangelism and education in the following years before the tribe was moved to Kansas. (See WYANDOTTE INDIAN MISSION.)

In 1820 reports of the work of the mission were carried to the Wyandottes near Fort Malden, CANADA. This was followed up by two native evangelists, and it was reported nine years later that there were nine missionary stations in Upper Canada, 2,000 Indians in the churches, and 400 pupils in eleven schools. Another branch of the mission was established in 1830 among the Wyandottes and Shawnees of the Huron River in MICHIGAN, later called the Huron Mission.

In 1819 the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church was organized under the initiative of NATHAN BANGS, and it began at once to encourage more vigorous efforts to reach the Indians. Bishop WILLIAM MCKENDREE in the EPISCOPAL ADDRESS in 1820 called for a new effort "to . . . spread the Gospel among the Indians."

Among the earliest missionaries supported by the Society were JESSE WALKER and WILLIAM STEVENSON in MISSOURI and ARKANSAS in the period 1820-25. Walker was appointed as "missionary" in the fall of 1819 and most of the rest of his life was given to mission work, much of it with the Indians. Stevenson writes about converts among the Chickasaw Indians on Wolf Creek in Arkansas.

An undoubted impetus to the churches' mission to the Indians was the government's decision in 1819 to support schools among the tribes, outlined in what came to be known as the "Civilization Bill." At first $10,000 a year was made available, and churches were eligible to apply for funds to be used in Indian schools that the churches would operate.

Before this time the government had taken no role in financing mission schools, and great care was taken not to violate the constitutional provision regarding religion. The government, however, offered to pay two-thirds of the cost of buildings, and within six years twenty-three new schools had been opened up by various groups. In a few cases approval was given to use such funds to erect church buildings, but chiefly they were used to erect schools.

A typical example was the proposal made in 1837 to the Missionary Society from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: "I offer to your Board the sum of $1,400 per annum, to be applied in support of missions and schools . . . for the benefit of the Ottawas and Chippawas." Across the years the Methodists received sizeable sums of money to help in their work with Indians, primarily in schools.

As early as the summer of 1820 Methodists in Tuscaloosa, Ala., organized a missionary society to work among the Chickasaws and Choctaws, but the plans were not carried out at that time. In 1824 a Choctaw Mission was created by the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, but it was 1827, under Alexander Talley, before real progress was made. By 1830 there were some 4,000 church members enrolled.

Early Work Among the "Civilized Tribes." In 1821 WILLIAM CAPERS was appointed by the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE to establish a mission to the Creek Indians located in Georgia and ALABAMA. Through a contact with William McIntosh, one of the principal chiefs, he secured the consent of the general council of the Creek Nation for establishing a school near Coweta, Ala., to be named Asbury Mission. Soon a second school named McKendree was built on the Tallapoosa River, but it did not continue long.

While the agreement at Asbury Mission covered only educational work, preaching was soon under way also. But it met opposition from some Indians and from the local U. S. Indian agent. This conflict of ideas eventually reached the Washington authorities with the result that in 1824 Secretary of War John C. Calhoun wrote the agent, "You will give a decided countenance and support to the Methodist Mission . . ." Opposition on the part of the chiefs was not so easily handled, however.

Preaching continued to the Creeks, however, with a good percentage of the congregation composed of Negroes, some of whom were slaves of the Indians. Other problems finally led to the closing of the mission in 1830. By 1836 forced removal of the Creeks to the West was carried out by federal troops.

For many years Bishops ASBURY, McKendree, ROBERTS, and GEORGE had contacts in Cherokee country as they traveled in their episcopal journeys, but not until 1822 was any real effort made to establish a mission among them. In that year a half-Indian, Richard Riley, invited Richard C. Neely of the Paint Rock Circuit, TENNESSEE CONFERENCE, to preach in his home. Soon a society of thirty-three members was formed with Riley as class leader. The next year Riley's was made a regular preaching place, a meeting house built, and a school opened.

In 1823 two missions were formed dividing the work among the Cherokees (overlapping sections of Georgia, Alabama, NORTH CAROLINA, and TENNESSEE) into Upper Cherokee and Lower Cherokee. When the Cherokees were unlawfully deprived of their lands by the Georgia Legislature in 1828-30, and the Supreme Court refused to intervene, two Methodist preachers joined Congregational Missionaries in defying the law and were arrested and put in chains. Though the Supreme Court later upheld the Cherokee rights, the Tennessee Conference refused to stand behind its ministers, J. J. Trott and D. C. M'Leod, in their actions.

The story of the forcible removal of the Cherokees to the West is called by WADE CRAWFORD BARCLAY, "an incredible story which will ever remain as an ineffaceable and shameful blot on the pages of American history." Many Cherokees refused to leave, and eventually a considerable number of them continued to maintain their church connections. In 1843 there were 700 members and twenty-six preaching appointments in the Smoky Mountain area.

Early Missions in the West and Northwest. Numerous missions were established in the West, North, and Northwest. Jesse Walker began the Potawatomi (or Salem) Mission near the present PEORIA, Ill., in 1823-24, with a school and other activities; it continued until 1829 when the Indians moved and the mission was forced to close. PETER CARTWRIGHT attributed its failure to constant white encroachment on Indian lands.

An Oneida mission in New York was begun in 1829 by Daniel Barnes and continued by Daniel Adams, a young Mohawk, who followed when some of them migrated to WISCONSIN. Agitation over moving west and other factors reduced the strength of the mission decidedly by 1845. JOHN CLARK, a wide-ranging pioneer preacher, guided the creation of a mission to Menomini Indians in Wisconsin, but they moved away by 1836.

James B. Finley was authorized to launch a mission among the Chippewa Indians in Michigan in 1823, but found it impossible because of their roving habits and opposition. Not until 1832 was there a "Saganaw Mission," serving the Chippewas and Ottawas, but this did not survive for any lengthy period. The first mission of some permanency among the Chippewa was established by John Clark near DETROIT in 1833. Here opposition from Roman Catholic fur traders connected with a nearby Catholic mission definitely handicapped the work. A Kewawenon mission started by Clark showed good progress, however, with fifty-six members by 1844.

In 1835 ALFRED BRUNSON was appointed "superintendent and missionary to the Indians on the Upper Mississippi," and two years later he began to give his entire time to this work. He started several schools and soon had a dozen persons working with him. About the same time he started work among the Sioux and it prospered.

The first Methodist church in MINNESOTA was established in 1840 near what is now St. PAUL, with whites, Indians, and people of mixed blood as members. But the migratory habits of the Indians were eventually too serious to overcome and by 1852 the mission was closed. Brother-town Mission was established in Brown County, Wisconsin in 1837 by Daniel Poe and by 1844 there were eighty-six Indian members, two listed as "colored," and eleven whites.

As early as 1822 Alvin Torrey was appointed by the GENESEE CONFERENCE to Grand River Mission where he preached to both whites and Indians, the latter being chiefly Mohawks in southern Ontario. By 1828 there were 105 Indian members in Canada. And in that year the Indian missions in Canada were entrusted to the Canada Conference, and were placed by the conference in 1833 under the care of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. John Stinson, who was appointed by this society to superintend them, reported in 1834 that 1,200 Indians, mostly Chippewa, were members of the church, and 2,000 children were under instruction in the schools.

Six new missionaries were sent out by the Wesleyan Society in 1834 and arrangements made for extending the work in Canada. Two native chiefs and missionaries, John Sunday and Peter Jones, were sent to England in 1837 to stimulate interest there in the work. Missions were opened in the territory of the Hudson Bay Company in 1839, upon invitation of the company. By 1854 the society reported in Upper Canada and the Hudson Bay Territory twenty-three missionaries and assistants, over 2,000 members, and 6,320 attendants on public worship. These missions later came under the charge of the Methodist Church of Canada. By 1876 this church sustained forty-two missions to Indians in which thirty-three missionaries and six assistants were employed, and 3,334 members reported; twenty-five missions to the settlers, Indians, and people of mixed blood in the British Columbia, Red River, and Algona districts in which twenty-three missionaries were employed and 931 members reported.

By 1830 a number of the Indian tribes formerly located east of the Mississippi River, under pressure and sometimes connivance of the white man, and with prodding from the government, had relocated in the West, chiefly in OKLAHOMA. In some cases missionaries who had been preaching to the Indians in the East went with them to the West, and in many cases there were strong Indian lay Christians or preachers among the migrating people.

West of the Mississippi. James Wheeler went with the Wyandottes to KANSAS in 1843; Alexander Talley moved to Fort Towson with the Choctaws in their migration, and their chief, GREENWOOD LEFLORE, was a Methodist, as were the two Indian preachers, John T. Boot and William W. Oakchiah. Thomas Myers, a Methodist teacher, along with his family accompanied the second party of Choctaws. Among the Cherokees there were Young Wolfe and William McIntosh, both preachers, who stayed with their people as they relocated in Oklahoma.

In 1830 the MISSOURI CONFERENCE appointed William Johnson to serve the Kansas Indians, who were a part of the Sioux family. He started an Indian school while living in the home of Daniel Morgan Boone (son of Daniel Boone of Kentucky and Missouri). In the same year Johnson's brother, Thomas, was sent to serve the Shawnee Indians in a mission established for them in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

In 1832 THOMAS JOHNSON was made superintendent of the Indian Mission District and his brother William was assigned to help him. Eventually they resumed the work with the Kansas Indians. In 1838 a Shawnee Manual Labor School was authorized that opened in 1839 with seventy-two pupils. The Indian church membership there was 183 by the following year. The Johnsons, especially William, helped establish the Delaware Mission and school, also in Wyandotte County.

Bishop Joshua Soule helped create sentiment to establish a mission to the Kickapoo and Peoria Indians. JEROME C. BERRYMAN served the Kickapoo for several years against difficult odds but with reasonable success. Nathaniel M. Talbot worked at the Peoria Mission for eight years with limited success.

When the Wyandottes moved from Ohio they settled in Wyandotte County, Kansas, and gradually rebuilt a stable society. Of the 700 who moved, about 250 belonged to the church. James Wheeler, their pastor in Ohio, went to Kansas with them and served them faithfully. They faced frustrations, delays, and discouragement in getting relocated.

Soon after arriving, the controversy over slavery became an issue and divided the church—nationally and locally. When the Missouri Conference voted to become a part of the M. E. Church, South, Wheeler returned to Ohio, feeling he could not go along with the new structure. The next pastor, E. T. Perry, was personally against slavery and for a time kept harmony in the church. But the erecting of a new church building became a divisive issue, with "abolition" and "slave holding" as the rallying points for the two sides. Eventually the congregation split, one group aligning with the "Church, North" and the other with the "Church, South." In time most of the Indians moved to Oklahoma and the churches continued to serve the whites in the area.

In 1837 Frederick B. Leach was appointed by the Missouri Conference to a Pottawatomie Mission in Kansas, but results were meager. Other missionary efforts were made in the West to the Seneca, the Chippewa, the Mohawk, and others with varying degrees of success.

One of the most widely known missions in the first half of the nineteenth century was to the Indians in and near the Willamette Valley of OREGON. It was launched in response to a famous (but largely fictitious) appeal attributed to four Indians in St. Louis who were "in search of the White Man's God." JASON LEE, a capable young New England minister, was sent in 1834 with several workers and soon had an effective mission station in operation, though in the face of many difficulties. The mission grew, especially following a trip Lee made back to New England in 1838, where he found great public interest in Oregon as a possible new territory for the United States. He stimulated a larger budget for the work and acquired a larger staff. Upon returning to the mission he expanded the work to six stations, but the expansion was too fast and perhaps not carefully planned, and some of the new missionary recruits proved to be not fully committed to the work. The response of the Indians was disappointing. Lee lost rapport with his supporting committee back home, and lacking adequate contacts, the committee in 1844 sent out a replacement for Lee—GEORGE GARY—with orders to consider how to reduce the project.

Gary took rigorous action, closing five stations, and turning the sixth one over to the Congregational missionary in Oregon, Marcus Whitman. Jason Lee went back to New York, met his critics, and convinced them that he had acted with integrity and earnestness in a most difficult task. A few months later, however, his health broken, he died while still in New England. Though seemingly a failure, the mission helped to pioneer the opening of Oregon to settlement, and its feeble school evolved into an institution that eventually became WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY. (See OREGON MISSION.)

Between 1829-39, from sixty to ninety thousand members of many tribes had migrated, or been removed, to the Indian Territory—the area now known as Oklahoma—as well as to parts of Kansas and western Missouri. These included large numbers of Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, Seminoles, Chickasaws, and smaller numbers of Shawnees, Kansas, Osage, Kiowas, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Senecas, Quapaws, Delaware, Pottawatomi, and others.

In 1830 the Missouri Conference voted to establish at least four missions to Indians: the Shawnee and Kansas in Kansas-Missouri, and the Cherokee and Creek in what is now Oklahoma; and the Mississippi Conference appointed missionaries to the Choctaws. Soon all this work was concentrated in the area now known as Oklahoma, since most of the Indians were removed to Oklahoma. In addition to churches, many schools were established, most of these partially supported by government funds.

In 1844 Methodist work centering in Oklahoma was organized as the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE. It included almost all Indian work west of the Mississippi (except for the far West). It began with twenty-six preachers, twenty-seven local preachers, eighty-five white members, 133 Negro members, and 2,992 Indian members. There were three districts: Kansas River, Cherokee, and Choctaw. When the church split in 1844-45, the Indian Mission Conference voted to become a part of the M. E. Church, South, though this meant a drastic loss of financial aid from the church at large. In 1850 the Kansas River District was transferred to the St. Louis Conference.

By 1855 the Indian Mission Conference had four districts, thirty-one charges, nine schools, 489 pupils, thirty preachers, thirty-eight churches, twenty-eight Sunday schools, and 4,264 church members. The Civil War almost ended the Mission, but loyal supporters helped to carry on the work. Work with the "Plains Indians" was begun late in the nineteenth century under JOHN J. METHVIN.

As whites settled in Oklahoma, more and more churches were established primarily for them. By 1900 the Indian Mission Conference membership was predominantly white, and in 1906 changed its name to the Oklahoma Annual Conference. For the next twelve years Methodist influence and members declined among the Indians, but both started to increase again when an Indian Mission Conference was re-established in 1918. Effective leadership was given by superintendents W. U. Witt (1926-47) and Dewey Etchieson (1947-).

In other areas of the country mission work was continued with varying success. In 1878 the M. E. Church had fifteen missionaries to the Indians—four in New York, four in Michigan, one in Wisconsin, four in Washington and Oregon, and two in CALIFORNIA. These were assisted by thirty-one helpers, and in their care were 908 members and 1,670 probationers.

In 1891 the Mississippi Conference appointed William Warren Cammack to the Choctaw Indians. He continued for several years, establishing schools as well as churches. In 1943 the Choctaw Indian Mission was set up as a separate appointment, and it continues. For some years the pastor has been Benson Wallace, a native Choctaw from Oklahoma.

Present-day Work. In 1968 there was Methodist Indian work in twenty-one states with a total of 150 churches. These were served by 104 pastors, three missionaries, and twelve church and community workers. There was only one Methodist boarding school for Indians—the NAVAJO MISSION SCHOOL at Farmington, N. M.—and one home, McDonnell Methodist Center at Houma, La. There were three community centers serving Indians, and Methodists cooperated in ecumenical urban ministries in four cities.

Methodist membership among Indians is heaviest by far in Oklahoma, where there are almost 12,000. In North Carolina there are about 1,800; in Michigan less than 300; with smaller groups scattered through seventeen other states.

New attention is now being given to work with Indians by the Division of National Missions of the General BOARD OF MISSIONS of The United Methodist Church. In 1966 staff committees were formed to coordinate and develop strategy for Indian work, and one policy now in operation is to solicit suggestions for possible policy changes from the Indians themselves.

One of the fourteen national historic shrines of the denomination is the chapel of the WYANDOTTE INDIAN MISSION at Upper Sandusky, Ohio. It commemorates the beginning of an enterprise that has reached across the nation in an effort to make the gospel of Christ real to "Our Brother in Red."

Schools. Across the years Methodists started many schools in connection with the Indian missions. Some were short-lived but some continued for many years, and a few made outstanding contributions in developing the talents of their students. The story of these schools is too involved to write of, and the list below is probably inaccurate at various points. However, a list of their names, taken from the conference minutes, will give some understanding of the scope of these enterprises. Where possible dates are given of the year in which the school was first listed and in which it was last listed. In some cases the school antedated the first listing, and it may have continued after the last listing, under other auspices. The list is arranged chronologically.

INDIAN WITNESS, THE, is a weekly paper published at LUCKNOW as the official organ of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia. It was launched on May 18, 1871, by a group of Methodist missionaries among whom Thoburn, Messmore, and Waugh were the most active. It was at first called The Witness. A year later the name was changed to The Lucknow Witness. In October 1873, JAMES MUDGE, a new missionary from BOSTON, arrived and became the paper's editor. For eight years he produced a widely read paper and steadily added to its influence. He then returned to America.

The delegated conference of 1861, the forerunner of the CENTRAL CONFERENCES, instructed the Board of Publication to arrange for the continued publication of the paper. The next year it was moved to CALCUTTA, its name changed to The Indian Witness, and JAMES MILLS THOBURN was made its editor.

In the first issue from Calcutta it announced that from that time the paper would be published as a denominational paper, officially representing the M. E. Church in India. Among the editors since that time have been seven Methodist bishops, James Mills Thoburn, HOMER CLYDE STUNTZ, JOHN EDWARD ROBINSON, JOHN WESLEY ROBINSON, BRENTON THOBURN BADLEY, J. WASKOM PICKETT, and ALFRED J. SHAW. John Wesley Robinson's editorship came after his retirement. Other editors have been Benjamin Aitkin, F. C. McCoy, J. H. Messmore, Joseph Culshaw, Mabel Eddy, Frederick B. Price, Emma Stockwell Price, Fred M. Perrill, Henry R. Wilson, and J. Victor Koilpillai.

INDIANA, the "Hoosier State," is located in the "heartland" of the United States. Geographically Indiana encompasses prairie land, lakes, and a hilly terrain which sweeps down the southern third of the state to the Ohio River. Steel mills and allied industries cluster in the northern part of the state, while to the south in the BLOOMINGTON vicinity quarries surround the seat of the state university and provide fine building stone for much of the nation. Agriculture flourishes throughout the state with hogs, cattle, corn, tomatoes, and soybeans as the main commodities. For recreation and relaxation, Indiana provides its people with more than 50,000 acres of state parks. The state itself is now occupied by approximately 5,144,000 people. Indiana—first explored by the French, then recognized as part of the Indiana territory in 1800—became the sixteenth state admitted to the Union in 1816.

Though it is speculated that there was Methodist preaching in the Indiana territory as early as 1793, the earliest recognized work was done in 1801 by two exhorters, Samuel Parker and Edward Talbott. Crossing the Ohio River from KENTUCKY into Clark County, they held a two-day meeting in Springville (extinct). Later that year WILLIAM MCKENDREE, presiding elder of the Kentucky district, followed up their work by visiting three Hoosier families who had attended the exhorters' meetings, and he organized Methodist classes. The present-day congregations of Salem, Charlestown, and New Chapel sprang from these classes.

Hoosier Methodism was divided among annual conferences to the east (OHIO), south (TENNESSEE), and west (first MISSOURI, then ILLINOIS) prior to 1832. By action of the GENERAL CONFERENCE the Hoosier Methodists were able to organize the Indiana Conference in the Wesley Chapel at New Albany, Oct. 17, 1832, with Bishop JOSHUA SOULE presiding. The Conference consisted of 65 preachers, 41 charges, and 20,035 members, and included all the state of Indiana plus a narrow strip of territory in the southern part of MICHIGAN.

As American Methodism had been divided in 1830 by the organization of the M. P. Church, Indiana eventually had both Wesleyan branches within its borders. In 1840 the Indiana Conference of the M. P. Church was organized at Old Liberty Church in central Indiana with a reported total of 26 ministers, 11 charges, and 1,366 members. Prior to the organization of the Annual Conference, Dearborn College had been established by the new church in Lawrenceburg in 1836, but it was destroyed by fire in 1839 and never replaced (even though NICOLAS SNETHEN, one of the founders of the M. P. Church, was president of the school). For a time (1846-1873) there were two annual conferences in the state, but by mutual agreement they reunited the M. P. work into one annual conference which encompassed the state until its merger with the other Methodist annual conferences in 1939.

Though there was in Indiana a fair amount of sympathy toward the south, very little of Indiana Methodism was affected by the 1844 schism of the Church. A few churches near the Ohio River aligned with the southern church, but only one church was still active (Morton Memorial, Jeffersonville) at the time of unification in 1939.

The growth of Methodism in the country was reflected in the multiplication of annual conferences in the state. The North Indiana Conference became the second conference in 1844 and was further divided into two conferences in 1852 (North Indiana and Northwest Indiana). In the same year the Indiana Conference was divided in two (South-East Indiana and Indiana), but in 1895 the two southern conferences were reunited.

Similarly, the CENTRAL GERMAN CONFERENCE had strong representation within the state. German Methodist congregations were organized as early as 1839 (Lawrenceburg) and in Evansville in 1842. Later congregations were begun in Madison, Fort Wayne, Charlestown, Indianapolis, and elsewhere throughout the state. Their Sunday school paper, Der Sonntagschule Clocke, was published in Indianapolis after it was begun in 1856.

The LEXINGTON CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church was organized in 1869. After unification in 1939 it spread out to include black Methodists in the states of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. At the time of merger of the Negro congregations of the Central Jurisdiction into the existing annual conferences in 1964, there were 3,910 black Methodists in Indiana.

In 1837 Indiana Asbury (later DEPAUW UNIVERSITY) was opened with five students and one teacher. This school, which has supplied six bishops via its presidency, has become a "beacon-light" for enlightened leadership through its alumni for over one hundred years. Evansville University to the south and Taylor University in east central Indiana are also Methodist-related schools.

At the turn of the century the Church became more conscious of social problems and Indiana Methodists responded with hospitals, homes for the aged, and orphanages. As the Methodists approached union with the EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH in 1968, they brought along three general hospitals (in INDIANAPOLIS, Fort Wayne and Gary), four homes for senior citizens, and two children's homes.

Of similar impact has been the pioneering establishment of pastoral counseling centers throughout the state. Begun in 1957, the centers have been concerned with equipping ministers to be better counselors and to provide centralized locations where troubled people may receive Christian pastoral care and assistance.

During the episcopal administration of RICHARD C. RAINES (1948-68), many innovative and pace-setting experiments improved Methodist efforts throughout the state: i.e., the creation of the offices of Administrative Assistant to the Bishop, Director of Public Relations, and Director of Pastoral Care and Counseling. Likewise, Indiana Methodism has given full support to ecumenical efforts both at the local and state levels.

At the time of union in 1968, the Hoosier Methodists numbered 976 preachers, 1,241 pastoral charges, and 340,286 members. The combined properties were valued at $174,918,194. In 1968 Bishop REUBEN H. MUELLER became episcopal leader of The United Methodist Church in Indiana.

INDIANA CONFERENCE (ME) was the oldest continuous annual conference in the state of INDIANA (until 1968). Organizing in 1832, it was to maintain its identity until the reorganization of the three former Methodist conferences and two former E. U. B. conferences within the state in 1968 produced two annual conferences—South Indiana and North Indiana. (South Indiana absorbs the territory of the former Indiana Conference plus a small portion of the former NORTH INDIANA and NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCES.)

Methodism came to Indiana as early as 1793, but it was 1808 before Methodism first recorded the Indiana District as part of the WESTERN CONFERENCE. By 1812 the Western Conference was divided into two conferences, OHIO and TENNESSEE, and the Indiana circuits were divided between them. In 1816 the Tennessee Conference circuits in Indiana became part of the MISSOURI CONFERENCE and were placed in the Illinois District. In 1819 these western circuits were placed in the Indiana District. By 1820 there were thirteen circuits in Indiana—five in the Ohio Conference and eight in the Missouri Conference. Thus in 1824 the General Conference created the Illinois Conference, though eighteen of the circuits were in Indiana and only nine were in Illinois. In the next eight years Indiana Methodists were to more than double in size (growing from just over 8,000 in 1824 to better than 20,000 in 1832). It was inevitable that Hoosier Methodists should have their own annual conference, and it was authorized by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1832.

The first session of the Indiana Conference was held Oct. 17, 1832 in the Wesley Chapel at New Albany. Bishop JOSHUA SOULE presided at the meeting at which eighteen ministers were present at the first roll call. The Conference represented 65 preachers, 41 charges, and 20,035 members. It included all the work of Methodism within the state of Indiana with the exception of the Vermillion Circuit (a sliver along the western border belonging to the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE) plus a narrow strip of territory in the southern extreme of Michigan (composed of the St. Joseph's and Kalamazoo Missions) and Elizabethtown in the state of Ohio. For the next twelve years the Indiana Conference operated as a unit caring for all of the churches in the state, but the rapid growth of Indiana Methodism (216 ministers and 67,219 members in 1843) forced the division of the state into two conference areas with the National Road (U. S. 40) as the northern boundary of the realigned Indiana Conference. This remained the boundary, with various minor adjustments for the next 125 years.

It was from the southern area that Bishop ROBERT R. ROBERTS (who made his home in Lawrence County) had made his episcopal journeys from 1819 until his death in 1843. It was during this same time that Edward Ames, James Armstrong, James Haven, Calvin Ruter, MATTHEW SIMPSON, Joseph Tarkington (father of the Hoosier author, Booth Tarkington) and Allen Wiley gave great energy and leadership to the expanding work of Indiana Methodism.

The surge of growth of Methodism throughout the state led to a further request for new divisions of the work into four annual conferences in 1852. The General Conference of 1852 created two more annual conferences for the state—the Northwest and the South East—thus cutting the state into four nearly equal sections. The South East Conference was short-lived—lasting only until 1895 when it reunited with the Indiana Conference.

On the first day of the first session of the newly created Indiana Conference in 1832, a committee was formed to examine the need for an institution of higher education in Indiana. The result was the founding of Indiana Asbury University (renamed DEPAUV UNIVERSITY in 1884). The conference also assisted in the creation of the Moore's Hill Male and Female Collegiate Institute in 1854. Reducing its name to Moore's Hill College in 1868, it struggled through its first sixty years (though it had a fine list of graduates enlisted in the service of the church as ministers, missionaries, and teachers) and re-located at Evansville in 1917. It was first known as Evansville College and is now recognized as the University of Evansville. Seven other schools and academies were initiated by the annual conference in its early days, but time took its toll of these schools before the turn of the century.

Two camp meeting grounds had flourished within the bounds of the Indiana Conference—Deputy and Santa Claus. Deputy closed its gates in 1917, but Santa Claus (supported by the CENTRAL GERMAN CONFERENCE) became a center for youth work after 1933 and joined the Rivervale Camp (developed in 1925) as sites where youth might attend institute programs, etc. An additional camping site in Brown County was secured by the Conference in 1967.

Youth had significant influence in more than just camping. Following the International Convention of the EPWORTH LEAGUE at Roberts Park Church in Indianapolis in 1899, a balance of $4,000 remained. This was designated by the youth as a start for a building fund for the erection of a Methodist Hospital in Indianapolis. Youth's dream carried the day, and one of the great general hospitals of Methodism is the result. The Indiana Methodist Children's Home at Lebanon was supported by both the Indiana and Northwest Indiana Conferences.

At a special session of the annual conferences in 1948, a non-profit corporation was authorized to establish a Home for the Aged. It was located in Franklin, and the home opened its doors in 1956. The women of the conference supported a residence hall for working young women, Esther Hall. In 1968 it became a project of all Indiana Methodist women and was to be renovated, enlarged and renamed for Lucille Raines, wife of the episcopal leader of Indiana Methodism from 1948 to 1968.

The log chapel of Robertson's Meetinghouse (or Old Bethel) built in 1807, was removed from Charlestown in 1952 and rebuilt at Greencastle. Located beside Gobin Memorial Church, it houses many relics of early Methodism. The Archives of DePauw University and Indiana Methodism, which is open to interested people the year round, is located nearby. Also, the body of Indiana's first bishop, Robert R. Roberts, lies buried on the DePauw campus.

As the Indiana Conference approached union in 1968 with its E.U.B. counterpart, it brought 351 ministers, 566 charges, and 177,001 members to the merger. At the same time the nomenclature "Indiana Conference," was dropped from the lists of Methodist records for the first time in 136 years. The new conference in The United Methodist Church is the South Indiana Conference.

JAMES B. BABBITT

INDIANA CONFERENCE of the Methodist Protestant Church was authorized by a resolution adopted by the OHIO CONFERENCE at Tanner's Creek Chapel near Guilford, Ind., during the last week of August 1839. From 1830 until 1840 the work of this significant branch of Methodism had gained some strength in Indiana, and Hoosier Methodist Protestants were ready to assume indigenous responsibility.

The first session of the Indiana Conference was held at the Liberty Church, familiarly known as the John Burton Meetinghouse, near Mt. Tabor in Monroe County. The old log house, erected in 1831, still stands. The conference convened on Sept. 30, 1840, with twenty-nine ministerial members and 1,366 members. Records of this new conference show a tremendous increase in members in the first five years of its existence, during which period its membership tripled.

Two of the early dissenters—James Ermiston and Thomas S. Stilwell—who seceded from the M. E. Church in 1830 and joined in establishing the M. P. Church, were members of the new conference. R. G. H. Hannah was elected president of the conference and H. P. Bennett was elected permanent secretary. Samuel Morrison and W. W. Paul were early presidents of the conference and gave outstanding leadership to the body during its formative period.

The boundaries of the conference are complicated by inaccurate records and the frontier aspect of Indiana territory. In 1842 the state of MICHIGAN, along with a narrow strip of northern Indiana counties, became the Michigan Conference. (It was 1916 before these counties were finally realigned with the Indiana Conference.) The state lines were basically the other boundaries of the annual conference.

Then in 1845, the Indiana Conference requested a division of the state into two conferences. The Wabash Conference was established in 1846, consisting of twenty ministers, fourteen pastoral charges and 1,443 members. (The older Indiana Conference retained seven ministerial members, twelve charges and 1,577 members.) The state was divided in half by a line running east to west through Indianapolis. The division remained until 1875 when the two conferences were reunited as the Indiana Conference. From 1867 until the reunion in 1875 the northern conference was known as the North Indiana Conference.

As tension arose between the North and South over slavery, it affected the M. P. Church in Indiana. Thus in 1859 a third group was organized, known as the White Wing Indiana Conference of the M. P. Church. It greatly decimated the northern conference with better than one-half of its ministers and churches going with the third conference. The restrictive rule, limiting the right of suffrage to "White, Male Members," became the distinction between this conference and the other two in Indiana. The White Wing Conference was reunited with the Indiana Conference in 1877. Some of the denomination's strongest churches at time of union in 1939 came from this earlier abortive conference.

The work of the M. P.'s in Indiana was largely rural and they were slow to move into the larger towns and growing cities of the state. Spurred on by the Christian Endeavor Union (youth), a church was established in INDIANAPOLIS, and churches were eventually located in Frankfort, Elkhart, Logansport, and Marion.

The death of its first ministerial member in 1845, leaving a dependent family, forced consideration of a plan for preachers' relief. Thus in 1848 the Preachers' Relief Society was formed. Though a permanent investment fund was slow in accumulating, the conference diligently worked at providing a sound base for retirement benefits for its ministers, and such a program was in effect at the time of union in 1939.

The organization of the Tithing Association in 1895, with its promulgation of tithing as the Christian's minimum standard of financial support gained needed funds for the retirement program, missions, and general benevolences. Hoosier M. P.'s contributed $43,000 to the Million Dollar Campaign projected by the denomination following the first World War.

Before the Epworth League was organized nationally in the M. E. Church, the Christian Endeavor Society was formed at the Concord Church in DeKalb County. As such work prospered, a camp ground was developed, east of Marion. Approved by the conference in 1921, the facility was ready for service by 1924 and became a busy center for the conference. The camp ground was later sold to the Nazarene Church conference.

Indiana Conference was the first of Methodist Protestantism to create a Conference Cabinet. Composed of ministers and laymen, it advised the president of the conference on the administration of affairs which were of common concern. W. W. Lineberry was author of this plan, which soon was adopted by other M. P. conferences.

The women of the conference showed the same zeal as their M. E. compatriots. By the time of merger into the Woman's Society of Christian Service in 1939, the Indiana M. P. Women's Work ranked sixth in contributions in relationship to the twenty-three women's organizations of the denomination.

The M. P.'s of Indiana came readily to reunion with their Methodist brethren. Their laymen and ministers became outstanding leaders in the new annual conferences which resulted. H. Owen DeWeese, lay treasurer of the Indiana Conference, became Conference Lay Leader of the North Indiana Conference (after union) and has been recognized nationally as one of Methodism's outstanding laymen. With property evaluated at $634,500, the M. P.

conference brought 65 ministers, 103 churches, and 7,378 members to The Methodist Church.

INDIANA ASBURY UNIVERSITY. (See DEPAUW UNIVERSITY.)

INDIANA CENTRAL COLLEGE, Indianapolis, Ind., was started in 1902 and in its charter was named Indiana Central University. While this is the legal name, it is commonly known as Indiana Central College. The sponsoring church was the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. In 1946, the college became affiliated with the newly constituted E.U.B. Church. The first building in which all activities were originally housed was completed in 1905, and in September of that year the first students arrived.

In 1922 the college purchased fifty-one acres of land to add to the original eight-acre campus. Dormitories and other buildings were subsequently added. But in 1955 there was only the original administration and classroom building, four dormitory buildings, a gymnasium and small observatory.

Indiana Central, since its inception, has been basically a liberal arts, coeducational college, with particular emphasis on teacher education and preministerial preparation. In recent years the college has been accredited by the Indiana State Department of Public Instruction, the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education, and the National League for Nursing. B.A., B.S. and M.A. degrees are presently offered. Associate degrees in Science and Arts have also been instituted, the former including two-year courses in Business Administration and Nursing Education.

It was evident in the early 1950's that additional facilities were required, and since 1955 new and renovated structures have followed in rapid succession: Nelson House, the President's residence; Academic Hall, which houses Ransburg Auditorium, classrooms, library and offices; the Physical Education Building; Krannert Hall, a women's dormitory; Married Students Apartments; Lilly Science Hall; Louis Schwitzer Center, a combination student union, dining, office and meeting facility. All other buildings have been completely renovated and in some instances rebuilt. The present classrooms are capable of serving approximately 1,200 day and 1,800 evening students.

Indiana Central places its emphasis upon the harmonious development of the individual. Religious and spiritual values are stressed through chapel programs, religious education courses, group discussions, individual counseling and student participation in church activities.

INDIANA NORTH CONFERENCE was formed by the E.U.B. Church, Aug. 22, 1951, when three former United Brethren and one former Evangelical conferences in the state of INDIANA were reorganized as Indiana North Conference and Indiana South Conference.

The Indiana Conference of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION had its beginning in 1836, when missionaries answered the call to "come to Indiana." By 1841, two missions were begun by the Ohio Conference at White-water and Fort Wayne. Later the Fort Wayne Mission expanded to South Bend and Elkhart. Indiana preaching appointments became a part of the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE with its formation in 1844 and were organized into the Indiana Conference in 1852.

Several preaching appointments and 400 members were transferred in 1864 from Indiana Conference to the newly formed MICHIGAN CONFERENCE. Due to continued growth, the South Indiana Conference was formed in 1875 comprising territory in southern Indiana as well as some in OHIO, ILLINOIS, and KENTUCKY. In 1893, the Indiana and South Indiana Conferences were reunited to form again a single statewide conference. In that same year, Conklin Hill was purchased for $5,000; and as this site along Lake Wawasee was developed for conference and camp purposes, it was named Oakwood Park.

The first Sunday school in the conference was started at Bippus Bethel Church by A. B. Schaefer in 1840. A Youth League was organized by C. F. Hansing in 1880.

The St. Joseph Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, traced its beginning to the date of 1845, when the northern Indiana portion of the Wabash Conference was removed to form the St. Joseph Conference. In 1909, the entire northern portion of the state of Indiana was placed within this conference boundary. Previously the same territory had rested within the St. Joseph, Upper Wabash, Sandusky, and North Ohio conferences.

The White River Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, was organized in 1847, receiving most of its territory, an east-west belt across the middle of the state, and membership from the Indiana Conference, which had been formed in 1830. At the same session, a modified license to preach, the first to be granted by a United Brethren annual conference, was issued to Charity Ophral.

On several occasions dissensions led to withdrawal of members and the formation of separate denominations. In 1869, liberal persons within the White River Conference, objecting to stricter rules of the GENERAL CONFERENCE regarding secret societies, withdrew to form the Liberal United Brethren Church. It lasted a short time and its following eventually joined the M. E. Church. Nearly two thousand members withdrew from the White River Conference in 1889 with the formation of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, Old Constitution, a conservative group. Still another liberal group withdrew in the 1850's to form the Republican United Brethren Church.

The Indiana Conference, United Brethren in Christ, existed chiefly in the southern part of the state, territory assigned to Indiana Conference South following the 1951 union. In 1820, JOHN G. PRIMMER organized the first United Brethren Sunday school at Corydon, Ind., while this portion of the state was still a part of the Miami Conference.

With the union of the four conferences in 1951 and the division of the state into two conferences (North and South), Indiana Conference North was given supervision over the upper one-third of the state because it had more large cities than did the area allotted to Indiana South.

In 1967, Indiana North Conference had 171 elders, of whom 117 were under appointment. There were 175 organized congregations in 140 charges in Indiana North. The membership consisted of 34,599 persons. The total money raised for all purposes amounted to $3,192,320, while church property was valued at $17,041,196. In 1969, the three former Methodist and two Evangelical United Brethren Conferences were united and the boundaries changed to form the NORTH INDIANA and SOUTH INDIANA CONFERENCES.

INDIANA SOUTH CONFERENCE was a natural result of the merger of the two denominations, The EVANGELICAL CHURCH and the Church of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, Nov. 16, 1946. At the time of union there were four conferences in the state of INDIANA, three former United Brethren bodies, namely St. Joseph, White River, and Indiana, and one Indiana Conference of the former Evangelical Church.

In 1951, these four conferences were reduced to two: INDIANA NORTH and Indiana South Conferences. The southern conference included all of the former Indiana Conference (UB) and practically all of the former White River Conference. A few local churches were transferred either north or south to keep the boundary along certain county lines. The two conferences were about equal in church membership, although Indiana South covered about two-thirds of the state, partly because southern churches were more scattered and partly because there are more cities in the north.

There were a number of predecessor conferences of Indiana South. In the former Evangelical Association, itinerant preachers originally belonged to the Ohio Conference, which included that state and any points west. In 1844, the Illinois Conference was organized, consisting of the Indiana district and the Illinois district. In 1851, the Indiana district was separated and constituted as a statewide conference. The Indiana Conference was divided in 1875 to form both the Indiana and South Indiana Conferences, but these were united again in 1892.

The early United Brethren preachers belonged to the Miami Conference until the Indiana Conference was organized in 1830. Part of this conference was detached in 1835 to form the Wabash Conference, which was also divided into the Upper and Lower Wabash Conferences in 1857. The original Indiana Conference was again divided in 1849, the northern part becoming the White River Conference. In 1909, the Indiana churches of the Upper and Lower Wabash Conferences were added to the St. Joseph (in northern Indiana), the White River, and the Indiana Conferences, respectively. These last three merged with the Indiana Conference (Ev) in 1951 to form the two conferences, Indiana North and Indiana South.

One denominational college, INDIANA CENTRAL, was located in this conference area at INDIANAPOLIS. It had an enrollment of about 1,000 full-time day students in 1968 and more than a thousand additional night school students.

In 1966 there were 211 elders of the conference. The membership totaled 37,447 persons in 247 organized congregations. The total money raised for all purposes amounted to $2,882,698, while property was valued at $12,181,848.

In 1969 the three former Methodist conferences,

Indiana, North Indiana, and Northwest Indiana, were merged with the two former Evangelical United Brethren bodies to form the NORTH INDIANA and SOUTH INDIANA CONFERENCES of The United Methodist Church.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, U.S.A., is the capital of INDIANA and the headquarters of an episcopal area that has 388,000 members (1970). In 1966 when The Methodist Church and the E.U.B. Church voted to unite, it happened that the president of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS in each denomination—RICHARD C. RAINES and REUBEN H. MUELLER—was a resident bishop in Indianapolis.

PETER CARTWRIGHT brought Methodism to Indiana in 1804. The first Methodist sermon in Indianapolis was delivered by Resin Hamilton in 1819 under a walnut tree just south of where the state capitol now stands. The first preacher appointed to Indianapolis was William Cravens in 1821. He had only one eye, weighed 350 pounds, and sat while he preached, but even so he rode his circuit. In 1823 the church in Indianapolis had 143 members. The first church building was of hewed logs. Used also as a school, it stood two blocks south of what was then called the Governor's Circle. A brick church called Wesley Chapel was built on the circle in 1829.

In 1842 when the Indianapolis charge had 635 members, it was divided. Wesley Chapel, the forerunner of the present Meridian Street Church, served the members west of Meridian Street. The members east of that line worshipped in the courthouse until 1846 when they erected their own building and named it Roberts Chapel for Bishop ROBERT R. ROBERTS, the first episcopal leader to reside west of the Alleghenies. The name of the church was changed to Roberts Park in the 1870's when another building was erected. As time passed many more churches, most of which survive, were organized in Indianapolis.

In 1856 the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church met in Indianapolis, and in 1888 the ERWORTH LEAGUE was officially organized there. The 1948 North Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE convened in Indianapolis. The Methodist Hospital there is one of the largest institutional hospitals in the nation. Bishop EDWARD R. AMES, one of the leading figures in the M. E. Church in his day, lived in Indianapolis for many years, and played a key role in Indiana's relief efforts during the Civil War. Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON was president of Indiana Asbury (now DEPAUW) University some forty miles west of Indianapolis, 1839-48. Over the years, strong German-language, Methodist Protestant, and Central Jurisdiction churches have successively been absorbed into the mainstream of Methodism in Indianapolis, each group making its contribution to the overall strength of the denomination.

Resident bishops in Indianapolis since 1920, when it became the head of an episcopal area, include EDGAR BLAKE, FREDERICK D. LEETE, TITUS LOWE, and Richard C. Raines.

There are nine FREE METHODIST and five WESLEYAN churches in Indianapolis. The A.M.E. and A.M.E. ZION CHURCHES each have eight congregations, with St. John and St. Paul being the largest of the former and Jones Tabernacle the strongest of the latter denomination. Phillips Temple is the largest of five C.M.E. churches in the city. In the Wesleyan tradition are twenty-eight congregations of the CHURCH OF THE NAZARENE, and thirteen of the PILGRIM HOLINESS CHURCH, whose headquarters are in Indianapolis.

In 1968 when the E.U.B. and Methodist annual conferences were merged to form the North and South Indiana Conferences, all of Indianapolis and Marion County fell within the South Indiana Conference. In 1970 the three Indianapolis Districts—Northeast, Southeast, and West—reported 67 churches in Indianapolis, with 40,793 members, and property valued at some $24,615,500.

Broadway Church is an imposing gothic structure with a tower that is a landmark in the city. The church began in 1873 in a tiny building dubbed "Ragweed Methodist Church" because of the ragweed in the muddy paths leading to the small edifice. Later the congregation moved to what was called Pattison Chapel. In the 1890's a brick building was erected at Broadway and Twenty-Second Street and the name was changed to Broadway Church. At that time the membership was 1,430. A LADIES' AID SOCIETY was organized which supported missions at home and abroad and also worked for the expansion and improvement of Broadway Church.

On Nov. 22, 1925 the cornerstone was laid for the first section of the edifice now on Fall Creek Boulevard. The sanctuary, community room, gymnasium, and some education facilities were constructed at that time. In 1952, a chapel, parlor, and more education space were added.

By 1961 Broadway Church found itself in a neighborhood which was beginning racial integration. In view of the situation, the congregation considered relocating the church in the suburbs but decided to remain and become a servant church to the changing community. In 1964 the third and final phase of the building program was completed. By that time the neighborhood was predominantly Negro, and Negro children were participating in the Church school, the youth activities, and the choirs, and a few Negro adults had become active members of the church.

In its efforts to serve the community, Broadway Church formed study groups and it organized outpost Sunday school sessions for neighborhood children. The Women's Society began operating a Thrift Shop in which families in the community could purchase good clothing at nominal prices. One doctor in the congregation who served for a time as a volunteer in the CONGO, returned home and, finding similar medical needs within the shadow of his church, established a health center which provided inoculation for children, pre-natal health care, and other medical services. In 1964 the church created a new staff position to work with the city courts and welfare agencies in behalf of the immediate neighborhood. While trying to serve the neighborhood the church also endeavored to provide good worship services, music, youth activities, and programs for older citizens, as well as assisting with the support of a missionary family in INDIA.

Like strong churches in changing neighborhoods in other cities, Broadway Church has found that with the passage of time it has been unable to grow or even to hold its own in membership or financial resources. In 1961 the church reported 3,225 members and $208,348 raised for all purposes. The peak membership was 3,322 in 1966 and the largest amount raised in one year was $332,848 in 1967. In 1970 the membership was 2,525, and $134,034 was raised for all purposes.

Irvington Church is the oldest congregation in what was formerly the Irvington Community adjacent to Indianapolis. Today Irvington is a part of the city itself. The church began in 1878 with ten members. It has occupied several building locations since that time.

The present church was built on an oval plot in the middle of what is known as Audubon Circle, where once stood the old English style home of Thomas Carr Howe, former president of Butler University. The architecture of the residence was continued in the church building, and the home was incorporated in the new structure which was consecrated in September, 1926.

The economic depression which began in 1929 seriously affected the church's debt reduction program, but in time the obligation was discharged. In 1958 classrooms, a chapel, and office accommodations were added. In 1963 the sanctuary was remodeled to become a beautiful and inspirational center of worship.

The Irvington church had 184 members in 1900 and 1,451 in 1926. Today it has four ministers appointed by the conference, and it supports a missionary couple in COSTA RICA. In 1970 the church reported 1,856 members, property valued at $1,272,500, and $96,095 raised for all purposes.

Meridian Street Church is the direct descendant of the first Methodist congregation formed in Indianapolis. The original church, a log house purchased in 1824, was a part of the Indianapolis Circuit which was organized in 1821. In 1829 the congregation erected a church known as Wesley Chapel on Meridian Street, then as now the north and south axis of Indianapolis. In 1869 a new edifice was built at another location on the same street and the name was changed to Meridian Street Church. A fire in 1904 destroyed that building, and a Gothic stone church which served the congregation until 1947, was erected a few blocks to the north. In 1947 the Fifty-First Street Church merged with Meridian Street and a new church plant was erected 55 blocks north of the original Meridian Street location.

Through the years Meridian Street Church has had prominent civic and business leaders in its membership, including CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS, Senator and Vice-President of the United States, and Senator Albert J. Beveridge. Throughout its history Meridian Street Church has been relatively strong. In 1870 it had 502 members, and in 1948 there were 1,250. In 1970 the church had four ministers appointed by the conference, and it reported 2,185 members, property valued at $1,882,379, and $194,618 raised for all purposes.

"The Church does not dare to stop until it encompasses all the interests of Jesus Christ, and our Church can never encompass all of His interests and leave out the ministry of healing to the sick and injured." This challenging statement in 1899 by a young Indiana Methodist minister, George Smith, resulted eventually in the use of the above balance to start "The Methodist Episcopal Hospital and Deaconess Home of the State of Indiana."

The charter of incorporation for the hospital was granted Nov. 3, 1899. More money was raised and the first unit of sixty-five beds was opened in 1908. In 1966 the hospital had more than 2,200 employees, and it could care for more than 1,000 patients.

The hospital buildings cover more than six city blocks. Included in the complex are two student nurse residence halls, apartment housing for professional personnel, a garage for visitors, and a medical research building, in addition to a separate children's pavilion connected to the main hospital buildings by a tunnel.

The hospital is a non-profit corporation directly related to the conferences of The United Methodist Church in Indiana. The conferences elect twenty-one of the twenty-three members of the hospital's board of trustees.

The total cost of the charity service rendered annually in the name of Methodism through this hospital to patients unable to pay for their care approximates $1,000,000. The medical care for these patients is given by the eighty-member staff of interns and resident physicians.

Approximately 600 students on this teaching hospital campus are engaged in educational programs in nursing, medical technology, X-ray technology, hospital administration, chaplaincy, and graduate medical education. These programs are approved by their official accrediting agencies. They provide approximately twenty-four per cent of the professional and technical personnel needed in hospitals throughout Indiana.

In addition to patient care and educational programs, the hospital has a department of medical research with well equipped laboratories. The studies of this department provide new information on causes of illness and methods of prevention.

The Christian imperatives—to preach, to teach and to heal—are all practiced at Indianapolis Methodist Hospital as the institution deals with the whole man. The preaching ministry is evidenced through the chaplaincy service. With two full-time chaplains and four chaplain residents, there is a chaplain on duty twenty-four hours a day.

Fully accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, this hospital, through its medical staff of 700 members, admits more than 30,000 patients annually. The diabetic and urological units rank among the largest in the U.S.A. It has a 150-bed psychiatric unit, and it operates the only true isolation nursing unit for contagious disease patients in a private hospital in Indiana.

North Church was organized with eight members by Bishop FREDERICK D. LEETE in 1920. The next year the congregation bought a lot only fifty feet from the Mapleton Church, and at the invitation of Bishop Leete the two congregations merged. The foundation for the new North Church building was laid in 1925 and the edifice was completed in 1928. The sanctuary with a seating capacity of 1,200 cost $386,000. A week of dedicatory services was held in 1931 with seven bishops as the preachers.

The Mapleton Church dated back to October, 1843

when LUCIEN BERRY, a circuit rider, preached to a group in the home of Delanson Slavson and organized a class of six members. Services were held in homes and in a log schoolhouse until 1855 when a church, then called Sugar Grove, was organized and a building was erected. In June, 1900, a new edifice was built and the name was changed to Mapleton Church.

In February, 1951, North Church completed an education building which cost more than $200,000. At that time its complete plant was regarded as one of the best in the state. Through the years twelve members of North Church have entered the ministry.

The membership of North Church passed the 1,000 mark in 1932. Seven years later it had 1,522 on the roll. In 1970 the church reported 1,703 members, property valued at $3,195,000, and a total of $122,013 raised for all purposes.

Roberts Park Church is a downtown "cathedral church." Sharing with Meridian Street Church a common heritage that goes back to 1821, Roberts Park began its separate existence in 1842 when the Indianapolis charge was divided geographically east and west. The eastern part was named Roberts Chapel in honor of Bishop ROBERT R. ROBERTS. Among the original members was a "Mother" Little, who had been converted under JOHN WESLEY in England. Among other members in the 1840's were Calvin Fletcher, attorney and banker, and James Brown Ray, three-term governor of Indiana. MATTHEW SIMPSON, later bishop, laid the cornerstone of Roberts Chapel in 1846; the official town clock and fire bell were then located in the chapel tower. The present building was begun in 1869, and it was dedicated in 1876 by Bishop Simpson. The pastor at the time was Gilbert De La Matry, later a congressman. The limestone edifice was modeled after the old City Temple in London, and the walnut woodwork is from trees cut on the site.

Historic revivals occurred in Roberts Park Church in 1881, 1886, and 1896. The organization of the EPWORTH LEAGUE was perfected in the building in 1888. In 1948, the church was host to the North Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE when four bishops, H. CLIFFORD NORTHCOTT, RICHARD C. RAINES, MARSHALL R. REED, and HAZEN C. WERNER, were elected. During World War II the church served as a servicemen's center in which 90,000 meals were furnished. During its history Roberts Park has colonized or "mothered" eighteen new churches in Indianapolis. Israel H. McConnell, father of Bishop FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL, was pastor at Roberts Park, 1884-87. Following World War II, HOBART B. AMSTUTZ, later bishop in SINGAPORE, was the congregation's special missionary. The church has continued its interest in MALAYSIA, contributing the full cost of building one church and part of the cost of another in that country. The Roberts Park edifice was enlarged in 1927, and it was twice remodeled in the 1950's. Committed to service in the inner city, the church draws members and worshippers from the entire metropolitan area.

Roberts Park Church had 527 members in 1870. The number grew to 960 by 1900, and passed the 1,000 mark in 1920. A peak membership of 1,380 was reached in 1960. Following that date the number of members declined. In the mid-1960's the church was raising for all purposes more than $100,000 per year. In 1970 it reported 899 members, property valued at $613,693, and $54,563 raised for all purposes.

INDIANOLA, IOWA, U.S.A. First Church. The first Methodist church building in Indianola was erected at the northeast corner of the public square and dedicated in January 1856. This church was sold and the proceeds, along with contributions, were used to erect a second church two blocks farther west in 1886. This second church was enlarged to bring its seating capacity to 1,200 in 1896. This enlarged building burned in 1956. The present church building was erected to replace it and was consecrated in 1957, costing $400,000, and was dedicated in 1963. A church school and social building was erected in 1926 at a cost of $56,000. The current active membership of the church is 2,377.

First Church is the home church of SIMPSON COLLEGE, a church related school with 1,000 students. Between the two organizations there has always been close cooperation.

The first Methodist class was organized in 1850 by four couples, Jesse and Rebecca Liston, Zebulon and Mary Hockett, Anselm and Lucinda Barker, and John and Margaret Adamson. Church service was first held in the log courthouse at the southeast corner of the public square, until the permanent home was erected in 1856. The church building of 1856 is said to have been the first church building erected in Warren County, fifteen years before the coming of a railroad and five years before the Civil War.

In 1891-92, George Washington Carver, famed Negro scientist, was a regular attendant in this church, being then a student in Simpson College. CHARLES R. GOFF, longtime pastor of the CHICAGO TEMPLE, attended here while he was an academy student in Simpson. The late James A. Beebe, dean of LIFF and BOSTON SCHOOLS OF THEOLOGY and president of Allegheny College, attended the church during his undergraduate years in Simpson and served as a student pastor at the village of Summerset.

Among other pastors was E. H. Winans (1862-63), the man who told to John Hay the story of "Little Breeches" which Hay incorporated in his "Pike County Ballads." (The actual finding of the boy in the sheepfold occurred in Warren County about twenty miles southwest of Indianola.)

In 1856-58 the pastor was H. H. Badley, father of the missionary to India, B. H. BADLEY, and grandfather of Bishop BRENTON T. BADLEY. A full list of pastors would include many of the ministers most influential in the DES MOINES CONFERENCE, later called the South Iowa Conference.

INDONESIA, an independent republic, is a veritable continent of islands, sprawling over the area between MALAYSIA and the PHILIPPINES to the north, and NEW GUINEA and AUSTRALIA to the east and southeast. The Indonesian Archipelago is roughly a parallelogram measuring 2,400 miles east-west from the north tip of Sumatra to New Guinea, and 1,000 miles north-south from the boundary with North Borneo to the southern shores of the Lesser Sunda Islands. Its population was estimated in 1969 at 118,000,000.

These were the so called "Spice Islands" for which Dutch, Portuguese and British interests contended in the Colonial Period. The Dutch ultimately won the prize, giving stable government for over two centuries. Japan conquered the area early in World War II, only to lose it in the final fierce battles, and at the peace table. Dutch control was promptly re-established.

Beginning in 1945, dissident left-wing elements fomented revolution, a bitter conflict ensuing. Prolonged negotiations resulted in Indonesia being recognized as an autonomous nation in December 1949, and as a member of the United Nations in 1950. Sukarno emerged as the strongman, ruling in dictatorial fashion. His Foreign Minister, Subandrio, entered into close relationships and practical alliance with Communist China.

The development of the British sponsored Federation of Malaya (including Sarawak and Sabah in North Borneo) into an independent nation, Malaysia, and then its entry into the United Nations, greatly agitated the government of Indonesia. Claim was laid to the areas in Borneo, and both Sukarno and Subandrio publicly vowed to destroy Malaysia, as a "British neo-colonial puppet." Guerilla warfare was launched by Indonesia, many attempts to land on Malaysian territory being carried out. The forces of Malaysia, aided by some British troops, dominated every landing and overcame rebellious uprisings.

In 1964, Sukarno withdrew Indonesia from membership in the United Nations, when Malaysia was seated in the Security Council of that body by proper vote of the General Assembly. Many leading officers of the Indonesian armed forces deplored this extreme action, fearing that Indonesia had committed itself to an international plot to subvert the United Nations. Early in 1966 anti-Communist riots erupted, with many deaths and great property damage. Sukarno's government was overthrown by a military junta headed by Lieutenant General Suharto. Sukarno and other Cabinet officers were arrested. The Junta declared a policy of international non-alignment, and set itself to restore political stability and economic integrity, severely dislocated by the Sukarno regime. Adam Malik, experienced diplomat, became Foreign Minister, advocating cooperation with all recognized international bodies, including the United Nations.

In June 1966 Suharto called the Provisional People's Consultative Congress into session. Without dissenting voice, this body stripped Sukarno of all powers save the merely nominal place at head of government; approved moves to end the conflict with Malaysia; outlawed all forms of Marxism; approved reentry into the United Nations. On Aug. 11, 1966, after careful negotiations, Indonesia Foreign Minister, Adam Malik, and Malaysia Vice-President, Abdul Razak, formally ended the "confrontation" of their countries by signing an accord. This treaty ordered the cessation of all hostilities; declared their readiness to enter into normal diplomatic relations; and pledged to the citizens of Sabah and Sarawak (North Borneo) the right to a plebiscite to determine their future status as between the two major parties. This act provided the way whereby peace and order might prevail over the vast area of the nations involved.

Sumatra is the second largest island of Indonesia, lying southwest of the Malay Peninsula from which it is separated by the Straits of Malacca. It is 1,000 miles long and 250 miles across at the widest point, moving northwest to southeast. Including the important island of Bangka and a number of lesser islands near the coast, the total of the Sumatran complex is 164,148 square miles. The population approximates 12,000,000, of which the bulk are Moslems; but there are sizeable groups of animists, Hindus, and Buddhist and Confucian Chinese. The chief cities are Medan in the north and Palembang in the south.

Migrations from INDIA arrived during the seventh century A.D. Arab traders appeared in the thirteenth century with continuing contacts and a lasting influence for Islam. Portuguese elements came in the fifteenth century, but they were expelled by the Dutch whose settlements became paramount. A British trading post was established in 1685 at Benkulen (Benkulu), which was exchanged with the Dutch for Malacca on the Malay Peninsula. Dutch control then became complete, to continue until recent days, as indicated above.

In 1897, Benjamin F. West, a missionary of the M. E. Church at Penang, Malaya, visited Medan, but organized no work. The first formal Methodist approach came in 1904 when Hong Tean, a Chinese student from Malaya, came to Medan and established a school with ninety pupils. Late that year, George G. Pykett, missionary at the Methodist Anglo-Chinese School at Penang, visited Hong Tean. In 1905 Pykett sent a Tamil-speaking pastor, S. S. Pakianathan, to enlarge the school and establish preaching in Tamil, Malay and English. In 1907, John R. Denyes, from the Malaya Methodist Mission, visited Palembang. When other preachers reached Medan, Pakianathan went to Palembang to start formal work there.

William T. Ward arrived at Medan in 1912, the first Methodist missionary to reside in Sumatra. His mother, Mrs. Charles B. (Ellen Welch) Ward, joined him in 1913. She had gone to India in 1878 to marry Charles B. Ward, one of WILLIAM TAYLOR's pioneer missionaries in South India, and together they had completed amazing service among the Telugu people. Leonard Oechsli (1916), E. H. Hibbard (1918), Dr. L. H. Bittner, and Miss Mary Howell, R.N. (1922), provided reinforcement. By the outbreak of World War II, there were over sixty congregations with 2,500 members, and several thousand students in the schools.

The work has been primarily addressed to Chinese, Tamils and others, all non-Moslems. So successful has the Sumatra work proven that several pastors have been sent to Sarawak (Malaysia) to help develop work among the Iban people, also animists. In 1962, congregations were established on the adjacent island of Bangka, organized by Methodist Chinese from both Sumatra and Malaya. Richard H. Babcock, Methodist missionary at Palembang and M. H. Napitupulu, district superintendent, completed the formal establishment of this newest element of Sumatra Methodism. The locations are at Belinju and Tempilang, services being conducted in Indonesian and the Hakka dialect (Chinese). Bangka has nearly 1,000,000 inhabitants, predominantly Chinese, and is very rich in tin, its name being derived from the primitive root-word for that metal.

The 1964 GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church granted power to the Sumatra Annual Conference to assume complete autonomy as an independent, self-governing denomination. Under this authority the Methodist Church of Indonesia was established at a conference held in Medan, August 3-9, 1964. Bishop HOBART B. AMSTUTZ of the SINGAPORE Area of the Methodist Church, in which the Sumatra work had been a part, presided. After the proper actions were completed, Bishop Amstutz inducted WISMAR PANGGABEAN as President of the newly organized Church Council. The head of the Church in 1969 took the title of bishop. Bishop SHOT K. MONDOL of the Delhi Area represented the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church at the Conference. The Indonesia Methodist Church has membership of over 22,000, with many thousands of students in its schools. The new church clearly indicated that it would maintain affiliation with American Methodism, as do the autonomous Methodist churches of KOREA, MEXICO and BRAZIL, and that it would welcome such missionaries and funds as might be channeled through the Methodist BOARD OF MISSIONS. British Methodist missionaries have served with this church since 1958.

Numerous Chinese Methodists have moved from Sumatra to Java. So significant has this development become that three Methodist congregations have been formally organized, in 1965-66; two in the capital, Djakarta, and one in Bandung, 100 miles to the southeast. A conference pastor is now under appointment to his new work.

E.U.B. Work. In 1953 the E.U.B. Church became a member body of the Indonesian Council of Churches (formed in 1950) and assigned the Rev. and Mrs. F. W. Brandauer to serve on the faculty of the Sekolah Theologia, a theological seminary in Makassar, on the island of Celebes.

Through the Indonesian Council the thirty regional denominations which make up the council, separated by theology, language, and distance, find a unity to minister to the nation. For example, the Council, on behalf of her member churches, will supply the North American mission boards with annual priority lists of needed missionary personnel. When they indicated a high priority request for assistance to the Karo Batak Protestant Church of Sumatra (1966) the E.U.B. Church responded with personnel, the Richard Browns, and with the working funds for the ministry in cooperation with The Methodist Church.

INFANT BAPTISM. (See BAPTISM.)

INGHAM, BENJAMIN (1712-72), one of the OXFORD METHODISTS, was the evangelical apostle of Yorkshire in the early days of the eighteenth-century revival. He was born at Ossett, near Leeds, June 11, 1712. He sailed to GEORGIA with the Wesleys in 1735, and was brought into contact with the MORAVIANS, by whom he was much impressed, believing them to be "more like the Primitive Christians than any other Church now in the world." His visit to their headquarters at HERRNHUT in Germany with JOHN WESLEY in 1738 confirmed his conviction; and after sharing in the significant love feast at FETTER LANE on Jan. 1, 1739, he returned to his native Yorkshire and embarked upon his mission. Soon some fifty societies were established, which in July, 1742, were placed under Moravian control, though a Moravian historian maintains that Ingham was never ecclesiastically a Moravian. Meanwhile Ingham had married LADY MARGARET HASTINGS, sister-in-law of the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON. Through Ingham, the Moravians secured their northern headquarters, first at Wyke and later at Fulneck. In 1754 he was led to separate from the Moravians, and some eighty congregations of "Inghamites" were formed. At the Leeds Conference of 1755 CHARLES WESLEY urged their amalgamation with the Methodists, but John Wesley resisted the suggestion. In 1760 Ingham inclined toward the doctrines being advanced by Robert Sandeman, a Scottish sectarian; and as a result most of his followers left him, many joining the Methodists.

INGHAM, SEPTIMUS WATSON (1837-?), pioneer American preacher and missionary to the Iowa-Dakota region. As a young man of twenty-one years, he was admitted on trial in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE in 1858. For two years he worked among settlers of the river valleys of northeast Iowa leading northward to the MINNESOTA border, and proved himself a capable evangelist.

George Clifford, appointed presiding elder of the Sioux City district in 1860, persuaded Bishop OSMON C. BAKER to appoint a missionary to the settlers in Dakota land. The Sioux and Dakota Indian tribes had just signed a treaty ceding this land to the whites, which opened it for settlement. Ingham was chosen for this work. On Oct. 12, 1860, he rode his horse into his new parish. He had been assigned to "all that land between the Big Sioux and Missouri Rivers." He had ninety cents in his pocket and had been promised $130 support for the first year. He preached the first sermon delivered by a Methodist minister at a tavern in Vermillion on October 14. Thus started the work of Methodism in Dakota.

During the two years of his assignment, Ingham rode about 7,000 miles, mostly on horseback. He ranged all the way up the Missouri to Fort Randall, a military establishment. Ruins of the fort chapel still stand near the big dam on the Missouri which bears its name. He also traveled up the Big Sioux to the falls, which are in the center of the city of Sioux Falls.

Ingham preached as often as possible, wherever a group could be gathered and regularly at five places; Vermillion, Yankton, Ft. Randall, Brule Creek and Elk Point. Only one class was formed by him, at Vermillion.

Ingham wrote a detailed report of this work which is in the archives of Dakota Mission. As he closed his work, in 1862, he returned to Upper Iowa Conference. He seemed to have the characteristic restless energy of the pioneers.

He had been ordained deacon in 1860 and is variously listed in the Journal of the Upper Iowa Conference thereafter, but there is no record of his ordination as elder. However, he was appointed presiding elder of the Cedar Falls district in 1876.

In 1885 he was appointed "Missionary to North Dakota," transferred to the NEBRASKA CONFERENCE in 1887 and reported by the NORTH DAKOTA CONFERENCE as "located at his own request" in 1888, thirty years after his reception on trial in Upper Iowa Conference.

It is easy to deduct from this record that he was a man of courage, endurance, conviction and zeal. The Church at Vermillion stands as witness to this evaluation.

INGHAMITES. The evangelism of BENJAMIN INGHAM, member of the HOLY CLUB and companion of JOHN WESLEY to GEORGIA and GERMANY, led to the formation of over fifty small religious societies in Yorkshire. In 1742 he transferred these to the oversight of the MORAVIANS, while he himself turned to further evangelizing, with the cooperation of WILLIAM GRIMSHAW. In order to secure continued Christian fellowship for his converts, however, he organized more societies in the Yorkshire and Lancashire dales and in Westmoreland. As an ordained Anglican clergyman he urged his followers to attend their parish churches but like Wesley he gradually built up for them an organization quite independent of the church. An attempt in 1749 to unite his societies more closely with Wesley's failed, but Grimshaw continued to preach for him. A conference of Ingham's societies held at Winewall on Dec. 27, 1755 formally organized them as a denomination distinct from the Church of England, over which Ingham was "General Overseer" and WILLIAM BATTY and James Allen (whom Ingham himself ordained) were "General Elders."

The doctrinal basis of membership among the Inghamites, like their general polity, remained much the same as in Wesley's societies—a desire "to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, and to endeavour through His grace to believe, live, and submit to the rule of His holy gospel, as the same is set forth in Scripture." They assumed no distinct name for themselves, and were content to be classed under the general term of "Methodists." At this time they were at their peak. Between 1750 and 1757 they built seven meetinghouses, at Rothwell, Dent, and Salterforth, in Yorkshire, at Wheatley and Winewall in Lancashire, and at Birks and Burton in Westmoreland, in addition to converting a barn for worship in Kendal, and using numerous makeshift meeting places. In 1748 Ingham had published A Collection of Hymns for the Societies, and in 1757 James Allen provided a larger book, A Collection of hymns for the use of those that seek and those that have redemption in the blood of Christ, of which only the title was borrowed from Wesley's hymnody. This went through an enlarged second edition in 1761. Both editions were printed at Kendal, which gradually became the center of the movement.

In the summer of 1761 Batty and Allen, at Ingham's request, visited the Glassite or Sandemanian church in Scotland and "found reason to joy over their order, and steadfastness in the faith of Christ." This was Allen's reaction, at any rate, and shortly after the visit he broke with the Inghamites to become a Sandemanian, though he took with him only his own society at Gayle and a scattered handful of adherents in other places. Nevertheless the defection was very unsettling, and during Ingham's last years his societies were visibly disintegrating, nearly a hundred societies being reduced to fewer than twenty. In 1813 the remaining thirteen united with the Scots Old Independents, with whom (ironically enough) the Glassites who had inveigled Allen away from Ingham and then deserted him were now associated. Little now remains of them except a congregation in Kendal and a warm devotional spirit still cherished by descendants not only in England but in Brantford, Ontario and PRTTSBURGH, Pa.

INGLEWOOD, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. First Church was established as the start of Methodism in a city of 250 inhabitants on July 22, 1905. There were eight church members and twelve Sunday school pupils. The first sermon preached at this location was on May 21, 1905, by W. A. Adkinson in the Queen Street Schoolhouse.

The first church building on Commercial Street, now the corner of Manchester and LaBrea Boulevards, was built in 1908. Other structures were added at this location until the present site at the corner of Spruce and Kelso Streets was chosen and ground broken for a new building under the pastorate of John G. Ross, Sr., in July 1940.

The beautiful Spanish style of architecture is gracefully displayed in the cruciform sanctuary, with seventeenth century Spanish tile decorating the pulpit, altar, and chancel steps. The pulpit was given by the architect, Reginald Inwood, in honor of his uncle, Alfred Inwood, a Methodist minister and former district superintendent. Two arms of the cruciform plan are formed by the Shugars Memorial Chapel and a matching one, and the nave and balcony permit seating of nearly 600 persons when added to the chancel and chapel areas. A modern new social hall was built and consecrated on Sept. 16, 1962. It houses the kitchen, stage lighting and electronic equipment, and has ample rooms for choir rehearsal, robing, music storage, and several multi-purpose rooms now being used by thriving adult classes.

Sixty years of service were appropriately celebrated on Oct. 17, 1965. In 1970 the membership was reported at 1,516. A succession of consecrated ministers has been appointed through these sixty years. The thousands of faithful church members who have labored under their direction over the years have helped to make Inglewood First Church one of the "Great Churches of the Golden West."

INNOCENT, JOHN (1829-1904), Methodist missionary in CHINA, was born in SHEFFIELD on Oct. 29, 1829, and in 1852 entered the ministry of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION. In 1859 he shared with WILLIAM N. HALL the founding of the Methodist New Connexion mission to China, serving first in the province of Shantung. Innocent remained in China until 1885, mostly in Tientsin. After two years of superannuation, during which he served circuits in his native Sheffield and Southport, England, he returned to China for a further ten years of active work. Largely in recognition of this impressive missionary record, in 1897 he was elected President of the Methodist New Connexion Conference. After two years of furlough, however, in 1899 he returned to Tientsin, though this time as a supernumerary, and for one year only, closing his ministry as a supernumerary in Nottingham, England, where he died Nov. 28, 1904.

INSKIP, JOHN S. (1816-1884), American clergyman, evangelist and editor, was born in Huntington, England, on April 10, 1816, and came to the United States with his parents when he was five years of age. The family settled first at WILMINGTON, Del., and then at Marshallton, Pa. In 1836 he entered the ministry of the M. E. Church, joining the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE, and served churches in that Conference for a time, then in the CINCINNATI, the NEW YORK EAST, the NEW YORK, and BALTIMORE CONFERENCES. When he was pastor at Springfield, Ohio, he introduced the custom of having families sit together in church. Previous to that time, men sat on one side and the women on the other in Methodist meetinghouses and churches.

John Inskip was at one time tried and censured by his conference for "contumacy," but appealed to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1852, which exonerated him.

He later became an editor of The Christian Standard and Home Journal in Philadelphia until his death. He also became an evangelist of unusual ability. In 1881-82 he took an extended evangelistic tour, conducting meetings in England, India, and Australia, traveling during the years 31,000 miles, conducting over 500 public services and witnessing over 5,000 conversions. He wrote more than 160 columns of editorial matter for his paper on the trip, and besides conducted an extensive correspondence. He was the author of Methodism: Explained and Defined, 1851; Songs of Triumph, 1882. He died in Ocean Grove, N. J., on March 7, 1884.

INSTITUTO AMERICANO DE LINS is an educational institution of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, located in the city of Lins, northwestern zone of the state of São Paulo. It was founded by CLEMENT EVANS HUBBARD on Feb. 11, 1928, in his home, with fifteen pupils who wanted primary instruction. Hubbard and his wife Patience were the first and only teachers at that time. By the end of the year, enrollment had reached forty-eight. From these modest beginnings, the school expanded until it is now the largest in Brazilian Methodism, with almost 3,000 students. The school's first building was a remodeled store. Gradually new buildings were added, and in addition it now owns two farms that provide dairy products, vegetables, and fruit for the school's use.

Among the courses offered is one on dentistry, and this dental school opened in 1954 was the first ever offered in Methodist foreign work with no American money to help support it. Special scholarships are given to boys and girls planning to study for the ministry or order of deaconesses.

The high standing of the institute is evident in the rapid growth of its student body, in the financial support given it by the community and in the moral backing of the State Department of Education. This department was so impressed with the functional aspect of the institute's program that it has used it in its teacher-training program.

Several honors have been awarded the Director and faculty members. Hubbard was named Honorary Citizen of Lins; Dona Aurea Gonçalves was also voted an Honorary Citizen; and Professor Moacyr Rodrigues received a special citation from the Mayor. Upon Hubbard's retirement in 1958, Rodrigues succeeded him and still serves as Reitor (principal).

INSTITUTO ANNA GONZAGA is a Methodist home for children in need due to death, desertion, or disease in their families, and is located in Inhoaiba, state of Guanabara, BRAZIL, some twenty miles from RIO DE JANEIRO. It was founded in 1932, as the fulfillment of a missionary's dream and a Brazilian lady's generosity.

The church in Brazil had long recognized the need of such a home and training center, but had not deemed it possible. Twice LAYONA GLENN, a missionary of the Women's Board of Foreign Missions, had appealed to the Brazil Annual Conference for such an institution, and twice it had been refused on the ground of lack of funds. The third time, in 1927, the conference told Miss Glenn that she could go ahead on three conditions—that she raise the necessary funds, establish the home, and direct it.

Miss Glenn then began making appeals, but it was some years later before the means were found. Through Osório Caire, a national preacher, she heard about Dona ANNA GONZAGA, a wealthy, consecrated member of his church in Villa Izabel, and he took Miss Glenn to visit her. There was instant rapport between the two women. Miss Glenn told Dona Anna about her dreams; Dona Anna told Miss Glenn about her unsatisfied longing to find a deep purpose in life, and Dona Anna forthwith decided to convey at once for such a project a vast farm and orange groves of around 1,200 acres then in the Federal District, along with a usable residence. Miss Glenn took charge at once. She moved into the residence, repairing and painting it, and secured for matron, Dona Amalia Andrade. Thus was founded the home.

Many problems emerged. One of the greatest has been buying back rights to the land—that is, paying off "squatters" who had settled upon it for years and could not be evicted without compensation. Another problem was securing trained and dedicated personnel for an institution which also demanded agricultural work—raising hogs, keeping up orchards, and cultivating vegetable gardens. Nevertheless, despite ups and downs throughout the years, the Anna Gonzaga home has become an outstanding project of the Methodist Church of Brazil. Its progress has been due to the devotion of both preachers and laymen. One of these is Artur Pinheiro de Castilho, owner of a large store in Rio de Janeiro. Although not a Methodist, Senhor Castilho became interested through his Methodist wife, and secured for the home tremendous financial assistance, including aid from Dona Darcy Vargas, wife of the then president of Brazil.

There are now some eight buildings on the grounds, including a pavilion for gym work; the Darcy Vargas Building; a laundry building; four houses for tenants; and a residence for the director.

Today the home shelters about 180 children, from five to an unstipulated age, depending on the child's circumstances. The Instituto donated land on which the state government built two schools, and these serve not only the children in the home but almost 1,000 others in the neighborhood. The children are also trained in manual arts, carpentry, agriculture, cooking, dressmaking, vegetable gardening, etc.

The spiritual side of life is also cared for with morning devotions, Sunday school, and worship in the nearby Methodist Church. Many children have been led to Christ and made their profession of faith.

The government, through its program for child education and welfare and the "Brazilian Legion for Assistance," helps defray costs of the needy children they send to the school. But the Methodist churches of that episcopal area carry a tremendous load of the total support. Some aid comes from the United States and from non-denominational organizations such as World Vision.

In recent years, under the leadership of J. Edwin Tims, the Instituto Anna Gonzaga received several prizes from the government for the best orange of its kind, for its excellent coconut seedlings, and its fine hogs. The present director and his staff continue to carry on the fine record of their predecessors.

INSTITUTO CENTRAL DO POVO, RIO DE JANEIRO

INSTITUTO CENTRAL DO POVO (People's Central Institute) is a Methodist settlement house and school in RIO DE JANEIRO, the first such institution in Brazil. It began in 1905 as a small Methodist mission on the second floor of a warehouse on Acre Street, before moving to its present location, Rua Riva d'Avia Correa 188, in 1914.

Its founder was HUGH C. TUCKER, Methodist preacher and agent in BRAZIL of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY. Its history began in the early 1900's, when the city of Rio de Janeiro was being rebuilt by the razing of antiquated buildings, the widening of narrow streets, and the construction of modern docking facilities. Tucker saw the profound need of welfare work for the thousands of laborers connected with the enterprise. He opened the small mission mentioned above, with a library, medical clinic, dispensary, and with evangelistic services and a small school attended by some fifty pupils. In 1910 its name was changed to Instituto do Povo by a district conference meeting in Rio, but there were no funds for the work envisioned.

With tremendous faith, Dr. and Mrs. Tucker held weekly prayer meetings in their house for the one purpose of achieving this goal. After a period of great discouragement, help came suddenly from an unexpected source, in a letter from a man Tucker did not know—a Mr. Hay C. Walker of London. He wrote that he had heard of the work Tucker planned, and as head of the firm that was building the docks, he was enclosing a check for £250, a sizeable sum at that time.

With added help from the Board of Missions, Tucker was able in 1917 to buy a large property at the foot of one of Rio's worst slum hills (favelas), where many laborers lived under the most abject conditions. It consisted of about thirteen acres of rough uphill land, and a large two-story house that belonged to an English family, the Hargraves. Here Tucker started the educational, recreational, clinical and spiritual program which became a blessing not only to the slum dwellers and workmen, but to the city itself. As the Rio chief of police stated publicly, "This neighborhood, which even our police dreaded to enter because of its bad reputation, was so changed that it is now as safe a place as any in Rio."

The original building was remodeled and several others were put up, including carpentry and ceramic shops, a government-sponsored prenatal clinic, and a school building with capacity for 300 and with apartments on the third floor. This building is used morning, afternoon, and night for different age groups, with night classes in literacy and typing for adults. Its enrollment is over 800.

The Instituto serves more than 1,000 people daily through its various programs. The staff of over sixty in all departments is almost entirely Brazilian, as is the superintendent, Edgar Kuhlmann, an outstanding Methodist layman. On the grounds stands St. John's Church, which serves the neighborhood. Part of the annual budget still comes from the BOARD OF MISSIONS in the United States, and there are usually two or three missionaries on the staff.

INSTITUTO EDUCACIONAL PIRACICABANO (Methodist Educational Institute of Piracicaba), is in Piracicaba, state of São Paulo, BRAZIL. It was founded in 1879 as a private school (Colegio Newman) by Mary and Annie Newman, daughters of JUNIUS E. NEWMAN, a Confederate States preacher who emigrated to Brazil in 1867. The school, however, closed shortly due to Mary's illness and Annie's marriage to J. J. RANSOM.

In answer to Ransom's urgent pleas that a woman missionary be sent to Brazil, the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, sent MARTHA H. WATTS in 1881. She re-opened the school as Colegio Piracicabano, on Sept. 13, 1881, running it for three months with three teachers for only one pupil, Maria Escobar, the first Brazilian girl to attend an official Methodist school. From then on, despite strong opposition by Roman Catholic priests, the school has had a continuous and honored existence. It won the admiration of prominent city and state leaders, among them Prudente de Moraes Barros, who became the first elected president of the Republic of Brazil.

The school pioneered in many fields. Miss Watts discarded the Latin American system of memory-learning, stressed social sciences, started a kindergarten, and set up new pedagogical patterns. It was sometimes referred to as the "mother of public schools in the State of SÃO PAULO," for Prudente de Moraes Barros, when elected governor of the state, turned to Miss Watts for counsel in setting up a public school system.

In 1927, the school became coeducational, another pioneering move, and in 1943, what could be termed a junior college in the United States. The following year, the name was changed to "instituto," more in keeping with Brazil's educational terminology. It also offers courses in music, art, accounting, and commercial and teacher-training. Under Miss Irene Hesselgesser's administration, a fine new dormitory was built.

In recent years, a Brazilian layman, Norman Kerr Jorge, has been reitor (principal) of the institute.

INSTITUTO GRANBERY, Juiz de Fôra, Minas Gerais, Brazil. The Brazil Annual Conference, from the time of its organization, had considered the establishment of a school for boys with an adjoining Bible school for Methodist preachers. In 1889, Bishop JOHN C. GRANBERY found for this task JOHN M. LANDER, a young preacher and educator in SOUTH CAROLINA, who was willing to go. Lander sailed for BRAZIL and at the annual conference in 1889 was named director of the school, which was to be located in the city of Juiz de Fora, state of Minas Gerais.

Lander with his wife and baby proceeded to the city, but since he did not know Portuguese, J. W. WOLLING was named his helper. They rented a house and at once "opened a school with nothing," said Lander, "but a box of chalk and a blackboard." In February 1890, the school was officially named "Granbery College." After several moves, a fine property was acquired in 1899 and the school's expansion and progress were assured.

By 1896, nine young men were there studying for the ministry. The school was accredited by the government in 1900; and in 1904, schools of dentistry and pharmacy were added. The latter, plus a business course, gave the Granbery great prestige in the state and beyond. Unfortunately, due to certain government regulations that could not be met, these latter schools had to be closed after a few years.

Among its principals were the founder, John M. Lander, for twelve years; WILLIAM B. LEE; JOHN W. TARBOUTX, CHARLES A. LONG, and WALTER H. MOORE. After Moore, a number of Brazilians assumed its administration, among them Afonso Romano and NATANAEL DO NASCIMENTO. Arthur T. Peterson followed next and is the present reitor (1969).

The school is now coeducational. It offers a primary course of five years, a four-year ginsio or high school course, and a three-year commercial course. Present control of the Instituto Granbery is vested in a Board of Trustees which holds title to the property valued at $750,000. The BOARD OF MISSIONS of The United Methodist Church aids in the support of this educational institution which exerts a great influence in that section of Brazil. Among its graduates are some of the outstanding ministers of the Methodist Church in Brazil, including Bishops ISAIAH SUCASAS and CESAR DACORSO.

INSTITUTO METODISTA (Methodist Institute), in Santo Amaro, suburb of São PAULO, BRAZIL, began as a department of religious education in the Methodist school in Ribeirão Preto, State of São Paulo. As the need for trained Christian workers became imperative, this school initiated a Religious Education course, in March 1941. At first there were only three students. In 1950, the General Conference of the Methodist Church in Brazil made the Institute a Church project, giving it the same status as the Theological Seminary.

It was moved to Santo Amaro, where the students were prepared as DEACONESSES and workers in rural centers. The reitora (principal) was Miss SARAH BENNETT, and the assistant principal was Miss DINA RIZZI, who had already worked with the course in Ribeirão Preto. The students paid a small fee, and as part of their training, helped with household and garden duties. In 1965, the Board of Trustees, feeling a need for re-evaluating the purpose of the Institute since it faced new conditions, met in December and under the chairmanship of W. R. SCHISLER, formulated and implemented a new program. Standards were raised to senior college level; a degree was offered in Christian Education, and special courses were organized for ministers and laymen of both sexes. Myung Chul Moon, a Korean refugee who had earned his Master's in Theology from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, was named Dean of the School of Christian Education, and Dina Rizzi the administrative principal. As part of the laymen's program, short intensive courses are now offered in religious journalism, sacred music, and Christian education. Many graduates of the Institute work throughout Brazil in schools, orphanages, hospitals and rural centers.

INSTITUTO RURAL DAWSEY, Maringa, Parana, Brazil, was founded in 1954 by Bishop CYRUS B. DAWSEY of the Central Region Conference, BRAZIL, in the northern region of Parana, one of the great coffee states of Brazil. It is located about ten miles from the new town of Maringa, in a rapidly developing region.

The purpose of the Institute is fourfold—to relate the program of the church to the rural needs of the community, to train efficient leaders for the church and community, to prepare rural congregations for better service to their communities, and to develop in every church of the district a program patterned after that of the Institute.

The Institute works in several areas of need—agricultural, educational, health, and evangelism. To this end, several buildings have been erected, a missionary agriculturist and wife have been assigned to the community, and a graduate nurse, Anita Cordeiro, administers to the needs of the women and children, delivering babies, instructing mothers in hygiene, and in general attending to all their needs.

The Institute is named in honor of its founder, Bishop Dawsey.

INSTITUTO RURAL EVANGELICO, Itapina, BRAZIL, an educational establishment of the Methodist Church in the State of Espírito Santo, was founded in 1947 by CHARLES CLAY, then Secretary of Social Action for the Methodist Church of Brazil, to give country youth a primary education under Christian influence and prepare them for lay and pastoral service in Brazil's vast rural areas. Ernest O'Neal effectively served four years as its first administrator.

The Institute opened with eight students, in a dilapidated building on a farm where the students could earn their expenses while learning better methods of farming. There are now on the grounds three main buildings and several barns and houses erected by students with rocks quarried by them on the property itself. Classes are co-educational, from primary to junior high school level, and there are about 200 students. The Institute has become a center in that region for advanced agricultural methods, having introduced irrigation, hybrid corn, vegetable cultivation, and improved animal production. It has served as a model farm and center for dissemination of information for students, area neighbors, and groups of ministers. Above all, it has been an inspiration for the founding of schools in an area which was formerly destitute of educational opportunities.

The Institute recently added a normal course and kindergarten, and the production of brick and roofing tiles on a commercial basis. There are about 130 students in its dormitories, all of whom are older teenagers, and the remainder of its enrollment is from the neighborhood. Self-support has not yet been attained, but real advances have been made in this direction.

INSTITUTO UNIÃO (Union Institute) is a Methodist school in the city of Uruguaiiana, state of Rio Grande do Sul, BRAZIL, just across the river from ARGENTINA. It was founded as a private school in 1870 by Aleixo Vurlod, a French Huguenot who had settled in Brazil. Though small, the school gained the respect of the community. In 1908, Vurlod—old and failing in health—negotiated with JOHN W. PRICE, then Methodist pastor in that city, to take it over. With Bishop WALTER R. LAMBUTH's authorization, Price became founder of the Methodist school and renamed it Instituto União.

Since then the Instituto has continually expanded and increased in size and influence. It now has nine buildings on a campus that comprises almost a city block; enrolls over 1,000 students of both sexes; includes junior and senior high departments, and departments of business and accounting and teacher training. It offers courses in Bible and religion and in religious education in the teacher training department. Its pupils come mainly from the cattle-raising pampa region of that southernmost state.

Throughout the years its principals have been both Americans and Brazilians of high caliber. The student body majority is not Methodist nor even evangelical (Protestant); but all attend chapel services willingly. Among its former students are two Methodist bishops; a goodly number of preachers and teachers; a member of the national legislature; EUNICE G. WEAVER, internationally known for her work in behalf of lepers' children; and many who occupy important and responsible positions in the state and nation.

The present principal is Leonard Williams.

INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED, of British Methodism, is an amalgamation of the three separate insurance undertakings of the uniting Methodist churches in 1932—the Wesleyan Methodist Trust Assurance Company, the Primitive Methodist Insurance Company, and the United Methodist Church Guarantee Fund. The Wesleyan Methodist Trust Assurance Company was formed in 1872 by a group of ministers and laymen with the object of assisting the funds of the church, especially the Ministers' Retirement Fund (see CONNEXIONAL FUNDS DEPARTMENT) out of the profits derived from the insurance of church properties against fire. In a circular letter dated Aug. 10, 1871, they said, "The object of the proposed company is not to enrich its members but to help the cause of God, and should the project succeed it is believed that it will ultimately yield a respectable sum which may be yearly given to the funds of the Methodist Church."

The Wesleyan Methodist Conference of 1871 adopted the following suggestions: (1) Permitted the use of the name Wesleyan Methodist in the designation of the company on condition that all distributable profits would be applied to connexional objects; (2) expressed its sense of the good feeling and disinterestedness of the promoters, and recommended the scheme to the Wesleyan connection. On July 12, 1872, the company was duly registered and incorporated.

The PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH had formed a similar company, conducted on similar lines, six years earlier in 1866, but the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH had an internal fund, known as the Guarantee Fund, which dealt with the fire insurance of church properties. On METHODIST UNION in 1932 the name of the Wesleyan Methodist Trust Assurance Company was altered to Methodist Insurance Company on incorporation of the other two undertakings.

INTERNATIONAL METHODIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY, created for the purpose of relating Methodist historical societies throughout the world, was organized in 1947 during the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, Springfield, Mass. with Bishop PAUL N. GARBER, U.S.A., as president, and ELMER T. CLARK, U.S.A., and FRANK BAKER, England, as secretaries. An executive committee of twenty persons, half of them from the United States and half from other parts of the world, was formed. In addition, some twenty-five persons in different areas and branches of world-wide Methodism were designated as correspondents.

In May, 1948, the society began World Parish, a semi-annual publication, in New York City, with Elmer T. Clark as editor. The first issue included "A Message to the Methodists of the World" from the 1947 Ecumenical Methodist Conference, along with reports on happenings of interest in Methodist churches in many lands. After 1951, World Parish became a joint publication of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL and the AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF METHODIST HISTORICAL SOCIETIES (now Commission on Archives and History), and, beginning in 1962, a project of the World Methodist Council alone.

Beginning in 1951, the International Methodist Historical Society has held meetings during each quinquennial session of the World Methodist Conference, electing officers for the ensuing five-year period.

At the 1966 meeting of the society in London, MALDWIN L. EDWARDS, Wales, was elected president, and ALBEA GODBOLD, U.S.A., and Thomas Shaw, England, were chosen as secretaries. The secretaries were authorized to issue occasional news letters to the members, and the officers were asked to make arrangements for a program of addresses and other features in connection with the 1971 session of the society.

Other presidents of the society have been: E. W. HAMES, New Zealand, 1951; Bishop ODD HAGEN, Sweden, 1956; and Leslie R. Hewson, South Africa, 1961.

The headquarters of the International Methodist Historical Society are in the World Methodist Building, LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., U.S.A. Having no independent financial resources, the society is related to the American Methodist Commission on Archives and History and the World Methodist Commission on Archives and History and the World Methodist Council.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL was the first organization to develop out of the Edinburgh WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE in 1910. A council made up of national Christian councils or missionary societies from throughout the world, this organization was formally organized in 1921 at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., and held major world assemblies at Jerusalem (1928), Tambaram, Madras, India (1938), Whitby, Canada (1947), Willingen, Germany (1952), and Ghana (1957-58), before uniting with the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES at its third assembly at New Delhi, India, in 1961. Since this unification, the work of the former International Missionary Council has been carried on through the World Council's Division of World Mission and Evangelism.

The purpose of the International Missionary Council throughout its span of separate existence was to further cooperative or ecumenical missionary study and action. Perhaps its most significant publication was the quarterly entitled The International Review of Missions, which has been continued by the World Council of Churches.

The central figure in the organization and early leadership of the International Missionary Council was JOHN R. MOTT, who served as the chairman of the Council during its first twenty years. Other significant officers and leaders of the Council included J. H. Oldham, Betty D. Gibson, A. L. Warnshuis, William Paton, CHARLES W. RANSON, Norman Goodall, John A. Mackay, John W. Decker, and Glora M. Wysner.

INTERPRETER'S BIBLE, THE, a twelve volume commentary on the entire Bible, planned for and published by ABINGDON PRESS, a division of the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, Nashville, Tenn., in 1951. Before the second World War the idea of such a commentary had been broached to the management of the Abingdon Press and the Methodist Publishing House, and tentative plans had been made. Then the war years came on and put a stop to all planning for such a broad venture. When, however, publishing conditions grew normal again—by the mid-forties—plans were begun in earnest to produce an up-to-date scholarly new commentary.

It was evident that since the beginning of the twentieth century, while scholarship had made tremendous advances in every department of Biblical knowledge, with new findings in original Texts, translations, historical background, interpretation, and scholarly monographs appearing over the general Christian world, there had been no way to make these interpretative works readily available to the average minister, teacher, and student of the Bible. Much of the new material had appeared in highly specialized areas, and was thus of little practical help to a minister looking for sermon ideas, or for the person who needed a clearer understanding of one of the books of the Bible, or of the Bible as a whole.

The time seemed right for the production of a comprehensive commentary, and as during the war, the great publishing houses of Britain had been badly injured by the bombing, it appeared that the Methodist Publishing House in America alone would have the resources to produce the type of commentary which was seen to be needed. George A. Buttrick, then the pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, and one who had frequently advanced the idea of a need of such a commentary, was selected to become editor-in-chief of this special project, with the Book Editor of The Methodist Church, NOLAN B. HARMON, acting as overall representative of the Publishing House and of all editorial matters connected with the bringing forth of the commentary.

Chosen to assist in producing the commentary were the following: John Knox, professor of New Testament at Union Theological Seminary, who became associate editor of New Testament and exposition; Samuel Terrien, also of Union Theological Seminary, associate editor of Old Testament Introduction and Exegesis; Walter Russell Bowie, associate editor of exposition; and Paul Scherer, also associate editor in charge of exposition.

The name Interpreter's Bible was suggested for the commentary by Dr. Bowie at one of the early meetings of the editorial group. The title had reference to the line in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, "And they came to the Interpreter's house."

A moving spirit, if not the moving spirit in the whole project, was PAT BEAIRD, then manager of ABINGDON PRESS, who gave himself wholeheartedly to caring for all the business and mechanical factors to be considered in connection with such an ambitious publishing project. He it was who drew up the contracts with the different editors and writers; worked with the Mergenthaler Company in order to provide a special machine for the unusual page display of typesetting which had been decided upon; he also secured a special grade of specially treated paper for the volumes to be produced, and looked after the many other details which came to the fore in the production of this ambitious work.

It was decided that the commentary should contain scholarly articles written in interpretation of various aspects of Biblical study, these articles to appear in their own place in the New Testament section, and at the beginning of the Old Testament section. The heart of the Interpreter's Bible, however, is considered to be "the working page," and the feature of this was two parallel columns of text at the top of each page—in one column the authorized or King James version, in the other the Revised Standard version (copyrighted in 1946 by the Thomas Nelson and Sons Company). The right to use this later version was secured from the copyright holders by special arrangement. Thus the text to be explained and commented upon was that of the authorized version but in parallel with it was also the newer translation which carried an up-to-date scholarly translation of the same material.

On each page, underneath the parallel texts of the Scripture, was to be an exegesis set forth by competent scholars in Hebrew and Greek; and under the exegesis an exposition of the material in which the preaching and teaching meaning of the text was set forth.

Preceding each Bible book is always an introduction, explaining when and why the book was written, what sort of person or persons wrote it, what was the historical situation, what sources did the writer use, who were the intended readers, how the original text was possibly altered and why each particular book was included in the Bible. Footnotes citing source material were, of course, always relied upon.

Writers, both exegetes and expositors, were carefully selected by the editorial committee with each writer assigned a special book—either the exegesis or the exposition of one of the sixty-six books of the Bible. These writers were from all over the English-speaking world and were chosen as representing "the best exegetical and expository skill of our time." (Editor's foreword). Also thirty-six consultants drawn from all the larger Protestant groups in the English-speaking world helped to guide the initial steps.

Knowing what a vast investment would be involved in producing this commentary, the publishing agents of The Methodist Church, then B. A. WHITMORE and FRED D. STONE, and later LOVICK PIERCE and ROY L. SMITH, presented the whole matter to the Board of Publication of that Church in advance of making the great financial commitment which it was seen the project would entail. The Board of Publication approved going into what was clearly to be a heavy and very great financial venture, and put the resources of the Publishing House behind the proposed plans. As it turned out and as the years 1946-51 went by, a half million dollars were expended before the first volume—that of Matthew and Mark (No. VII), of the Interpreter's Bible came from the press, and was formally launched. At the GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1952 in San Francisco one entire evening was officially devoted to a public presentation to the Church and church world of the commentary.

The Interpreter's Bible was received with acclaim by the church world and its success justified completely the faith of its sponsorship by the Methodist Publishing House. The country was "commentary hungry." Pat Beaird observed, and first and second printings of the earlier volumes were soon absorbed. A total of 1,158,345 volumes have been sold at last reporting and 469,464 twelve volume sets.

INVALID MINISTERS' REST FUND (British) was a charity established in the former Wesleyan Methodist Church in 1879. By a resolution of the Wesleyan Conference, a sum of £3,700, part of a fund known as the "Thanksgiving Fund," was set apart as an Invalid Ministers' Rest Fund to be administered by the Conference. The Fund was maintained after METHODIST UNION in 1932, and further funds and properties have been acquired. The Charity at present holds houses which are available to Methodist ministers and their families for periods of recuperation after illness and for holidays.

INVESTIGATION, COMMITTEE OF, a committee in each Annual Conference of The United Methodist Church composed of ministers in full connection nominated by the presiding bishop and elected by the Annual Conference. It is the duty of this Committee to investigate charges against the character or conduct of a Conference member when reports, or strong and persistent rumors affecting the same seem to warrant an investigation. The Committee acts as a grand jury, and if it deems that the accusations are heavy enough for the person accused to be brought to trial, it must first hear him, sift the matter thoroughly, and then bring in a bill of charges and specifications to be placed before the trial court when that is summoned. The book of Discipline gives full directions as to the procedure that must be followed.

Each district in an Annual Conference also is empowered to have a Committee of Investigation composed of three local preachers and two reserves nominated by the district superintendent. Where no district conference exists, the Annual Conference Committee of Investigation is empowered to act.

There is also a Committee of Investigation for the local church, but this is never created nor called unless and until charges which warrant it are made in writing to the preacher against a member of the church. Such local church committee is to be composed of seven members in good standing. This group also acts as a grand jury. (See CHURCH TRIALS AND TRIAL LAW for a further discussion.)

IONE, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. Ione Community Church is a steepled two-story brick structure, 42 by 70 feet, built in 1862, and regarded by competent authorities to be as nearly perfect a Gothic structure as may be found in the United States west of the Mississippi. The Engineering School, University of California, joins in this estimate. The architect of the church, Samuel D. Nandell, was selected in Ione's heyday, when it was a prosperous mining and commercial center. Before the building was completed, however, an adverse judicial decision on mining claims caused the community to decline, and the original $8,000 estimated cost of the church had risen to $25,000 by 1880, when debts were finally paid. It was dedicated by Bishop CALVIN KINGSLEY as the "Ione Centenary Methodist Church" in 1866, the CENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM.

Tradition says the cornerstone contains a letter from Abraham Lincoln, along with gold nuggets and other mementos. Perhaps more apocryphal is the story that the town got its name when the back-east fiancée of a young Methodist objected emphatically to the camp's name, Bedbug—whereupon his gallant townsmen changed it to bergs.

ISAAC OWEN is associated with the introduction of Methodism into Ione Valley, as early as 1849. William Hurlburt began fortnightly services here in 1852, and in the following year with F. C. Camp put up a small church building that served till the present one was erected. In its first half century, the Ione Church had forty-one pastors. With recent economic and populational developments of the area, it also has attained stability and is now regarded not only as an ecclesiastical show-piece but an important Methodist center in Northern California.

IOWA, sometimes called the "Hawkeye State," located in the north central part of the United States, was admitted into the Union in 1846. It is bounded on the north by MINNESOTA, on the east by the Mississippi River, on the south by MISSOURI, and on the west by the Missouri and Big Sioux Rivers. With an area of 56,290 square miles it has a climate that ranges from -45 to +115 degrees Fahrenheit. The population in 1960 was 2,757,537. Iowa is a leading state in farming and stock raising. Its industries include food processing, machinery, printing and publishing, and the manufacture of pearl buttons.

Methodism came to Iowa via ILLINOIS. Two preachers named BARTON RANDALL and John T. Mitchell were sent from a Methodist mission at Galena, Ill., to Dubuque in 1833. Randall preached his first sermon in Iowa in a tavern belonging to one Jesse Harrison. The next year a log meetinghouse was erected with subscriptions and labor from persons of all faiths including Roman Catholics. A Methodist class of twelve members was organized.

Meantime, another Methodist preacher, BARTON H.

CARTWRIGHT, arrived in BURLINGTON in May, 1833. Cartwright brought two yoke of oxen and a load of corn. He provided his own living by plowing for his neighbors, and he preached to them evenings and on Sundays. Cartwright's first sermon was delivered in the house of a physician named William R. Ross, and there he organized a class of six people. The work at Dubuque and Burlington began about the same time; it is not known which was first.

In 1836 Ross purchased two lots in Burlington for $100 and gave them to the Methodists for a church. A brick edifice costing about $4,500 was built. A debt of $1,320 on the structure was paid by Ross who sold his own dwelling to raise the money. The church was known as Old Zion, and four sessions of the Iowa Territorial Legislature met in the building between 1838 and 1841.

In 1835 the Galena and Dubuque Mission of the Quincy District, ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, reported 128 members. The next year there was a Galena Mission District, and the Dubuque and Iowa missions on that district reported forty and eighty members respectively. In 1840 the Rock River CONFERENCE was formed, and the Iowa District of the conference reported 1,570 members. The IOWA CONFERENCE which included all of Iowa Territory was organized in 1844; it had 5,463 members.

In 1856 the Iowa Conference was divided to form the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE. In 1860 the Western Iowa Conference was set off from the Iowa body. In 1864 the DES MOINES CONFERENCE was formed by merging the Western Iowa Conference with the west part of the Upper Iowa Conference. In 1872 the upper part of the Des Moines Conference was designated as the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE, while the lower part continued as the Des Moines Conference. At the time the Northwest Iowa Conference also included Dakota Territory.

In 1932 the Iowa Conference and the Des Moines Conference merged to form the IOWA-DES MOINES CONFERENCE covering the south half of the state. In 1958 the name was changed to South Iowa Conference. In 1949 the Northwest and the Upper Iowa Conferences merged to form the NORTH IOWA CONFERENCE. The 1968 North Central JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE voted that effective in June 1969, there should be only one conference in Iowa to be known as the Iowa Annual Conference.

Work among the Germans in Iowa began in 1844 when the German Creek Mission was established near Keokuk by a preacher named Johann Mann. LUDWIG S. JACOBY built the first German church in Burlington in 1848, and one appeared in Iowa City in 1849. In the early years the German work in Iowa was under Jacoby as presiding elder in St. Louis. In 1864 when the M. E. Church set up a system of German-speaking conferences, the German work in south Iowa was in the Southwestern German Conference and that in north Iowa in the Northwestern German Conference. In succeeding years there were several shifts in the German conference names and boundaries. Absorption of the Iowa German work into the English-speaking conferences began in 1923 and was concluded in 1933.

The German work produced two colleges in Iowa. A school called German College which had started in Quincy, Ill., was moved in 1873 to Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, where it was affiliated with IOWA WESLEYAN. The institution trained ministers and teachers. In 1909 the affiliation with Iowa Wesleyan was dissolved, German College closed, and its seminary department was transferred to CENTRAL WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Wainton, Mo. The Northwest German Conference founded German College, Charles City, Iowa, in 1890. The school merged with MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE, Sioux City, Iowa, in 1914.

A Swedish Methodist church was organized at New Sweden, Jefferson County, Iowa, in 1849. In 1877 the Northwest Swedish Conference was organized to include all Swedish Methodist churches in the central and northwestern parts of the country. As with the German work, there were changes in the names and boundaries of the Swedish conferences in succeeding years. By 1942 all Swedish work had been absorbed in the English-speaking conferences.

A Czech Methodist Church was organized at Cedar Rapids in 1892. Later there were similar churches in Marshalltown, Belle Plaine, and Decorah, but there was no Czech conference.

The METHODIST PROTESTANTS laid the cornerstone of a church at Iowa City in May, 1841. In 1846 the Iowa Conference of the M. P. Church was organized at Iowa City with William Patterson as president. For several years the conference had only five or six effective ministers and fewer than 300 members. But by 1858 the conference had grown and it was divided to form the North Iowa Conference. In 1875 the two conferences merged, and in 1877 the Iowa Conference had 57 itinerants and about 3,600 members. The denomination had 33 pastors, 65 churches, and some 4,800 members in Iowa in 1895. In 1916 the work in Iowa and Missouri was combined in the Iowa-Missouri Conference. In 1936, just prior to unification, the Methodist Protestants had 16 churches and 1,737 members in Iowa.

The M. E. Church established four colleges in Iowa which survive—Iowa Wesleyan (1842), SIMPSON (1867), CORNELL (1853), and Morningside (1894). The church supports three hospitals, six retirement homes, and one children's home in the state.

In 1968 the two conferences in Iowa reported 726 ministers, 538 pastoral charges, 295,001 members, and property valued at $115,786,207.

IOWA CITY, IOWA, U.S.A. First Church has a long and interesting history. When the area to become Iowa City was being platted as the new capital for the Iowa Territory, a small group of Methodists received a tract of land from the Territorial Legislature upon which to erect a church edifice. This group organized the first Methodist congregation in 1839 in a log cabin, and on Jan. 26, 1842, the Board of Trustees voted to build a frame church, 34 by 44 feet, in order to claim their free lot from the Territorial Legislature. They were required "to erect on the lot within three years a church edifice to cost at least $1,000," and a brick church, 40 by 60 feet was built within the required time at a cost of about $5,000.

First Church has had a history that closely parallels the growth of Iowa City and the University of Iowa. When Iowa first became a state, the community of Iowa City was the capital for several years, and it has been the seat of the University of Iowa from its origin. When the capital was later moved to DES MOINES, Iowa City continued to be known chiefly as a university community.

Due to its strategic location to the campus, First Church has always ministered closely to the students and faculty of the university.

In 1844 the church was host to an organizing conference which, by authorization of the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE, established an annual conference for all of the Iowa territory.

The congregation has continued to occupy its present location from the very beginning. In 1863 the first brick church was greatly enlarged and improved. In 1884, due to a severe fire, the remaining structure was completely rebuilt with several improvements. Again in 1906, the Board of Trustees voted to build a new edifice, but before their plans could be put into effect, a fire broke out destroying the interior of the building. The present structure was then erected on the same site.

In keeping with the responsibility to the university, First Church established a WESLEY FOUNDATION over fifty years ago, making it one of the oldest campus ministries in Methodism. From a church membership of 300 in 1886, the church family has grown to 2,323 in 1970. The university student body adds over 3,000 more Methodist students, who are the primary responsibility of the church.

Though several other Methodist churches have been organized in this community in recent years, First Church continues to serve a large segment of the Iowa City population in addition to its special concern for the campus. By its strategic location in downtown Iowa City, it is able to minister both to campus and community.

EUGENE H. HANCOCK

IOWA CONFERENCE (EUB), traces its origin to preaching among the German people in the last half of the 1830's and the first half of the 1840's.

About 1836, John Burns began filling appointments and was thus the first minister of the CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST IN IOWA. He was followed by F. R. S. Byrd, who formed a class in Henry County in 1842.

In 1845 the Iowa Conference of United Brethren was formed with Bishop JOHN RUSSEL presiding. By 1849, the conference had 25 preachers, 8 circuits, 45 classes, and 519 members. It grew rapidly, so that in 1853 it was divided. The northern part bore the name Iowa Conference, while the southern portion was named the Des Moines Conference. It later was further divided into the East Des Moines and West Des Moines Conferences.

During 1861, the North Iowa Conference was organized; but in 1874, it was reunited with the Iowa Conference. When the East Des Moines Conference merged with the Iowa Conference in 1889, the West Des Moines Conference assumed the name of the Des Moines Conference. Then in 1909 the Des Moines Conference was merged with the Iowa Conference, assuming the name of the latter body.

The EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION began its work in Iowa in 1841, but it was not until Nov. 27, 1857 that the first church was dedicated at Grandview.

The Iowa Conference of the Evangelical Association was organized on May 29, 1861, at the Grandview Church, Louisa County, Iowa. The presiding elder was Bishop W. W. ORWIG. There were thirty-two preachers at that time.

Upon authorization of the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1875, the Des Moines Conference was organized. This conference included all the English-speaking churches in Iowa, and its founding was an important occasion since it marked the beginning of exclusively English conferences in the Evangelical Association. The Iowa Conference was composed solely of the German-speaking congregations after 1875.

Because of general church-wide friction and misunderstanding, a group of ministers of the Des Moines and Iowa Conferences began to meet separately in 1888. The Des Moines Conference (United) was organized by these persons and affiliated with the UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH upon its formation in 1894. As the work of this new denomination expanded in Iowa, a second conference was organized in 1899, named the Northwestern Conference. It was composed of congregations in northern Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, and a few congregations in the state of Washington.

The two Iowa-based conferences of The United Evangelical Church joined with the Illinois and Platte River Conferences of the same denomination in 1900 to support Western Union College, Le Mars, Iowa, which became WESTMAR COLLEGE in 1948.

The Evangelical Association established a home for the aged in the middle west in 1911. It was located at Cedar Falls, Iowa, and was called Western Home.

Both the Iowa and Des Moines Conferences of the Evangelical Association were seriously affected by the formation of The United Evangelical Church and the loss of congregations; but in 1912, these two conferences were reunited under the name of the Iowa Conference.

Riverview Park Camp was established by the Iowa Conference in 1917 at Cedar Falls, Iowa. Its program included not only a full summer's program of education for children and youth, but also an annual outstanding ministers' conference.

With the uniting of the Evangelical Association and The United Evangelical Church in 1922 to form The EVANGELICAL CHURCH the three Iowa conferences prepared for their own unification. In 1923, the two former United Evangelical conferences, the Des Moines (United) and the Northwestern, merged. Then in 1927 the Des Moines (United) and the Iowa Conferences were joined to form the Iowa Conference of The Evangelical Church with a membership of 11,048 persons.

The EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH was formed Nov. 16, 1946, with the uniting of The Evangelical Church and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. For several years thereafter there were two Iowa Conferences until they united May 2, 1951, to become the Iowa Conference. In 1966 there were 137 elders, 134 organized congregations in 110 charges with 22,094 members. Total money raised for all purposes was $1,703,984 with total valuation of local church property amounting to $8,698,746.

In 1969, the Iowa Conference united with the North Iowa and South Iowa Conferences to form a single state-wide conference known as the Iowa Conference of The United Methodist Church.

IOWA CONFERENCE (ME) was organized at Iowa City, Aug. 14, 1844 with Bishop THOMAS A. MORRIS presiding. Prior to that time Methodism in Iowa Territory had been a part of the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE. When formed the Iowa Conference included all of Iowa Territory. It began with three districts—Burlington, Dubuque, and Des Moines—and it had 29 pastoral charges, 37 traveling and 60 local preachers, and 5,403 members. (See IOWA for beginnings of Methodism in the state.)

At its first session the conference pledged support to Iowa City College for which a charter had been granted in 1842, but the school survived only a few years. In 1850 the conference agreed to patronize and support Mt. Pleasant Collegiate Institute which was founded in 1842. The name was changed to IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1854. It lays claim to being the oldest college west of the Mississippi River. In 1856 the preachers themselves subscribed $11,200 on a $10,000 conference pledge to Iowa Wesleyan. The 1852 conference accepted fifteen acres of land in Mt. Vernon and agreed to support a college which was being erected there. First named Mt. Vernon Wesleyan Seminary, it was called Iowa Conference Seminary in 1854, and a year later CORNELL COLLEGE in honor of William W. Cornell of New York, who made a generous contribution to the institution.

Feeling the need of a church paper in the region, the 1849 conference appointed a committee to visit neighboring conferences to discuss with them the feasibility of launching a jointly owned periodical. No paper was established at the time, but the action called attention to the need, and the interest generated was influential in the establishment of the Northwestern Christian Advocate in 1852 and the Central Christian Advocate in 1857.

Beginning in 1856, conference lines in Iowa were redrawn several times through the years. From 1860 to 1932, the Iowa Conference was limited to the southeastern part of the state. It merged in the latter year to form the IOWA-DES MOINES CONFERENCE.

In 1931 the Iowa Conference had three districts—Burlington, Oskaloosa, and Ottumwa, 117 pastoral appointments, 36,516 members, 233 churches valued at $3,241,428, and 131 parsonages valued at $498,450.

IOWA-DES MOINES CONFERENCE (ME) was organized Sept. 20, 1932 at DES MOINES with Bishop FREDRICK D. LEETE presiding. It was formed by merging the Iowa and Des Moines Conferences, the one covering the southeast quarter of the state and the other the southwest quarter. At the time of organization the conference had six districts—Boone, Burlington, Council Bluffs, Creston, Des Moines, and Ottumwa. There were 550 churches, 103,101 members, and property valued at $8,604,278.

The Iowa-Des Moines Conference continued in The Methodist Church after unification, and in 1958 its name was changed to the SOUTH IOWA CONFERENCE.

IOWA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Mount Pleasant, Iowa, was chartered as Literary Institute in 1842, rechartered as Iowa Wesleyan University in 1855, and assumed its present name in 1912. It is said to be "the oldest college building in continuous use west of the Mississippi River." Its first president was Aristides Huestis. In 1853, JAMES HARLAN, a graduate of Indiana Asbury College (now DEPAUW), became president. Harlan was one of the leaders in establishing IOWA as a state. The Harlan home on the campus was erected in 1860 and now stands as the Harlan-Lincoln Home Museum. The P.E.O. Sisterhood was founded on the campus in 1869. The school pioneered in coeducation and in teaching science by laboratory methods.

A strong international program integrated into a thorough liberal arts education is among its assets. Enrollment and faculty have shown steady growth in recent years.

Degrees offered are the B.A., B.S., and B.M.E. The governing board has forty-three members, jointly elected by alumni, the board of trustees, and the IOWA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

JOHN O. GROSS

IPSWICH, England. This Suffolk city has been a stronghold of Nonconformity for many generations, but the only visit of the founder of Methodism to this eighteenth century garrison town and seaport was to wait there for a horse on his way to Norwich, further north in Norfolk. JOHN WESLEY's neglect of the evangelical opportunities presented by Ipswich has long puzzled local Methodist historians. A gardener called William Nunn, LOCAL PREACHER and CLASS LEADER in the Colchester (Essex) circuit, introduced Methodism properly into Ipswich in 1804, though Methodist societies existed in 1799 at Brantham, Holbrook, and Tattingstone, where they continue to the present as part of the Ipswich Circuit. Before Nunn moved to Ipswich, he had been the local leader of the Tattingstone society. The Minutes of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference of 1808 record that a young Welsh minister, Thomas Morgan, was appointed to the Colchester Circuit to have charge of the Ipswich Mission. Morgan's successor, Robert Pilter, had the temerity to attempt an open-air service on the Cornhill, but the magistrates soon put a stop to that. Nothing daunted, he adjourned to "Bolton, a high meadow," and did the same on a number of similar occasions. Although a small, plain chapel was built in 1812, this was soon replaced by a much more substantial building in a central position in the town, and at the opening service one of the officiating ministers was the celebrated JABEZ BUNTING. The number of members returned in 1818 was 486.

The financial affairs of the circuit were at first difficult. The average income in the United Kingdom in 1815 was about £15. Between the years 1811 and 1836 the average expenditure in the Ipswich Circuit was about £40 a quarter. Appeal followed appeal, but the circuit stewards were often in debt to the ministers. The allowance to a minister was equally divided between him and his wife. Any minister who was a bachelor was therefore on half-pay. At the Conference of 1835 SAMUEL WARREN was expelled from the Wesleyan Methodist Church in view of his violent agitation against the decision to provide a theological institution for ministerial training. A number of Ipswich Methodists seceded, and joined the WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION, and a chapel to seat 500 was built in Friars' Street. The stormy days of the further agitations of 1849, which led to the formation of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES, also had repercussions in Ipswich. There was bitter local division, and membership returns show a considerable falling away, so that in 1854 the circuit membership numbered what it had forty years before, 487.

PRIMITIVE METHODISM arrived in Ipswich in 1834, when open-air work was started. Five years later the Rope Walk Chapel was built, and remained a thriving center of church work throughout the nineteenth century. At one time it could boast a football team made up entirely of class leaders and local preachers. But the eventual clearance of this area by the corporation and the transfer of the population to new estates outside the old city left it high and dry, and so in the end the old church closed. The outstanding Wesleyan Methodist chapel in Ipswich was Museum Street (1861); one of the treasurers of the building fund was William Pretty, who gave the first £1,000 of the £25,000 spent on the premises. One hundred years after the establishment of Methodism in Ipswich, the Wesleyan Circuit had a staff of six ministers and three lay evangelists, sixty local preachers and seventy class leaders, with a membership of 1,500 and twenty-nine chapels. The closing years of the nineteenth century saw a steady development of the work in four areas of the town, directly because of the evangelistic spirit of the society at Museum Street. A church built at Alan Road grew to such an extent that in 1966 it was the largest society in the East Anglican District, with a membership of 400.

After the first World War a team of preachers from Alan Road conducted a campaign on the first housing estate to be built in Ipswich, named after the famous Suffolk painter, Gainsborough. The work was housed for many years in a temporary building, but modern premises were at last erected in 1965. The sale of two former Primitive Methodist chapels made possible the erection of another modern church on an estate on the other side of the town. At least one president of the Conference, HAROLD ROBERTS, was superintendent of the Ipswich Circuit (1941-46). There are forty churches in the Ipswich Circuit at present, with a total membership of over 2,000; these include the neighboring towns of Felixstowe, Framlingham, Woodbridge, Stowmarket, and Hadleigh.

IQUIQUE, Chile, is a city of 40,000, capital of the Province of Tarapaca, and one of the principal ports of northern CHILE. The land to the north, east, and south is mountainous desert, and the city draws its water supply through a conduit from a supply forty miles away in the mountains, as it has never rained in Iquique.

Iquique formerly depended upon the nitrate industry for its subsistence, but there is a growing fishing industry about and certain copper-mining prospects. The city has an active Methodist church which extends its evangelistic message through two other centers in the city and through the facilities of two local radio stations. The Iquique English College, supported by the Division of World Missions of The United Methodist Church, is a coeducational, elementary, and secondary school, completely self-supporting except for the missionary personnel provided and for certain help in the building. A small colony of teachers and missionaries housed about the college carry on religious and educational work through both college and city, and have been noted for extremely helpful evangelistic and educational work.

IRELAND, CHARLES HENRY (1859-1931), church, business, and civic leader, was born in Lovings-ton, Va., March 12, 1859, the son of James Patton and Henrietta (Mariah) Ireland. He was educated at Village Academy in VIRGINIA. As a young man, he entered the tobacco business in Lynchburg, Va., but soon changed to hardware. In 1883 he moved to GREENSBORO, N. C., where he organized the Odell (wholesale) Hardware Company and served successively as its secretary, treasurer, general manager, and president. On Sept. 27, 1888, he married DeLavolette Alderman, the daughter of a Greensboro College professor, and they had three sons and one daughter.

A church member from boyhood, on moving to Greensboro Ireland transferred to the West Market Street Church, and was for many years its leading layman. He sang in the choir, was secretary of the Church school, taught the Ireland Bible Class forty years, and was chairman of the official board twenty-five years. He was elected a lay delegate to the annual conference in 1886, and except for a few years, continued in that capacity as long as he lived. He was a member of the conference Sunday school board, 1895-1902, and was its chairman, 1898-1901. Moving over to the conference board of missions in 1902, he served on it the rest of his life, and was its vice-chairman, 1906-31, except for the year 1909-10 when he served as chairman. As conference lay leader for many years, Ireland labored for greater lay involvement in church work generally, and was one of the founders of the Lay Activity movement in the M. E. Church, South. He was a delegate to seven GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1906-30, and to the 1921 ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE. Through the years he was recognized as one of the outstanding laymen in the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE and in his denomination.

Ireland was active in civic affairs, serving twenty-eight years on the Guilford County Board of Education (twelve years as chairman), thirty-one years on the executive committee of the board of trustees of GREENSBORO COLLEGE, and many years in the following capacities: trustee and treasurer of BENNETT COLLEGE, Greensboro; trustee of the Methodist Children's Home, Winston-Salem; trustee of Palmer Institute, Sedalia; and trustee of L. Richardson Memorial Hospital, Greensboro. He died March 22, 1931.

IRELAND. FOR JOHN WESLEY the early development of Methodism in Ireland was really an integral part of the development in Britain as a whole, and in practice and organization the same characteristics of early Methodism are found in Ireland as in England. Though as time went on geographical and historical factors led to the formation of a separate Irish Methodist connexion, there have always been very close relations with British Methodism.

In 1747 John Wesley came to Ireland for the first time because some preachers had already gathered a Methodist society in DUBLIN. Though he only stayed for a fortnight, he was so impressed by what he saw that he sent his brother CHARLES, who toured the country until March 1748, when John Wesley returned for the second time. Charles came back to Ireland later that year, and these four preaching tours, two short ones by John and two longer ones by Charles, effectively established Methodism in Ireland, despite very hostile riots in both Dublin and Cork. These riots were mainly the work of other Protestants who did not understand the true nature of the new movement. Methodism thus gained its reputation in Ireland as a form of Protestantism which suffered rather than imposed persecution. Wesley's pertinent comment at the time was: "Oh, what a harvest might be in Ireland did not the poor Protestants hate Christianity worse than either Popery or Heathenism!"

Charles Wesley did not return again to Ireland, but John came on nineteen other occasions. "Have patience, and Ireland will repay you," was his reply to those who were critical of his frequent visits. His early preaching tours were mainly in the midlands and southwest. In 1756 he traveled to the northern province of Ulster for the first time, where Protestants (mainly Presbyterian) were in the majority, and he continued to preach there regularly in subsequent years. His last visit to Ireland was in 1789, at the age of eighty-six, and he was received with great honor everywhere.

Early Preachers. The first "traveling" preachers were from England, but soon Irishmen were added to their number. One such was THOMAS WALSH, a converted Roman Catholic, whose early death in 1758 was a great loss. The first "local" preacher was Philip Guier, a Burgomaster or Magistrate of the Palatines in County Limerick. The Palatines, German Protestant refugees, are closely connected with the development of Methodism in Ireland and America. The renewal of their leases after about fifty years in Ireland was associated with the demand for an exorbitant increase in rents, with the result that there was wholesale emigration. In 1760 there sailed from Limerick a group which included BARBARA HECK and PHILIP EMBURY. Later John Wesley wrote in his Journal (June 14, 1765), "Have landlords no common sense (whether they have common humanity or not) that they will suffer such tenants as these to be starved away from them?"

From this Palatine emigration to America came the founding of the first Methodist society in NEW YORK at JOHN STREET, and an American memorial window in Donegall Square Methodist Church, BELFAST, Northern Ireland, commemorates this. At that same period another Irish Methodist emigrant, not a Palatine, ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE, began his famous preaching work in MARYLAND. These were the first in a stream of emigrants which fed the new Methodism of America.

Wesley came to rely a great deal on THOMAS COKE to help guide the work of Methodism in Ireland. In 1752 Wesley had held his first Irish Conference for his preachers, and afterwards in the years when he could not come to Ireland, he asked Coke to preside. After Wesley's death in 1791, Coke presided over the Conference in Ireland in practically every year until his own death in 1814, and during that time the Conference developed into the official ruling body of the connexion. Ireland was now providing preachers for England such as ADAM CLARKE, HENRY MOORE, WILLIAM MYLES, and WILLIAM THOMPSON, the first President of the British Conference after the death of Wesley.

Coke inspired the appointment in 1799 of three "General Missionaries." All three were able to preach in Irish as well as in English, for Irish-speaking was then far more common than today. They were not confined to a circuit, but had full liberty to travel throughout the land. Great success attended the preaching of GIDEON OUSELEY, JAMES MCQUIGG, and CHARLES GRAHAM. Many of the Irish surnames found in American Methodist families are due to the conversions from Roman Catholicism at this period. Those so converted provided a great number of the emigrants from Ireland in the first half of the nineteenth century, before the 1845 Irish Famine forced the great tide of Roman Catholic emigration of the second half of the century.

Two Methodisms. In 1816 the Irish Conference gave permission for the first time for Methodist preachers to administer the Lord's Supper in certain Irish Methodist chapels, thus marking one stage in the gradual though unplanned development of Methodism as a separate church. But there were a large number of Methodists who felt this new arrangement was wrong. The tensions in Ireland between Protestant and Roman Catholic made it seem a grievous wrong to break with the Established Protestant Anglican Church. They felt so strongly that they formed a distinct group or connexion in 1818. Because they kept to the original idea of merely being societies inside the Church of Ireland, they called themselves the PRIMITIVE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNEXION. For sixty years there were two main groups of Methodists in Ireland. Most towns had their "Wesleyan Methodist" chapel and their "Primitive Wesleyan Methodist" chapel. The main body became a church in its own right; the other remained officially a movement inside the Church of Ireland. But the passage of time loosened the ties with that church, and when in 1870 the Church of Ireland became disestablished, the Primitive Wesleyans found that in fact they also had become a separate body, and that their spiritual connections with Methodism were stronger than any outward connections with Anglicanism. After full discussion, the two bodies united in 1878 to form one Methodist Church in Ireland.

Missionary Work and Emigration. Thomas Coke found a great supply of missionary recruits among the Irish preachers. When in 1814 he died at sea on the way to CEYLON, JAMES LYNCH, a converted Roman Catholic from Londonderry, went on to establish Methodism in Ceylon and SOUTH INDIA before coming back to the work in Ireland. Irish Methodism never formed a missionary society of its own, but gave support to the METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY in London. For many years ministers who became missionaries had to transfer to the British Methodist Church, but in 1890 the present arrangement was made by which they remain in connection with the Irish Methodist Church and can return to work in Ireland after serving overseas. Irish Methodists, lay as well as ministerial, have taken a very full share in the work of Methodist missions in all parts of the world, and a very high proportion of Irish ministers is so engaged today.

Emigration has always been a feature of Irish life, and Methodism lost many members in this way. But though they were lost to Methodism in Ireland, there were important results elsewhere, particularly in America. Between the years 1831 and 1860, an average of 700 members per year were lost by emigration in "Wesleyan" Methodism alone, and this average increased to over 1,200 per year for 1847-50. This shows the effect of the 1845 Famine, but it is important to notice that the Famine merely intensified an existing movement among those who had ambitions for better opportunities than Ireland could afford. When American Methodism celebrated its centenary in 1866, it was estimated that Irish Methodism had lost by emigration from 50,000 to 70,000 members in that century, but that in doing so it had given some five times its own ministerial strength to the Methodist ministry elsewhere, particularly in North America, and some ten times the then total membership in Ireland.

Social Witness. Irish Methodists have not been behind in the realm of social witness. In avoiding evil, early Methodists stood out against smuggling, and against drunkenness and the partaking of spirits. Later came the witness against all forms of gambling. By the early nineteenth century there were three Methodist philanthropic institutions in Dublin which remain in one form or another until the present day—the Widows' Home, the Female Orphan School, and the STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Towards the end of the nineteenth century were founded the big City Missions, two in Belfast and one each in Dublin and Londonderry, centers for popular preaching and for many activities to help the poor of the cities in every way. At the present the Methodist Council on Social Welfare takes action to bring the Christian attitude to bear on social problems. Guidance has been given on such matters as industrial relations, the political situation in Ireland, racial problems, and on marriage and home life.

One special work has been the establishment of schools and colleges. A free school for poor boys were opened in Dublin in 1784. Later schools were opened in connection with many of the Methodist centers. When the government began to promote elementary education and started "national" schools, the Methodist Church took its share of the work. That system continues in the Republic of Ireland, and there are still one or two Methodist National Schools there. In Northern Ireland, the Protestant National Schools were replaced by Public Elementary Schools, now Primary Schools. Because of their original interest, the churches, including the Methodist Church, have representatives on the School Management Committees.

In 1845 Methodism began its interest in secondary education by founding the Wesleyan Connexional School, now WESLEY COLLEGE, Dublin. In 1868 the METHODIST COLLEGE, Belfast, was opened. Each of these schools is now the largest Protestant school of its kind in its own part of Ireland. The Methodist College at first included a theological training department, but in 1919 this was separated and became EDGEHILL COLLEGE, Belfast. The latest Methodist educational institution is Curteen Agricultural College, founded in County Tipperary in 1947.

Military Work. Another feature of Methodist witness in Ireland is the strong appeal made to men of the various military establishments maintained by the British government there. Soldiers flocked to the early open-air preaching and were members of the first congregations. Many places owe their Methodist origin to the work of soldier-preachers, like DUNCAN WRIGHT in Galway. Right down to 1922 and the establishment of the Irish Free State (now the Republic of Ireland), the Irish Methodist Church acted as the official agency for the spiritual oversight of the many Methodists in the British Army and Navy. This work still continues in connection with the depots of the Armed Forces in Northern Ireland. But in what is now the Republic of Ireland the withdrawal of the British garrison has led in some places, e.g., Fermoy, to the abandonment of separate Methodist witness. After the political change, the splendid Methodist church in the Curragh military camp was handed over to the Church of England (Anglican), which now maintains it on behalf of the few Protestants connected with the army of the Republic.

Organization. Local organization is mainly on a congregational basis, even though the term "circuit" is used. Thus Irish Methodist circuits very often consist of only one congregation or society. They are, however, joined in the District organization, and the District Synod (seven in Ireland) meets under the Chairman of the District, one of the ministers so appointed. The Conference of the Methodist Church in Ireland meets in June each year in accordance with a pre-arranged rota, for in the course of six years it meets twice in Dublin and Belfast, and once in Cork and Portadown. There are 150 ministers and 150 laymen as members of Conference. Meeting together as the Representative Session they act as the governing body of the church, except in those pastoral matters reserved to the Ministerial Session, wherein the ministers meet alone. The Representative Session elects the Vice-President of the Conference. This minister is, for his year of office, termed the President of the Methodist Church in Ireland, even though in the Conference itself he is only deputy to the British President, who by reason of his office is also President of the Irish Conference, thus maintaining the traditional connection between British and Irish Methodism. The Secretary of the Conference is also the Secretary of the Methodist Church in Ireland, and is elected each year by the vote of the Representative Session.

Membership. When John Wesley died there were some 14,000 members in the Methodist Societies in Ireland. This number had more than doubled by 1814, just before the division of Methodism. Though there was a set-back for a while, the preaching in both Methodist bodies continued to bear fruit, and the total number (counting both Wesleyans and Primitives) reached over 44,000 in 1844. This was the year before the great Irish Famine, and over the years that followed the total population of Ireland fell by half, from eight and one-half million to the four and a quarter million it is today. Along with this fall in population, the number of Methodists also fell to almost half and was about 24,000 in 1880.

Since then, however, there has been a small increase, but it has been greater in proportion than that of the country's total population, and now Methodism, though still small in size, is larger in proportion to that total population than at any previous period, and has some 32,000 members. More than twice this number declare themselves Methodist in the census returns of Northern Ireland and the Republic.

Apart from the actual membership, there has been a great change in the distribution of Methodists throughout the country. Early Methodist societies were in Dublin, the midlands, and the south of Ireland. At St. Stephen's Green, Dublin, is the "mother" congregation of Irish Methodism (originally at Whitefriar Street, Dublin). The passage of time has led to concentration in the north, and in urban centers. In 1800 the number of Methodists in the Belfast District was about one-twelfth of that of all Ireland; in 1844 it was about one-eighth, but in 1900 it was one quarter. Now the Belfast District has over one-half of the total membership of the whole church. In the Republic of Ireland, Methodists constitute less than one-half of one percent of the population; in Northern Ireland they are about five percent (Church of Ireland, twenty-six percent; Presbyterians, thirty; Roman Catholics, thirty-four).

In its effect on the religious life of the country, in its work in missionary endeavor overseas, in its contribution to Methodism in other lands, especially America, in its social witness at home, this small church has had an influence all out of proportion to its size.

Membership Statistics of the Methodist Church in Ireland. In 1767 there were 2,801 society members (the first recorded figures); in 1780, 6,212; in 1789, 14,010 (Wesley's last visit); in 1800, 19,292; in 1820, 36,529; 1840, 42,133; 1844, 44,314 (highest on record); 1850, 31,527 (effect of Irish famine and the consequent emigration); 1855, 26,790; 1860, 38,201 (effect of revival of 1859); 1880, 24,463 (continued effects of emigration); 1900, 27,461; 1920, 27,173; 1940, 31,033; 1960, 31,864; and 1966, 30,650.

Note the figures for 1820-1860 inclusive are the totals of the two Methodist bodies. The figure for 1860 may be rather larger than it should be. The Primitive Methodist total of 15,341 is an increase of over 5,000 on the previous year, and many of the figures for local membership are in round figures and seem to be estimates only. But even allowing for this, there was a marked increase as a result of the 1859 Ulster Revival.

Presidents of the Methodist Church in Ireland. The origin of the curious situation that the head of Irish Methodism, the President of the Methodist Church in Ireland, is only Vice-President of the Irish Conference lies in a number of facts. Early Irish Conferences were, of course, presided over by Wesley himself, then by Wesley and Coke alternately, and after the death of Wesley by Coke himself, except on a very few occasions. After the division of Irish Methodism in 1816, the Conference of the main branch was presided over by the President of the British Conference, and this was usually one of his last acts as President before the next British Conference. His signature was necessary to establish the validity in law of the Journal of the Conference, because on him were conferred the powers of the LEGAL HUNDRED in Ireland.

Because of the separate Irish Conference, the arrangement grew up that ten Irish ministers were included in the statutory Legal Hundred. When the approach of Methodist Union in England foreshadowed the end of that body, the Irish Methodist church obtained, in 1928, two identical and simultaneous Statutes from the Parliament of Northern Ireland and from the Dail of what was then the Irish Free State. These Acts constituted the Irish Conference and Church as a legal entity in themselves, but provision was made to continue the historic link of having the President of the Methodist Conference in Britain preside also over the Irish Conference.

There was no official head of Irish Methodism in early days and this led the British Conference in 1867 to determine that the Irish Conference should nominate one of its members of the Legal Hundred to act on behalf of the President in his absence, but not until 1883 was the title of Vice-President of the Conference officially adopted. Previously the Irish minister who acted as Vice-President was officially "the Irish member of the Delegation appointed by the Legal Hundred," or simply "the Delegate." From 1921, the title "President of the Methodist Church in Ireland" was adopted, but the President of the Church still remains only Vice-President of the Conference.

Because of the requirement of membership of the Legal Hundred, it happened on more than one occasion that a minister was elected to office for a second or even a third time. Since the disappearance of the Legal Hundred there has been no further example of this, though there is no legal bar. Because of the legal arrangements obtained in 1928, the Rev. George A. Joynt, as President of the Methodist Church in Ireland, was able to sign the Conference Journal in legal confirmation as President of the Conference also. This was in 1944 when wartime restrictions prevented the British President from traveling to Ireland. (See Appendix for list of Presidents.)

IRELAND, PRIMITIVE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNEXION OF. (See PRIMITIVE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNEXION [IRELAND].)

IRISH CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is the weekly journal of Irish Methodism. It is published by the Irish Methodist Publishing Company at Epworth House, BELFAST. It was originally founded in 1885, and soon took over The Irish Evangelist, started by WILLIAM CROOK after the 1859 Ulster Revival.

From 1890 to 1923 this journal was mainly maintained by the efforts of Richard Cole, father of R. LEE COLE. From 1923 it has been run on a voluntary basis by a team of ministers and laymen, with WILLIAM L. NORTH-RIDGE as the leading spirit behind the enterprise for many years.

In 1929 it incorporated the Irish Methodist Church Record, edited for over twenty years by JAMES M. ALLEY.

IRISH PALATINES, German Protestant refugees (from the Palatinate in the Rhine valley). In 1709 many came to England, some to PENNSYLVANIA, but between 500 and 1,000 were settled, by action of the British Government, near Rathkeale, County Limerick, in the south of IRELAND. Their industrious way of life has attracted the attention and commendation of all social and agricultural observers who have travelled Ireland since then. On the religious side, however, they began at first to lose their deep convictions until in 1749 some of them heard open-air preaching by Methodists in Limerick. Philip Guier, their Burgomaster or Magistrate, was then instrumental in forming a Methodist Society, and three years later was recognized as a "local preacher," the first in Ireland.

About fifty years after their first settlement, the expiration of the original leases led to a demand for an exorbitant increase in rents, with the result that there was large-scale emigration to America. Among those who sailed in 1760 were BARBARA HECK and PHILIP EMBURY. JOHN WESLEY was delighted by his first visit in 1756 to these industrious and religious Palatines, but when he came in 1765 he wrote indignantly in his Journal, "Have landlords no common sense (whether they have common humanity or no), that they will suffer tenants as these to be starved away from them?"

The Palatines who remained in Ireland continued to make a notable contribution to the country by their hard-working manner of life. Palatine surnames still survive in County Limerick. BARBARA HECK's maiden name of Ruckle has become Ruttler, and the family still lives at Balingrane, from which Barbara and Philip set out for the New World. Throughout America are many establishments which commemorate the part Heck and Embury played in the origin of Methodism on this side of the Atlantic Ocean. JOHN STREET CHURCH, NEW YORK, traces its beginnings to the first Methodist Society which these Palatines formed in 1766.

IRONSIDE, SAMUEL (1814-1897), NEW ZEALAND Methodist minister, was born at SHEFFIELD, England. He decided early in life to become a missionary. Ordained in 1837, he reached New Zealand the following year, and was appointed to Port Underwood, where he pioneered the Cloudy Bay Mission. The work flourished under his leadership: many converts were won, and many chapels built, including Ebenezer, a handsome structure, sixty-six by thirty-six.

This promising work collapsed after the Wairau Massacre, when Captain Wakefield and twenty-two settlers were killed in a clash with the Maoris on June 17, 1843. They had been illegally surveying the Wairau Plains for the New Zealand Company, and so had aroused the anger of the Maoris. Ironside had the melancholy task of burying the dead. Fearing reprisals, the Maoris left the district in great numbers.

Ironside was transferred to Wellington, where he was in European Circuit work until 1848, and then served a term in Nelson until 1855. The latter part of his ministry was spent in the AUSTRALIAN CONFERENCE. His death took place at Hobart, Tasmania, on April 24, 1897.

ISAAC, DANIEL (1778-1834), British Methodist, a prominent preacher, was born at Caythorpe, Lincolnshire, on July 7, 1778. He became a Methodist in 1797, and joined the itinerant ministry in 1799. He belonged to that wing of Methodism whose sympathies lay rather with Nonconformity than with the Church of England, and the Conference of 1816 expressed its disapproval of his book Ecclesiastical Claims, which was a violent attack upon the Roman Catholic and High Anglican doctrines of the ministry. At the time of the LEEDS ORGAN CASE, Isaac published Vocal Melody (York, 1827), and three Letters to the Protestant Methodists (Leeds, 1830), in which he attacked the seceders. He died at York on March 21, 1834.

ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE, Lucknow, India, is carried on by the WOMAN'S DIVISION OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE OF THE United Methodist Church in cooperation with the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. It is the first Christian college for women in Asia, and developed from a girls' school started by ISABELLA THOBURN in 1870. The school soon grew to high school status, and by 1886 was offering college work. In 1885 the cornerstone was laid for the first college building. After Miss Thoburn died in 1901, the college was renamed after its founder, and Florence Nichols became principal. The college presently occupies a thirty-three acre campus, Chand Bagh (Moon Garden), which it has occupied since 1923. It is located about two miles from the original site. There are three attractive hostels, a fine library, classrooms, laboratories, an assembly hall given by Mrs. HENRY PFEIFFER and the alumnae, a swimming pool, and a chapel named for Mrs. McDowell, who was chairman of the board at one time and raised money for it. The college is managed by a Board of Governors in India and a Consulting Committee in the United States.

ITALIAN MISSION in America was created by the 1908 General Conference of the M. E. Church to include the Italian work in the territory east of a meridian drawn through INDIANAPOLIS. The mission was organized at PITTSBURGH, Sept. 15, 1909 with Bishop LUTHER B. WILSON presiding. Some forty appointments were made in ten states from MAINE to MARYLAND and as far west as INDIANA. In 1910 the mission reported thirty-four charges and 3,070 members.

Notwithstanding promising developments in some cities, language work among the Italians proved disappointing. The last session of the Italian Mission was held in Buffalo, N. Y., March 30 to April 3, 1916. Thereafter the Italian language churches were appointments in the English-speaking conferences within which they were located. At its last session the mission reported 47 charges and 4,035 members.

ITALY. Non-Catholic Christianity has existed among the Waldensian valleys in Italy since the twelfth century. But the first specific attempt of a Protestant missionary society in the modern period was from the British Wesleyan Church, when WILLIAM ARTHUR, the Foreign Missions Secretary, persuaded the Conference of 1861 to designate RICHARD GREEN and HENRY J. PIGGOTT for work in Italy, and to accept an Italian ex-priest, Benedetto Lissolo, as a candidate for the ministry.

Green went to Naples while Piggott began his mission in Ivrea in December 1861. In May 1862 he moved to Milan. By 1863 the mission was spending £5,000 a year, using the services of ten evangelists and five colporteurs. It had fifteen meeting places, seven schools, a book shop and a weekly news sheet, Il Museo Cristiano. In 1866 Piggott transferred his headquarters to Padua. He took with him a girls' school, but he handed over his other work at Ivrea to the Waldensians. The mission then had centers at Caravaggio, Varese, Intra, Cremona, Modena, Carpi, Mezzano Inferiore, and Parma, as well as Padua, Milan and Florence, where work previously begun by an ex-priest, Bartolomeo Gualtieri, had been taken under the aegis of the mission.

Rome fell to the troops of Victor Emmanuel on Sept. 20, 1870. Piggott stationed Francesco Sciarelli there, and he held his first service on Easter Day 1871. In 1873 Piggott settled in Rome in premises in Via della Scrofa, where he had a theological school and a meeting hall as well as his residence. In 1875 he was able to reconstruct the whole, and open a church and halls there on April 29, 1877. Here, too, LUIGI CAPELLINI was able to continue his mission among the soldiers of the garrison.

Though Richard Green had been forced home by bad health, T. W. S. Jones came out to Naples in 1873 and a church was opened in 1874. The work spread to surrounding towns, and more widely as far as Melfi, and in several centers in Sicily.

Church organization appears when in July 1868, a conference of seven evangelists met at Padua. The next year ministers came from the United Kingdom to hold (with Piggott and Jones) "recognition" meetings at Parma and Naples for five ministers from the north and four from the south (Lissolo, Patucelli, Bosio, Moreno and Bossi; and Sciarelli, Spazianti, Gerone and Corelli). In 1870 a conference at Parma approved the division of Italy into two districts, Piggott being General Superintendent.

Until the death of Pius IX in 1878, considerable freedom was allowed to the mission. Once a public debate was held under the joint presidency of Piggott, an English chaplain, Prince Chigi, and the Advocatus Diaboli of the Roman Catholic Church himself. Leo XIII, however, initiated the policy of claiming that the Roman Catholic religion was the religion of the State, and all other religions were merely tolerated. The Wesleyan Mission accordingly adopted a quieter policy of personal penetration.

The American Mission to Italy was approved in principle in 1870. M. LEROY VERNON was designated in 1871, and held his first service at Modena on June 16, 1873, formally receiving his first six members at Bologna on June 18, 1874. Under Bishop W. L. HARRIS, the first missionary conference was held there on Sept. 10, 1874. A mission in Rome was opened by Teofilo Gay on Dec. 18, 1873, and others were begun at Milan, Florence, Perugia, Terni, Venice and Naples. By 1880 the work counted 706 full members and was made a "conferenza annuale indipendente" on March 19, 1881, its boundaries being "the kingdom of Italy and those parts of contiguous countries where the Italian language is spoken." This Mission opened "the first regular Protestant church for native Christians in the city of Rome," St.

Paul's Methodist Church in Via Poli, on Christmas Day, 1875.

Vernon was succeeded in 1888 by WILLIAM BURT (later elected bishop by his church in America), who served for eighteen years. He was succeeded by Walling Clark and BERTRAND MARTIN TIPPLE. From 1922 on the American Mission had Italian superintendents. From 1922 to 1926 there were four Districts (North, South, Central and Switzerland), but then the Italian work in Switzerland passed to that jurisdiction, and the Italian districts were unified under CARLO MARIA FERRERI. The work of the M.E. Church in Italy is memorable chiefly for its social and educational outreach. Symbolic of its ideals is the splendid building in Via Firenze, Rome. The site was purchased in 1891, the first stone laid in September 1893, and the whole edifice—containing two churches (Italian and English language), a printing press, a theological college, headquarter offices and parsonages—was dedicated on Sept. 20, 1895, by Bishop J. W. FITZGERALD. An industrial school had been established in Venice in 1881, a theological school in Florence in 1889 (moving to Rome in 1892). At Rome there were industrial schools in Via Marghera, and the Crandon and Garibaldi schools for girls ranked high in Roman education. There were also orphanages at Florence and Naples (Casa Materna). The La Speranza Press was established in 1891; the periodical La Fiaccola (1878) was followed by L'Evangelista and Vita Gioconda (juvenile).

After 1885 the mission spread to the colonies of Italian emigrant workers in Lausanne, Geneva, Vallorbe, Neuchâtel, Vevey, Basle and Zurich, and even to South America. After 1919 it entered the ex-Austrian territories. It sponsored Emigrant Aid Societies and Dispensaries. Two of its ministers, the Tagliatela brothers, attained a special intellectual eminence at Rome by their preaching. From the Italian mission originated the idea of the Central Europe Methodist Conference of the M. E. Church in 1894.

EVANGELICAL HOSPITAL, NAPLES, OPENED OCTOBER 1968

Both the American and British missions drew strength from a Protestant body, known as the Chiesa Libera Italiana, founded and led by Alessandro Gavazzi, a friend of Caribaldi, and a personality of the Risorgimento. At his death the movement passed mainly into one or other of the two Methodist missions.

The first statistics for Italian Methodism were issued by the Wesleyan mission in 1867. There were 647 members, sixteen preaching places, twenty-four Italian preachers, 592 children in day schools, and 179 in Sunday schools. In 1889 the British mission reported 1,350 members and the American 779, but by 1898, the American figures had passed the British (though their area included territories outside Italy proper). The zenith of membership for both churches was reached just before the first World War, the American high being 3,476, and the British 2,338. Figures give only a proportional indication of the real strength. Two years' catechumenate is an indispensable condition of church membership.

Until the advent of Fascism in the 1920's, the policy of a "free church in a free state" enabled Protestant missions in Italy to function freely, and especially in the first years after unification anti-papal feeling helped them considerably. But the Concordat of 1929 between Mussolini and the Vatican initiated an era of increasing restrictions.

There had always been occasional persecution of the Protestant minority in Italy (a minority which never amounted to more than about one-half of one percent of the population), but this was due solely to Catholic fanaticism. Now, however, under Fascism this opposition was able to make itself felt through the statute book. Protestant churches were subjected to the oversight of the Minister of the Interior, who was given power to annul any of their proceedings. His approval was necessary for the opening of new churches, for the licensing and stationing of all ministers, even for the display of notices. Religious services could only take place under the presidency of the duly authorized person, and only in the authorized building.

Chiesa Metodista Episcopale d'Italia. The American mission with its powerful social institutions seemed to offer a special threat to Fascist nationalistic ideologies. It was marked down for suppression. It was further weakened by the contemporary financial crisis (1929-34) in America, and by the inevitable drift towards open war. In 1936 the BOARD OF MISSIONS of the M. E. Church was forced to leave Italy to its own resources. Three years later in October 1939, the residue of the mission, eighteen communities under seven ministers, one a supernumerary, constituted itself as the Chiesa Metodista Episcopale d'Italia, and on Oct. 26, 1940, declared itself "independent and autonomous." The valuable property was stripped from it by forced sales, until only CASA MATERNA remained of its institutions. Yet the church was able to survive on the proceeds of sales. It lost by tragic death its superintendent, Carlo Maria Ferreri, in 1943, but his successor, Tito Signorelli, was able to unite the work, then with some 1,500 members, with the British mission still numbering about twice that strength. This happened in 1946. The British work that had concentrated more modestly on pastoral rather than social concerns had suffered understandably the less, even though two ministers, Agostino Piccirillo and Francesco Cacciapuoti, were removed from their stations by the authorities and put under restriction, and the chairman, EMANUELE SBAFFI, sold a house of his own to pay stipends.

The United Church called itself the Chiesa Evangelica Metodista d'Italia. Its first "presidente" was Emanuele Sbaffi, who had been acting chairman since 1940. Until he retired in 1957 he continued in office, re-elected each year by ballot in synod. He saw the church regather its strength. Membership rose to touch the 4,000 mark. Candidates for the ministry came forward from both the ranks of the Roman priesthood, and the families of the Protestants, and were trained at the Waldensian Seminary. Closer relations with other Italian Protestants were established. With Waldensians and Baptists the Methodists shared leadership in a newly formed Consiglio Federale delle Chiese Evangeliche, while they openly discussed union with the Waldensians. With these in 1958, they made a mutual declaration recognizing the validity of each other's ministry and membership, so preparing the way for a more rational deployment of pastoral resources.

Simultaneously the legal office of the Consiglio Federale fought a long, patient, yet ultimately victorious battle to remove one by one the hampering Fascist measures against religious liberty.

MARIO SBAFFI succeeded his father as "presidente" in 1957. He directed the church by vigorous financial policies into a position when it could be granted its autonomy in 1962. Under the inspiration of TEOFILO SANTI, its social witness (reduced in 1946 to Casa Materna alone) began to expand modestly. The ecumenical impulse of John XXIII has had its effect, first in revealing to the Church its natural ecumenical potential in dialogue with Rome, and secondly in the decisive part played by its president and Giorgio Spini, one of its vice-presidents, in planning and directing in 1965 a Congresso of all Italian Protestantism, the first for over forty years. Protestant unity was still further strengthened when in May 1969, the Chiesa Evangelica Metodista d'Italia and the Waldensian Church initiated the practice of the "Sinodo Conjunto," the Methodist Conference and the Waldensian Synod meeting periodically in combined session.

The great landmark in this last period was the ceremony on Oct. 4, 1962, when the legal instrument was signed in Rome, whereby the church in Italy became an autonomous and independent Methodist Conference, linked by covenant with the British Methodist Conference. The independent Church still receives aid through Britain on a planned diminishing scale.

The constitution of the Chiesa Evangelica Metodista d'Italia makes the annual conference its supreme organ. This consists of clergy and laity in equal numbers. It elects by ballot each year its president (a minister), its vice-president (a layman), its secretary (minister), and a standing committee of three ministers and three laymen. The President is the executive officer. The conference determines each year the stations of the ministry.

Soon after Henry James Piggott began his work, he said, "What we want is schools, schools, and schools." At the end of his life he said that if he had his time again he would build not great churches, but little cells of people up and down the land, and rely on their spiritual insight and quality of life to spread the gospel, "in the hopes that in God's good time and way the national conscience will be so roused that to the Roman Catholic Church in Italy at all events, there shall come to be but two alternatives, reformation from within, or one more great national schism." The history of Methodism in Italy reflects strangely the accuracy of this double evaluation, educational and personal.

Piggott and Leroy Vernon met in December 1871, and agreed that if there must be two Methodist missions in Italy, their work must be complementary and not competitive. And so it proved. The M. E. Church's educational work was the greatest strength of the Methodist effort in Italy, and in prosperity bore the best fruits. But in the years of opposition and repression, the quieter pastoral policy of the Wesleysans resisted better, when the weight of the institutions proved too heavy to survive.

ITHACA, NEW YORK, U.S.A., is located in Tompkins County, twenty-nine miles east of Elmira. The community was first settled in 1788. David Ayes, a layman from New York City, inaugurated Methodist services in Ithaca during August 1817. The services began in a hotel room. James Kelsey preached the first Methodist sermon. Thereafter a class was formed with Ayes as leader. In 1818 the first Methodist church was erected.

In 1970 there were two churches, St. Paul's with a membership of 1,902, and Forest Home with a membership of 141.

ERNEST R. CASE

ITINERANCY (sometimes Itinerary) is the system by which the Methodist Church moves its ministers from church to church so that at all times every preacher has a church and every church has a preacher. It is a peculiar feature of the Methodist economy and presents a direct contrast to that of a settled pastorate, or to the method followed by most other churches in which ministers are "called" by local churches to their pulpits, and stays sometimes for years at the mutual will of the pastor and congregation, with no reference to the pastoral situations in other churches.

JOHN WESLEY began the itinerant system in Methodism though he probably had no idea how greatly this would ramify, nor indeed that there should one day be a church that would adopt such itinerancy as the keystone of its polity. Wesley, after his conversion, was kept from preaching in many of the regular churches by reason of the antagonism at first shown him by bishops and clergy, and so took to field preaching and gave himself fully to evangelistic labors. It became necessary for him to travel through Great Britain and Ireland and he early found devoted ASSISTANTS who as lay preachers were willing to follow in his footsteps, and whom he sent to supervise his societies in his absence, and to preach in various places. At first he sent these laymen out, more often than not, only a few miles from where they really resided. Thus they might walk to their Sunday or preaching appointments, walk back, and continue their usual labors through the week-days. (See CIRCUIT PLANS.) As the societies grew stronger and called for men to give more and more time to them, Wesley's appointments had to become more definite and be made more positive.

Bishop SIMPSON states that as early as 1746 he attempted to methodize the labor of his helpers, appointing them to distinct and separate circuits. "The whole of Great Britain was mapped out into seven of these, and the word 'circuit' has since been retained as a technical term in Methodism. Three years afterward there were twenty of these circuits or rounds in England, two in Wales, two in Scotland and seven in Ireland, and at Mr. Wesley's death in 1791 there were seventy-two in England, twenty-eight in Ireland, seven in Scotland and three in Wales."

These circuits at first embraced a large number of appointments as they do this day in England. A number of preachers were often assigned to these large circuits, each preacher returning to a special place usually about once in four weeks. The preachers also were changed from one circuit to another from year to year as circumstances seemed to require, and as their own local living conditions made possible. Such an itinerant system which brought the regular pastors only once a month to congregations, gave great impetus to the employment of local preachers, who were laymen earning their livelihood in the regular business of life, and supplying the pulpits in the absence of the itinerant preacher when needed. Scarcely any of these men were ordained, though in each circuit there was usually a senior or directing minister to whom the others looked. In addition to the oversight given by local preachers, must be mentioned the CLASS LEADER who met a certain portion of the society every week and became practically a sub-pastor. Thus a watchful supervision was exercised over all the membership in the absence of the minister. In England, the circuit system is retained to the present day in much the same way, with more churches on each circuit, and more than one minister making the rounds. This has the advantage of securing in succession at the same church a variety of preachers differing, as men always do, one from another.

In America the same type of itinerancy was introduced in a regular way by the ministers sent by Wesley in the late 1760's, and they put into effect the pattern of appointment which the Wesleyan ministers in England had been carrying on for some years. They immediately began to carry out the system which Wesley had so carefully taught, and this was continued up to and after the organizing CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE.

The establishment of itinerancy as the fundamental polity of the newly organized Methodist Episcopal Church in America was, after the organization of that Church, the great all-determining policy of FRANCIS ASBURY, its first bishop. For a much more difficult situation faced Francis Asbury after the Christmas Conference had elected him bishop, and he continued in a new Church to keep on stationing ordained men as he had stationed lay preachers while there was only a "Society." Wesley's assistants were usually unordained men who were glad to preach where he told them to, and very few of his men, once they were ordained in the Church of England—as some of them on his recommendation were—ever itinerated. But it was different in America. A new church had been born in an atmosphere of great freedom, and the idea that a local congregation should have no voice in the selection of its pastor, and that an ordained minister could not choose his own field of labor, was one difficult to accept by many men and many churches. Other great Christian bodies—Presbyterians, Lutherans, Baptists—chose their pastors, why not the Methodists? So it came about that the fundamental polity and policy of Francis Asbury, and one which he tirelessly and relentlessly—and successfully—pursued from 1784 until he died in 1816 was the firm and unshakable establishment of itinerancy. This was the goal of all his striving, and further he saw that to establish itinerancy a strong episcopacy would be needed. This his great and successful battle to establish a strong episcopacy was not motivated by a selfish drive to the end that the bishop as bishop might be exalted, but that the power might be given the bishops to fix in every church a preacher, and place a preacher in every church. By great self-sacrifice and by a great surrender of personal wishes and personal wills, itinerancy was finally and firmly established in American Methodism—though not without long and continuous battles which have not ceased until this day.

Admittedly the itinerant system has disadvantages as well as great advantages. John Wesley said of it, "we have found by long and consistent experience that a frequent exchange of preachers is best. This preacher has one talent, that another; no one whom I ever yet knew has all the talents which are needful for beginning, continuing, and perfecting the work of Grace in a whole congregation." Methodists believe that their system is best for all the churches, all the time; and contend that it is the best plan yet devised for manning all the churches, in a wise and helpful way.

The itinerancy is designed for and can only be made to work in a connexional church, nor will it work unless all the appointments of all the preachers in a conference are made at the same time, so that the whole conference moves together. Once the itinerant system is accepted by ministers, and local churches, each minister is assured of a place to preach until he is seventy-two years of age (present retirement regulations), or is forced into retirement ahead of that for reasons of health; and each church is assured of a preacher-in-charge every minute with no hiatus between pastorates. The itinerancy also has the advantage of giving men the opportunity to live and serve various churches, giving their ministry and talents for a certain time to a certain place, and then moving on to where they may give the same type of ministry to some other, perhaps some larger appointment, as life and experience come. There is no crystallization nor freezing into one place of one man for too long a time—certainly, except in unusual cases, there should not be. The stirring about among the people of various ministers has proved helpful, and while itinerancy has its personal disadvantages in the frequent removal of preachers, and in the breaking of dear associations with people in any local church, it has the advantage also of removing pastors who may be unacceptable to a certain church without the unhappy friction which frequently occurs in other churches when a man is "voted out." A wise over-head superintendency also can secure, for pastors, congregations which suit them, and for congregations, pastors who may be expected to fit their need without injurious misplacements. Mistakes of course are made, but where mistakes in appointment-making do occur, the next session of the conference with a new slate of appointments, may provide a remedy, and a man who does not suit one place can be moved to another where everyone fervently hopes that he will suit.

The itinerant system proved ideal for the Methodist church in America during the great growth of that Church and is at present working well even in the urbanized life which has taken the place of the former rural one.

The constitutional power of the bishop to make appointments, and to keep the itinerant system moving, has been modified through the years by successive actions of the General Conference, and by specific regulations which experience has shown were wise. However, the itinerant system in the hands of the bishop is protected from any GENERAL CONFERENCE action which would denature or do it away—as the second RESTRICTIVE RULE makes clear. Occasionally churches and individual ministers are hurt in appointment-making, but in the long run the itinerant system is the best one to man all the churches all the time, and to take care of all the preachers all the time.

Itinerancy in Britain. In John Wesley's lifetime the itinerants were moved to a new station every two years, after his death the period changed to three years, and this remained the general rule throughout the nineteenth century in the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion. Two exceptions developed: first, Methodist stations in theological colleges and connexional offices (the BOOK STEWARD, for instance), remained for much longer periods, and resentment at this was one element in the FLY SHEETS controversy in the 1840's. Second, from about 1860 on the feeling grew that rapid itinerancy hindered effective ministry in the rapidly growing cities. One feature of the FORWARD MOVEMENT was the appearance of a small group of Central Halls where ministers (HUGH PRICE HUGHES, for example) remained in the same station for as long as twenty years. In the non-Wesleyan Methodist groups, the itinerancy was less rigid in the nineteenth century. After METHODIST UNION in 1932, itinerancy continued, but the length of the stay increased, though many ministers still changed circuits after three or four years. Constitutionally, circuit appointments are made by the Conference on the motion of the Stationing Committee; in practice, most appointments are made by direct negotiation between circuits and ministers; the Conference both retains and uses, however, the authority to change such agreements. There is no British equivalent of the American episcopal control of the itinerancy.

ITINERANT OR WESLEYAN METHODIST VISITER (sic), an unofficial Methodist anti-reform eight-page quarto, published at BALTIMORE, Md., from Nov. 12, 1828 to Oct. 26, 1831, and priced at $1.50 a year (twenty-six issues). The editor, MELVILLE B. COX, a located conference preacher from MAINE was subsequently the first missionary to LIBERIA. His platform was defense of "the innocent . . . and those institutions of our church . . . necessary to an itinerant ministry."

Replying to Mutual Rights polemics were Light Street Church laymen CHRISTIAN KEENER and THOMAS E. BOND, later editor of the Christian Advocate (New York), who with Cox repeatedly accused the Reformers of sowing dissensions by railing against Methodist polity and discipline. Tedious hairsplitting and frequent invective characterized both sides. Despite the raging controversy initial circulation was not lucrative.

In October 1830, a new editorial board of Bond, Keener, George Earnest, and Robert G. Armstrong dissected the newly adopted M. P. Church Constitution, exhorting the sanction of slaveholding, local preacher aristocracy and its appointive system. ALFRED BRUNSON on church government and articles largely copied from the religious press on such subjects as Catholicism, temperance, and Sunday schools varied the fare of the final year.

Volumes one and three are in Lovely Lane Museum, Baltimore.

EDWIN SCHELL

IVENS, WILLIAM (1878-1957), Methodist minister, founder of the Canadian Labor Churches, labor editor and member of the Legislative Assembly in Manitoba, was born June 28, 1878, in Baford, Warwickshire, England, and emigrated to CANADA in 1896. He worked for a time as a market gardener in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Under the inspiration of A. E. Smith, later to be Methodism's most notable contribution to the Communist Party in Canada, Ivens became a candidate for the ministry, secured the B.D. from Wesley College, Winnipeg, and was ordained in 1909.

Ivens came to public attention when, in early 1918, his vigorous preaching of the Social Gospel, his pacifism, his organizational work for the Dominion Labor Party, and his attempts to use his church to develop a special ministry to laboring people, produced a congregational crisis at McDougall Methodist Church, Winnipeg, where he had been minister since 1916. The Manitoba Conference solved the dispute by giving Ivens a leave of absence and tacit consent to establish a labor church, which was immediately and successfully accomplished in June, 1918, followed shortly by Ivens' appointment as editor of The Western Labor News. His success in both endeavors was unexpectedly magnified by the effects of the most famous of Canadian labor conflicts, the Winnipeg General Sympathetic Strike in May-June, 1919. The labor church became the rallying point of the strikers and, with the bulletins of The Labor News, their source of inspiration and information. Nine further labor church congregations were soon organized in Winnipeg, and some ten others in various Canadian centers, several organized by A. E. Smith. By 1925, however, the churches had disintegrated as a result of dissension over issues of religion and labor politics.

Ivens is better known in Canadian history for his membership on the Central Strike Committee in 1919, his editing of the strike bulletins, and for his trial and imprisonment with several others on the spurious charge of seditious use by the federal government to break the strike. The charge came in the midst of Conference consideration of Ivens' petition for further leave of absence and was responsible for his immediate location and departure from the ministry. While in prison in 1920 he was elected to the Manitoba Legislature, where he was an able labor representative until 1936. A chiropractic practice, which he had taken up in 1925, gave him the independence to remain for some time among the most active promoters in Manitoba of the newly founded socialist party, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. His political work remained informed by the Social Gospel, although all formal religious association ceased upon the demise of the labor churches.

He has been described as "one of the most colorful figures in the history of organized labor" in Canada. He died at the home of his son in Chula Vista, Calif., June 20, 1957. A collection of his papers is deposited in the Manitoba Provincial Archives.

IVEY, JOSEPH BENJAMIN (1864-1958), American department store executive and prominent Methodist layman, was born at Shelby, N. C., June 8, 1864, the son of George W. Ivey, a widely known Methodist circuit rider for more than half a century in the Carolinas. Young Ivey was educated in the public schools and at Denver (N. C.) Seminary. As his eyesight was impaired by an attack of measles, his parents thought he should learn a trade instead of going to college. Apprenticed at sixteen as a carpenter, he soon concluded that such was not his calling, and in 1881 secured employment in a general store at Belwood, N. C. At first he detested the work and continued in it only because he could not get other employment. In time, however, he began to like the store and decided to pursue the mercantile business. He soon found that he had a flair for advertising and promoting sales.

While at Belwood Ivey persuaded his employer to inaugurate the "one price" system for all merchandise, thus emulating John Wanamaker who a short time before had started the practice in PHILADELPHIA. Also, Ivey prevailed on his employer to reduce the high interest rates customarily charged to farmers who bought supplies in the spring and paid for them in the fall. At twenty-one Ivey became a partner in the business, which was then called Hoyle and Ivey. In 1893 he began managing the dry goods and hardware departments of the Henrietta Mills stores in Rutherford County. In 1900 Ivey borrowed money and went into business for himself in CHARLOTTE, and by working fifteen hours a day soon developed a sound business. By 1914 he had a prosperous establishment housed in a four-story building, and by 1924 it was a large department store. Branch stores were soon established in Asheville and Raleigh, in Greenville, S. C., and in Orlando and Daytona Beach, Fla. Among business associates Ivey was known as a pioneer in the mercantile field, leading the way in early store closing hours, a shorter work week, and paid vacations for employees.

Throughout his days the church was as much a part of Ivey's life as his business. As a youth he attended church regularly and began tithing his income, a practice he continued. On Sunday the shades were always drawn across the display windows in his stores, and he refrained from work and sports on that day. On principle he refused to sell playing cards or cigarettes in his stores. Always an active churchman, he served as a steward, taught Sunday school, was Church school superintendent, and was president of the North Carolina Sunday School Association in the 1930's. Long a lay member of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, he served as chairman of its board of trustees. He was active in behalf of Methodist unification, voting for it in the 1924 GENERAL CONFERENCE and in the 1939 UNITING CONFERENCE. He was a member of eight General Conferences and could have been elected to more had he not insisted, as he grew older, that other laymen be accorded the honor and the responsibility. He was a trustee of the Methodist Home for the Aged in Charlotte and of the LAKE JUNALUSKA Methodist Assembly. For many years he helped to maintain what is now called the Ivey Memorial Playground for Children at Lake Junaluska, supplying the equipment and paying the salaries of adult supervisors. Ivey was active in community affairs, serving as chairman of the committee for teaching the Bible in the public schools, as a member of the Charlotte school board, and as a director of the Charlotte Y.M.C.A. During World War I he was a food administrator for NORTH CAROLINA, and was state chairman for Near East Relief.

A world traveler, Ivey wrote many interesting travelogues which were published in his home town newspaper. He was widely known as an enthusiastic horticulturalist, growing tulips, roses, and chrysanthemums at his home in Charlotte and dahlias at the summer residence he maintained for nearly half a century at Lake Junaluska. Visitors were welcomed to his garden where 30,000 tulips would be in bloom at one time. At Lake Junaluska he was known as the "Dahlia King." He regularly conducted flower shows in his stores and himself entered displays in national flower shows.

Ivey published two books: Successful Dahlia Growing in the South, 1931, and My Memoirs, 1940. He died April 4, 1958, and was buried in Charlotte.

ELMER T. CLARK

IVEY, THOMAS NEAL (1860-1923), American minister and editor, was born at Marion, S. C., May 22, 1860, the son of George W. Ivey, a noted circuit rider in the Carolinas for half a century. T. N. Ivey was educated at Trinity College (B.A., 1880; M.A., 1882; D.D., honorary, 1897). He married Lenora A. Dowd, Aug. 7, 1883. After graduating from college, Ivey taught in the public schools of NORTH CAROLINA for several years. He was admitted to the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, South, in December 1886, and was appointed the first year as principal of Oak Institute at Mooresville. The next year he was pastor at Lenoir Station, and in 1888 was sent to the Roxboro Circuit where he served four years. Then followed a quadrennium as pastor at Wilson, one of the strong appointments in the conference.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, published in GREENSBORO, and the Raleigh Christian Advocate were merged in 1894 under the name of the former, and in 1896 the North Carolina Conference elected Ivey as co-editor. It was Ivey's responsibility to see that the North Carolina Conference and its interests were properly represented in the paper, but in time he and L. W. Crawford, co-editor for the Western North Carolina Conference, were lined up on opposite sides of a controversy swirling around JOHN C. KILGO, president of Trinity College. Both men vigorously presented their views in the Advocate, thus promoting division rather than harmony in North Carolina Methodism. The situation was relieved when the North Carolina Conference bought a half interest in the paper and reestablished the Raleigh Christian Advocate with Ivey as editor, the first issue of the new publication appearing Feb. 23, 1899.

Ivey proved an able and popular editor. The circulation of the Raleigh Christian Advocate rose from 2,500 to 7,500. His reputation soon extended beyond the bounds of his own conference. He demonstrated versatility and ingenuity by compiling a column purportedly written by Bildad Akers, a man with rustic tastes who displayed crude common sense and upheld sound ethical and religious views. The best of the columns were published in a volume called Bildad Akers—His Book. In 1902 Ivey published his first annual North Carolina Methodist Handbook and Almanac. Four years later the volume became the Southern Methodist Handbook which appeared annually through 1923 save one year during the first World War. The work was filled with facts and information about Southern Methodism.

Beginning in 1898 the North Carolina Conference elected Ivey a delegate to every GENERAL CONFERENCE as long as he lived. He was a delegate to the 1911 ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, and at one time he was a vice-president of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He served on the first commission on the unification of American Methodism, actively advocating union.

In 1910 the General Conference elected Ivey as editor of the (Nashville) Christian Advocate, the general organ of the church, a post he filled with general acceptability for the next thirteen years. As editor of the denomination's general organ Ivey traveled over the church, attended many conferences and meetings, and became widely and favorably known. At the 1922 General Conference there was some talk of Ivey for the episcopacy, and in the early balloting he received a favorable vote. About 1920 his health had begun to fail. He died suddenly May 15, 1923, and was buried in Raleigh.

IVORY COAST is a country of West Central Africa on the Gulf of Guinea, a former French colony and member of the United Nations. The area is 189,029 square miles and the population is 4,195,000 (1969 estimate). The capital is Abidjan, an excellent port.

The Kru people on the coast have long traditions, but no definite history is known prior to the accounts of Portuguese navigators, in the late 1400's. During this early period of trade and slave-running, the French gained ascendancy, securing privileges and the cession of territory from African rulers. At first connected administratively with Senegal, north of the GAMBIA, the Ivory Coast became a separate colony in 1893, at about which time the boundaries were fixed with LIBERIA and the Gold Coast (GHANA). After World War II, the French trained local political leaders for the independence achieved in 1960.

During the decade after the turn of the century, the phenomenon of "Christian Prophetism" appeared in various areas of Central and Western Africa. These African prophets attacked fetishism, and other elements of African traditional religion, each preaching his own form of the Christian faith. The Liberian prophet WILLIAM WADE HARRIS traveled and preached in 1914 in many villages in the southern part of the country, converting tens of thousands to Christianity. He promised that missionaries would follow, and distributed Bibles that few could read. He was expelled from the country by the French authorities. In 1923 a British Methodist missionary, W. J. Platt, found groups of Harris's converts still meeting for worship. Missionaries and Dahomean and Togolese ministers and evangelists were sent to consolidate and develop the work begun by Harris. The first Ivoirean minister was ordained in 1945.

British Wesleyan work in this area became, in 1925, a section of the French West Africa District, and in 1957 a separate overseas district of the British Conference. The work radiates from Dabou, where a Methodist hospital was opened in 1968, and the capital Abidjan. In 1968 there were 17,039 full members and a total community of 81,064. The church had one secondary school with 135 students, and twelve primary schools with 2,763 pupils. At Dabou there is also a Women's Training Center.

The Methodist Church, though small by comparison with Roman Catholicism, is by far the largest Protestant church.

D. D. T. JABAVU

JABAVU, DAVIDSON DON TENGO (1885-1959), South African layman and first African professor, was the eldest son of J. T. JABAVU, and was born on Oct. 20, 1885. He was educated at Lovedale and Morija before proceeding overseas for further study at Colwyn Bay, North Wales and the Universities of London (B.A. Honors in English) and Birmingham (Diploma in Education). After visiting the United States, where he studied the organization of Tuskegee and Hampton, Jabavu returned to SOUTH AFRICA and was appointed to the staff of the projected South African Native College at Fort Hare. He served there from 1916, when he was the only colleague of Principal Alexander Kerr, to 1944, by which time the college had become the leading center on the continent for the higher education of Africans. His services to Bantu education were recognized by the award of an honorary Ph.D. by Rhodes University, Grahamstown. Off the campus, Jabavu was instrumental in forming teachers' and farmers' associations and was actively engaged in religious, political and temperance affairs. A leading Methodist, he first attended Conference in 1919, served on various connexional committees from 1921 to the time of his death, and was one of the first elected lay members of Conference (1935-7). Like his father, he greatly admired the Society of Friends. He died at Middle-drift, Cape Province, on Aug. 3, 1959, shortly before his beloved Fort Hare passed under the control of the Bantu Education Department.

JABAVU, JOHN TENGO (1859-1921), South African layman and journalist, was born at Healdtown on Jan. 11, 1859. He attended school at Healdtown, gained a government teaching certificate at the age of sixteen, and matriculated by private study in 1883—the second African to achieve this distinction. In 1881 he was appointed editor of Isigidimi sama Xosa (The Xhosa Messenger), published at Lovedale, and in 1884 founded his own paper, Imvo Zabantsundu (Native Opinion) which he edited and published at King William's Town until his death. He was for thirty years a prominent and sometimes controversial figure in public and political life, and was intimately associated with plans for the South African Native College, established at Fort Hare in 1916.

Jabavu was a member of the first South African Conference in 1883 and attended Conference without a break until 1913, and several times thereafter. He opposed the secession of Africans from the Church and mediated when the races were sharply divided. He served on various connexional committees and was especially interested in missionary affairs. It was largely as a result of his advocacy that the Twentieth Century Fund was used to erect Wesley House, the Methodist hostel at Fort Hare. He hoped to concentrate the theological training of all denominations at the new college and pleaded for the transfer of Methodist training from Lesseyton, which took place in 1921.

During a visit to England in 1909, he became closely associated with the Society of Friends, whose influence deepened his religious life without diminishing his loyalty to the Wesleyan Church. He died at Fort Hare on Sept. 10, 1921.

JACKSON, GEORGE (1792-1867), British missionary, was born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, England, on March 3, 1792. He was converted through the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, but became a Wesleyan itinerant in 1816 and was sent out to the WEST INDIES. There his health broke down, and he was transferred to Nova Scotia, where he wrote a series of successful pamphlets in defense of infant baptism, which helped to reestablish Methodist influence against the teaching of the New Lights, a sect Baptist in origin and Antinomian in tendency. He returned to the home ministry in 1826 and died at Wokingham, Berkshire, on July 9, 1867.

JACKSON, HENRY G. (1838-1914), hymn writer and missionary to ARGENTINA. Protestants of South America are indebted to him for his first hymnal in the Spanish language. Published during his pastorate in BUENOS AIRES (1869-78), the hymnal continued in use for nearly eighty years, going through some seven editions.

Born in INDIANA, Jackson was educated at Indiana Asbury University, receiving a M.A. degree in 1865. He became a minister of the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFER-ENCE in 1862 and served as principal of Stockwell Collegiate Institute (Indiana) and pastor of Ames M. E. Church, New Orleans, La.

In 1869 he went to Argentina as pastor of the Buenos Aires church and superintendent of the South America Mission. With mission board approval, he closed out German and French missions, letting the self-supporting English work stand, but concentrating on work in Spanish. During his pastorate the present church building on Corrientes Avenue was built.

Jackson's Himnario contained more than 100 hymns, of which fifty-seven were from his own pen. Of these, some were original productions and others were free translations of standard English hymns.

After returning to the United States, he was pastor of Grand Avenue Church, KANSAS CITY, Mo., and Centenary Church, CHICAGO, Ill. In 1890 he became superintendent of Chicago Northern District, beginning a long term of service in the superintendency.

SAMUEL JACKSON

JACKSON, SAMUEL (1786-1861), British Methodist, was born at Sancton, Yorkshire, younger brother of THOMAS JACKSON, like him entering the Wesleyan ministry, and like him being elected president of the Conference (in 1847)—the only instance of brothers occupying that office. He was best known because of his concern for the conversion and religious education of the young, with which most of his many publications were concerned.

FRANK BAKER

JACKSON, THOMAS (1783-1873), one of the earliest Methodist historians, was born at Sancton, Yorkshire, England, on Dec. 10, 1783, the son of a farm laborer. He was converted in 1801 through the preaching of MARY TAFT and entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1804. He served for eighteen years as the CONNECTIONAL EDITOR and for nineteen years as tutor in the Theological Institution at Richmond, and was president of the Conference in 1838 and 1849. Though he had received only a very elementary education, he became one of the leading scholars of Methodism. Of the many books which he wrote or edited, the most important are: The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley (1841), The Works of the Rev. John Wesley (1829-31), and The Lives of Early Methodist Preachers (1837-38; 3rd ed., enl., 1865-66). He died near London on March 10, 1873.

WILLIAM JACKSON

JACKSON, WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER (1874-1944), British Methodist, was born at Lincoln. He was educated at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, and entered the ministry of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES in 1898. He quickly rose to prominence as an administrator, and from 1919 he served in connection with the United Methodist Church Chapel Fund; he did much to put his church on a sounder financial basis. It was a deliberate tribute to his work that he was chosen as the last president of the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH in 1932; he also served as president of the new Methodist Church in 1935.

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A. (population 150,332), is the capital and metropolis of MISSISSIPPI, located close to the center of that state. The city was named for Andrew Jackson after his victory over the British in NEW ORLEANS in early 1815. Under Jackson's leadership many Mississippians then took part.

The story of Jackson Methodism is told in the history of the churches whose accounts appear below. The Jackson District has been a key district in the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE since early days. Bishop CHARLES B. GAL-LOWAY, who lived in Jackson after he became bishop, made his great influence greatly felt in that city and indeed over the South as long as he lived. The Galloway residence yet stands across the street from what was once First Church, Jackson, now Galloway Memorial. The founding of MILLSAPS COLLEGE in 1892 by virtue of the grant of Major R. W. MILLSAPS proved noteworthy in Jackson's history, as well as in the life of Mississippi Methodism.

The city has greatly developed within recent years and while still continuing to be the rail center for the state, has an airport which is extremely busy. The population increase in Jackson has been remarkable in late years. Besides Capitol Street and Galloway Memorial, seventeen other United Methodist churches are listed in Jackson in 1970, with 16,039 members. There are three Negro churches of what was the Central Jurisdiction, with 1,227 members. The C.M.E. CHURCH also has strong congregations in the city.

Jackson has been the seat of an Episcopal Area since M. E. Church, South days. The present Jackson Area is comprised of the MISSISSIPPI and NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES.

Capitol Street Church is a landmark in downtown Jackson. It was organized in 1883 by Charles B. Galloway, who was also its first pastor. The church began as a small afternoon Sunday school class on the second floor of the West Jackson Fire Station. The first official title was the West Jackson Mission.

The first building, a white wooden structure, was erected in 1888 under the leadership of the pastor, J. M. Cowan. It was located on the north side of Capitol Street. In 1890 the church was officially named Capitol Street Church. The present red brick sanctuary, located on the south side of Capitol Street, directly across from the old church, was completed under the leadership of J. M. Morse. It was a historic day in August 1913, when the congregation assembled in the old church for a short worship service and then marched across the street to begin formally worshipping in the new building. This plant was dedicated by Bishop COLLINS DENNY on Dec. 6, 1914.

The middle educational plant was added in 1940 under the pastorate of B. M. Hunt. The southside educational building and the chapel were erected during the pastorate of Roy C. Clark. Both were formally dedicated by Bishop MARVIN A. FRANKLIN in 1957.

Capitol Street Church is fast becoming an inner city church due to the phenomenal growth and development of the city of Jackson. On Sunday, March 13, 1966, it officially opened its doors to all races of people. This was quite a step for the membership in view of the deeply ingrained segregated culture of the state. It is the second largest Methodist church of the Mississippi Conference. For many years now it has contributed money, members and leadership for new churches continuously being erected in the growing city. In 1970 its membership was 2,031.

Galloway Memorial Church. Job M. Baker had been appointed pastor in Jackson in 1833 but did not succeed in organizing a church, and Thomas Ford, who lived nearby, succeeded in the organization three years later and began the building of a church, which was completed during the pastorate of C. K. MARSHALL. The church was organized by Ford and John G. Jones, presiding elder, in the State House, or place of meeting for the legislature.

GALLOWAY CHURCH, JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI

The first building was completed in 1839 in time for a meeting of the committee to plan for the observance of Methodism's first centennial, out of which, among other things, came Centenary College.

This original building served Methodism in the Capitol City until 1883, when a new church was built on the same site, but facing east. The third church was begun in 1913 and completed in 1916 in time for the annual conference that fall. Since that time additional facilities for education, and various activities have been added, including a chapel. The original lot cost $50 and the first building something less than $5,000. The present building is valued at more than $1,000,000.

At first the church appointment was simply known as Jackson, but later, after other churches were organized, it was known as First Church. Soon after the present building was constructed it was named Galloway Memorial, after Bishop Charles B. Galloway, who was twice its pastor and who lived across the street from the church after his election to the episcopacy in 1886, until his death in 1909.

Three men related to this church later became bishops in the M. E. Church, South. Charles B. Galloway and HORACE M. DUBOSE were pastors of First Church before their election to the episcopacy. J. LLOYD DECELL was a member there, was later presiding elder, and was pastor at the time of his election to the office of bishop. NOLAN B. HARMON attended Sunday school in this church and was for a time a member of the church during his student days at Millsaps College. Twelve Methodist bishops have presided over annual conferences in Galloway Church, and practically every bishop of the former M. E. Church, South has preached in it.

When Charles K. Marshall became pastor in December 1837, there were fifty-nine members of the church. This number increased and sometimes decreased until 1970, when 2,103 persons were reported in the membership.

The first mention of a Sunday school was in March 1848, when A. F. Buckley was superintendent. Among succeeding superintendents have been Colonel W. L. Nugent, who served for twenty-five years, and J. C. Cavett, who served for twenty-eight years. The first Woman's Society, which has continued under various names, was organized on Monday, Aug. 28, 1871.

The following have gone from this church as missionaries: Miss Ida Anderson, 1901, China; Miss Rosa McNeil, 1927, Africa; Miss Eurania Pyron, 1927, Poland; Miss Otie Branstetter, home missions. While not members of First Church, J. B. Fearn, Rev. and Mrs. Robert T. Henry, and Dr. and Mrs. W. BRYANT LEWIS went to the mission fields under the sponsorship of this church. J. W. LAMBUTH preached his last sermon in Mississippi at First Church in 1854, before going to CHINA as a missionary. He was the father of Bishop WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

When Jackson became a focal point in the social revolution that came to this section in the 1960's, Galloway Church could not escape the impact of the controversy. In January of 1966 the official board, by a majority vote, opened its doors to all persons, regardless of color, who came to worship. While some members left in protest of this change in policy, the main movement of the congregation was established. The present membership includes leaders in affairs of state and commercial life, professional men and women, students, and persons in various walks of life.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN, U.S.A. First Church is the oldest church in Jackson. It was organized on Jan. 20, 1831, by a handful of early settlers who met in the local tavern and heard their first preacher deliver a sermon on temperance. The first building was erected in 1846 and was dedicated in 1850. It was located on the west side of the public square, facing east with its north side on Main Street.

In June 1867, the cornerstone of a large new building was laid. This building was located one-half block west of the old church. Times were hard soon after this building was erected and many people were unable to pay their pledges. The mortgage on the property was about to be foreclosed, but a loyal member, Judge Gould, mortgaged his home to pay the indebtedness and the church property was saved. This building cost $75,000.

In later years Main Street was renamed Michigan Avenue. Through the years there have been several major changes in the building, but the same foundations and the general appearance of the sanctuary, including the beautiful Gothic arches, remain the same as in the original building.

In 1918-22 there was a general remodeling and enlarging program and the edifice was rededicated in October 1922. Again in the 1950's several major changes were made, such as adding a chapel and more church school rooms.

In 1970 the property was valued at $1,437,154, and there were 2,362 members on the church rolls.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE, U.S.A. Methodism in Jackson is an outgrowth of work begun in 1820. Two missionaries, Hezekiah Holland and LEWIS GARRET, were appointed to come to the "Jackson Purchase . . . to labor and report in the ensuing spring the true situation in that country." A year later they reported 146 white and thirteen colored Methodists living in this district.

In 1822 the Forked Deer District was formed with Lewis Garret, presiding elder, and sixteen ministers. That year Garret reported 687 Methodists in the district. ROBERT PAINE, Joshua Boucher, Thomas Smith, Andrew Crawford, G. W. D. Harris (brother of Gov. Isham Harris and Supreme Court Judge William R. Harris) were ministers who followed Lewis Garret. Harris reported that some crude log church buildings were springing up but most preaching was done in the homes. Soon CAMP MEETINGS were held and Methodism grew.

In 1826, three years after the little town of Jackson was incorporated, a Methodist church was organized by Thomas B. Neely with eight members. This organization took place in the log courthouse on what is now Court Square. Services were held at "early candlelight" here and in private homes until 1831, when a house of worship was built on the lot across the street, south of the present First Methodist Church building at Church and Chester Streets. In 1833 there were forty-three white members and thirteen colored. Camp meetings held at Black Creek, Big Springs, Salem and other places in the 1830's are given credit for promoting the growth in Methodist as well as in other denominational church membership. The circuit riders are given much credit in stirring up the people to attend these meetings.

In 1840 the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE was established by the General Conference, and Jackson First Church entertained the first session of the new conference in November. In 1844 the church-wide division split the church, and First Church became a part of the M. E. Church, South. The membership of First Church in 1970 was 1,510.

Three years after the Memphis Conference was organized, Memphis Conference Female Institute was established in Jackson. The Institute was under the supervision of the Memphis Conference, but First Church in Jackson mothered it. LAMBUTH COLLEGE, the successor to the Institute, is a strong coeducational college.

Hays Avenue Church began in 1867 with thirteen members and is the outgrowth of a need for church in the northeastern section of Jackson. As many other churches, it began as a Sunday school and prayer meeting group. Its influence has spread to many areas of Jackson, and in 1952 it sponsored the building of a new church in northwest Jackson, Forest Heights. In 1970 Hays Avenue had 810 members.

Lambuth Memorial, on Campbell Street, began life as Jackson City Mission in 1873. Jackson Circuit and City Mission, East and West Mission, and Campbell Street Methodist are a few of the names by which this church has been known. The present name, Lambuth Memorial, is in honor of Bishop WALTER R. LAMBUTH, for whom nearby Lambuth College was named. The church ministers to a congregation of 776 members, and is known as the College Church because so many of the students at Lambuth College worship here.

Trinity Church, on East Chester Street, was established as a mission in 1888. A group of dedicated Methodist women had Sunday school classes and prayer meetings for an unchurched southeast section of Jackson. Wyatt Taylor, a pioneer of Jackson, built a small chapel on Mobile Avenue on his own property and gave it to the group. From this beginning a church was later built on Middle Avenue, and then moved to its present site. The membership is presently 358.

Highland Heights Church dates from a Sunday school started in April 1904. It was formerly known as Hicksville Church. A membership of 287 represents an interested, enthusiastic group who have built educational facilities to care for a growing membership.

Forest Heights Church in northwest Jackson was the result of activities of Hays Avenue members. In a fast developing residential and medical section of the city, it serves a membership of 555.

Liberty Church is the cradle of the C.M.E. Church and is commonly referred to as "Mother Liberty." The church was organized in 1848 for the use of the Negro members of the M. E. Church, South. It was here that the first GENERAL CONFERENCE was held in 1870 which established the C.M.E. Church as an independent ecclesiastical organization.

Liberty Church is also the mother of Negro Methodism in Jackson, Tenn., for from her three local churches have been formed. She gave to her denomination Bishop ISAAC LANE, the fifth bishop and one who helped shape her destiny.

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA, U.S.A. (population 513,439), a major insurance, regional port and rail center providing a gateway to FLORIDA and the south Atlantic, was named for General Andrew Jackson, first Territorial Governor of Florida in 1821. Methodism first came to Jacksonville when Isaac Boring, pioneer Florida preacher, preached there in 1829. Jacksonville first appears in the Minutes of 1836 with the appointment of John Jones to the circuit. Subsequently it became a station and at the separation the church was part of the M. E. Church, South. After the Civil War the M. E. Church organized work in the city, and the work of the Southern Church expanded. The Jacksonville District office is located here. In 1970 there were fifty-nine United Methodist churches with a membership of 33,035. Present institutions are: Methodist Hospital, a 166-bed general medical facility; Wesley Manor, a 296-bed retirement home; Methodist Community Center, and Epworth Methodist Center.

During the Civil War John S. Swaim, a member of the NEWARK CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, was assigned as missionary to Jacksonville. The present Ebenezer Church was organized by Swaim in 1865 from the Negro members of St. Paul's M. E. Church, South. The FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY opened a school and institute.

The A.M.E. Church maintains its Eleventh Episcopal District residence here. The A.M.E. Church has twenty-three churches and 3,000 members in Jacksonville. EDWARD WATERS COLLEGE, a four-year degree granting college, sponsored by the A.M.E. Church and organized in 1866, has been located here since 1883 and has an enrollment of around 1,000 and a faculty of forty. The C.M.E. Church and the A.M.E. ZION Church each have three churches, and the WESLEYAN and FREE METHODIST CHURCHES are represented with one church each.

Arlington Church is the largest United Methodist church in Jacksonville. For over three-quarters of a century it has been an integral part of the community. In the summer of 1888, Mrs. Martha J. Inskip, a noted evangelist, initiated plans for the construction of a church in Eggleston Heights. The full cost of the structure, $640, was paid from subscriptions collected from her friends in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Ocean Grove, New Jersey, and Florida. On March 24, 1889, the church was dedicated.

In the early twentieth century the Inskip Memorial Church was all that remained of the once thriving village of Eggleston Heights, due to the freeze of 1894-95. It stood all alone in the woods a quarter of a mile back from the road to Chaseville. With the growth of the Arlington community, the inaccessibility of the church became more apparent. Accordingly, the people acquired property at the corner of Chaseville Road (now University Boulevard) and Main Street (now Commerce Street), where the present sanctuary stands.

Continued growth and activity soon revealed the need for a larger sanctuary and more classrooms. The small white building served both as a church and Sunday school. Directors of the Livingston Mission were approached for necessary funds for a building program. The Board agreed to assist with the building on condition that the church raise $1,000. The money was raised during the worst part of the depression by many small gifts, and the lot adjoining the church property was given by A. C. Macy as the building site. Ground was broken on April 12, 1933, and the new church, known as Arlington Community Church, was dedicated on Nov. 12, 1933.

With the opening of the Mathews Bridge, Jan. 1, 1953, there came a phenomenal growth and the Arlington area grew to nearly 40,000. Long-range plans were made to erect an educational building and a sanctuary. The educational building was completed in October 1953, and the sanctuary was completed in March 1960. With continued growth and the need for additional facilities, another building program was started in 1965, when a new educational building was completed and the other buildings remodeled. The church now owns a whole city block, with two parsonages, for a total value of $1,000,000. The membership has grown from 273 in 1951 to 2,163 in 1970.

First Church was organized in 1823. Its beginning dates from the arrival of John Perry, preacher in charge of the St. Augustine Circuit, who came to Cow-Ford, the present Jacksonville, to start services. In 1846 the Methodists bought a small building and lot at the corner of Newman and Duval. The congregation has continued at this location. There have been five sanctuaries since 1846, one of them having survived two major fires. The present handsome Colonial structure was built in 1965 at a cost of over $500,000.

First Church has served as one of the leading churches of the Florida Conference throughout the years. It has contributed heavily toward the mission causes of the church. More than twenty-five young men and women have gone out as full-time servants of the church. It is of course the oldest congregation in Jacksonville. For twelve years the Episcopal Headquarters of the Florida Conference—with Bishops ROY SHORT, JOHN BRANSCOMB and JAMES HENLEY respectively in charge—was located at First Church. This church has been responsible for the organization of twelve new congregations in the Jacksonville area. Located in the heart of he city, it is a vital witness for the cause of Christ. It reported 1,382 members in 1970.

JACO, PETER (1729-1781), British Methodist, was born at Newlyn, Cornwall. Previous to becoming a regular itinerant in 1754, he was, like many of the early preachers, an occasional helper and semi-itinerant, although there was no prescribed time of probation. He traveled until a few years before his death, which occurred at Margate on July 6, 1781, and he was buried at City Road, LONDON.

JACOB, JOHN JEREMIAH (1757-1834), American pioneer preacher, was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., on Jan. 17, 1757. As a young man he lived with Captain Michael Cresap in Old Town, Md. Later, Jacob became a captain in the Revolutionary War, serving five years, and Armstrong says that he was "a revolutionary hero in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth and Camden."

In 1781 Jacob married the widow of Captain Cresap and moved to Hampshire County, W. Va. Here he lived the rest of his life. Mrs. Jacob died in 1821 and Jacob's second wife became the mother of J. J. Jacob, the fourth governor of WEST VIRGINIA.

Jacob was converted at Old Town in 1783 and became the first CLASS LEADER there. A neat frame church, erected at Old Town in 1785, was the first built on the Allegheny circuit. Bishop ASBURY and Jacob became warm friends, and Asbury visited the area fourteen times from 1781 to 1813.

THOMAS SCOTT, later circuit rider and judge of Ohio, was converted in Jacob's home. Scott wrote in 1821 that when Mrs. Jacob was converted in 1785 it was attended with the first Methodist shouting he ever heard. Jacob was ordained deacon in 1789 and elder in 1813. Following his admission to the itinerant ministry he manumitted seventeen of his slaves.

The yearly conference was held in Old Town in June 1793, and members of the conference were entertained in Jacob's home. At this conference Thomas Scott and DANIEL HITT were ordained elders.

Jacob wrote A Biographical Sketch of the Late Captain Michael Cresap. He died in Hampshire County in 1834 and was buried at Romney, W. Va.

JACOBS, HORACE LINCOLN (1863-1936), American minister, writer and authority on Methodist canon law, was born in York, Pa., Sept. 23, 1863. He was educated at Pennsylvania (now Gettysburg) College (B.A., 1882; M.A., 1883; and D.D.) and at DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1885), where he became the first American minister elected a "Fellow."

Received on trial in 1885 in the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, he remained an active member thereof until he was retired in 1936 on account of age. For thirty-seven years he served as a trustee of this body and was the sponsor and author of its numerous legal documents. His interest in the detailed work of every phase of Conference activity was equalled only by his insistence upon absolute adherence to the requirements of all charters, rules, by-laws of the Conference, and of the canon law of Methodism.

As a pastor and preacher his record was admirable.

He was a prolific writer, his articles having appeared in most of the official periodicals of Methodism and other denominations. From 1892 to the year of his death he was his conference's correspondent to The Christian Advocate, and a collection of these weekly reports would cover the detailed history of the conference for that period.

In 1900 he was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, and he was repeatedly elected to each succeeding General Conference, including that of 1932. In 1936 his conference honored itself by electing him "delegate emeritus" and this action was recognized by the General Conference. He was a commanding figure in the General Conference, never hesitating to make a "point of order" and seldom, if ever, being out of order in doing so. He has been called by some denominational leaders "the greatest authority on Methodist Canon Law in the church in his day."

The General Conference commissions on which he served were as follows: Board of Control of the EPWORTH LEAGUE, 1904-08; Commission on Judicial Procedure, 1928-32; Commission on Rules of the General Conference, 1932-36; Commission on Certification of the Discipline, 1932-36.

His last labor for the church he loved was correcting galley proof of the Discipline of 1936. He died Nov. 4, 1936 at Woolrich, Pa.

JACOBS, SIMON PETER (1837-1921), was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio. He joined the NORTH OHIO CONFERENCE in 1860, was ordained deacon in 1862, and after eighteen years of pastoral ministry in OHIO and KANSAS, went to INDIA in 1880. He was in India for only nine years and served during that brief time in such widely separated places as CALCUTTA, 1880; BOMBAY, 1881; Kolar, 1882; Kanarese circuit (Gulbarga, Raichur, Shorapur), 1883-85; Hindustani Mission, HYDERABAD, 1886-88.

He contributed powerfully to the development of Methodism in India. During seven of his nine years he was laying foundations for Methodist missions in the Telugu and Kanarese language areas. The SOUTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE, now mainly Kanarese, in its eightieth session in 1965 honored his memory. Some 2,000 persons attended morning worship at the session, and 1,175 received the sacred elements in the communion service. On adjournment Bishop GABRIEL SUNDARAM and EARL A. SEAMANS went on an eleven-day tour in the Conference, dedicating six new churches and conferring with local leaders about plans for constructing fifteen additional church buildings.

Jacobs wrote five theological tracts which were extensively circulated all over India. Mrs. Jacobs' maiden name, Godsmark, aroused much interest.

JACOBY, LUDWIG SIGISMUND (1813-1874), German Methodist pioneer and leader, was born in north-east GERMANY on Oct. 21, 1813, of Jewish descent. He earned his living as a shop assistant. As a student he was practically self taught. Baptized in 1835 by a Lutheran pastor, he did not yet become a committed Christian. In 1838 he migrated to the United States, where he became a teacher in CINCINNATI, Ohio. A sermon by WILLIAM NAST impressed him deeply, and he was converted and became most active in the local German church. In 1841 he received an appointment to Gerre in St. Louis as a missionary among German immigrants. In 1844 he became presiding elder within that German Annual Conference. When in 1848 the democratic movement in Germany brought about religious liberty in some parts of the country at least, the time came to yield to the manifold requests from Germany that Methodist ministers be sent there. L. S. Jacoby was the first to be appointed, and by the Board of Bishops of the M. E. Church.

On Nov. 7, 1849, Jacoby landed at Bremerhaven, and on December 23 he preached his first sermon in BREMEN. He was an excellent preacher, a great pastor of souls, and magnificent organizer. He set up a local church immediately, started a library, founded Christian periodicals for children and adults, and was instrumental in book publishing (Anker-Verlag); under his auspices a theological school (PREDIGER-SEMINAR) began work. He was appointed "superintendent" (in German mission work something between a presiding elder and a bishop) and proved a man of vision and enterprise in carrying Methodism to most parts of Germany, or at least in organizing such missionary endeavor. Of his various books a history of Methodism (Geschichte des Methodismus) remains valuable as a primary source. He returned to America in 1871 to serve as a minister and presiding elder in St. Louis.

He was a member of the U. S. Methodist Episcopal GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1872, and then as a member of the Southwest German Conference served as the presiding elder of the St. Louis District (1873-74). He had married Amalia Nuelsen, the sister of Heinrich Nuelsen, in 1839 or 1840. On June 20, 1874, he died of cancer after a lingering illness, leaving his wife and eight children. German Methodism will ever honor the name of Ludwig S. Jacoby.

While awaiting death, which took place in St. Louis, he compiled Letzte Studen, Oder Die Kraft Der Religion Jesu Christi Im Tode. Dying in peace, he imparted his blessings to those around him like a patriarch.

JACOKES, DANIEL C. (1813-1894), able American minister, of many versatile interests, was born in Charleston, Montgomery Co., N. Y., April 15, 1813, the son of Samuel and Catherine Jacokes. His mother was a woman of character, with keen and active mind. She planned for Daniel to become a clergyman and marked out a course of study to continue thirty years; at the end of this time he was to buy new books on all subjects and review his studies. This he did twice. He and his two brothers became ministers.

Daniel Jacokes attended a select school, and then Geneva College for three years. He married Mary Ann Sparrow in 1833. They moved to MICHIGAN, where in 1840 he joined the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE.

From 1841 to 1845 he served in the Indian mission work. He was sent to leading churches in Michigan, serving with a single exception, his full term on every charge. In 1860 his salary of $1,000 was the highest in the DETROIT CONFERENCE. In 1861-62, Jacokes served a year as chaplain of the 5th Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Infantry, in the Civil War and experienced the hardships of the Peninsula campaign. He was presiding elder of the Adrian District, 1868-72. Due to his wife's health he retired in 1876, but continued to be very active. He was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1876.

Daniel Jacokes was the outstanding scholar of Michigan Methodism in his day. He made a specialty of astronomy and microscopy. He was a mechanical genius, and constructed his own telescopes, microscopes, and musical instruments. He specialized in the then new field of archaeology, and gave learned lectures on the new discoveries. He studied theology and other religions, and was a powerful defender of the faith. He was an instructive preacher; often his sermons were remembered long afterward. He had a very large library for the time, of four to five thousand volumes. WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in Connecticut conferred the degree of A.M. upon him, and in 1871 he received the S.T.D. from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

In 1875 Jacokes was placed in charge of the Michigan educational exhibit for the Centennial Exposition to be held in PHILADELPHIA in 1876. His plan giving a comprehensive exposition of Michigan's educational system, was widely admired, and studied. In retirement he served six years on the Michigan Board of Health. He continued to serve until his death as agent of the State Board of Corrections and Charities, and as chaplain of the Eastern Michigan Asylum for the Insane at Pontiac.

Jacokes had a majestic form and strong constitution; he often spent twenty hours a day in work and study. He died in Pontiac, Jan. 11, 1894. He had one son, Judge James A. Jacokes.

JAIME, EDUARDO MENA BARRETO (1889-), Brazilian preacher and author, was born in Itaquí, state of Rio Grande do Sul, on Jan. 16, 1889, the son of a distinguished military Roman Catholic family. He studied in private schools in Uruguaiana, was converted under the ministry of E. E. JOINER, and made his profession of faith in April, 1905.

Inspired by Joiner's example and ministry, Jaime de-ceded to become a preacher and in August, 1905, received his first appointment to the circuit of Santa Maria, Rio Grande do Sul. At the age of twenty, he founded the Methodist church in the important border city of Livramento. In 1910, he married Alcina Martins, by whom he had four daughters—Nair, Nadir, Zaida, and Zamar, all married and active with their husbands in the Methodist church.

He was ordained deacon by Bishop W. R. LAMBUTH in 1911, and elder by Bishop E. D. MOUZON in 1913. "Mena Barreto," as he is called, held pastorates in most of the principal cities of the state; served as presiding elder, was for a period editor of O Testemunho, organ of the South Brazil Conference; served on the Regional Board of Education; led in a strong civic movement to preserve freedom of religion and church-state separation; taught pastoral theology in the seminary, then at Porto Alegre; and was a strong champion of autonomy for the Methodist Church of Brazil.

He is also the author of four books—Ministerio Cristão (Christian Ministry); Avivamento e Evangelismo (Revival and Evangelism); Ministerio Eficiente (Effective Ministry); and lastly, a valuable History of Methodism in South Brazil.

After retirement in 1946, Eduardo Jaime continued as pastor of several parishes, and was instrumental in building in the city of Porto Alegre, a church named the Joiner Memorial. After fifty-nine years of active ministry, he was in 1966 serving as pastor of a suburban congregation in that city. "All that I am," he writes, "I owe to the unspeakable grace of Jesus Christ."

OTILIA DE O. CHAVES

JAMAICA is an island in the Caribbean Sea, 100 miles south of the southeastern coast of CUBA and 110 miles west of Cape Carcase, HAITI. It is a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. The capital is Kingston. The area, 4,411 square miles, and the population is around 1,939,649 (1968 estimate).

St. Ann's Bay, at the center of the north shore, marks the landing place of Christopher Columbus. The Spaniards decimated the aboriginal Arawaks, of whose culture only a few rock carvings remain. Great numbers of African slaves were introduced. Some of the harbors became the haven of pirates, and there were many land battles and sea fights. Finally Britain secured control and in 1866, Jamaica became a crown colony.

Rioting occurred when emancipation was put into effect and racial rancor continued for decades. The Jamaica Contingent of World War I served with distinction; and the location and good harbors made it an allied naval base in the heart of the Caribbean. Local self-government gave place to full independence in 1962, when Jamaica was received into the United Nations as an independent state.

Until 1950 Jamaica's economy depended on bananas, coffee, sugar, molasses and rum. The discovery of bauxite (the ore of aluminium), and the development of its mining, made Jamaica the world's largest producer of that basic utility.

On his second voyage to the West Indies, THOMAS COKE reached Jamaica on Jan. 19, 1789. Anglicans, Moravians and Baptists had previously established work in the island, and Coke preached, in a concert room lent by its Roman Catholic owner, to a congregation of 400 whites and 200 Negroes. In August 1789, WILLIAM HAMMETT, the first Methodist missionary appointed to Jamaica, took up his post. A residence and meeting house were found for him at Hannah Town, and a small interracial society class was formed. Mrs. Mary Ann Akle Smith, who had supported Coke during his first visit, became its leader. Towards the end of 1790, a planter's house was transformed into a church large enough for a congregation of 1,500, and came to be known as Parade Chapel.

Nevertheless, there was much opposition, and Hammett suffered both slander and physical violence. When Coke returned to Jamaica in January 1791, he found Hammett "worn almost to a skeleton with opposition and fatigue," and took him to America where he settled. On the same visit, Coke, together with Thomas Werrill, visited Montego Bay and Spanish Town, crossing the island on horseback. Werrill was stationed at Kingston, and William Brazier at Spanish Town.

The authorities in Jamaica had never been able to prevent the persecution of Methodists, and sometimes joined in the attack on them. Methodist preaching was prohibited by law in 1802, and although this decision was overruled in 1804, it was not until seven years later that restrictions on Methodist preaching were relaxed, and Parade Chapel permanently reopened. By 1814, the membership had increased to 1,700 under the ministry of William Fish (1792-1806) and his successors, and with remarkable lay leadership by both men and women. A second church was opened in Kingston in 1818, and a third in 1827.

Outside Kingston work developed more slowly, and opposition persisted longer. Spanish Town was visited by Coke during two of his journeys, and became the head of a separate circuit in 1816. Local preachers from Kingston began in 1802 to conduct services in Morant Bay, and a missionary, Daniel Campbell, visited the town in the same year. A free colored local preacher, John Williams, was refused a license to preach, and imprisoned for singing and praying with friends in his own house. Campbell was arrested in 1803 for preaching to slaves, but the church in Morant Bay grew steadily, to become the head of a circuit in 1815. In 1817, Jamaica became the headquarters of a district which included Haiti and Central America as well as Jamaica itself.

Opposition, particularly to evangelism among slaves, was briefly renewed in 1832-3 after a slave rebellion. The Colonial Church Union, under the leadership of the Rector of St. Ann's Bay, caused serious but temporary disruption to Methodist work. Yet Methodism had already become to some extent self-propagating. An Auxiliary Missionary Society was formed in 1828, and a revival took place among Negro members in 1860.

Jamaican ministers were first trained at York Castle School, sixty miles from Kingston (founded in 1875, but now closed), but in 1912, a plan for joint theological training with Baptists was approved. In 1928 Caenwood Theological Hostel (later College) was opened. This developed in 1955 into a Union Theological Seminary, and in 1967 into a more widely based Union Theological College of the West Indies (its second principal, John Hoad, is a Methodist minister). Ecumenical cooperation suffered a temporary reverse when, in 1908, the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church. In 1925, St. Andrew's High School for Girls, a joint Methodist-Presbyterian institution, was established. The Jamaica Christian Council was formed in 1941. From its beginning in 1960, Methodists have played an important part in "Operation Friendship," an ecumenical project of social work in West Kingston, partly among members of the Rastafarian sect. Union conversations between Anglicans and Methodists began in 1962, and were confirmed at a Caribbean level from 1965, on the basis of the British scheme.

Work by and among women has been an essential part of Jamaican Methodism from the beginning. A Women's League was started in 1926, and a Girls' League in 1928. In the same year, the first two deaconesses, both from England, were stationed on the island. The first West Indian deaconess candidate, Sister Elsie Bemand, was accepted in 1937. Deaconesses began the training of voluntary workers in 1939, and in 1958 Ilkey House, a new deaconess hostel, was opened at the Union Theological Seminary.

Systematic training of local preachers was begun in 1927, when the first of a series of summer schools was held. In 1941, a correspondence course for local preachers was started.

From 1885 to 1904 the district formed part of an autonomous West Indian Conference, but thereafter the West Indian districts returned to the care of the British Conference. In 1956 the district elected as its chairman HUGH B. SHERLOCK, who in 1967 became the first president of the CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST CHURCH IN THE CARIBBEAN AND THE AMERICAS.

In 1968 the district comprised 192 places of worship; it had 20,157 members and a constituency of 50,722. It was responsible for forty-two primary schools with 14,380 pupils, and four secondary schools with 3,480 students.

The A.M.E. CHURCH (USA) has four places of worship, and a constituency of 520. The Independent Wesleyan Methodist Church has twenty-three places of worship, and a constituency of 1,600.

JAMES, DAVID TRIGG (1899-), American minister and church official, was born at Rural Retreat, Va., on April 10, 1899. He was the son of James Emory and Mary Emma (Vaught) James. He was educated at EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE, which is not far from his birthplace. From that institution he received the B.A. degree in 1921, the D.D. in 1944; the B.D. from EMORY UNIVERSITY in 1925, and its D.D. in 1964. On Jan. 25, 1927, he married Mary Etta Troy, and their children are David Trigg, Jr., Mary Louise (Mrs. Winston Gray Sewell), and Kathryn Ann (Mrs. David Ewing McKinney).

Dr. James joined the HOLSTON CONFERENCE (MES) in 1925 and went into full connection and was ordained a DEACON in 1927 and ELDER in 1929. He served as pastor of West Graham, Va., 1925-28; Gary, W. Va., 1928-33; Lincoln Park Church, KNOXVILLE, Tenn., 1933-35;

First Church, Pulaski, Va., 1941-45; Kingsport, Tenn., 1945-50—all of these appointments being in the Holston Conference which overlaps TENNESSEE and VIRGINIA (and WEST VIRGINIA in the MES until 1939).

He was executive secretary of the Holston Conference Board of Education from 1934 to 1940; the Inter-board Council with headquarters at Johnson City, Tenn., 1952-57; and in 1958 was elected executive secretary of the Southeastern Jurisdictional Council of The Methodist Church, with its headquarters in ATLANTA, Ga. Previous to that time, Dr. James had also served as district superintendent of the Sweetwater, Tenn., district, 1950-52; was the secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Holston Conference, 1942-50; president of the Board of Education of that Conference, 1944-50; and a trustee of the Holston Conference Colleges, 1941-60. He was a member of the COORDINATING COUNCIL of The Methodist Church, 1956, and again in the quadrennium of 1960; was on the Commission on Interjurisdictional Relations for three quadrennia, and secretary for two; was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church, 1952, 1956, 1960, 1964 and 1966, and prime mover in all the organizational work of the Southeastern Jurisdiction. He was largely instrumental in establishing the One Percent Plan for Funds for Ministerial Education. He resides in Atlanta, Ga., and at Lake Junaluska, N. C. during the summer, where he directs Jurisdictional Council programs.

JAMESTOWN CAMP MEETING, THE (North Dakota, U.S.A.), had its beginning about 1901. It was organized by Samuel A. Danford, then superintendent of the Bismarck district of the M. E. Church. Although the CAMP MEETING has been interdenominational in emphasis since 1920, ministerial leadership has come mainly from the Methodist Church. Its creedal belief comes directly from the Methodist Discipline:

The only infallible proof of a true church of Christ is its ability to seek and to save the lost, and to disseminate the Pentecostal spirit and life, to spread scriptural holiness and to transform all peoples and nations through the gospel of Christ.

A week of camp meetings are still held during the summer, under the leadership of a Jamestown Camp Association. This is supported by the evangelically-minded laity and ministers of The United Methodist Church of NORTH DAKOTA.

JAMESTOWN FEMALE COLLEGE (1859-1861) was a seminary for young ladies located in Jamestown, N. C., U.S.A.

Members of the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. CHURCH agreed in 1848 that "a literary institution is very much needed by this Conference to afford to parents in this and other districts a place to educate their children." In 1855 the conference appointed a committee to investigate "the practicability of establishing a female school at High Point." In the following year, however, G. C. Mendenhall and other citizens from Jamestown addressed the conference regarding the establishment of a "Female Seminary" in that place. A petition for the creation of such an institution was read, a tract of land offered for the site, and pledges amounting to $2,000 promised. The proposal was accepted and nine trustees were appointed including Calvin H. Wiley, who, in 1852, had become the first Superintendent of Common Schools in NORTH CAROLINA. Wiley recommended that the conference be exempt from all pecuniary liability in connection with the college and the trustees were thereby empowered to build an institution with such means as they could raise. The name "Logan Female Seminary" was first mentioned but at the Annual Conference of 1857 the name was changed to "Jamestown Female College." At this time it was reported that a charter had been granted by the state legislature, a building 84' x 50', four stories high, was in the course of being erected, and that the total cost would amount to approximately $16,000. In 1858, interest in the College prompted the Annual Conference to meet in Jamestown, despite the fact that there was no M. P. Church there. At this session pledges from leading ministers and laymen ranging from fifty cents to $400 were made.

Jamestown Female College was in operation from 1859 until a disastrous fire brought an abrupt end to its work in 1861. Due to the severe financial crisis of the Civil War period and the post-war era the College was never rebuilt. Since the conference was not legally responsible for the indebtedness of the College, a tremendous burden was placed on the trustees. W. D. Trotter was chairman of the Board of Trustees in 1868.

A marker made of bricks from the old Jamestown Female College was erected by the Nikanthian and Thalean Literary Societies on the grounds of the present HIGH POINT COLLEGE following the establishment of that institution by the Annual Conference in the mid-1920's.

JAMISON, JAMES M. (1813-1893), American circuit rider, born in the U.S.A. about 1813, was admitted to the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, in 1832. He was assigned to Missouri Circuit (1832), Salt River Circuit (1833), and Palmyra Circuit, which he claimed he extended, in December 1833, "to the Des Moines and up that river about fifty miles from its mouth," becoming in 1834, perhaps, southern Iowa's pioneer Methodist preacher. During the summer of 1834 he was in BURLINGTON, preaching in William R. Ross's North Hill cabin.

Jamison was probably traveling about the Canton Circuit in 1834, as Stalder claims, with instructions to take the southern part of the Black Hawk Purchase into a charge "four hundred miles around, to be traveled every four weeks." The Burlington Circuit, embracing his Iowa appointments, was separated from Jamison's appointment in 1835. After serving Danville, 1835-36, and Palmyra, 1836-37, he presided over Cape Girardeau District, 1837; St. Louis District, 1838-40; and, Lexington District, 1841-43.

Jamison traveled Lexington Circuit (1844) and then, refusing to follow his Conference into the M. E. Church, South (1845), joined the OHIO CONFERENCE. Subsequently, he went as a missionary to the far west and became a presiding elder in the ROCKY MOUNTAIN CON-FERENCE in 1872 in charge of three IDAHO circuits. He organized what he thought to be the first Methodist church in Idaho in Boise City, Nov. 17, 1872. Barclay's History of Methodist Missions holds that Jamison did not know that two other preachers had preceded him, but does give him credit for much pioneer work. He died in January, 1893, in Los Angeles, Calif.

JAMISON, MONROE F. (1848-1918), ninth bishop of the C.M.E. CHURCH, was born on Nov. 27, 1848, near Rome, Ga. He joined the M. E. Church, South in 1867 and became a member of the C.M.E. Church when it was formed in 1870. Bishop Jamison was licensed to preach in 1871 and joined the East Texas Conference in 1874, where he spent his pastoral career. In 1890, he was elected Extension Secretary at which post he served until 1893, when he was elected editor of The Christian Index. He was elected to the office of bishop in 1910 at the General Conference and served eight years until his death on May 16, 1918.

JANES, EDMUND STORER (1807-1876), American bishop, was born at Sheffield, Mass., on April 27, 1807. He taught school for several years and at the same time studied law. He joined the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1830 and studied medicine in connection with his theological studies. His first appointment was at Elizabethtown and then he was sent to Orange, N. J. In 1834 he was agent for DICKINSON COLLEGE and in 1836 was appointed to Fifth Street Church in PHILADELPHIA; and in 1837 he served Nazareth Church in the same city.

In 1839 he went to NEW YORK to serve the Mulberry Street Church, and the next year he became financial secretary of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, where he remained for four years. In 1844 he was elected bishop, being the last elected by the undivided Church. He was elected largely by southern votes and presented for ordination by WILLIAM CAPERS of SOUTH CAROLINA and LOVICK PIERCE of GEORGIA. Bishop TIGERT called Janes, "a last precious gift of the Southern to the Northern wing of Episcopal Methodism."

Janes' episcopal duties took him into all the states except FLORIDA. In 1864 he was fraternal delegate to the British Conference and during his travels he held the conferences in GERMANY and SWITZERLAND, attended the conferences in FRANCE and IRELAND, and represented the American Bible Society.

Bishop Janes was awarded the honorary degrees of D.D. and LL.D. He was president of the Missionary Society, SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION, and Tract Society, one of the managers of the American Bible Society, director of the American Colonization Society, and trustee of WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. He published several sermons and addresses in pamphlet form.

Bishop Janes died in New York on Sept. 18, 1876, about a month after the death of his wife, and was buried in Brooklyn.

JANESVILLE, WISCONSIN, U.S.A. Cargill Memorial Church was begun in 1837, when the first religious service was held in Janesville by an itinerant Methodist preacher. Jesse Halstead, an Aztalan circuit rider, preached in a tavern in September 1837 to about a dozen people. In the summer of 1838 another Methodist preacher preached at an oak grove, and in 1839 James Flanders preached in the tavern and schoolhouse.

In 1840 James McKean was appointed to Troy Center Circuit, preaching at Janesville once a month. He organized a class in 1841, and that year Janesville became the head of a circuit with Alpha Warren as pastor. In 1843 Boyd Phelps formed the first permanent class with nine members. John Wynn was its first leader. Lyman Catlin, the first resident pastor, came in 1844.

A small frame church was built and a parsonage purchased in 1848 as the result of a revival under Wesley Lattin. The congregation grew so rapidly that an old academy building had to be used. A new church was started in 1853, and was called First Church. By 1856 the membership was 204. In 1857-58, W. C. Miller conducted a four-month revival and received 200 members.

W. D. Cargill, active member of First Church, led in building Court Street Church in 1867. In 1904 Court Street and First Church united, selling both buildings. A new Gothic church was built and named Central. However, the new church became known as Cargill Memorial in recognition of a gift of $10,000 by W. W. Cargill, in memory of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Cargill. Bishop FOWLER laid the cornerstone on Sept. 5, 1905, and it was dedicated on March 4, 1906, when the membership was 620.

In 1957 a nine-acre site was purchased, and Bishop CLIFFORD NORTHCOTT laid the cornerstone in November 1959. This church has a modified Colonial style of architecture, and was consecrated by Bishop RALPH ALTON on Jan. 8, 1961. Cargill Memorial Church had property valued at $1,000,000 and a membership of 2,224 in 1970.

Cedar Crest, Inc. is a retirement home owned and operated by the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE of the United Methodist Church. Located on twenty-six acres of land, it offers a retirement home to 120 aging men and women. Construction was completed in 1963 at a total cost of $1,350,000, which included land, furnishings, and construction. Skilled nursing care is not available currently to the residents; however, an independent nursing home is presently planned. It is operated under a corporation of fifteen directors elected by the Wisconsin Conference. It makes no discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin.

JANVIER, JOEL THOMAS (1830-1900), was the first INDIAN colleague of WILLIAM BUTLER in Methodist missions in INDIA. He was born of Rajput parents at Banda, Bundelkhand, Central India, about 1830. When he was some eight years of age, he arrived at Allahabad alone, and was adopted by the American Presbyterian Mission. He was named for a pioneer missionary who had been murdered by a Muslim fanatic. His education in the mission school included Christian training and instruction in English with "something of Greek and Hebrew."

After the initial visit of the Butlers to BAREILLY (in which they arranged to rent a house), they went to Benares to pick up their children, left there as they came up from CALCUTTA. On their return to Bareilly they stopped in Allahabad to get acquainted with the American Presbyterian missionaries there. Butler explained his need for a trustworthy Indian associate. The Presbyterians suggested Joel Janvier. He and his newly wedded wife happily agreed, and accompanied the Butlers to Bareilly. Butler later wrote, "He was just the person I needed." When the military uprising against the rule of the East India Company struck Bareilly, Joel Janvier was in charge of the mission. The Butlers had been persuaded to flee to the mountains earlier. Janvier had just preached when the Sepoys attacked. Some members of his congregation were killed, but he and his wife escaped and found their way through constant peril to Allahabad.

When order was restored, and the British government took over from the company, a fresh start was made at Bareilly, and Janvier was very active in formulating and guiding the program. Working initially under a local preacher's license, he was at the first opportunity admitted to annual conference membership, and later was fully ordained. In his old age he lost his eyesight, but to the end of his life gave a good witness to his faith.

His descendants have been prominent in the church in India. A grandson, Nolan K. Mukerjee, a noted lay preacher and a delegate to two GENERAL CONFERENCES, was principal of two teacher-training colleges. A son, after seminary training in the United States and brief experience in the ministry in America, studied medicine and practiced in CALIFORNIA. A grandson is a prominent physician in OHIO. Janvier died on Sept. 7, 1900, in Allahabad, India, where he had been converted.

JAPAN. For two centuries Japan had cut herself off from the West, and the Christian religion had been forbidden absolutely. Then in 1854 her doors were forced open by the United States fleet under Commodore Matthew C. Perry. Five years later the first missionaries were allowed to land, though it was some years before they were given any freedom to teach their religion. Indeed by 1871 only about fifteen Japanese converts had been baptized.

M. E. Church. Methodism came to Japan in its various branches. The M. E. Church began its Japan Mission in 1873 with five missionary couples. Besides those stationed centrally in Tokyo and Yokohama, one couple was sent to Hakodate in the northern island of Hokkaido and another to Nagasaki in the southern island of Kyushu. The Woman's Board sent its first missionary in 1874. The work developed in two areas—from Tokyo-Yokohama to the north across to Hokkaido, and from Nagasaki over a large part of the island of Kyushu. In 1878 the first Japanese minister was ordained, YOTSU HONDA. In 1884 the first annual conference was formed with thirteen missionary members and nineteen Japanese preachers. In 1898 the field was divided into two annual conferences. These continued until 1907, when the Japan Methodist Church was formed.

Canadian Methodists came next. They worked from Tokyo across the main island to the shores of the Japan Sea and later had missionaries stationed in Nagoya. Their churches were organized as a conference of the Canadian Methodist Church until 1907, when all were included in the newly formed Japan Methodist Church. (See JAPAN MISSION OF THE CANADIAN METHODIST CHURCH.)

The Methodist Protestants' first missionary, Miss Harriet G. Brittain, arrived in Yokohama in 1880. Yokohama and Nagoya became the chief centers of M. P. work, carried on somewhat independently by the Board of Foreign Missions and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society until they were united in 1924. The first M. P. Church in Japan, their first outside the United States, was organized in Yokohama in 1887. In 1892 the annual conference was formed. This conference continued to function until it entered the United Church of Christ in Japan in 1941. At that time there were about fourteen pastors serving some twenty-seven churches.

The M. E. Church, South had voted to open work in Japan even before the American Civil War, but that war made it impossible, and it was not until 1886 that three couples were transferred from the China Mission. They established their headquarters in Kobe, and soon opened work in Hiroshima and developed a series of stations around the Inland Sea in the main island of Honshu and also in Shikoku and Kyushu. Even the women's work was carried by the General Board until 1915, when the Women's Department sent its first missionaries to Japan. The churches were organized into an annual conference in 1892. This conference was absorbed into the Japan Methodist Church when it was organized in 1907.

The Free Methodist Church in 1899 sent a student, Paul Kakiyama, as a missionary to Japan. He attempted to support himself, fell in debt and resigned. However, he discovered the converted business man turned missionary, TEIKICHI KAWABE, persuaded him to join the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, and to become superintendent. Aided financially first by Methodist missionary W. E. Towson, then by selling his own books and furniture, Kawabe refused to join another mission and labored alone until 1903, when the first American helpers arrived. He founded the First Church (Nippon Bashi), Osaka, and was its pastor for many years when it was the denomination's largest congregation. Bible classes, started at Osaka First Church, developed into a Bible school, now Osaka Christian College.

Organized as a conference of the Free Methodist Church in 1923, Japan became a general conference under the World Fellowship in 1964. Most of the churches are located in the Osaka and Tokyo areas. A hospital for crippled children is maintained at Taira. The Japan Church has sent missionaries to mainland CHINA, to the Pacific Coast, to BRAZIL and PARAGUAY. They have also made gifts of equipment to the conferences of the Asia area. In 1969 there were 4,029 members.

Institutions. Numerous institutions were founded by the various branches of Methodism through the years. The following partial listing of these, with brief descriptions, will be of interest. Some will also be found under their own names in this work.

M. E. Church: Aoyama Gakuin University, Tokyo, founded in 1874, is a coeducational institution, including a department for ministerial training. It is the largest Methodist-related institution in Japan, with more than 12,000 students. Ai Kei Gakuen, Tokyo, founded in 1883, is a very effective social service institution, located in the slums of Tokyo, and long associated with the name of Miss Mildred Paine. Chinzei Gakuin, Isahaya City, Nagasaki Prefecture, founded in 1881, was a boys' high school located in Nagasaki City until destroyed by the atom bomb. It was rebuilt in Isahaya and made coeducational. Fukuoka Jo Gakuin, Fukuoka, founded in 1885, is a school for girls. Iai Jo Gakko, Hakodate, Hokkaido, founded in 1882, a girls' high school. Kwassai Junior College, Nagasaki, founded in 1879, for girls. Seiai Jo Gakuin, Hirosaki, founded in 1886, girls' school. To O Gijuku, Hirosaki, an old "clan" school, turned over to the M. E. Church in 1892, a coeducational high school. Wesley Foundation Student Center, Tokyo, founded about 1934 by T. T. Brumbaugh, continues its work among university students under the United Church.

M. P. Church: Nagoya Gakuin, Nagoya, founded in 1887, was a boys' high school, and admitted the freshman class of a four-year coeducational college in 1964. Seibi Gakuen, Yokohama, founded in 1880, girls' high school with coeducational primary school and kindergarten.

M. E. Church, South: Hiroshima Christian Social Center, Hiroshima, begun in the 1920's, destroyed by the bomb, reopened in 1957, is a social center serving people of the former outcast group. Hiroshima Jo Gakuin, Hiroshima, founded in 1886 and taken under the care of the mission in 1887, is a girls' school with a coeducational kindergarten. Keimei Jo Gakuin, Kobe,

OLD CLOCK TOWER AND LIBRARY
KWANSEI GAKUIN UNIVERSITY, NISHINOMIYA, JAPAN

founded in 1924, girls' high school. Kwansai Gakuin University, Nishinomiya, Hyogo Prefecture, founded in 1889, a boys' high school and coeducational college and graduate school, including a theological department. Since 1910 the Canadian Methodist Church, now the United Church of Canada, has cooperated in this school. Palmore Institute, Kobe, founded in 1886, a coeducational afternoon and evening English school with departments of typewriting and shorthand. Seiwa Social Center, Osaka, begun in the 1920's in connection with the Lambuth Training School in a poor section of Osaka, Tsurubashi, is a well-equipped settlement directed by the Seiwa Training School. Seiwa Training School for Christian Workers, Nishinomiya, Hyogo Prefecture, founded in 1940 as a union of two older schools—Lambuth Training School (Methodist) and Kobe Biblical Training School (Congregational).

Free Methodist Church: Osaka Christian College, Osaka, a coeducational college and theological seminary.

Canadian Church: Airindan, Tokyo, founded in 1920, a social service institution. Kwansei Gakuin University, in cooperation with the M. E. Church, South. Kyōai Kan, Tokyo, founded in 1920, a social service institution. Shizuoka Eiwa, Shizuoka, founded in 1887, girls' school. Toyo Eiwa, Tokyo, founded in 1884, junior college and high school for girls. Yamanashi Eiwa, Kofu, Yamanashi Prefecture, founded in 1889, girls' high school.

Yuai Kan in Nagasaki is a social service institution started by The Methodist Church (U.S.A.) after the Second World War in the part of the city that was destroyed by the atomic bomb. It is closely connected with earlier social work and kindergartens founded by the M. E. Mission.

Union institutions in which The Methodist Church had a share included: International Christian University, Mitaka, Tokyo, founded in 1953, a coeducational institution with graduate and college departments. Kyō Bun Kan (Christian Literature Society), Tokyo, is the leading Christian book store and publishing house. It is located on the site formerly occupied by the M. E. Publishing House, which was donated to the union institution. Tokyo Union Theological Seminary, Mitaka, Tokyo. Responsibility for this seminary was assumed by the United Church of Christ in Japan when the church was organized in 1941. The Methodist Church has shared in its support since the end of the war. Tokyo Women's Christian College, Tokyo, founded in 1918, is a four-year college for girls. Tsurukawa Gakuin, Machida, Tokyo, founded in 1948, is a coeducational college grade training school for rural pastors and other church workers. Yokosuka Social Center, Yokosuka, founded in 1946 soon after the end of the war, is a social service institution located in the former Japanese Naval Officers Club building.

Japan Methodist Church and The United Church of Christ in Japan. The year 1907 is of great significance in the history of Methodist missions, not only in Japan but throughout the world. In that year was organized the Japan Methodist Church, the first of the national Methodist Churches to be established as the fruit of modern missions. Twenty-three years passed before this example was followed in KOREA, BRAZIL, and MEXICO. During these years the "experiment" in Japan had amply justified itself. At the time of organization there were about 100 preachers and 12,000 members. One is reminded that when JOHN WESLEY granted independence to the Methodists in America there were eighty-four itinerants and 15,000 members.

The creation of the Japan Methodist Church was long awaited and planned for. At first it was hoped that all Methodist bodies might be united, and a series of consultations was held. However, when the three largest bodies—the conferences of the M. E. Church, the Canadian Methodist Church, and the M. E. Church, South—agreed to a proposed basis of union in 1902, it was decided to wait no longer. The three mother churches gave their approval and sent official representatives to Japan. They met with delegates from the annual conferences at Aoyama Gakuin, Tokyo, May 22, 1907. The basis of union and the new discipline were accepted, and Yoitsu Honda was elected the first bishop of the Japan Methodist Church. Bishop Honda had been one of the outstanding leaders of the Christian movement in Japan since its very early days. He was the first Japanese minister ordained in the M. E. Church.

The episcopal term was but one quadrennium, with no limitation as to re-election. The policy was to have but one bishop for the whole church, with its two annual conferences. Bishop Honda served until his death in 1912. He was succeeded by Bishop YOSHIYASU HIRATWA, a product of the missionary work of the Canadian Church. It was in those days that the church instituted a strong movement in response to the Centenary Movement across the sea, which proved to be a great revival of faith and of consecrated giving.

At the General Conference of 1919 KOGORO UZAKI, one of the earliest fruits of the Southern Methodist work, was elected bishop. He served until his death in 1930. His successor was Bishop MOTOZO AKAZAWA, who died in office in 1936, and was succeeded by Bishop TOKIO KUGIMIYA.

The last bishop of the Japan Methodist Church was YOSHIMUNI ABE, a nephew of Bishop Honda. The Church had become one of the strongest Protestant bodies in Japan with a membership of about 40,000 and more than 300 ministers.

The Methodists were active in plans for the creation of the United Church, and Bishop Abe was chairman of the great gathering in November 1941, which officially created the United Church of Christ in Japan. During the war almost all Japanese Protestants were included in the United Church. When the war ended and all pressure was removed, some groups—Episcopalians, Lutherans, Southern Baptists, Free Methodists, etc.—withdrew and reorganized their denominations, but churches and pastors of the former Japan Methodist Church have remained completely loyal to the United Church of Christ in Japan. This remains by far the largest and strongest Protestant church in the land.

The United Church does not have a bishop. A moderator is elected every two years, and may be re-elected. Since the war there have been four moderators. Two of them, TAKESHI MUTO and ISAMU OMURA, have come from among the ministers of the former Japan Methodist Church.

E.U.B. Church. The General Conference of The Evangelical Church in October 1875 voted to begin a work in Japan, and that year the first three missionaries were sent to that field: Miss Rachel Hudson, an instructor at the State Normal School in Pennsylvania; Carl Halmhuber, from Germany; and FREDERICK C. KRECKER, M.D., from Lebanon, Pa. Their work was a predominantly urban enterprise centering in Tokyo.

A few years later in 1898 the Church of the United Brethren in Christ sent its first missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. A. T. HOWARD, to Japan to work in the areas of evangelism and education around Tokyo and Kyoto. The Japan Conference was organized in 1902 and became notable for its well trained and capable ministers. Full responsibility for the administration of all the work of the Conference was transferred by the Board of Missions to Japanese leadership in 1931.

In 1941 The Evangelical Church and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ joined with the other major branches of Protestantism in Japan to form the Kyodan, the Church of Christ in Japan. The Kyodan, with a membership of around 150,000, carries on a program of educational work through Christian schools, colleges and kindergartens, the Deaf-Oral School, and the newly established Japan International Christian University. Orphanages, day nurseries and widows' homes provide a Christian atmosphere for those whose lives have been changed as the result of war.

The E.U.B. Church in 1968 supported eighteen missionaries who served under the direction of the Kyodan in Japan.

JAPAN MISSION OF THE CANADIAN METHODIST CHURCH. On May 7, 1873, a valedictory service was held at Metropolitan Church, Toronto, for George Cochran of that church and Davidson Macdonald of the Davenport and Seaton Charge. It was a momentous occasion, as these two men and their wives were the first foreign missionaries sent out by the Methodist Church of Canada (Wesleyan).

The field was JAPAN. Cochran remained in Yokohama until he was invited to take up residence and to teach at a boys' school in Tokyo, or Yedo as it was then called. Nakamura, the principal of this school, and his son were baptized on Christmas day, 1874, and were the first members of the Methodist Church in Tokyo. Meanwhile, taking advantage of a similar invitation, Macdonald had gone to live in Shizuoka. By 1876, the church at Shizuoka had 125 members.

In 1876, the Canadian Methodist Church sent out C. S. Eby and G. M. Meacham, the latter to fill an opening in a school in Numazu. In addition to their wives, the party included Miss Moulton, Mrs. Meacham's sister. A year or two later, Eby moved with his family to Kofu. Saunby writes that the Canadian Methodist missionaries were the first to move out from the treaty ports.

The work that the women in this group did with the women in their neighborhoods pointed to the opportunities for women workers. In 1882 the Woman's Missionary Society of the Canadian Methodist Church sent out Miss Cartmell as "avant courier," to quote from the letter of General Secretary Sutherland of the Missionary Society.

In the period between 1873 and 1925, a total of forty-four couples and seventy-five single women served in Japan. The average term of service was for couples, twelve years; for single women, eleven years.

Evangelical Work. While Cochran and Macdonald immediately seized the opportunity of teaching in Japanese schools, their prime concern was evangelism. The first method used was the English Bible class to which students of the school were quickly attracted. As some proficiency in the language was achieved, it became possible also to hold Bible classes in Japanese. In addition there were, especially as groups of converts were formed, regular services of worship. In 1876, Macdonald reported from Shizuoka an attendance of 380, with 40 more standing outside.

In 1883, under Eby, attempts were made to reach a larger audience by lecture meetings, which proved quite successful. In the 1890's, in spite of misgivings on the part of the Japanese brethren, lest undesirable types be attracted, the missionaries began to hold general meetings using the stereopticon. These also proved a good drawing card.

After the revision of the treaties which opened Japan to the West, from 1897-1900, the number of converts rose sharply. Among those who came into the church in the earlier period were future leaders of the Christian movement in Japan: HIRAIWA, later to be a bishop of the Japan Methodist Church, and Ebara, educator and later member of Parliament. The membership in the Japan District and later the Japan Conference of the Canadian Methodist Church grew from 591 in 1886, to 2,895 in 1903.

Organization. In 1876, the Japan Mission was organized as a district of the Canadian Methodist Church. At this meeting three men, including Hiraiva, were recommended as probationers. As Japanese men were ordained to the ministry they sat in the district meeting with the same rights and privileges as their Canadian brethren. Lay persons were also elected to this meeting. This continued to be the case when the spread of the work made it essential that the Japan mission be organized as a Conference of the Canadian Church. ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND, visiting Japan in 1889, presided at the inauguration of the Conference.

In retrospect, the establishment of a mission council in 1886 by the General Conference of the Canadian Methodist Church, at the request of the missionaries, seems unfortunate. While the missionaries had in the district meeting, as they were to have later in the Japan Conference, the same rights and privileges as the Japanese ministers, the mission council acted in all matters pertaining to the use of Canadian money and the stationing of the foreign missionaries, thus making the missionary body a separate entity.

Concurrently with the development of the Canadian Mission in Japan, the American Methodists established missions there. In 1907, with the blessing of the three churches, the Japanese groups came together in the Japan Methodist Church. This brought full autonomy to that body, but the three mission groups continued to function as separate entities, only refraining from entering each other's territory.

Medical and Social Work. With the exception of Davidson Macdonald, the Canadian Methodist Mission never had any doctors on its staff, though it may be said to have contributed something indirectly through the medical services of its social work agencies. Before 1925 there was very little medical work in Japan. The Episcopal Church of the United States and the Canadian Anglicans were the exceptions.

The representatives of the Woman's Missionary Society early moved into the area of social work, operating schools for poor children and small orphanages as offshoots of their girls' schools, which served the middle and upper classes. At Kanazawa, they also ran an industrial school, teaching domestic science for a time. By 1925 there were three social-work agencies in Tokyo connected with the Canadian Methodist Mission—Negishi, Nippori, and The Aiseikwan. In Kanazawa an orphanage was established in answer to the need for the care of Russo-Japanese war orphans. There was also a fairly large orphanage in Shizuoka.

Education Work. In 1878, a four-year course of study was laid out for probationers, and as far as possible the missionaries advised and guided them in their studies. Because a more formal system was deemed necessary, in 1883 the Theological Institute was established, and with it a purely academic section known as the Boys' School. A small girls' school was also established in 1884. These were all at Azabu, Tokyo. The Boys' School was closed in 1901 for lack of students, though the dormitory continued for some years. From 1920, candidates for the ministry were sent to Aoyama Gakuin. The girls' school, the Toyo Eiwa Jo Gakko, however, continued.

In 1887 and 1889 respectively, the girls' schools in Shizuoka and Kofu were established. Beginning with a handful of girls, these institutions soon gained a high reputation, and numbers grew steadily. Japanese ministers today note that in the areas served by the Shizuoka and Kofu schools, the churches are stronger than in those districts where no Christian schools exist.

In 1889, Kwansai Gakuin was established by the Southern Methodist Mission, and the Canadian Mission in 1910 joined in this institution as an equal partner. In it there were high-school and college departments.

One service performed by the Canadian Methodist Mission in Japan was the establishment of the Canadian Academy in Kobe, in 1913. Originally this was a high school with a high proportion of boarding students—children of missionaries in isolated places. It soon became a school running from kindergarten to Grade 13 (Ontario) and served, as well as the missionary community, the multiracial business and diplomatic community of the Kwansai area.

In 1925 the Canadian Methodist Mission became the United Church of Canada Mission, which continued until 1941. In 1946 G. E. Bott returned to Japan as one of the Commission of Six who went to see if missionaries would be welcomed back. Work was resumed in that year as part of the Interboard Committee for Christian work in Japan, in cooperation with the United Church of Japan, of which the Japan Methodist Church became a part in 1940.

JAPANESE MISSIONS in the Western United States. In 1870 KANICHI MIYAMA, a young immigrant from JAPAN, was baptized at the Chinese Methodist Mission in SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. Miyama, the first Japanese Christian convert in the United States, became a few years later the first Japanese Methodist minister, who blazed the road for Methodism among the Japanese people on the mainland and in HAWAII. Japanese population in the U. S. mainland in 1890 was 2,039. A Japanese District of the California Annual Conference of the M. E. Church was formed in 1893, with M. C. HARRIS as presiding elder.

In 1900 a PACIFIC JAPANESE MISSION was organized, with M. C. Harris as superintendent. Anti-Japanese agitation was strong in California, 1902-07. In 1904 Japanese population in the mainland was 34,326. H. B. JOHNSON became superintendent in 1904. The Hawaii Mission was separated from the Pacific Japanese Mission in 1905. In 1906 fifteen Japanese missions were found scattered in the Pacific coast states and in COLORADO. The Japanese Immigration Exclusion Law was passed by the U. S. government in 1924.

In 1926 F. H. Smith became superintendent. Programs of church extension throughout the western states and emphases on Christian education of the rising young generation and promotion of Japanese-American goodwill in communities were untiringly carried under Smith.

The Pacific Japanese Provisional Annual Conference was born in 1940. At the outbreak of the Second World War, 112,000 citizens of the Japanese ancestry and their alien parents and other relatives were completely uprooted from their communities, located within 300 miles inland from the Pacific Coast lines, and they were evacuated into Relocation Camps in desert areas of the western states. For the duration of the war many Japanese churches were used for storing the belongings of church members. Other buildings were used for worship programs of certain religious organizations.

John B. Cobb and C. A. Richardson superintended the conference work for returnees from the war-time camps, 1945-48. In 1949 Taro Goto, a member of the Japanese Conference, was appointed to the superintendency of its work. The outstanding moves of the post-war period proved to be: (1) changing the local church leadership from the Japanese-speaking to the English-speaking generation; (2) an enlarged and active church construction project among more than thirty churches; (3) preparations to be made for the merging of this annual conference with the overlapping conferences of The Methodist Church on the West Coast. This was to be completed by 1964, as indeed it was. The Japanese population itself in the United States was reported in 1960 as being 473,170.

On May 23, 1964, Bishop DONALD TIPPETT, of the San Francisco Area, declared, at Pine Methodist Church in San Francisco, that the Pacific Japanese Provisional Annual Conference was dissolved and announced the transfers of ministers to the several annual conferences (two to ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE; five to PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE; one to OREGON CONFERENCE; one to IDAHO CONFERENCE; fifteen to CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE; and six to SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE).

The final statistical report of Pacific Japanese Conference, 1964, included 31 charges, 41 ministers, 6,558 members, 5,514 church school members, and property valued at $3,824,836.

On the eve of dissolution of the Pacific Japanese Provisional Annual Conference, an unofficial, fraternal organization, called the Pacific Methodist Fellowship, was formed to manage the balance of conference funds and to help on connectional programs of the Japanese-speaking groups after conference merger. Taro Goto, former superintendent, was elected to serve as chairman for this Pacific Methodist Fellowship.

JARRATT, DEVEREUX (1733-1801), an Anglican clergyman of tidewater VIRGINIA in Colonial days and a warm friend of the Methodists. The great revival in Southside Virginia (1774-1778) developed principally under the ministry of GEORGE SHADFORD. But the spiritual groundwork for this revival had been laid in the evangelical ministry of Devereux Jarratt, an Anglican clergyman, who came to the Bath Parish in Dinwiddie County in 1762, at the age of thirty, and spent the balance of his life there.

Jarratt, a Virginian, born in New Kent County, received his experience of vital religion amidst the Presbyterians, but later sought ordination as a clergyman in the English Established Church. He began his ministry imbued with evangelical truths and led a great evangelistic movement in Dinwiddie before the Methodists arrived, and when they did, merged his efforts with those of the Methodists.

His first contact with the Methodists was with ROBERT WILLIAMS, in 1773, who assured Jarratt of the loyalty of the Methodists to the established church. During the next ten years, Jarratt gave hearty and effective support to the Methodist preachers. As an ordained clergyman, he administered the Sacraments through the whole revival area, at a time when Methodist preachers were not qualified to do so. The founding of the M. E. Church in 1784 was a keen disappointment to Jarratt and he felt this to be a breach of good faith. For a period, some bitterness existed between Jarratt and the Methodists, but kind feelings were restored years before his death in 1801.

FRANCIS ASBURY wrote in his Journal under date of April 19, 1801, "There had been put forth a printed appointment for me to preach the funeral sermon of the late Rev. Devereux Jarrett, who had lately returned to his rest. My subject was Matt. xxv, 21: 'His Lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant . . .'" Asbury further commented that he (Jarratt) was a faithful and successful preacher, and that "when he began his labours, there was no other, that he knew of, evangelical minister in all the province. . . . He was the first who received our despised preachers—when strangers and unfriended, he took them to his house, and had societies formed in his parish."

WILLIAM WARREN SWEET (in Men of Zeal—Abingdon 1935) summed up Methodism's debt to Jarratt: ". . . may we not forget that the Church of England . . . was our nursing mother, and that Devereux Jarratt and others of his kind made large contributions which we perhaps have been too reluctant to recognize."

JARVIS, ANNA M. (1864-1948), founder of "Mother's Day," was born at Webster, W. Va., on May 1, 1864. She was one of eleven children of whom only four lived to maturity. Anna's mother, the one she especially honored on Mother's Day, was Mrs. Anna Reeves Jarvis, the daughter of a Methodist minister.

Anna M. Jarvis received her early education in GRAFTON, W. Va.; in 1881 she went to Augusta Female Seminary at Staunton, Va. (now Mary Baldwin College). After completing her studies she returned to Grafton where she taught school for seven years. Her widowed mother, her blind sister, Elsinore, and Anna moved to PHILADELPHIA in 1903. Anna took a job as assistant in the advertising department of an insurance company. On May 9, 1905 her mother died.

In 1907, Miss Jarvis invited several of her friends to her home in Philadelphia to spend the second Sunday in May to commemorate the anniversary of her mother's death. On this day she announced her plans for a national observance of Mother's Day. She talked with John Wanamaker, Philadelphia merchant, about her plan, and was greatly encouraged to start the movement.

She wrote to L. L. Loar, superintendent of the Sunday school at Andrews Methodist Church, Grafton, W. Va. where her mother had taught for over twenty years. Loar arranged and carried out the first planned Mother's Day program at the Andrews Church on May 10, 1908. A second service was held the afternoon of the same day in the Wanamaker Store Auditorium in Philadelphia. In 1910, Governor William E. Glasscock of West Virginia issued the first Mother's Day Proclamation. In 1914 President Woodrow Wilson signed a resolution confirming and setting the second Sunday of May to be observed annually as Mother's Day. During Miss Jarvis' lifetime, forty-three other countries adopted Mother's Day.

Miss Jarvis spent most of her time and energy as well as her inheritance promoting Mother's Day. She became disillusioned at what she thought was the over-commercialization of the Day.

The 1952 GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church recognized the Andrews Methodist Church, Grafton, W. Va. as "The Mother Church of Mother's Day." In the urban renewal project planned for Grafton, W. Va. this Church is shown with formal gardens surrounding the International Mother's Day Shrine.

JARVIS, JOHN WESLEY (1781-1839), American portrait painter, was born to John and Ann Jarvis at South Shields, England. His baptism is recorded there at St. Hilda's Church, July 1, 1781. He was named for JOHN WESLEY, the founder of Methodism, who was his great uncle. John Wesley's sister ANNE had married John Lambert, a land surveyor of EPWORTH; and their daughter Anne married a sea captain from NEW YORK, John Jarvis. They were the parents of John Wesley Jarvis. The lad was placed under Mr. Wesley's care when his parents emigrated to America. At age five, he was brought to PHILADELPHIA where his father was employed. The boy was early attracted to the visual arts, coming under the influence of a sign painter and of Matthew Pratt, a portraitist, and one Clark, who made miniatures. Later he was apprenticed to Edward Savage, a print publisher, who in 1800 moved his establishment and employees to New York. Here young Jarvis learned drawing and engraving from a fellow apprentice, David Edwin, and soon went into business with Joseph Wood, another portraitist, as partner, on Park Row. Later Jarvis had his own shop on Broadway.

Henry Inman (1801-46), later to be famed as a portrait and genre painter and a founder of the National Academy of Design, became Jarvis' apprentice and assistant. Working together, they could take six sittings and produce a portrait in a day. Such facility brought fame to both men. Jarvis, reports the Dictionary of American Biography, "was generally considered the foremost portrait painter of his time in New York, and he enjoyed a national reputation." He drew well, had great ability to catch a likeness, but his color sometimes became dull and monotonous. He is remembered for portraits of Henry Clay, John Randolph of Roanoke, DeWitt Clinton, Robert Morris, J. Fenimore Cooper, Thomas Paine, and other notables. In 1968 his portrait of Paine, now in the National Gallery of Art at Washington, was used on a 40-cent postage stamp of the Prominent Americans series.

Jarvis succeeded in his profession, but his personal life lacked stability. He married in 1808, but some years later his wife left him, taking children with her. His circle of friends included such celebrities as Irving, Fulton, Verplanck and Van Wycke, and in his prime he was a picturesque and popular figure, with a reputation for story telling and practical jokes. But as his clients passed away, he became extravagant, reckless, intemperate, and a typical Bohemian. He died in comparative poverty at the home of a sister, Mrs. Childs, in New York, on Jan. 14, 1839.

JEFFERS, WELLINGTON (1814-1896), Canadian minister and writer, was born in Cork, IRELAND, June 22, 1814. As a child he came to Kingston, UPPER CANADA, with his parents. He received his early education in a school conducted in that city by his father.

At some point in his youth he became a Methodist, and in 1837 was received on trial for the ministry. Following his ordination in 1841, he served on a variety of circuits in the Canadas. From 1860 to 1868, he was editor of The Christian Guardian, a charge which he fulfilled with care and combativeness. As editor, he took particular interest in educational issues and in new theological movements.

Apart from his editorial and preaching duties, Jeffers held high places in the church. For some years he was a district chairman; in 1866, he was co-delegate, and in 1879 he was president of the Toronto Conference. In the conference he was an exceptionally keen and able debater, one whose consistency of outlook and mental versatility earned him respect, especially among the younger ministers.

After leaving The Guardian, Jeffers held several pastorates in Ontario. His health failed in 1884, and he became superannuated.

Victoria College conferred the D.D. degree on Jeffers in 1863. He was remembered for his outstanding oratory, his administrative talents, and his singing. In a way he was an old-fashioned "shouting Methodist." Jeffers died on Feb. 10, 1896.

JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI, U.S.A. First Church stands on the banks of the "Mighty Missouri" River, within the shadow of the dome of the State Capitol Building. Some have called it the "Church of the politicians" because of the unique history of its construction and because several governors and numerous state officials and government employees have been and are active members.

History records that when Lon V. Stephens was governor of MISSOURI (1897-1901), while entertaining Bishop W. A. CANDLER in the Governor's Mansion, he promised the bishop that he would build the most beautiful church in Central Missouri. He made two personal donations of $5,000 each, both of which were matched by the congregation. However, $20,000 was not sufficient to build the large and beautiful sanctuary which Governor Stephens envisioned. The Governor then went personally to the leading politicians of the state and secured $5,000 more which the congregation again matched. With this total of $30,000 an imposing edifice of Gothic style was constructed of large gray blocks of native Cole County limestone.

Methodism began in Jefferson City in the spring of 1837. At that time, Peter McLain of IRELAND, William M. Kerr and Jessie Waldron of TENNESSEE, and John D. Curry of VIRGINIA, began holding Methodist prayer meetings in the homes of McLain and Curry. In 1838, the prayer group was organized into a Class in the home of Waldron.

The first public services were held in the old State House where the Governor's Mansion now stands, the old Court House and a school building. The first church building, located at 222 E. Capitol, was begun in 1839 and dedicated in 1843. During the Civil War, the congregation was scattered and Northern troops took possession of the church building. The few members who were left worshipped in the court house and other places.

In 1866, the congregation again worshipped in their church but it was in such poor condition, they were compelled to abandon it in 1872 and meet again in the court house.

In 1874, a new church building was completed at 212-214 E. Capitol Ave. In about 1880 this building was remodeled and was used until the present church, located one block East at Capitol and Monroe, was dedicated in 1901. The present sanctuary was constructed from 1898 to 1901 and remodeled in 1959. The educational wing was added in 1951.

In January 1966, First Church commissioned thirty-eight persons to start another Methodist Church in Jefferson City.

In its 134 years, the church has been served by forty-six pastors and has a present membership of 1,871.

JEFFERSONTOWN, KENTUCKY, U.S.A. The Jeffersontown Church is one of the oldest in the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. Methodist beginnings in Jeffersontown are difficult to trace, but what sketchy records that are available indicate a congregation here as early as 1811. FRANCIS ASBURY records in his Journal, under the date of Oct. 20, 1812, as having preached at Brunertown (the local designation of Jeffersontown, after Abraham Bruner, who laid out the town).

Jeffersontown was one of the original churches in the Louisville Conference, which was organized in 1846 from churches formerly in the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE. After using a union church building for the early years of its history, the congregation purchased a site in 1860 and erected a one-room brick building, completing construction in 1864. The church remained a small congregation in a stable, largely rural, community for the first 140 years of its life, but by 1950 the community began to grow as a result of its proximity to the Louisville Metropolitan area.

A church school building was built in 1952 and named in honor of Edward R. Simpson, a long-time member and major contributor to the building. In 1959 a new sanctuary was constructed alongside the original structure. Then in 1967 the old sanctuary was razed to make room for a modern educational building which was completed in the summer of 1968.

Extensive growth in the Louisville metropolitan area has resulted in the rapid growth of the church in recent years; the church membership of 1970 was 581. This trend should continue as the church seeks to expand its ministry to a now urbanized community.

JEFFERY, FREDERICK (1914-), school teacher, local preacher and lay official of the Methodist Church in IRELAND. Born in Sunderland, England, he was trained as a teacher at Westminster College, and was appointed to the Methodist College, BELFAST, in 1937. He was in charge of one of its junior departments, Downey House, from 1945 until his appointment as vice-principal of the College in 1966. For almost a quarter of a century he was a letter writer of the Irish Conference, and for most of the time held the office of Lay Secretary of the Council on Social Welfare. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1964 for services to Education and Youth Welfare in Northern Ireland. Since 1965 he has been vice-president of the WESLEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY (Irish Branch). Mr. Jeffery has provided valuable assistance in compiling the Irish articles for this Encyclopedia.

JEFFRIES, SHIRLEY WILLIAMS (1886-1963), was a prominent layman and parliamentarian in SOUTH AUSTRALIA. Born in MANCHESTER, England, he came to Australia in early childhood. His father was William Jeffries, a leading Wesleyan minister who was president of the United Church in 1904. Sir Shirley was educated at PRINCE ALFRED COLLEGE and the University of ADELAIDE, was called to the Bar and entered legal practice. Being elected to the State Parliament, he held the important cabinet posts of Minister of Education and Attorney General.

Sir Shirley served on the councils of all the educational institutions associated with the SOUTH AUSTRALIAN CONFERENCE as well as on the boards and committees of various Departments. He was elected to General Conference in 1917, the first of fifteen which he attended. He was also knighted for his service to the State and community.

JENKINS, BENJAMIN (1814-1871), pioneer American missionary to CHINA, was born in Newfoundland, June 16, 1814. When a youth he went to Bermuda and served as an apprentice in the office of the Royal Gazette. There he learned the trade and in time established his own plant, and began publication of the Bermudian. The publication of the paper did not prove successful. Meantime he married Miss Roberts of Hamilton, Bermuda, about 1838.

He moved to CHARLESTON, S. C., and was for some time pressman in the office of the Charleston Courier. Afterward he formed a connection with B. B. Hussey under the name of Jenkins & Hussey, Job Printers. Soon thereafter Jenkins entered an agreement with D. R. Whitaker to print the Southern Quarterly Review. He closed his business and went to NEW ORLEANS for this new enterprise. Some months later he returned to Charleston and taught school. In 1843 he was asked to organize the Southern Christian Advocate's printing plant in Charleston, and he became its superintendent, continuing as the publisher until 1847. Then it was that he joined the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, responding to the editorial call of WILLIAM MAY WIGHTMAN for another missionary to go with CHARLES TAYLOR to China.

On April 24, 1848, Benjamin Jenkins, his wife, and their two children, with Taylor, his wife, and baby, sailed from BOSTON for China. They became Southern Methodism's first foreign missionaries. Previously, on Feb. 27, Jenkins had been ordained deacon by Bishop JAMES O. ANDREW, and both Jenkins and Taylor were ordained elder on the same day at Norfolk, Virginia. They had expected to sail for their new work from Norfolk, but the captain of the USS Plymouth could not provide for their families. Then it was that DANIEL DREW (for whom DREW UNIVERSITY is named), shipowner and capitalist of NEW YORK, came to the rescue and had the party carried to Boston at his expense.

Jenkins ministered in HONG KONG and Shanghai. At the end of 1852 Mrs. Jenkins' health was so impaired that the missionary, his wife, and their five children embarked for America. Mrs. Jenkins died en route near St. Helena Island and was buried at sea. On April 28, 1854, Jenkins was married to Miss Jeanette Billsland of New York. They departed at once for China, where again he threw himself into the work of the Shanghai mission. When the War Between the States curtailed drastically missionary support, Jenkins helped relieve financial embarrassment by taking a position as Interpreter with the American Consulate in Shanghai.

RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE at Ashland, Va., conferred on Jenkins an honorary M.A. degree.

He died in Shanghai on March 13, 1871, and there he was buried.

JENKINS, CHARLES ALFRED (1869-1955), Australian minister, born in Maldon, Victoria, AUSTRALIA. He was accepted as a candidate for the ministry in Victoria in 1893. When an urgent appeal was made to the Eastern States for ministers to work in the goldfields being opened up in Western Australia, he responded and arrived in PERTH in 1896. He proved to be an effective pastor and preacher and in 1916 was elected as president of the Conference.

During the Great War he served as an Army Chaplain, was awarded the Victoria Decoration, and became Senior Military Chaplain with the rank of Colonel. When the Fremantle Central Mission was established he was appointed superintendent. He later became superintendent of Perth Central Mission and was elected president of WESLEY COLLEGE, a day and boarding school for boys at South Perth. He was the author of A Century of Methodism in Western Australia 1830-1930, the first historical study of the Methodist Church in Western Australia. He died in 1955 at Perth, Western Australia.

JENKINS, EBENEZER E. (1820-1905), British Wesleyan Methodist, known chiefly as a missionary statesman, was born at Exeter, Devon, on May 10, 1820, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1845. From that year until 1863 he served in INDIA, mostly in Madras, and, in addition to much pioneer evangelism, was concerned especially with the establishment of several mission schools, notably Royapettah College in Madras. Returning home, he was elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED in 1864, and became known as a missionary advocate. In 1877 he was made general secretary of the Missionary Society and, in the same year, gave the FERNLEY LECTURE, Modern Atheism, Its Position and Promise. In 1880 he was president of the British Conference. He died on July 19, 1905.

H. MORLEY RATTENBURY

JAMES JENKINS

JENKINS, JAMES (? -1847), American pioneer preacher of SOUTH CAROLINA, who joined the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE in 1792. Apparently then ASBURY changed his appointments frequently, for in Chrietzberg we are told that the Minutes spell out short terms of service by the preachers of only three and six months as the bishop was "looking not only to celerity of movement, but to a rapid interchange of place and talent as well." (Chrietzberg, p. 64). Asbury, once complained to Jenkins that he, Jenkins, had not gotten around his district (whole state) but three times, and regretted that "he did not get round quarterly." "I told him," said Jenkins later, "that if I had been quartered, and each part made to travel, I might have done it" (ibid., p. 64).

In the 1796 Conference, James Jenkins was entitled to elder's orders, but failed to get them, Chrietzberg tells us, because his "proclivity for reproof, his zeal to do right himself and to see that others did so too, did not smooth his path to heaven, and hence he magnified his office at a heavy percent of discount on his popularity" (ibid., p. 67).

The ministry of Jenkins is said to have been far-reaching as through him certain prominent persons in different localities were converted. When LOVICK PIERCE was an old man he remembered that Jenkins preached "the first pure sermon" that he had ever heard. "The text was 'Happy is that People . . . whose God is the Lord'. The preaching was in manner, tone, power, and spirit perfect and new to all. Conviction and conversions followed; and as to the results of that one sermon, count up the good done by the Pierces, their children, and their children's children and on down to the judgment trump" (ibid., p. 76).

Jenkins located in 1806 and it is said he would not have done so then but for some remarks from Asbury implying that it was not altogether agreeable for him to occupy a seat in the Conference while not engaged in the regular work. Jenkins was, however, a superannuated preacher then and should have been entitled to his seat. In those days there was no provision for supernumeraries and the bishop was afraid apparently that others would seek to leave the traveling connection if he allowed a superannuate to continue his Conference membership. Jenkins continued to preach about, however, and helped organize the church at Winstboro, S. C., as well as at other places. He died in Camden, Jan. 24, 1847, having gone back into the Conference, but again locating in 1812.

In his last years he lived in the community of Lodibar and there "his tall, erect form, independent bearing, and cast-iron expression of features made an indelible impression on all seeing him. He was at that time a superannuated preacher almost blind yet he moved about with an energy most surprising. When he died, he had served for fifty-five years in the ministry. Some called him 'Thundering Jimmie' and others the 'Conference Currycomb'. (ibid., p. 175). He was always ready for the correction of any wrong in manners or morals, and yet all apprehension of rebuke was mingled with unqualified reverence and respect. . . . He was an Elijah or a John the Baptist of the early Church."

JENKINS, JOHN PRINCE (1860-1941), an American pioneer pastor, district superintendent, and fund raiser, was born of Puritan stock at Vineyard Haven, Mass., on Aug. 28, 1860. However, he grew up in the Methodist Church, was educated in the public schools, and at the Duke's County Academy. He learned a trade and went to BOSTON as bookkeeper in a factory in November, 1880.

He experienced a profound conversion at the Brookfield Street Methodist Church on his first Sunday in Boston and immediately became active in the church. By 1883 he became conscious of a call to the ministry in Dakota Territory. Upon the advice of the Dean of the BOSTON SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY he applied for an appointment at once, without further training, and received word from the superintendent of the DAKOTA MISSION: "Be at Huron, D. T., (Dakota Territory) Oct. 11, 1883, and I will give you work."

Young Jenkins responded to the call and thus began a most fruitful career as a pioneer preacher. Each charge he served experienced great revivals and growth in spiritual power and membership. While at Madison, in 1893, his wife of six years, Sadie B. Short, died. Two years later he married Hattie A. Whalen who proved a great helpmate in all his later life.

In 1899 he was appointed presiding elder of the Huron District and two years later transferred to the Sioux Falls District. Upon completion of the six year term he returned to the pastorate at Watertown. But his administrative and fund raising talents had become evident and in 1910 he was appointed financial secretary of DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in the campaign to raise $250,000 for new buildings.

Thus began a new career as fund raiser through which Jenkins made his greatest contribution to the church. In various campaigns for Dakota Wesleyan he raised a total of a million dollars. He became associated with the JOHN W. HANCHER organization and participated in fifteen different college fund drives in various parts of the country. In 1918, during the Centenary Fund campaign, he was placed in charge of the financial phases for the CHICAGO area. In 1921 he became Centenary Secretary for the ST. PAUL area. After three years of labor in this capacity he served one year as field secretary for the GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE.

In 1925, and again after retirement, Jenkins returned to Dakota Wesleyan to assist in campaigns for endowment funds. He accepted another appointment as superintendent of the Sioux Falls district, where he had spent most of his ministerial life. Shortly after the six year term ended, he was granted the retired relationship in 1932 and then spent the sunset years in LOS ANGELES, having completed forty-nine years of most effective service. Jenkins Methodist Home, Watertown, honors Dr. Jenkins, "an outstanding leader of the SOUTH DAKOTA CONFERENCE." Death came to the great Christian campaigner on Aug. 3, 1941. Burial was at Madison, S. D.

A. KRISTIAN JENSEN

JENSEN, ANDERS KRISTIAN (1897-1956), widely known Korean missionary and communist internee, was born in Nasborg, DENMARK, March 14, 1897. He came to America in 1914, served in the U. S. Army, became an American citizen, graduated from CORNELL COLLEGE, Iowa, in 1924, and BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1927.

His summer vacations were spent as circuit manager for the Redpath-Vawter Chautauquas, and later in raising church debts under the Board of Home Missions of the M. E. Church.

In 1928 he married Maud Keister, a Methodist missionary to KOREA. They sailed for Korea in 1929, with residence in Incheon, and later in SEOUL, where Jensen carried on evangelistic and administration work over a wide area of central Korea.

He was one of six Methodist missionaries taken by the communists in the border town of Kaesung on June 25, 1950. After three bitter winters in North Korea he was one of the five survivors repatriated by way of Moscow, reaching New York in May 1953.

After his return to Korea, in addition to missionary duties he was widely used in the orientation of U.S. military personnel, receiving a posthumous citation for that work. He died in Seoul Nov. 20, 1956 and was buried in Seoul Foreign Cemetery. His wife was the first woman to be admitted to an annual conference (CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA) of The Methodist Church, 1956.

JENNINGS, SAMUEL K. (1771-1854), American minister, physician and educator, born in Essex County, N. J., on June 6, 1771, was a descendant of a long and honorable line of Scotch, English and American Congregationalists and Presbyterians. Jacob Jennings, his father, was a practicing physician for twenty years before he took up the ministry. Samuel Jennings was graduated from Rutgers College in 1790 and studied medicine under his father's direction. He taught school but later practiced medicine. He was married (married three times, but had issue only by his first wife) at the age of twenty-two and at twenty-three he was converted and joined the M. E. Church. He gave up his medical profession for the ministry. After serving in the Commonwealth of VIRGINIA he went to BALTIMORE in 1817. In 1818 he was elected president of ASBURY COLLEGE in Baltimore; he was for more than twenty years engaged in different professorships in the Medical Department of Washington University in Baltimore.

In 1821 he became a patron and contributor to the Wesleyan Repository and its successor, Mutual Rights. In 1827, he, with others, was cited by the Church to trial and expelled from the M. E. Church for activities in advocating a change in the government of the Church. He subsequently the next year and in 1830 became one of the founders of the M. P. CHURCH.

Dr. Jennings died in the home of his daughter in Baltimore on Oct. 19, 1854.

Jersey City, New Jersey, U.S.A., population 253,437, was visited by Hendrik Hudson in 1609. Before the white race came to America, the locality was occupied by a branch of Lenni Lenape Indians, and was called Sheyichbi. The harbor was visited earlier by Verrazzano in 1524. Hudson anchored his "Half Moon" off Communipaw, a part of Jersey City. In the latter part of 1633, two houses were built in the settlement of Pavonia, and in 1660 permission was granted to lay out the Village of Bergen, the first established village in the state.

Religious services were conducted in a school house from 1662 until the first church structure was erected in 1680. Old Bergen Dutch Reformed Church, over 300 years old and the oldest in the state, is still one of the leading churches of the community. In 1820, the village of Bergen was renamed Jersey City.

Historically, there is a tradition that a band of Methodists began to hold prayer meetings in various places as early as 1801, but no authentic record of their work has been found, prior to 1811, when the first attempt to establish a Methodist church in Jersey City was made. Josiah Hornblower built a small frame chapel known as Bergen Mission. Although this original mission failed, it was later revived in 1830 and became Simpson Church in 1857.

Trinity Church was organized in 1835. The first building was a small frame structure raised on pilings above the marshy ground of downtown Jersey City. This building was used until the congregation was able to erect a more substantial house of worship. Father HENRY BOEHM, a traveling companion of Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY, the most notable local link with early Methodism, celebrated his 100th birthday and 74th anniversary in the ministry June 8, 1875 at Trinity Church, Jersey City.

Linden Avenue Church, formerly known as Greenville Church, was organized in 1844, by George Thomas, a preacher of considerable local fame. The church continued with varying fortunes until the cornerstone of a larger building was laid Sept. 20, 1888. Remodeled several times, this building is still in use today.

St. Paul's was organized as the M. E. Church at Pavonia, before Van Vorst Township was added officially to Jersey City. Begun in July 1848, it opened for service in 1850. Although enlarged twice, it had to be discontinued, its members joining other congregations.

Hedding Church, organized March 20, 1855, had the largest Methodist congregation in the city from 1879-80. Later Hedding merged with Trinity and still later with Simpson-Grace.

Palisade Church, latest to merge (June 1967), was organized May 26, 1858, though founded five years earlier as a mission.

Emory Church grew out of prayer meetings held during the Civil War to pray for boys in service. Organized in 1862, they first met in what had been a carpenter shop. In 1870, construction began on a chapel and Sunday school. The main sanctuary came later in the form of a huge stone Gothic structure. In 1966, Emory formed an equal-partnered merger with Simpson-Grace, creating United Methodist Church.

Lafayette Church. In 1863, M. S. Allison, a shipbuilder, decided that a school was needed in the Lafayette, or eastern section of the city. He owned property and contracted for erection of a building, using lumber obtained by breaking up an old freight barge. Weekly prayer meetings in the school were soon followed by the organization of a Sunday school in 1868. During the presidential campaign of 1868, the community decided to build a "wigwam" or meeting place. Allison again offered use of his land and a liberal donation on condition that the building revert to the M. E. Society for a church. The church was dedicated Feb. 28, 1869, after alterations were completed on the wigwam. Old Communipav Church, incorporated April 14, 1853, was absorbed. In 1884, ground was broken for the building (occupied in 1963 by St. John's A.M.E. Church) dedicated May 3, 1885. The Black Tom ammunition explosion in 1916 did considerable damage to the structure. A newly built Lafayette Church, dedicated in 1965 as an inner city mission, now serves people in a predominantly Spanish speaking and bi-racial community.

St. John's German Church, organized in 1866, was built in 1868, and dedicated March 7, 1869. Although now part of a merged congregation known as Good Shepherd, three other churches were organized through the efforts of this congregation.

Centenary Church was begun April 17, 1867. For ten years the basement, dedicated April 30, 1871, was all that existed. In 1884, the main building was completed. The church originally stood in an open lot, but was soon in a densely settled section.

Grace, originally known as West End Church, was founded Sept. 1, 1868, in a small chapel. In 1881, the property was sold because of financial embarrassment. J. A. Gutteridge was sent in 1882 to rebuild the church, changing the name to Grace, which was rededicated two years later. In 1925, merger with Simpson Church was consummated in a new building.

West Side Avenue Church. In 1869, William Beach built a house near what is now site of West Side Avenue Church. The nearest church, a Presbyterian, was a long distance away, across lots and unpaved roads. Beach opened a Sunday school in his home. Eventually the Annual Conference was prevailed upon to appoint a preacher and organize a church. Work was prosecuted with such vigor that the site was bought, plans adopted and cornerstone laid in September 1871.

Waverly Church, incorporated Dec. 20, 1870, worshipped in a hired building and disbanded in 1882.

Summit Avenue Church. A most important name in the Summit Avenue Church history is that of Thomas Bennett, a ship's carpenter. He joined a praying band who decided to form a new church and although reduced to ruin by a storm when partially constructed, Bennett urged completion of the building program. Later, increasing membership caused a new church to be erected which was named for Bishop JAMES. This was subsequently changed to Summit Avenue Church and is now known as Good Shepherd, after merger with St. John's. In October 1965, fire completely consumed the building, but plans have been approved for rebuilding.

Browne Memorial. Another church was started by a gift of property in 1899 while Sunday school and church services were temporarily held in the home of John R. Browne, until a building was erected in 1903. As financial depression settled over the country in 1930, the church, which had become known as Browne Memorial, was forced to take out a mortgage which hung over the church for twenty-two years until cleared by sacrificial efforts. In 1955, the Union Street Church of the former EAST GERMAN CONFERENCE merged with Browne.

Bethany Church. Jan. 1, 1945 marked the merger of Swedish Bethlehem Church with Our Savior Norwegian and Danish Church, resulting in the present Bethany Church.

Clair Memorial is also the result of a 1945 merger. Thirkield and St. Mark's Churches were battling against the odds of financial and organizational difficulties. The former had worshipped as a unit since its beginning in 1917, but the latter, organized in 1914, suffered because of a split with former affiliations. By faith, St. Mark's managed to remain together and in 1941, decided to affiliate with connectional Methodism. A merger was affected, changing the name to Clair Memorial. On May 21, 1964, the DELAWARE CONFERENCE (C.J.) voted to transfer Clair into the NEWARK CONFERENCE, Northeastern Jurisdiction, and on June 3, 1964, the church and its clergy were officially received into the Newark—now NORTHERN NEW JERSEY—Conference.

Metropolitan A.M.E. Zion Church was organized in May, 1847 in downtown Jersey City. It was originally known as St. Mark's A.M.E. Zion Church. Several locations were used by the congregation. It was from this body that the split forming St. Mark's Church was made. Steady growth in membership from a handful of people to a present congregation of 650 has marked the progress of this church which has purchased the sanctuary once occupied by Emory.

Bethel, the first A.M.E. Church in Jersey City, was founded in 1850 by Stevens Barrell. During its growth and development over a period of eighty years, Bethel was under the leadership of thirty-two ministers in ten different locations. Mt. Pisgah A.M.E. evolved out of Bethel as a result of a property settlement and organized as a separate church Oct. 14, 1931.

Calvary C.M.E. Church, whose first pastor was assigned in 1938, also grew out of the Bethel A.M.E. split. For several years, the group remained independent, and then joined the C.M.E. denomination.

St. John's A.M.E., who purchased the old Lafayette Church building in 1963, was begun as Mose Chapel in 1919.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church operated as a tent meeting for many years before laying the cornerstone of their current building in 1927.

History records a continuous chain of Methodist missions within the city based on ethnic languages, including German, Scandinavian, Italian, and Slavic groups. Several were associated with other congregations and in time, absorbed into the parent body. Others became independent congregations. The only extant language work now is for the Spanish-speaking people.

One E.U.B. Church has also been located within the city.

Methodist churches in Jersey City are in a continuous state of change. "Older church-going and church-loving people have passed away, and many once attractive dwellings are now occupied by a dense population that does not care for the religious institutions which were once highly prized." Written in 1837, this statement is an even more accurate description of the city church today.

Alphabetically listed, the 1970 roster of The United Methodist churches in Jersey City are: Browne Memorial, Christ Church, Church of the Covenant, Clair Memorial, Lafayette, and Trinity, a total of six churches, the largest of which is Christ, with 562 members.

Methodism has declined in number through the past half century. Membership of The United Methodist churches in 1970 was set at 1,369. Property valuations were estimated at $1,778,227.

JESSOP, THOMAS EDMUND (1896-), British Methodist layman, was born in Huddersfield, Yorkshire, on Sept. 10, 1896. He was Ferens professor of Philosophy at the University of Hull from its foundation (by the generosity of T. R. FERENS) in 1928 until 1961, when he became Professor Emeritus. His many publications include several on George Berkeley, of whose Works (1948-57) he was co-editor. He has also written widely interpreting Christianity to the intelligent man in the street, and from 1948-61 was Chairman of the Adult Religious Education

Sub-Committee of the BRITISH COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He was twice wounded on the battlefield in active service, 1916-18, being awarded the Military Cross, and during the Second World War gave significant educational service to the troops, and in 1945 was awarded the Order of the British Empire. He was in great demand as a local preacher and lecturer, and was elected vice-president of the Methodist Conference in 1955. From 1956-66 he served on the Executive Committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

JOBSON, FREDERICK JAMES (1812-1881), British Wesleyan Methodist, to whose friendship with Dean Stanley is due the monument erected to the WESLEYS in Westminster Abbey. He was born on June 6, 1812, at Northwich, Cheshire, was converted on April 3, 1829, while painting a picture, "Christ before Pilate," and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1834. Earlier apprenticed to an architect, he used his knowledge later to produce Chapel and School Architecture (1850). As a popular writer he won wide reading among Methodists on both sides of the Atlantic for A Mother's Portrait (1855), and in some degree for America and American Methodism (1857), which grew out of his visit as a fraternal delegate to the 1856 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church. Elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED in 1853, he played a leading part on many committees, and for some years was a general treasurer of the Missionary Society. From 1864-80 he was BOOK STEWARD, and during his period of office published a new supplement to the Methodist Hymn Book. He was elected president of the Conference in 1869. He died at Highbury, London, on April 1, 1881.

JOHN STREET CHURCH, NEW YORK CITY

JOHN STREET CHURCH, located at 44 John Street, NEW YORK CITY, U.S.A., a national historic shrine of American Methodism, was organized by PHILIP EMBURY in September 1766, and is the oldest American Methodist society to continue in uninterrupted activity to the present. Embury held the first services in his house on Augustus Street until a larger place became available on nearby Barracks Street for the winter 1766-67. Early in 1767 the more commodious Rigging Loft at 120 William Street was occupied. Here Captain THOMAS WEBB joined forces with Embury, and the work grew steadily.

On March 30, 1768, eight members of the society purchased two lots on John Street for £600 from Mary Barclay, widow of the deceased Rector of Trinity Parish (Anglican). The original deed is in possession of present John Street Church. An additional £418 was provided by 250 subscribers towards the erection of a chapel on the property. Embury designed the building, superintending construction, which he dedicated as Wesley Chapel on Oct. 30, 1768. The noted painting of Wesley Chapel by Joseph B. Smith, owned by John Street Church, is displayed at the Museum of the City of New York, Fifth Avenue and 103rd Street.

Embury remained in charge, aided by Webb and ROBERT WILLIAMS, until the arrival in late 1769 of the first missionaries from JOHN WESLEY. The various men

Wesley sent led the New York work in rotation until the outbreak of the Revolution. The sharp line of demarcation established by the British Military Occupation of New York City severed effective contacts with the rest of American Methodism for the duration of the hostilities. Samuel Spraggs, a member of the American Conference and sent by FRANCIS ASBURY, managed to work through the lines. Under him John Street Church continued in marked activity, being one of the very few churches not interfered with by the occupying forces. Upon the conclusion of the war, JOHN DICKINS became pastor at New York, being in charge when Thomas Coke arrived on Nov. 3, 1784, with Wesley's mandate to organize the American societies into an American denomination. Coke's first sermons in America were preached at John Street Church.

Soon after the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States, the Conference of the M. E. Church convened at John Street Church, Bishops Asbury and Coke presiding. By order of the Conference, the Bishops waited upon the President, June 1, 1789, to present the formal congratulations of the M. E. Church. The original document, with copy of his reply, rests in Washington's papers.

The first delegated GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church convened in New York City, May 1, 1812. Such sessions as were held at John Street Church emphasized the need for a new building. In 1817 Embury's chapel was demolished and a much larger edifice erected, dedicated Jan. 4, 1818. The city's project to widen John Street in 1840-41 necessitated demolishing the 1818 building. A more efficient and worshipful structure was dedicated by Bishop ELIJAH HEDDING, April 27, 1841. This edifice is still effectively used, renovated and strengthened during the decade 1947-57.

In 1866, marking the CENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM, the New York State Legislature enacted a charter whereby the property and work of John Street Church would be permanently vested in a corporation whose members would be a board of nine trustees to be elected quadrennially, and to be subject to the direction of the General Conference. No sale of the property may be made save by order of the General Conference and the Supreme Court of the State of New York. By this procedure the integrity of the property and the continuous service of the church is guaranteed in perpetuity to American Methodism. This charter was approved and accepted by the 1868 General Conference, since which time each successive General Conference has reviewed the work of the church and has elected the trustees for the ensuing quadrennium.

There is no capital or current debt. An accumulated endowment yields approximately $10,000 annually. The historic property and its priceless trophies are sedulously maintained; Sunday services are attended by visitors from all over the world; and the constant weekday activities provide worship opportunities for the teeming business community surrounding the church. New apartment developments in the immediate neighborhood, already occupied or in project, will provide basis for renewed parish programs and service.

John Street Church was declared to be a national historic shrine by General Conference action.

JOHNS, HENRY LEROY (1896-), American pastor and church leader of LOUISIANA, was born on Nov. 12, 1896, the son of Henry S. and Hope (Foster) Johns. He married Meta Persis Means, on June 14, 1921. He graduated from Louisiana State University in 1917, and from the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at EMORY UNIVERSITY with a M.A. in 1921. CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA awarded him the D.D. degree in 1943. Joining the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE (MES) he served Cedar Grove in Shreveport, La., 1921-24; Natchitoches, 1924-27; Carrollton Avenue, NEW ORLEANS, 1927-31; Trinity Church, Ruston, 1931-34; and then became the presiding elder of the Monroe District for the next four years. He served Lake Charles, 1938-41, and Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, 1941-46; superintendent, New Orleans district, 1946-52; then First Church, Monroe, 1952-55. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, 1938, of the Uniting Conference, 1939, and the General Conference (TMC), 1948 and '52. He was a trustee of Centenary College for many years and in 1950-52 was president of the New Orleans Council of Churches.

Always interested in missions, Dr. Johns became chairman of the Board of Missions and Church Extension of his own Conference, 1944-48. In 1955 he became a staff member of the General Board of Missions and for two years promoted the churchwide fund raising effort for the establishment of the ALASKA METHODIST UNIVERSITY, then for nine years served as a church extension director with responsibility for church extension in the Southeastern Jurisdiction, and in these positions travelled extensively. He retired in 1966, and resides in Monroe, La.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966. N. B. H.

JOHNSON, EBEN SAMUEL (1866-1939), American minister and bishop, was born in Warwickshire, England, Feb. 8, 1866. He was the son of William Johnson, an English Methodist preacher descended from one of JOHN WESLEY's helpers. He attended school in England and after coming to the United States completed his college education at MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE, Sioux City, Iowa.

At age sixteen he was preaching on an English circuit. He spent several years as a newspaper reporter in London. He came to the U.S. and was received on trial in the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE in 1889. His first pastorates in IOWA were Danbury, Wall Lake, and Mapleton successively. In 1898 at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he volunteered as chaplain. He was mustered out of active duty within the year but remained in the National Guard until elected bishop, attaining the rank of major.

He became pastor in turn at Sac City, Webster City and Rock Rapids. Early in 1906 he studied at Oxford University, England. His degree thesis entitled EMIGRATION was published.

Returning to Iowa late in 1906, he became presiding elder of the Ida Grove District. In 1909 he went to First Church, Sioux City, in 1913 to Storm Lake. In 1915 he became district superintendent of the Sioux City District.

He was secretary of the Northwest Iowa Conference for twelve years. He was elected delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1904, 1908, 1912 and 1916. Being a proficient stenographer, he served as journal secretary to the General Conference in those four sessions.

In 1916 he was elected missionary bishop for Africa with episcopal residence at Umtali, RHODESIA. In 1920 the General Conference elected him a fully empowered bishop (general superintendent). After that he continued to serve in Africa with residence at Capetown, until his retirement.

His area included all of Africa south of the equator. To the age-old problems of savagery, slavery, ignorance and disease the First World War already was adding those of tribal disintegration and racial pressures. The harassments of the Portuguese authorities in their portions of the field were unrelenting. Bishop Johnson sought for enlarged efforts in education, new industrial training agencies suitable for the region, and for greater medical services, in addition to constant preaching. He nurtured a more extensive production of native literature, introducing the mimeograph as a means to that purpose. The CENTENARY OF MISSIONS celebrated in American Methodism in 1919 to 1924 provided additional funds.

The Centenary Fund failed to meet all expectations. The great financial depression followed. The depletion of the missionary force was disastrous. But means were utilized whereby the native African capacities were expanded. Whereas no African was a member of Conference in 1916 there were fifty-eight full members, native born, in 1936. Bishop Johnson retired in 1936. He died Dec. 9, 1939, in Veteran's Hospital, Portland, Ore. and is buried in Riverview Abbey, Portland.

JOHNSON, FLOYD ALVIN (1902-), American fine arts painter who has specialized in religious and Methodist historical subjects, was born May 11, 1902, on a north Missouri farm, to Robert Cephas and Avis Ann (Brenizer) Johnson. Praise from his earliest teacher for A-B-C's drawn on a blackboard first made him aware of his talent. He took all art courses offered at the then Kirksville State Teachers College and later studied at the Washington University School of Art, the Chicago Art Institute, and the Grand Central School in New York.

His career began in advertising. He was art director for commercial agencies from 1928 to 1932, also 1944 to 1955, in New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Dayton, and Toledo. For twelve years he was with Cowles Publications at Des Moines, Iowa, where he illustrated a four-color magazine and helped design Look magazine.

In 1955 Mr. Johnson was recruited as art editor for Together, the new mid-monthly magazine stemming afresh from The Christian Advocate, an official Methodist organ founded in 1826 and which still continues as a professional journal for pastors. Mr. Johnson's career reached its zenith with Together, for it was pioneering in church journalism for both textual content and graphic appeal, with generous use of color printing. In his eleven years with Together, in Chicago and suburban Park Ridge, he created in oils and watercolors more than 150 paintings reproduced on one or two pages, as well as innumerable lesser illustrations in black and white. One set of highly esteemed Johnson canvases humanized the twelve historic shrines of American Methodism and won acclaim at the BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION in 1966 at Baltimore.

A sincere student of Methodism, Mr. Johnson insisted that historical pictures be authentic. When an authority on early printing found errors in typecase compartments and press-bracing in a painting showing JOHN DICKINS talking to a printer, the artist scrapped the canvas and redid it. Permanent exhibits of his Methodist historical paintings are at Old St. GEORGE'S CHURCH in PHILADELPHIA; JOHN STREET CHURCH in NEW YORK; EPWORTH-BY-THE-SEA, St. Simon Island, Ga.; and THE METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, NASHVILLE, Tenn.

Mr. Johnson has served on official boards and as a teacher at several churches where he was in residence. In 1968 he retired as art editor of Together, expressing gratification that he had been able to blend in his professional and personal life his religious devotion and his creative ability. "I feel I have been able to do something for my church," he said. "It is a privilege given to few modern artists." He resides at Clearwater, Fla.

JOHNSON, FREDERICK ERNEST (1884-1968), American clergyman and educator, was born at Ontario, Canada, on Oct. 31, 1884, the son of Herbert John and Rebecca (Howard) Johnson. He moved with his parents to the United States in 1889, and was educated at ALBION COLLEGE, A.B. 1906; the D.D., 1928. At the Union Theological Seminary in New York, he received the B.D. in 1912. He received the L.H.D. degree from Columbia University in 1954. He married Kate Holmes Crawford on Feb. 20, 1914, and their children are Catherine (Mrs. A. M. Crawford) and Edward. Johnson was ordained to the ministry of the M. E. Church in 1908 and served as pastor in Holly, Mich., 1906-09; was assistant pastor at St. Paul's Church, New York, from 1909-14; pastor at Janes Church, New York, 1914-16; and then became engaged in educational work, becoming secretary for research and education work for the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in America from 1918-24. He became executive secretary and editor of the Information Service of the Federal Council's Department of Research and Education, 1924-50; and the executive director of the Central Department of Research and Survey of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ, U.S.A., and editor of its Information Service, 1951-52. He retired in 1952. He was Rauschenbusch lecturer at Colgate-Rochester Divinity School in 1939. He became editor of Social Action in 1953; was on the executive committee of the Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion, and upon the National Commission for UNESCO for three terms. He wrote Economics and the Good Life (1934); The Church and Society (1935); The Social Gospel Re-Examined (1940); The Church as Employer, Money Raiser and Investor (with J. Emory Ackerman) in 1959. He has also acted as editor of the Social Work of the Churches, 1930; Religion and the World Order, 1944; World Order: Its Intellectual and Cultural Foundations, 1945; Foundations of Democracy, 1947; Wellsprings of the American Spirit, 1940; American Education and Religion, 1952; Religious Symbolism, 1955; Religion and Social Work, 1956; Patterns of Faith in America Today, 1957. He also wrote numerous articles in the field of economics, religion, and social welfare. After retirement he lived in Oak Ridge, Tenn., until his death there July 4, 1968.

JOHNSON, HAMPTON TURNER (1865-1964), an American minister, a centenarian, who had the distinction of holding one of the longest service records in Methodist history. He was born in the small community of Oriole, considered by many to be a part of Princess Anne, Md., on Sept. 13, 1865, the son of Charles Elzie and Emily Gertrude Turner Johnson.

After his childhood schooling he was graduated from Princess Academy (now Maryland State College) and Morgan College (now MORGAN STATE COLLEGE). At the time of his graduation both of these institutions were Methodist church-related schools.

On Oct. 28, 1897, he was married to Mattie Medley Kenney. Three children, two sons and a daughter, were born to this union.

He joined the DELAWARE CONFERENCE in 1889 and answered seventy-five Annual Conference roll calls in seventy-five consecutive years. For fifty years he was upon the Board of Ministerial Training and for forty-three years he was registrar of that Board of his Conference, "a position he held with great faithfulness and high distinction." He was retired in 1942, recalled the same year, and was appointed to pastorates an additional nine years. His years of "active" ministry were sixty-two years.

"Blest with a phenomenal memory his brethren went to him for many items having to do with Delaware Conference history. A good preacher and beloved pastor he was highly esteemed in the churches and communities which he served." He was credited with building two new churches and successfully negotiated the purchase of a third. In 1962, at the age of ninety-six, he walked beside the Registrar, Dennis R. Fletcher, and with him led the ministerial candidates in their ordination procession at the Conference itself. He did not live to see the dissolution of his Conference, which was merged with the PHILADELPHIA, SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY, and PENINSULA CONFERENCES in 1965, but he was for all progressive moves. He died in his one hundredth year, on Dec. 26, 1964, and was buried beside his wife in Cedar Memorial Park Cemetery at Bridgeton, N. J.

DOROTHY JOHNSON DEAN

JOHNSON, HERBERT BUELL (1858-1925), American missionary educator in Japan and the superintendent of the Japanese work in CALIFORNIA. He was born on April 30, 1858, near Fairfield, N. Y., his parents being George L. and Cynthia M. (Buell) Johnson. He was educated at DREW SEMINARY, at ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, receiving his B.D. from Drew in 1894, and a Ph.B. degree from Illinois Wesleyan in 1895. THE UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC gave him an honorary degree in 1905.

He entered the WYOMING CONFERENCE, M. E., in 1883, but soon after that transferred to the Japan Conference and became the principal of the Chinzei Seminary at Nagasaki where he served from 1887-94. He was dean of the Anglo-Japanese College in Tokyo from 1894-96; the treasurer of the Japan Mission from 1897-98, and became a presiding elder in the South Japanese Mission Conference, 1898-1904. Thereafter he transferred in 1904 from the missionary post in Japan and succeeded Bishop M. C. HARRIS as superintendent of the PACIFIC JAPANESE MISSION on the west coast of America. He became prominent in all matters affecting world affairs of the Japanese in the States, and published Dis- crimination Against Japanese in California through the Courier Publishing Company in 1907. He served the Japanese work on the Pacific Coast until he suddenly passed away in 1925 on his way to Philadelphia with the purpose of negotiating with the BOARD OF MISSIONS on a large financial aid for the Japanese work. He was married twice—first on May 29, 1879, to Emma Jane Leech (who died in that same year) and in 1883 he married Clara Elvira Richardson, and to them were born six children. Johnson executed his duties faithfully in order to consolidate the widely scattered evangelistic work which had been begun by his predecessor on the west coast. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson are buried in a Berkeley, Calif., cemetery where stands a stone monument dedicated by all the Japanese Methodist churches in memory of their beloved leader.

JOHNSON, JOHN ALBERT (1857-1928), an American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Oakville, Ontario, Canada, on Oct. 29, 1857. He studied for a medical career, was converted in 1874 and united with the British Methodist Church. He was licensed to preach in 1874 and was admitted to the Canada Annual Conference in 1875. He was ordained deacon in 1876 and elder in 1880. In 1880, he married Minnie S. Cooseley, of Nova Scotia, Canada. They had two sons. He served in South Africa and the eastern United States (Pennsylvania and Washington, D. C.) as well as Canada. He was elected bishop in 1908. He died in 1928. R. R. Wright estimates that he was probably the ablest preacher in African Methodism in his generation. He is described as being "a hard student with a good library. His diction was perfect. In preaching he was dramatic, but appealed more to the intelligence than to the emotional."

JOHNSON, JOSEPH A. (1914-), thirty-fourth bishop of the C.M.E. Church, was born at Shreveport, La., on June 19, 1914. He holds a B.A. degree from Texas College, an M.A. and Th.D. degrees from ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, and a Ph.D. degree from VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. He received an honorary LL.D. degree from MILES COLLEGE and an honorary D.D. degree from Mississippi Industrial College. In 1961, he represented his denomination at the tenth WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE in Norway, and in 1963 he was the representative to the Fourth World Conference on Faith and Order. Prior to being elected to the office of bishop in 1966, he was professor of New Testament, director of Religious Services, and chairman of the Committee on Graduate Studies at the Interdenominational Theological Seminary in Atlanta.

JOHNSON, ROBERT CRAWFORD (1841-1914), Irish Methodist minister, born in Antrim and educated at the Wesleyan Connexional School, DUBLIN (WESLEY COLLEGE). He was influenced early in life by the layman, T. AVERELL SHILLINGTON of Portadown, and turned his steps from business to the ministry. In 1890 he was appointed by the Irish Conference to organize the FORWARD MOVEMENT in Belfast, and as a result of his efforts, the Belfast Central Mission was founded, and its headquarters, the first Grosvenor Hall, was built. Irish Methodism elected him to its highest office, vice-president of the Conference, in 1898.

FREDERICK JEFFERY

JOHNSON, THOMAS (1802-1865), American preacher and missionary to the Indians, was born in Nelson County, Va., July 11, 1802. He was admitted to the MISSOURI ANNUAL CONFERENCE in 1826. Four years later the Conference opened a mission to the Indians along Missouri's western border, and sent him and his brother William, to work among the Shawnee, Delaware and Kansas tribes. Under his direction the mission expanded to include work among thirteen tribes. He quickly learned to speak Shawnee fluently, and this endeared him to the Indians and greatly aided his educational and evangelistic labors. By 1838 the enlarged mission demanded adequate school and dormitory facilities. Johnson travelled east to WASHINGTON, NEW YORK and other centers and was successful in securing funds from the MISSIONARY SOCIETY (General) and from the Federal Government Indian School funds. Large and well designed buildings were then constructed of brick.

Because of a decline in health, Johnson superannuated in 1841; but six years later with the restoration of his health he was returned to the Shawnee Manual Labor School and made superintendent of the entire Mission. The removal of the Indians from KANSAS in the 1850's to Indian Territory (OKLAHOMA) brought about decline and the closing of the Manual Labor School and the entire Mission.

Johnson was a dominant person in the formation of the first Kansas Territorial Government. Elected to the legislature, he was elected president of the Senate. The election which brought this pro-slavery legislature into being was contested because of innumerable frauds. Declared legal by U. S. District Judge LaCompte, the legislature convened in the Shawnee Manual Labor School buildings and adopted a pro-slavery territorial constitution for submission to the Congress of the United States. Johnson was elected delegate to the Congress. The Congress rejected the constitution. Johnson's presence in Washington was unavailing.

Thomas Johnson did all he could to serve the steadily declining number of Indians. He was a non-participant in the "Border War"—the Kansas-Nebraska troubles; and in the Civil War which followed he openly and often declared his loyalty to and support of the Federal Union. He suffered many threats and indignities because of his stand. He died, Jan. 2, 1865, of a gun-shot wound, fired through the front door of his home, by unknown assassins. It was believed by friends, at the time of his murder, that his support of the Union cause cost him his life.

JOHNSON, THOMAS S. (1833-1917), was an early M. E. missionary in INDIA. He arrived in India in 1863, and became a charter member of the India Mission Annual Conference, when it was organized by Bishop EDWARD THOMSON on Dec. 8, 1864. He had a degree as a doctor of medicine. His appointments in North India—by which name the first Annual Conference in India soon became known—were successively Shahjahanpur, Kumaun, Budaun, Shahjahanpur, again, and Lucknow, for a total of twenty-seven years. He was then, after furlough, appointed to Jabalpur. Again he became a charter member of a new Annual Conference, the BOMBAY, organized by Bishop Thoburn in 1892, and later of the Central Provinces Mission Conference. Johnson was district superintendent in Jabalpur for nineteen years. The Johnson Girls' High School and College of Education at Hava Bagh, Jabalpur, is a memorial to him and his wife (who started the school with two little girls) and to the distinguished service they gave to the church and the nation. Johnson died in the United States, July 1, 1917.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

JOHNSON, WILLIAM DECKER (1869-1936), an American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in Glasgow, Ga., on Nov. 15, 1869. He was the son of an A.M.E. pastor. A self-educated man, Bishop Johnson was converted in 1879, was licensed to preach in 1887 and admitted into the Georgia Conference. As a conference member he served as a pastor and presiding elder throughout Georgia. He was elected to the episcopacy in 1920 and served in the far Western United States, Texas and the South. He died at Plains, Ga., on June 17, 1936. He is the founder of the Johnson Home-Industrial College in Archery, Ga., a little village also founded by him.

Bishop Johnson was of dark brown complexion, about five feet, ten inches, weighing around 210 pounds and one who called himself a "self-made" man. He was a hard student, an eloquent preacher, and a sympathetic minister. He published three song books and two volumes which he called Marching Orders.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

JOHNSON CITY, TENNESSEE, U.S.A. Munsey Memorial Church. Methodism began in the region of Johnson City, Tenn., with the coming of Bishop ASBURY to a point in the outskirts of Johnson City, where a chapel was later built known as Nelson's Chapel. Bishop Asbury came around the year 1788. Later Nelson's Chapel was the scene of three annual conferences—1793, 1796, 1797. In the early 1800's land was donated for the building of a campground known as Brush Creek Campground, located in what is now the Watauga Avenue section of Johnson City. This campground was the rallying point for Methodism in East Tennessee for many years until it became so commercialized that it began to decline about the time of the Civil War.

In 1867-68 the first school building was erected in Johnson City, known as Science Hill School, where various religious groups held meetings.

In 1871 Methodists built their first church house on Market Street and called their church Market Street Methodist Church. The Market Street Church served two generations well and in 1907 a new location on Market Street at the corner of Roan was purchased and a new church building erected. It was a long, hard struggle to get this building financed and built, and it was not until Dec. 13, 1908, when the completed building was occupied with a formal opening with GEORGE R. STUART as the preacher. At this time there was great interest in changing the name of the church. Many names were considered: "Methodist Place," "Methodist Temple," "Pioneer Methodist," "Market Street Methodist," "Roan Street Methodist," "Central Methodist." Finally, in recognition of a great pulpit orator, WILLIAM ELBERT MUNSEY, one of the laymen suggested the name, "Munsey Memorial." This name appealed to the group and they selected it, although Munsey had never been pastor of the church.

Munsey Memorial grew rapidly and by 1946 it was obvious that her facilities would have to be enlarged. A Forward Movement Council was organized, a seven-day-a-week program was projected and a million dollar plant was envisioned. The first unit, a Christian educational-recreational building was planned and erected, including a full sized swimming pool that would be heated, chlorinated and filtered continuously, with facilities for a full recreation program, and Sunday school rooms, including a large fellowship hall. This unit was completed at a cost of $500,000 and was occupied Oct. 23, 1949. In October 1953 construction was started on the sanctuary, which cost $450,000. It was first occupied in 1956. Paul Worley preached at the formal opening, as he had been the pastor under whose leadership the total building program had begun. In 1963 thirteen additional Sunday school rooms and two new parsonages were started. This project totalled $232,000, and the facilities were occupied in January 1964. In 1966 two adjacent lots were purchased for parking purposes. These are leased to the city during week days.

The membership of the church in 1970 was 1,752.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. First Church was the birthplace of the E.U.B. denomination. Here two German denominations united in 1946. The original Johnstown class of twenty-four members was organized in 1838, a year before the Allegheny Conference was formed. By 1846 it was the first city mission project of the conference. The present Vine St. location was purchased in 1866. The original modest frame building stood at the corner of Main and Jackson Streets from 1844 to 1868. The stone structure erected in 1868 cost $15,000. An edifice costing $130,000 was erected in its place in 1912. The present evaluation of this building is $1,497,851. The congregation has survived two disastrous floods. Forty of the 2,287 citizens who perished in the famous flood of 1899 were members of First Church. In 1936 the water extensively damaged the property, after which event a new four manual organ and hand-carved altar were installed. This church also served as the location wherein the former Allegheny (UB) and Pittsburgh (Ev.) Conferences were united to form the WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE in 1951. The church's membership was 962 in 1970.

WILLIAM C. BEAL, JR.

JOINER, EDWARD EVERETT (1866-1917), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Trigg County, Ky., on Dec. 3, 1866. Without a formal college education, he nevertheless passed conference examinations and was received in 1891 into the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. On May 21 of that same year, he married Lula May Roland. After serving three years in the United States, they went to Brazil in 1894. In July 1894, Joiner was admitted by transfer to the Central Conference of Brazil and was immediately given an appointment. Until 1904, he stayed in this conference, being appointed then to South Brazil where he worked until his death.

During his service in Brazil, he was a pastor, a presiding elder, builder and founder of several churches, including Jardim Botânico (RIO DE JANEIRO), Ribeirão Preto (São Paulo) Uruguaiana and Missão Wesley (Rio Grande do Sul). He was also superintendent and treasurer of the South Brazil Conference, and editor (1907-08) of its official magazine, O Testemunho.

Impressed by Brazil's great need for doctors, he studied medicine, while on furloughs, at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY; and but for illness and lack of residential requirements would have received his M.D. in 1903. The knowledge he gained, however, proved a blessing. For during a typhoid and diphtheria epidemic in Uruguaiana, he introduced the use of an anti-toxin which he personally ordered from ARGENTINA. He lost not a single patient, which earned him the gratitude of the community and the honorary title of "Dom Eduardo."

Joiner also wrote and translated several books, among these, Teologia Crista in two volumes (1898 and 1900); Jesus Vem (1916); Father Chinique's Fifty Years in the Church of Rome; Wesley e Sey Secuko (Wesley and His Century, lacking only one chapter of volume two when he died). With Albert Dunstan, a Baptist missionary, he compiled and published a Gospel Hymnal (1914).

Joiner died in PORTO ALEGRE, Rio Grande do Sul, on Aug. 26, 1917, and was buried in the Evangelical Cemetery, being survived by his widow and five daughters. Mrs. Joiner returned to the United States and secured a position as matron in Westmoreland College, SAN ANTONIO, Texas. This enabled her to educate the children, all of whom have obtained positions of rank in southwestern Texas. Of E. E. Joiner, the historian of the South Brazil Conference wrote: "He always proved himself a great defender of the truth, both at the editor's desk and in the pulpit . . . sensitive always to the needs of his fellowmen."

EULA K. LONG

JONES, BURTON RENNELSALAER (1855-1933), American minister and bishop of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was born in Livingston County, N. Y. In 1853, when but a child, he was converted in a Methodist revival but failed to maintain this experience. At the age of twenty he was again converted in a sweeping revival at the newly organized Free Methodist church in Greigsville, N. Y. Later he professed the experience of entire sanctification and joined the Free Methodist Church. A year later he entered its ministry and served several churches in the Michigan Conference. He was district elder in both MICHIGAN and OHIO. He taught at Spring Arbor Seminary. He was elected editor of The Free Methodist in 1890 and four years later he was made general superintendent (bishop), in which capacity he served until 1919. Failing health led to his resignation. After a long period of illness he died in 1933. Burton R. Jones was a capable writer, but he excelled as a preacher. Small of stature, his fiery eloquence and simple logic moved great congregations to joyous expression of faith or earnest prayer for salvation.

BYRON S. LAMSON

JONES, DAVID DALLAS (1887-1956), American college president, was born at Greensboro, N. C., Nov. 19, 1887 the son of Sidney Dallas and Mary Jane (Holley) Jones; and a brother of Bishop ROBERT ELIJAH JONES. He was educated at WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1911; was a student at the University of Chicago, summers 1912 and 1913; M.A., Columbia, 1930; LL.D., Howard University, 1937; and of SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY in 1945. He married Susie P. Williams, of Danville, Ky., June 21, 1915 and they had four children.

Jones became secretary of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A. in 1911-14; the executive secretary, Pine Street Y.M.C.A., St. Louis, Mo., 1914-23; he served with Commission on Interracial Cooperation, ATLANTA, Ga., 1923-25; and then became president of BENNETT COLLEGE, Greensboro, N. C., 1926 to 1955. He also held membership on the Board of Trustees of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation; and on the National Boys' Work Council of the Y.M.C.A. He was a member of the BOARD OF EDUCATION of The Methodist Church; the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Carnegie Library, Greensboro, N. C.; a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, Atlantic City, N. J., in 1932, and in Columbus, Ohio, 1936; the Uniting Conference, Kansas City, Mo., 1939; the General Conference of The Methodist Church, Atlantic City, N. J., 1940; Kansas City, Mo., 1944; Boston, Mass., 1948; (at the latter he was member of the Commission on Rules). Jones was treasurer of the Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church, 1944-48; a member of the Board of Directors of the Association of American Colleges and Universities; of the Southern Education Foundation; and vice-president of the National Association of Schools and Colleges of The Methodist Church. He was also a Phi Beta Kappa.

Jones retired as president of Bennett College in 1955, and was succeeded by WILLA BEATRICE PLAYER, who had been vice-president, 1930-55. He died on Jan. 24, 1956, and is buried in the Annie Merner Pfeiffer Chapel of Bennett College. He was considered an outstanding educator and churchman, not only by the Methodists of his State and Church, but by the community of Greensboro which honored him as chairman of its library board. More recently the City Board of Education named an elementary public school in honor of David Jones.

J. ELWOOD CARROLL

JONES, EDWARD (1778-1837), Welsh Methodist, was born May 9, 1778, at BATHAFARN, a farm near Ruthin, North Wales. He was educated at Ruthin school. He was converted in MANCHESTER, where he joined the Wesleyan Methodist society. Returning home, he formed a Methodist society at Ruthin early in 1800, some months before the beginning of the mission to North Wales. He was often called the father of Welsh (Wesleyan) Methodism; this is not strictly correct, but he was one of the pioneers. He entered the ministry in 1802 and traveled in Wales until 1817, and then in English circuits (including English-speaking circuits in Wales) until his death at Leek, Staffordshire, Aug. 26, 1837.

GRIFFITH ROBERTS

JONES, EDWIN LEE (1891-1971), American construction executive and church leader, was born at Charlotte, N. C., June 10, 1891, the son of JAMES ADDISON and Mary Jane

EDWIN L. JONES, SR.

(Hooper) JONES. He graduated from Trinity College (now DUKE UNIVERSITY), A.B., 1912. WOFFORD COLLEGE conferred on him the honorary LL.D. degree. He married Annale Lambeth, June 15, 1915, and they have two children, Louise Lambeth (Mrs. W. Franklin Brown) and Edwin Lee.

Jones was prominent since 1912 in the J. A. Jones Construction Company of Charlotte, international contractors and engineers, a company founded by his father. Edwin Jones was president of the company, 1944-60, and chairman of the Board of Directors since 1960. His most important business achievement was the successful management of the construction of the Atomic Gaseous Diffusion Plant, Oak Ridge, Tenn., a venture that helped to bring an end to World War II. It was the world's largest construction project up to that time and one of the most difficult.

A charter member of both Dilworth and Providence Methodist Churches in CHARLOTTE, Edwin Jones was a local church official from 1912.

He served as Lay Leader of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE; Trustee of Duke University; delegate to six GENERAL and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, 1948-68; delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES, 1948 and 1951; delegate to four WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCES, 1956, '61, '66, and '71; and was Treasurer and a member of the Executive Committee of the World Methodist Council since 1951. He was a member of the Methodist Hall of Fame in Philanthropy.

For twenty years Edwin Jones served as Chairman of the Board of Trustees of LAKE JUNALUSKA ASSEMBLY, Inc., and fourteen years as head of the BREVARD COLLEGE Board of Trustees. He became well known to the general church by his prominence at successive General Conferences and by his membership on the General COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE, 1952-64.

He died on October 22, 1971.

Who's Who in America.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966. LEE F. TUTTLE

JONES, ELI STANLEY (1884-1973), well-known missionary in INDIA, world evangelist and author, was born at BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 3, 1884. He planned to become a lawyer but was converted in the Memorial Methodist Church, Baltimore, Md., in 1901, and soon thereafter realized a call to the ministry. In September 1903, he entered ASBURY COLLEGE. During summer vacations he preached in CAMP-MEETINGS, assemblies and conventions, becoming well known as an evangelist.

In September 1907, he was sent by the BOARD OF MISSIONS of the M. E. Church to India and was appointed by Bishop FRANCIS WESLEY WARNE to the pastorate of the historic Lal Bagh Methodist Church at LUCKNOW. He was then an unordained local preacher. In January 1908, he was ordained DEACON and ELDER. Conversions took place during every week of his three-year pastorate. He was called for revival preaching in many other churches and in the autumn of 1910 he was succeeded as pastor by his college classmate and roommate, J. WASKOM PICKETT. In that same month he married a fellow Methodist missionary, Mabel Lossing, of Khandwa, Central Provinces, India and Clayton, Iowa. They were then appointed to Sitapur, about fifty miles from Lucknow. Mrs. Jones was a pioneer in employing women teachers in a boys' school. Overcoming opposition, she and her carefully chosen and supervised teachers lifted the Sitapur school to heights of excellence and popularity. Jones served some time as preacher-in-charge of the Sitapur circuit, and then as district superintendent, but combined these duties with evangelistic preaching to English-speaking audiences. More and more, he addressed his messages to the educated elite of all castes and creeds.

In 1924, he wrote his first book, The Christ of the Indian Road, and it became almost immediately a best-seller. Other books followed in a rapid procession. He continued his work as a missionary in India and spoke to throngs in the major centers of population all over India. Probably no non-Indian contributed more than he to development of the strong moral and ethical sentiment that characterized Indian national leadership in the later stages of the quest for independence and in the formulation of the Constitution of India.

Appeals for his help in other countries became numerous and urgent, and he gradually reduced the time that he spent annually in India.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1928 elected him bishop (ME) and he was seated on the platform as a bishop-elect, but before the time for his consecration service he reached the conviction that the obligations of the episcopal office would interfere with his work as an evangelist, and that evangelism was his basic responsibility. He, therefore, declined to be consecrated and continued as a missionary evangelist.

Subsequently, Jones became well known in America, lecturing and conducting ashrams over the nation. He retired in 1954, but continued evangelistic work in the East six months each year. He was the recipient of the Gandhi Peace Prize in 1961. Other books which he wrote besides The Christ Of The Indian Road, are Christ at the Round Table, The Christ of the Mount, The Christ of Every Road, Christ's Alternative to Communism, Abundant Living, The Way, Christ and Human Suffering, The Word Became Flesh, and his autobiography Song of Ascents—a spiritual autobiography, 1968.

He died Jan. 25, 1973, at Clara Swain Hospital, Bareilly, India. His ashes were returned for burial in the Bishops' Lot, Mount Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore, Md.

JONES, FRANCIS PRICE (1890-), missionary educator in CHINA, was born in Dodgeville, Wis., Dec. 28, 1890. After graduation from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY and GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, with also a degree from the University of Chicago Divinity School, he went to China in 1915 and worked there for thirty-six years, the first fourteen in Hinghwa Conference and thereafter in the Central China Conference (later called the Mid-China Conference). From 1938 on, after receiving a degree from Union Theological Seminary, New York, he became professor of New Testament in Nanking Theological seminary, and while there began a far-reaching project of translating into Chinese all the great Christian classics, from the Ante-Nicene fathers down through St. Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, Luther, Calvin and Wesley to and including Reinhold Niebuhr. Some thirty volumes in this series have already been published.

From 1951 on, besides lecturing on missions at DREV THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Jones edited The China Bulletin, published by the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He is the author of The Church in Communist China and editor of Documents of the Three Self Movement and has written for The Christian Century, Religion in Life and other magazines.

In 1950, more than a year after the Communists had come to power, he published his translation of the 1948 Methodist Discipline in Nanking. He is now a retired member of the NORTHERN NEW JERSEY ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He has acted as editor of the China contributions to this Encyclopedia.

JONES, GEORGE HAWKINS (1905-), church official, historian, secretary of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, editor of Tidings, was born at Ocean Springs, Miss., Aug. 3, 1905, son of William Burwell and Louisa Travis (Hawkins) Jones.

He received the A.B. degree from MILLSAPS COLLEGE in 1925, the B.D. degree from EMORY UNIVERSITY in 1927, and was awarded the D.D. degree by Millsaps College in 1953.

Admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, 1927, he was received in full connection and ordained DEACON in 1929, and ELDER in 1931.

He was pastor in Long Beach, 1928; Benton, 1929; Montrose, 1930-35; Ellisville, 1936-37; St. Luke, JACKSON, 1938-39; Newton, 1940-43—all in Mississippi. Since 1943 he has been a member of the staff of the General BOARD OF EVANGELISM of The Methodist Church. He was editor of Tidings literature, 1943-56; editor of Methodist evangelistic materials, 1957-64; director of area and conference evangelism, 1964-65; and editor of Tidings, 1966; assistant to the General Secretary and director of overseas evangelistic missions, 1967. He was assistant secretary of the Mississippi Conference, 1928-42, associate secretary, 1943-58, and secretary since 1959. He was a member of the Board of Ministerial Training, 1941-44; Board of Conference Claimants, 1941-48; Board of Education, 1949-53. He was president of the Southeastern Jurisdictional Methodist Historical Society, 1960-64, and its executive secretary since 1964. He is a member of the General COMMISSION ON ARCHIVES AND HISTORY since 1968, and of the Interboard Agency on Research since 1964. He was leader of the annual evangelistic mission in South America, 1956-60 and 1962-63, the mission in NORWAY, 1961, and the mission in the PHILIPPINES, 1967-68. He was a member of the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1956, 1961, and 1966. He is author (with Charles C. Selcman) of The Methodist First Reader, 1956, and Methodist Tourist Guidebook, 1966, and editor of numerous evangelistic books, also contributor of numerous articles to the church press.

He was married to Jessie Ireta Cox on Oct. 7, 1927, and they had five children.

JONES, GEORGE HEBER (1867-1919), American missionary to Korea and mission board secretary, was born in Mohawk, N. Y., on Aug. 14, 1867. With little formal education beyond the Utica schools, he went to KOREA as a missionary at the age of twenty, having just been received on trial in the ST. JOHN'S RIVER CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church.

After five years teaching in Pai Chai College, where he served as principal 1892-93, he became the first resident missionary in Inchun. His methods were so intensive that at the end of ten years he was presiding elder of a district of forty-four churches, all of which he himself had organized, whose preachers and class leaders he had personally trained, and whose members he had personally baptized.

He served as a department secretary of the BOARD OF MISSIONS in New York, 1903-06, then returned to Korea where he organized and headed the Methodist Union Theological Seminary until 1909.

Jones was widely known for his literary activity. He was a member of the board of Bible translators. He edited the Korea Repository, 1895-98, a magazine noted for its scholarly studies of the people and country. He edited the first Methodist hymnal in Korean, and also an English-Korean dictionary. His scholarship was recognized with the awarding of a D.D. degree by ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1906.

In 1909 Jones returned to New York to serve as the secretary for the Korea Quarter-Centennial until 1912. He thereafter continued in the New York office as editorial secretary and as one of the associate secretaries. He published numerous articles on Korea and one major work, Korea; Country and People.

He died May 11, 1919.

CHARLES A. SAUER

JONES, GRIFFITH (1683-1761), Welsh evangelical clergyman, born in Carmarthenshire, WALES, of Nonconformist parents, but joined the Church of England and was ordained deacon in 1708 and priest in 1709. In 1716 he became rector of Llanddowror, under the patronage of his brother-in-law Sir John Phillips. He itinerated widely throughout South Wales preaching evangelical sermons both within and outside parish churches. One of his sermons led to the spiritual awakening of DANIEL ROWLANDS, co-founder of the WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISTS. Jones was also highly respected by HOWELL HARRIS. In 1730 Jones organized the first of many charity schools, in which both adults and children were taught to read the Bible in Welsh. He canvassed subscriptions and employed devout teachers of various denominations to conduct "circulating schools" throughout the country, the teachers staying a few months at a time in one town or village and then moving on to another. This work was strongly supported from English sources, including the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. By his death on April 8, 1761, over 3,000 schools had been opened, and more than 150,000 persons taught in them. Jones's charity schools were widely seen as the cause of the rise of Methodism in Wales.

JONES, HOWARD WATKIN (1888-1953), British scholar, was born at Ironbridge, Shropshire, in 1888. Educated at KINGSWOOD SCHOOL and Caius College, Cambridge, he entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1912. He published The Holy Spirit in the Medieval Church (1922) and The Holy Spirit from Arminius to Wesley (1929), obtaining the D.D. of his university. In his later years he was a representative of the Methodist Church in the ecumenical sphere. He served as church history tutor at Wesley College, Headingley (see THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES), from 1930 to 1953. He died on Oct. 23, 1953, having crowned his career by becoming PRESIDENT of the Methodist Conference in 1951.

JOHN KENT

JONES, JAMES ADDISON (1868-1950), American construction executive and philanthropist, was born in Randolph County, N. C., on Aug. 20, 1868. In early life he moved to CHARLOTTE and worked as a brick mason. He formed a small contracting company which was later incorporated as the J. A. Jones Construction Company, which became the world's largest.

The company received the largest contract ever awarded up to the time and built the gaseous diffusion plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn. where the first atomic bombs were made, and also built the plutonium atomic energy plant at Hanford, Wash. In due course giant construction projects were carried out all over the world.

The liberality of Jones and his family as his business became great included the Jones Library at GREENSBORO COLLEGE, two buildings at BREVARD COLLEGE, the City Mission Society of Charlotte, DUKE UNIVERSITY Engineering School, Jones Educational Building and a Memorial Chapel at Dilworth Church in Charlotte.

Jones was a trustee of five Methodist institutions and a member of general boards of the church. He was a delegate to two GENERAL CONFERENCES (MES) and one JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE. He died on March 20, 1950, at Charlotte.

JONES, JOSHUA H. (1856-1932), an American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Pine Plains, S. C. on June 15, 1856. He received an A.B. degree from CLAFLIN COLLEGE in 1885 and a B.D. from WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY in 1887. He was licensed to preach in 1872, ordained in 1873, and admitted into the New England Annual Conference. He held pastorates in SOUTH CAROLINA, MASSACHUSETTS, RHODE ISLAND and OHIO. After being a presiding elder in Ohio, he became the president of Wilberforce University in which position he remained until 1912, at which time he was elected to the episcopacy. He was the father of the first American Negro (Gilbert H. Jones) to earn a German Ph.D. at Jena in 1909, and he himself the first Negro to become a member of the board of education, city of Columbus, Ohio, in which capacity he served from 1882 to 1900.

Although self educated, he served for some years as president of Wilberforce University in Ohio. Sometime later on when he was bishop he was accused of improper use of funds in connection with his life at Wilberforce. A stormy session of the 1932 General Conference of his Church suspended him following the report of its committee on episcopacy and without giving him a chance to present his books and records or to explain errors in the specifications of alleged misconduct. Bishop R. R. WRIGHT states that this was "the saddest page in A.M.E. history."

Bishop Jones died in less than a year after this, in November 1932.

JONES, MARY ALICE (1898-), American educator, editor, and author, was born in DALLAS, Texas. She was educated at the University of Texas, B.A., 1918; NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, M.A., 1923; Yale, Ph.D., 1934; and did graduate work at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. Her positions have included Editor of Children's Publications, M. E. Church, South, 1923-27; director of children's work, International Council of Religious Education (now the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES), 1929-45; children's book editor, Rand McNally Co., 1945-51; director, Christian Education for Children, BOARD OF EDUCATION, The Methodist Church, 1951-63. She has written more than thirty books, all dealing with the teaching of children and youth. Some of these books have been translated into Turkish, Spanish, Norwegian, Japanese, German, and several local languages in India and Africa. Over twenty million copies of her books have been sold.

Other professional activities include speaker at the World Conference on Christian Education, Oslo, Norway; member, White House Conference on Children, 1940-60, and White House Conference on Education, 1955; member of the General Assembly of the National Council of Churches; Executive Board of the United Council of Church Women; and the North American Administrative Committee of the World Council of Christian Education.

She has also been on the faculties in summer schools of religious education of various denominations. She was visiting professor at Northwestern University, Yale Divinity School, ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, Union Theological Seminary, Pacific School of Religion; the Willson lecturer, MACMURRAY COLLEGE; special lecturer at DUKE UNIVERSITY, EMORY UNIVERSITY, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY; religious emphasis speaker, University of Texas and University of Colorado; speaker at many state conventions of teachers and ministers, Christian education conferences, and library association meetings.

WALTER N. VERNON

JONES, PETER, or "Kah-ke-wa-quo-na-by" (1802-1856), Canadian Methodist preacher, was born at Burlington Heights, Upper Canada, in 1802, the second child of a family of ten. His father, a Welshman, was appointed King's Deputy Provincial Surveyor, and his mother, Tuhbenahcquay, was the daughter of Wahbanossay, a distinguished chief of the Mississauga Tribe. This marriage was a happy one and was maintained with deep devotion as long as both lived. Because of the nature of his work, Augustus Jones was frequently absent, leaving the responsibilities of the home to his capable wife.

It was natural that she should bring up her children in the customs, religious habits, and festivals of the Indian people. Peter was initiated into the Eagle Totem and later made a chief. He learned to recognize the Great Spirit, and to participate in the dog feast, the sacrifices, and the council fire. He was an expert with canoe, spear, bow and arrow—and later a gun. In his youth he joined in all the activities and escapades of his fellow Indians, enjoying the wild life to its full, joining in the dancing and even drinking a little firewater. His father tried to curb his freedom by prohibiting hunting on Sunday.

At the age of fourteen, Peter was sent by his father to an English school in Saltfleet Township. The next year the family moved to the Mohawk settlement at the Grand River, where they lived as the family grew up. When Peter was eighteen, his father had him baptized in the Mohawk Chapel at Brant's Ford, by Ralph Leeming, the rector of St. John's Church, Ancaster.

This ceremony meant little to Peter; he admitted that he accepted it to gain the privileges of the whites, to do his duty to his father and the Great Spirit, and to have a Christian name. His baptism had little effect on his life except, he regrets in his autobiographical sketch, to make him feel ashamed when he drank firewater.

In 1823, he was induced to attend a Methodist camp meeting in Ancaster Township, and he was converted. The story of his experience is given in his Journal; it is an authentic and enlightening description of the wonderful and lasting change wrought by the Holy Spirit in his life. This conversion was hailed by Presiding Elder WILLIAM CASE as the opening of the door to a new religious life for the Indian people.

Returning from the camp meeting, Peter Jones first won his own family and then, greatly encouraged by Chief Davis, taught Sunday school, preached when asked, and also taught day school. He made an earnest attempt to raise the standard of living of his people. While working in the brickyard near Brantford in 1825, he was invited by William Case to travel as a missionary to the Indians. One important condition was laid down: that he should keep a complete record of his travels. This he did and it is this account which forms the bulk of the book published posthumously, The Life and Journal of Kah-ke-wa-quo-na-by (Rev. Peter Jones) (Toronto: Wesleyan Printing Establishment, 1860).

He was received on trial in 1827 and ordained an elder in 1833. For the rest of his life he served his own people, particularly at the New Credit and Muncey.

In 1831-32, he was sent to England in the interests of Indian missions. While there he met Elizabeth Field, the daughter of a prominent English Methodist. The young people, so widely divided by race, heritage, and geography, fell in love, but postponed the final decision for six months after his return to Canada. In August, 1833, Miss Field wrote to say that she would meet Peter Jones in NEW YORK, where they were married by NATHAN BANGS. Immediately after the ceremony they took up residence at Grand River. They remained deeply devoted to each other as long as he lived. To them were born several children.

In 1844, after eleven years of faithful ministry, Peter Jones was forced because of poor health, to accept supernumerary status. For two years he traveled in England, Scotland, and France, collecting money for Indian missions. Afterward he continued to serve the Indians at Muncey and New Credit as he was able. In 1851 the New Credit Methodist Church was completed under his leadership and still stands as a monument to his work.

From 1850 on his health declined. During this period he built a mansion on the east side of Brantford—Echo Villa—patterned after his father-in-law's manor house in England. Though a portion of this beautiful home has been torn down the main building remains today, identified by a memorial plaque on the lawn. Here Peter Jones died on June 29, 1856, after six years of intense suffering. His funeral on July 1 was attended by leaders of church and state—by Methodists and Anglicans, by Indians and whites, by Six Nations Indians and Ojibways. He was buried in Greenwood Cemetery, Brantford.

Peter Jones was the first Indian to be converted at a Methodist camp meeting in Upper Canada, the first Canadian-born Indian to be ordained a Methodist minister, and the first Indian to keep a Journal which has been printed and is available, the earliest authentic record of the social, religious, economic, and political experience of Indians of Upper Canada by one of them. He was the first Methodist Indian to be received on common footing with leaders of Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Anglicans in Canada, America, and Great Britain.

Moreover, although he was a Mississauga chief, he was acceptable to the Six Nations people. He was the first religious leader of his people who was able to work out a balanced concept embodying fervent faith, moral conduct, worship, better homes, crops, and hygiene. He was the first Indian leader to play a significant part on behalf of his people in the struggle between Church and State that characterized the decade before the Rebellion of 1837.

JONES, RAYMOND LUTHER (1900-), bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, the son of James and Callie Victoria (Bradford) Jones, was born April 7, 1900 in Chattanooga, Tenn. He was converted in Logan Temple Church, Knoxville, Tenn., in 1906. He preached his trial sermon September 1917, in Logan Temple Church, Knoxville, Tenn. He was ordained deacon in Little Rock Church, Charlotte, N. C., November 1922, and elder in Winston Salem, N. C., July 1924. He was elected and consecrated bishop in Broadway Temple Church, Louisville, Ky., May 1948.

During his years of pastorate he served the following churches: Second Creek Circuit, Salisbury, N. C.; Marable Memorial Church, Kannapolis, N. C.; Grace Church, Charlotte, N. C.; St. Paul Church, Johnson City, Tenn.; Hopkins Chapel, Asheville, N. C.; Broadway Temple, Louisville, Ky. He was educated in the schools in Knoxville, Tenn.; in LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE, Salisbury, N. C.; Hood Theological Seminary (1924). He holds a D.D. degree from Hood Seminary (1946). He married Carrie L. Smith in 1924 and upon her death he married Mabel L. Miller in 1956.

He serves as chairman of the Church Extension Board (AMEZ) and was a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, in OXFORD, England, at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., and in OSLO, Norway. He also is a member of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, and is the founder and editor of the daily meditation booklet, The Strength of My Life.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

JONES, ROBERT ELIJAH (1872-1960), American Negro bishop, was born at Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 19, 1872, the son of Sidney Dallas and Mary Jane (Holley) Jones. Converted at sixteen, he joined the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1891. He was educated at BENNETT COLLEGE, A.B., 1895; A.M., 1898; GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, B.D., 1897; and received several honorary degrees. He married Valena C. MacArthur in 1901, and after her death he married H. Elizabeth Brown in 1920. He was the father of five children.

Jones served pastorates in Leaksville, Lexington, Thomasville and Reidsville in North Carolina. He became assistant manager of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, 1897-1901, and editor, 1904-20. He was a delegate to five M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1904-20.

R. E. Jones and MATTHEW W. CLAIR, SR. were both elected bishops of the M. E. Church in 1920, the first two Negroes to be elevated to the episcopacy. Bishop Jones retired in 1944.

A unique institution created under Bishop Jones' leadership was the Gulfside Assembly at Waveland, Miss. It rendered a notable service to the church through the Central Jurisdiction after 1923.

Bishop Jones served on the board of trustees of a number of colleges. He was awarded the Harmon Foundation Bronze Medal in 1927 and the Gold Medal in 1929. He was a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1931. He served on every commission on unification, admirably representing his group. Bishop JOHN M. MOORE wrote, "He was always considerate, reasonable, encouraging and forceful. His fine spirit gave great aid in working out the status of the Negro membership."

JESSE A. EARL

JONES, SAMUEL ("Sam") PORTER (1847-1906), nationally known AMERICAN EVANGELIST, was born at Oak Brewery, Chambers Co., Ala., on Oct. 16, 1847. His father, Captain John J. Jones, was a lawyer by profession. However, he engaged in business interests, and upon the death of Sam's mother, a Miss Porter from Virginia, the father moved to Cartersville, Ga. There Sam was reared in the home of his grandfather, a preacher, who had great influence on his life. He entered the private school of Congressman W. H. Felton, but his health broke down, he could not continue his education and began drinking.

Sam Jones practiced law for a time, and in November 1868, he married Laura McElwain of Henry County, Ky. She was a great help to him. When his father was dying he reproached Sam for his dissipation and this broke the boy's heart. He promised his father that he would change his life and a bit later he was converted under his grandfather's preaching. The grandfather put him in the pulpit even before he had been licensed to preach, and that was his beginning. Seeing soon that he could not follow the Scriptural text, he began to tell of his own experience, and this greatly affected many people who were converted. His wife did not want him to join the Conference, saying that she had married a lawyer, but after a time in a dramatic experience, she gave way and Sam Jones joined the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, in ATLANTA, Nov. 27, 1872.

For a while he served small appointments in GEORGIA. Then he began getting invitations from pastors to assist in revival work, and sometime later was invited to NASHVILLE where he had a great meeting. Great crowds of people came to hear him and he was really launched on his true career. After this he went to ST. LOUIS, CINCINNATI, and CHICAGO, with the great publicity both pro and con which papers gave him adding to his fame. He had by this time given up the traveling connection in order to devote himself wholly to his evangelistic work. In time he held meetings in SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, TOLEDO, INDIANAPOLIS, and NEW YORK, and in a few years he became a national figure.

Sam Jones had a high, clear, penetrating voice, which before the time of vocal amplifying devices enabled him to reach hundreds and occasionally two or three thousand either outdoors or in the large auditoriums of the nation. He was gifted with a peculiarly dry incisive type of humor which added to his fame, and his aphorisms and sayings are yet quoted. The platform tried to steal him from the pulpit, but the preaching passion conquered and Sam Jones is remembered as a preacher rather than as a lecturer.

In his later years he seems to have held fewer of the great city meetings and threaded his way mostly over the South, holding meetings in LOUISIANA, where he fought the Louisiana lottery; in MISSISSIPPI, VIRGINIA, and his own native Georgia, always drawing large crowds. His son-in-law, WALT HOLCOMB, himself an evangelist of note, accompanied him during his later missions and wrote a life commemorating the centennial year of his birth.

For those who said, "You rub the cat's fur the wrong way," he replied, "Then let the cat turn 'round." To a woman who said she would never be converted unless God broke in upon her from the sky as He did St. Paul, Sam replied, "Madam, the Lord doesn't shoot cannon balls at snow birds."

When President Theodore Roosevelt visited Atlanta, speaking at the fair grounds, and was told that Sam Jones was there, he asked the visiting committee to bring Jones to the platform. President Roosevelt grasped his hand and exclaimed, "Sam, you have been doing in a big way as a private citizen what I've tried to do as a public servant."

He died on a train in ARKANSAS on the way to Jackson, Miss., where he was scheduled to hold another one of his revivals. His death occurred on Oct. 16, 1906, on a Rock Island train at Perry, Ark. A funeral was held in Cartersville, Ga., but the City Council of Atlanta, meeting in special session, requested that his remains be brought to Atlanta to lie in state under the golden dome of the state capitol. This was done, a special train being sent to Cartersville and thousands of Georgians passed quietly through the rotunda of the capitol paying their silent respect to this unusual man of their state.

JONES, TRACEY KIRK, JR. (1917-), American minister and general executive of the BOARD OF MISSIONS of The United Methodist Church, was born in Boston, Mass., on March 16, 1917, the son of Tracey Kirk and Marion (Flowers) Jones. He was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1939; Yale University, B.D., 1942; and did postgraduate work at the University of California at Berkeley, 1943-44. He married Martha Eloise Clayton on Sept. 12, 1942, and their children are Judith Grace, Tracey Kirk III, and Deborah Anita. Volunteering for the mission field, Tracey Jones was ordained DEACON in 1943, ELDER in 1945 and went into full connection in Central China Conference in 1946 and the Malaya Conference in 1952. He served as missionary in Nanking, CHINA, 1945-50; and then was at SINGAPORE, Malaya from 1952-55, as the minister of the Wesley Methodist Church. In 1954 he was elected the Executive Secretary for South East Asia and China of the Division of World Mission and in 1964 the Associate General Secretary of the Board of Missions responsible for the World Division. In this capacity he served until 1968, when at the organizational meeting of the Board of Missions of The United Methodist Church, he was elected general secretary of that Board.

JONESVILLE CAMP GROUND became a center for Methodist activity in 1810. Located in southwest Virginia, in the Holston Conference territory, the facilities until 1824 were a rudely constructed brush arbor. In that year a permanent structure was erected with split log benches. The grounds were enclosed by a rock fence to contain stock for slaughter. A nearby cave served as a frigid-area. The original hewn logs are still in use. For more than a century and a half widely scattered throngs have gathered to hear bishops and other eloquent preachers from the HOLSTON CONFERENCE and beyond. Three other CAMP MEETING sheds in this area have survived the changing decades. They are Sulphur Springs, Eleazer, and Spring Creek in East Tennessee.

JORDAN, FREDERICK JOHN (1882-1961), American minister, was born July 22, 1882, in Wolverhampton, England, the son of William and Hannah (Devereaux) Jordan. He was educated in England and began his ministry on the Wolverhampton Circuit. He married Beatrice E. Hutchins on April 5, 1909. They came immediately to America, and he joined the WEST WISCONSIN CONFERENCE in 1911. His entire ministry was spent in that conference. Following several pastorates, he served as superintendent of the Superior District, 1924-30, and of the Northern District, 1943-49.

He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1940, 1944 and 1948, and was a member of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE at Springfield, Mass. He became secretary of the General Board of PUBLICATION of The Methodist Church, 1942-56. He received the honorary D.D. from Lawrence College in 1945.

Jordan was a pioneer in the summer camp program and served as dean of the Chetek Institute for more than twenty years. As Conference Chairman of the Commission on World Service and Finance, he planned and introduced the Conference Budget program.

Upon retirement he, Mrs. Jordan, and son Frank, made their home in Eau Claire, Wis., where he died on Sept. 16, 1961, after a long period of failing health.

JORDAN, NATHANIEL (1874-1950), was the first Indian Christian student of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE to earn a university degree (Allahabad, B.A., in 1892). After obtaining the degree, he taught English literature in Lucknow Christian College for two years, then began a long and distinguished career as principal of the Parker High School in Moradabad. That institution became an intermediate college.

Nathaniel Jordan was a son of James Jordan, an honored early member of the NORTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He served repeatedly as a member of the CENTRAL CONFERENCE in India, and was twice a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE. He was highly respected by state and national leaders and recognized as a wise counselor by churchmen, officials and people of all classes and conditions. In translating from English into Urdu or Hindi (or vice versa) he was without a superior and perhaps unequalled. He and JASHWANT RAO CHITAMBAR, the first Indian Methodist bishop, were close friends from student days, and they married sisters.

JORDAN, WILLIAM (1879-1959), New Zealand layman, was born at Ramsgate, Kent, but grew up in London, where he was errand boy, coach painter, postal engineer, and policeman. Seeking adventure, he emigrated to New Zealand, working in the South Island at stumping, grass seeding, milking, fencing, and road making.

At Wellington, in 1907, he became first secretary of the New Zealand Labour Party. He served in France during the First World War, where he was wounded severely. He was elected to Parliament in 1922, and after fourteen years, was appointed High Commissioner for New Zealand in London. Other positions held include: 1933, elected president of the Labour Party; 1936, member of the Council of the League of Nations; 1938, president of the Council of the League of Nations; also, chairman of the Imperial Economic Conference; Freeman of London in 1947; Master of the Guild of Freemen of the City of London in 1949; appointed Privy Councillor in 1946. He received the honorary doctor of laws degree from St. Andrews University in 1946 and Cambridge University in 1951. He was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II in 1952.

He married Winifred A. Bycroft, who shared his amazing zeal for Christian service. Mrs. Jordan died in 1950, and two years later, he married Mrs. Elizabeth Reid.

Throughout his years in New Zealand, Jordan threw himself with abandon into the work of the Methodist Church, acting as local preacher, Bible class leader and brotherhood leader. He was a man of magnificent integrity, with a great capacity for friendship. Fortright in speech, yet informal and abundantly good-natured, he had a consuming love for the underprivileged.

JOSEPH, TERRENCE (1917-), went to SARAWAK, Borneo, in September 1958, as a missionary of the SOUTHERN ASIA CENTRAL CONFERENCE of the Methodist Church. He was born in the all-Methodist village of Panahpur (Place of Refuge) Shahjahanpur District, on Sept. 11, 1917. After completing high school, he married and obtained work as a civilian employee in the army clothing shop at Shahjahanpur. Both he and his wife were active in the life of the church and became conscious of the guidance of God to enter the ministry. With much difficulty, they arranged to go to Leonard Theological College. A week before the college opened Mrs. Joseph fell ill and quickly died. Nevertheless, Joseph placed their baby with relatives and enrolled on the opening day. He made an excellent record as a student and a leader of student life. Before he was graduated by the seminary, he began to feel that his life work would not be in India but in some other country to which God would lead him. However, when no immediate opening outside of India was offered, he served pastorates in the two chief cities of the AGRA ANNUAL CONFERENCE, Meerut and AGRA. While serving in the latter city, he learned that Asian missionaries were needed in Sarawak and that the Methodist Missionary Society of India was willing to finance the service of a trained Indian minister there. At that time he was a member of the Meerut Annual Conference. He offered to go if the society would select him. He learned that the need was for a married man. Soon afterwards he met Patience Matthews, daughter of a Methodist minister in Madhya Pradesh. She was a trained nurse with experience in hospital management and an interest in missions. They were married in Delhi on May 20, 1957, and were accepted by the society and sent to Sibul, Sarawak. He has been an evangelist and pastor to the Iban people, whose language he learned during his first year among them. He has also been a teacher in the school of theology at Sibul and is now a district superintendent. By 1966 he had baptized more than 800 Ibans. Mrs. Joseph conducts health and hygiene classes for the wives of the seminary students and instructs members of the longhouse communities on hygiene, diet, and child care, as well as the responsibilities of Christians as church members and citizens.

On a scholarship from the Nanking Theological Seminary Board, Joseph studied in the PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, where he was awarded the Masters degree in Sacred Theology.

JOSHI, RAM DUTT (1916-), pastor, educator, and Indian bishop, was born Nov. 16, 1916, in Kumaon Hills, INDIA, the son of Bhawani Dutt Joshi, who died when Ram Dutt was four years old. His mother brought him up, working as a matron and nurse. Educated in Dwarahat in Almora District, he studied in St. Andrews High School and College in Gorakhpur, and received a diploma in Theology from LEONARD THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, Jabalpur. A CRUSADE SCHOLAR, he earned the B.D. from Serampore, and the Ph.D. at BOSTON UNIVERSITY.

In 1939 he began his ministry in a village church in Seohara in Uttar Pradesh, India. He was pastor and district superintendent in several places, and was professor of religious education at Union Theological Seminary, BAREILLY, 1942-47 and 1952-54. In 1965 he was appointed Educational Secretary of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia. On Jan. 2, 1969, he was elected bishop on the third ballot by the CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN ASIA meeting at Bangalore. He was put in charge of the BOMBAY Area, which included three annual conferences spread across Gujarat, Maharashtra, and Madhya Pradesh.

Holding numerous positions in the church while district superintendent, he was a member of the Executive Board and of the Senate of Serampore College. He attended the Asia Consultation Conference in 1963; the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church in 1964 and 1968; COSMOS meetings at Green Lake, 1966; and the World Institute of Christian Education, Nairobi, 1967.

JOY, DONALD MARVIN (1928-), an American FREE METHODIST and ordained elder, of the Texas Conference. He was born in Dodge City, Kan. He married Robbie Flynn Bowles in 1948. His education took place in public schools in Fowler, Kan.; and he received the following degrees: A.B., GREENVILLE COLLEGE, Ill.; B.D., ASBURY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Wilmore, Ky.; M.A., SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, 1960; Ph.D., Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind., 1969. He served as pastor in Kansas and Texas Conferences for six years. He was a public school music instructor at Minneola, Kan., 1949-52; then he became assistant to the publisher in Curriculum Development of the Free Methodist Church, 1958-60; and has been executive editor of the Sunday School Curriculum since 1960. He is a member of the National Society for Study of Education and of the Wesleyan Theological Society. He is the author of The Holy Spirit and You, (N. Y., Abingdon) 1965, and Meaningful Learning in the Church (Light and Life Press) 1969. He resides at Winona Lake, Ind.

BYRON S. LAMSON

JOY, JAMES RICHARD (1863-1957), prominent and learned American layman, church editor and publicist, legislator and historian, was born, Oct. 16, 1863, at Groton, Mass., the son of Richard P. and Maria M. (Hartwell) Joy. Having attended Lawrence Academy, he received his B.A. at Yale in 1885, and M.A. in 1891. SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY honored him with Litt.D., in 1906; DICKINSON with LL.D., in 1916.

Joy married Emma O. McGee, Jan. 21, 1891, three daughters being born to them. Mrs. Joy died in 1931. Mrs. Joy's sister married Bishop HERBERT WELCH and the two families were intimately associated. In his later years he suffered from almost total deafness, although this did not impair his mental alertness. For seventy years he was an active member of First Church, Plainfield, N. J.

In the annals of American Methodism few laymen appear as having given a half-century of such devoted and distinguished service directly to the Church. Immediately upon graduation from Yale, 1885, he became associated with the work of (later bishop) JOHN H. VINCENT, who was then the editor of Sunday school publications for the M. E. Church. Continuing in the sphere of Sunday school literature and general church publication, in 1905 Joy became assistant to JAMES M. BUCKLEY who was then at the height of his career and influence as editor of The Christian Advocate. Upon Buckley's retirement, Joy succeeded him as editor, continuing in that post of denominational leadership until his own retirement in 1936. It is rare that a layman can take over the editorship of such a distinctly ecclesiastical publication as was the Advocate.

For thirty-one years, 1905-36, Joy wielded unmeasured influence in the denomination, carrying on the traditions of fearless analysis, constructive conclusion, and wise statesmanship that Buckley had enhanced in the editorship of Christian Advocate. Joy did not write extensively, save in his office as editor. His knowledge of Methodist history was encyclopedic, and his ability to apply the lessons of the past to the problems of the present was unique.

Representing the NEWARK ANNUAL CONFERENCE, Joy was a lay member of every GENERAL CONFERENCE from 1908 to 1940, including the Uniting Conference. His interest in the problems of Unification was intense, and his contribution to the ultimate solution was great. Sagacious in negotiation, scrupulously fair and honest in every relationship, he had the distinction of being the "only layman of the Northern Church who served on all commissions dealing with union."

He was for many years a manager of the Board of Missions, and served on the Boards of DREW UNIVERSITY, Madison, N. J.; the METHODIST HOSPITAL in BROOKLYN, N. Y.; and the trustees of JOHN STREET METHODIST CHURCH, New York City. That board is regularly elected by the General Conference under the terms of the church's Charter. Following retirement from editorship, Joy assumed the post of librarian of the Methodist Historical Society in New York City at 150 Fifth Avenue. He devoted great energy to lifting that important collection into place among the ten leading Methodist libraries. He died at his home in New York City, July 1, 1957.

JOYCE, ISAAC WILSON (1836-1905), American bishop, was born on a farm in Colerain Township, near CINCINNATI, Ohio, on Oct. 11, 1836. He was named for his Irish Presbyterian grandfather, Rev. Isaac Wilson. Joyce was converted at the age of sixteen in a United Brethren revival. Joining that church, he was baptized in a hole cut in the ice on the Wabash River. Working to pay expenses in Hartsville College, Joyce taught school in Renessalaer, Ind. Uniting with the M. E. Church, he supplied the Rolling Prairie Circuit and joined the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1859.

He was ordained deacon by Bishop SIMPSON in 1861 and elder by BISHOP MORRIS in 1863. He married Caroline Walker Basserman of LaPorte, Ind., on March 20, 1861.

For several years he filled the leading pulpits of the Northwest Indiana Conference. At the age of thirty he was appointed to Ninth Street Church, Lafayette, and remained in that city ten years, serving as presiding elder and pastor of Trinity Church. Poor health caused him to take the supernumerary relation, 1876-77, during which time he served Bethany Church, BALTIMORE. He was the pastor at Roberts Chapel, Greencastle, Ind., 1877-80. In 1880 he transferred to the CINCINNATI CONFERENCE and was appointed to St. Paul's, Cincinnati, and later to Trinity, remaining there until 1888. He was fraternal delegate to the Methodist Church of CANADA in 1886.

Elected a bishop by the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1888, he served the CHATTANOOGA Area, 1888-96. During five of these years he guided Grant University as chancellor through a critical period. His next episcopal assignment, beginning in 1896, was the MINNEAPOLIS Area.

From 1892 to 1904, Bishop Joyce presided over conferences, supervised Methodist work, and made episcopal tours through Europe, MEXICO, CHINA, JAPAN, INDIA and South America, giving great stimulus to missionary activity. His influence and rank came primarily from his preaching with Irish fervor, humor and sympathy. Sometimes he would hold a congregation for two hours. Religious awakenings invariably attended his ministry. Bishop MATTHEW S. HUGHES was converted in a camp meeting in which Joyce was one of the preachers.

While preaching in the old RED ROCK CAMP MEETING in MINNESOTA, his activity was brought to a close by a cerebral hemorrhage. He died at his home in Minneapolis, July 28, 1905, and was buried at Lakewood, Minneapolis.

JOYCE, MATTHIAS (1754-1814), Irish Methodist, was born in DUBLIN on Feb. 17, 1754. Brought up a Roman Catholic, he spent a dissolute youth. When nineteen years old, he heard JOHN WESLEY in Dublin, and a year later was admitted into the Methodist society by PETER JACO. At Christmas, 1783, he was invited by Wesley to become a preacher on trial. He traveled in IRELAND as an itinerant for thirty years.

JUDD, ORANGE (1822-1892), American editor, philanthropist, and pioneer scientist, was born near Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 26, 1822. He graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1847, and taught for a time in high school and in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass. He married Sarah L. Ford on Oct. 10, 1847. She died in 1854, and he then married Harriet Stewart on May 1, 1855. Two of his sons were associated with his publishing enterprises later.

Having developed an interest in agricultural chemistry, he studied that subject in Yale graduate school, 1850-54, lecturing while there on agriculture. His research in chemistry's relation to farming received little or no attention at the time in the United States.

Going to New York in 1853 to become joint editor of The American Agriculturalist, he remained in journalism the rest of his life. In 1855 he was agricultural editor of the New York Times. His articles were brief and addressed to specific farm problems. The farm journal was almost the only medium providing the farmer with scientific knowledge.

The Civil War interrupted his editorial labors, and from the Battle of Gettysburg to the end he was with the United Christian Commission and the Sanitary Commission.

Expanding his editorial work after the war, Judd devised the crop reporting percentage system. He gave Wesleyan University $100,000 to build the Orange Judd Hall of Natural Science in 1871. By importing sorghum seed and giving it away, he helped start a new industry. He made several tours abroad, and was a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

He went to Chicago and there edited the Prairie Farmer, 1884-88. In 1888 he purchased the St. Paul Farmer, moved it to Chicago, changed the name to Orange Judd Farmer, and edited and published the journal until his death.

Orange Judd wrote a series of weekly lessons in four volumes, Lessons for Every Sunday in the Year, 1862-65. This served as a pattern for the widely popular International Lessons.

The Orange Judd Publishing Company was the leading one in the field of farming and domestic economy in that period. After making many relevant contributions to rural America, Judd died at Evanston, Ill., Dec. 27, 1892.

JUDICIAL CONFERENCES. A former system of trying appeals established by the M. E. Church (U.S.A.) in 1872, and remaining in effect until Union in 1939. Prior to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1872, when a trial of a minister occurred, an appeal could only be taken to the ensuing General Conference. Since this body met but once in four years, this oftentime occasioned an inconvenient delay. Also, the General Conference itself had more matters to attend to than sitting as a trial court. Therefore in 1872 it was determined that each annual conference of the M. E. Church should "select seven elders, men of experience and sound judgment in the affairs of the church, who should be known as 'triers of appeals'; and when notice of an appeal should be given to the bishop or president of an Annual Conference, he should proceed, with due regard to the wishes and rights of the appellant, to designate three Conferences conveniently near that from which the appeal was made. The triers of appeals from these three Conferences constituted what was called a Judicial Conference." The bishop of the conference from which the appeal was made, was directed to fix the time and place of each Judicial Conference, and give notice thereof to all the parties concerned.

A bishop presided over such a Judicial Conference, and strict rules and regulations were laid down governing procedure. The ensuing General Conference received the record of the proceedings and all papers, and was empowered to review only the decisions on questions of law contained in the records, and in the documents transmitted to it.

Full disciplinary directions were given regarding all possible matters and situations which might come before a Judicial Conference. At the time of Union in 1939, The Methodist Church adopted a different plan for handling appeals. Each Jurisdiction was then directed to set up a "Committee on Appeals" whose judgment, except in the case of a bishop (when the Judicial Council can be appealed to), is final. This same Committee on Appeals is continued in the Jurisdictions of The United Methodist Church.

JUDICIAL COUNCIL is the supreme court of The United Methodist Church. It was incorporated into the organizational structure of the church upon the adoption of the constitution which formed the basis of the union of the M. E., the M. E., South, and the M. P. Churches in 1939. This body completed a basic organizational structure paralleling that of our federal government, in which the legislative, executive and judicial functions are performed by separate and coordinate branches.

Prior to the adoption of the first constitution in 1808, practically all powers were vested in the GENERAL CONFERENCE which was then composed of all the travelling preachers of the church, including the bishops. The constitution of 1808 provided for a representative General Conference composed of members elected by their respective Annual Conferences. This body no longer included bishops, who therefore ceased to participate in the legislative functions of the church but assumed full executive powers.

For many years, the judicial function, especially the crucial one having to do with the determination of the constitutionality of acts of the General Conference, was delegated to either the legislative or administrative branches of the church, or perhaps to both. Thus in the M. E. Church the General Conference, chiefly through its Committee on Judiciary, decided finally on the constitutionality of its own acts. In the M. E. Church, South, the COLLEGE OF BISHOPS had the power to challenge the constitutionality of acts of the General Conference and by their vote to lay down an "episcopal check" against any action the conference had taken which the bishops felt to be unconstitutional. This made the action null and void though the General Conference could propose to amend the constitution in that matter by a two-thirds vote. In the M. P. Church an ad hoc committee, composed of members elected by the several Annual Conferences following each General Conference, passed on the constitutionality of any acts of that body which were called into question. The committee then dissolved.

In 1930 the M. E. Church, South, considered the adoption of a new constitution which incorporated a Judicial Council, basically similar to that now existing in The United Methodist Church. The proposed constitutional change however—taking from the bishops their power to interpret the constitution—did not secure the required number of votes necessary for its adoption in the Annual Conferences. However, the provision that there be a Judicial Council met with such a favorable response that it was presented as a separate amendment and subsequently, between 1934 and 1938, was adopted by vote of the Annual Conferences. Its operation for the immediate time was so satisfactory that, upon union in 1939, a Judicial Council was included in its basic form as part of the constitution of the united Church.

The General Conference is empowered to determine the number and qualifications of members of the Judicial Council, and the method of their election and filling vacancies. Under present directions the Council is composed of nine members, five ministers and four laymen, elected by the General Conference each for a term of eight years, upon nomination of the Council of Bishops. Members must be at last forty years of age and members of The United Methodist Church. While serving on the Council, they are ineligible for membership in the General and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, and on any General or Jurisdictional Board, or for service in any connectional office in the church. Alternates are chosen in similar manner to fill vacancies occurring on the Council from time to time.

The extent of the jurisdiction of the Judicial Council and its powers are carefully and specifically enacted in the constitution and in the enabling legislation enacted from time to time by the General Conference. The following five areas are included in its jurisdiction:

a. It is the sole arbiter of the constitutionality of acts of the General, Jurisdictional and CENTRAL CONFERENCES and also of the constitutionality of proposed legislation of the General Conference. The Council of Bishops, or one-fifth of the members of the General Conference, may request a decision on the constitutionality of acts of the General Conference. In the case of acts of a Jurisdictional or Central Conference, a majority of the College of Bishops or one-fifth of the members of such conference may request a decision. With reference to proposed legislation of the General Conference—so-called declaratory decisions—a majority of the Council of Bishops or a majority of the members of the General Conference is required.

b. The Council has power to determine the legality of any action taken by a General, Jurisdictional or Central Conference board or body upon the appeal of one-third of the members thereof, or upon the request of the Council of Bishops, or a majority of the bishops of the Jurisdictional or Central Conference involved. In case the above mentioned action affects an Annual Conference or Provisional Annual Conference, an appeal may be taken by such a body upon a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting.

c. The Council reviews and either affirms or reverses rulings made by bishops on matters of law in Annual Conference sessions when such rulings are requested in writing by a member of the Annual Conference, or when a ruling on a point of law is appealed by a vote of at least one-fifth of the members of the Annual Conference present and voting.

d. The Council hears and determines the appeal of a bishop when taken from the decision of the Trial Court in his case. All appeals of ministers from decisions of Trial Courts are heard by the Committee on Appeals of the Jurisdictional Conference within the bounds of which the trial takes place. Only when the decision of the Committee on Appeals of one jurisdiction contravenes that of the Committee of another jurisdiction does the Council hear an appeal, but then only on the points of law involved.

e. Broad power is given the Council to make declaratory decisions having the full effect of regular decisions when the General Conference shall have passed any act or legislation that appears to be unconstitutional, subject to more than one interpretation, or when any paragraph or paragraphs of the Discipline seem to be of doubtful meaning or application. Generally speaking, the power to request such declaratory decisions is limited to the Council of Bishops or, a majority of the bishops of a jurisdiction on matters relating to that jurisdiction; any Jurisdictional, Central or Annual Conference on matters relating to or affecting that conference; or any General, Jurisdictional or Central Conference board or body on matters relating to or affecting such board or body.

No board or body of an Annual Conference, nor any local church or organization thereof, nor any individual member of The United Methodist Church can appeal directly to the Council for a decision. However, the judicial procedures of the Church make it possible for appeals on matters of law to be made "step by step" from the Official Board of a local church through to the Judicial Council.

The decisions of the Council are final and become the law of the church. They are published annually as they are made in the General Minutes, and quadrennially they are added to the accumulative volumes published by the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Important Decisions of the Judicial Council. The decisions of the Judicial Council which are final and which become the law of the church naturally vitally affect its polity and are very important to its life.

Undoubtedly the most important and far-reaching decision rendered was that by the Judicial Council of the M. E. Church, South, at the time of Union in 1939. When the legality of the vote by the Annual Conferences of that church approving the Plan of Union previously adopted by the General Conference was challenged and referred to the Judicial Council by the Council of Bishops, the decision of the Council upheld the legality of the vote by both the General Conference and the Annual Conferences and affirmed that the Union had been legally authorized.

One of the chief points at issue was whether or not the Plan of Union, which required the approval of a three-fourths majority of the members of all of the Annual Conferences, present and voting, to amend the first RESTRICTIVE RULE, could legally be adopted without the joint recommendation of all of the Annual Conferences, as well as a two-thirds majority of the General Conference, as seemed to be provided for in the Discipline of that church. The failure of the North Mississippi Conference to approve the Plan of Union was the occasion of the challenge of its legality.

The decision of the Judicial Council was based on the fact that the provision requiring the joint recommendation of all of the Annual Conferences to amend the first Restrictive Rule had been inserted into the Discipline by action of the General Conference in 1906, but had never been submitted to and approved by the Annual Conferences, and, therefore, was not constitutionally adopted and void. The legal requirement, therefore, at the time of Union included no provision for the joint approval of all the Annual Conferences.

This decision was so legally sound and so logically developed, that it commanded the respect of the highest appellate courts of the states—and the nation—in all litigation which subsequently reached them involving property rights following Union.

A group of decisions, numbered 142, 147 and 155, rendered in the late nineteen fifties involving a single basic principle but dealing with various aspects of it, has had wide ramifications on world-wide Methodism. In all three, the Council held that the General Conference is the supreme legislative body of The Methodist Church and that it cannot delegate its legislative powers or transfer to others the essential legislative functions with which it has been vested under the Constitution of The Methodist Church. It held that, while the Discipline gives to the Central Conferences the power "to make such rules and regulations for the administration of the work within their boundaries as the conditions in the respective areas may require, subject to the powers that have been or shall be vested in the General Conference" (Discipline, 1964, ¶ 19.5), these are administrative changes and adaptations and are to be within the framework of the legislative policy as fixed by the General Conference and never in opposition thereto.

These decisions had considerable bearing on the recent discussions by Methodist groups in various countries as to the advisability of seeking an affiliated autonomous relationship with The Methodist Church.

A decision of the Council directly related to the Methodist conception of the meaning and authority of ordination, doubtless has had considerable ecumenical significance. In decision numbered 204, (TMC) the Council held that ordination of a minister, whether travelling or local, confers authority to perform certain ministerial functions, but the General Conference under its constitutional authority "to define and fix the qualifications and duties of elders, deacons, supply pastors . . ." (Discipline, 1964, ¶ 8.2), has authority to define when, where and under what circumstances these ministerial functions may be performed while the one performing them remained in good standing in The Methodist Church.

Many of the above mentioned decisions, with the exception of that affirming the legality of the 1939 Union, have been accompanied by strong and ably written dissents. The latter have often served a very useful purpose in clarifying the issues at stake and in pointing out weaknesses in the law which have subsequently been corrected.

In The United Methodist Church. At the organization of The United Methodist Church in 1968 the Constitution of the Church, as it had been adopted and put into effect at the Uniting Conference, called for a continuation of the Judicial Council as it had been in The Methodist Church. During the sessions of the Uniting Conference, the Judicial Council was present in a body, as it always is at General Conference sessions, and in deference to the EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN, then coming into the union, two members of that body were put upon the Council creating an ad interim Council to serve during the session of the Uniting Conference. During the session a Judicial Council for the newly organized Church was elected. The majority of those who had been serving on the former Council in The Methodist Church were re-elected (if their terms so allowed) and certain new members, among them two former E.U.B.'s, were added.

JUDICIAL COUNCILORS

The Council has been fortunate in having had among its lay members, some of the ablest lawyers and judges of the country, and among its ministerial members, men of broad understanding of the polity of the Church, and wide experience in its administration. Four members of the original Judicial Council of the M. E. Church, South, were included in the first Council of The Methodist Church. The following persons have served on the Council since its organization:

Alton, John T., clerical member, 1948-56; vice-president 1953-56; A.B. and D.D. Mt. Union College; S.T.B., Boston U.; pastor, district superintendent in both Ohio and Northeast Ohio Conferences. Trustee of important institutions in Ohio. Regarded as able administrator. Father of Bishop RALPH TAYLOR ALTON.

Bayley, Francis R., clerical member and president, 1939-48; member Baltimore Conference; pastor, district superintendent and delegate to a number of General Conferences. Helped set pattern in early decisions which strengthened the powers of the General Conference. (See BAYLEY, F. R.)

Berry, Theodore M., lay member, 1960-68; A.B. and LL.B., U. of Cincinnati; occupied city, state and federal positions; member of Cincinnati City Council, 1950-57; vice-mayor of Cincinnati, 1956-57; assistant secretary of Office of Economic Opportunity of federal government; member Commission on Ecumenical Consultation of NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

Brown, George R., clerical, 1939-44; formerly minister in M. P. Church; pastor in North Carolina and leader in Annual and General Conferences. (See BROWN, GEORGE R.)

Buckner, Walter C., clerical, 1939-53; vice-president 1952-53; D.D., College of the Pacific and U. of Southern California; LL.D., Baker University; pastor, district superintendent and leader in important conference and community organizations; delegate to General Conferences in 1932 and 1936 and to Uniting Conference in 1939.

Childers, Marvin A., lay member, 1939-56; president, 1948-56; Texas lawyer and judge; member of original Judicial Council of the M. E. Church, South, 1934-39; grad. North Texas Normal; LL.D., Southwestern U.; delegate to all General Conferences (MES), 1914-34; delegate to Uniting Conference; lay leader West Texas Conference, 1914-26; member General Board of Lay Activities, 1922-26, and General Board of Missions, 1926-34 (MES).

Chitwood, J. Henry, clerical member, appointed in 1965 to fill vacancy; A.B. and D.D., Birmingham Southern C.; D.D., Athens C.; vice chairman of board of trustees of Birmingham Southern C.; delegate to six General Conferences; member of General Board of Evangelism for twelve years; pastor and district superintendent in North Alabama Conference. (See CHITWOOD, J. H.)

Clarke, Hawes P., clerical member, 1953-56; A.B. and A.M., Tulsa U.; B.D., Vanderbilt; D.D., Randolph-Macon C.; chaplain World War I; pastor and district superintendent in Virginia Conference; General Conference delegate 1934 and 1938; delegate Uniting Conference 1939; chairman board of trustees of Ferrum Junior College.

Clarke, Vincent P., lay member, 1939-48 and 1959-64; Boston attorney; trustee and secretary of Boston University and New England Deaconess Hospital; director and secretary of Goodwill Industries of America. Active in many church, community and professional organizations.

Clegg, W. Lemuel, clerical member, 1960-61; A.B. and B.D., Duke U.; D.D., Elon C.; pastor and district superintendent North Carolina Conference, served on board of trustees of Duke U. and Lafayette C.; delegate to General Conference four times and to his Jurisdictional Conference six times.

Copher, Charles Buchanan, clerical member, elected by the Uniting Conference of 1968. Was educated at Clark College in Atlanta, Ga., and the Gammon Theological Seminary there, and earned a Ph.D. from Boston University in 1947. Professor of Old Testament and Dean at the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta.

Curl, R. Floyd, clerical member, 1956-64; A.B. and A.M., Southern Methodist U.; D.D., Southwestern U.; past district superintendent and professor Perkins School of Theology; delegate to Uniting Conference 1939 and General Conferences 1940, '44, '48, '52, and '56. Member Council on World Service and Finance 1944-56. (See CURL, R. F.)

Dannelly, Clarence M., lay member, 1952-56; B.Pd., Alabama State Normal; A.B., Birmingham Southern C.; M.A., George Peabody C.; Ph.D., Yale U.; Litt.D., Birmingham Southern and Southwestern U.; LL.D. Centenary C.; Pres., Kentucky Wesleyan College 1928-33; delegate to General Conference 1922, '24, '38, '40, '44, '48; delegate to Uniting Conference; member General Board of Education 1940-52; member General Board of Lay Activities, 1944-52.

Ervin, Paul R., lay member, 1956-68; vice president 1960-64; president 1964-68; A.B. and LL.B., Duke U.; member of North Carolina state legislature 1935-37; delegate to General Conferences in 1948, 1952, 1956; member of Board of Social and Economic Relations, 1952-56; member of Commission on Promotion and Cultivation, 1952-56; chairman of board of trustees of Pfeiffer College; attorney Charlotte, N. C. (See ERVIN, PAUL R.)

Esch, I. Lynd, clerical member of the former E.U.B. Church, elected by the Uniting Conference of 1968. A graduate of Chapman College and the University of Southern California, he is presently the president of INDIANA CENTRAL COLLEGE.

French, J. Stewart, clerical member, 1939-48; member of original Judicial Council of M. E. Church, South, 1934-39; pastor of prominent churches (Holston Conference) and trusted advisor of church leaders; advocate and chief architect of provision for Judicial Council; writer of considerable portion of the historic decision declaring the 1939 union legally adopted. (See FRENCH, J. S.)

Grove, Kathryn Mowrey (Mrs. D. Dwight), lay member, elected by the Uniting Conference of 1968 and a missionary leader of the E.U.B. Church. First woman to be elected to the Judicial Council. Was a member of the Joint Commission on Church Union between The Methodist Church and the E.U.B. Church. Presently secretary of the Judicial Council.

Henry, Waights G., clerical member, 1939-52, vice pres., 1948-52; member of original Judicial Council of the M. E. Church, South, 1934-39; A.B., Southern U.; A.M. and LL.D., U. of Alabama; B.D. Vanderbilt U.; Ph.D. Boston U.; D.D. Birmingham Southern College, pastor of influential churches (North Alabama), district superintendent, teacher and author. (See HENRY, W. G.)

Hickman, Leon E., lay member elected in 1964 for eight-year term; A.B. and LL.D., Morningside C.; LL.B., Harvard U.; executive vice president of Aluminum Company of America; president board of trustees of Morningside C.; member board of trustees of Pittsburgh Conference; vice chairman Co-ordinating Council 1960-64. (See HICKMAN, LEON E.)

Holt, Ivan L., Jr., lay member, 1956-60; A.B. and J.D., U. of Chicago; circuit judge in St. Louis, Mo.; Lt. Commander in Navy, World War II; member of Survey Commission; vice-chairman Co-ordinating Council; trustee Barnes Hospital in St. Louis; member Judicial Commission of American Bar Association.

JUDICIARY, COMMITTEE ON, was a powerful committee of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church which was created to study, pass upon, and report back to the Conference matters of constitutionality or of law referred to it. The General Conference itself in the former M. E. Church was itself a Court of Appeal, since it was the highest authority in the Church. In time however the General Conference found it necessary to create a Committee on Judiciary to act for the Conference and to go into details regarding each appeal or case in a way that the great unwieldy Conference could not. Upon this committee there were usually a very able group of men—its lay members were lawyers of considerable stature, its clerical members ministers of sagacity and understanding. The committee sat as a court during the sessions of the General Conference and reported to that body. The Conference could adopt or reject such reports but such was the prestige and balance of the committee that its reports were always accepted—with possibly one or two exceptions. For the further treatment regarding the determination of constitutionality in the M. E. Churches, and for the origin of the Judicial Council, see under JUDICIAL COUNCIL.

JUIZ DE FORA, Brazil, is in the interior state of Minas Gerais, known in history for its fabulous mines, whence the name. J. J. RANSOM, pioneer missionary of the M. E. Church, South in BRAZIL, began making plans for work in this city in early 1884. He sent ahead a team of lay evangelists to sell Bibles and other books—a team made up of Samuel Elliot, a Scotch carpenter; Herman Gartner, a German Lutheran; and Ludgero de Miranda, a young Brazilian converted only a few months previously and then preparing to become a preacher. Ransom planned to follow up some weeks later with a series of evangelistic meetings. When serious illness interfered, he asked JAMES L. KENNEDY to substitute for him. Kennedy and wife moved there from RIO DE JANEIRO in May 1884, and rented a large two-story house facing the city plaza, where they could live and hold services. Kennedy with the help of Samuel Elliot put together benches to seat sixty people. When all was ready they had invitations printed, distributed, began services and got a good response. One night, however, a half-drunk priest entered the hall, kept interrupting the services, and left to return with a crowd of some thirty hoodlums and fanatics. These stopped by the windows—the house was directly on the street—and began throwing sticks and rocks into the house. Thus, under a rain of curses and missiles, Methodist work began in Juiz de Fora.

The city's liberal respectable citizens denounced the mob and priest (who had to leave town), and Kennedy continued preaching services, organized a congregation, and is considered the founder of Methodism in the state of Minas Gerais. Today, this large industrial center is one of Brazilian Methodism's strongholds; and just a block from where the hall was attacked stands one of the largest churches of Methodism in the country.

The first Methodist chapel was built in 1886, its congregation consisting largely of Germans and their descendants, among whom were the distinguished Hoehne and Becker families. In September 1890, GRANBERY COLLEGE, now called the Instituto, was founded by JOHN M. LANDER; and today is one of the best known schools in the state. Until 1938, the Methodist seminary was directly connected with it; and for some years (1913-20), the Methodist Publishing House (IMPRESA METODISTA) had its headquarters in Juiz de Fora.

The first pastors of Central Methodist Church were all missionaries. It was CHARLES A. LONG who built the beautiful sanctuary. Since then, all pastors have been Brazilians, and from its membership have come three of the bishops—CESAR DACOSO, ISAIAS SUCASAS, and JOÃO DO AMARAL. Several other Protestant denominations work in the city now; and the Methodist Church maintains cordial relations with all, as well as with the Roman Catholic leaders who once persecuted it so bitterly.

Colegio Mineiro, a Methodist educational institution for girls, was founded in 1891. In this same city, in 1889, Granbery College (now called Instituto Granbery) had been founded to serve boys, since at that time, Brazil did not look favorably on coeducation. The success of Granbery College stimulated interest in a similar institution for girls; so when it was known that the "Escola do Alto" in Rio de Janeiro was being closed due to recurring yellow-fever epidemics, Juiz de Fora citizens asked that the school be moved to their town. Mary Bruce, who had served as principal of the Escola do Alto since 1887, came to Juiz de Fora and in September 1891, opened a school with fifteen pupils.

Named the Colegio Mineiro, it prospered and served that community continuously for twenty-three years. Its success was so assured that in 1905 the Woman's Board bought for it a fine property on the town's main street. Among its principals, following Miss Bruce, were Lula Ross, Eliza B. Perkinson, Ida Shaffer, Emma Christine, LEILA EPPS, Sarah Warne, and EVA L. HYDE—all missionaries whose names should be recorded for their devotion to the cause.

As the years passed, however, the old building was in great need of repair and modernization, and conditions had so changed in Brazil that Granbery College had become coeducational and was accepting girls as students. Moreover, with plans for building Bennett in Rio de Janeiro, the board was in need of funds. It was decided to close the Mineiro and apply the price to the latter. With regret, the school closed its doors in 1914.

JUMONVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A., the training center of the WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE of the United Methodist Church, located at one of the most historic spots in America, is four miles east of Uniontown. Within the 275-acre grounds is the historic battlefield where the first bloodshed of the French and Indian War occurred in the skirmish of May 28, 1754, when a party of Virginians under the leadership of Lieutenant Colonel George Washington attacked a party of Frenchmen under the leadership of Ensign Coulon de Jumonville. Ten of the Frenchmen, including Jumonville, were killed and one Virginian. This was Washington's first battlefield.

The land, which had been occupied by one of the Pennsylvania Soldier's and Sailor's Orphan Schools from 1874 to 1909, was presented to the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE (TMC) for use as a Training Center in 1941 by HARRY WHEL, a member of the Asbury Methodist Church in Uniontown. The property, now worth in excess of $1,000,000, has been equipped and beautified by a Conference Board largely under the leadership of a generous layman, E. J. Patterson. The location of the property is dominated by a great steel illuminated cross, visible for miles from the crest of the ridge. The Training Center is named for the young French commander who lost his life here, and provides a training experience for over 5,000 youth and adults annually.

JURISDICTIONAL ORGANIZATION. Southeastern Jurisdiction, composed of the conferences in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, the two Carolinas, and Tennessee, decided in 1944 to form a Jurisdictional Council with an employed staff which would systematically promote the program of the church in the Jurisdiction. Bishops Paul B. Kern and Arthur J. Moore along with the publishing agent, Ben A. Whitmore, were among the leaders who called for such organization.

There was some objection to the formation of the Council because the Jurisdictional system was under question at that time. One opponent said, "We do not want a little Methodist Episcopal Church, South organized all by itself, when we have given up the great M. E. Church, South for the sake of a larger union." However, the Council, composed of two bishops, one lay and one clerical representative from each annual conference, eight women, and two young people, was formed. Bishop Moore was elected president and William F. Quillian (South Georgia) executive secretary. The staff office was established in Atlanta. In 1945 James W. Sells (Miss.) was named extension secretary to give special attention to missions, lay activities, town and country work, and radio and television.

Quillian retired in 1952 and was succeeded by Edgar H. Nease (W. N. Car.). At that time Sells was also given the same title, and for the next 18 years the Council had two executive secretaries. George E. Clary, Sr. (S. Ga.) succeeded Nease, serving, 1953-57. D. Trigg James (Holston) held the office, 1958-71. Sells retired in 1970, and beginning in 1971 the office reverted to one executive secretary, Robert F. Lundy (Holston), former Central Conference bishop in Singapore.

At first Jurisdictional boards of education, evangelism, missions, etc., were established, and they reported to the Jurisdictional Conference every four years. In time it was decided that Jurisdictional Council committees which would report annually or semi-annually to the Council or its executive committee would be more effective. In 1956 six such committees—Christian social emphases, education, evangelism, lay activities, missions, and town and country—were established. In 1960 a seventh committee—hospitals and homes (now health and welfare ministries)—was added.

Once every four years in mid-quadrannium a Jurisdictional Convocation is held for inspiration and the promotion of special causes, such as the United Evangelistic Mission and the Venture of Faith. Convocations have been held in Nashville, Savannah, Charlotte, Atlanta, Memphis, and Jackson (Miss.).

The Protestant Radio and TV Center, Atlanta, is partially owned and sponsored by the Jurisdictional Council. It produces the Methodist Series of The Protestant Hour, a thirty-minute public service religious radio program which is carried by more than 525 radio stations in the United States, and around the world by the Armed Forces Radio and TV services. A Joint Radio Committee of the Southeastern and South Central Jurisdictions arranges for the Methodist Series.

The Lake Junaluska Assembly in North Carolina, one of the greatest church assembly grounds in the nation, is owned by the Jurisdictional Conference. Other institutions especially relevant to the work of the Jurisdiction are Emory University, Atlanta, and the Hinton Rural Life Center, Hayesville, N. C. The latter trains workers in the Appalachian region.

Growth of church membership in the Southeastern Jurisdiction since unification in 1939 has been marked. It is now larger than the total membership of the M. E. Church, South in 1939, and it constitutes about 27 percent of both the numerical and financial strength of The United Methodist Church (U.S.A.).

Leaders of the Southeastern Jurisdiction have believed in the Jurisdictional system and have utilized its advantages for promoting the work of the church. Jurisdictional organization and esprit de corps have strengthened Methodism in the region and added vitality to the whole church.

South Central Jurisdiction. In 1944 the South Central Jurisdiction, composed of the conferences in Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas, set up an organization somewhat similar to that in the Southeastern Jurisdiction. Paul D. Womeldorf (Kansas) was elected executive secretary with an office in Oklahoma City. A Jurisdictional Council was organized. It was composed of two bishops, one clerical and one lay representative from each episcopal area, one representative from each Jurisdictional board, the chairman of the Jurisdictional Conference committees, and a few ex-officio members. Later the Council included all of the college of bishops and the presidents of the Jurisdictional Women's Society and the Historical Commission. The Council meets at least annually. A Jurisdictional Convocation is held in mid-quadrannium for inspiration and for the meeting of the Jurisdictional boards.

The 1964 Jurisdictional Conference elected a committee to make a study of the Jurisdictional boards and report in 1968. The committee recommended and the Conference approved a one-third reduction in the personnel of the boards. At the same time the Conference elected an Ad Hoc Committee to make a further study of the Jurisdictional organization and report in 1972. Some ministers and laymen believed that the Jurisdictional boards were not accomplishing enough to justify the time and expense invested in them.

Southern Methodist University, Dallas; St. Paul School of Theology Methodist, Kansas City; and Western Methodist Assembly, Mt. Sequoyah, Arkansas, belong to the South Central Jurisdiction, and each annual conference in the Jurisdiction is represented on the boards of trustees of the three institutions. All trustees elected to the S. M. U. board must be approved by the Jurisdictional Conference or by its Council or the Council's executive committee. While the Lydia Patterson Institute, El Paso, is closely related to the Rio Grande Annual Conference and the National Division of the General Board of Missions, it also enjoys a special relation to the South Central Jurisdictional Conference; it is managed by a board of trustees elected by the Jurisdictional Conference; and in the 1960's the annual conferences of the Jurisdiction accepted quotas and raised about three-quarters of a million dollars for the Institute. Conferences, workshops, and other meetings and activities that draw attendance from all over the Jurisdiction are held each summer at Western Methodist Assembly.

The Jurisdictional Council has a committee on radio and television which works with its counterpart in the Southeastern Jurisdiction to promote the Methodist Series of the Protestant Hour on the radio.

Central, North Central, Northeastern, and Western Jurisdictions. When The Methodist Church was organized in 1939, almost all of the leaders and members in the Central, North Central, Northwestern, and Western Jurisdictions came from the former M. E. Church. Since that church had regarded the Jurisdictional system more as a feature that had to be accepted in order to bring about unification than as a vital part of the Plan of Union which could be used to develop creative regional leadership and promote Jurisdictional organizations and programs that would make for efficiency and growth, it was not to be expected that these four Jurisdictions would emphasize Jurisdictional organization and activity.

Some thought that in time the Jurisdictional system would be dropped or at least modified and minimized. The 1940 Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference adopted a resolution asking its commission on entertainment to study the possibility of having all the Jurisdictional Conferences to meet simultaneously for two days at the seat and at the close of the General Conference to elect bishops and transact other business, after which the General Conference would immediately reconvene and consecrate the new bishops.

Some continue to believe that Jurisdictions in American Methodism are either superfluous or relatively unimportant. In an address before the 1956 Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference on the state of the church, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam said that while the Jurisdictional system was necessary to achieve unification, he thought it was time to scrap it as cumbersome and unnecessary. He believed that the system makes for unnecessary duplication of promotional agencies and that it divides the episcopacy.

The 1968 North Central Jurisdictional Conference adopted three motions pertaining to Jurisdictional Conferences: (1) That Jurisdictional Conference sessions be limited to three days. (2) That serious consideration be given to the advantages of holding all of the Jurisdictional Conferences at a time "either immediately before, simultaneous with, or immediately following the General Conference." (3) That the Program Council study the Jurisdictional structure and "give serious consideration to drafting a proposed constitutional amendment and other suitable legislation to eliminate the Jurisdictional system."

Throughout its history, 1939-68, the Central Jurisdiction attempted no organization for the promotion of a Jurisdictional program.

In 1944 the Western Jurisdictional Conference set up a Jurisdictional Council of 25 members to act as a planning and overall executive committee for the Jurisdiction in matters relating to the General Boards and the episcopal areas and charges in the Jurisdiction. It was to assist the General Boards in promotional work and it was to handle problems that might arise during the quadrennium. Apparently the Council did not function. The 1948 Journal says that the report of the Council was received and filed with the secretary and was to be referred by him to the proper standing committees. Thereafter the Western Jurisdiction was slow to initiate any organization or activity not required by the Discipline. However, by 1968 it had a Commission on Archives and History, a Commission on Theological Recruitment and Support, and a Committee to Study the Samoan Methodist Church.

By 1956 the North Central Jurisdictional Conference took note of the fact that there were several voluntary Jurisdictional organizations, such as the Woman's Society, the Association of Christian Education, and the Secretaries of Evangelism. Also, it was noted that as needs had emerged in the Jurisdiction, committees or other organizations had been created to meet them. Since the operation of such committees frequently need coordination, the 1956 Conference created an Executive Committee on Jurisdictional Activities as the coordinating agency. In 1960 the name was changed to the Regional Council. In making his report in 1960, the chairman, Alva I. Cox, observed that while the North Central Jurisdiction did not favor a highly organized Jurisdictional structure, nevertheless "some things must almost of necessity be done in The Methodist Church on a regional basis." He said he used the word regional because it "doesn't have quite as bad a taste in the mouth of some people as the word jurisdictional." Also, he said that at first some members of the Executive Committee "called a Jurisdiction almost an evil thing," but as time passed some of them said that if the church did not have a Jurisdictional system "some kind of regional organization" would have to be created "in order to carry forward the work of the church." In reporting to the 1968 Jurisdictional Conference, the president of the Regional Council said, "It seems to me we would do well to tighten the organization and concentrate on projects and programing not handled by other organizations."

In 1964 the Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference set up a committee to study the Jurisdictional system and instructed it to write petitions based on its findings to the 1968 General Conference. Though funds were provided, for some unexplained reason the committee did not meet. When a motion was made at the 1968 Jurisdictional Conference to reconstitute the committee and instruct it to report in 1972, Charles C. Parlin pointed out that the Jurisdictional system was carefully studied by the joint commissions on the union of The Methodist and E.U.B. Churches and in the end they voted unanimously "to continue the five geographical" Jurisdictions. He added that while he did not favor using time and manpower to study the Jurisdictional system, "we might well study how to make our Jurisdictions function, because we know the Southeast and South Central have very active promotional schemes and attribute their successes . . . to the promotional work of the Jurisdiction." The Conference then voted to reconstitute the committee in accordance with Parlin's suggestion.

Since 1964 all of the geographical Jurisdictions have had fully organized Jurisdictional Historical organizations (now called Commissions on Archives and History). The Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference authorized a Jurisdictional Association of Methodist Historical Societies at its first session in 1940. The organizations came into being in the other Jurisdictions as follows: North Central, 1948; South Central, 1952; Southeastern, 1956; and Western, 1964.

The organization of Jurisdictional Historical Associations was due more to the prodding of the American Association of Methodist Historical Societies than to a demand for them on the part of historically minded Jurisdictional Conference delegates. The American Association was recognized by the 1940 General Conference and that body authorized it to form Associations of Methodist Historical Societies in both Jurisdictional and annual conferences.

Notwithstanding differences of opinion regarding the necessity or usefulness of the Jurisdictional system in American Methodism, it appears that the system will continue indefinitely. Also, it appears that there will be more organization and promotion in some Jurisdictions and less in others.

JURISDICTIONS are major divisions of The United Methodist Church in the United States as first established by the PLAN OF UNION adopted in 1939, which became on its adoption the Constitution of The Methodist Church. Each Jurisdiction is composed of several Annual Conferences, and delegates from these Annual Conferences meet in a Jurisdictional Conference once every four years. Under the Plan of Union, the Conferences within the United States were divided geographically into five jurisdictions, and the Central Jurisdiction which was composed of the Negro Annual Conferences. The Jurisdictions were outlined as follows in the Plan of Union of 1939:

America I.—The Methodist Church in the United States of America shall have Jurisdictional Conferences made up as follows:

North-eastern—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia, Delaware, District of Columbia, Puerto Rico.

Southeastern—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Cuba.

Central—The Negro Annual Conferences, the Negro Mission Conferences and Missions in the United States of America.

North Central—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota.

South Central—Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico.

Western—Washington, Idaho, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Alaska, Hawaiian Islands.

The Jurisdiction outlines given above were continued in The United Methodist Church, except that the Central Jurisdiction was eliminated, its Conferences going into the five geographic Jurisdictions. CUBA, having become autonomous, was dropped from the Southeastern Jurisdiction; and the E.U.B. Conference in CANADA covering the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia was added to the Western Jurisdiction.

History of the Jurisdictional Plan. The plan of uniting the two Episcopal Methodisms in the United States, together with the M. P. CHURCH, in a jurisdictional or regional system, which, while creating a huge united church, would at the same time allow each region to have certain administrative powers in the management of its own affairs, was one which was greatly debated and discussed through many years previous to Methodist Union. Bishop JOHN M. MOORE, in his book, The Long Road to Methodist Union, makes it plain that every suggestion of union and every commission or joint commission which met through the last part of the nineteenth century and the first thirty years of the twentieth century, always had the jurisdictional plan in some form before them for adoption and discussion. Inherently it was a Southern plan, and before and after the plan had been adopted, it was charged that the Southern championship of the plan was motivated by a desire to keep the Negro Conferences in a segregated jurisdiction. Proponents of the plan denied this, stating that it was to protect a minority—which the M. E. Church, South was—from the type of GENERAL CONFERENCE majority action which had divided the Church in 1844.

Lending great weight to the argument for jurisdictions was the undeniable fact that a church as large as united Methodism promised to be, would have difficulty in operating and administering effectively its vast work through one enormous General Conference. Such a representative body, it was admitted, should and could make laws as the sovereign power in all church-wide connectional matters. But for administrative work, for electing bishops, and for directing purely regional work and promotional activity, a body more flexible than a monolithic General Conference was advisable. It was seen that it would be difficult for the whole General Conference to elect bishops wisely—as had been the case up to that time—since the different regions of the country would not know each other's leaders, as would be possible in jurisdictional divisions. Also supporting strongly the jurisdictional idea was the fact that the M. E. Church already had CENTRAL CONFERENCES overseas, with great inherent administrative powers. These, exerting their local sovereignty in matters of their own control, and with the right to elect bishops (as in INDIA), were proving to be of high value, managing their own affairs and yet subject to the general Church.

But there were equally strong arguments against the whole proposal. It was felt that strong Jurisdictional Conferences would create that many separate churches, not one great Church, and that the itinerant general superintendency, one of the pillars of all Methodist polity, would be destroyed by jurisdictional fission. It was also felt that neither bishops nor connectional officers, jurisdictionally selected, would have sufficient church-wide standing unless and until the sovereign General Conference could elect, consecrate and commission them for the whole Church.

As it turned out, the Jurisdictional plan was finally adopted by the commissioners of the three Churches and became the basis of the whole Plan of Union. The separate Negro Conferences, nineteen of them, belonging to the M. E. Church, were placed in a separate jurisdiction having the right to elect their own bishops and representatives, and having equal representation with the other regional divisions in all connectional matters of the church. Great tension, however, came about at once over the "segregated jurisdiction" which the Negro conferences were said to be, and indeed until 1968, following Church Union, amendments were placed in the Constitution, and repeated directions were given by successive General Conferences looking to the elimination of the Central Jurisdiction by the absorption of its Conferences, its churches and its people in the regional jurisdictions.

When the organization into the Jurisdictions was introduced at the time of Unification, there was uncertainty as to whether such a division should be called a "Jurisdiction" or a "Jurisdictional Conference." Some of the resulting inconsistencies are still found in the Constitution; but eventually all legislation was edited as to conform to the popular usage which had by that time become established, and that is to use the word "Jurisdiction," for the entity, and to call its administrative body, meeting once every four years, the "Jurisdictional Conference."

The jurisdictional pattern and plan was carried over into the constitution and plan of union of The United Methodist Church in 1968. However, the Central Jurisdiction, at the expressed wish of the General Conference of 1964, was not mentioned in the 1968 plan of union. There is no Central Jurisdiction in The United Methodist Church. The conferences formerly composing the Central Jurisdiction were received in 1968 into the geographic jurisdictions surrounding them, with the expectation that they would merge as rapidly as possible with the overlapping white annual conferences in each jurisdiction. At the present writing the merging process has almost been completed. The last session of the Central Jurisdictional Conference was held in 1967, as will appear in the following outlines of jurisdictional conference sessions.

Central Jurisdictional Conference. The session began with the Lord's Supper on June 18, in Union Memorial Church, St. Louis, Mo., with senior Bishop ROBERT E. JONES presiding. The two other bishops of the Jurisdiction were present—ALEXANDER P. SHAW and M. W. CLAIR, Sr. (retired). There were 118 delegates from the nineteen annual conferences. J. W. Haywood (East Tennessee) was elected secretary and David D. Jones, treasurer.

The episcopal message was read by Bishop Jones. The message sought to interpret the reason for the establishment of the Central Jurisdiction as the means by which Unification was consummated. The message said:

A majority of the Negro membership of the M. E. Church registered an opinion against the Plan of Union very largely on the ground that the Central Jurisdiction was set upon racial lines and therefore unlike the other five Jurisdictional Conferences . . . Why, then did those of us who constitute the Central Jurisdiction accept this restriction constituting a Jurisdiction on race lines? Answer: Morally we refuse to desert an effort to work out an ideal.—So long as we are working toward the ideal we have every reason to be not weary in well doing.—There are noble seekers of the truth of brotherhood in the South as well as the North. And with the advance guard of the South we prefer to cast our lot, rather than with those who preach darkness and despair.—It therefore behooves us at the very beginning of our career as a separate Jurisdiction to recognize the gravity of our responsibility as well as the favorableness of our opportunity . . .

Bishop HOYT M. DOBBS addressed the Conference as the official representative of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS. This Conference had the distinction of being the first Jurisditional Conference to elect bishops in The Methodist Church. On June 20, W. A. C. HUGHES (Washington Conference) was elected on the second ballot, and on June 21, LORENZO H. KING (New York East) was elected on the fifth ballot.

The assignment of bishops to episcopal areas was: Atlanta, Lorenzo H. King; Baltimore, Alexander P. Shaw; Columbus, Robert E. Jones; New Orleans, W. A. C. Hughes. The Conference adjourned on June 23 after the consecration of Bishops Hughes and King.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference. The first session was held at First Methodist Church (Chicago Temple), Chicago, Ill., June 26-30, with 383 delegates. Present from the College of Bishops were Edgar Blake, Ralph S. Cushman, Titus Lowe, J. Ralph Magee, H. Lester Smith, Raymond J. Wade, Ernest L. Waldorf, and Missionary Bishop Edwin F. Lee. Raymond M. Shipman was elected secretary.

The Episcopal Address, read by Bishop Edgar Blake, was a studied review of the state of the nation, and of the relationships of the Church to its history and future. There was a ringing call for EVANGELISM. The bishops said that evangelism without education leaves the spiritually redemptive process but partially done; hence, the need for revitalized programs of Christian education in the local church as well as in the areas of higher education. The blight of war was already a specter abroad over the lands. Iniquities of the economic order, crime, the liquor traffic, moral decay, said the bishops, were the demons calling for the redemptive concerns of the Church.

The wisdom of the jurisdictional system came up for questioning at two points. A memorial was introduced suggesting a strong preference for consecrating bishops elected by the Jurisdictions at the seat of the GENERAL CONFERENCE. The matter was referred to the Committee on Entertainment for consideration in the ensuing quadrennium.

There was strong opposition to the organization of Jurisdictional Boards and Commissions. However, provision was made for Jurisdictional Boards of Lay Activities, Education, and Missions. An enabling act was passed permitting the three INDIANA Conferences to adjust their boundaries at such time as they deemed desirable. In a report from a special committee on Policy and Objectives, provision was made for the calling of one Jurisdictional, one Area, and additional mid-quadrennial Conventions to insure the most effective promotional strategies with respect to program passed on from the General and Jurisdictional Conferences.

Bishops NUELSEN and Blake were granted the retired relation, joining Bishops LEETE and NICHOLSON who had previously retired. Assignments of the bishops were: Chicago, E. L. Waldorf; Cincinnati, H. Lester Smith; Des Moines, J. Ralph Magee; Detroit, Raymond J. Wade; Indianapolis, Titus Lowe; St. Paul, Ralph S. Cushman; Elisabethville, Belgian Congo, JOHN M. SPRINGER; Singapore-Manila, Edwin F. Lee.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference. The first session was held at the Municipal Auditorium, Atlantic City, N. J., June 18-21, 1940. Albert G. Judd (NORTHERN NEW YORK) was elected secretary, and J. Edgar Washbaugh, treasurer. Bishop CHARLES C. SELECMAN, representing the Council of Bishops, delivered an address on, "Christian Optimism." Much discussion was centered around "the responsibility of the United States for the present world situation of international anarchy." The general rules by which subsequent Northeastern Jurisdictional Conferences have been governed were adopted by the Conference, with J. Edgar Skillington as chairman of the Committee on Rules. Bishop EDWIN HOLT HUGHES delivered the closing address.

No bishops were elected at this session. The episcopal assignments were: Boston, G. BROMLEY OXNAM; New York, F. J. MCCONNELL; Philadelphia, E. G. RICHARDSON; Pittsburgh, J. H. STRAUGHN; Syracuse, C. W. FLINT; Washington, ADNA W. LEONARD; foreign service, Bishop BRENTON T. BADLEY, Delhi, India.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference, met May 28-31, 1940, in OKLAHOMA CITY, with 296 delegates present. Paul M. Hillman was elected secretary. The conference was called to order by Bishop CHARLES L. MEAD. Other bishops present were: Charles C. Selecman, A. FRANK SMITH, IVAN LEE HOLT, WILLIAM C. MARTIN, JOHN C. BROOMFIELD, JOHN M. MOORE (retired), SAM R. HAY (retired), HIRAM A. BOAZ (retired). Representing the Council of Bishops was Bishop WILBUR E. HAMMAKER. Bishop Charles L. Mead retired at this Conference. The Episcopal Message was read by Bishop Ivan Lee Holt. It surveyed the recently consummated union of Episcopal Methodism and called attention to the responsibilities of the Jurisdictional Conference. No new bishops were elected. Bishops were assigned as follows: Houston, A. Frank Smith; Dallas, Ivan Lee Holt; Oklahoma City, Charles C. Selecman; Omaha, William C. Martin; and St. Louis, John C. Broomfield.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference met May 22-27, in the Municipal Auditorium, Asheville, N. C., with 332 delegates, LUD H. ESTES (Memphis), secretary of the General Conference, was elected secretary. Bishops present: W. N. AINSWORTH, JAMES CANNON, JR., U. V. W. DARLINGTON, J. LLOYD DECELL, HOYT M. DOBBS, PAUL B. KERN, ARTHUR J. MOORE, W. W. PEELE, CLARE PURCELL, W. T. WATKINS. The Episcopal Message was given by Bishop Darlington. Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes represented the Council of Bishops.

Since this was the first jurisdictional conference for those present, and since there were no episcopal elections, and no legislation to enact, an atmosphere of some uncertainty marked this gathering.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlanta, Arthur J. Moore; Birmingham, J. Lloyd Decell; Charlotte, Clare Purcell; Columbia, W. T. Watkins; Jackson, Hoyt M. Dobbs; Louisville, U. V. W. Darlington; Nashville, Paul B. Kern; Richmond, W. W. Peele.

Western Jurisdictional Conference convened in Glide Memorial Church, SAN FRANCISCO, July 9-14, and was called to order by Bishop JAMES C. BAKER. Frederick L. Pedersen was elected secretary; he certified that 106 delegates were present. J. WESLEY HOLE was elected treasurer. A Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishops James C. Baker, WILBUR E. HAMMAKER and GEORGE A. MILLER (retired). The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop W. E. Hammaker.

Bishop TITUS LOWE represented the Council of Bishops and read a statement which had been prepared by that Council warning against the Jurisdictional Conference system becoming "a church within a church."

The Conference decided that the Western Jurisdiction would not have any jurisdictional boards which would involve salaried employees and apportionments against the local churches. The WYOMING STATE CONFERENCE was granted permission to continue as an annual conference, even though it did not have the required number of ministerial members.

BRUCE BAXTER, president of WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, was elected bishop on the thirteenth ballot. Bishop Baxter was consecrated in the City Temple, San Francisco.

The Episcopal assignments were: Denver, Wilbur E. Hammaker; Los Angeles, James C. Baker; Portland, Bruce R. Baxter.

1944

Central Jurisdictional Conference was called to order at BENNETT COLLEGE, Greensboro, N. C., June 8-11. Senior Bishop Robert E. Jones conducted the communion service. Other bishops present were: Alexander P. Shaw and L. H. King, J. W. Haywood, re-elected secretary, reported 126 delegates present. The secretary reported the following deceased members of the Conference: Bishops W. A. C. Hughes and Matthew W. Clair; Ministers J. W. Jewett (Delaware); Laymen E. Luther Brooks (Atlanta) and R. B. Hayes (Louisiana).

The episcopal address, read by Bishop A. P. Shaw, was notable for its keen insight into the current problems faced by the church. He said, "We accept the setting apart of a Central Jurisdiction only as an administrative arrangement for the Negro membership in the Methodist Church. . . . We are hopeful that in the near future our Methodism may become sufficiently Christian in character and maturity to find a more excellent way."

The Conference elected three bishops with the understanding that the first one chosen should be assigned to LIBERIA. WILLIS J. KING was elected on the first ballot, ROBERT N. BROOKS on the fourth, and EDWARD W. KELLY on the sixth. Bishop Robert E. Jones retired.

Assignments of the bishops were: Atlantic Coast, Lorenzo H. King; Baltimore, Alexander P. Shaw; St. Louis, Edward W. Kelly; Monrovia, Willis J. King; New Orleans, Robert N. Brooks.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference convened at MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 29, 1944, with 360 delegates. Bishops Cushman, Lowe, Magee, H. L. Smith, Wade, and Missionary Bishop E. F. Lee were present. Bishops Edgar Blake, Thomas Nicholson, and Ernest L. Waldorf, and Mrs. J. Ralph Magee had died during the quadrennium. Raymond M. Shipman was elected secretary, Fred D. Stone treasurer, and Aubrey S. Moore assistant treasurer. Bishop John M. Springer retired. CHARLES W. BRASHARES (Detroit), and SCHUYLER E. GARTH (Northeast Ohio), were elected bishops on the fourth and eighteenth ballots, respectively.

The Conference set up promotional strategies for the quadrennial program, the CRUSADE FOR CHRIST, which had been adopted by the General Conference, and of which Bishop J. Ralph Magee was the general chairman. The Episcopal Address cautioned against the formation of Jurisdictional Boards and agencies, recommending instead the development of temporary auxiliary committees to the general boards. Under this policy, the Jurisdictional Council on Christian Education came into being to facilitate the development of the concerns of Christian Education within the Jurisdiction. A memorial to the General Conference asked for a study of the time and place of the Jurisdictional Conferences; and a companion study was ordered concerning the basic functions of the Jurisdictional Conferences in the Methodist system.

Assignments of the bishops were: Chicago, J. Ralph Magee; Des Moines, Charles W. Brashares; Detroit, Raymond J. Wade; Indianapolis, Titus Lowe; Ohio, H. Lester Smith; St. Paul, Ralph S. Cushman; Wisconsin, Schuyler E. Garth.

The Conference approved the appointment of Bishop Edwin F. Lee by the Federal Council of Churches as Director of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, along with his assignment to the Singapore-Manila Area, with the understanding that he assume duties there as soon as world conditions would permit. It was voted that the College of Bishops of the Jurisdiction provide presidential and visitational supervision for the Central Conference of Northern Europe year by year, until that conference should elect its own bishop.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference was held in OCEAN CITY, N. J., June 7-11, at the Music Pier and First Methodist Church. There were air raid alerts and blackouts during the conference because of the European conflict. Bishops elected were FRED PIERCE CORSON (Central Pennsylvania), W. EARL LEDDEN (Troy) and L. O. HARTMAN (New England). NEWELL SNOW BOOTH was elected a bishop for AFRICA on the first ballot after a list of five nominations for that post had been submitted to the conference. The bishops elected were consecrated in the Music Pier, Ocean City, June 11. Episcopal assignments were: Boston, Lewis O. Hartman; New York, G. Bromley Oxnam; Philadelphia, Fred P. Corson; Pittsburgh, James H. Straughn; Syracuse, W. Earl Ludden; Washington, Charles W. Flint; Foreign service, Brenton T. Badley and Newell S. Booth.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference was held at TULSA, Okla., June 12-16. Paul M. Hillman was elected secretary, and he reported 289 delegates. Bishops present were C. C. Selecman, A. Frank Smith, W. C. Martin, Ivan Lee Holt, and J. C. Broomfield, H. A. Boaz (retired) and John M. Moore (retired). The Conference began with the celebration of the Lord's Supper led by Bishop Ivan Lee Holt. The Episcopal Address pleaded for evangelism and education, appraised the problems and the opportunities confronting the church while the nation was engaged in the world war, and looked ahead to the post-war period.

Bishop W. W. Peele, representing the Council of Bishops, gave an encouraging message. Bishop ELEAZAR GUERRA brought greetings from MEXICO. Deceased bishops memorialized were Charles L. Mead and Sam R. Hay. The Conference decided to elect two new bishops. On the second ballot, W. ANGIE SMITH was elected, and on the eleventh PAUL E. MARTIN, both from North Texas. Episcopal assignments were: Arkansas and Louisiana, Paul E. Martin; Dallas, C. C. Selecman; Houston, A. Frank Smith; Kansas-Nebraska, W. C. Martin; Oklahoma-New Mexico, W. Angie Smith; and St. Louis, Ivan Lee Holt.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference met in Wesley Memorial Church, ATLANTA, Ga., June 22-26, with 336 delegates. Lud H. Estes was re-elected secretary. Bishops present: J. L. Decell, H. M. Dobbs, James Cannon, Jr., Paul B. Kern, Arthur J. Moore, W. W. Peele, Clare Purcell, W. T. Watkins. Bishops U. V. W. Darlington and Hoyt M. Dobbs were retired. Memorial services were held for Bishops W. N. Ainsworth, W. A. Candler, Collins Denny, and H. M. DuBose.

Bishop Paul B. Kern gave the Episcopal Message calling for an awakening to evangelistic responsibility, and for support of the Crusade for Christ. Bishop Ernest G. Richardson represented the Council of Bishops.

Bishops elected were: COSTEN J. HARRELL (Tennessee) on the sixth ballot; and PAUL NEFF GARBER (Western North Carolina) on the fourth ballot, following a tense deadlock between R. Z. Tyler (Florida), and W. A. Smart (Virginia).

The Conference voted to create a Jurisdictional headquarters and executive staff to promote the interests of the Jurisdiction through its component conferences. A Commission on Inter-Racial Action was formed to prepare and execute "a program of action that will have as its purpose the elimination of all racial injustices which are harmful to any race."

Episcopal assignments were: Atlanta, Arthur J. Moore; Birmingham, Costen J. Harrell; Charlotte, Clare Purcell; Geneva, Switzerland, Paul N. Garber; Jackson, J. Lloyd Decell; Louisville, W. T. Watkins; Nashville, Paul B. Kern; Richmond, W. W. Peele.

Western Jurisdictional Conference convened with 108 delegates, July 12, in First Church, Salt Lake City. Frederick L. Pedersen was elected secretary. A Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishops Wilbur E. Hammaker, Bruce R. Baxter, James C. Baker, William C. Martin and CARLETON LACY. The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop James C. Baker, Bishop Alexander P. Shaw brought greetings from the Council of Bishops.

A proposal to establish a fourth episcopal area was vigorously debated and defeated. Roy L. Smith made an eloquent appeal in support of the Crusade for Christ. A Jurisdictional Council was established and Ernest Peterson and J. Wesley Hole, two laymen, were elected president and secretary. There were no episcopal elections and no changes in the area assignment of the bishops.

Central Jurisdictional Conference opened in the M. S. Davage Auditorium, CLARK COLLEGE, Atlanta, Ga., June 9, with senior Bishop Alexander P. Shaw presiding. Bishops present were Robert N. Brooks, Edward W. Kelly, Willis J. King, Alexander P. Shaw, and Robert E. Jones (retired). A memorial service was held for deceased Bishop Lorenzo H. King, and for delegates-elect Karl Downs (West Texas); William H. Hightower (Texas); and E. Oscar Woolfolk (Central West).

K. W. McMillan (West Texas) was elected secretary and David D. Jones (North Carolina) treasurer; 124 official delegates were present. The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop Robert N. Brooks. He emphasized the need for The Methodist Church "to take her place in the vanguard of every moral reform." A large part of the address pointed to the need for protecting the civil rights of Negroes in America.

The Conference voted to elect one bishop. J. W. E. BOWEN (Louisiana) was chosen on the third ballot. Bishop Arthur J. Moore represented the Council of Bishops. The Conference ordered the appointment of a Commission to study the Central Jurisdiction.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlantic Coast, J. W. E. Bowen; Baltimore, Alexander P. Shaw; Monrovia, Willis J. King; New Orleans, Robert N. Brooks; St. Louis, Edward W. Kelly.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference met at Roberts Park Church, Indianapolis, July 7, with 371 delegates. Bishops Brashares, Cushman, Lowe, Magee and Wade were present. (Bishop Lee was hospitalized upon arrival.) Raymond Shipman was elected secretary and Thomas Lugg, treasurer.

Bishops elected: RICHARD C. BAINES (Minnesota), MARSHALL R. REED (Detroit), H. CLIFFORD NORTHCOTT (Illinois), HAZEN C. WERNER (Ohio).

Special attention was given in the Episcopal Address to the death of Bishop S. E. Garth in an airplane accident in China. Bishop Richardson had been called to succeed him, and upon the latter's death, Bishop E. H. Hughes completed the quadrennium in the Wisconsin Area.

The future of the Jurisdictions occupied much attention; resolutions adopted asked that they be set to meet in conjunction with the General Conference, and that a working agenda be prepared in advance of each session. Voluntary associations of concerned agencies were encouraged while formal Jurisdictional Boards were discouraged. Northern Minnesota and Minnesota Conferences were declared merged; and enabling legislation was passed for merger of the Northwest Iowa and Upper Iowa Conferences.

Bishop E. F. Lee was retired by reason of health; and Bishops H. Lester Smith, Lowe, and Wade by the age limit. Episcopal assignments were: Chicago, Magee; Des Moines, Brashares; Detroit, Reed; Indianapolis, Raines; Ohio, Werner; St. Paul, Cushman; and Wisconsin, Northcott.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference met in Trinity Church, Albany, N. Y., June 16-20, with 317 delegates. Albert C. Judd was secretary and J. Edgar Washabaugh treasurer. Enthusiastic support for the quadrennial program, "The Advance for Christ and His Church," was given by the Conference. LLOYD C. WICKE (Pittsburgh) and JOHN WESLEY LORD (Newark) were elected bishops. Episcopal assignments were: Boston, John Wesley Lord; New York, C. Bromley Oxnam; Philadelphia, Fred P. Corson; Pittsburgh, Lloyd C. Wicke; Syracuse, W. Earl Ledden; Washington, Charles W. Flint; Elizabethtown, Newell S. Booth.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference met June 23-28, at El Paso, Texas, with 286 delegates. E. L. Jorns was elected secretary.

Bishops present were Paul E. Martin, W. C. Martin, A. Frank Smith, W. Angie Smith, Ivan Lee Holt, Charles C. Selecman, Hiram A. Boaz (retired), and John C. Broomfield (retired). (Bishop John M. Moore was reported to be in the hospital.) Bishop Ralph S. Cushman represented the Council of Bishops. Bishop Charles C. Selecman retired at this conference.

The Episcopal Message was read by Bishop Selecman. DANA DAWSON of the Louisiana Conference was elected bishop on the twenty-ninth ballot. Episcopal assignments were: Paul E. Martin, Arkansas-Louisiana; Dallas-Fort Worth, William C. Martin; Houston, A. Frank Smith; Kansas-Nebraska, Dana Dawson; Oklahoma-New Mexico, W. Angie Smith; St. Louis, Ivan Lee Holt.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference met in the Township Auditorium, Columbia, S. C., June 30—July 4, with 338 delegates. Bishops present were Paul N. Garber, Costen J. Harrell, Paul B. Kern, Arthur J. Moore, W. W. Peele, Clare Purcell and W. T. Watkins. Memorial services were held for Bishops James Cannon, Jr. and J. Lloyd Decell. Lud H. Estes was re-elected secretary.

Bishop J. Ralph Magee represented the Council of Bishops. The Episcopal Message was given by Bishop W. W. Peele, stressing the implications of the Christian Gospel for human problems, especially in reference to industry, race relations, economic opportunity and alcoholism. The Message asserted that the church was a mission to the whole of life, and to all areas of the world.

Bishops elected: MARVIN A. FRANKLIN (North Alabama) and ROY H. SHORT (Louisville).

The SOUTH CAROLINA and UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCES at their request were merged to form the South Carolina Conference.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlanta, Arthur J. Moore; Birmingham, Clare Purcell; Charlotte, Coston J. Harrell; Geneva, Paul N. Garber; Jackson, Marvin A. Franklin; Jacksonville, Roy H. Short; Louisville, W. T. Watkins; Nashville, Paul B. Kern; Richmond, W. W. Peele.

Western Jurisdictional Conference met in Seattle, Wash., July 7-11, with 109 delegates. Wilbur E. Stanton was elected secretary. The Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishops James C. Baker, Wilbur E. Hammaker, Francis J. McConnell and Paul E. Martin. The conference was greatly grieved over the untimely death of Bishop Bruce R. Baxter.

Bishop Wilbur E. Hammaker delivered the Episcopal Address, and Bishop Paul E. Martin represented the Council of Bishops. Among significant actions taken was the vote of the conference to establish a fourth episcopal area by dividing the Los Angeles area and establishing a new episcopal residence at San Francisco. The Jurisdictional Council, which had been organized in 1944, was discontinued by vote of the conference.

Bishop Hammaker retired at this conference, and three new bishops were elected: GLENN R. PHILLIPS (Southern California-Arizona), GERALD H. KENNEDY (Nebraska), and DONALD H. TIPPETT (South California-Arizona). The election of Bishop Kennedy marked the first time any Jurisdictional Conference had chosen a bishop from outside its own bounds. Episcopal assignments were: Denver, Glenn R. Phillips; Los Angeles, James C. Baker; Portland, Gerald H. Kennedy; San Francisco, Donald H. Tippet.

1952

Central Jurisdictional Conference met June 18, Tindley Temple, Philadelphia with 118 delegates. The celebrant for the Communion service was Bishop Robert N. Brooks, with the sermon by Bishop Robert E. Jones. Other bishops present: J. W. E. Bowen, E. W. Kelley, and Willis J. King. K. W. McMillan was elected secretary. The Episcopal Address was given by Bishop Bowen, in which he said that there will be no solution to race problems until it is solved on the local level.

Bishops Donald H. Tippet and Glenn R. Phillips, representing the Council of Bishops, addressed the Conference. Bishops Edward W. Kelley and Alexander P. Shaw were granted the retired relation. EDGAR A. LOVE was elected bishop on the third ballot and MATTHEW W. CLAIR, JR. on the fourth ballot.

The conference approved the merger of the Atlanta and Savannah Conferences to form the GEORGIA CONFERENCE; and the merger of the Florida and South Florida Conferences to form the FLORIDA CONFERENCE. This action reduced the number of annual conferences in the Jurisdiction to seventeen.

Bishops Fred P. Corson, Frederick B. Newell, Jr. and Titus Lowe were presented to the conference. The conference also acknowledged the presence of MARY MCLEOD BETHUNE, president emeritus of Bethune-Cookman College. Representatives from the Liberia Annual Conference presented a resolution seeking franchise rights in the Central Jurisdictional Conference. J. P. Brawley reported for the Commission to Study the Central Jurisdiction, and the commission was continued and directed to report to the 1956 conference. Marian Anderson, the noted singer, was presented in a concert.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlantic Coast, J. W. E. Bowen; Baltimore, Edgar A. Love; New Orleans, Robert N. Brooks; St. Louis, Matthew W. Clair, Jr.; Monrovia, Willis J. King.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference convened at Civic Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis., July 9, with 344 delegates. All active bishops of the Jurisdiction were present, along with Bishops Lowe, Wade, and Springer, retired. Bishops E. F. Lee and H. Lester Smith had died during the quadrennium.

Three bishops were elected: D. STANLEY COORS (Michigan), EDWIN E. VOIGT (Iowa-Des Moines), and F. GERALD ENSLEY (Ohio). Bishops Ralph S. Cushman and J. Ralph Magee were granted the retired relation.

The Episcopal Address took note of the rapidly developing industrialization of the Jurisdiction, and warned against the tendency toward secularization of society, including the church. The Dakotas Area, comprised of the states of North and South Dakota, was established with the episcopal residence in Aberdeen, S. D.

Episcopal assignments were: Chicago, C. W. Brashares; Dakotas, E. E. Voigt; Des Moines, F. C. Ensley; Detroit, M. R. Reed; Indianapolis, R. C. Raines; Minnesota, D. S. Coors; Ohio, H. G. Werner; Wisconsin, H. C. Northcott.

The Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishop Wilbur E. Hammaker, assisted by Bishops James C. Baker, Gerald H. Kennedy, Donald H. Tippet, Glenn R. Phillips and John Wesley Lord. The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop Phillips, and Bishop Lord represented the Council of Bishops.

The Conference emphasized Christian Higher Education within the bounds of the jurisdiction in the spotlight.

Bishop James C. Baker retired; a Service Recognition for him and Mrs. Baker was held during the session. A. RAYMOND GRANT (California-Nevada) was elected bishop.

Episcopal assignments were: Denver, Glenn R. Phillips; Los Angeles, Gerald H. Kennedy; Portland, A. Raymond Grant; San Francisco, Donald H. Tippet.

1956

Central Jurisdictional Conference opened in Lawless Chapel, DILLARD UNIVERSITY, New Orleans, La., June 13, with 118 delegates. George W. Carter, Jr. (Louisiana) was elected secretary, and A. M. Carter treasurer. Bishop Edward W. Kelly delivered the meditation for the Communion Service and Bishop Matthew W. Clair, Jr. was the celebrant. Bishops present were: J. W. E. Bowen, Robert E. Jones (retired), Edgar A. Love, Alexander P. Shaw (retired), Matthew W. Clair, Jr., Edward W. Kelly (retired), Willis J. King.

Memorial services were held for bishops and members of the conference who had died during the year: Bishop Robert N. Brooks, David D. Jones (North Carolina), Charles H. Dubra (Mississippi), and M. W. Boyd (East Tennessee), and Mary McLeod Bethune.

The Episcopal address was delivered by Bishop Willis J. King, who emphasized the great need for evangelism, a trained ministry, and continued support of our schools and colleges. Also, he said that the 1956 General Conference had pointed the way to a solution of the problem of the Central Jurisdiction. "The net result of the deliberations of the Minneapolis General Conference was to restate the ideal of the fundamental brotherhood of all men. . . . The new amendments, if adopted, . . . will make possible the complete abolition of the Central Jurisdiction in the not-too distant future, if that is the desire of both groups involved."

PRINCE A. TAYLOR (North Carolina) was elected bishop. The Conference considered the report of the Commission to Study the Central Jurisdiction.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlantic Coast, J. W. E.

Bowen; Baltimore, Edgar A. Love; Monrovia, Prince A. Taylor; New Orleans, Willis J. King; St. Louis, Matthew W. Clair, Jr.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference convened at Des Moines, Iowa, July 11, with 354 delegates. Bishops Brashares, Coors, Ensley, Northcott, Raines, Reed, Voigt, Lowe, Magee, Werner were present. Raymond Shipman was re-elected secretary to serve until the Journal was published, and R. Merrill Powers (Rock River) was elected to succeed him.

There being no episcopal vacancies, the attention of the Conference focused on making the Jurisdictional organization more effective. In accordance with recommendations made by a special committee of eight, the College of Bishops appointed a continuing Executive Committee on Jurisdictional Activities to consist of the bishops and one minister and one layman from each annual conference.

Episcopal area names were changed to coincide with the states, and the assignments were: Dakotas, E. E. Voigt; Illinois, C. W. Brashares; Indiana, R. C. Raines; Iowa, F. G. Ensley; Michigan, M. R. Reed; Minnesota, D. S. Coors; Ohio, H. G. Werner; Wisconsin, H. C. Northcott.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference met June 13-15 at the Music Pier, Ocean City, N. J. with 283 delegates. Frank W. Ake was elected secretary. Rules of the Conference were amended to allow election of a non-member of the conference as treasurer. Governor Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey addressed the Conference. The transfer of the Mitchell Memorial Church from the Central Jurisdiction's WASHINGTON CONFERENCE to the Northeastern Jurisdiction's CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE was effected. Special emphasis during the Conference was on Christian Higher Education, with addresses by Russell J. Humbert of DEPAUW UNIVERSITY, and President FRED C. HOLLOWAY of DREW UNIVERSITY. Bishop C. Bromley Oxnam delivered an address on the state of the church in which he strongly discounted the value of the Jurisdictional system in Methodism. A concert was given by the LYCOMING COLLEGE Choir. Episcopal assignments were: Boston, John Wesley Lord; New York, Frederick B. Newell; Philadelphia, Fred P. Corson; Pittsburgh, Lloyd C. Wicke; Syracuse, W. Earl Ledden; Washington, C. Bromley Oxnam; Overseas service, Newell S. Booth. Ralph W. Sockman gave the closing address.

Bishops present were: A. Frank Smith, Ivan Lee Holt, William C. Martin, W. Angie Smith, Paul E. Martin, Dana Dawson, H. Bascom Watts, Hiram A. Boaz (retired). The Council of Bishops representative was Bishop Edwin E. Voigt. Bishop Ivan Lee Holt retired at this conference.

The Episcopal Message was read by Bishop W. Angie Smith. "It is well to reemphasize that all men are Brothers loved by a Father God without distinction as to race or color. Never in its history has The Methodist Church had a requirement for race or color as the determining factor either for its membership or its ministry. . . . After seventeen years surely it is wise that this whole structure of our Methodism should be studied; studied for the purpose of strengthening the weak places, eliminating the false foundations, and emphasizing the merits of the valuable parts of our organization. This was the unanimous request of the Council of Bishops, and we rejoice that a Commission has been created by the General Conference for this study to report to the General Conference of 1960."

EUGENE M. FRANK was elected bishop. Episcopal assignments were: Arkansas-Louisiana, Paul E. Martin; Dallas-Fort Worth, William C. Martin; Houston-San Antonio, A. Frank Smith; Kansas, Dana Dawson; Missouri, Eugene M. Frank; Nebraska, H. Bascom Watts; Oklahoma-New Mexico, W. Angie Smith.

By request of the College of Bishops and the consent of Bishop J. WASKOM PICKETT, the General Conference assigned him to the fellowship of the South Central Jurisdiction's College of Bishops.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference, with 384 delegates, met in the George R. Stuart Auditorium, Lake Junaluska, N. C., July 11-15. Bishops John Branscomb, Marvin A. Franklin, Paul N. Garber, Costen J. Harrell, Arthur J. Moore, W. W. Peele, Clare Purcell, and Roy H. Short were present. Bishops J. W. E. Bowen, Ivan Lee Holt, Paul E. Martin and Ralph A. Ward were visitors. Bishop W. Earl Ledden represented the Council of Bishops. Bishops who had died during the quadrennium were U. V. W. Darlington, Hoyt M. Dobbs and Paul B. Kern. Bishops Costen J. Harrell and Clare Purcell retired.

Lud H. Estes was re-elected secretary to serve until Jan. 1, 1957, and DON A. COOKE (Florida) was chosen to succeed him.

Bishop Roy H. Short delivered the Episcopal Message prepared by Bishop W. T. Watkins, who was absent because of illness. The Message discussed the Southeast and the Southeastern Jurisdiction—its people, economy, culture, membership, causes, institutions, opportunities, policy, race relations, and program.

The Conference took a firm stand in support of the Jurisdictional structure in Methodism, and adopted new legislation, organization, and procedures for the Southeastern Jurisdiction.

Two new bishops were elected: NOLAN B. HARMON (Virginia), Book Editor of The Methodist Church, and BACHMAN G. HODGE (Holston).

Episcopal assignments were: Atlanta, Arthur J. Moore; Birmingham, Bachman G. Hodge; Charlotte, Nolan B. Harmon; Jackson, Marvin A. Franklin; Jacksonville, John Branscomb; Louisville, W. T. Watkins; Nashville, Roy H. Short; Richmond, Paul N. Garber.

Western Jurisdictional Conference was held July 11-15 at First Church, Colorado Springs, Colo., with 123 delegates. Willard E. Stanton was elected secretary.

The Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishops Wilbur E. Hammaker, James C. Baker, Glenn R. Phillips, Gerald H. Kennedy, Donald H. Tippet, A. Raymond Grant and William C. Martin. The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop Kennedy. Bishop Martin brought greetings from the Council of Bishops.

The Conference endorsed the establishment of Alaska Methodist University, and emphasized the rapidly growing church extension needs of the jurisdiction.

No new bishops were elected. The active bishops were assigned as follows: Denver, Glenn R. Phillips; Los Angeles, Gerald H. Kennedy; Portland, A. Raymond Grant; San Francisco, Donald H. Tippet.

1960

Central Jurisdictional Conference opened July 13 in Cory Church, Cleveland, Ohio, with 102 delegates. George W. Carter, Jr. (Louisiana) was elected secretary, and A. M. Carter treasurer. The following were reported as deceased members of the Conference: Bishop Robert E. Jones, T. R. Albert (Louisiana), Bigge Wyatt (Central West), C. A. Barrett (North Carolina).

Bishops present were: J. W. E. Bowen, Edgar A. Love, Prince A. Taylor, Willis J. King, Matthew W. Clair, Jr., and Alexander P. Shaw (retired). Bishop Edward W. Kelly (retired) was unable to attend. The Episcopal Address was read by Bishop Matthew W. Clair, Jr.

Bishops King and Bowen retired, and three new bishops were elected: CHARLES F. GOLDEN (Lexington), NOAH W. MOORE, JR. (Delaware), and M. LAFAYETTE HARRIS (Lexington).

This Conference established a committee of five to work in conjunction with the Jurisdictional Committee on Christian Social Concerns and the Commission on Inter-jurisdictional Relations. Also, the committee was asked to study the administrative structure of the Central Jurisdiction along with any and all matters that affected its status.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference met at Grand Rapids, Mich., July 6-10, with 365 delegates, and R. Merrill Powers as secretary. Bishops Leete, Lowe, and Coors had died during the quadrennium. Thomas Lugg was re-elected treasurer for the period of the sessions, with Jason L. Robinson and Dorothy L. Thomas as his assistants. Blanche Rutledge and Edgar L. Heistand were designated treasurer and assistant treasurer, to take office not later than Oct. 1, 1960. Three bishops were elected: RALPH T. ALTON (Wisconsin), EDWIN R. GARRISON (North Indiana), and T. OTTO NALL (Minnesota).

Bishop H. Clifford Northcott was retired, and Bishops Cushman, Magee, Springer, and Wade were continued in that relation. On committee recommendations, conference name changes were granted: South Iowa (formerly Iowa-Des Moines), and Central Illinois (formerly Illinois).

The Regional Council was organized as the functioning executive committee of the Jurisdiction, to implement the actions of the General and Jurisdictional Conferences, and to handle such other matters as might be brought before it during the quadrennium. A program experiment was introduced, by which every member of the Conference was assigned to a workshop to study the program areas of the work in the local church. Episcopal assignments were: Chicago, Brashares; Dakotas, Garrison; Illinois, Voigt; Indiana, Raines, Iowa, Ensley; Michigan, Reed; Minnesota, Nall; Ohio, Werner; Wisconsin, Alton.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference was held at AMERICAN UNIVERSITY and Metropolitan Memorial Church, Washington, D. C., June 15-19, with 299 delegates. Frank W. Ake was elected secretary and Shirley F. Smith treasurer. The Conference gave special attention to the past, present and future of "The Greater American University" developing in Washington, D. C. Addresses were presented by ARTHUR S. FLEMING, U. S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; and by Bishop Nolan B. Harmon, representing the Council of Bishops. An oratorio, "The Invisible Fire," was presented at Foundry Church. Bishops elected were: FRED G. HOLLOWAY (Newark), W. VERNON MIDDLETON (Philadelphia), W. RALPH WARD (Pittsburgh), and JAMES K. MATHEWS (New York). The Special Boundaries Committee report was the main subject of legislative interest, and after considerable discussion it was adopted. This resulted in the establishment of seven episcopal areas in the jurisdiction and the transfer of churches along state boundary lines in certain conferences. The Berkshire section of western Massachusetts, which had been in the Troy Conference, was placed by this action in the New England Conference, against the strongly expressed wishes of the Troy delegation.

The episcopal assignments were: Boston, James K. Mathews; New York, Lloyd C. Wicke; Philadelphia, Fred P. Corson; Pittsburgh, W. Vernon Middleton; Syracuse, W. Ralph Ward; Washington, J. W. Lord; West Virginia, Fred G. Holloway; Overseas service, Newell S. Booth.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference met June 22-26, at San Antonio, Texas, with 316 delegates. E. L. Jorns was again elected secretary. Bishops present: A. Frank Smith, Paul E. Martin, William C. Martin, W. Angie Smith, Eugene M. Frank, Dana Dawson, Ivan Lee Holt (retired), Hiram A. Boaz (retired), and J. Waskom Pickett (retired). Bishops Charles C. Selecman and H. Bascom Watts had died during the quadrennium. Special guests were Bishop Arthur J. Moore, representing the Council of Bishops, and Bishop Eleazar Guerra of the Methodist Church of Mexico. Bishops retiring were A. Frank Smith and Dana Dawson. Five bishops were elected: Oliver Eugene Slater (Northwest Texas), W. Kenneth Pope (Texas), Paul V. Galloway (Oklahoma), Aubrey G. Walton (Little Rock), and Kenneth W. Copeland (Southwest Texas).

The Episcopal Message was read by Bishop Paul E. Martin. He said, "The recent session of the General Conference had no issue before it that was of greater interest to the entire Church than the report of the 'Commission to Study and Recommend Action Concerning the Jurisdictional System.' We take great satisfaction in the knowledge that the Jurisdictional System is to be maintained. It has worked well with us in the South Central Jurisdiction."

Paul D. Womeldorf was honored by the Conference for sixteen years of service as the executive secretary of the South Central Jurisdiction. Episcopal assignments were: Arkansas, W. Kenneth Pope; Dallas-Fort Worth, William C. Martin; Houston, Paul E. Martin; Kansas, Oliver Eugene Slater; Louisiana, Aubrey G. Walton; Missouri, Eugene M. Frank; Nebraska, Kenneth W. Copeland; Oklahoma-New Mexico, W. Angie Smith; San Antonio-Northwest Texas, Paul V. Galloway.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference met at Lake Junaluska, N. C., July 13-17, with 406 delegates. Don A. Cooke was re-elected secretary to serve until Jan. 1, 1961, at which time he was to become general secretary and treasurer of the Council on World Service and Finance. Charles D. White (Western North Carolina) was designated to succeed Cooke. Bishops present were Marvin A. Franklin, Paul N. Garber, Nolan B. Harmon, Costen J. Harrell, Bachman G. Hodge, Arthur J. Moore, Clare Purcell, Roy H. Short. Bishop A. Frank Smith represented the Council of Bishops; also present was Bishop Kenneth Pope.

Memorial services were held for Bishops John W. Branscomb, W. W. Peele and Ralph A. Ward. Bishops Arthur J. Moore and W. T. Watkins were granted the retired relation.

The Episcopal Message was given by Bishop Paul N. Garber. Columbia, S. C. was made a new episcopal area. The Conference set up the One Percent Fund for Ministerial Education, and voted to construct a Chapel at PAINE COLLEGE.

Bishops elected were: JAMES W. HENLEY (Tennessee),

WALTER C. GUM (Virginia), PAUL HARDIN, JR. (North Alabama), and JOHN OWEN SMITH (South Carolina).

Episcopal assignments were: Atlanta, J. O. Smith; Birmingham, Bachman G. Hodge; Charlotte, Nolan B. Harmon; Columbia, Paul Hardin, Jr.; Jackson, Marvin A. Franklin; Louisville, Walter C. Gum; Nashville, Roy H. Short; Richmond, Paul N. Garber.

Western Jurisdictional Conference was held July 12-15 in the First Church, San Jose, Calif., with 138 delegates. Donald H. Baldwin was elected secretary. The Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishops Glenn R. Phillips, James C. Baker, Wilbur E. Hammaker, Gerald H. Kennedy, Donald H. Tippett, Eugene M. Frank and A. Raymond Grant. The Episcopal Address, on the subject, "The Space Age," was delivered by Bishop Donald H. Tippett. Bishop Eugene M. Frank represented the Council of Bishops.

A study committee appointed by the previous Jurisdictional Conference recommended the establishment of a fifth episcopal area. The Episcopal Committee of the Jurisdictional Conference opposed the recommendation and moved that the jurisdiction continue with four episcopal areas. The conference concurred with the study committee and voted for a fifth episcopal area by dividing the Portland Area and establishing an episcopal residence in Seattle. A Committee on Theological Recruitment was set up by the conference.

EVERETT W. PALMER (Southern California-Arizona) was elected bishop. Consecration of the newly elected bishop was held in First Church, San Jose, on Friday evening with the bishop's father participating in the service. Episcopal assignments were: Denver, Glenn R. Phillips; Los Angeles, Gerald H. Kennedy; Portland, A. Raymond Grant; San Francisco, Donald H. Tippett; Seattle, Everett W. Palmer.

Central Jurisdictional Conference met June 17, in Heyn Memorial Chapel, Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Fla., with ninety-three delegates. Bishops of the jurisdiction present were: Matthew W. Clair, Jr., Charles F. Golden, M. Lafayette Harris, Edgar A. Love, Noah W. Moore, Jr., and Prince A. Taylor (active), and Bishops Willis J. King and Alexander P. Shaw (retired). Visiting bishops were Donald H. Tippett and James W. Henley. Bishop Edward W. Kelly, retired, was unable to be present because of illness.

The opening Communion Service was conducted by Bishop M. W. Clair, Jr., and the sermon was delivered by Bishop Willis J. King. Allen M. Mayes (Texas) was elected secretary. A. M. Carter was elected treasurer. The Episcopal Message was delivered by Bishop Love. Bishop Tippett, the official representative from the Council of Bishops, addressed the Conference.

The Conference retired Bishops Matthew W. Clair, Jr. and Edgar A. Love. JAMES S. THOMAS (South Carolina) was elected bishop.

A large part of the Conference was devoted to the consideration and implementation of the report of the Committee of Five relative to the achievement of an inclusive fellowship of Methodist Christians. Boundaries of the seventeen annual conferences were realigned so that each of the resulting sixteen annual conferences in the Central Jurisdiction should be situated wholly within the boundary of a geographical jurisdiction. Criteria for annual conference and local church transfers were recommended.

This realignment was in harmony with the recommendation of the General Conference for the eventual elimination of the Central Jurisdiction.

A memorial service was held for Bishop J. W. E. Bowen, Cosum M. Luster (Texas), and Mrs. W. A. C. Hughes, a bishop's widow.

Episcopal assignments were: Atlantic Coast, M. Lafayette Harris; Baltimore, Prince A. Taylor; Chicago, James Thomas; Nashville-Carolina, Charles F. Golden; Southwestern, Noah W. Moore.

North Central Jurisdictional Conference met at Cleveland, Ohio, July 8-12, with 362 delegates. All members of the College of Bishops, with the exception of J. Ralph Magee and Clement D. Rockey (a retired Central Conference bishop) were present. Bishops Cushman and Springer had died during the quadrennium. R. Merrill Powers was re-elected secretary and Blanche Rutledge and Edgar L. Heistand were elected treasurers.

Visiting bishops included Paul E. Martin (Texas); M. W. Clair, Jr. (St. Louis); Shot K. Mondol (India); W. Ralph Ward (Syracuse); James S. Thomas (elected by the Central Jurisdiction and transferred to the North Central Jurisdiction); REUBEN H. MUELLER, of the E.U.B. Church; and JOSEPH GOMEZ, of the A.M.E. Church.

Pursuant to actions of the General, Central, and North Central Jurisdictional Conferences, and the appropriate annual conferences, the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE was merged into the North Central Jurisdiction, and its delegates to the Central Jurisdictional Conference were welcomed to positions on the floor of the Conference. Bishop James S. Thomas was formally received into the College of Bishops and the Jurisdiction. Bishops Brashares, Reed, and Voigt retired.

Four bishops were elected: DWIGHT E. LODER (Rock River), THOMAS M. PRYOR (Michigan), FRANCIS E. KEARNS (E. Wisconsin), and LANCE WEBB (Ohio). The Ohio Area was divided into the Ohio East, and the Ohio West Areas.

Episcopal assignments were: Chicago, Pryor; Dakotas, Garrison; Illinois, Webb; Indiana, Raines; Iowa, Thomas; Michigan, Loder; Minnesota, Nall; Ohio East, Kearns; Ohio West, Ensley; Wisconsin, Alton.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference met in Hendricks Chapel, SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, June 24-26, with 319 delegates. Frank W. Ake was elected secretary. Delegates from the WASHINGTON and DELAWARE CONFERENCES of the Central Jurisdiction were welcomed and seated in the Conference. Bishop and Mrs. Prince A. Taylor of the Baltimore Area, Central Jurisdiction, were presented. Nine areas were established, though a report of the Special Committee on Boundaries had recommended eight. New areas established were the Central Pennsylvania and the New Jersey. The Delaware and Washington Conferences of the Central Jurisdiction were unanimously voted into the Northeastern Jurisdiction. As part of the program, there was a panel presentation on the topic, "The Jurisdictional Organization and Conference After Twenty-Five Years." Addresses were given by Bishop Herbert Welch, Bishop Herman W. Kaebnick (EUB), W. P. Tolley, Ralph W. Sockman, Walter C. Muelder, Bishop Marshall Reed (representing the Council of Bishops), Tracey K. Jones, and Bishop James K. Mathews.

of the quadrennium); Syracuse, W. Ralph Ward; Washington, J. W. Lord; West Virginia, Fred G. Holloway; Central Pennsylvania, Newell S. Booth; New Jersey, Prince A. Taylor.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference met on June 29—July 2, Dallas, Texas with 336 delegates, and E. L. Jorns as secretary. Bishops present were: W. Kenneth Pope, Paul E. Martin, O. Eugene Slater, Aubrey G. Walton, Eugene M. Frank, Kenneth W. Copeland, W. Angie Smith, Paul V. Galloway, William C. Martin, Ivan Lee Holt (retired), J. Waskom Pickett (retired). Bishops deceased since last conference were Hiram A. Boaz, A. Frank Smith, and Dana Dawson.

Special guests were Bishop ALEJANDRO RUIZ M. and Bishop Eleazar Guerra of Mexico. Bishop William C. Martin retired at this Conference.

W. MCFERRIN STOWE was elected bishop. The Episcopal Message, read by Bishop Eugene M. Frank, said, "Twenty-five years ago, Methodists were just beginning to know each other and this great South Central Jurisdiction was a crucial melting-pot of former loyalties. Today God is calling this Jurisdiction to another great adventure in inclusion and fellowship. We pledge ourselves to reach out in Christian love to our fellow Methodists of the Central Jurisdiction living within our boundaries."

Episcopal assignments were: Arkansas, Paul V. Galloway; Dallas-Fort Worth, W. Kenneth Pope; Houston, Paul E. Martin; Kansas, W. McFerrin Stowe; Louisiana, Aubrey G. Walton; Missouri, Eugene M. Frank; Nebraska, Kenneth W. Copeland; Oklahoma-New Mexico, W. Angie Smith; San Antonio-Northwest Texas, O. Eugene Slater.

Southeastern Jurisdiction met July 8-12, at Lake Junaluska, N. C., with 460 delegates. Bishops present were: Marvin A. Franklin, Paul N. Garber, Walter C. Gum, Paul Hardin, Jr., Nolan B. Harmon, James W. Henley, Costen J. Harrell, Arthur J. Moore, John Owen Smith and Roy H. Short, Bishops Marvin A. Franklin and Nolan B. Harmon retired. Memorial services were conducted for Bishops Bachman G. Hodge, Clare Purcell and William T. Watkins.

Charles D. White (Western North Carolina) was re-elected secretary. Bishop Eugene M. Frank represented the Council of Bishops; Bishop PAUL M. HERRICK was the fraternal delegate from the E.U.B. Church, and Ralph W. Sockman was the preacher.

Bishop Marvin A. Franklin gave the Episcopal Message, which urged that advisory councils be set up in each annual conference working toward the elimination of the Central Jurisdiction. The message called for renewed emphasis on evangelism, and on preaching; more support of inter-city churches; support for stricken Appalachian areas; and for concern over the threat of communism.

Raleigh, N. C., was designated a new episcopal area, and the Jacksonville Area became the Florida Area. Hospitals and Homes was made a standing committee in the Jurisdictional Council, and the Conference asked that a Southeast Methodist Agency for the Retarded be set up. Also, the Conference asked the Annual Conferences to vote on the transfer of the Central Jurisdiction Conferences to the Southeastern Jurisdiction.

Bishops elected: W. KENNETH GOODSON (Western North Carolina), EDWARD J. PENDERGRASS (Florida), H. ELLIS FINGER, JR. (North Mississippi), and EARL G. HUNT, JR. (Holston Conference).

Smith; Birmingham, W. Kenneth Goodson; Charlotte, Earl G. Hunt, Jr.; Columbia, Paul Hardin, Jr.; Florida, James W. Henley; Jackson, Edward J. Pendergrass; Louisville, Roy H. Short; Nashville, H. Ellis Finger, Jr.; Raleigh, Paul N. Garber; Richmond, Walter C. Gum.

Western Jurisdictional Conference was held at First Church, Portland, Ore., July 8-11, with 141 delegates. Donald H. Baldwin was elected secretary, and Norman Amtower treasurer to replace J. Wesley Hole, who had served as treasurer since the organization of the Jurisdictional Conference in 1940. The Communion and Memorial Service was conducted by Bishop James C. Baker, assisted by Bishops Glenn R. Phillips, Donald H. Tippet, Gerald H. Kennedy, Everett W. Palmer and A. Raymond Grant, after which he was given a standing ovation.

Bishop Charles F. Golden of the Central Jurisdiction, representing the Council of Bishops, addressed the conference on, "Christian Witness in a Secular Society." Another significant event of the conference was an address delivered by Bishop W. MAYNARD SPARKS of the E.U.B. Church on "The Glory of the Unfinished."

A Committee on Conferences was named to consider the advisability of a sixth episcopal area for the jurisdiction. The committee recommended that the Conference seriously consider establishing a sixth area by dividing the present Los Angeles Area, but decision on the matter was deferred until 1968. The Southern California-Arizona Annual Conference, which would be affected by the proposal, was requested to appoint a committee to study it.

A banquet for the entire personnel of the Jurisdictional Conference and local Methodist people recognized the retirement of and honored Bishop and Mrs. Glenn R. Phillips. R. MARVIN STUART (California-Nevada) was elected bishop. Episcopal assignments were: Denver, R. Marvin Stuart; Los Angeles, Gerald H. Kennedy; Portland, A. Raymond Grant; San Francisco, Donald H. Tippet; Seattle, Everett W. Palmer.

Central Jurisdiction. The final session of the Central Jurisdictional Conference was held in Nashville, Tenn., August 18-19, with 62 delegates. It was called in special session to elect and consecrate a bishop to take the place of M. Lafayette Harris, deceased, and to prepare for administrative work in The United Methodist Church which was to be organized at the Uniting Conference in Dallas in April 1968. Bishops present were: Willis J. King, Matthew W. Clair, Jr., Edgar A. Love, Noah W. Moore, Jr., and Charles F. Golden. L. SCOTT ALLEN (Georgia) was elected bishop.

Addresses were delivered by Ernest A. Smith (Board of Christian Social Concerns), Bishop Willis J. King, and Bishop Dwight E. Loder, the latter representing the Council of Bishops. The Conference adopted a strong resolution asking that in the inclusive United Church all cabinets, committees, commissions, boards, and agencies be racially inclusive. The Conference adopted all necessary measures in preparation for the dissolution of the Central Jurisdiction in accordance with the newly adopted Constitution of The United Methodist Church.

Assignments of bishops for the remainder of the quadrennium were: Nashville-Carolina, Charles F. Golden; Gulf Coast, L. Scott Allen; Southwestern, Noah W. Moore, Jr. The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop Golden, and there was a memorial service for Bishops Edward W. Kelly, Alexander P. Shaw, and Marquis Lafayette Harris.

1968

North Central Jurisdictional Conference met in First Church, Peoria, Ill., July 24-28, with business sessions in the Pere Marquette Hotel auditorium. There were 507 delegates present. The Communion Service was conducted at the church by the host bishop, Lance Webb, with Bishop HAROLD R. HEININGER preaching the sermon.

Business began with a vote of appreciation to the past secretary, R. Merrill Powers, who declined re-election and by the election of Allen Ragan as secretary. On the resignation of Blanche Rutledge as treasurer, the Conference elected Herbert Walton.

The Episcopal Address was delivered by Bishop Richard C. Raines. Bishop Ralph E. Dodge spoke as the fraternal delegate from the Council of Bishops. Among the devotional leaders and speakers were Ralph D. Abernathy, President, Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Arthur S. Flemming, President, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; Wallace E. Fisher, pastor, Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Lancaster, Pa.; George W. Webber, Union Theological Seminary and the East Harlem Protestant Mission; Father Gregory Baum of St. Michaels College, Toronto, Canada; and A. Dudley Ward, Executive Secretary, Board of Christian Social Concerns.

Bishops Garrison, Nall, Raines, Werner, and Heininger retired at this session. Bishop Nall succeeded Bishop Werner on special assignment by the Council of Bishops to the Hong Kong-Taiwan Area. Bishops Reuben H. Mueller and PAUL R. WASHBURN, of the former E.U.B. Church, were assigned to the North Central Jurisdiction. Thus there was only one vacancy to fill in the ten episcopal areas. A. JAMES ARMSTRONG (Indiana) was elected bishop.

The delegates at this conference represented seventeen former Methodist and twelve former E.U.B. conferences. When the two churches united almost half of all former E.U.B. members in the United States were living within the bounds of the North Central Jurisdiction. This session set the boundaries of the new episcopal areas. Petitions for uniting the various conferences were received and the Jurisdiction established the episcopal residences.

Leonard D. Slutz (Ohio) offered and the Conference adopted three proposals related to Jurisdictions; two of the proposals suggested ways to reduce time and expense involved in holding Jurisdictional Conferences, and the third favored elimination of the Jurisdictional system.

Episcopal assignments were: Wisconsin, Ralph T. Altun; Dakotas, A. James Armstrong; Ohio West, F. Gerald Ensley; Ohio East, Francis E. Kearns; Michigan, Dwight E. Loder; Indiana, Reuben H. Mueller; Chicago, Thomas M. Pryor; Iowa, James S. Thomas; Minnesota, Paul R. Washburn; and Illinois, Lance Webb.

Among the retired bishops, at their request, Bishop Clement Rockey was transferred to the Western Jurisdiction, and Bishop J. Waskom Pickett to the North Central. Retired Bishop George Epp and retiring Bishop Harold Heininger, both of the former E.U.B. Church, were participants in the Conference, as were retired Bishops Marshall R. Reed and H. Clifford Northcott. Greetings came from retired Bishops Brashares, Wade, Magee, Werner and Voigt.

Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference met at WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Buckhannon, W. Va., July 23-28, with 427 delegates. Frank W. Ake was elected secretary. All the active bishops of the Jurisdiction were present, with Bishops J. GORDON HOWARD and HERMANN W. KAEBNICK of the former E.U.B. Church taking their places in the College of Bishops and receiving assignments. Twenty-five annual conferences from the former E.U.B. and Methodist Churches were represented in the Conference.

The Conference opened with a Communion Service led by Bishop Fred C. Holloway, and Bishop Fred P. Corson gave the keynote address. There was a service of commemoration for deceased Bishops W. Vernon Middleton and Newell S. Booth, and for Mrs. Eva Thomas McConnell, deceased widow of Bishop Francis J. McConnell.

Interest in the Conference centered on the balloting for two new bishops. DAVID FREDERICK WERTZ (Central Pennsylvania) and ROY C. NICHOLS (New York) were elected. Wednesday evening there was a program entitled, "The Church in the Community," and a strong appeal was made by Bishop James K. Mathews emphasizing "A New Church for a New World." The ecumenical outreach of the church was stressed by Tracey K. Jones, Eugene L. Smith, Bishop Fred P. Corson, and Bishop Mathews. They presented reports from the COMMITTEE ON THE STRUCTURE OF METHODISM OVERSEAS (COSMOS), the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, and the CONSULTATION ON CHURCH UNION. The vital need for a church-wide effort in ministerial recruitment was emphasized by a panel of speakers at one session of the general program.

Assignments of bishops were: Boston, James K. Mathews; Harrisburg, H. W. Kaebnick; Philadelphia, J. Gordon Howard; Pittsburgh, Roy C. Nichols; West Virginia, D. Frederick Wertz; New York, Lloyd C. Wicke; Syracuse, W. Ralph Ward; Washington, J. Wesley Lord; and New Jersey, Prince A. Taylor, Jr.

South Central Jurisdictional Conference convened in Oklahoma City, Okla., July 24-27, with 384 delegates. All the living bishops of the South Central College were present. T. Poe Williams, editor of the Oklahoma Methodist, was elected secretary. Appropriate memorial services were held for Bishops Ivan Lee Holt and Matthew W. Clair, Jr., who died during the quadrennium. Bishop PAUL W. MULHOUSE of the former E.U.B. Church had been assigned to the South Central Jurisdiction by the Council of Bishops. Bishops Paul E. Martin and W. Angie Smith retired.

ALSIE H. CARLETON (North Texas) was elected bishop. Ernest T. Dixon, Jr., president of Philander Smith College, gave an address on Negro Americans in the South Central Jurisdiction. Bishops Eleazar Guerra and Alejandro Ruiz of the Methodist Church of Mexico were honored guests of the Conference. At the Friday morning session, they asked Bishop and Mrs. W. Angie Smith to join them on the platform and expressed appreciation for the leadership which they had given to Mexican Methodism. Bishops Guerra and Ruiz then presented individual plaques to Bishop and Mrs. Smith.

Considerable time was spent in selecting Board members and acting upon the nominations for the reorganized agencies of The United Methodist Church. Episcopal assignments were: Lincoln, Noah W. Moore, Jr.; St. Louis, Eugene M. Frank; San Antonio, O. Eugene Slater; Dallas, W. Kenneth Pope; Little Rock, Paul V. Galloway; New Orleans, Aubrey G. Walton; Houston, Kenneth W. Copeland; Oklahoma City, Paul W. Milhouse; Topeka, W. McFerrin Stowe; Albuquerque, Alsie H. Carleton.

Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference held its sessions at Lake Junaluska, N. C., July 24-28, with 532 delegates. All the bishops of the Jurisdiction were present except Bishop Costen J. Harrell, retired, who was unable to attend on account of his wife's illness. Bishop L. Scott Allen (former Central Jurisdiction) and Bishop Paul M. Herrick (former E.U.B. Church) were present as new members of the College of Bishops.

Bishop Nolan B. Harmon gave the opening devotional, and Bishop Roy H. Short read the Episcopal Address. The latter reviewed the work of the Jurisdiction during the preceding quadrennium, and stressed the necessity of proceeding with the merger of the remaining conferences of the former Central Jurisdiction with the appropriate conferences in the Southeastern Jurisdiction. Also, it cautioned against developing a jurisdictionally-centered type of mind to the exclusion of the broader outreach of the whole church.

As the conference opened, the Jurisdictional Council announced that the Jurisdiction had a total of 3,060,867 members. The figure included 170,136 members from the former Central Jurisdiction, 32,191 members from the former E.U.B. Church, and 2,858,540 from the sixteen conferences of the former Southeastern Jurisdiction. As the quadrennium began the Jurisdiction had twenty-four Annual Conferences.

Charles D. White, secretary of the 1964 Conference, asked that he not be re-elected because he had become secretary of the General Conference. W. Carleton Wilson, Raleigh, N. C., was elected secretary. WILLIAM R. CANNON (North Georgia), dean of the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, EMORY UNIVERSITY, was elected bishop.

Bishop P. RANDOLPH SHY, C.M.E. Church, brought a fraternal message, and a paper written by Bishop Robert Gibson of the Protestant Episcopal Church was read by Bishop Walter C. Gum. Bishop H. R. Heining represented the Council of Bishops. Services of commemoration were held for Mrs. Clare Purcell, Mrs. Arthur J. Moore, Mrs. James W. Henley, Lud H. Estes (secretary emeritus of the Jurisdiction), and J. Henry Chitwood of North Alabama (a member of the Judicial Council).

The Committee on Episcopacy recommended and the Conference designated the Holston Conference as a new episcopal area.

Bishops Paul N. Garber and Walter C. Gum retired. Episcopal assignments were: Jackson, Edward J. Pendergrass; Birmingham, W. Kenneth Goodson; Atlanta, J. Owen Smith; Florida, James W. Henley; Columbia, Paul Hardin, Jr.; Raleigh, William R. Cannon; Richmond, Paul M. Herrick; Holston, L. Scott Allen; Nashville, H. Ellis Finger; Louisville, Roy H. Short; Charlotte, Earl G. Hunt, Jr.

Western Jurisdictional Conference was held in First Church, Honolulu, July 24-28, with 172 delegates. The Conference opened with a Communion Service in which five bishops officiated. The Episcopal Address was read by Bishop Everett W. Palmer. No new bishops were elected. The Conference sought to develop in the strategic setting of Hawaii a broader understanding of the religion of the Pacific. U. S. Senator Daniel K. Inouye delivered an address on the post-Vietnam war problems that will face the United States. Among the matters discussed were: how the countries of the Pacific view the United States;

how Hawaii has dealt with minorities; and religious currents in the Pacific.

Vacancies in the College of Bishops caused by the death of Bishop A. Raymond Grant and the retirement of Bishop Donald H. Tippett were filled by Bishop Charles F. Golden of the former Central Jurisdiction and Bishop W. Maynard Sparks of the former E.U.B. Church. Area assignments of the bishops were: Los Angeles, Gerald Kennedy; San Francisco, Charles F. Golden; Seattle, W. Maynard Sparks; Portland, Everett W. Palmer; Denver, R. Marvin Stuart.

JUSTIFICATION is a major doctrine of Christianity. Yet the word itself is used only three times in the Bible. It is found exclusively in the Epistle to the Romans (4:25; 5:16, 18). Saint Paul introduced it into the vocabulary of the Christian Church.

This does not mean, however, that Saint Paul coined a new word, or that the idea for which the word stands was original with him and did not belong to the religion of the Jews. The verb from which the noun comes can be found in the Old Testament as early as the book of Exodus, and it occurs in Deuteronomy, Job, Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and even such books of history as I Kings and II Chronicles. It is found also in two of the synoptic Gospels, Matthew and Luke, in the Acts of the Apostles, and in the epistle of James as well as the Pauline epistles. The verb is used in both the active and passive voice, in past, present, and future tense, and as an infinitive and participle. In one form or other it occurs sixty times in the Bible.

The verb means (Latin, justum facere; Greek, dikaion) to account righteous. The Latin is unambiguous, "to make just." The Greek is more subtle. It can mean either to make righteous, or else only to declare or to pronounce righteous. Hence from the meaning of the verb itself the door is open to various and contrary theological interpretations.

The noun, justification, is the state of being just or righteous or acceptable in the sight of God. Albrecht Ritschl was able to write the entire history of Christian doctrine as a series of variations on the interpretation of justification.

The New Testament itself provides the two classic patterns.

Pauline theology, especially as it is delineated in Galatians and Romans, makes justification entirely an act of God. Man cannot merit God's favor. God sent his own son to die for our sins on the cross. The law is impotent. It declares the purpose and the will of God, but it cannot provide the power of fulfillment. Man in trying conscientiously to keep all its precepts, as Paul himself tried when he was a Pharisee, is brought to desperation. It is only through the direct intervention of God in Jesus Christ, that man, in spite of his wickedness, is reclaimed. It is not what man can do for himself but rather what God in his mercy does for him that justifies him before God and gives him his status as a Christian. This comes about by faith, not by any outward acts on man's part, whether they be ceremonial performances or moral behavior. Faith is simply confidence and trust in God. God saves those who abandon themselves to his mercy and put their reliance entirely in him. As they trust their Saviour and as Christ lives daily in their hearts, their personal lives are blessed by the fruits of the Spirit: love, joy, peace, meekness, long suffering, kindness, and goodness in all its manifestations. Moral and spiritual behavior is the result or by-product of justification. It has nothing whatever to do with its cause.

The epistle of James, in contrast, makes justification the recognition of what man has done. More than any other book in the New Testament, it deals with the external life of man. It points up the importance of exemplary conduct, good works, and a solid character. According to James, the person who believes the word is he who does what the word commands. "For what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? . . . Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone" (2:14, 17).

The early church did not look on Paul and James as being mutually exclusive in their teaching. Both were thought of as giving emphasis to two different and important aspects of the whole gospel. The dispute between Paul and the Judaizers did not carry over into those subsequent times when the canon was fixed, and the writings of Paul and James both found a place in it. Indeed, as time went on, though the language of Paul was always zealously maintained, the meaning of James gradually became the teaching of most of the fathers of the Church.

The Greek fathers thought of salvation in terms of immortal life. This meant for them the conferring upon human nature the properties of the divine nature. The reason why God had become man in Jesus Christ was that he made man Godlike. Consequently they laid great stress on spiritual mysticism, the union of the human spirit with the divine, and the conformity of man's character to God's character. Sanctification took the place of justification in their theological systems.

The Latin fathers were more legalistic. They thought in terms of law and obedience. They emphasized the passive rather than the active sense of justification. Paul's stress always is on the divine initiative, the mighty act of God in justification. They stressed the passive meaning, namely, what takes place in man's condition, what enables him to pass from sin to righteousness. They therefore built up in the church an elaborate sacramental system. BAPTISM becomes the first step in justification. This manual act of the application of water with the right intention washes a man clean of original sin. Thereafter each of the other sacraments performs a necessary function in man's justification. Faith is changed from trust to belief. Man must believe what the church teaches and also do what the church commands in order to be justified by God.

To be sure, Augustine, the father of Latin theology, held with Paul to the conviction that justification is the free and unmerited gift of God, but he translated all personal relationships into institutional practices. Grace came to be considered a supernatural quality infused into human nature by sacramental means. Saint Thomas Aquinas taught that God channels his saving power to man through the agencies of the church. Merely to take the sacraments faithfully is to receive grace and the benefits of its supernatural properties.

The real meaning of Paul's teaching was rediscovered at the time of the Reformation in the sixteenth century. Indeed, so violently did Luther, Zwingli, and Calvin react against the mechanical interpretation of justification that they reduced the human element in it to the point of non-existence. Faith as well as grace became for them the gift of God. Luther likened man to a saddlehorse to be ridden either by God or by the devil, and Calvin based man's faith, not on free response to the grace of God, but on election, the fact that man had been predetermined to salvation by God before the foundation of the world.

JOHN WESLEY in the eighteenth century took a more moderate stance. Like Luther and Calvin, he attributed justification entirely to God. Man, he said, cannot save himself. God must lend man his GRACE in order for man to be able to respond to him in faith. Faith becomes then no more than the particularization of grace, the expression of it in a given human life. Yet God is impartial in his willingness to give his grace. It is available for everyone (prevenient grace), but man always has both the right and the power to resist it. Consequently whether he receives it or not is his own choice, and the responsibility for rejection or acceptance is human, not divine.

Since, however, God cannot look on a man as righteous unless he really is righteous, simultaneous with justification is regeneration (see CONVERSION), when a man's soul is washed clean of sin and when he is given a new start in Christ Jesus. Wesley calls all this the porch of the Christian temple, not its inner sanctuary. As a result of justification and the simultaneous act of regeneration man is given immediately enough divine power not to commit a known sin. The rest of his Christian life is one of deepening his personal relations with God. It is called sanctification in which gradually all the motives of his existence are reduced to the one motive of love.

Wesley by making justification only the first stage in the process of salvation combines the Protestant principle of justification by faith alone with the Roman Catholic ethic of perfection. Indeed, Wesley goes beyond the Roman Church in making saintliness not simply the condition of the select few who are willing to pay the price through self-denial and asceticism, but the common characteristic of all Christians who hope someday to be received into the presence of their Lord. KAATZ, TORREY A. (1906-), American E.U.B. layman, was born in Didsbury, Alberta, Canada, on Dec. 13, 1906, later became a naturalized citizen of the United States. He received a B.S. degree in Business Administration from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE, Naperville, Ill., in 1929, and was then employed by Owens-Illinois, Inc., Toledo, Ohio. He served in office management, rising to the position of Facilities Manager, Owens-Illinois Building.

He became a member of the Toledo, Zion, congregation in 1930 and for over thirty years served as lay representative from the local church to the annual conference, holding many annual conference responsibilities. Beginning in 1938 he was in each succeeding GENERAL CONFERENCE of his denomination as a delegate from the Ohio (later Ohio Sandusky) annual conference. Elected president of E.U.B. Men, the general church men's organization, in 1946, Kaatz served for eight years in this office. He also was a member of the Board of Trustees of EVANGELICAL SEMINARY, and of UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

In The United Methodist Church he is a member of the Board of Trustees of North Central College, a member of the Board of Publication, and was a member of the joint Commission on Church Union that directed the 1968 union.

Married to Esther Bueche in 1933, the Kaatzes have one child, a son, Torrey Kaatz, Jr.

KAEBNICK, HERMANN WALTER (1898-), American E.U.B. bishop and bishop of The United Methodist Church, was born at Brookston, Forest County, Pa., on Feb. 13, 1898, to Julius F. and Carolina M. (Bloedow) Kaebnick. Following undergraduate studies at Warren Conservatory of Music (B.M. 1922) and Central University (A.B. 1923), graduate studies were completed at UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D. 1930) and Gettysburg Theological Seminary (S.T.M. 1938). Further graduate studies were pursued at Yale and the University of Pittsburgh. Honorary degrees were received from Central University (D.D.), ALBRIGHT COLLEGE (LL.D.), LYCOMING COLLEGE (D.D., honoris causa) and LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE (L.H.D.). He was married to Gertrude Strehler in 1927, and to them were born two children.

H. W. Kaebnick was licensed to preach in 1922, and he was ordained in the ministry in 1925. He served pastorates at Forrest Hills, N. Y.; Freedom, Altoona, and Somerset, Pa., and was a conference superintendent in western Pennsylvania from 1939 until 1950. From 1951 to 1958 he resided in DAYTON, Ohio, serving his denomination first as General Church Treasurer and then as Executive Secretary of the General Council of Administration. He was elected a bishop in 1958 and assigned to the Eastern Episcopal Area with headquarters in Harrisburg, Pa., in which position he continues to serve in The United Methodist Church.

HERMAN W. KAEBNICK

In addition to the duties of the bishopric, Kaebnick was President of the Board of Publication (EUB); Chairman of the E.U.B. Budget and Finance Committee; Chairman of the Trustee Boards of Quincy Orphanage and Home, Evangelical Manor, and Evangelical Home. He was a member of numerous other denominational boards and committees.

Ecumenically, Bishop Kaebnick represented his denomination on the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES' General Assembly and General Board; General Committee on the Washington Office; General Budget and Finance Committee, and General Nominating Committee. He was vice president of the Pennsylvania Council on Alcohol Problems.

KAHN, IDA (1873-1931), founder of the Methodist Hospital in Nanchang, China, was born in Kiukiang on Dec. 6, 1873. She was born to an impoverished family but was descended from Confucius. As a young child she was adopted and privately tutored by Miss Gertrude Howe, a missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY (ME). When she was eighteen she was sent to the United States, and in 1896 received the M.D. degree from the University of Michigan. Returning to CHINA, she opened a dispensary in Chungking, but during the Boxer Rebellion she and Miss Howe had to flee to JAPAN.

Back again in China, Ida Kahn opened a dispensary in Nanchang. This became so noted that the Chinese gave land, and the Missionary Society gave funds for the erection of the Ida Kahn Hospital that doubtless still serves in Nanchang. She died in Shanghai on Nov. 9, 1931.

KAI IWI MISSION FARM, a Methodist property seven miles west of Wanganui, NEW ZEALAND, was purchased in 1853 on the suggestion of George Stannard. A school for Maori boys was established, but with the outbreak of the Maori Wars the boys deserted the school. In 1866 the farm implements and stock were sold, the proceeds being used to purchase the site for Trinity Church, Wanganui, New Zealand. The farm is now leased and the income is used toward the upkeep of Rangiatea Maori Girls' Hostel at New Plymouth, under the Home and Maori Mission Department.

KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN, U.S.A. First Church has carried on its ministry as a downtown church for approximately 135 years, in a community which has been constantly changing and growing.

The first sermon preached in this community was delivered by James Robe, missionary from the INDIANA CONFERENCE, in the log cabin of Titus Bronson, in 1830. In 1833—four years before MICHIGAN became a state—Richard C. Meek gathered nine persons in a "class" and organized a Methodist church.

The first house of worship was built in 1842. As the congregation outgrew the building, it was sold in 1866 to the Dutch Reformed denomination. A second edifice was constructed at Rose and Lovell streets in 1859, and here the congregation carried on its ministry for fifty-seven years.

On March 13, 1926, the building was entirely destroyed by fire. Fortunately, the need for expansion had already led the congregation to acquire a new site at the corner of Park and Academy streets. Here a stately Gothic sanctuary was begun in late December 1927, and dedicated on March 17, 1929. In 1950, the "church house" with classrooms, offices, parlors and other facilities was added. The entire structure now serves approximately 2,300 members.

During the past 133 years, First Church has helped "mother" eight other Methodist churches in the greater Kalamazoo area. Several missionaries and an impressive list of ministers have gone out from this church. Two of its former ministers, D. STANLEY COORS and THOMAS PRYOR, have become bishops; two others have become superintendents of Michigan Methodism's only medical institution—Bronson Hospital; one became editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Kalamazoo church has made a worthy contribution to the cause of Christian education. Presently it leads the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE in enrollment and attendance in its church school. It has been deeply concerned with the spiritual life of students on the campus of Western Michigan University, and provides generously for student work. It played a major role in bringing about the construction of an attractive WESLEY FOUNDATION building at the heart of the University's campus. Hundreds of students attend its services every Sunday.

The ministerial staff consists of a senior pastor and two associates; of a minister to students and two "ministers abroad."

KAMA (circa 1798-1875), the first African chief converted to Christianity by the Wesleyan missionaries in SOUTH AFRICA, was the youngest of three brothers who led the Gqunukhwebe tribe in the Ciskei. He and his wife (a daughter of Ngqika) were baptized by WILLIAM SHAW on Aug. 19, 1825. His conversion gave rise to tensions within the tribe and from this Kama separated in 1835. Between 1838 and 1852, he lived north of the Katberg in the locality where Kamastone Mission was founded by William Shepstone in 1849. Until Shepstone's arrival, Kama acted as spiritual adviser to his people, conducted Sunday worship and was responsible for a number of conversions. In 1853, he was given a large tract of land on the Keiskama River at Middledrift in recognition of his loyalty to the colonial government in three frontier wars. Here the Annshaw Mission was established in 1854. Kama lived and governed as a Christian for fifty years, in spite of the continued presence of heathen councillors, and he died at Annshaw on Oct. 25, 1875. His only surviving son, William Shaw Kama (died 1899), was among the first African candidates accepted for the ministry in 1865. He was ordained in 1873 but resigned in 1874 to assume the chieftainship in succession to his father.

KANAGA, JOSEPH BENTON (1859-1914), American Evangelical minister, prominent preacher and writer, was born Jan. 13, 1859, near Butler, Richland Co., Ohio. His grandparents supported the Evangelical and United Brethren pioneers in the founding period of their cause. A revival convert at age twelve, Sunday school superintendent at fifteen, and first preaching at sixteen, his training consisted of two years at OHIO WESLEYAN COLLEGE, and two years of seminary work. He was licensed in 1880 by the Ohio Conference, Evangelical Association. In 1884, he was ordained deacon and two years later ordained elder by the same conference.

Possessing an ecumenical spirit he frequently represented his conference at interdenominational meetings, the Ohio Federation of Churches, and was a member of the Commission on Church Union. The GENERAL CONFERENCE (1907) made him a member of the Council of the Federation of Churches of America which was a forerunner to the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES and the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

Edwin G. Frye, editor of the Evangelical Messenger, wrote of Joseph B. Kanaga: "One of the most brilliant preachers of our denomination . . . and one of the most versatile writers the Evangelical Messenger ever had. He was a member of the Ohio Conference which he served for a time as district superintendent in a day when that conference was especially noted for great preachers with whom he took front rank. . . . He made a brilliant address at the World's Congress of Religion at the Chicago Exposition in 1893."

Thirty-two years were given to the active ministry. He died Dec. 14, 1914, and was buried at Delaware, Ohio. He had one daughter and four sons, one of whom served honorably as an Episcopal minister. His wife, the former Lucretia Dowds, died Nov. 25, 1935, at Cleveland, Ohio, and was also buried at Delaware, Ohio.

KANKAKEE, ILLINOIS, U.S.A. First Church is the largest Protestant Church in Kankakee. It is located "downtown" and in the very heart of the community.

The Methodist Church got its start in Kankakee through the efforts of Stephen Beggs, a circuit rider, in 1833. Chester Reeder was the founder of first Methodist society in Kankakee. In 1853, the railroad went through and the second story of the depot was used for a time for worship services. A Methodist Sunday school was organized on May 2, 1855, by James McLean and under his guidance the first church building was built and dedicated in October 1855, of brick construction. The bell that was hung in the belfry was the first church bell that ever rang in Kankakee. In 1866, the church was officially named First M. E. Church.

This small church building was soon inadequate and in September 1866, it was decided to build a new church. The cornerstone was laid on the present church site in May 1867, and dedicated March 1, 1868. The bell was moved from the little brick church to the belfry of the new church. This building is still in use.

In 1900, the unique balcony (resembling a horseshoe tapering down to the main floor) was built and other improvements made in the sanctuary. In 1909, to make room for more classes, the room under the sanctuary was remodeled, furnaces being moved to lower levels. Still the church grew and in 1914 the beginner and primary classes had to be moved to the basement of the Masonic Temple for lack of space, and classes were held there for almost eleven years.

Ground was broken for a 77-foot addition (known as Parish House) and the cornerstone laid on June 15, 1924. This addition was completed March 1, 1925. Again, ground was broken for a second addition to the original sanctuary building on Oct. 11, 1964. This addition was dedicated on Nov. 14, 1965, and houses an additional twenty classrooms, a choir rehearsal room, staff and church offices, and an elevator. The parish hall was then remodeled and a new kitchen built.

In 1953, the 100th anniversary of the church was celebrated, and in 1968 the 100th anniversary of the present sanctuary.

Each new addition has been in keeping with the original rough, stone structure, with particular care for blending and architectural consistency, in keeping with the original sanctuary building.

First Methodist is staffed by a senior minister, whose responsibility is directing the ministry and preaching; by a minister of education; a minister of membership and evangelism; a director of music; and a parish visitor. It has an education staff of some 100 volunteer teachers for classes of all ages. Over 250 persons, from primary age through adults, participate in its choir program. Four choirs and five bell choirs present the music for worship. It has active United Methodist Youth Fellowship groups, a Women's Society of Christian Service, and United Methodist Men. There are at present about 2,500 members.

KANPUR, India, is the chief industrial center and premier city of INDIA's largest state, Uttar Pradesh. During British rule the city was called Cawnpore, and the state, The United Provinces. The city has three Methodist churches which are fully self-supporting. The largest is the Lizzie L. Johnson Memorial.

WILLIAM BUTLER and RALPH PIERCE visited Kanpur when traveling to LUCKNOW from BAREILLY early in 1859. At that time there was no thought of establishing a M. E. Church or a missionary institution in the city. Fifteen years later an independent interdenominational congregation, which held services every Sunday, invited JAMES MILLS THOBURN, then superintendent of Lucknow District, to preach one Sunday. After hearing him, the congregation urged him to open a mission in the city, or alternatively to preach or arrange for others to preach for them twice or thrice monthly. Soon thereafter William Taylor at Thoburn's invitation came to the city for revival meetings, at the close of which an appeal was made to the Annual Conference to approve the organization of a M. E. Church and to appoint a pastor. The Conference agreed and appointed P. M. Mukerjee as pastor. He held services both in English and Hindustani. A year later an American missionary, J. W. Gladwin, newly arrived in India, was appointed pastor of the English language congregation.

In 1874, a coeducational boarding school was opened in Kanpur with Henry Jackson as principal. The American BOARD OF MISSIONS provided his salary but refused other support. Nevertheless, the school flourished for a time, meeting all recurring expenses but incurred heavy debts on property. Eventually, separate boarding schools for boys and girls were opened in the more salubrious climate of Naini Tal. The Kanpur school became a girls' high school and continued as such until after Independence, when it again became coeducational. By this time it had attained a position of recognized importance in the city. It is known as the Kanpur High School. English is the chief medium of instruction.

Before the end of the nineteenth century, separate boarding schools for boys and girls were started under a different program devised for instruction in Hindustani in an atmosphere of simplicity and economy with emphasis upon vocational training and homemaking. The boys' school was closed after some fifteen years but the girls' school has continued as a highly successful venture. It is known as the Hudson Memorial Girls' High School, and Hindi is its medium of instruction, except as English is taught directly.

The population in 1967 was estimated at about one million. When it was ceded to Great Britain in 1801, Kanpur was a village with a population of about three hundred.

KANSAS, sometimes called the "Sunflower State," is in the center of the United States and is bounded by NEBRASKA on the north, MISSOURI on the east, OKLAHOMA on the south, and COLORADO on the west. Nearly a rectangle 410 by 210 miles, the state has an area of 82,276 square miles and a population of 2,178,611, only a small percentage of which is illiterate. The state is practically one vast plain, the lowest portion being 700 feet above sea level.

Most of Kansas came into the possession of the United States in 1803 through the Louisiana Purchase. Being a border territory at the time of the Civil War, it was torn between free-state and pro-slavery factions, but on Jan. 29, 1861 Kansas entered the Union as a free state. It is still governed by the constitution adopted at Wyandotte, July 1, 1859. Its chief industries are agriculture, livestock, minerals, and oil. In 1945 some 92.5 percent of its area was in farms. Kansas stands ninth among the mineral producing states. Its railway system is extensive.

Methodist work in Kansas began in 1830 when the MISSOURI CONFERENCE sent THOMAS JOHNSON as a missionary to the Shawnee Indians and his brother William to the Kansas or Kaws. In 1839 an Indian Manual Labor School and other missions were established among the Indians. In 1844, the year the M. E. Church was bisected, the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE, including mainly the territory which is now Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma, was formed, and almost immediately it came under the jurisdiction of the Southern Church. After 1850 the conference's territory was limited principally to Oklahoma, the Southern Church's Indian work in Kansas being attached to the Lexington District of the St. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

In 1848 the Northern Church forced its way into Kansas again, attaching its Indian work to the Platte Mission District of its newly formed Missouri Conference. In 1854 the denomination began work among the white people moving into Kansas, forming the Kansas and Nebraska District of the Missouri Conference with W. H. GOODE as presiding elder. The 1856 GENERAL CONFERENCE created the Kansas and Nebraska Conference which grew rapidly. In 1861 the conference was divided to form the KANSAS and NEBRASKA CONFERENCES. At the time the Kansas Conference included KANSAS, TEXAS, and a portion of NEW MEXICO. In 1864 the Colorado Conference was carved out of this area, and thereafter the Kansas Conference was limited to its own state. In 1874 the conference was divided to form the SOUTH KANSAS CONFERENCE, and in 1882 it was again partitioned to create the Northwest Kansas Conference. In 1883 the South Kansas body was divided to form the SOUTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE. Then in 1914 the Kansas Conference absorbed the South Kansas Conference, and in 1939 the Northwest and Southwest Kansas Conferences merged to form the CENTRAL KANSAS CONFERENCE. In 1968 the names were changed, making the Kansas body the Kansas East Conference and the other the Kansas West Conference.

In the meantime, the 1854 General Conference of the Southern Church created the Kansas Mission Conference which held its first session in 1856. This conference included both the Indian and the white work of the denomination in Kansas. The conference dissolved with the advent of the Civil War in 1861. In 1866 two districts were formed—Kansas City and Leavenworth, the one being attached to the St. Louis and the other to the Missouri Conference. In 1870 the Western Conference was formed to include Kansas, Nebraska, and a vast area to the west, but belonging to the M. E. Church, South, it did not flourish. At its peak strength about 1880 it had only 3,063 members to some 32,649 for the Northern Church in Kansas. In 1905 the Western Conference became the Western District of the Southwest Missouri Conference. The district itself was dissolved in 1914 and the few remaining churches were included in the Kansas City District of the conference.

The first German language church (ME) in Kansas was consecrated at Leavenworth, August 29, 1858. In 1864 the General Conference established a system of German Conferences, and the churches in Kansas became a part of the Southwest German Conference, later the West German Conference; it included the German work in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Colorado, and northwest Missouri. During the period of great immigration from Europe, the foreign language conferences flourished, but by the 1920's the German-speaking congregations were old people's churches with no promise for the future. In 1926 the West German Conference was dissolved, its ministers and churches being absorbed by the appropriate English-speaking conferences.

Three other Methodist bodies operated in Kansas from near the beginning of its history—the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, and the A.M.E. CHURCH. In Kansas as early as 1860, the M. P.'s organized a Kansas Mission Conference in 1866. By 1870 there were two conferences—Kansas and North Kansas. Although the work of the denomination did not decline thereafter, it made little progress. In 1939 there were 14 appointments, 14 churches, and 1,847 church members in the state.

The Free Methodist work in Kansas was begun by a former minister of the M. E. Church, C. H. Lovejoy. In 1871 the Kansas-Missouri Conference was formed, although at that time the denomination had only 463 members in the two states. By 1882 two conferences existed in Kansas—Kansas and West Kansas. Thereafter the denomination grew slowly. In 1960 it had 48 preachers, 25 churches, and 1,092 members in the state.

An A.M.E. Church congregation was organized at Leavenworth in 1861 and another at Lawrence in 1862. By 1876 there were ten congregations in the state. The Kansas Conference of the denomination includes Kansas and Nebraska.

The United Methodist Church today has three colleges in Kansas—BAKER at Baldwin, KANSAS WESLEYAN at Salina, and SOUTHWESTERN at Winfield. Soon after St. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY Methodist was founded at Kansas City, Mo., in 1957, the Kansas Conferences joined those in Missouri and Nebraska in its support. Together the two Kansas Conferences accepted a goal of $1,400,000 for capital funds for the seminary, and they began contributing about $30,000 per year toward its operating budget. There are seven Methodist hospitals in Kansas—Asbury at Salina, Boothroy Memorial at Goodland, Epworth at Liberal, Grace at Hutchinson, Hadley Memorial at Hays, and Wesley Medical Center at Wichita. The two conferences support homes for the aged at TOPEKA and HUTCHINSON and a training school for youth at Newton. There are WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at Fort Hays, Pittsburg, Emporia, Manhattan, Lawrence, Wichita, and Topeka.

Among native Kansas achieving distinction as Methodists are SCHUYLER E. GARTH and EUGENE M. FRANK who were elected bishops, and ROY L. SMITH who was a noted preacher, platform speaker, writer, and editor.

In 1970 the two Kansas Conferences had 869 ministers, 562 pastoral charges, some 255,811 members, and 809 churches valued at $107,889,201.

KANSAS CITY, KANSAS, U.S.A., with a population of 166,682 in 1970 and the seat of Wyandotte County, is a cultural and commercial center. It was incorporated as Wyandotte City and made the county seat in 1859. In 1886, five municipalities were consolidated to form Kansas City.

The WYANDOTTE Indian Nation came to Kansas City in 1843 and brought a well organized Methodist Church with them. Led by their missionary, James Wheeler, there were "three local preachers, four or five exhorters, nine class leaders and 200 members of the Methodist Church." Records of quarterly conferences from 1827 to 1853 are extant. Meetings were held at once upon their arrival in KANSAS. The first building built by the Wyandotte Mission in Kansas City was a log structure known as a school house and sometimes called "the Council House." This was in May 1844, and in July of that year Mrs. Lucy B. Armstrong, daughter of Russell Bigelow, missionary to the Wyandotte Mission 1820-30, started the first free public school in Kansas. In 1847 she organized the first Sunday school in Wyandotte City.

In January 1844, Squire Gray Eyes proposed a "house for my soul," and a log chapel was completed by April of that year. In May 1844, a parsonage was also made ready for James Wheeler. In 1847 there were 240 members of the Wyandotte City Mission Church. A brick church was erected that year "west of town," and in 1849 a log church was erected near the Quindaro Cemetery. Both churches were burned in 1856 in the stormy days of the slavery agitation.

The homeless congregation of the M. E. Church found sanctuary in the home of Mrs. Armstrong. A frame church was built by this congregation in 1857 on lots donated by Mrs. Armstrong, and this building was used until 1875. In 1870 a brick church was started by the M. E. South people, but it was never completed or used.

A new brick building was completed by the M. E. Church at Fifth and State, and it was dedicated in 1881. A new site was secured by the M. E. Church, South at Seventh and State, and their building was dedicated in June 1888. This was known as the Seventh Street Church, and in 1970 it reported 395 members and a property valuation of $142,500.

In 1889 a new site was selected for the M. E. Church at Seventh and Washington, and the first services were held in November of that year, the preachers being Bishop S. M. MERRILL and D. H. MOORE (later bishop). This church became the Washington Avenue Church. From 1889 to 1924 it grew in numbers and influence. During the pastorate of Frank Neff (1923-29), a new building was constructed, and Washington Avenue merged with Eighth Street Church. Many prominent pastors served the Washington Avenue Church, both before and after Methodist union. EUGENE M. FRANK (now bishop) was pastor 1942-48.

In 1959 the Washington Avenue, Quindaro, and Queen's Gardens Churches merged to form Trinity Methodist Church. A new structure was built at 51st and Parallel, and the first services were held in August 1965. The church is one of the finest in Kansas, and in 1970 had 1,856 members, with a property valuation of $1,294,938. Old Mission Church leads with 2,174 members in 1970, and property valued at $1,240,944.

In 1970 there were twenty-five Methodist churches in greater Kansas City, with a membership totalling 20,609, and a total property valuation of $9,647,826.

Significant to Methodism was the development of Bethany Hospital, from its founding in connection with the Washington Avenue Church in 1892 to its present outstanding structure and services.

In 1900 the Kansas City National Training School had its beginning through the interests of members of Washington Avenue Church. It was first located at 608 Everett Street. Later the school was removed to 15th and Denver, and served as a deaconess training school until NATIONAL COLLEGE was formed. The buildings and campus are now a part of the ST. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY METHODIST.

Bethany Hospital is a general hospital known for its educational programs for paramedical personnel, and for a widely known cardiac care center, listing 205 acute-care beds. A 120-bed restorative care wing was constructed in 1966-67, to provide extensive therapy facilities for long-term patients.

One of Bethany's founding purposes in 1892 was the education of nurses in a Christian environment. The hospital now operates five nationally accredited schools. Their graduates serve foreign missions, rural hospitals and urban medical centers in most of the world. The schools:

School of Nursing (3-year course)—the only Protestant school of nursing in Eastern Kansas. Clinical Pastoral Training (3-month course)—one of the first programs for pastors and seminary students, designed to deepen their understanding of hospital patients. School of Medical Technology (1-year course)—preparing laboratory specialists after they have obtained a college degree in science. School of X-ray Technology (2-year course)—training radiographic technologists. Graduate Medical Education (1-year course)—graduate-level program for physicians before they enter private practice.

Bethany Hospital's Hartford Care Unit, established in 1962, through a grant from the John A. Hartford Foundation, has attracted the attention of medical experts both at home and abroad. In this unit, concentrated attention is given the critically ill, including those recovering from heart attacks. New concepts of patient service and specially designed equipment are changing patterns of care in many hospitals in many countries.

Bethany Hospital is owned by the Bethany Hospital Association, a non-profit corporation composed of thirty-seven trustees (twenty of whom must be Methodists). This Board holds the hospital property in trust for the KANSAS ANNUAL CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church. To help offset the deficit incurred by the hospital's educational programs, the Kansas Conference annually contributes to the School of Nursing, while both the Kansas and the Missouri West Conferences allocate funds for Clinical Pastoral Training.

Bethany Hospital has had interested persons from time to time to establish scholarships and memorials or contribute to existing endowment funds. Grants and loans in this way continue to be made available to deserving students from Christian homes, and to develop educational programs and facilities.

Life Line Children's Home began as a Mission of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH in 1907 under the supervision of the Rev. and Mrs. S. V. Coe. Soon they were asked to care for abandoned babies and find homes for them. A few years later older children were accepted for care. The family moved to its present quarters in 1926, where more than 4,800 boys and girls have found shelter and loving care. At present forty-five children ranging in age from five through seventeen years are living at the Home. Some stay for a few days and some for several years. A modern cottage for older girls was opened in 1963 and a new cottage for boys is planned. A well developed program of Social Service is maintained with a trained social worker and help from other agencies in the community. All children attend the public schools and take part in community and church activities.

BYRON S. LAMSON

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, U.S.A. Methodism began in the vicinity before there was a town. Services had been held several years prior to the organization of the first Methodist church in the new "Town of Kansas" in 1845. William Ferrell, a Methodist local preacher, was already living in Independence when that town was established in 1827. Then in 1830 THOMAS JOHNSON came, under appointment of the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, as a missionary to the Indians. This was the first official appointment of a Methodist preacher to the area. He founded his famous Shawnee Mission just across the line in Kansas, but he and his associates also made important contributions to the early development of Kansas City Methodism. Another Methodist local preacher, JAMES PORTER, settled in Westport the year it was founded (1832) and began holding services in homes. It was in the home of the first postmaster of the town, Col. William M. Chick, that Porter organized the Westport Church in 1836. Westport was later (1899) incorporated into the younger, but larger Kansas City, so the Westport Church is the oldest in the city. Six years after Kansas City proper was platted in 1838, Col. Chick moved from Westport to the new town and cooperated with Porter in organizing the Kansas City church in 1845. Both churches were placed on the Independence Circuit and continued there for several years. (A church had been organized in Independence in 1834.)

The services of both churches continued in homes and school houses until 1846, when the Westport group joined with three other denominations in erecting a union building which they shared. Westport Methodists constructed their own building in 1853, a year after the Kansas City group had erected its first building at Fifth and Wyandotte. This was the first Protestant building in the new town and was used frequently by other denominations. Both buildings were used as hospitals during the Battle of Westport in 1864.

Both of these congregations adhered to Southern Methodism at the time of the division, but a few members formed a Methodist Episcopal Church. William Ferrell held services for them, but they had no church home until 1866 when a building was begun on Grand Avenue (completed in 1869). The Fifth Street and Grand Avenue congregations served as mother churches for many new congregations during the city's rapid growth following the Civil War. In 1866, the Allen Chapel A. M. E. Church was organized and it served as the mother congregation for several Negro churches.

NATHAN SCARRITT was probably the most influential man in early Kansas City Methodism. He came first as a teacher in the Indian Mission School (in 1848), but remained as preacher and teacher. Land investments brought him wealth and this enabled him to be a benefactor of many churches and institutions. He served as an early pastor of both Westport and Fifth Street Churches and was instrumental in organizing several other congregations. At his death in 1890, he left a bequest which enabled the establishment (in 1892) of the Scarritt Bible and Training School. It continued in Kansas City under the direction of the Woman's Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, until it moved to NASHVILLE, Tenn., in 1924 and became SCARRITT COLLEGE.

Until 1964, Kansas City was the home of NATIONAL COLLEGE which was under the auspices of the Woman's Division of Christian Service of The Methodist Church. The Kansas City National Training School of Deaconesses and Missionaries was established in Kansas City, Kan., in 1899 by the WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M. E. Church. It moved to Kansas City, Mo., in 1904. For thirty-seven years (1902-1939) it was headed by Miss Anna Neiderheiser. It became a liberal arts college in 1948, shortened its name in 1954 and became coeducational. In 1964, it united with SAINT PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, which became the continuing institution. This graduate school was authorized by the 1956 GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. Established in 1958, it was first known as National Methodist Theological Seminary. It began operations in 1959 and by the beginning of its third year enrolled 142 students.

Two other Kansas City institutions supported by the Woman's Division of Christian Service are the Della C. Lamb Neighborhood House and the Spofford Home. The former grew out of the welfare work of Institutional Church which was started in 1903. It is named for Mrs. Lamb, who was chairman of its board for twenty-five years. It had the first day nursery and the first well baby clinic in the city. The Spofford Home, for emotionally disturbed children, was established in 1916 by Mrs. Thomas M. Spofford in memory of her husband.

Another Methodist related institution is the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES, established in 1925. A branch of the Methodist BOOK CONCERN was established in 1905. It continues as a COKEBURY Book Store. The Central Christian Advocate of the M. E. Church was published here many years. THE UNITING CONFERENCE, at which the M.E., M.E. South, and M.P. Churches became one, met in Kansas City in May 1939. A tablet in the Municipal Auditorium commemorates the historic occasion when on May 10, 1939, the Declaration of Union was proclaimed.

Preachers who served in Kansas City and later became bishops included WILLIAM A. QUAYLE, MATTHEW S. HUGHES, NAPHTALI LUCCOCK, CHARLES B. MITCHELL, and JOHN L. NUELSEN in the M.E. Church; J. J. TIGERT, E. D. MOUZON, and HOYT M. DOBBS in the M.E. Church, South; Bishops EMBRY, H. B. PARKS and JOSEPH GOMEZ of the A.M.E. CHURCH.

In 1970 there were eighty congregations of The United Methodist Church in metropolitan Kansas City, with approximately 55,000 members. Forty-eight of these with 27,013 members were in Kansas City, Mo. Twenty-four were in Kansas City, Kan., and the Kansas suburbs, while the others were in the Missouri suburbs. In addition, there were in Kansas City proper fourteen A.M.E., three C.M.E., two WESLEYAN, and one FREE METHODIST, and three A.M.E. ZION churches.

A. STERLING WARD

BLUE RIDGE BOULEVARD CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI

Blue Ridge Boulevard Church had its beginning in the year 1851 in a rough log school house on the old Santa Fe Trail. The church, located five miles south of Independence, Mo., was started by a group of farmers and the first congregation was of pioneers and trail blazers.

Its history from 1851 spans six wars. The church which has stood in the same locality for the past 117 years has taken an active part in Christian leadership in the Community.

Worship services were held in the log school building for eight years until 1859, when the first church building of brick was erected just across the road. The brick was molded and baked near the building site by the church members and their slaves. The brick church was one of the few buildings left intact for miles around following the Civil War.

The church was early named Young's Chapel, until 1933 when the name became Blue Ridge Boulevard Church. The first building was replaced with a modern one in 1907. This modern structure was destroyed by fire in March 1952, when the congregation numbered 450.

Following the union of Methodism in 1939, the area around the church rapidly began to change from a rural to a suburban community and this demanded larger accommodations. More ground was purchased for the Blue Ridge Boulevard Church, and an extensive building program was launched. There is now an educational building with twenty classrooms, offices, a chapel seating 100, lounge, library, and the sanctuary seating nearly 500. Three worship services are held each Sunday to accommodate the congregation which presently numbers 2,239. The little church of the log school house is now the largest church in the Missouri West Conference and endeavors to carry on a program commensurate with its size and inheritance.

D. RUSSELL LYTLE

KANSAS CITY UNIVERSITY, Kansas City, Kansas, had its inception in 1890. About that time the KANSAS CONFERENCE (MP) took official action looking to the establishment of a college in that area. Neither the Kansas Conference nor its immediate sister conferences had the resources to develop the kind of school they had in mind, so they turned to the general church for help. In May 1892, an approach was made to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church, meeting in Westminster, Md., a prospectus was submitted, and favorable consideration given. In 1894 D. S. STEPHENS, formerly president of ADRIAN COLLEGE and editor of the Methodist Recorder, was elected chancellor, and building plans began immediately.

S. F. Mather, a Congregational layman and a descendant of Cotton Mather, had for many years entertained the hope that a Christian college might be established in that area. He became interested in the M.P. plans and willed his entire estate, some $150,000, to aid in such an undertaking. H. J. Heinz of Pittsburgh, Pa., Dexter Horton of Seattle, Wash., and W. S. Wilson of Ohio, Ill., were a few of the outstanding M.P.s whose generous gifts made possible the early steps. However, in spite of extraordinary labors, devotion, and sacrifices, the university knew only a precarious existence. J. H. Incas succeeded Stephens in 1914, ultimately undermining his health in a supreme effort for and dedication to the institution. He was compelled to relinquish his responsibilities in 1918, and A. NORMAN WARD of the MARYLAND CONFERENCE then became chancellor. He resigned to take the presidency of WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE.

In the meantime a merger was effected with Campbell College, a United Brethren college at Holton, Kan., bringing to the university a joint ownership with the United Brethren. Divided loyalties and indefinite responsibilities proved a grave handicap. In 1926 the M.P.s, through their Board of Education, sold their equity to the United Brethren and withdrew. Within a few years it was necessary to close the doors and wind up the affairs of the university.

JOHN O. GROSS

KANSAS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church was organized March 21, 1861 at Atchison with Bishop THOMAS A. MORRIS presiding. It was formed by dividing the Kansas and Nebraska Conference. Its territory at the outset included KANSAS, part of TEXAS, and part of NEW MEXICO. At the beginning it had 43 churches and 3,932 members. In 1864 the formation of the Colorado Conference limited the Kansas Conference to its own state, and in 1865 it had four districts and 4,005 members. The Kansas Conference grew steadily; by 1873 it had eight districts, 157 charges, and 15,083 members.

The creation of other conferences further reduced the size of the Kansas Conference. In 1874 the SOUTH KANSAS CONFERENCE was organized, and in 1882 the NORTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE was carved from Kansas Conference territory.

After forty years of existence as a separate body, the South Kansas Conference was absorbed by the Kansas Conference. The new conference then covered approximately the eastern third of the state. Its membership in 1914 was 65,503.

As soon as it was organized in 1861, the Kansas Conference gave support to BAKER UNIVERSITY at Baldwin which, chartered in 1858, was the first college in Kansas. Baker's growth was interrupted at times by difficulties, but by its one hundredth anniversary it had graduated some 450 ministers and 100 missionaries. The college has a fine collection of Bibles given by one of its distinguished alumni, Bishop WILLIAM A. QUAYLE, who also served the institution as a teacher and as president. In 1968 Baker's plant was valued at $6,000,000 and its endowment was about $3,000,000.

The Kansas Conference gives financial support to PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE, Little Rock, Ark., and to ST. PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY METHODIST. The conference contributes to the Bethany School of Nursing and Chaplaincy at Kansas City. Together with the other Kansas conference, it supports homes for the aged at Topeka and Hutchinson, a children's home called Youthville at Newton, and Wesley Foundations at the various state institutions of higher learning.

In 1968 the name of the conference was changed to Kansas East Conference. In 1970 the conference had five districts—Emporia, Independence, Kansas City, Ottawa, and Topeka—338 ministers, 258 pastoral charges, 112,719 members, and 375 churches valued at $43,945,908.

KANSAS CONFERENCE (EUB) was formed May 16, 1956, bringing together the Evangelical and United Brethren traditions 100 years after the latter was first introduced to the state. Both traditions developed several small conference organizations which eventually evolved into the larger units merged in 1956.

The first Kansas Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ was organized at Prairie City, Oct. 30, 1857, in a sod house owned by S. S. SNYDER, who was elected the first presiding elder. Charter members of the conference in addition to the presiding elder were W. A. Cardwell, J. S. Gingrich, William Huffman, S. Kretzinger, G. Perkins, J. Terrel, and A. M. Thornton. This conference became the Northeast Kansas Conference in 1901.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1869 authorized a new conference in MISSOURI and KANSAS to be known as the Osage Conference. The Osage Conference organized April 16, 1870, at Greeley, Kan.; and in 1885 the name was changed to the Neosho Conference. It was comprised of all of Missouri south of the Missouri River and all of Kansas south of a line running due west from the southeast corner of Linn County.

In early 1878, the Mission Board created a new conference in western Kansas. All of Kansas west of the center of Republic County and north of the Osage Conference was included. Kansas Conference appointed E. Shepherd as presiding elder for this territory in 1878. West Kansas Conference was formally organized in 1879, with twenty-three ministers and thirty-one organized churches, and ninety-two appointments. In 1889, its name was changed to the Northwest Kansas Conference.

Several preaching places were organized in the area of Wichita, beginning in 1871. Among the first classes were Otterbein Chapel, Pleasant Valley, Sunnydale, Winfield, Walnut Valley, Mulvane, and Little River. In 1881, the Arkansas Valley Conference was organized. The first session convened in the Otterbein Chapel near Sedgwick City, Oct. 26, 1881. P. B. Lee and T. H. Watt were elected presiding elders. The name was changed in 1905 to the Southwest Kansas Conference.

Early in the twentieth century there was a swing toward fewer conferences in Kansas. By an enabling act of the General Conference, the Northeast Kansas Conference was granted permission to unite with the Northwest Kansas Conference and become the North Kansas Conference. Organization was effected in Salina, Sept. 28, 1910. On Thursday, Sept. 25, 1914, in the Kreibel Chapel (now West Side Church) in Wichita, the remaining three Kansas Conferences (North Kansas, Southwest Kansas, and Neosho) became one. The new organization, the Kansas Conference, elected C. E. Heisel and Maurice Nichols superintendents.

Like other denominations in the late 1930's and early 1940's, the United Brethren saw the need for a conference center for the training of youth and adults. Largely through the vision of Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Webster and their pastor, Elmer C. King, this need was answered at the close of World War II with the formation of Camp Webster.

The Evangelical Association began its work in Kansas in 1858 with George Fleischer at Franklin. There soon followed an appeal for others to enter the state especially at Humboldt, where the first building of the Evangelical Association was erected. Later that same year, M. J. Miller began a field of labor at Leavenworth, a city of 10,000 people. By 1861, the Iowa Conference had taken the responsibility for this mission territory and appointed three preachers who labored faithfully amid many hardships. By 1863, there were six appointments in the state of Kansas.

When the Iowa Conference met in May, 1864, the Kansas Conference was formed in harmony with General Conference action taken the previous autumn. The new conference started with these charges: Leavenworth and Lawrence, Humboldt, Holton, Arage and Rock Port, and West Kansas Mission. The first conference session was held in Leavenworth in 1865.

In 1894, The United Evangelical Church was formed when nearly one-third of the members of the Evangelical Association withdrew. Those Kansas churches that became a part of the United Evangelical Church were attached to the Platte River Conference until 1902, when the Kansas Conference was formed.

The Kansas Conference of The United Evangelical Church and that of the Evangelical Association existed side by side from 1902 to 1922, when the denominations were reunited to form one church. Within the same year, these two Kansas conferences were merged. At the time of union, the Forest Park Camp near Topeka was established to minister to the spiritual and cultural needs of the people. It has been used chiefly for youth camps, summer assemblies, and other conference-wide activities.

When the Church of the United Brethren in Christ and The Evangelical Church merged in 1946, the two conferences in Kansas proceeded to appoint commissions to work out a plan and basis of union. In their 1955 annual sessions, both conferences voted unanimously in favor of conference union. The two bodies met in separate sessions, May 14, 1956. The Kansas Conference (UB), meeting in the Waco Church, celebrated its 100th anniversary of continual service in Kansas. Then on May 16, 1956, the uniting service was held in the Hyde Park Church, Wichita.

In addition to the formation of camp sites which has already been noted, another venture launched in Kansas was Friendly Acres, a retirement home at Newton. Mrs. Ida LaRue Spangler gave her nursing home to the conference in 1959. It was relocated and new buildings were constructed. Several neighboring conferences assisted in its support.

In 1967 the conference was composed of 152 churches, divided into three conference superintendents' districts. There were 118 active itinerant elders, 54 superannuated itinerant elders, 7 local elders, and 22 probationers. The membership was 25,059 with average Sunday morning worship attendance of 13,055 and a Sunday school enrollment of 18,897. Mission and benevolence giving amounted to $425,925, and the total for all purposes was $1,957,858.

In 1968, the conference joined with the two former Methodist conferences to form the Kansas East and Kansas West Conferences of The United Methodist Church.

KANSAS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Salina, Kansas, was established in 1886. The college was handicapped for many years by severe economic problems. Full accreditation was received in March, 1958, and later that year the CENTRAL KANSAS CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church initiated a financial campaign which assisted in firmly establishing this college within the program of higher education in Kansas.

Glenn L. Martin, a native of Kansas and a pioneer in aviation, was an alumnus and assisted the college during its difficult and trying years. It offers the A.B. degree. The governing board has thirty-six elected members, thirty-three elected by the Central Kansas Conference, three by the board on nomination by and from the alumni association, plus the resident bishop as an ex-officio member.

DRIGH ROAD CHURCH, KARACHI, PAKISTAN

KARACHI, Pakistan (population 1,916,000), was PAKISTAN's capital for the first ten years of its independence, and is West Pakistan's only sea harbor. There is an international airport, and it is the southern terminus of West Pakistan's railways. Government Export and Import Control Office is there, as are foreign embassies, Karachi University and many factories. The population has rapidly increased because of migration of exiles from India, and migrant laborers from Punjab. Despite heroic efforts to provide living quarters, thousands continue to lack shelter.

There are four Pakistani self-supporting Methodist congregations in Karachi and ten United Methodist congregations. One English speaking congregation includes many Americans serving the Pakistan government with American government approval. Each of these congregations has its own church building.

Drigh Road School is a co-educational institution with an enrollment of about 600. The present principal, Samuel Saudagar, is a qualified Pakistani Methodist layman. Drigh Road School expects to be a full High School as these lines are printed and will continue to be co-educational. Urdu is the teaching medium.

Trinity Girl's High School was opened in July, 1959 and enrolls approximately 234 girls. The teaching medium is English. The present principal, Mrs. Hosein, is a qualified Methodist Pakistani. The staff is largely Christian. There are some efforts to make the school coeducational.

Methodist Primary School: This uses the same fine building that Trinity High School has. Enrollment is approximately 310 and is coeducational. Classes include kindergarten and through grade five. The teaching medium is Urdu. The Managing Committee helps in supervision of sixteen Primary Schools located in different sections of Karachi, where Christian boys and girls can begin their education and then go on to a high school.

KAREFA-SMART, JOHN A. M. (1915-), E.U.B. layman of SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, was born in Rotifunk, Sierra Leone, in June 1915, the son of Rev. J. A. K. and May Caulker Smart. He attended a church-related primary school and then Albert Academy, operated by the

JOHN KAREFA-SMART

Church of the United Brethren in Christ as a secondary school, from which he graduated in 1931. His B.A. degree (Dunelm) was earned in 1936 from Fourah Bay College (now University College of Sierra Leone). This college was connected with Durham University. Additional degrees were earned at OTTERBEIN COLLEGE (B.S.), McGill University (M.D.C.M.), and Harvard University (Master's in Public Health).

He married Miss Rena Weller, March 27, 1948, during which time he was serving in the E.U.B. Church medical program in Sierra Leone. He served eight years as a Member of Parliament, Sierra Leone, and a cabinet Minister of Lands, Mines and Labor for four years, followed by three more as Minister of External Affairs and Defense. On several occasions he also served as Acting Prime Minister. Since 1965, he has been the Assistant Director-General of the World Health Organization, residing in GENEVA, Switzerland.

With his wife he wrote the Friendship Press book The Halting Kingdom. Dr. Karefa-Smart has been a consultant to the General Assembly of WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in Amsterdam, 1948, and Uppsala, 1968, and has been a Consultant for Africa with the Division of Studies, World Council of Churches.

ESTHER L. MEGILL

KARL-MARX-STADT, Germany (Chemnitz until 1952). In 1879 a center was created for Methodist beginnings around Chemnitz by sending a pastor to this growing textile city, which then was without any Methodist work. His first meetings held in inns were met with hostility both by the established church and state officials. He served also the missionary societies within the Lutheran Church, which often consisted of Methodists. In 1882 ten preaching places and seventy children in Sunday schools were reported, and the Saxon minister of public worship and education issued a first permit for a communion service at Dittersdorf.

In 1892 the large Friedenskirche (Peace Church) was constructed in spite of sharp reproach by timid members of the annual conference. Bethany deaconesses were called from Hamburg to Chemnitz (1904), and a hospital was opened in 1931. After the trials of the first World War this church experienced remarkable growth and consolidation from 1920-36. There were 540 members then. In 1949 a strong revival came and an increase to about 900 members, 300 children, and a total constituency of 1,700 were reported.

This area is now a part of the annual conference within the German Democratic Republic.

THEOPHIL FUNK

Z. T. KAUNG

KAUNG, Z. T. (1884-1958), a bishop of the Methodist Church in CHINA, was born in Shanghai, on Dec. 4, 1884, in a wealthy non-Christian family. While a student at Anglo-Chinese College in Shanghai, he became interested in Christianity and at nineteen was baptized. (Later his mother and other family members joined the Methodist Church.)

Still a student, he was licensed to preach, and became Sunday school superintendent of the Moore Memorial Church in Shanghai. He continued studies at Soochow University and at Nanking Theological Seminary. Upon graduation, he joined the China (later the East China) Annual Conference and was named assistant pastor of Moore Memorial. He was pastor in Huchow, presiding elder in Soochow, and chaplain of Soochow University.

Then followed nine years as pastor of Allen Memorial Church, Shanghai, where he baptized Generalissimo CHIANG KAI-SHEK and where Madame Chiang was also a member. He was again at Moore Memorial in 1941, when elected a bishop and assigned to the Peiping Area.

Bishop Kaung was a delegate to the Madras Conference of the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL in 1938. He was trustee or director of Soochow University, Nanking Theological Seminary, the Chinese Home Missionary Society, and the China Sunday School Union. In contrast with Bishop W. Y. CHEN, he was able to continue his work until his death. He died in Peiping, Aug. 23, 1958.

H. H. KAVANAUGH

KAVANAUGH, HUBBARD HINDE (1802-1884), American bishop of the M. E. Church, South (1854-1884), was born in Clark County, Ky., Jan. 14, 1802. Bishop Kavanaugh seems to have had little formal education, but, under the inspiration of his widowed mother and close association with John Lyle, a Presbyterian minister, he availed himself of every opportunity to improve his mind and to gather information. In his fifteenth year, he professed conversion and despite the arguments of his Presbyterian tutor, he joined the Methodist Church with his mother. At the age of twenty-one, he was licensed to preach and joined the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE in 1823. His first charge was the Little Sandy Circuit, a charge of twenty-four preaching places in ten mountain counties of southeastern KENTUCKY. As part of his equipment, he carried a marking iron in order to mark trees along the trail so as to find his way on his road to his preaching places. His ability as a preacher soon became known, and he was in great demand in the leading stations and towns of the conference. While pastor at Bardstown in 1831, at the age of twenty-nine, he was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE, an honor seldom conferred on so young a man. He was delegate to the General Conferences of 1836, 1840 and 1844, during that stormy period which led to the division of the church in 1844.

At the Constitutional Convention of the Southern Church in LOUISVILLE in 1845, his voice was heard with great effect in charting the course of the newly organized church, and his wisdom and warmheartedness helped greatly in easing the tension through the border territory between the churches.

He represented his conference in each of the three following General Conferences (MES) and in 1854 was elected to the episcopacy. In thirty years as a bishop of the M. E. Church, South, he served practically every conference in the church. He was noted for his great ability as a pulpit orator and at times arose to great heights of spiritual power. His kindly spirit and effective insight into situations made his administration most acceptable in all parts of the church. During the years of his episcopal service, he gave fifteen thousand preaching appointments to ministers, ordained 890 deacons and 607 elders.

In 1884, despite his advanced years, he presided at the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE in NEW ORLEANS. A few days after the conference, he became ill in the pulpit at Ocean Springs, Miss., and, on Wednesday, March 19, he died there. His funeral service was conducted by Bishop HOLLAND McTYEIRE in Broadway Church, Louisville, where he had served many years before as pastor. He was buried in Cave Hill Cemetery in Louisville, where a large granite pulpit marks his grave.

KAWABE, TEIKICHI (1863-1953), a FREE METHODIST ordained elder of Japan Conference, was the founder of the Free Methodist Church of Japan. He was first a successful businessman in JAPAN and CALIFORNIA. He was converted in 1887, and was greatly influenced in early theological studies by Methodist Bishop M. C. HARRIS. He was a successful evangelist on the Pacific Coast and then returned to Japan and became a Free Methodist missionary in 1896. He made great personal sacrifice to continue this work. He placed Christian literature in 30,000 homes on the Island of Awaji and established churches on Awaji and in Osaka. He was founder and pastor of Nippon Bashi Church, Osaka, for thirty years, where there were over 500 members. The fireproof three-story church was the only building in the area to survive bombing in World War II. Teikichi Kawabe was the author of some fifty books. He was an unusual preacher, simple, direct, and convincing. He presented a "winsome Christ," and was called "The St. Paul of Japan." His sermons were widely read, and he preached among all groups. American missionaries were blessed by his ministry. He preached over 400 sermons annually for more than fifty years. Thousands were converted under his influence. Robert H. Glover said, "There is Kawabe of Osaka, pastor, evangelist, teacher of deeper spiritual truth, and trainer of native workers—a man of God, a leader of Christians, and a winner of souls."

KAWATA, KAUYOSHI (1924-), was the first American missionary of Japanese racial origin to serve in INDIA. He was born in Portland, Ore., Jan. 2, 1924, and married Marion Jean Sammis, born in Portland, May 1, 1926. He received the B.S. degree in engineering from Oregon State University in 1949, and a M.S. degree from the University of Minnesota in 1950. He did graduate work in Indian culture at Hartford Seminary in 1950-51, and went to India as a Methodist missionary in the autumn of 1951.

His first appointment was to the United Christian Schools at Sura-Nussi, Jalandur. Quickly acquiring an easy use of Urdu and Gurmukhi, the chief languages of the villages of Punjab State, he became a cherished friend and adviser of all classes. He helped to dispel the idea that Christianity is only for Western people.

On furloughs he acquired the Master of Public Health degree from the University of California at Berkeley in 1958, and the Doctor of Public Health degree from Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore in 1965.

Kawata became assistant professor in the Department of Social and Preventive Medicine in the Ludhiana Christian Medical College, and adviser to the comprehensive rural health services project of the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences in New Delhi.

His professional society memberships include the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Waterworks Association, American Public Health Association, American Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene, Indian Public Health Association, and Indian Association of Water Pollution Control, and he is a fellow of the Royal Society of Health.

KAWHIA, early New Zealand Wesleyan mission station, is situated on the Kawhia Harbor on the west coast of the North Island. It was the site of considerable missionary activity from the 1830's onward. WILLIAM WOON was appointed there at the close of 1834, followed shortly afterward by JOHN WHITELEY.

This work was discontinued temporarily in 1836 on instructions from the London committee of the Wesleyan Missionary Society because of a dispute over spheres of influence with the Church Missionary Society.

The dispute was resolved satisfactorily in October 1838, and Whiteley returned to Kawhia to take up work at the new center of Ahu Ahu, now known as Te Waitere (the Maori version of "Whiteley") at the south end of the harbor. He remained there until 1856, when he was succeeded by C. H. SCHNACKENBERG.

FRANCIS E. KEARNS

KEARNS, FRANCIS EMNER (1905-), American bishop, was born on Dec. 9, 1905, in Bentleyville, Pa., the son of George V. and Jennie Mae (McCleary) Kearns. He is a graduate of OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1927, and D.D. 1954; BOSTON UNIVERSITY, S.T.B., and in 1930 received from this University the Jacob Sleeper Fellowship for study in Edinburgh University, Scotland, (1930-31) and the University of Berlin, Germany (1931). From the University of Pittsburgh he received the Ph.D. degree in 1939; a LL.D. from MOUNT UNION COLLEGE in 1965; a L.H.D. from OHIO NORTHERN UNIVERSITY in 1965, and a Ph.D., BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE in 1966. On Sept. 1, 1933, he was united in marriage to Alice M. Thompson, who is a graduate also of Ohio Wesleyan. Bishop and Mrs. Kearns have three children—Rollin T., Margaret Alice (Mrs. Richard Baldwin), and Francis Emner.

Francis Emner Kearns was admitted on trial into the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE in 1927; full connection, and ordained DEACON, 1930; ELDER in 1931. His pastorates include Dravosburg, Pa., 1931-32; associate pastor, Christ Church, Pittsburgh, 1932-35; Ben Avon Church, Pittsburgh, 1935-40; Uniontown, Pa., 1940-45; Wauwatosa, Wis., 1945-64. He was elected to the episcopacy (North Central Jurisdiction) in 1964 and assigned to the Ohio East Area with headquarters in CANTON, OHIO.

Bishop Kearns was president of the Milwaukee County Council of Churches from 1956 to 1958; dean of the Wisconsin Area Pastor's School from 1948-60; member of the North Central Jurisdictional Association on Christian Education, 1952-64—secretary, 1956-60; chairman of the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE Board of Education, 1952-64; member of the National Board of Education, 1956-64; member of the Curriculum Committee, 1956-64; chairman of the Faith and Order Commission of the Ohio Council of Churches, since 1965; member of the Methodist Interboard Commission on Town and Country, 1964-68; chairman of the Interboard Committee on Christian Vocations, 1964-68. He is vice-chairman, General Board of Education, The United Methodist Church, since 1968; chairman, Division of Curriculum Resources, General Board of Education, since 1968; member of the PROGRAM COUNCIL, and of the METHODIST CORPORATION. He was a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1951 (Oxford, England), in 1956 (Lake Junaluska, N. C.), and in 1961 (Oslo, Norway); to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1952, '56 and '64; and to the North American Faith and Order Conference and the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Oberlin, Ohio, in 1957. He was on the Board of Directors on the Family Service of Milwaukee, 1952-60; and is a trustee to Baldwin-Wallace College, Mount Union College, Ohio Northern University, Ohio Wesleyan University and the METHODIST THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL IN OHIO.

He is the author of The Church is Mine, 1962; a booklet The Spiritual Message of the Hebrews, 1955.

KEARNSNEY COLLEGE, Botha's Hill, Natal, SOUTH AFRICA, is a boarding school for boys founded in 1921 by Sir J. Liege Hulett, in his own home on the north coast of Natal, with an enrollment of eleven boys. The school was rebuilt at Botha's Hill in 1939 and is beautifully situated at an altitude of 2,700 feet on the edge of the Valley of a Thousand Hills between Durban and Pietermaritzburg. Under a strong Board of Governors appointed by the Methodist Conference, the school has steadily grown in size and amenities to its present status as one of the biggest and best equipped private schools in South Africa. Enrollment is 470 boys and thirty teaching staff. Headmasters have been R. H. Matterson (1921-

KEEBLE, SAMUEL EDWARD (1853-1946), British Methodist and social reformer, was born in London in 1853. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1878, training at Didsbury College. He served widely as a circuit minister, but his life's work was to convince Methodism that the application of religion to society required more than a negative attitude to specific vices. Under the leadership of HUGH PRICE HUGHES, he wrote "Labour Lore" for the Methodist Times and, advancing far beyond the Liberal position, became editor of the socialist Methodist Weekly. For many years he played a prominent part in the FREE CHURCH FEDERAL COUNCIL. In 1909, his advocacy of the admission of women to the Wesleyan Conference was successful. He was almost entirely responsible for the formation in 1905 of the Wesleyan METHODIST UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE, of which he was the first and last president. He was elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED in 1908, and his aims were largely achieved when a social welfare wing was added to the existing Wesleyan Temperance Department:—as a result the Union for Social Service was dissolved in 1926. His most important books were Industrial Day-Dreams (1896), and Christian Responsibility for the Social Order, the FERNLEY LECTURE for 1921. Keeble, age ninety-three, died on Sept. 5, 1946.

KEEDYSVILLE, MARYLAND, U.S.A. Geeting Meeting House was the first house of worship erected for the United Brethren in Christ. It was built sometime before 1774 to house a congregation that had begun to meet in the schoolhouse where GEORGE ADAM GEETING, a convert of Otterbein's had been a teacher.

Originally a log building, the Geeting Meeting House no longer exists and the site where it stood is marked by a monument erected in 1907. Its successor was the Mt. Hebron Church, erected in 1845 and abandoned in 1870, when a new building was constructed in Keedysville.

George Adam Geeting himself was ordained in the Geeting Meeting House at Whitsuntide, 1783; and he continued to serve as its pastor until his death in 1812.

BRUCE C. SOUDERS

Salem Church, Evangelical United Brethren, traces its beginnings to the "Geeting Meeting House" which may have been built as early as 1774. (A cemetery and foundation remain on the old site.)

Sometime during 1760, PHILIP WILLIAM OTTERBEIN accepted a call to serve the Reformed Church in Frederick, Maryland. His zeal to save men sent him many times across the mountains on horseback into Washington County and to the area around the present day Keedysville. On one of these trips, a group of religious German-speaking people prevailed upon this young Reformed minister to stop and preach in the log school house of George Adam Geeting near the Little Antietam Creek. As a result of this visit, a congregation grew and worshipped in the "Geeting Meeting House."

The meeting house was the earliest church building of the E.U.B. denomination. It was on Whitsuntide, 1783, that Geeting was ordained in the "Geeting Meeting House" by William Otterbein and William Hendel. This ceremony was considered to be informal, and he was later ordained by the Reformed coetus in 1788. This made George Adam Geeting the first minister ordained in the E.U.B. Church.

In 1845, the congregation built the Mt. Hebron Church across the road and held services there until 1870, when a new building was constructed in Keedysville, which became the Salem Church. The VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (UB), meeting in the Mt. Hebron Church in 1847, voted to publish the Virginia Telescope.

Although the original meeting house has been torn down, the cemetery remains wherein George Adam Geeting and his ministerial son, George, Jr., are buried.

There has been no break in the continuous church history of the Salem Church, Keedysville, from approximately 1774 to the present. (Only the OLD OTTERBEIN CHURCH, Baltimore, Maryland, has a longer history in the denomination, although that church building was closed for several years in the mid-nineteenth century when the Reformed Church took court action to claim the property.)

KEENE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, U.S.A., is the county seat of Cheshire County, and is situated in the southwestern part of the state. Since it was at Chesterfield, only twelve miles from Keene, that JESSE LEE preached and in 1796 the first Methodist Society in the state was organized, the city of Keene borders on historic ground. The earliest accessible records show that in 1803 Keene was included with Chesterfield and eight other towns in Ashburnham Circuit, of which John Gove and Luther Bishop were preachers in charge. From 1824-34, Keene was included in the Winchester Circuit. Although it remained a mission, it was variously connected with different towns like Chesterfield, Westmoreland, Marlow, and Gilsium until 1851, when it became a station with Jonathan Hall appointed pastor. A church building was erected and dedicated by Bishop OSMAN C. BAKER in July, 1852. In 1853, the building was enlarged and a vestry placed beneath it. WILLIAM BUTLER of Westfield, Mass., later founder of the Mission to INDIA, preached at the reopening service Nov. 9, 1853. Fourteen years later this frame church was sold and removed and the erection of the present beautiful edifice at a cost of $20,000 begun under the pastorate of Cadford M. Dinsmore. This church was dedicated Nov. 23, 1869, with the sermon by J. A. M. Chapman. The NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL CONFERENCE has been held here for six sessions, five of which were in the present building. This church continues one of the choice appointments in the Conference. In 1970 it reports 379 members, 193 in the Church School, and an estimated value of church building, equipment, and land, $399,355.

KEENER, JOHN CHRISTIAN (1819-1906), American bishop, was born in Baltimore, Md., Feb. 7, 1819. His father, a leading layman, followed the section of the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE that adhered to the North in 1844. It was primarily due to the elder Keener that WILLIAM TAYLOR was sent as a missionary to CALIFORNIA.

John Keener was taken into the home of WILBUR FISK, then a private tutor in Baltimore, and was educated by President Fisk in the first class at WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, graduating in 1835.

Converted in Baltimore at nineteen, Keener entered the wholesale drug business. Influenced largely by the fact that the young lady to whom he was engaged went to ALABAMA, he followed her there, went into the ministry and joined the ALABAMA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South in 1843. He served in Alabama for five years and then went to NEW ORLEANS, La., in 1848, where he remained for twenty years. His appointments were: Poydras Street, Carondelet Street, and Felicity Street Churches, and presiding elder of the New Orleans District. He was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 1866-70. He acted as superintendent of the Confederate States Army Chaplains west of the Mississippi during the Civil War.

Great books were a passion with him. His book, The Post Oak Circuit (1857), had a large sale.

In 1870 he was elected bishop by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South. For twenty-eight years he filled the episcopal office with zeal and fidelity. He was not the best judge of men but he "gave good missionary leadership" in TEXAS and MEXICO. He was the first missionary of the M. E. Church, South to go into Mexico.

Keener retired from the episcopacy in 1898, and never attended a meeting of the COLLEGE OF BISHOPS after that time. An intense Southerner, he became more so as a chaplain in the Confederate States Army and as a pastor in New Orleans in reconstruction days. He was naturally of an imperious disposition, and as the episcopacy in the Southern Church was then at the height of its powers and almost above challenge by the ministers of the Church, Keener became one who typified the arbitrary attitude that often marked the bishops of his day. Bishop HARMON states that his father told him that when he was a boy in the Carondelet Street Church, he once saw the bishop with his family sitting in their pew preparing to take part in the morning worship. But it happened that FRANCES E. WILLARD, the temperance protagonist, had been brought in to bring the message of the morning. When Bishop Keener saw her going to the pulpit, he reached under the seat, got his "stove-pipe" hat, and he and the whole Keener family marched out. "Let your women keep silence in the churches."

With all, he was a strong leader and it was said that to have him under one's roof was a benediction. Three of his sons became itinerant ministers and one daughter married a minister. He loved New Orleans in spite of all its worldliness, and lived there until he died on Jan. 19, 1906.

KEENEY, FREDERICK THOMAS (1863-1952), American bishop, was born at Fabius, N. Y., on Feb. 9, 1863. His father, Seabury Brown Keeney, entered the ministry when Frederick was two months old, and Frederick was converted at thirteen in a revival conducted by his father.

He was graduated from Wyoming Seminary in 1882. SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY conferred on him the A.B. in 1886; Ph.M., 1888; D.D., 1900; and LL.D., 1920. He married Georgia Smith on Aug. 3, 1886, and she died in 1929.

He was licensed to preach in 1885, and was ordained DEACON in the CENTRAL NEW YORK CONFERENCE in 1886. His pastorates were: Erieville, 1886; Cincinnati, 1886-87; Tully, 1888-89; Cazenovia, 1890-92; Hedding in Elmira, 1893-98; Penn Yan, 1898-99; presiding elder, Auburn District, 1899-1901; Elmira, 1901-04; First Church, Syracuse, 1904-18. He was executive secretary of the Missionary Centenary Fund, 1919-20.

He was delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. E. Church, 1904-20. In 1910 he represented the M. E. Church at the WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE at Edinburgh. He was elected bishop in 1920, and served the Fochow Area, 1920-24; Omaha, 1924-28; Atlanta, 1928-36, and retired in 1936. He served continuously on the BOARD OF MISSIONS and the BOARD OF PENSIONS, 1908-36. After retirement he became Director of the Million Unit Fellowship Movement, 1936-40.

The tribute of J. B. Randolph, at one time president of CLAFLIN COLLEGE, gives an excellent character sketch of Bishop Keeney: "Wherever he went, he carried with him the very breath of heaven. Whenever we heard him preaching, we felt that our father God spoke directly to us through him."

His only daughter, Dorothea Keeney, Ph.D., gave up her academic and missionary career to care for her father in his old age. He died on Sept. 24, 1952.

KEIGHLEY, JOSHUA (17?-1787), British Methodist itinerant, born in Halifax, Yorkshire, was converted while jocularly leading a gaming party to a prayer meeting. After serving as exhorter, he began traveling in 1780, serving in Northampton, York, Norwich, Sussex, Pembroke, Inverness, and Edinburgh Circuits. WESLEY ordained him July 28, 1786, for SCOTLAND, where he administered the Sacraments. He is described as "a highly esteemed itinerant preacher, deeply devoted to God and greatly beloved by all who knew him." He was named in the DEED OF DECLARATION. CHARLES ATMORE gives interesting extracts from Keighley's Journal describing premonitional experiences. About to marry, he died of fever at Elgin, Aug. 10, 1787.

GEORGE LAWTON

KELLEY, DAVID CAMPBELL (1833-1909), American preacher, physician and colonel of the Confederate States Army, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., Dec. 25, 1833, the son of a Methodist preacher. His mother was a sister of Governor Campbell of TENNESSEE. Both parents were from Scotch-Irish lineage, whose families were aggressive pioneers in the religious and political life of Tennessee and KENTUCKY. David Kelley was an excellent example of the rugged individualist, who made strong friends and strong enemies. He graduated from Cumberland University at eighteen; became a member of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE at nineteen; and an M.D. at twenty. In 1868 he received a D.D. and in 1896 a LL.D. Kelley's passion for missions led him to CHINA in 1852-55. In that later year his wife's health necessitated his return home.

From 1861-65 he served in the Confederate Cavalry, where his diligence promoted him rapidly from private to colonel, even though he was an abolitionist and a Unionist in sympathy. From 1866-1909 his appointments were to the larger churches and the presiding eldership. In 1890 he received a large vote for Governor, on the Prohibitionist Ticket. This precipitated a charge against him at the following annual conference, "for deserting his appointment while running for Governor." He was without appointment for six months, until exonerated by a trial jury.

Kelley's continuing missionary zeal led to the organization of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY (MES), in McKendree Church, Nashville. Later he was elected Associate Secretary and then Treasurer of the General Board of Missions (MES).

After retirement, March 1909, he volunteered to serve two mountain churches, which had been left without appointment, while a young man could be found. Three months later he came down ill from his coal mining charges and went to his daughter's home, Mrs. WALTER LAMBUTH. He passed away May 15, 1909. It was Lambuth who later opened the Missions of the M. E. Church, South, in JAPAN, KOREA and the Belgian CONGO.

KELLEY, WILLIAM VALENTINE (1843-1927), American preacher, author and editor, was born at Plainfield, N. J., on Feb. 13, 1843. His parents were Benjamin and Eliza

Valentine Kelley. He graduated from PENNINGTON SEMINARY in New Jersey and from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in Connecticut. After teaching for three years at Pennington Seminary, he joined the NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE in 1869. His pastorates included churches in New Brunswick, N. J.; BUFFALO, N. Y.; PHILADELPHIA, Pa.; NEWARK, N. J.; NEW HAVEN, Conn.; and BROOKLYN, N. Y. He was appointed to be the biographer of Bishops WILEY and SIMPSON.

In 1893, he was elected editor of The Methodist Review, a quarterly of the M. E. Church, and continued in that post for twenty-six years. Kelley was a prolific writer and prominent in the leadership of the church. He was a member of five GENERAL CONFERENCES and served as fraternal delegate to other Methodist denominations. His literary skill in the field of the essay is notable. Among his works are The Illumined Face, My Gray Gull, A Pilgrim of the Infinite, and The Ripening Experience of Life. He could blend the mystical, the familiar commonplace, the scriptural and the practical in his essays with such charm and imaginativeness that he came to have a large number of readers. He married Eliza Whitman McVeigh of Philadelphia. Honorary degrees were awarded him by Wesleyan, Dickinson and OHIO WESLEYAN Colleges. Kelley died on Dec. 14, 1927, at Maplewood, N. J. His estate, which totaled $200,000 was left to various Methodist institutions, DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY receiving one half of it.

CHARLES H. KELLY

KELLY, CHARLES HENRY (1833-1911), British Methodist, was born on Nov. 25, 1833, at Salford, in Lancashire. Though educated at a Quaker school, he was brought up a Methodist; and in 1858, after training for the Wesleyan Methodist ministry at Didsbury College, MANCHESTER, he was chosen as president's assistant to the governor of the college, John Bowers (1796-1866). In 1859, Kelley went as assistant to WILLIAM H. RULE at Aldershot military camp. The whole structure of Wesleyan Methodist work in the army and royal navy was built on the rights won by Rule and Kelly in the orderly rooms, military prisons, and hospital lines at Aldershot, and on the work which, two years later, Kelly did alone at Chatham and Sheerness.

He did notable work also among young people, served for fourteen years as secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union, and largely inspired the formation of the WESLEY GUILD. He was fraternal delegate to the 1888 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in New York; and the following year he was elected president, and was also appointed BOOK STEWARD, a post which he retained until his retirement in 1907. It was in his time that the name of the book steward was adopted as the imprint of the publishing house, a practice which continued until the retirement of Edgar Barton as book steward in 1948. Kelly was elected president for a second time in 1905. In his pastoral address to the 1889 Conference he appealed for practical holiness springing out of a profound spirituality, and appears to have exemplified it in his own life, visiting the prisoners in Wandsworth Prison weekly from his retirement until his death on April 5, 1911.

JOHN NEWTON

KELLY, EDWARD WENDALL (1880-1964), American bishop, was born at Mexia, Texas, on Dec. 27, 1880, the son of Taylor and Laura Kelly. He attended WILEY COLLEGE and GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL. He married Oma A. Burnett on Dec. 25, 1906, and they had one son. At one time he was a teacher in the public schools of TEXAS, and was ordained in the M. E. Church in 1917.

He served the following pastorates: Ebenezer, Marshall, Texas; Wesley Tabernacle, Galveston; St. Paul, Dallas; Scott Church, Detroit, Mich., and Union Memorial, St. Louis, Mo. He was elected bishop by the Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church in 1944, and served the St. Louis Area for eight years, until his retirement in 1952. He also taught evangelism in Schools of Methods conducted by the BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Bishop FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL said that Bishop Kelly, not merely by his spirit but by consummate sense and sensibility, served the church and nation supremely well in creating better relationships among all races. He was one of four men that McConnell said could not be replaced by any group of men of any race.

Bishop Kelly died in DETROIT, where he had lived since retirement.

KELSO, THOMAS (1784-1878), American businessman and philanthropist, was born Aug. 28, 1784, in IRELAND. He came to the United States in 1791 and made BALTIMORE his home. Converted in childhood, he did not join a church until 1807, when he united with the M. E. Church, where he soon became an active member, a cheerful giver and liberal supporter of all her enterprises.

Among other gifts he gave $12,000 to the Church Extension Society; $7,000 to Mt. Vernon Place Church, Baltimore; $14,000 to Metropolitan Church, WASHINGTON, D. C., and at a cost of $120,000, purchased property and endowed a home for church orphans.

Shunning most civic offices, Kelso did serve several terms as City Councilman in Baltimore. His business positions included president of the Equitable Life Insurance Society; vice president and director of First National Bank, Baltimore; principal director and largest stockholder of the Baltimore Steam Packet Company and of the Seaboard and Roanoke Railway Company, and for thirty-seven years a director of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company.

His official positions in the church included president of the Preachers' Aid Society, helping direct the Male Free School and Colored Institute, and trustee and manager in other institutions. He died at the age of ninety-four, having devoted his money and his life to the M. E. Church and the United States.

KEMP HOME, THE, located about one mile west of Frederick, Maryland, is remembered as the site where, Sept. 25, 1800, PHILIP WILLIAM OTTERBEIN and MARTIN BOEHM met with at least twelve like-minded "unsectarian ministers" to organize the first formal organization of those who were to become known as the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

From about 1790 on, the place had been a center of fervent religious activity for men like Otterbein, Martin Boehm, FRANCIS ASBURY, HENRY BOEHM, JOHN NEIDIG, CHRISTIAN NEWCOMER, GEORGE ADAM GETTING, and many others. It continued to be so until 1830 and was the scene of the second Conference in 1801.

A substantial stone home of the type usually associated with the German settlers of PENNSYLVANIA, the Peter Kemp Home was built by Peter's father and remained in the family for at least another generation. Shortly after Peter Kemp died in 1811, his son-in-law, Valentine Doub, moved into the homestead. Peter Kemp was himself a minister, and the small local group of worshippers that he had gathered together at his home continued to meet there for a number of years before moving on to the Rocky Springs School House.

Evolving into a congregation (Rocky Springs) which built its own church building in 1881, the group played an important role in the history of the United Brethren Church in that section of Maryland. However, it was abandoned in 1910.

BRUCE C. SOUDERS

KENDALL, HOLLIDAY BICKERSTAFF (1849-1919), British Methodist editor and historian, was born at Wakefield in Yorkshire, where he was at first a worker in the printing trade. Self-educated, he entered the PRIMITIVE METHODIST ministry in 1868 and served mainly in northern circuits. He gained the B.A. (Durham), and for a period was principal of an interdenominational college in Newcastle on Tyne for the training of ministers for churches in Britain and the Colonies. From 1892 to 1901, he was Primitive Methodist CONNEXIONAL EDITOR, and in 1901 he was elected president of the Primitive Methodist Conference. He was editor of the Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review. In 1888, he wrote The History of the Primitive Methodist Connexion (revised in 1919); and in 1905 The Origin and History of the Primitive Methodist Church, a two-volume work which became the standard history of the denomination. He also published in 1905, Primitive Methodist Church Handbook of Principles and Policy. As Hartley Lecturer in 1901, he took as his subject Christ's Kingdom and Church in the Nineteenth Century.

He died on March 10, 1919.

KENDALL, WALTER S. (1904-), an ordained elder of the Oregon Conference, and a bishop of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH (U.S.A.), was a student at Evansville Seminary and College. His ministerial service was in the Wisconsin and Oregon Conferences where he was pastor and superintendent for fourteen years. He also traveled extensively as an evangelist for eighteen years. He has been a bishop since 1958, and president of the World Fellowship of Free Methodist Churches since 1964. He served as Chairman of the Administrative Commission. As senior bishop, he was chairman of the Board of Bishops. W. S. Kendall retired at the general conference, 1969, with title, Bishop Emeritus. Bishop and Mrs. Kendall live at Winona Lake, Ind.

KENDALL COLLEGE, Evanston, Illinois, was organized in 1934 as Evanston Collegiate Institute, with special emphasis upon a work-study program. Its parent institutions were two theological schools for the training of ministers for the Scandinavian Methodist conferences. The name was changed to Kendall College in 1950 in recognition of the benefactions of Harry and George Kendall. The college receives support from the ROCK RIVER and EAST WISCONSIN CONFERENCES. The governing board has thirty-six trustees elected by the Kendall College Corporation, which may have 150 members; 60 percent of the board and of the corporation must be members of The United Methodist Church.

JOHN O. GROSS

KENDRICK, JOHN (1779-1813), Wesleyan Methodist local preacher, was a sergeant in the British Army of occupation at the Cape of Good Hope and there established the first permanent Methodist society in SOUTH AFRICA. Born in 1779 at Wokingham, Berkshire, England, Kendrick enlisted in the British Army in 1797, and later as sergeant in the 21st Light Dragoons was sent to Newcastle in Staffordshire. Here he was converted under the ministry of George Morley and later became a local preacher.

In 1806, he arrived with his regiment at the Cape of Good Hope, but was posted to Saldanha Bay for various periods, during which he wrote many cherished letters to Methodist soldiers at the Cape. The small society suffered "much loss by dispute about opinions" with Calvinists; and, after dispersal, it was reformed in 1809 with Kendrick as leader and seven members. The work spread from the 21st Dragoons to the 93rd Regiment, and Kendrick was appointed as "superintendent." The effect of his work is shown by charges of "enthusiasm" for which Methodists were examined in 1810 by the Chaplain; by the purchase of books to the value of £80, well-bound for constant use; by a revival in the 93rd Regiment in 1810; and by the growth of the military society, despite official opposition, to 142 by 1812.

This opposition reached its climax when in 1811 a Methodist sergeant was reduced to the ranks for holding a watchnight service; and Kendrick himself was given a reprimand by the Colonel before the whole regiment on parade. Kendrick's influence survived the ordeal, for he was soon appointed Sergeant School Master, and entrusted with the instruction of the Colonel's own children. On Dec. 31, 1812, Kendrick wrote to Britain requesting the appointment of a Methodist preacher at the Cape. He did not live to see the request granted for he died at Cape Town on Nov. 18, 1813.

Though not the first leader of the society of Methodist soldiers at the cape, Kendrick laid the foundation of South African Methodism, for he rallied the first small group after dispersion, built a society strong enough to provide the basis for the first permanent Methodist appointment to South Africa. Records from his journal preserved by BARNABAS SHAW revealed a genuinely saintly character. His catholicity of spirit, compassion, and humility kept healthy his Methodist ardour for perfect love.

LESLIE A. HEWSON

KENMORE, NEW YORK, U.S.A. Kenmore Methodist Church is a leader in western New York Methodism—a vital church with a comprehensive program serving Methodists in the northern suburb of BUFFALO. Organized in 1891 when Kenmore was a budding community, it has grown with the populated area in which it is located. Today its full-time professional staff includes three ministers, a director of Christian education, and a minister of music.

The present church building, dedicated in 1928, is an English Gothic structure especially designed for its corner-site. As the community expanded around it, steps were taken to meet the needs of a growing and enthusiastic congregation: identical Sunday worship services were inaugurated, remodeling undertaken to extend the sanctuary, and two adjacent apartment buildings were acquired more than doubling education facilities.

The education program on Sunday mornings is carried on simultaneously with the two worship services. Numbering close to 150 youth in average weekly attendance, Methodist Youth Fellowship groups meet Sunday evenings with staff and lay leadership. During the pastorate of Dr.

Franklin M. Zentz, youth seminars have been held with alternating trips to Washington, D. C., the United Nations, and Canada. Over sixty young people of the Senior High School age group have been registered for each of these and have followed through the prescribed pre-seminar preparation. Through the years a number of youth have entered full-time Christian service. The minister of music directs the program of six choirs. The missions program has grown in strength under the guidance of the minister of Christian outreach. The church gives support to a missionary couple in JAPAN, and at the same time helps both financially and with volunteer personnel the Inner City program in Buffalo. There has been active participation in the International Christian Youth Exchange program for the past few years. Present membership (1970) of Kenmore Church is 2,211.

GERALD KENNEDY

KENNEDY, GERALD HAMILTON (1907-), American bishop, was born at Benson, Mich., on Aug. 30, 1907, the son of Herbert Grant and Marian (Phelps) Kennedy. He has received the following degrees: from UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC, A.B., 1929; Pacific School of Religion, A.M., 1931, and B.D., 1932; Hartford Theological Seminary, S.T.M., and the Ph.D. in 1934. He has received twelve honorary degrees: UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND, LL.D.; NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Litt.D.; Pacific School of Religion, D.D.; University of the Pacific, D.S.T.; Beloit College, L.H.D.; OHIO WESLEYAN, LL.D.; University of Redlands, D.D.; Bradley University, H.H.D.; Bucknell, D.D.; California Western University, L.H.D.; Los Angeles College of Law, LL.D., and Carroll College, D.D.

On June 2, 1928, he was united in marriage to Mary Leeper, of Dester, Iowa.

Gerald Kennedy was admitted on trial in the Methodist Church and ordained deacon in the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE, 1931, and admitted to full connection and elder in 1932. His pastorates have included First Congregational Church, Collinsville, Conn., 1932-36; Calvary Church, San Jose, Calif., 1936-40; First Church, Palo Alto, Calif., 1940-42; St. Paul Methodist Church, Lincoln, Neb., 1942-48. He was acting professor of homiletics at the Pacific School of Religion, 1938-42. He was elected bishop of The Methodist Church at the Western JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in Seattle, Wash., in July, 1948, and assigned to the PORTLAND (Oregon) Area where he served from 1948-52; then to the Los Angeles Area.

Since 1957 he has been a member of the General Board of NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, and chairman of the Council's West Coast Committee, Broadcasting and Film Commission. He was president of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church, 1960-61, and of the Division of National Missions of the BOARD OF MISSIONS, 1960-64, and during the same period, chairman of the Commission on Deaconess Work. He was president of The Methodist Church's BOARD OF EVANGELISM, a member of the Board of Publication, and the Commission on Chaplains, 1964-68.

Bishop Kennedy is a trustee of the University of the Pacific, Pacific School of Religion, California Western University, and the SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at CLAREMONT California. He is on the Board of Directors of GOODWILL INDUSTRIES of Southern California, the Methodist Hospital of Southern California, Pacific Homes Corporation, and Pasadena Playhouse. He has been a member of the California Board of Education since 1961.

Bishop Kennedy has written numerous books. These are His Word Through Preaching, 1947; Have This Mind, 1948; The Best of John Henry Jowett (edited), 1948; The Lion and the Lamb, 1950; With Singleness of Heart, 1951; Go Inquire of the Lord, 1952; A Reader's Notebook, 1953; Who Speaks For God?, 1954; Cod's Good News, 1955; The Christian and His America, 1958; The Methodist Way of Life, 1958; I Believe, 1958; Reader's Notebook, 2, 1959; The Parables, 1960; While I'm On My Feet, 1963; For Preachers and Other Sinners, 1964; Fresh Every Morning, 1966; and The Seven Worlds of the Minister; also numerous lectureships including Beecher Lectures on Preaching at Yale University.

KENNEDY, JAMES LILLBOURNE (1857-1942), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, a son and grandson of Methodist preachers, was born in Strawberry Plains, Tenn., on Dec. 31, 1857. He attended WOFFORD and Weaverville Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1877. He was admitted to the HOLSTON CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South, in 1879, and for two years was a circuit rider in NORTH CAROLINA and VIRGINIA. Responding to J. J. RANSOM's appeal for missionaries, he was ordained DEACON by Bishop HOLLAND MCTEYRE in October, 1880; and in March, 1881, sailed for Brazil via England, with Ransom. They arrived in RIO DE JANEIRO on May 16.

The first two years were spent learning the language as he worked and preached to the American ex-Confederates, the Southerners who had left their country after the Civil War, and settled in and near Santa Barbara, state of São Paulo. He also served helping Ransom build Catete Chapel, the first Methodist church in Brazil. In 1883, after a near fatal case of yellow fever, he returned to the United States. He married his fiancée, Jennie Wallace of Knoxville, Tenn., on May 16, 1883, and she proved a talented and consecrated helpmeet. Three children were born to this union, two of whom married missionaries in Brazil. Jennie Kennedy died on Jan. 1, 1913. Six years later, Kennedy married Daisy Pyles, former missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, by whom he had one son, Embree Moore.

James L. Kennedy was a charter member of the first Brazil Annual Conference, organized by Bishop J. C. GRANBERY in September, 1886, a conference that had the unique distinction of being the smallest annual conference ever organized in Methodism. He served actively for fifty-five years; and after retirement in 1935, added five more years of fruitful work.

Throughout the years, Kennedy served as a pastor, presiding elder, educator, editor of the church organ, editor of the children's magazine (O Juvenil), and of a monthly with the Sunday School lessons (Revista da Escola Dominical). He also translated into Portuguese a book of Wesley's sermons and a catechism. H. C. TUCKER, another pioneer missionary, said that Kennedy "organized more congregations, built more churches, and won more converts than any other man on the field."

In the early days, and even up to 1935, Kennedy was often the target of bitter persecution, being pelted with rotten fruits or vegetables, having his preaching halls and school attacked by shouting mobs with stones, sticks, and filth. In Bangu, near Rio de Janeiro, where he had gone to hold services in a private home, he was almost killed by a band of armed men. Most amazingly, when he was preaching years later in another city, a man came to him in tears, begging forgiveness for having been one of his attackers on that occasion.

Kennedy instituted the first regular services in English for his countrymen, at Catete Church, Rio. In July, 1885, with his wife, Jennie, he organized the first LADIES' AID SOCIETY of the Methodist Church in Brazil, affiliating it with the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, in the United States. While acting pastor in Taubaté, state of São Paulo, he ran a successful school with his wife as head of the boarding department.

One of his pupils, Monteiro Lobato, who became Brazil's outstanding author of children's stories, said he received inspiration from hearing the stories and legends that Kennedy told. Decades later, honoring him posthumously, that city where he had once been attacked named a street after Kennedy.

In 1915, Kennedy traveled to the far northwest of the state of São Paulo, to study possibilities there for Methodist work. This is now a great field of the church. In 1916, he sponsored and helped nourish the first Conference of Women's Societies which had been called by and organized under the leadership of LAYONA GLENN. In 1922, through friendship with a Scotsman, he secured a vast mountainous area in the state of São Paulo, for an interdenominational retreat and assembly grounds, later called Umuarama. A bronze plaque on the main building honors him as founder.

In 1924, he was authorized by the annual conference to write a history of Methodism's first fifty years in Brazil—a work completed in 1927 which serves as basic information for future studies of the subject. In 1927, EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, Virginia, conferred upon him the degree of D.D.

Kennedy was known and loved for his cheerful, kindly spirit, an unusual ability to pour oil on troubled waters. J. EARL MORELAND, president of RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, himself a returned missionary from Brazil, wrote: "In my opinion, Dr. Kennedy ranks with a half-dozen of the great missionary leaders of the last 100 years . . ."

Kennedy died on Dec. 7, 1942, in São Paulo, and was buried in the Protestant Cemetery.

KENNEDY, JAMES SKIDMORE (1826-1905), American minister and college president, was born Dec. 31, 1826, in Madison County, Va. He graduated from EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE in 1849 and taught at Cleveland High School, 1849, and at Strawberry Plains, Tennessee, 1850. He was principal of the preparatory department of RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in 1851. He was licensed to preach in 1848, and was admitted to the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1852, but transferred to the HOLSTON CONFERENCE in 1857. He was president of Strawberry Plains College for two years, president of Holston Female College for ten years, and president of Weaverville College for two years. As a preacher he served stations and districts for twenty-seven years. He superannuated in 1895.

He married Malinda Williams Stringfield on Aug. 26, 1861, and they had ten children. One son, JAMES LILLBOURNE KENNEDY, and two daughters, Fannie and Molly, were missionaries to Brazil.

J. S. Kennedy was a delegate to the M. E. South GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1866, 1874, 1882 and 1894. He was awarded the honorary D.D. by WOFFORD COLLEGE.

Kennedy died in Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 19, 1905, and was buried in the Old Gray Cemetery.

KENT, JOHN H. S. (1923-), British Methodist, was educated at Emmanuel College, CAMBRIDGE, where he read history, took a Ph.D., and later taught. He was accepted for the British Methodist ministry in 1950 and was given his theological training at Wesley House, Cambridge. After a year as assistant tutor in Wesley College, Headingley, and two years in the circuit ministry, he was permitted by the Methodist Conference to serve at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1955-59), whence he was called in 1959 to teach church history at Hartley Victoria College, MANCHESTER. From 1965 he has been lecturer in ecclesiastical history and doctrine in the University of Bristol. He delivered the Wesley Historical Society Lecture, on Jabez Bunting, the Last Wesleyan, in 1955, and has written discerningly in the realm of modern church history and ecumenics, notably in his The Age of Disunity (Epworth Press, 1966). He is the editor of the British Methodist materials in this Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

KENTUCKY, lying immediately north of TENNESSEE and South of OHIO, INDIANA, and ILLINOIS, is a border state between the northern and southern parts of the United States. Agriculture is the largest single industry, and tobacco is the principal crop. The state ranks third in the production of coal. Kentucky is noted for Hodgenville as the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln, for Fort Knox as the depository of the nation's gold reserve, for its farms near LEXINGTON which produce blooded race horses, for Mammoth Cave, and for its song, "My Old Kentucky Home." The state has a population of 3,160,555 (1970), and an area of 40,395 square miles. Its elevation ranges from 260 feet at the Mississippi River to more than 4,000 feet in the Cumberland and Pine Mountains. Originally a part of VIRGINIA, Kentucky was the first area west of the Allegheny Mountains to be settled by white people. The first settlement was at Harrodsburg in 1774. Kentucky was admitted to the Union in 1792.

Methodism was introduced into Kentucky by Francis Clark, a local preacher who emigrated from Virginia in 1783, settled near Danville, and formed several Methodist societies. Organized Methodism in Kentucky began in 1786 when Bishop ASBURY at the conference in BALTIMORE, appointed James Haw and BENJAMIN OGDEN as missionaries to the "Kentucky District." The next year the work was divided to form two circuits, Kentucky and Cumberland, and OGDEN was appointed to the latter, while Thomas Williamson and WILSON LEE were assigned to the former, with Haw as the elder. In 1788 the Kentucky Circuit was divided to form the Lexington and Danville Circuits.

In 1790 Bishop Asbury made his first visit to Kentucky, and held a conference of the preachers at MASTERSON'S STATION, five miles from Lexington. Asbury wrote, "To reach the seat of the conference, required a journey of several days through a dreary wilderness, replete with dangers and infested by savages." The conference which began on May 15 and closed the next day, stationed twelve preachers on six circuits. Apparently there was no conference in the region in 1791, but beginning in 1792 a conference was held each year.

In 1796 the GENERAL CONFERENCE divided the M. E. Church into six annual conferences with geographical boundaries. One of the six was the WESTERN CONFERENCE which included Kentucky and Tennessee. Prior to 1796 Bishop Asbury held conferences of groups of preachers when and where convenient. After his first visit to Kentucky in 1790, Asbury went to the region for the conference sessions almost every year until his death in 1816.

In 1812 the Western Conference was divided to form the OHIO and TENNESSEE CONFERENCES, each of which included a part of Kentucky. Then in 1820 most of Kentucky was taken back from the Ohio and Tennessee Conferences and designated as the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE. In 1845 the Kentucky Conference adhered South, and the General Conference (MES) of 1846 divided it to form the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. The Kentucky and Louisville Conferences have continued to the present day with little or no change in their boundaries. Through the years the part of Kentucky west of the Tennessee River has been in the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

It may be said that the M. E. Church, South was "born" in Louisville, Ky. Following the division of the M. E. Church in 1844, representatives of the Southern annual conferences met in Louisville in May, 1845, and decided to form the southern branch of the church. (See LOUISVILLE CONVENTION.) Kentucky was also the birthplace of the Boards of Missions and Church Extension of the Southern Church.

The CAMP MEETING as an institution originated on the banks of the Red River in Kentucky. At a Presbyterian sacramental service, sermons were delivered by both Presbyterians and Methodists. A revival began, and people came with provisions to stay several days. Other similar meetings followed in different places. And so began the camp meeting movement which Methodism used effectively for a century or more.

There were a few scattered METHODIST PROTESTANT churches in Kentucky soon after that denomination was organized. In 1867 the M. P. Kentucky Conference was formed by dividing the Tennessee Conference. John Riggs, Sr. was the first president. In 1877 there were some 18 itinerants and about 1,795 members. Prior to 1921 the Methodist Protestants established a mission school at Pine Ridge. The conference came to unification in 1939 with about 20 churches, 33 ministers, and 800 members.

In 1845 when the Kentucky Conference (ME) voted to adhere South, a few of the ministers and congregations favored the Northern branch of the church, and the M. E. Church was soon active in Kentucky. Another KENTUCKY CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church was created in 1852. It grew little until after the Civil War, but at that time some twenty-six Southern Methodist ministers joined it and it became fairly strong. In 1869 the Negro ministers and churches of the conference were set off as the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE. The Kentucky Conference came to unification in 1939 with 105 charges and over 30,000 members. The Lexington Conference continued in the Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church.

Kentucky Methodism established schools and other institutions. BETHEL ACADEMY was established in Jessamine County and operated until about 1804. Kentucky and Ohio Methodism started AUGUSTA COLLEGE, Augusta, Ky., in 1822; it served well and continued until 1849. The Southern Methodists established KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE at Millersburg in 1866 and moved it to Winchester in 1890 (relocated in Owensboro in 1950), and the Northern Methodists founded UNION COLLEGE at Barbourville in 1879. SUE BENNETT JUNIOR COLLEGE began at London, Ky., in 1896, and LINSEY WILSON JUNIOR COLLEGE started at Columbia in 1903. Today Kentucky Methodism owns or is related to four hospitals: the Methodist Hospitals at Henderson and Pikeville, Good Samaritan Hospital at Lexington, and the Methodist Evangelical Hospital in Louisville. The Kentucky Conferences support the Methodist Home, Inc. (for children) at Versailles, and two retirement homes—Wesley Manor at Louisville and Lewis Memorial Home at Franklin.

In 1970, the Kentucky and Louisville Conferences reported approximately 623 charges, 595 ministers, 184,508 members, and property valued at $83,431,204. Add 70 charges, 60 ministers, 21,000 members, and property valued at $9,110,000 from the part of the Memphis Conference which is in Kentucky and the total statistics for The Methodist Church in Kentucky in 1970 were approximately 693 charges, 655 ministers, 205,508 members, and property valued at $92,541,204.

WALTER I. MUNDAY

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE was first created by the 1820 GENERAL CONFERENCE. Prior to that date east KENTUCKY was in the OHIO CONFERENCE and west Kentucky in the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE. On Oct. 4, 1820, the Tennessee Conference met at Hopkinsville, Ky., and the preachers who were to compose the Kentucky Conference assembled with them, Marcus Lindsey presiding in the absence of a bishop. Thus the Kentucky Conference, formed by merging parts of the Ohio and Tennessee Conferences, was set aside at the 1820 session of the Tennessee Conference. The first session of the Kentucky Conference was held at Lexington, beginning Sept. 18, 1821, with Bishops WILLIAM MCKENDREE, ENOCH GEORGE and ROBERT R. ROBERTS in attendance. At the outset the conference had 19,367 members, some 2,100 of them colored.

At the beginning, the Kentucky Conference included most of Kentucky and a small part of VIRGINIA. In 1824, the boundaries were changed to embrace the state of Kentucky and the part of Tennessee north of the Cumberland River. At that time, the Virginia part of the conference went to the Ohio Conference. In 1828, the part of Kentucky west of the Tennessee River was assigned to the Tennessee Conference. Thereafter, the boundaries of the Kentucky Conference did not change until 1846 when, as a conference of the M. E. Church, South, it was divided to form the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. This limited the Kentucky Conference to the eastern part of the state. In 1850, when the WESTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (MES) was formed, it included a few Kentucky counties adjoining Virginia (later WEST VIRGINIA). Those Kentucky counties continued in the Western Virginia Conference (ME) until unification in 1939.

In 1844, the Kentucky Conference reported 39,756 white and 9,362 colored members. In 1850, after it had given up territory to the Louisville and Western Virginia Conferences, the Kentucky Conference reported 18,447 white and 5,391 colored members. There was little or no change in the conference boundaries after 1850.

The Kentucky Methodists desired a school or college. Efforts to establish BETHEL ACADEMY in Jessamine County began at the first conference (1790) which Bishop ASBURY held in the territory, but the project failed about 1804. At the first session of the Kentucky Conference in 1821, there was enthusiasm for a proposal of the Ohio Conference that the two bodies unite in building a college at Augusta, Ky., on the Ohio River. AUGUSTA COLLEGE opened in 1822 with John P. Finley as president. Augusta was the first Methodist college organized after the destruction of COKEBURY COLLEGE in MARYLAND. The school rendered outstanding service until 1849 when it was abandoned in favor of Transylvania University at Lexington. Transylvania failed, and attempts to resuscitate Augusta College thereafter proved futile.

KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE was founded at Millersburg in 1866 and was moved to Winchester in 1890. In 1950, the school was relocated at Owensboro and has become a strong Methodist college with a plant valued at $4,000,000, and endowment of nearly $700,000, and an enrollment of about 1,500. UNION COLLEGE, founded by the Kentucky Conference (ME) at Bourbourville in 1879, now has an endowment of nearly $2,000,000, a plant valued at about $5,000,000, and about 1,500 students. SUE BENNETT JUNIOR COLLEGE at London, Ky., founded in 1896, is related to the National Division of the BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Two members of the Kentucky Conference have been elected bishops, HENRY B. BASCOM and HUBBARD H. KAVANAUGH (1854).

The Kentucky Conference came to unification in 1939 with five districts, 149 charges, 40,342 members and churches and parsonages valued at $3,335,650. At that time, it was merged with parts of the Kentucky Conferences of the M.E. and M.P. Churches to form the Kentucky Conference of The Methodist Church. About 75 charges, 70 ministers and 20,000 members came to the merger from the M.E. Church, and about five charges, 15 ministers, and 500 members from the M.P. Church came into the Kentucky Conference (MC) in 1939. In 1941, the enlarged conference reported seven districts, 237 charges, 57,532 members and property valued at $5,421,114.

In 1970, the Kentucky Conference was supporting Kentucky Wesleyan and LINSEY WILSON Colleges. The latter, a junior college, is within the bounds of the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. In addition, the Kentucky Conference gave approval to Sue Bennett Junior College. The conference has a friendly but not an official connection with ASBURY COLLEGE which was founded in 1890 at Wilmore, Ky., near the site of the old Bethel Academy. Also, the conference was supporting the Methodist Hospital at Pikeville, the Good Samaritan Hospital at Lexington, the Methodist Home, Inc. (for children) at Versailles, and six WESLEY FOUNDATIONS.

The Tennessee-Kentucky Conference (CJ) was merged with the overlying conferences of the Southeastern Jurisdiction in 1968. At that time the Kentucky Conference received 15 churches and 2,330 members from that conference.

In 1970 the Kentucky Conference reported 333 pastoral charges, 276 ministers, 81,108 members, property valued at $38,252,279, and $5,507,671 raised for all purposes during the year.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE (ME, 1853-1939). The 1852 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church created the Kentucky Conference by dividing the OHIO CONFERENCE. At the same time the CINCINNATI CONFERENCE was carved out of the Ohio Conference. For the sake of convenience the Kentucky preachers met with those who were to constitute the Cincinnati Conference at Xenia, Ohio, on Sept. 22, 1852, Bishop EDMUND S. JANES, presiding. The proceedings of the "combined conference" were published in the General Minutes as those of the "Cincinnati and Kentucky Conference." But legally there was no such body; there was a Cincinnati Conference and a Kentucky Conference.

The organizing session of the Kentucky Conference was held at Covington, Ky., Oct. 4, 1853 with Bishop Janes presiding. This conference came into being because there were preachers and congregations in Kentucky that desired to adhere North following the division of the church in 1844. While the old Kentucky Conference as a body adhered South, the preachers and churches who favored the North were soon attached to the Ohio Conference. In 1848 the towns of Lexington and Winchester received Northern pastors, and by 1849 the M. E. Church had about 2,000 members in Kentucky. When organized in 1853, the Kentucky Conference had two districts, 13 charges, and 2,401 members.

During the Civil War many preachers in the Kentucky Conference of the M. E. Church, South favored the Union, and when the conflict was over some of them hoped that Methodism would unite. Convinced that there would be no reunion in the foreseeable future, eighteen of the preachers withdrew when their conference met at Covington in September 1865, and united with the M. E. Church. Nearly all of the eighteen took the rank of local preachers, chose two of their number as presiding elders, and made appointments for themselves in places where the M. E. Church had no organization. When the Kentucky Conference (ME) convened at Covington in February 1866, some twenty-six preachers from the Southern Church were admitted. That year the conference reported six districts, 43 charges, and 6,993 members. For the next decade the conference gained an average of 1,600 white members per year.

In 1866 the conference admitted five colored preachers and organized a Colored Mission District with a white presiding elder. By 1869 there were 3,526 Negro members, and in that year the LEXINGTON (Negro) CONFERENCE was organized.

The Kentucky Conference took an active interest in the people of the highlands occupying the eastern part of the state, and though it had some good churches in the cities and towns over the state, its work was largely rural.

The conference was interested in education, and by endorsement, appointment, visiting committees, and publicity it maintained a close relationship with academies for girls at Augusta, Bardstown, Shelbyville, and Lexington. The conference board of education took charge of Texas Seminary in Madison County in 1871. Augusta Collegiate Institute was started at the location of the extinct AUGUSTA COLLEGE, UNION COLLEGE was launched at Barbourville in 1879, and in 1886 DANIEL STEVENSON, a conference member, bought the property for the conference board of education, and then as president of the college for the next ten years he so administered it as to guarantee its future. The conference acquired the Methodist Hospital at Pikeville in 1922, and it organized the Deaconess Hospital at Louisville in 1895.

The Kentucky Conference came to unification in 1939 with four districts, 105 charges, 30,527 members, and churches and parsonages valued at $3,014,975. At that time the Louisville District of the conference became a part of the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church, while the remainder of the body went into the Kentucky Conference of the new church.

KENTUCKY MISSION CONFERENCE (EUB). The Provisional Session of the Kentucky Mission Conference of The E.U.B. Church met in Columbia, Ky., Sept. 2-4, 1855. Bishop FRED L. DENNIS was the presiding officer.

The Cumberland District, situated in the south central part of KENTUCKY, began history among the United Brethren in 1833, when Virginians established the Bear Wallow Church. Other churches were founded and on Nov. 19, 1857, the Kentucky Mission Conference met in its first session at New Salem meeting house in Adair County, Ky., HENRY KUMLER, JR. being made bishop pro tem.

The church's opposition to slavery caused lives to be threatened and many members left the state in 1860. After the Civil War, the Kentucky work faced many obstacles. In 1921, the Kentucky Conference was dissolved. The churches in the northern section were transferred to the Indiana Conference and the churches in the Cumberland District were assigned to the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

In 1932, Russel S. Showers, Secretary of Home Missions, initiated a program to assist the struggling Kentucky churches. This was continued by succeeding secretaries of the Board of Missions, V. O. WEIDLER and U. P. HOVERMALE. After union with The Evangelical Church in 1946, unified plans to strengthen the work were carried out by Hovermale and his successor, Marlo Berger.

The churches of the Red Bird District located in the southeast portion of the state were not conference-related before 1955. Bishop MATTHEW T. MAZE and B. H. Niebel, Secretary of the Board of Missions of The Evangelical Church, explored the area and the RED BIRD MISSION was opened in Beverly, Bell County, in 1921. J. J. De Wall served as superintendent until his death, Sept. 23, 1928. Under his leadership educational, medical and evangelistic missionary service was established for the people. This work increased under his successors, A. E. Lehman (1929-46) and John Bischoff. Bischoff became Mission Superintendent in 1946 and was also appointed Conference Superintendent in 1955. In 1966, there were twenty-four organized congregations and 1,530 members. Local church property was valued at $702,102, while $66,386 was raised for all purposes.

The fourteenth and concluding annual session of the conference was held at Stull Memorial Church, Beverly, Ky., May 14-15, 1968, with Bishop PAUL HERRICK presiding. In The United Methodist Church, Red Bird Mission is under the Board of Missions, while the Cumberland District belongs to the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.

CHARLES NEW CHURCH, KENYA

KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Owensboro, Kentucky, a joint educational project of the KENTUCKY and LOUISVILLE CONFERENCES, was chartered in 1858 with instruction beginning in 1866. It was located from 1866 until 1890 at Middleburg, Kentucky, from 1890 until 1951 at Winchester, and since 1951 at Owensboro, where it moved at the invitation of the city. Owensboro citizens raised $1,000,000 toward the new campus. The college is one of the beneficiaries of the trust fund established by the late H. R. Kendall of Evanston, Illinois. It offers the B.A. and B.S. degrees. The governing board has twenty-six members, sixteen nominated by Boards of Education of the Kentucky and Louisville Annual Conferences and elected by the conferences; nine at large; the resident bishop, ex officio.

JOHN O. GROSS

KENYA became an independent nation and member of the Commonwealth in 1963. The natural features are a land area of 224,960 square miles, one of the most beautiful mountains in Africa, Mount Kenya (19,000 feet), an equable climate, and a good port at Mombasa on the Indian Ocean. The population is growing at almost three percent per annum, and in 1969 stood at 10,890,000.

In early times, the coastal area was greatly influenced by the Near East and still retains a strong Arab influence. The Portuguese ruled certain areas of the coast from the end of the fifteenth century for a period of 200 years. Their efforts to establish the Christian faith did not survive the end of their colonial rule.

The first half of the nineteenth century witnessed the arrival of European explorers and missionaries. Two of the early missionaries were the first European travellers to see the snow-capped mountains of Mount Kenya and Kilimanjaro.

Dr. J. L. Krapf established the first mission of modern times (1844), under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society, and was instrumental in bringing the Methodist Mission to the Coast in 1862.

An East African Protectorate, including the area now known as Kenya, was established by Britain in 1895, after many years of effort to bring to an end the slave trade from East African ports and Zanzibar. The protectorate came under Colonial Office administration in 1905. In 1920, it was united with the Protectorate of Zanzibar, renamed Kenya, and made a crown colony. A Legislative Council was set up in 1919. Rebellion broke out, largely among the Kikuyu and related tribes, from 1952 to 1955, and was followed by constitutional steps towards independence in 1963.

The branch of Methodism which inaugurated the mission in Kenya was the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES which became in 1907 part of the (British) UNITED METHODIST CHURCH, and in 1932 part of the larger Methodist Church. The mission at first restricted its work to the coastal area, in the neighborhood of Mombasa and on the Tana River. In 1912, an area northeast of Mount Kenya was included, later to be known as the administrative area of Meru. From early days the church has been engaged in educational and medical work and has played a significant part in agricultural and community development.

Hospitals have been established at Maua and Ngao, and rural training centers at Kaaga and Marimanti. The Coast School for the Physically Handicapped was founded at Mombasa in 1967. In 1968, the government became responsible for all primary education and teacher training. At that time, there were 114 primary schools attended by almost 17,000 pupils. Methodism participates in the state educational programme through the work of Religious Education advisers, through the management of Harambee (community) Schools, and through the six Methodist secondary schools.

The Methodist Church became an autonomous conference in 1966 and is divided into three districts. The

THE REV. RONALD S. MNG'ONG'O, FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE KENYA CONFERENCE

President of the conference resides in Nairobi, where the administrative headquarters is located. The conference was responsible in 1968 for 302 places of worship, with 8,163 full members and a community of almost 25,000. In recent years, there has been rapid expansion in northern Kenya, where there is a closely integrated plan for evangelistic, medical and agricultural development. The conference shares in the pastoral oversight of a united church at Lavington, Nairobi, and in St. Paul's (united) Theological College at Limuru.

In 1969, there were twenty-one Kenyan and expatriate ordained ministers, and sixteen lay missionaries from Britain.

The Church is a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL and the All Africa Conference of Churches.

R. E. KENDALL

KEPHART, CYRUS JEFFRIES (1852-1932), American United Brethren minister and bishop, was born Feb. 23, 1852, in Center County, Pa., the youngest of thirteen children and the third to gain prominence in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

When he was seven, the family moved to Mercer County, Pa., where he was converted at the age of twelve. He attended an academy at New Liberty, Pa., and taught school for a term.

In 1869, the family moved to Iowa where Cyrus enrolled at Western College (Iowa). He was licensed to preach in 1874, graduated from Union Biblical Seminary (now UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY), and was ordained by Bishop MILTON WRIGHT in 1878.

Upon graduation, he became president of Avalon College (Missouri). Following that, he held a number of administrative offices which included being professor and president of Western College; pastor at Des Moines, Iowa, and Lebanon, Pa.; president of LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE (Pa.); general secretary of the Pennsylvania Sabbath School Association; and various pastorates until he was appointed to the First United Brethren Church of DAYTON, Ohio, in 1908.

During the Dayton flood of 1913, he and his wife were stranded on the second floor of the parsonage for five days. A few weeks later, he was elected bishop and assigned to the Southwest District which he served for twelve years. In 1925 he became bishop emeritus. After the death of his wife in 1928, his health failed and he passed away June 20, 1932.

Bishop Kephart wrote a number of books and was the recipient of many honorary degrees. He was recognized as one of the outstanding pulpit men of the denomination.

KEPHART, EZEKIEL BORING (1834-1906), American United Brethren minister and bishop, was born in Center County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1834. He attended Mt. Pleasant (Pennsylvania) and OTTERBEIN (Ohio) Colleges. He joined the Allegheny Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ in 1858 and served there seven years.

At the completion of his college work in 1865, he was appointed president of Collegiate Institute, a United Brethren school in MICHIGAN. In 1868, he was elected president of Western College (Iowa).

In 1872, Ezekiel B. Kephart was elected to the fourteenth General Assembly of the Iowa Senate. Here he was successful in securing advanced temperance legislation and in raising school standards. He was urged to run for governor but refused as he had committed his life to the church.

After giving thirteen years to Western College, he was elected a bishop in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ in 1881 serving as such for twenty-four years. He became an authority on the interpretation of church law and parliamentary usage. He was foremost in the struggle to change the Constitution which in turn led to the rapid growth of the denomination.

Bishop Kephart became Emeritus Bishop in 1905. His death occurred Jan. 24, 1906, while assisting in a financial campaign for INDIANA CENTRAL COLLEGE. He was the recipient of many honorary degrees and the author of several books. He served as the first president of the denominational Historical Society. At his death, the Church lost one of its wisest counselors and leaders.

KEPHART, ISAIAH LAFAYETTE (1832-1908), American United Brethren educator and editor, was born Sept. 8, 1832, in Clearfield County, Pa. He was the oldest of thirteen children of Rev. and Mrs. Henry Kephart.

He attended Mt. Pleasant College (Pennsylvania) and OTTERBEIN UNIVERSITY (Ohio) and was licensed to preach in the Allegheny Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, in 1859. He served as Chaplain in the Civil War and was in several major battles. He was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

After the war, he joined the East Pennsylvania Conference and, in 1867, moved to Iowa. He became a superintendent of schools and later a professor at Western College (Iowa). In 1883, he became a teacher at San Joaquin College (California). In 1886, he was elected president of Westfield (Illinois) College and remained there until 1889 when he was elected editor of The Religious Telescope, the official organ of the United Brethren Church, where he served for nineteen years. The revision of the Confession of Faith and the Constitution had just been effected and his editorial work was helpful in molding a stronger and more efficient Church.

Kephart died Sept. 18, 1908. He was the author of a number of books and pamphlets and was the recipient of several honorary degrees, one of which was an election to be a Fellow in the Society of Science, Letters and Art in London.

KERBY, GEORGE W. (1860-1944). Canadian Methodist minister and educator, was born in Sombra Township, Lambton County, Ontario, on July 18, 1860, the son of Nelson and Hester Anna Kerby. He was educated at Sarnia High School and at Victoria College, Cobourg. Received on trial in 1881, and ordained in 1888, he served on several charges in Ontario and Quebec, before going to Calgary in 1903.

In 1911, he organized a residential college in Calgary, named MOUNT ROYAL COLLEGE, and was its principal until his retirement in 1942.

He was elected the first secretary of the Alberta Conference of the Methodist Church in 1904, and was president in 1906, 1907 and 1928. In 1917 he was appointed chief recruiting officer of the Canadian Army for Military District Number 13 with the rank of major; in 1941, he was made an honorary lieutenant-colonel, and honorary chaplain of the Fiftieth Armored Battalion. An active member of the Canadian National Federation of Home and School Associations, and of the International Federation of Home and School Associations, he was a member of the senate of the University of Alberta, and chairman of the Calgary Public School board. He served as president of the National Council of Education and the Red Cross society.

Kerby was much sought after as a public speaker at church dedications and similar occasions. He helped to organize and develop many new congregations, especially in Calgary, and is remembered as a great and loyal friend. He wrote The Broken Trail (1910); and Milestones of Methodism (1925).

KERN, JOHN ADAMS (1846-1926), American M.E. South preacher, college professor, theological professor, and college president, was born on April 23, 1846 in Frederick County, Va. The battle of Kernstown in the Civil War was fought on his father's land. He was the son of Minrod and Elisa Bentley Kern. His early education was received in Winchester, Va., High School and Winchester Academy. He was licensed to preach at Stephens City, Va., in 1864, and admitted into the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1866. He served pastorates in Baltimore, Md., Washington, D.C., and Alexandria, Va. He was a student at the University of Virginia in 1868-70. John A. Kern was married to Margaret Virginia Eskridge. Washington and Lee University conferred the D.D. degree upon him and RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE the LL.D. From 1886 to 1889, he was professor of philosophy at Randolph-Macon College. He was president of Randolph-Macon College in 1888-89. From 1889 to 1914, he was professor of practical theology at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. He returned to Randolph-Macon College in 1914 as professor of Christian instruction and service in that year when the M.E. Church, South lost Vanderbilt. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1890, 1894, 1898, and 1906. Kern was author of The Ministry to the Congregation, The Way of the Preacher, The Idea of the Church, Study of Christianity as Organized, Listening Heart and Vision and Power. His teaching and writing, especially in the field of the pastoral ministry, greatly influenced many ministers.

He was the father of Alfred A. Kern, long time professor at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Va.; of Bishop PAUL BENTLEY KERN, and Mrs. J. M. Ormond, wife of Professor Ormond of DUKE UNIVERSITY. John A. Kern died March 18, 1926, at Dallas, Texas, and is buried in Winchester, Va.

PAUL B. KERN

KERN, PAUL BENTLEY (1882-1953), American bishop, was born June 16, 1882 in Alexandria, Va. He began his college career at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, where his father, JOHN A. KERN, was professor. After one year Paul Kern transferred to VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY and received his B.A. in 1902 and the B.D. in 1905. He was admitted to the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE in 1905 and served two years for the Correspondence School for Ministers while teaching at Vanderbilt.

He married Lucy Gordhall Campbell of NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 11, 1907, and they had three children. Kern served Blakemore Church, Nashville, 1907-10; Bell Buckle, Tenn., 1910-12, and Murfreesboro, Tenn., 1912-15.

When SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY was established in 1915, he became the professor of English, Bible and Homiletics. In 1920 he became dean of the theological department. In 1926 he was appointed to Travis Park Church in SAN ANTONIO, Texas. After four years as pastor, he was elected to the episcopacy in the M. E. Church, South in 1930.

Bishop Kern served in the Orient from 1930 to 1934. From 1934 to 1938 he served four conferences in North and South Carolina. In 1938 he was appointed to the Nashville Area with the Tennessee, HOLSTON, FLORIDA, and CUBA CONFERENCES under his supervision.

He was active in the unification of the M. E. Churches, the consolidation of the EPWORTH LEAGUE and Sunday School Boards into the BOARD OF EDUCATION, the Youth Caravan Movement, the CRUSADE FOR CHRIST, and higher education in Methodism. He was chairman of the board of trustees of SCARRITT COLLEGE. He wrote the EPISCOPAL ADDRESS for the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1952 at SAN FRANCISCO.

Bishop Kern was the Fondren lecturer at Southern Methodist University in 1930, the Cole lecturer at Vanderbilt in 1935, the Jarrell lecturer at EMORY in 1941, the Peyton lecturer at Southern Methodist University in 1945.

He was a member of most of the boards of The Methodist Church and was a delegate to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES at Amsterdam in 1948. He was author of The Work of The Methodist Church, The Miracle of the Galilean, The Basic Beliefs of Jesus, and Methodism Has a Message.

He died on Dec. 16, 1953, at Vanderbilt Hospital, and is buried in Mt. Olivet Cemetery in Nashville.

KERR, WARWICK ESTEVAM (1922-), Brazilian layman, was born on Sept. 9, 1922, in Santana de Parnaíba, state of São Paulo. His mother, Barbara Chaves Kerr, was converted in 1931, and became an instrument in God's hands for leading her husband and other members of the family into a real Christian faith. She was a Presbyterian, but Kerr joined the Methodist Church in 1942.

He received his early education at Mackenzie College, Sao Paulo. In 1945, he graduated as an agronomist from the University of São Paulo, following which he received his doctorate (1948) and professorship (1951), from the same institution. Later, he came to the United States and did graduate work at Columbia University.

Kerr is Brazil's greatest authority in genetics, especially in bees.

In 1956, he received the André Dreyfus First National Prize in Genetics; in 1962, he was named director of the São Paulo State Science Foundation, the highest administrative post a scientist can receive in that state. These honors were followed in 1965 with the C. Prosdocimo National Prize in Genetics. For six years Kerr specialized in bees, directing experiments in the hybridization and selection of African with Italian bees, with the aim of producing a higher rate and grade of productivity among the bees of Brazil. In early 1966, he was delegate from Brazil to the fifteenth Pugwash Conference on Science and World Affairs, held in Addis Abeba, Ethiopia.

Keenly interested in education, which he terms Brazil's most imperative need, he expresses strong convictions which he frankly admits as "revolutionary" in that field. Kerr is active in the church, and he is both commended and condemned for his friendship with labor leaders and students and his championship of social justice.

He was jailed in 1964 because he denounced corruption and irregularities by local authorities, and was falsely accused of being a Communist, and he used this opportunity to preach Christ to his companions in jail.

Kerr is married to Lygia Sansigolo, and they have seven children. He is now professor at the Technical Institute, near Ribeirão Preto, state of São Paulo.

"Professor Warwick E. Kerr has been elected president of the Brazilian Society for the Advance of Science (SBPC), the scientific association in Latin America. This is said to be the greatest position of an elective nature that can be bestowed upon a Brazilian scientist. . . ." (Expositor Cristão, Aug. 15, 1969).

KETTERING, OHIO, U.S.A. Christ Church is a large suburban church in an area immediately adjacent to DAYTON, Ohio. The church was organized May 20, 1951, by the then District Superintendent, Dr. Robert Kennedy, with forty-three charter members. Robert B. Foster, who had retired as the associate minister of Grace Methodist Church, Dayton, Ohio, was appointed first pastor, and Christ Church was chosen as the name.

The congregation first met in the dining room of a local restaurant, then in the Fairmont Presbyterian Church, then in Dorothy Lane School, and then in a local inn. This last building was eventually purchased for $125,000. Worship continued there until a new church was dedicated at Lincoln Park Boulevard and Shorner Road by Bishop HAZEN G. WERNER, Feb. 2, 1958.

The church grew under Rev. Ross E. Winner from 331 members on June 14, 1953 to 1,080, when it was imperative that a new building should be erected.

During the pastorate of Rev. George Taylor, 1958-1962, the church gave evidence of concerns outside the community by support of the Hoyt Smiths in PAKISTAN and significant support of the William A. Chryst chair at the new METHODIST THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL IN OHIO.

The expansion of the building facilities under the pastorate of Dr. Raoul C. Calkins, beginning in 1962, has made it possible for the church to serve through making seventeen of the classrooms available to the County Retarded Children's program, providing facilities for the Kettering-Oakwood Senior Citizens, and many other community activities. The endowment fund created from gifts to Mr. Chryst has been used as collateral for loans to new churches, and gifts from income have assisted several of the churches of the district in their building programs.

The present membership of the church is 2,229.

KEY, JOSEPH STANTON (1829-1920), American bishop, was born at La Grange, Ga., July 18, 1829, the son of Caleb W. and Elizabeth (Hames) Key. He was a fifth consecutive generation Methodist preacher, and his two sons became ministers. Converted during a revival in 1847 at Emory College, Key was admitted on trial in the GEORGIA CONFERENCE, Jan. 10, 1849. He held the A.B., M.A., and D.D. degrees, the first two from EMORY and the latter from the University of Georgia. In 1851 he married Susie Snider of Savannah, and they had two sons and a daughter.

Prior to election to the episcopacy, all of Key's ministerial service was in GEORGIA, and when the Georgia Conference was divided in 1866, he adhered to the SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE. His first appointment was to the "Colored Charge" in Athens which was regarded as a missionary assignment. Four years later he was appointed to the white church in Athens. In 1855 he went to Trinity Church, SAVANNAH, the largest Methodist congregation in the city. After two years there his appointments were as follows: St. John's, Augusta, 1857-58; St. Paul's, Columbus, 1859; Athens, 1860-61; St. Paul's, Columbus, 1862-64; Mulberry Street, Macon, 1865-68; Macon District, 1870; St. Luke's, Columbus, 1871-73; Americus District, 1874; St. Paul's, Columbus, 1875-77; Mulberry Street, Macon, 1878-81; Macon District, 1882; and Columbus District, 1883-85.

Key was a delegate to seven successive GENERAL CONFERENCES, beginning with the one for 1862 which did not meet. He was never higher than second on his conference's slate of delegates. He was influential in getting the DISTRICT CONFERENCE officially adopted by the 1866 General Conference. He was never regarded as a great preacher, but his pulpit work and pastoral ministry were very acceptable, as shown by his appointments. He served three times as pastor in Athens, three times at St. Paul's, Columbus, twice at St. Luke's, Columbus, and twice at Mulberry Street, Macon. As an episcopal leader he was regarded as "rather beneficent" and not as forceful as some southern bishops.

Key moved his episcopal residence to Texas in 1889. His first wife died there, and in 1892 he married Mrs. Lucy Kidd of Sherman, Texas. She died in 1914. Key died at Sherman, April 6, 1920, and was buried there.

KEY, ROBERT (1805-1876), British Methodist, was born at All Saints, Suffolk, on April 7, 1805. By trade a coal heaver, he was converted at Yarmouth in 1825. In 1828 he received a call to the PRIMITIVE METHODIST itinerant ministry and began his work at North Walsham, going on to mission central Norfolk, a task which demanded physical stamina and resourcefulness. Agrarian disturbances involved poaching, farm robberies, and stack burning, and through his preaching of the gospel such episodes became less frequent on account of the conversion of the individuals concerned. He endured great suffering through persecution and ill treatment, often without police protection. His temperament brought him inward spiritual conflict, but he was a man of great faith. New problems awaited him in his mission to Hadleigh, Suffolk (1836), where he met the serious challenge of ANTINOMIANISM. He died on Dec. 2, 1876. A manuscript biography, written by C. T. Goodrick, of Yarmouth, has so far eluded search, but his autobiography, The Gospel Among the Masses (1806), contains useful stories.

KEYWOOD, VIRGINIA, U.S.A., in Washington County, is the site of the first Methodist Conference west of the Alleghenies. FRANCIS ASBURY held the Conference on May 13-15, 1788, in the residence of Stephen Keywood, located some two miles from Saltville, Va., the site of the Madam Russell Stone Church. In 1792 Asbury held the Huffaker (or Halfacre) Conference near where Manheim Methodist Church was erected in 1802, Michael Huffaker giving the land for it. It was rebuilt in 1884. Asbury preached in the log Manheim Church in 1806, which is the leading church on the North Keywood

Circuit. There is also a South Keywood Circuit. Keywood is noted as the cradle of Methodism in the Holston area.

KHAN, HASAN RAZA (? -1899), was born in an upper-class Muslim home in India. He was intensely anti-Christian in his boyhood and delighted in destroying Bibles and Gospel portions. His teacher, Mahbub Khan, was converted, and this gradually changed the attitudes of the student. He met Robert Hoskins at Budaun. In 1880, Khan confessed Christ, was baptized, and undertook extensive Bible study. In 1884, he was appointed pastor at Budaun. When a minister was needed for new work in Kasganj, he volunteered to go there. Starting with fifteen converts, he quickly built a district. Bishop TROBURN described him as "probably the most successful worker among Moslems in India."

KHAN, MAHBUB (? -1912), attended a mission school in Sialkot, Punjab, and became a teacher in a government school in Budaun. Reading extensively about Islam, he was not satisfied. A New Testament left by a missionary was in the school library. He began to read it without much interest at first, but finally it gripped and held him. While reading Matthew 27, conviction that it was true and that Christ Jesus is the divine Savior came like a flash. Without talking to any Christian, he was genuinely converted. He then went to the missionary, confessed his faith, described his conversion, and asked to be baptized. In 1881, he was ordained. He became a zealous evangelist, recognized all men as brothers, preached zealously and effectively, and became presiding elder of the Kasganj District in 1902.

KIDDER, DANIEL PARRISH (1815-1891), American Methodist minister, one of Brazil's pioneer missionaries, was born on Oct. 18, 1815, in Darien, N. Y. Though his parents were not Methodists and opposed that denomination, Kidder was converted and became a staunch member of the Methodist church. He graduated from newly founded WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Connecticut, in 1836, and wanted to go to CHINA as a missionary. When this proved impossible, he went to BRAZIL as a young man of twenty-two, in 1837, with his wife, Cynthia Harriet Russell. He resided in RIO DE JANEIRO. There he worked with JUSTIN SPAULDING, who had arrived in 1836, and was appealing to his homeland for help.

Kidder traveled extensively over Brazil, preaching, distributing Bibles, Testaments, and religious tracts; observing very carefully the nature of the country, its government, customs, and such Roman Catholic institutions as schools, hospitals, convents, and orphanages. With a clear, unprejudiced mind he saw both the good and the bad—so much so that a Brazilian journalist writing about him a century later said: "Kidder didn't hesitate to speak about our faults but he spoke of them as a father would of his sons' faults. And he always understood the other side, praising the exceptional qualities of the Brazilian people. . . . He loved Brazil."

In April 1840, Cynthia died leaving him with two very small children. She was buried in the Gambôa Protestant Cemetery (British), where her tomb can be seen. Kidder soon left Brazil and returned to the United States, as he wrote "to spare the life of a little one." Two years later, he married Harriet Smith.

In his homeland, he continued as a dedicated servant of God. Kidder led such a helpful and prominent life in the United States after his return there that to the North Americans his career in Brazil seemed something of a prelude remarkable though it was. He took a leading part as editor and administrator of the growing Sunday School work of the M. E. Church. He organized conference Sunday School Unions and became an originator of Sunday School Institutes and Conventions. In 1856 he became professor of practical theology at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, as it then was, and remained there until he was called to a like chair in DREW SEMINARY in New Jersey.

Kidder wrote several books: Mormonism and the Mormons, 1842; a treatise on Homiletics, 1864; The Christian Pastorate, 1871; and Helps to Prayer, 1874. His three volumes on Brazil are of great import in that land. One of these entitled Reminiscences of Trips and Residence in Brazil, was translated into Portuguese and published about a century later, and is included in the records of the official Brazilian Historical Society. It deals with his work and travels as a missionary, and contains much of import to the present evangelical church. Daniel Kidder died on July 29, 1891 in Evanston, Ill., U.S.A.

ISNARD ROCHA

KIESLAR, MOTT (1871-1950), and EDNA (1877-1961), were an American husband and wife, noted for separate individual achievement as well as for service given together.

Mott was born in Dade County, Mo., Nov. 28, 1871. He was graduated from Cornell College in 1899, having joined the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE the previous year. He came to INDIA late in 1899 in response to Bishop JAMES M. THORBURN'S call for twelve unmarried modern apostles to live on half the customary sacrificial allowance for single men. They were required to be at least twenty-five years of age, able to preach without manuscript, and willing to remain unmarried for at least four years. Kieslar served first in Allahabad then at Ajmer, where he established a boys' school and cared for hundreds of boys whose parents had died in the famine of 1900.

Edna Beck was born in Los Gatos, Calif., Sept. 13, 1877. She graduated from the Stanford University Medical College in 1901, with a doctor of medicine degree, and she came to India the same year. She was appointed to Tilaunia and opened a tuberculosis sanatorium for women and children, the first institution established in India specifically for the treatment of sufferers from tuberculosis. Mott and Edna met often in Ajmer from 1901 and soon became engaged, but they held to prior commitments to the church and were not married until 1907. Four sons were born to them. One died in infancy. Of the surviving sons one, Henry, is a specialist in ophthalmology in LOS ANGELES; Evan, a doctor of philosophy, is a professor of educational psychology in Los Angeles; and Marvin is a prominent missionary in PAKISTAN.

Together the Kieslars labored at Agra, Mathura, Hissar, Lahore, Karachi, and Ajmer, where their romance began. He was superintendent of districts in the United Provinces, Rajasthan, and the East Punjab in India, and in Sindh and the West Punjab in Pakistan. In 1921, his Alma Mater, Cornell College, conferred upon Mott the Doctor of Divinity degree. The Kieslars had many special interests including the use of drama for Christian education and evangelism. Mott died in Richland, Calif. Aug. 28, 1950, and Edna in Los Angeles in 1961.

KILGO, JOHN CARLISLE (1861-1922), American bishop and educator, was born at Laurens, S. C., July 22, 1861 and died at Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 11, 1922. He married Miss Fannie Nott Turner, of Gaffney, S. C., on Dec. 20, 1882. To this union were born five children: Edna, Walter, James, Fannie and John.

John Kilgo entered WOFFORD COLLEGE, Spartanburg, S. C., in 1880, but because of the weakness of his eyes was forced to leave Wofford at the close of the sophomore year. His only other formal education was a course of private study under HENRY N. SNYDER, later president of Wofford College. In 1892 the degree of Master of Arts was awarded Kilgo by Wofford College. Later honorary degrees were conferred upon him by RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, Wofford College and Tulane University.

In 1882 Kilgo joined the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church, South and from 1882 to 1888 served as pastor. In 1888 he was appointed financial agent of Wofford College. In 1894 Kilgo was elected president of Trinity College (now DUKE), Durham, N. C. which office he held until 1910.

Under his leadership Trinity College became one of the leading colleges in the Southern States. Kilgo inspired Washington Duke and members of his family with the vision of a greater Trinity College and they made such liberal contributions to Trinity College that in contrast with most southern educational institutions it became free from financial problems. Academic standards were raised and when the Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Southern States was formed for the purpose of raising high educational standards in the South, Trinity College was the only institution of college status that was a charter member. Kilgo championed academic freedom and during his presidency the Board of Trustees on Dec. 1, 1903, adopted an historic statement which declared that any form of coercion of thought and private judgment was contrary to one of the constitutional aims of Trinity College and that was to cherish a sincere spirit of tolerance. Kilgo became the champion in NORTH CAROLINA for Christian education, and led a crusade in North Carolina in behalf of this principle. He was the author of many articles relating to Christian education.

While president of Trinity College, Kilgo played a vital part in Methodist affairs. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES (MES) from 1898 to 1910. He was a member of the BOARD OF EDUCATION during that same period. He was an official delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE held in London in 1901 and in 1904 was a fraternal delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. Church.

In 1910 Kilgo was elected a bishop of the M. E. Church, South, and served until his retirement in 1922. He was in great demand as a preacher, for Kilgo was a great pulpit orator.

KILHAM, ALEXANDER (1762-98), British Methodist, helped to found the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION. He was born at Epworth, Lincolnshire, on July 10, 1762, and became a Wesleyan itinerant in 1785. After JOHN WESLEY's death, he wrote a series of pamphlets, the most important of which was The Progress of Liberty, to advocate that the laity should have an increased share in the government of the Wesleyan societies. Because of these he was expelled by the Wesleyan conference in 1796. With WILLIAM THOM he worked out the con-

KILNERTON TRAINING INSTITUTION, Pretoria, Transvaal, SOUTH AFRICA, was founded in 1885 by the British Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY and was named after John Kilner, one of its secretaries, who spent 1880 on an official visit to South Africa. It was opened by GEORGE WEAVING in Potchefstroom with an enrollment of seven; but in the following year it was moved to Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal Boer Republic. Here the chairman of the district, OWEN WATKINS, had purchased 3000 morgen (6300 acres) of land for £1,750.

At first progress was very slow; but when the Transvaal became part of the British Empire after the Anglo-Boer War (1899-1902) State aid was made available and Kilnerton began to go ahead. A girls' hostel was established in 1907 and J. J. Spensley was brought out from England to become headmaster in 1909. A second period of expansion began in 1936, again as a result of increased State interest in African education. Not only were increased subsidies made available to the Missions, but State schools, including a State Teacher Training College, began to make their appearance. A separate High School was opened in 1947 with Charles Jackson as headmaster. The Institution reached its maximum size about 1952 when the total enrollment of the Normal College and the High School was 650.

Kilnerton, together with every other Methodist Training Institution, was taken over by the Government in January 1956, in terms of the Bantu Education Act (1953). For a time the Church retained control of the hostels and thus maintained its link with the students; but the end was in sight. The area in which Kilnerton was situated was zoned for occupation by the white group in terms of the Group Areas Act, which provides for the separation of the different population groups of the country, and the Institution was finally closed down in December 1962. Pupils and staff were transferred to a State School, in a Bantu (African) Group Area.

Kilnerton was a leading educational institution for Africans. It attracted students from as far afield as Rhodesia and Zambia, before the State imposed restrictions on foreign students. Among its distinguished alumni are chiefs, administrators and medical doctors. The first African woman doctor south of the Zambesi, Dr. Mary Mphahlele, matriculated at Kilnerton.

Kilnerton is indebted to the WESTMINSTER TRAINING COLLEGE, LONDON, for a succession of outstanding teachers, three of whom later became State Inspectors of Education. Of the Missionary Governors of the Institution, five served as president of the South African Conference.

KIM, CHANG SIK (1857-1929), pioneer Methodist preacher in KOREA, was born in Saing-Kun village, Whang-Hai (Yellow-Sea) Province, Korea, in 1857. After some study of the Chinese classics, the only education available, he drifted to SEOUL. Curiosity concerning rumors that the savagelike Western missionaries ate babies led him to secure a job at the home of Rev. Francis Ohlinger, Methodist missionary, where he learned Western cooking. In the course of the next four years he read Matthew, a Bible Catechism, and finally memorized almost all of the four Gospels.

When in 1892 William James Hall, M.D. was sent to open the pioneer missionary station in Pyengyang, Kim, now a local preacher, went along, and after Dr. Hall's death carried on the work of the station until the arrival of W. A. NOBLE. During this time he built the first Methodist Church in north Korea, and also the first boy's school building. Pyengyang was noted for its wickedness, and Kim was often in prison, and suffered beatings, stoning, and was even held in the death cell under threats of execution if he did not recant.

He was the first Korean to be ordained deacon (1901), the first to be named a district evangelist (1904), the first to be received on trial in the conference (1906), the first to be ordained elder (1908), and the first to be appointed district superintendent (1910). He probably opened more new territory to Methodist missionary work than any other person.

He died in Haiku, Korea, Jan. 9, 1929.

CHONG PIL KIM

KIM, CHONG PIL (1896-), a bishop of the Korean Methodist Church, was born in KOREA's ancient capital city, Songdo (Kaesung), May 20, 1896. Completing work in the M. E. Church, South mission high school, he graduated from Kwansai Gakuin University, Kobe, Japan, in 1928 and entered the Korea Annual Conference of the M. E. Church in its final session in 1930.

Transferred to the newly organized Korean Methodist Church, he held pastorates in Pyengyang, Chinampo, and Songdo. In 1947 he became chaplain of EWAH Woman's UNIVERSITY in Seoul until elected bishop of the Korean Methodist Church in 1958. After serving one term of four years he stepped down to assume the pastorate of the Central Nai-Ri Methodist Church in Inchon.

CHONG WOO KIM

KIM, CHONG WOO (1884-1939), second bishop of the Korean Methodist Church, was born on Kang-Wha Island, near Inchon, Korea, Sept. 21, 1884. He received the traditional tutoring in Confucian ethics and Chinese classics. As a youthful prank he was one of a group making sport of missionary GEORGE HERER JONES at the gates of Kangwha City. Jones' dignified restraint so impressed him that he became interested in Christianity and his grandfather founded one of the first churches on the island in spite of the heavy opposition of the times.

In preparation for the ministry he entered Pai Chai Mission School at the age of twenty-four and graduated from the Union Methodist Seminary at the age of thirty.

He was ordained by Bishop HERBERT WELCH in 1918, and appointed to a large circuit outside SEOUL. The shortage of ministers after the 1919 Independence Movement resulted in his appointment to First Church, Chung Dong, Seoul. He served this church continuously, except for seven years as superintendent of the Seoul District, until his election as bishop of the church in October 1938.

One of his first acts as bishop was to dictate a letter to Dr. Jones' widow relating the incident above and citing it as the beginning of his more than thirty years in the church.

Known for his evangelistic fervor, it was expected that he would lead a revival in the church. Unfortunately the next August an injured foot sent him to the hospital where septicemia developed. He died on Sept. 17, 1939.

The funeral was held on his fifty-fifth birthday in First Church where he had served most of his ministry, and where he had been ordained and also installed into the office as bishop.

HELEN KIM

KIM, HELEN (1899-1970), Korean educator and world Christian leader, was born in Chemulpo (Inchon), Korea, Feb. 27, 1899. After attending a local mission school for girls, she graduated from Ewha College (Seoul, Korea), in 1918. After teaching for four years in Ewha she entered OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY where she graduated in 1924 with Phi Beta Kappa honors, and then secured her master's degree at BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Returning to her alma mater she became dean of the college in 1926.

In 1930 she studied at Columbia University Teachers College, where she became the first Korean woman to secure a Ph.D. degree in 1932. Returning to Korea she was made vice-president of Ewha and in 1938 she succeeded Alice R. Appenzeller as president.

Her twenty-two years as president covered the very difficult years of Japanese military oppression during the Second World War and the exile in Pusan during the Korean conflict. However the college achieved university status, the student body grew from 600 to over 8,000, and the campus was extended from eight to more than twenty-five buildings.

Within Korea, Dr. Kim had a leading part in many movements including the National Y.W.C.A., the Korean Red Cross, the National Christian Teacher's Association.

She served her government as Director of Public Information, on the Korean Mission to the U.N. for many years, and as Ambassador-at-Large.

The list of international organizations to which she was a delegate covers more than forty gatherings of which ten were related to the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL, the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, or related committees. Other organizations included the General Conference of the M. E. Church, World Council of the Y.W.C.A., International Committee of the Red Cross, World Convention on Christian Education, and XII UNESCO Conference.

Having trained her successor, she retired in 1961, remaining as chairman of the Ewha University Board of Trustees, and as President Emeritus. Following her resignation she became especially interested in the evangelism of her people, and as chairman of the commission of evangelism for both the Korean Methodist Church and the National Christian Council she headed a Nationwide Evangelistic Campaign for Korea in 1965.

Three distinguished honors came to her in rapid succession in 1963, the Order of Cultural Merit of the Republic of Korea on August 15; the Ramon Magsaysay Award (Philippines), August 31; THE UPPER ROOM Citation for World Christian Leadership, October 1. She received honorary degrees from four universities. She died of a cerebral hemorrhage at her home in Seoul on Feb. 10, 1970. Burial was at the family cemetery plot at Keum Nan near Seoul.

YU SOON KIM

KIM, YU SOON (1884-1950 ?), a bishop of the Korean Methodist Church, was born in An-Ak, Whanghai Province, Korea, Dec. 17, 1884. He graduated from Seung-Sil Mission Academy in Pyongyang, then went to HAWAII where he taught school, joined the Hawaii Mission Conference, and served as pastor of Ewa Church.

After two years in the California Bible School he graduated in 1912, and then served as conference evangelist in KOREA for five years. From 1917 to 1920 he studied in DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

He again served as conference evangelist, was pastor of Nam-San Church in Pyongyang, after which he spent ten years as district superintendent in the Hongsyung, Haiju and Chunan Districts. In 1924 he was a delegate to the M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE at Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

In April 1949, he was elected bishop of the Korean Methodist Church. Sixteen months later he was abducted by the communists, along with some fifty other Christian leaders during the invasion of SEUL. Since Aug. 23, 1950, his whereabouts has been unknown and he is presumed dead as of that year.

KIMBALL, CLYDE E. (1908-1944), an American Methodist clergyman and army chaplain, was born in Concord, N. H., July 23, 1908. He was graduated from the School of Theology of BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1933. While in seminary he joined the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE on trial in 1930 and served the churches of Auburn and Chester. When he came into full connection in 1932, he supplied the Hillside Congregational Church in Draut, Mass. After graduation his appointments were Franklin, 1933; Groveton and Stratford, 1934-38; Suncook, 1939-41. Then he entered the Chaplaincy of the United States Army in June, 1941.

Skilled at losing himself in the interest of helping others of every social level, Chaplain Clyde Kimball got along well as every soldier found in him a warm and helpful friend. No spot was too dangerous for him if he heard the cry of human need. Indeed it was in performing the duty of rescuing the wounded that Chaplain Kimball was fatally wounded, Dec. 19, 1944.

Because of his ability to speak the French language, he brought comfort to the newly liberated communities, often holding the first Protestant service following liberation. A collection of Bibles he possessed represents the thanks given him by a grateful people. Ellen A. (Gates) Kimball, who married Clyde Kimball in 1928 and their two sons, Clyde, Jr., and Dana, were the recipients of two awards, given posthumously: the Purple Heart for wounds, and the Silver Star for gallantry in action.

KIMBALL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY (1906-1930), at Salem, Oregon, was an institution which began functioning in 1906 in connection with WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, a Methodist related school. Henry D. Kimball was its first head and his wife Luella D. Kimball, dean. In 1907, the school became independent with its own board of trustees, and was located in a separate building on the Willamette campus. Kimball students pursued some courses offered by the University, and some Willamette students took courses at Kimball.

The theological school was a regular part of the M.E. system of colleges and universities, its president being a member of the UNIVERSITY SENATE of the church. By 1911 more than sixty persons had received instruction in Kimball's classrooms and five of its graduates were serving churches in the OREGON CONFERENCE.

From 1914 to 1920 H. J. Talbott headed the school, but a deficiency in financial support for Kimball became evident in 1915. Two professors, Edwin Sherwood and Everett S. Hammond, offered to continue with less than their entire salaries, but Kimball, refusing to accept the offer, borrowed on his life insurance to pay them in full. He died suddenly in 1920.

From 1920 until 1926 Eugene C. Hickman was president. During this administration the General BOARD OF EDUCATION subsidized Kimball, and the Oregon Conference pledged $1,000 annually. A move was initiated to relocate Kimball at Seattle, Wash., to operate in connection with University Temple and the University of Washington. The proposal divided supporters and the school was ordered closed pending relocation. Before plans could be perfected, demands for funds in OREGON and WASHINGTON to meet the needs of Willamette University and College of Puget Sound, blocked the planned move.

John M. Canse, succeeding to the presidency in 1926, faced impossible financial pressure and the trustees ordered suspension of the seminary in 1930, though the class of that year had been the largest in the history of the school. The school did not reopen and the endowment, which largely had been contributed by Mrs. Kimball, was at her request, distributed to charities in which she was interested.

ERLE HOWELL

KING, JOHN (?-1794), early American preacher, was a graduate of Oxford University and held a degree from a London medical school. He was converted under the preaching of JOHN WESLEY and was disinherited by his family for that reason. He came to America in 1770 but he had no credentials from Wesley, and JOSEPH PILMORE, the preacher in PHILADELPHIA, where he landed, refused to receive him. He preached in the Old Potter's Field, later Washington Square, and then proceeded to BALTIMORE, where he preached the first Methodist sermon there from "a blacksmith's block at the corner of French and Broad Streets."

His energy and devotion secured recognition and he preached at various places along the eastern seaboard. He was a member of the first Conference in 1773 and was sent to NEW JERSEY. The next year he was appointed to NORFOLK, Va., and extended his circuit into NORTH CAROLINA. He married Miss Sallie Seawell of Brunswick County, Virginia.

During the Revolutionary War years he seems to have located for awhile, but in 1777 he was sent with JOHN DICKINS, LeRoy Cole, and Edward Pride to the North Carolina Circuit. It was the second year of a circuit in that state.

King purchased a home near Louisburg, N. C. and settled there. His neighbor was the noted early local preacher Major GREEN HILL, and King was present when the first conference after the organization of the M. E. Church was held in Hill's home in 1785. When Hill moved to Tennessee one of King's sons secured the Hill property and one of his descendants lives there today. (The house is a Methodist SHRINE.) Two of King's sons and a grandson were Methodist preachers.

In 1789 or 1790 he secured a large farm near Raleigh, N. C., and settled there. He died in 1794 while on a visit to New Bern.

Bishop ASBURY regarded King highly and he is frequently mentioned in Asbury's Journal. He was an influential preacher with a stentorian voice and was rebuked by Wesley for his "screaming."

LOUISE L. QUEEN

KING, JOHN Q. TAYLOR (1921-), American educator and college president, was born at Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 25, 1921, the son of John Q. Taylor and Alice (Woodson) King. He was a student at Fisk University, A.B., 1941; graduate of Landig College Mortuary Science (Texas), 1942; Samuel Huston College, B.S., 1947; DEPAUW UNIVERSITY, M.S., 1950; University of Texas, Ph.D., 1957. On June 28, 1942, he married Marcell Alice Hines and they have four children. Since 1946 he has been a mortician.

Dr. King has served HUSTON-TILLOTSON COLLEGE as a member of the faculty, 1947-60; Dean, 1960-65; President, 1965-

He has been a delegate to five GENERAL and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, 1956-68. In addition to college responsibilities, he has been a member or trustee of more than a score of boards, clubs, and institutions including those dealing with mental health, education, race, Kiwanis, and Chamber of Commerce. He was a Captain in World War II, and is a Lt. Colonel in the Army Reserve. He is the author of a number of articles for professional and religious journals, the co-author of several mathematics textbooks, and a book, Stories of Twenty-Three Famous Negro Americans. He is a member of the choir and lay leader of Wesley Church, Austin, Texas.

KING, LORENZO HOUSTON (1878-1946), American bishop, was born of slave parents, Houston Carlton and Leah King, at Macon, Miss., Jan. 2, 1878. He married Louise Marie Watts on Dec. 13, 1903. He was ordained and joined the Atlanta Conference of the M. E. Church in 1903. His appointments included Elberton Circuit, 1902-03; Covington, 1903-04; South Atlanta, 1905-08; Newman, 1909-10; English instructor, CLARK COLLEGE, 1910-13; Central Church, Atlanta, 1913-19; editor, Southwestern Christian Advocate, 1920-30; St. Mark's Church, New York City, 1930-40.

He was elected bishop in 1940 at St. Louis, Mo., in the first JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE of the Central Jurisdiction, and served the Atlantic Coast Area until his death in 1946. His area included Atlanta, Central Alabama, Florida, Savannah, South Carolina, and South Florida Conferences.

An infant when his father died, King, by faith and dogged perseverance, supported his mother and worked his way through Clark College (A.B.), GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL (B.D.), and Union Theological Seminary (M.A., D.D., LL.D.).

Bishop King was president of the board of trustees of Gammon Theological School and CLAFLIN COLLEGE, and vice president of the board of trustees of Clark and COOKMAN Colleges.

A foremost teacher of English and speech, he was regarded as a spiritual preacher and a convincing debater. As Advocate editor for a decade, he became a champion of the rights of Negroes. He was an effective episcopal leader in each of the conferences of his area.

Dying in a New York hospital on Dec. 17, 1946, after a protracted illness of more than a year, his funeral rites were conducted at St. Mark's Church, New York City, with S. H. Sweeney and Bishop EDWARD W. KELLY officiating. His wife and three sons survived him.

KING, PETER (1669-1733), later Lord Chancellor of England, in 1691 published An Enquiry into the Constitution, Discipline, Unity, and Worship of the Primitive Church. It was republished in 1712 with the addition of a section on worship. It was read on Jan. 20, 1746, by JOHN WESLEY, who "in spite of the vehement prejudice of [his] education" was convinced by it "that bishops and presbyters are (essentially) of one order." This was the basis on which, thirty-eight years later, Wesley ordained for America and later for Scotland and England (see ORDINATIONS, John Wesley and).

King argued that in the first five centuries bishops and presbyters were of one order, but different in degree because the bishop was the instituted minister of a parish, and the presbyter his assistant who could exercise his office only as the parish bishop gave him permission. Hence Wesley, a presbyter of the Church of England, to whom God had committed both the world parish and the episcopate of Methodism, felt able to ordain, not because of any presbyterian theory, but because he was a scriptural episcopos.

KING, WILLIAM L. (1858-1940), and EARL L. (1886-), father and son, were Methodist missionaries in INDIA for a combined total of eighty-two years. They both gave distinguished service.

The father was born in West Winterport, Maine, U.S.A., Jan. 26, 1858. He graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1881 and from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1883. He married Sara J. Hoehrhull, Sept. 24, 1884, and they went to India in 1888. The son was born at Chatfield, Minn., Nov. 13, 1886, and went to India with his parents. He attended schools at Ootacamund, Madras, Hyderabad, and Naini Tal, and graduated from Ripon College, Wisc., U.S.A., (A.B., 1908 and M.A., 1909). He went to India as a missionary in 1909.

The father's appointments included principal of Baldwin Schools in Bangalore, pastor of Vepery church in Madras, superintendent of Madras and Hyderabad districts, and agent of the Methodist Publishing House, Madras. He was the author of Investment and Achievement (Abingdon) and of a series of stories for children in three South India languages, published by the Methodist Publishing House of Madras. He was secretary of the Central Conference of Southern Asia for many years, and a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1900. Garrett Biblical Institute conferred upon him the Doctor of Divinity degree in 1908.

The son married Edith Broadbooks, a graduate of NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE at Naperville, Ill., Oct. 18, 1913. His appointments included principal of Beynon-Smith High School, Belgaum, and of the Hardwicke High School, Narsinghpur, and various positions and responsibilities under the Council of Christian Education. He was general secretary of the EPWORTH LEAGUE, and his initials were supposed by many to stand for that organization.

He was a prolific author, editing and for the most part writing the entire Charterhouse Course in Christian Religious Education. His books, booklets, and major articles for periodicals in India and abroad numbered more than 200 and were acclaimed as unmatched. Of him it was often said, "What King was doing ten years ago, other supposed leaders in religious education are just beginning to think about now." For twenty-five years before his retirement in 1951 he was listed in Who's Who In America.

KING, WILLIAM PETER (1871-1957), American pastor and editor, was born in Franklin County, Ga., on Feb. 27, 1871. He was the son of Julia and Georgia Lumpkin King. He was educated at Oxford, Ga., at old Emory, from which institution he received the A.B. and M.A. degrees, later on being awarded the D.D. degree by the theological school in EMORY UNIVERSITY when that was established in Atlanta. He married Mary Evans Harris in 1900. She was the sister of the Rev. Lundy H. Harris, the husband of CORRA HARRIS whose circuit rider books and stories enlisted wide attention.

King was ordained in the M. E. Church, South, in 1898, in the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE and served several appointments—the last one being at First Church, Athens, the University Church in that city. In 1928 he was elected BOOK EDITOR of the M. E. Church, South, and moved to Nashville, Tenn. In 1932 he was elected editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the official organ of the M. E. Church, South, and held that position for eight years, or until the Advocate was discontinued at Church Union. King retired in 1943, but continued to live in Nashville.

He was a member of all the GENERAL CONFERENCES from 1918 to 1938, and also was on the North Georgia delegation to the Uniting Conference in 1939. He wrote several books, among them, Faith in the Divine Fatherhood, Right and Wrong in an Age of Confusion, and other volumes.

"Bill King," as he was affectionately called throughout North Georgia, was known everywhere for his intermingling of wit with wisdom. At the General Conference of 1934 when he was reporting as Book Editor upon the coming demise of the METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW of which he was the last editor, he said that all were about to see "the two livest numbers of a dying magazine that had ever been." He also said that in that Conference the laws of nature were being violated since "some men were rising on account of their gravity, and some were going down because of their levity." King was a strong champion of church union, which required some measure of boldness in the mid 30's in his section of the deep South.

He was survived by his sons George H. King, Dr. Ruskin King, Howard L. King and a daughter, Julia King, and several grandchildren. He died in Savannah, Ga., on June 20, 1957, though the funeral was conducted in Nashville by JOHN RUSTIN, E. P. Anderson, and J. Richard Spann, pastors, friends, and associates during his Nashville life.

KING, WILLIS JEFFERSON (1886-), American author, college professor, college president, and bishop, was born in Rose Hill, Texas, on Oct. 1, 1886, the son of Anderson W. and Emma (Blackshear) King. He received the A.B. degree from WILEY COLLEGE in 1910, and the D.D. and LL.D. from the same college in 1942; from BOSTON UNIVERSITY the S.T.B. in 1913, the Ph.D. in 1921, and the D.D. causa honoris in 1933; and from the University of Liberia, the D.D. in 1950. He married Parmella J. Kelly on June 4, 1913 (deceased February 1943), and to them were born Velma Norine (Mrs. James Bannerman), Eloise A. (Mrs. Manatee Bannerman-deceased, 1957), and Grace E. (Mrs. Louis Timmons). On June 28, 1944, he married Emma Arnold.

Willis J. King was admitted on trial, and ordained deacon into the TEXAS CONFERENCE (ME) in 1908; into full connection and elder, 1913. His pastorates included: Greenville, Texas, 1908-10; Fourth Church, Boston, 1912-15; St. Paul Church, Galveston, Texas, 1915-17; and Trinity Church, Houston, Texas, 1918. He was professor of Old Testament Literature at GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY 1918-30, and president of that seminary, 1932-44; and of Samuel Huston College (Austin, Texas), 1930-32. He was elected bishop by the Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church in 1944 and served in LIBERIA, Africa, from 1944-56, and then over the NEW ORLEANS Area of the Central Jurisdiction from 1956 until his retirement in 1960.

Bishop King was a delegate to the Conference on Life and Work, 1937; the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, 1961; and to the Missionary Convocation, Leopoldville, Belgian Congo, in 1946. He has been a trustee of Wiley College since 1914 and of Gammon Theological Seminary since 1956. He was decorated with the Order Star of African Redemption, and with the Knight Commander Order of Pioneers (Liberia). He is a member of the National Association of Bible Instructors; of the American Oriental Society; and of the American Academy of Political Science.

He is the author of The Negro in American Life, 1926; History of Methodist Mission in Liberia, 1951; (with others), Personalism in Theology, 1943; and Christian Bases of World Order, 1943; and contributed to the History of American Methodism, 1964. Since retirement Bishop King has lived in New Orleans, La.

CALVIN KINGSLEY

KINGSLEY, CALVIN (1812-1870), American bishop, was born at Annsville, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1812, the oldest of twelve children. His father, Oran Kingsley, Jr., was a native of CONNECTICUT and his mother was Irish. His parents were non-church members when he was converted at eighteen in the M. E. Church at Ellington, N. Y., where the family had moved. With his parents' consent, he started a family altar and both parents were converted and two of the sons became preachers.

Without access to books or early schools, he worked his way through school by making maple sugar and carrying it ten miles to market at Jamestown. He later acted as janitor in college. Studying at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, he was interrupted by periods when he had to teach, but was graduated in 1841 and immediately elected to a professorship in the college. That year he joined the ERIE CONFERENCE and married Delia Scudder. He served as professor at Allegheny College until 1856, filling some preaching appointments during that time. His appointments were Saegerstown, Pa., 1841; Meadville, 1842, and Erie, 1844-46.

Kingsley was an able controversialist and defender of Methodism. His only book was The Resurrection of the Dead (1847), which was in opposition to the work of a Professor Bush. In 1856 he was elected editor of the Western Christian Advocate at Cincinnati, Ohio, and made the paper aggressively anti-slavery. This Advocate gave strong support to the Union during the Civil War.

He was elected bishop at the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1864. Making his home in Cleveland, Ohio, he visited the Conferences on the Pacific Coast and later the Mission Conferences of the M. E. Church in Europe. In 1869 he went to INDIA and CHINA, returning through SWITZERLAND and GERMANY.

While on a trip to the Holy Land with a group including FRANCES WILLARD, he died of a heart ailment at Beirut, Syria, April 6, 1870. He was buried in Beirut in the Russian Protestant Cemetery, where the M. E. Church by direction of the General Conference erected a monument in his memory.

Calvin Kingsley was the youngest man on the board of Bishops. Simple, unaffected, genial and social, his intellect was strong, keen and logical. Ready with the pen, his sermons were rich in doctrinal truth. In making appointments he showed great sympathy with the preachers.

KINGSPORT, TENNESSEE, U.S.A. Broad Street Church. Methodism has been established in Kingsport since the early pioneer days. The HOLSTON CONFERENCE was organized in 1824 under Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY. In 1833 the session of the Conference was entertained in Kingsport. In 1867 a M. E. Church, South congregation was organized there and for many years was a part of the Kingsport Circuit. However, some time before 1912 this church was abandoned, but in that year J. S. Henley reorganized the church with seventeen charter members. Some of the charter members came from the old abandoned church and the rest were new members received at that time. One of the charter members was a Negro woman, Lydia Parker. Four of the charter members who remain as active members of the church today are, Miss Ethel Warrick, Miss Stella Clyde, Mrs. W. S. Wallace and Mrs. T. E. Doane.

This congregation met for worship in the old Oklahoma school house which stood on the site of the Robert E. Lee school, 520 Myrtle Street. A new school building was soon erected on the lot now occupied by the First Presbyterian Church on the Church Circle, and the congregation moved to this building where they continued to worship until the church building was erected. This congregation was served by the Kingsport Circuit pastors until October 1915, when the church was made a station and T. R. Wolfe was appointed as its first full-time pastor.

Interest in the erection of a house of worship by the Methodist people was evident soon after the reorganization of the church. The cornerstone was laid in 1916 by J. W. Perry, the presiding elder. French Wampler was appointed pastor in October 1916. Construction went forward rapidly and the formal opening of the new church was held on January 28, 1917. This was the first church erected in modern Kingsport, and is a part of the present Broad Street Methodist Church building. The building was dedicated in June 1917 by S. B. Vaught.

The church membership grew rapidly. In 1912 a membership of 514 was reported. In 1931 there was a membership of 823. The next year the membership was down to 581. This loss was due to the fact that the church had aided in the establishment of three other Methodist congregations in the city, namely: Maple Street, now Mayfair Methodist, Highland Park and West View Park, now Stone Drive Methodist. Nearly three hundred of her members had transferred to these new churches. During these early years other churches were being founded and many people who had formerly affiliated with Broad Street Church transferred to the denomination to which they had formerly belonged. Broad Street Church can truly be called the mother of Kingsport churches, for she along with the Old Kingsport Presbyterian Church fostered the religious life of the early years of this industrial city. She has delighted as much in the growth of other churches as she has in her own development.

Broad Street Church, however, was destined to be more than a medium-sized congregation in this rapidly growing industrial community. In a meeting on Oct. 17, 1939, during the pastorate of J. A. Bays, the Board of Stewards took its first action looking toward the erection of a new building. R. E. Greer was appointed pastor in October 1940, and it was under his leadership that the plans and program resulting in the present structure and the renovation of the old church were carried to completion.

The first service was held in the new sanctuary on Nov. 15, 1942. Immediately thereafter work on the conversion of the old church building for use by the Sunday school was begun. This was done in good time and the classes moved into their new rooms on June 15, 1943.

In 1970 Broad Street Church reported a membership of 2,732, a Church school membership of 1,665, $497,474 raised for all purposes, and property valued at $1,445,400.

KINGSTON, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A., is distinguished as the location of the first property owned by the M. E. Church or indeed by any Protestant body in the state.

The second Methodist society in the state was organized at Kingston in 1800, and for some years services were conducted in private homes. In the spring of 1803, LORENZO DOW wrote in his journal, "I went to Kingston and procured a spot of ground (by selling my watch) for a meetinghouse." The deed for Square III on Claiborne Street was dated June, 1803, and it specified that the lot was the property of the M. E. Church but that it could be used by accredited ministers of every denomination and by Dow himself "unless he should become an opposer of the doctrine or discipline of said church."

A church was erected on the site prior to 1820, possibly about 1817. The present church building was constructed in 1855 and dedicated in 1857. In 1970, the Kingston Church reported ninety-five members and property valued at $17,000.

KINGSWOOD COLLEGE, Grahamstown. SOUTH AFRICA, is the oldest existing connexional school for boys. It began as the Wesleyan Collegiate School for Boys under the principalship of Theophilus Chubb in 1894. In 1896 it was renamed Kingswood College and moved to its present site under the headmastership of E. G. Gane, who continued in office until 1928. Subsequent headmasters have been H. T. Crouch (1929-37); R. I. Redfern (1934-48); C. O. Rich (Interregnum in 1938; 1949-54); J. T. Slater (1955-63) and C. B. Dacam (1964-). The present enrollment is 430 boys, of whom 360 are boarders. The splendid modern facilities include a language laboratory and a beautiful Memorial Chapel. Teaching is given at all levels from Standard One to Post-Matriculation. Prominent among the founders were Lorimer B. Dold (father of the present Council Chairman, L. M. L. Dold) and Josiah Slater, who had founded the Collegiate School at Lesseyton.

H. F. KIRKBY

KINGSWOOD SCHOOL in England was the direct foundation of JOHN WESLEY and is the largest and most permanent of his many educational projects; it was also the one that he himself cherished most of all. He used the buildings erected by GEORGE WHITEFIELD as a small school for the sons of colliers in Kingswood, near BRISTOL, and laid the foundation stone in 1748.

KINGSWOOD SCHOOL

It was a boarding school from the start, open to the sons of all who were willing to pay the small fees and prepared not to see their sons again until they finally left the school. The curriculum included courses in the classical languages, Hebrew, philosophy, and mathematics; the hours were long and relaxations few; no boy was ever allowed to be out of the sight of a master. In the early days there were frequent changes of staff, and not all the boys could endure the strict regimen, but before the end of his life Wesley was able to say that matters were arranged as he wished. His chief concern was to create a "Christian family" that should not be unworthy of the apostolic age.

The sons of Methodist preachers were, of course, admitted to the school, and shortly after Wesley's death the school was restricted to them. During the nineteenth century it was for a long time insulated from all outside influences; but in 1852, after Matthew Cusworth had appealed successfully for funds in all parts of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, it was transferred to a fine site on Lansdown, above the city of Bath; and this made possible the development of interests, curriculum, and standards carried out by THOMAS GEORGE OSBORN, headmaster from 1866-85. During his headmastership the restriction of Oxford and Cambridge to Anglicans was removed; and Kingswood boys soon began to enter these universities, the number increasing year by year.

The First World War created difficulties of staffing and discipline, but Hubert Arthur Wootton, headmaster in 1919-28, restored the situation. ALFRED BARRETT SACKETT, headmaster in 1928-59, completed the school's development from a denominational institution into a national school. During his regime many changes were made in the direction of personal freedom and academic variety. In 1922 the school was opened to laymen's sons, and these soon formed the majority. Members of many Christian communions and some from other faiths are among the boys, but the majority are Methodists.

During the Second World War, the school's buildings were taken over by the Admiralty and the whole school evacuated to Uppingham, Rutland. Uppingham School made provision for its needs, and the school returned to Bath unimpaired. Since the war many of its buildings have been extended and much new property acquired. Since 1939 the preparatory school, formerly known as Westwood, has been housed at Prior's Court in the heart of Berkshire.

KIRK, ALBERT EMMANUEL (1880-1965), American minister, college president, and administrator, was born April 23, 1880 at Halstead, Kan., and died Jan. 29, 1965 at Wichita, Kan. He attended BAKER UNIVERSITY and BOSTON UNIVERSITY. He received the following degrees: Baker University—A.B., A.M. and D.D.; Boston University—S.T.B. and Ph.D. Kirk joined the SOUTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church in 1903. In 1919 he became President of SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE in Winfield, Kan., where he served until 1928. From 1928 to 1932 he was executive Secretary of the Division of Educational Institutions of the General Board of Education of the M. E. Church. In 1928 he returned to the pastorate. He was district superintendent of the Hutchinson District (Southwest Kansas Conference) two years; Wichita District, four years. In 1941 he transferred to the KANSAS CONFERENCE serving as pastor at Manhattan, three years, and then as superintendent of the Topeka District for six years, retiring in 1950. Upon his retirement he became Religious Editor for the Wichita Eagle, which position he held until impaired health compelled him to give it up. He was Secretary of the Wichita area (M. E. Church) 1918-1919. Dr. C. Orville Strohl, later President of Southwestern College, said of Dr. Kirk:—"He touched his generation with greatness."

KIRK, WILLIAM (1825-1915), New Zealand Methodist minister, was born in Epworth, Lincolnshire, and arrived in NEW ZEALAND on the missionary ship "John Wesley" in April, 1847. Shortly after his arrival he married the eldest daughter of JOHN HOBBS. They were shipwrecked at the mouth of the Wanganui River on their way to take up their first appointment in that area. Kirk was later appointed to Waikouaiti, Kai Iwi Mission Farm and Wanganui. On his way to Waikouaiti he spent nine months in Canterbury and was helpful in establishing European work at Lyttelton and Christchurch.

On transferring to European pastorates in 1863, Kirk gave full proof of his evangelistic gifts. Beginning at Nelson, he labored in Wellington, Christchurch, New Plymouth, and Auckland Circuits. A wise and capable administrator, he served as chairman of several districts and was elected president of the New Zealand Conference in 1877. He died on May 19, 1915.

WESLEY A. CHAMBERS

KIRKHAM, SARAH (1699-1764), was the eldest daughter of Lionel Kirkham, rector of Stanton-Gloucestershire. She was a friend of JOHN WESLEY in his Oxford days; and her brother Robert was a member of the HOLY CLUB. It was with "Sally" Kirkham that Wesley read Thomas à Kempis, and she is probably the "religious friend" referred to in his Journal for May 24, 1738, who had done much to alter the course of his life in 1725. She, and not her sister Betty, as was once thought (see Wesley's Journal, i, 15), was "Vananese" of the voluminous correspondence which passed between the Wesley brothers and the Kirkham family. Sarah married a schoolmaster, John Chapon (or Chapone), in December 1728.

G. E. Harrison, Son to Susanna. 1937. JOHN C. BOWMER

KIRKLAND, SARAH (1794-1880), British Methodist, was the first female traveling preacher in the PRIMITIVE METHODIST connection. Born May 16, 1794, at Marcaston in Derbyshire, she experienced spiritual concern under the preaching of WILLIAM BRAMWELL, and she herself began to preach at the age of twenty-one. Two years later HUGH BOURNE agreed to pay her a small salary out of his own pocket so that she might labor in introducing Primitive Methodism in Derbyshire and the surrounding counties. At Hucknall Torkard, in 1816—a center of Luddite sentiment—she succeeded where others had failed, preaching often to rough and drunken communities. In 1818 she married John Harrison and under WILLIAM CLOWES they labored in Staffordshire, Cheshire, and Yorkshire from the base of the Hull Circuit. Harrison died, and in 1825 she married William Bembridge, after which, owing to family responsibilities, she ceased her itinerant ministry. She died in 1880 and was buried at Muggington in Derbyshire.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

KIRKPATRICK, BLAINE E. (1887-1959), American preacher and youth worker, the son of Truman and Emma (Shonkweiler) Kirkpatrick, was born Oct. 15, 1887, at Raub, Ind. He graduated from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY with high honors in 1910; an M.A. degree in 1911 and S.T.B. from GARRETT in 1912. While a student he served Trinity, South Bend, building a new church. He was received on trial in the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1911. He served churches with college youth. He led in the construction of the swimming pool at Battle Ground youth camp. He was National Secretary, Department of Epworth League of the Board of Education from 1925 to 1937. He was Director of Wesley Foundation, Purdue University from 1953 to 1957, where his leadership was outstanding. He married Vernia Marks in 1912. Three children blessed their home. He died Jan. 23, 1959, serving at Wheeler, and was buried at Raub.

KIRKPATRICK, CHARLES DAVID (1921-), American minister and ordained elder of the Pacific Northwest Conference, FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was educated at Westington Springs College in South Dakota; Platteville State Teachers College in Wisconsin; and SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE, B.A., 1946; D.D., 1965. He married Ivanella L. Bendorf in 1947.

He served pastorates in Wisconsin and Oregon, 1943-49, and in the Pacific Northwest Conference, 1949-56; superintendent, Pacific Northwest Conference, 1956-64; and General Missionary Secretary since 1964.

He was a member of the Board of Administration of his denomination, 1960-64; trustee, Seattle Pacific College; Executive Board of World Relief, National Association of Evangelicals; and treasurer, Evangelical Foreign Missions Association.

BYRON S. LAMSON

KIRKPATRICK, DOW NAPIER (1917-), American pastor, was born at Sesser, Ill., Jan. 3, 1917, the son of Hirman S. and Effie (Dycus) Kirkpatrick. He was educated at ASBURY COLLEGE (A.B., 1938), CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY (B.D., 1940), DREW UNIVERSITY (Ph.D., 1945), and Oxford (graduate study), 1946-47. He married Marjorie Savage, June 1, 1938, and they have two sons.

Kirkpatrick was admitted on trial in the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE in 1938 after having supplied Buckhead Circuit one year. He was ordained DEACON in 1939 and ELDER in 1940, and has served the following appointments: St. Mark's (associate), Atlanta, 1938-40; Milford, Pa., 1941-45; Young Harris, Ga., 1947-51; First Church, Athens, 1951-57; St. Mark's, Atlanta, 1957-62; and First Church, Evanston, Ill., 1962- . He was a chaplain in the U. S. Navy, 1945-46. He served as a delegate to the 1956 and 1968 GENERAL CONFERENCES; the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, 1952 through 1968; and the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, 1951 through 1966. He was a member of the General Board of Missions, 1958-68, and of the General Board of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1960-66. He was president of the Church Federation of Greater Chicago, 1965-66. He served as chairman of the Structure Study Commission of The United Methodist Church, 1968-72. While on the Board of Missions, he attended consultations in Africa, Latin America, and Asia, and accompanied dialogue teams to Latin America in 1966-67.

As a leader in the OXFORD INSTITUTE on Methodist Theological Studies, Kirkpatrick assisted in bringing about 100 Methodist theologians to ten-day meetings in Lincoln College, Oxford, in 1958, 1962, 1965, and 1969. The papers of the first institute on Biblical Theology and Methodist Doctrine were published in the London Quarterly and Holborn Review for July 1959. The papers of the second and third institutes were published as books with Kirkpatrick as editor—The Doctrine of the Church and The Finality of Christ. In 1968 Kirkpatrick published a book of sermons, Six Days and Sunday.

KIRKPATRICK, THOMAS M. (1813-1886), American pioneer preacher in Iowa, was the son of homesteading parents in an Iowa community known as Augusta. He received an exhorter's license at the age of twenty-two.

The presiding elder of the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, Henry Summers, granted him a local preacher's license, Jan. 7, 1837, and he was recommended for admission on trial in the Illinois Conference, the first preacher to be licensed in the Iowa territory.

By nature a pioneer, he accepted the hardships of a preacher in the near-wilderness without complaint. Remuneration (called allowances) was cared for by offerings taken quarterly. At one quarterly meeting the total collection amounted to ten cents. The people were interested but simply had no money.

In the spring of 1838, he followed an Indian trail to a frontier outpost of the U.S. Army, established for the purpose of maintaining contacts with the Sac and Fox Indians, known as the Des Moines River Agency. The Indian Chief, Wapello, invited him to preach in his wigwam. An interpreter relayed the message to the Indians. This was the first Christian service in interior Iowa.

The IOWA ANNUAL CONFERENCE was organized Aug. 14, 1844, in Iowa City. Thomas Kirkpatrick was one of the seventeen charter members. The Conference appointed him to a circuit known as the Des Moines River Mission. It extended along the river for some sixty miles. Of the thirty-two preaching points, not one was in a church building. Not a stream in the area was spanned by a bridge.

He followed the trail farther up the river to a fort recently established by the U.S. Army, known as Fort Des Moines. On invitation, he preached in a log cabin at the fort, Wednesday, March 5, 1845. The service was the first in that part of the territory.

The First Methodist Church in Des Moines, the oldest civilian organization in the city, fixes that date as the beginning of their work.

An indomitable spirit, unflagging zeal and devotion to duty place the name of Thomas M. Kirkpatrick, if not at the top, very near the top of the list of Iowa's pioneer clergymen.

KIRKWOOD, MISSOURI, U.S.A. Kirkwood Church traces its growth back ninety-eight years to the reconstruction period following the Civil War. It was established in 1868 by Thomas Axtell and his wife, who with John Kennard and H. E. Peebles, brought together seven Methodists and held a meeting in Armantrouts Hall at Clay and Main, now Argonne.

KIRKWOOD CHURCH, KIRKWOOD, MISSOURI

After the initial meeting, W. D. Shumate took charge, and the congregation was organized on April 18, 1869, as a Southern Methodist Church (M.E.C.S.), with eighteen charter members. At the Annual Conference in September 1869, Kirkwood was made a station on the Mt. Olive Circuit and John W. Robinson was appointed pastor.

In 1872, a frame structure was erected at Washington and Clay, at a cost of $8,000. In five years this frame structure was lost through financial difficulties. Undaunted, the small group sought ways and means of securing another house of worship. Donations and a plot of ground at Clay and Adams, gift of Dr. John Pittman, came in answer to their prayers and faith. An edifice erected here, called Boyle Chapel, was dedicated on Nov. 18, 1877 by Bishop ENOCH M. MARVIN. This was Bishop Marvin's last service.

The congregation worshipped here until 1885. Strengthened in membership growth and financial means, the congregation purchased its previous home at Clay and Washington. After nine years of service it was destroyed by fire on March 15, 1894. Immediately plans were made to erect a new building and, on July 16, 1899, a handsome stone edifice was dedicated on the same site. The church was enlarged in 1915. In 1956 an extensive addition to the church was begun and dedicated in 1957.

The work on the present buildings was begun in 1962 under the ministry of Val B. Strader with the sanctuary being consecrated on Feb. 2, 1964 and the church school building completed and put into service in early 1965.

The sanctuary exterior is 120 x 58 feet and 58 feet high. The spire towers one hundred feet above the roof and is topped by a gold-plated copper cross over a symbolic crown. The entire west wall of the building is of glass supported by a screen-like grille of steel beams. The window symbolizes the Day of Pentecost, the day the Holy Spirit was given to the Christians gathered in Jerusalem. In the south wall of the sanctuary are seven stained glass windows depicting the Genesis Story of Creation.

There is a series of five bells in the tower, electronically timed, to be rung on each hour and half-hour during daylight hours. The largest bell weighs 1,150 pounds and was cast in France for this installation.

Few congregations have been called to endure greater trials and tribulations than that of Kirkwood. In the first thirty years of their history, the Kirkwood Methodists had built and paid for three church buildings. Today, on the same site, stands this modern edifice, including a sanctuary that seats 700 persons, and facilities to accommodate 3,000 members, and built at a cost of $1,000,000. From a beginning with seven persons, the membership has grown to 2,828 (1970), the largest congregation in Missouri Methodism. This stands as a symbol of devotion, dedication, sacrifice and generous quantities of hard work by her people to the glory and honor of God.

KISCH, ERNST (1893-1951), Austrian Jewish doctor and Methodist medical missionary, was born Oct. 29, 1893 in Vienna, Austria. Reared as a devout Jew, Ernst Kisch was trained as a doctor at the University of Vienna, and practiced medicine in his home city until arrested by the Nazis and interned at Dachau and at Buchenwald. Ransomed by friends, he left Austria for Shanghai where SIDNEY ANDERSON, Methodist missionary, helped him to get a place on the staff of the Stephenson Memorial (Methodist) Hospital in Changchow. Forced to leave there by the Chinese Communists, he went to NEW YORK, serving for a time at Seaview Hospital on Staten Island. He was so impressed by the humanitarian service by Methodist missionaries in the Orient that he asked for membership in The Methodist Church and was baptized in 1950 at Washington Square Church in New York. Shortly thereafter he left for KOREA to serve as a Methodist medical missionary. Again he and others such as Kristian Jensen were captured—by North Koreans—and imprisoned where lack of food and medical care depleted his already undermined health. He died in prison in June 1951. A Kisch Memorial Lectureship was established by friends as a part of the permanent funds of the Methodist BOARD OF MISSIONS, and is to be used in perpetuity at Severance Hospital and Medical School, now a part of interdenominational Yonsei University in SEOUL.

KITRELL COLLEGE, A.M.E. (1885), was founded by the North Carolina, U.S.A., Annual Conference of the A.M.E. Church, near Kittrell Springs in 1885 as a Normal and Industrial school. Between 1917 and 1928 it received several significant grants from philanthropists. The largest of these came from the wealthy Duke family (BENJAMIN N. DUKE). Phillip Cousin is now president of Kittrell.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

KLAUS, ARMIN VINCENT (1887-1965), American missionary to Southeast Asia and talented linguist. He was the son of Rev. and Mrs. John J. Klaus and was born at La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 14, 1887. Having obtained an A.B. from Charles City College in 1910, he completed his B.D. at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE and his M.A. at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1913. Later he studied at Leiden University, Holland, and Chicago University. He received a D.D. degree from Morningside College in 1955.

In 1913 he left for the mission field in Java, where he soon made himself known as a very able educator and missionary. He was in charge of the Methodist Book Room in Batavia (Djakarta) and served as District Superintendent and Mission Treasurer.

When Methodist work in Java was closed in 1928, Klaus was transferred to SUMATRA where he quickly learned the Batak language, for he was a gifted linguist and could preach in five languages. In Sumatra he served as Principal of the Methodist Boys School (both in Medan and Palembang), was District Superintendent, Mission Treasurer, and for some years Mission Superintendent. During 1941 and part of 1942 he taught at Sipholon Theological Seminary (a Rhenish Mission Institution) and was Principal of the seminary when he was interned by the Japanese (1942). During his years of internment (1942-45) he conducted services in English, and to his fellow prisoners he became known as "the Padre." During this time he compiled and typed a hymnal for the camp. His first wife died in another camp in 1945, and in 1947 he married one of his missionary colleagues, Miss June Redinger.

Having been repatriated in 1945 he returned to Sumatra in 1947 and was able to re-open a number of Methodist schools. Again he was asked to serve as District Superintendent on the Chinese District and also as Mission Treasurer. For his services in Indonesia before and during the war, Her Majesty the Queen of Holland on August 31, 1947 conferred on him the decoration, "Ridder in de Orde van Orange-Nassau."

From the Malaysia Message, January 1951 (printed in Singapore), Malaysia Conference: "Mr. Klaus is no doubt the ablest linguist in the Methodist Church in South East Asia, speaking various dialects of Malay, Batak, Hokkien Chinese, Dutch, German, and English. During the thirty-seven years of his service with the Methodist Church he has held all the positions to which a missionary might be called, having been principal of several English Schools, principal of our former training school in Java and district superintendent of all the districts; for many years he was the Mission Treasurer and since the war has also been the Mission Superintendent."

Klaus was a great missionary who spent all his strength in the work of the church. He retired from active service in 1955, having served with great distinction in Indonesia for forty-two years, and thereafter made his home first in Washington, Penn. and later in Long Beach, Calif., where he passed away April 27, 1965.

RAGNAR ALM

KLEIN, FREDERICK C. (1857-1926), American minister and pioneer missionary to JAPAN, was born May 17, 1957 in Washington, D. C.

In 1879 he united with the MARYLAND ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church. This was while a student at WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, from which he graduated in 1880.

After three years in the pastorate, he was named the M. P. Church's first ordained missionary to the foreign field. He served for ten years at Yokohama and Nagoya. On a return trip to the United States he secured funds which enabled him to establish Nagoya College. He was the first President of Nagoya College, and was also first President of Japan Mission Conference.

With his health impaired, Klein returned to the United States in 1892, shortly after a great earthquake had struck Japan. Back in the United States, Klein re-entered the pastorate, serving several churches in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and New Jersey.

In 1908 he was elected Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the M. P. Church, and held both posts until 1916, when he was named to the single post of Corresponding Secretary.

Klein's knowledge of the missionary field made him the natural choice as a delegate to the WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE held in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1910. He served ably as a delegate to the 1913 World's Sunday School Convention in Zurich, Switzerland. He died Dec. 27, 1926 at his home in Bervyn, Md.

KLINE, FRANK J. (1910-), an ordained elder of the Central Illinois Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, is dean, Department of Religion, at SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE. He was born at Bluffs, Ill. His degrees are: B.A., GREENVILLE COLLEGE, Greenville, Ill.; S.T.B., New York Theological Seminary; Th.M., Princeton Theological Seminary; Ed.D., Columbia University. Dr. Kline was post-doctoral research fellow at Yale Divinity School,

New Haven, Conn., 1964-65. He served in INDIA as a Free Methodist missionary from 1939 until 1964. He was president of Union Biblical Seminary, Yeotmal, India, 1953-1964. Since 1965 he has been Dean, Department of Religion, Seattle Pacific College. Dr. Kline is author of Daily Worship (in Marathi) and has prepared commentary-handbooks on Exodus; Colossians; and Ephesians. Dr. and Mrs. Kline reside in Seattle, Washington.

KLUMP, NORMAN W. (1910-), American E.U.B. executive, was born Aug. 24, 1910. He was elected Executive Secretary of the Division of National Missions of the Board of Missions of the E.U.B. Church in January, 1967. Previously he was Secretary of the Department of the Urban Church and Director of Church Architecture (June, 1959-January, 1967).

He was graduated from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE and EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Naperville, Ill., where he received his B.A. and B.D. degrees successively. He has done extensive graduate work at the University of Michigan in sociology.

Licensed and ordained by the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE, Dr. Klump served two small town parishes, Vicksburg and Buchanan, Mich., and a city parish in Lansing, Mich., 1943-1955. He was elected Conference Superintendent by the Michigan Conference in 1955 and served until 1959.

While serving Calvary Church, Lansing, he was on the Board of Directors of Family Service for six years and president of the Board for two of those years. He also served on the Community Chest Fund Budget Committee and the Michigan Temperance Foundation Board of Directors as treasurer for ten years. He was on the Board of Directors of the Michigan Council of Churches for eight years and the Detroit Council of Churches for four years, serving as one of its vice presidents.

As an E.U.B. executive, Dr. Klump served on the Board of Christian Social Action of the denomination and the Board of Christian Education; held several positions on committees of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; was a member and secretary of the Board of Directors of the Chicago Urban Training Center for Christian Mission; a member of the Public Housing Committee of the Human Relations Council in the city of Dayton; and a member of the Board of Directors of MALACHI, Inc., a Dayton lay academy.

Mrs. Norman (Wilma Herr) Klump is a graduate of North Central College and has done graduate work in psychology at the University of Michigan and Michigan State University. Dr. and Mrs. Klump have three children.

In The United Methodist Church Dr. Klump was elected Assistant General Secretary, Section of Social Welfare, Medical and Educational Work, National Division of the BOARD OF MISSIONS. He is a member of the DETROIT CONFERENCE.

KNIGHT, JOHN LOWDEN, JR. (1915-), American minister and educator, was born at Beverly, N. J., Nov. 2, 1915. He was educated at DREW UNIVERSITY and BOSTON UNIVERSITY and has received honorary degrees from KANSAS WESLEYAN and from WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITIES. He joined the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE on trial and was ordained DEACON in 1943 and went into full connection at the OREGON CONFERENCE in 1945. He has served as pastor in Lynn, Mass., 1940-42; Bellevue, Tenn., 1942-43; and then served as assistant professor at Willamette University, 1943-46, after which he became president of NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1946-49, and of BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE, 1949-54. After that he served as pastor in Columbus, Ohio, from 1954-61, and then pastor of the First Methodist Church in Syracuse, N. Y., 1961, until he became president of WESLEY SEMINARY in Washington, D. C., in 1964. He is a member of the general Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of The United Methodist Church.

KNIGHT, RICHARD (1789-1860), Canadian Methodist minister, was born in Devonshire, England, in 1789. As a young man he was converted and became a local preacher. He became a candidate for the Wesleyan missions, and was posted to Newfoundland by the Missionary Committee in 1816.

Then and later the Newfoundland District was one of the most demanding in British North America. Its people, possessing few material resources, were scattered in small isolated groups along the singularly inhospitable shores of that island. Any minister who sought to reach them had to contend with awesome physical perils, poverty, ignorance, and bitter religious antipathies. Fortunately, Richard Knight proved to have the requisite qualities for success in this difficult terrain. As a missionary, and later as district chairman, he played a large part in consolidating Wesleyan Methodism in Newfoundland. His memory was long cherished in the colony.

In 1833 he became chairman of the Nova Scotia District. In this capacity he labored carefully, honestly, and perhaps rather unimaginatively, to strengthen the district and to lead it, along with the New Brunswick District, to new initiatives and eventually to conference status. Throughout these years, Knight gained the confidence and respect of his brethren. It was fitting, therefore, that from 1857 to 1859 he should be co-delegate of the Eastern Conference.

His biographer has described him as "humble yet dignified, aspiring yet lowly-minded, zealous but cautious. He was an excellent preacher, . . . well read in theology, sound in the faith and clear in exposition; full of courage, mingled with Christian gentleness." (Quoted in Huestis, p. 60.)

Knight was still in the active ministry when his death occurred on May 23, 1860.

KNOLDS, TULLY CLEON (1876-1959), American minister, teacher, and college administrator, became one of the most eminent of CALIFORNIA educators. He was born Jan. 6, 1876, at Petersburg, Ill., and died Nov. 29, 1959, at Stockton, Calif. He married Emily Walline on Aug. 23, 1899, and they had eight children.

Knolds' name will always be associated with Methodist-related UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC, California's first chartered college (1851). During his twenty-seven year presidency, 1919-1946, longest in the annals of the university, he gave new life to the early institution, laying the scholarly and financial foundations upon which it emerged as one of the dynamic privately endowed universities of the west. He recommended and directed its removal in 1924 from San Jose to Stockton. For thirteen years, 1946-1959, he was chancellor.

A minister and churchman, he was admitted to the Southern California Conference in 1903. He served churches in the LOS ANGELES area while completing his studies at the University of Southern California, where he was graduated in 1903, and until in 1906 when he joined the faculty of USC. He went on to become professor of history and chairman of the department of history, until he was named president of Pacific. Beginning in 1928 he was a delegate to seven quadrennial GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M. E. Church, and to the Uniting Conference of Methodism in 1939. For almost thirty years he was a member of the Church's General BOARD OF EDUCATION, 1919-1948.

Recognized as one of the great western voices of Methodism and higher education, he was philosopher, theologian, political scientist and historian—yet he wrote very little. A master of the English language in oral composition, he trained himself through a lifetime of extempore expression. His metaphysical discourses, historical essays, current history commentaries, and sermons stimulated a great amount of activity and research. In later years, through electronic recording, some of his representative utterances were transcribed and published.

For more than a quarter of a century Knolds spoke more frequently than any other non-professional lecturer in California, and from the humblest pulpits to the most noted academic and public rostrums. The latter included twenty-three addresses for the Commonwealth Club of California. For more than twenty years his World Today broadcasts were heard via radio.

Known also as a western sportsman, Knolds was in youth a USC quarterback and for most of his life was noted as a horseman. At age eighty he rode horseback to the top of Mt. Whitney, highest elevation in the United States.

Knolds was a thirty-third degree Mason, a life member of the National Educational Association and belonged to numerous professional, learned, and fraternal societies. He received LL.D. degrees from BOSTON UNIVERSITY and University of the Pacific, and D.D. degrees from University of Southern California and Pacific School of Religion.

ARTHUR FARLEY

KNOWLES, SAMUEL (1832-1913), an Englishman, went to INDIA as an army officer of the East India Company, in 1852, transferred to the education department in 1854 and to the ministry of the Methodist Church in 1858. Because authority to ordain to the ministry had not been given to the India Mission or to the superintendent there, this new candidate for ministerial orders was recommended in 1858 to the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church for admission on trial and was elected by that body to deacon's orders, and later by the ERIE CONFERENCE of that Church to elder's orders.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1864 authorized the India Mission to become an Annual Conference, and the bishops designated Bishop EDWARD THOMSON to visit India and organize the conference. He did as instructed, and at that session ordained Knowles as deacon and elder. The new conference immediately elected three men to deacon's orders. This was the first Annual Conference organized in Asia, and the first time that any man was ordained in Asia by votes taken in Asia.

Knowles wrote extensively for Sunday school lesson papers, and for courses of study for inquirers and for candidates for exhorter's and local preacher's licenses, also for seminary studies. However, after twenty-five years' experience he became convinced that extended courses of study for inquirers were inadvisable, and that confessions of faith in Christ as Lord and Savior should be followed soon by baptism without looking critically at motives. He felt that the results were best where more attention was paid to the new believer after his baptism. He concluded that converts held a long time for prebaptismal instruction were not more firm in their attachment to Christ than those baptized more quickly.

Mr. and Mrs. Knowles had twenty-two children. One was awarded the Victoria Cross for heroism in the First World War, and two were tennis champions of India. Knowles died in India, March 29, 1913.

KNOX, ALEXANDER (1757-1831), British Anglican, was a descendant of John Knox and a noted theological writer. His father was the first to welcome JOHN WESLEY to Londonderry, IRELAND, in 1765, and Wesley stayed at the home on subsequent visits. Wesley befriended him and wrote twenty letters to him affording wise spiritual counsel. Knox was not converted, however, until after Wesley's death. Knox maintained a friendship with leading Evangelicals—HANNAH MORE, WILLIAM WILBERFORCE, and the Clapham Sect—as well as with the Methodist ADAM CLARKE. He wrote much on CHRISTIAN PERFECTION, and in some of his teaching anticipates the Oxford Movement.

KNOX, LLOYD H. (1914-), an ordained elder of the Genesee Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, U.S.A., is the publisher of Light and Life Press. He was born at Brantford, Ontario. He holds the A.B. degree from ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, North Chili, N. Y., and has pursued graduate studies at the University of Rochester. Rochester, N. Y. ASBURY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY conferred upon him the D.D. degree in 1958. He served as pastor of churches in MICHIGAN and NEW YORK for nineteen years. He was president of the National Sunday School Association, 1960-62. He is the author of Aldersgate study guides for Philippians, and for 1 and 2 Thessalonians. Since 1954 he has been the publisher, Light and Life Press. Dr. Knox and his family have resided at Winona Lake, Ind. since 1954.

BYRON S. LAMSON

KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE, U.S.A., with a population of 169,766 (1970) and in a fertile agricultural area, is a strong industrial city in east TENNESSEE. Founded in 1786, it was named for Secretary of War Henry Knox, and was chartered as a city in 1816. It is the headquarters of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and textile manufacture is the leading industry. Coal and zinc are found in the region.

JEREMIAH LAMBERT was appointed to the Holston Circuit in 1783. At that time the circuit doubtless embraced all the settlements along the Holston and French Broad Rivers. At the time sixty members were reported from the region. Henry Willis succeeded Lambert. In 1791 the various societies reported about 1,000 members. Samuel H. Thompson was the pastor in 1812, when Knoxville first appeared in the Minutes. He reported 537 members on the circuit.

The first church building was erected in east Knoxville in 1816. It was a frame structure used by white members until 1833; Negroes used it following that time until the Civil War, when it was destroyed. This church adhered to the M. E. Church, South in 1845. The M. E. Church erected a building in 1868 at a cost of $30,000.

In 1876 the city had six churches: two M. E., two M. E. South, one C.M.E., and one A.M.E. Zion. The half century and more from 1876 to 1939 was a period of great advancement and growth for Methodism in Knoxville. By this time the controversies resulting from the War Between the States had been settled, and although handicapped by being divided into two distinct groups and belonging to and having allegiance to two entirely separate conferences of the same name (HOLSTON CONFERENCE, M.E. and M.E. South) and covering almost identical areas, the Methodist people determined to make the best of a trying situation.

A steadily growing constituency resulted in the establishment of thirty additional churches in the area and the construction of new and larger buildings by many of those already established. Some of these new buildings, such as Magnolia Avenue, Central, and Church Street were outstanding in size and beauty and have become landmarks in the city.

During this period Woman's Missionary Societies were formed and soon demonstrated their helpful capability. Methodist young people entered with enthusiasm into the EPWORTH LEAGUE movement. Sunday schools became great and effective instruments of Christian education, and at least two of its workers (W. C. E. Cunningham and J. A. Lyons) became officers of the General Sunday School Board (MES). Evangelism continued to be of prime concern, with revivals taking the place of the former CAMP MEETINGS and with great evangelists such as SAM JONES frequently doing the preaching.

In 1970 the Knoxville East District (UMC) reported twenty-two churches with a membership pf 5,930; and the Knoxville West District reported forty-seven churches with 21,661 members.

Church Street Church is the downtown mother church of Knoxville Methodism. This Gothic cathedral-like structure of Tennessee crab orchard sandstone stands on the bank of Fort Loudon Lake of the Tennessee River, at the gateway to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and adjacent to the campus of the University of Tennessee. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, enroute to the opening of the Park, exclaimed, "That is the most beautiful church I have ever seen."

FRANCIS ASBURY preached at the State House in Knoxville in 1800. In 1816 White's Chapel, the first meeting house of the church, was erected. In 1834 the congregation built a plain brick meeting house on Church Avenue. After the War Between the States the name "Church Street Methodist Church" became fixed. In 1878 a new and stately building with a Sunday school annex was erected on the Church Street site. Fire destroyed this building in 1928. The present Gothic structure was erected in 1930. It occupies an entire city block on Henley Street overlooking the river, the university and the city. A modern children's building was added in 1963. Recently the development of a 35-acre mountaintop tract on the Appalachian Trail near the eastern edge of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park was begun as a retreat center. It has been named Asbury Ski Hi Center because of its proximity to the Asbury Trail along the Pigeon River Gorge from LAKE JUNALUSKA through the Great Smokies.

Leadership for the Sunday School Movement and later the Student Movement in Southern Methodism came out of Church Street Church. The church reported a membership of 2,404 in 1970.

KNUDSON, ALBERT CORNELIUS (1873-1953), American theologian and educator, was born in Grandmeadow, Minn., on Jan. 23, 1873, the fourth of nine children of the Rev. Asle and Susan Fosse Knudsen (sic), both of whom were Norwegians. His father lived to be ninety-six and was a leader in the NORWEGIAN-DANISH Methodist CONFERENCE.

Knudson graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1893 and from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1896. At Boston he responded with conviction to the personalistic teaching of BORDEN PARKER BOWNE, and this influenced all his subsequent teaching and writing. He remained for further study with Bowne before going to Jena and Berlin, Germany, for additional work. He received the Ph.D. from Boston University in 1900.

His teaching began at ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in DENVER, Colorado in 1898, along with first-year studies for ordination in the Colorado Conference. There he married Mathilda Johnson, daughter of the Rev. John H. Johnson. He taught Bible and philosophy at BAKER UNIVERSITY, Baldwin, Kan. (1900-1902), then at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, Meadville, Pa. (1902-06).

In 1906 he was called back to Boston University as Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, a position which he held with poise and influence during the years of battle over higher criticism. However, his major concern was with the philosophico-theological implications of the Christian faith and, in 1921, he changed fields to Systematic Theology. From 1926 to 1938 he was also Dean of the School of Theology.

Knudson was active in the NEW ENGLAND SOUTHERN CONFERENCE, in GENERAL CONFERENCES, and in the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939. He was an official delegate to the Edinburgh Conference on Faith and Order in 1937.

His chief books were Religious Teaching of the Old Testament, Philosophy of Personalism, Doctrine of God, Doctrine of Redemption, and Principles of Christian Ethics.

He died Aug. 28, 1953. Burial was at the Mount Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

KOBE, Japan, with the suburban city of Nishinomiya, is second only to Tokyo as a center of Methodist work in JAPAN. The group of three great cities—Osaka, Kyoto, and Kobe—make up the second great population center of the country. Kobe, a city of more than a million people, is known chiefly as one of Japan's two greatest seaports. Besides this it is important for its educational institutions, steel mills, ship-building yards, rubber factories, match factories, etc.

To Kobe in 1886 came the founders of the Southern Methodist Mission, the LAMBUTHS—father and son, transferred from their work in CHINA. Kobe became the center of their work. The church they organized first—without a single Japanese member—is now one of the strongest in Japan. The Eiko Church with its tall tower, located in the midst of the prefectural government buildings, is one of the landmarks of the city. Just a couple of blocks away is Palmore Institute, founded by the Lambuths the year of their arrival to give instruction in English to ambitious young men. It is probably the most successful school of its kind in Japan. Not far away, on two campuses, is the Keimei Girls School, a junior and senior high school with which Methodist missionaries cooperate.

Kwansei Gakuin University, which regards Bishop Lambuth as its founder, at first was located in Kobe, but later was moved to suburban Nishinomiya. It consists of junior and senior high school, colleges, theological department, and graduate courses leading to Ph.D. degrees, but most of its 11,000 students are enrolled in the colleges. Near Kwansei Gakuin is the Seiwa College for Christian Workers, where young women are trained for work in church, social service, kindergartens, etc. Next door to Seiwa is the famous Kobe College, founded by the Congregational Church and one of the leading women's colleges in Japan.

In and around Kobe, there are a large number of Christian churches, kindergartens, orphanages, and other institutions, many of them begun by the Methodist Church. In Kobe, too, is the "Canadian Academy," where many children of missionaries and other "foreigners" receive English education from kindergarten through high school. It was in the slums of Kobe that the famous Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa began his work. This is still carried on in the same neighborhood in the beautiful new Kagawa Memorial Building.

JOHN B. COBB, SR.

KOBLER, JOHN (1768-1843), American circuit rider of the Northwest Territory, was born in Culpepper County, Va., Aug. 29, 1768. ASBURY sent him to OHIO to form the first circuit and he preached there in the log cabins.

The son of pious parents, Kobler was converted at nineteen and entered the Methodist ministry in his twenty-first year. Among other pioneer circuits, he served Greenbrier Circuit in WEST VIRGINIA in 1792 before volunteering to go as a missionary to the Northwest Territory.

On Aug. 2, 1798, Kobler delivered the first sermon and administered the first communion in Ohio by a regularly constituted minister. He preached in the home of Francis McCormick, a local preacher, who was the real founder of Methodism in Ohio, having organized the first Methodist society near Milford in Clermont County.

John Kobler organized the first Methodist circuit in Ohio-Miami Circuit. That circuit was about half the size of the CINCINNATI CONFERENCE in 1867.

A man of more than ordinary strength, John Kobler was worn down by privations, toil and exposure, from which he never recovered. After eighteen years of labor with great success and many conversions, he was completely prostrated by disease. He was induced to locate and settle in the neighborhood where he was born. His influence in the church at Fredericksburg, Va., where he moved after location, was great. At seventy-four years of age he went west, where he had preached, to get help for the new church building at Fredericksburg, and was successful in his journey. The BALTIMORE CONFERENCE placed Kobler's name on the superannuate roll in 1836. He died in Fredericksburg on July 26, 1843.

JESSE A. EARL

KOGER, JAMES WILLIAM (1852-1886), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in South Carolina in 1852. He was converted in his youth and joined the Methodist Church. In 1874 he entered WOFFORD COLLEGE, from which he received his B.A. degree. In 1878, he joined the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. He was accepted for missionary work in 1881, and sailed for Brazil with J. J. RANSOM, J. L. KENNEDY, and MARTHA WATTS.

With his wife and little daughter, Koger established residence in Piracicaba, in what was then the province of SÃO PAULO. By September he had organized a Methodist church, which was composed mostly of Americans from the southern states of the U. S. who had fled their land, and who had settled in that area after the American Civil War. From there he was appointed to São Paulo, where, on Feb. 10, 1884, he organized a Methodist church in that city. This was composed of four members only: an Italian couple, an Englishman, and one Brazilian, and services were held in the home of a German Lutheran family. Such was the beginning of Central Church, Sao Paulo, which is now the largest Methodist Church in Brazil.

In December 1882, Koger was appointed mission superintendent, and in 1885 he directed the first Annual Missionary Conference. In January 1886, he went to Rio, and while there contracted yellow fever, then raging in Brazil. He returned sick to São Paulo and died on Jan. 28, 1886—only thirty-three years of age, yet having to his record the founding of two of Brazil's great Methodist churches. He was buried in the Protestant Cemetery, and a marble tombstone erected by the Piracicaba Church, marks his grave. He was survived by his wife and small daughter.

EDWARD D. KOHLSTEDT

KOHLSTEDT, EDWARD DELOR (1874-1963), American Executive Secretary, Division of Home Missions and Church Extension from 1927 to 1944, was born Sept. 11, 1874, at Minneapolis, Minn. He graduated from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1899, and was ordained the same year. He married Hannah Carrie Sandmeier. To them were born three children.

Kohlstedt served several churches in the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE and then was superintendent of the Milwaukee District. He was awarded the D.D. degree in 1917 by Lawrence College, his alma mater; and the D.Sc. degree in 1922 by Garrett Biblical Institute.

During the Centenary Movement of the M. E. Church, after the close of the First World War, Kohlstedt became secretary of the St. Paul area for the campaign, and later was made General Director of Field Activities, Committee on Conservation and Advance.

In 1922, Kohlstedt was elected president of DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Mitchell, S. D. His greatest service to the college was a successful campaign to increase endowment to $600,000. He was then in 1927 made Executive Secretary of the General Board of Missions and Church Extension of the M. E. Church. In this position he served his church admirably, giving special impetus to the development of the church in the frontier regions of ALASKA, HAWAII and PUERTO RICO.

Although he retired in 1944, he continued to serve his church in various capacities, being especially concerned with the ecumenical movement, serving on the Joint Commission on the Unification of Methodism in 1933.

He and his second wife, Marjorie Elizabeth Anderson, made their home in Palo Alto, Calif., until his death Aug. 10, 1963.

Kohlstedt was the author of pamphlets, "Paradise of the Pacific," "Glimpses of Alaska," and "Creative Kingdom."

KOLAR, India, was the site of an orphanage and vocational school, started by Louisa Anstey after her resignation from the London Missionary Society in 1876. Famine conditions brought orphans to the institution in large numbers, so that in 1878 there were 1,270 children in her charge. She received from the government a valuable site of nearly eight acres in an excellent location. Nowhere did she exhibit her nobility of character more truly than in 1890, when for the better care of the work she turned it over with all the property, free of cost, to the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE.

Industries then in operation were tailoring, carpentry, blacksmithing, masonry, and farming, which were later merged into the more complete program of the Industrio-Educational Department. This was for the purpose of training the heart, the head, and the hands with a program in which the boys had a half-day's training of the mind in school, and a half-day's training of the hand in some useful employment; and at all times keeping before them the importance of seeking first the Kingdom of Heaven.

The school widely influenced the style and quality of office and household furniture. It was the pioneer and best example, in Mysore State, of the use of machinery in vocational education. Students of the masonry and carpentry departments erected all the buildings in the station for a period of twenty-five years.

Another influence exerted by the school was the use of improved plows. In one period of ten years 3,600 plows made with imported American shares were sold—a plow a day for ten years, and the demand was not met. That they were used was proved by the extra 5,750 imported shares sold to replace those worn out. The program included evangelistic work in the town and villages and the supervision of small colonies of Christians from the orphanages in the four villages, Elim, Bethany, Nazareth, and Rollinspur.

A school for girls was opened in 1893 by the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. This is still continued and includes classes from kindergarten through high school, with co-education in the elementary grades. The South India Conference report of 1925 says that the Kolar church was not only self-supporting but also helped to maintain other stations of the district.

KOREA. The peninsula of Korea, with an area of 85,286 square miles, extends from the mainland of CHINA some 600 miles toward JAPAN. The terrain is very mountainous with the watershed near the eastern coast.

In legend Korea goes back to the time of Moses and Abraham, the year 1971 being 4304 in ancient Korean chronology. The Koryu dynasty (918-1392) was the first to rule the entire peninsula. The Yi dynasty followed, establishing its capital at SEOUL. This dynasty ended with the annexation to Japan in 1910. Japan's control ended with the signing of the articles of surrender by Japan in 1945 at the end of World War II.

The Russians immediately took over half of the peninsula, forcing a communist regime upon the people. Communist North Korea, known as the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, has a population estimated at 12,000,000 in an area of 46,500 square miles. The Republic of Korea (popularly called South Korea), with an area of approximately 38,000 square miles, remains open to the free world, and is recognized by the United Nations. With over 29,000,000 people, its density of population is exceeded only by Belgium and the Netherlands.

The English name Korea (Corea) apparently began through western contacts with the ancient Koryu dynasty. Koreans call themselves the Hahn People, and their country Hahn-Cook, or Hahn country. During Japanese control, the official name in both Korean and English was Chosun or Chosen.

Korea's unfortunate geographical position made her territory a battleground for contending Japanese and Chinese armies, as well as the goal of raiders from Japan, China, Mongolia and Russia. The result was an intense anti-foreign attitude giving her the name of The Hermit Kingdom. Finally in May 1882, Commodore Robert W. Shufeldt of the United States succeeded in negotiating a commercial treaty. The first American minister, General Lucius H. Foote, arrived in Seoul in June 1883.

The first Methodist missionaries reached Korea in the spring of 1885. They included the Rev. and Mrs. HENRY G. APPENZELLER, Dr. and Mrs. W. B. SCRANTON, and Dr. Scranton's mother, Mrs. Mary F. Scranton.

The groundwork for this early arrival had been laid by three men. JAMES M. BUCKLEY, editor of The Christian Advocate (New York), had published a series of articles on Korea in 1883. JOHN F. GOUCHER, having met the first Korea Mission to President Chester A. Arthur, had donated the first funds. ROBERT F. MACLAY, superintendent of the M. E. Mission in Japan, had gone to Seoul in 1884, and secured permission to open schools and hospitals.

Due to anti-foreign feeling, open evangelistic work was not feasible. However Dr. Scranton soon had patients, Appenzeller and Mrs. Scranton had pupils, the one beginning modern education in Korea, the other opening the very first school for Korean girls.

Ten years later, two experienced Southern Methodist missionaries from China opened work for their church in Korea. C. F. REID of Soochow, accompanied Bishop EUGENE R. HENDRIX to Korea in 1895 and secured property in both Songdo and Seoul. Mrs. Josephine P. Campbell, also of Soochow, arrived in 1897 to open work for Korean women. She started Carolina Institute, a school for girls, and gave her remaining life to work in Korea.

By 1900 anti-foreign feeling was abating. By 1906, through efforts of R. A. HARDIE and others of his mission, a revival sprang up that swept the peninsula. Full membership in the two branches of Methodism grew from a combined total of 1,199 in 1900 to 13,333 in 1910. The Korean Annual Conference of the M. E. Church was organized in 1908, and that of the Church, South in 1918.

Methodist union work began early. C. G. Hounshell of the Southern Church taught in Pai Chai College, and preachers' training classes were combined in 1907.

Korean Methodist Church. Discouraged by the slow progress toward union in America, the two Methodist churches appealed to the two respective GENERAL CONFERENCES of the mother churches meeting in 1928 and 1930, for permission to organize an autonomous church. Under the chairmanship of Bishop HERBERT WELCH, who had been resident in Seoul (1916-1928), a constitution was drafted, a new creed (Korean Creed) written, and the first General Conference of the Korean Methodist Church met in Seoul in December 1930, and elected J. S. RYANG as its first general superintendent.

It should be noted that the new creed, now known in American Methodism as "The Korean Creed," was drafted primarily as a teaching instrument for occasional use in the churches and that it has not supplanted the use of the APOSTLES CREED by the Korean Church.

The new church was to be self-governing, and yet to have close reciprocal ties with the mother churches. Democratic tendencies were manifest. The general superintendent was to be elected for a term of four years, with one re-election permitted. Laymen were to be admitted to both the annual conference and the committee on appointments.

District superintendents were to be elected by the delegates from the district, after the appointments had been made. This in effect resulted in naming some pastor to the additional office of superintendent of his district, since there was little financial support for the district office. There being no restrictions on sex, the first annual conference saw the ordination of fourteen missionary women.

J. S. Ryang was succeeded in 1938 by CHONG-WOO KIM, who died the following year. CHOON-SOO CHUNG was named to fill the unexpired term, but national events soon forced his removal.

Japanese military pressure, beginning in 1940, broke all contacts with missionary personnel, suspended the church constitution, deprived many American-trained men of their ministerial rights, and for four years constantly changed the official who was acting in the place of bishop.

When the Russians sealed off half of the peninsula in 1945, Methodists lost half of their churches, as well as schools, hospitals, and missionary residences. Some three million refugees fled to South Korea. Even communication across the border between separated families became impossible. Intelligence reports indicate there is no open worship in the Communist zone.

In June 1950, the Communist invasion of South Korea resulted in a very heavy loss of church property and ministerial lay personnel. This was followed by the Chinese invasion of December 1950, which displaced one-half of the population and rendered one-fourth destitute.

In this decade, the Korean church had suffered four staggering blows. And yet the church continued to grow. Methodists had about 19,000 full members in 1940. In 1953 the number had grown to 33,136, and the 1967 report shows 71,353.

The listing of full membership does not indicate the real strength of the church since Korea screens its members very carefully. There are 19,592 on the probation rolls, and 47,149 adults listed as card signers, occasional attendants. From the beginning of the work, the total of these two classes has usually exceeded the number of full members. Hence it is not strange the number present at Sunday morning worship exceeds the membership.

In addition, over 92,000 young people are listed as future candidates for membership. Friday class-meetings are active with 53,000 members enrolled in 5,400 classes. A daybreak prayer meeting in every church every morning of the year is one of many indigenous factors. Over 300 students enrolled in two seminaries constitute what is probably the largest percentage of the church population to be found anywhere in the world. Foreign missionaries of the church are to be found in southern Asia and in South America.

Due to the suspension of the church constitution and disqualification of leaders in 1941, it was not until 1949 that the Korea Methodist Church was reorganized under Bishop YU-SOON KIM. The next year, Bishop Kim, along with former Bishop J. S. Ryang and other leaders, was abducted by the Communists. H. J. LEW served 1950-1958; CHONG-PIL KIM, 1958-1962; WHAN-SHIN LEE, 1962; FRITZ HONG-KYN PYEN was elected in 1967.

The mass of the Korean people have no organized religion. Confucian ethics have great weight in family matters, as manifested in weddings and funerals, but only about 65,000 are listed as adherents to Confucianism. Shamanism has been almost universal and it is estimated that 7,000,000 people occasionally consult shamans and licensed fortune tellers. Buddhism was very strong prior to 1392. At present it ranks second in the list of major denominations with 962,625 adherents in 1964. A native religion, the Chon-Doh, or Heavenly Way, which seeks to combine tenets of Buddhism and Confucianism with time honored Korean ways has an estimated 600,000 adherents.

According to the Korean Christian Almanac there were 2,152,540 Protestants and 747,818 Catholics in Korea in 1965. This total of over 2,900,000 indicates that the Christian faith now enrolls nearly ten percent of the population.

Prior to the Korean War, ninety percent of the Protestants were either Methodists or Presbyterians. Northern Presbyterians had arrived with Northern Methodists, in 1885, and were soon followed by their Southern, Canadian, and Australian brothers. The six missions had agreed upon a division of territory, and with the Puritan (Holiness) and Salvation Army, churches had cooperated in the National Christian Council and related projects.

Since the Korean War, several Pentecostal groups have entered Korea. Methodists and Presbyterians still enroll ninety percent of the Protestant group, but militant opponents of the National and World Councils have moved in from the United States to disrupt the Presbyterian and Holiness Churches. About one-third of the Presbyterians reject most union projects.

The remarkable growth of Christianity since 1945 has been marked by a similar surge of so-called "new religions." Among these quasi-Christian movements may be mentioned the Olive Tree Church, led by Tae-Sun Park, and the Holy Spirit Unification of World Christianity under Sin-Myung Moon. These new religions involve a curious mixture of magic, astrology, and many shamanistic ideas to which are added elements of Buddhism, Confucianism and Christianity. They make fantastic claims to membership and astounding claims to the divinity of the founders. Estimates indicate that these new religions may enroll about 500,000 persons.

Methodists have been charter members and loyal supporters of union work. Earliest of these projects developed into the Christian Literature Society which owns buildings in Seoul and Pusan, and publishes and distributes most of the hymnals and literature used by Protestant churches. Radio station HLYK with its 50,000 watt transmitter in Seoul carries the Christian message far into communist Korea, while its 1,000 watt short wave transmitter hook-up with four branch stations, reaches all of South Korea with fifteen hours of daily broadcast. The Korean Council of Christian Education—successor to the Korea Sunday School Association—has published the international Sunday school lessons, a fine series of graded lessons, and a wide variety of texts in Christian education. The Christian Literacy Association publishes a wealth of popular books for new literates, and has a unique system of reading clubs to get the books read. The Christian Family Life Committee publishes a monthly magazine Christian Home, and promotes a series of family welfare institutes.

The NCC Audio-Visual program has six mobile units operating throughout the country. The Union Christian Service Center at Taejon has a forty-acre experimental farm. Its dairy, cannery, and livestock center provide a fine short-term training institution for rural youth. Most recent in the list of union projects is the Committee on Chaplains, organized during the Korean War by Dr. WILLIAM E. SHAW, and Father George Carroll of the Roman Catholic Church. Methodists have sixty-seven chaplains in service. Last but not least, Methodists cooperate in two great universities, Yonsei and EWHA.

Korean leadership has come to the fore since the Korean War, chiefly due to the return of CRUSADE SCHOLARS. Outstanding Methodist leaders not mentioned elsewhere include Dr. Harold S. Hong, President of the Methodist Union Seminary in Seoul and noted writer; Rev. Ki-Chul Nam, President of the Taejon Methodist Seminary; Rev. David Y. S. Hahn, General Secretary of the Korea Council of Christian Education; Y. B. Im, Secretary emeritus of the Korean Bible Society after seventeen years of service; Rev. Choo Pyung Kim, former field secretary of the World Council of Christian Education for Asia, and currently general Secretary of the Korean Bible Society; Myung-Gul Sohn, Secretary of the Korean Christian Student Movement; Mrs. Y. H. Chung, first Korean woman lawyer, and first woman judge, currently Dean of the Law Colleges of Ewha Woman's University; Dr. Y. H. Chung and Mrs. Hyun-Sook Park, former cabinet members and currently members of the National Assembly; Yong-Ha Chang, Pong-Jo Shin, and Mrs. Soo-Jin Chyun, long-time high school principals; Dr. Chang-Mo Moon and Mr. Sei-Whan Chang, leading laymen.

Missionaries not otherwise mentioned who have been noteworthy leaders in their field include: Education: F. E. C. Williams, Charles S. Deming, D. A. Bunker, Mrs. Anna B. Chaffin, Miss Charlotte Brownlee, Miss Hallie Buie, Miss Lillian Nichols, Miss Ida Hankins, Miss Episcopal leadership from America has been notable in the services of Bishop ARTHUR J. MOORE, Bishop RICHARD C. RAINES, and Bishop HAZEN G. WERNER. As official representatives of the mother church, their brotherly affection and intelligent support in private conference and public address proved of untold value to the morale of a people caught in very distressing times.

"The Korean Methodist Church is an active and growing body of men, women and children," said Bishop EUGENE SLATER, who was speaking to the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS OF The United Methodist Church late in 1969. "Since 1930 the church has grown from 139 local churches with a constituency of 26,999 to 1,391 local churches with a constituency of 287,417 in 1968. Actual membership is now 70,000."

The record of the past eighty years is one of spectacular success for the church. A bright future for the new nation seems assured. It would be a happy prospect indeed if all of the Hermit's children were likewise free.

KORESH CHURCH OF IMMANUEL is a Negro holiness sect that was formed by Rev. Frank Russell Kellingsworth when he withdrew from the A.M.E. CHURCH in 1929 along with 120 followers. The church emphasizes entire sanctification as a second definite work of grace conditioned upon a life of absolute consecration. The church forbids use of alcohol, tobacco and prideful dress; also membership in secret societies; and profaning the Sabbath.

The church is small. It has less than a dozen congregations centered upon WASHINGTON, D. C., U.S.A. and PHILADELPHIA. (In 1934, a merger was effected with the Christian Tabernacle Union of Pittsburgh.)

KRECKER, FREDERICK C. (1843-1883), American Evangelical pioneer missionary, born at Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 31, 1843. After graduating from Jefferson Medical College, PHILADELPHIA, he joined the U.S. Navy and served as a Naval surgeon during the remainder of the Civil War. He then established a private practice. But having learned of the great need of medical missionary work in JAPAN, he volunteered. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of the Evangelical Association had voted unanimously the preceding year (1875) to begin mission work in Japan. Dr. Krecker and two associates were sent and arrived in Yokohama, Oct. 18, 1876, where they were welcomed by a Methodist missionary, Rev. J. Correll. They stayed there several months studying the language. In the spring of 1877 they reported that their young language teacher had become their first convert.

Krecker moved to Tokyo in August 1877, but found it difficult to obtain property. To satisfy legal difficulties his young teacher opened a school to teach English and employed Dr. Krecker as a teacher. Gradually he gained the confidence of the people by doing medical work, but difficulties continued. Buddhist and Shinto priests were bitterly hostile. Illness in his own family caused him great anxiety. He began to hold religious services in his home, beginning with a small number of people.

When one of his young converts contracted typhoid fever, Dr. Krecker ministered to him, but in doing this he himself contracted the fever in a malignant form and died Apr. 26, 1883.

Krecker and his associates were really pioneer missionaries and had to study methods of procedure. After those first seven years foundations had been laid. At the end of that time the mission numbered sixty-two native Christians with three native preachers and two theological students. Three years later a large "Krecker Memorial Church" was constructed in his honor.

KRECKER, JOSEPH WILLARD (1898-), American E.U.B. editor, was born at Friedensburg, Schuylkill County, Pa., on Nov. 11, 1898, to Joseph H. and Ellen C. (Wommer) Krecker. Following undergraduate studies at ALBRIGHT COLLEGE (A.B., 1920) he taught in the Saint Clair High School, Schuylkill County, Pa. (1921-24), during which time he served summer pastorates in MAINE for the Congregational Conference and Missionary Society of the State of Maine. In 1926 he was graduated from Biblical Seminary in New York. Additional degrees were earned at Princeton Theological Seminary (Th.B. and Th.M., 1927), and Albright College conferred on him an honorary degree (D.D.) in 1942. He married Grace Drake in 1923, and to them were born three children.

Krecker was ordained in the ministry of The Evangelical Church in 1926 and served pastorates in Pennsylvania at Grace Church, Williamsport; Christ Church, York; and St. Paul's Church, Red Lion. In 1946 he was elected editor of The Telescope-Messenger, official denominational magazine, at which time he moved with his family to Harrisburg, Pa. In 1962 he was elected executive editor of Church and Home, new denominational magazine.

Krecker was retired Dec. 31, 1966, and was accorded the status of Editor Emeritus by his denomination. Since his retirement he has been elected an Honorary Life Member of the Associate Church Press. He carried ex-officio responsibilities in The E.U.B. Church on the General Council of Administration, the Boards of Missions, Christian Education, Publication and the Department of Communication.

He and his wife continue to reside in retirement at Harrisburg, Pa. His membership in The United Methodist Church is located in the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE.

KRIEGE, OTTO EDWARD (1865-1957), German-American minister and college president, was born at Bellville, Ill., on Nov. 20, 1865. He was graduated from CENTRAL WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Warrenton, Mo., in 1888 and spent two years of study at the Universities of Bonn and Berlin. Admitted to the West German Annual Conference of the M. E. Church in 1890, he served churches in NEBRASKA and MISSOURI for nine years. In 1899 he became professor of Historical Theology and Ethics at Central Wesleyan College. He was elected president of this in 1910. His effective leadership was hampered by the decline in the use of the German language during World War I, and the dissolution of St. Louis and West German Conferences in 1926. He received an honorary D.D. from BAKER UNIVERSITY in 1907. He resigned in 1925 to become president of New Orleans University until 1935 and helped effect the merger of this school with Straight University to form the present DILLARD UNIVERSITY. In retirement he wrote a history of German Methodism in New Orleans, and also one of Dillard University. His most distinguished achievement was a history of Methodism in German, Geschichte des Methodismus (1909). He died on June 6, 1957.

KUECKLICH, REINHOLD (1896-), a German retired official of The United Methodist Church, formerly of the E.U.B. Church in Germany. He was born April 13, 1896, the son of E. R. Kuecklich, preacher and publisher, and Dorothea Roehm Kuecklich. He married Emmy Neese in 1925 (died 1965). He was educated at the University of Tübingen and was pastor in Velbert, 1924-25; pastor at Emmaus Church in Dresden, 1925-27; professor of New Testament at The Theological Seminary, E.U.B. Church in Reutlingen, 1927; the director since 1952. He was president of E.U.B. Church Council in Germany, 1954-66, and was one of the alternating presidents of the Union of Evangelical Free Churches in Germany. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the E.U.B. Church in Johnstown, Pa., U.S.A. in 1938. He attended the Second Assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Evanston, Ill., U.S.A., as accredited visitor in 1954. He wrote the publication "Treues Haushalten" (1932); was editor of "Evangelische Bausteine" (1925-39) and "Die Evangelische Gemeinschaft" (1953), was co-editor "Lerrbuch des Neutestamentlichen Griechisch," was co-publisher of "Calver Bibellexikon" (1961), and was contributor to "Evangelisches Kirchenlexikon," "Viele Glieder, ein Leib," and "Weltmethodismus." Dr. Kuecklich retired in 1966 and resides at Reutlingen, Germany.

HERMANN STICHER

KUGIMIYA, TOKIO (1871-1948), evangelist, pastor, and bishop of the Japan Methodist Church, was born in the island of Kyushu. When seventeen years old he came in contact with SAMUEL H. WAINRIGHT, who had recently been sent to the city of Oita by the M. E. Church, South. Soon he became an earnest Christian. He was one of a group of young men who shared with Dr. WALTER LAMBUTH and Dr. Wainright in a wonderful Pentecostal experience at a Watch Night Service in Oita, Dec. 31, 1889. He became a lay preacher while serving as an official in the Oita court, but after a year or two he joined several of his Oita friends in the Theological Department of Kwansai Gakuin in Kobe. A few years after his graduation he had the opportunity to go to America, where he graduated at Trinity College (now DUKE UNIVERSITY).

Kugimiya was outstanding as pastor, district superintendent, and evangelist. For forty years he published a monthly periodical Yorokobi no Otozure (Glad Tidings). He was author of at least fourteen small books on the spiritual life. He represented the Japan Methodist Church at the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES) at Jackson, Miss., in 1934.

In 1936 he was elected bishop of the Japan Methodist Church, to fill the unexpired term of the late Bishop AKAZAWA. He served with distinction during the very difficult pre-war period until the end of his term in 1939. After that he went back into the pastorate, serving the Kwansei Gakuin Church through the war and until failing health forced him to retire. He died in 1948, greatly beloved and mourned by thousands whose lives he had blessed.

KUKUTAI, NGATETE KEREI (1879-1966), was a NEW ZEALAND Methodist Maori minister. Coming from the aristocratic line of the Tainui tribe, he was recommended by his own people and in 1934 became a Maori home missionary. Seven years later he was ordained, and was appointed superintendent of the Maniapoto Maori Circuit.

He was a respected adviser and friend of the leaders of the "Maori King Movement," notably Princess Te Pua Herangi and King Koroki. Kukutai continued in active work for many years beyond normal retiring age, and in recognition of his services to his people, he was made a Member of the Order of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth II in 1961.

KUMALO, THOMAS, was an unlettered peasant of the Swazi tribe, Southern Africa, who was converted by the preaching of a fellow layman. Impelled by repeated dreams he set out to preach the gospel among the Mandlakazi, a royal Zulu tribe. After a period in which he experienced much hardship, he returned to Swaziland and persuaded Samuel Mabengu and other preachers to join him. They started work at Etamu and moved later to Ekuhlupekeni where they erected their first chapel. News of their efforts reached the white minister at Eshowe and after investigation the Rev. T. D. Fraser was put in charge of the work in 1904. Kumalo and Mabengu remained, despite offers of payment, unpaid ambassadors of the gospel.

KUMLER, HENRY, JR. (1801-1882), American U.B. bishop, son of Henry and Susanna (Wingert) Kumler, Sr., born Jan. 8, 1801, at Myerstown, Pa., died Aug. 19, 1882, at Dayton, Ohio. We are told that "his schooling was of the poorest sort. His teacher was very inefficient and often drunk, and Henry's education suffered accordingly." He married Christina Zeller on June 25, 1820.

At age eleven, he was converted and joined the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. At fourteen, he was elected class leader of the Greencastle Church. Moving to Onio with his parents, he was licensed to preach on June 2, 1819, by the Miami Conference, ordained DEACON in 1822 (one of the few United Brethren ministers ordained to this office) and ELDER in 1825. He was a "half-itinerant" preacher for more than a decade. Then in 1836 he was presiding elder (Miami Conference) for five years; bishop for four years (the 1845 General Conference did not re-elect him); again presiding elder in Miami Conference (1846); missionary to southwestern Missouri (1852); trustee of the U.B. Publishing House, newly moved from Circleville to Dayton, Ohio (1853); then publishing agent (1854); missionary to Nebraska (1865); re-elected bishop of the German membership of his denomination (1861-65); agent for the newly established Union Biblical Seminary (now UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY), Dayton, Ohio; member of each quadrennial GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1841-1865.

An avid reader and student, he was an able preacher and biblical interpreter. A man of strong convictions, he courageously took his stand on the issues of his day. He was a strong advocate of infant BAPTISM and of the doctrine of total depravity; strongly opposed slavery, extravagance in dress, worldly amusements, secret societies, and "mere human contrivances for the advancement of the gospel."

KUMLER, HENRY, SR. (1775-1854), American U.B. bishop, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Young) Kumler, was born in Berks County, Pa., Jan. 3, 1775, died in Butler County, Ohio, Jan. 7, 1854. His education was that common to his day. At age sixteen he received catechetical instruction and joined the German Reformed Church. In 1797 he married Susanna Wingert.

He moved his family from Berks to Franklin County, Pa., in 1810, and a year later was converted while praying in his barn. His German Reformed pastor publicly rebuked him for opening his home to revivalistic preachers. He joined the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. In 1813, he attended the Annual Conference held at Hagers-town, Md. The next Annual Conference licensed him to preach and the one in 1815 elected him a member of the First General Conference—the Conference which framed the Discipline for the young denomination. 1816 marked his ordination and 1817 saw him elected a presiding elder. In 1819, he moved to Butler County, Ohio, and joined the Miami Conference of his Church. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES OF 1815 and 1817 as delegate from the Original or EASTERN CONFERENCE; and of those of 1821 and 1825 representing the Miami Conference. In 1825 he was elected bishop, an office he was to hold through subsequent elections until he retired in 1845.

The years of his bishopric were the adolescent years in the life of Kumler's denomination. He played no small part in developing its attitudes toward secret societies, alcoholic beverages, higher education, and slavery; in the establishment of a printing house and the publication in 1834 of the denomination's first periodical, the Religious Telescope; and in the approval of the Constitution in 1841.

KUPFER, CARL FREDERICK (1852-1925), representative of German-American Methodism in the China field, was born in Saxony, Germany, on June 8, 1852. After graduation from BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE (in the United States) in 1881 he was married to Lydia Krill and went to CHINA the same year. From 1881 to 1900, he was engaged chiefly in evangelistic work, superintending the growing Central China work from Chinkiang to Kiukiang along the Yangtze River. But by 1900 he had become convinced that the chief contribution the missionary could make lay in educating Chinese to take responsibility for developing the church, and from that year on his name is linked with William Nast College of Kiukiang.

Educational work for boys had already been begun in Kiukiang as early as 1881, when a school with the high-sounding name of Fowler University had been founded. By 1885 it had acquired a school plant and changed its name to Fowler Institute. Then, in 1900, arrangements were made to make this school a particular project of German-American Methodists. Kupfer became its president and the name was changed again, this time to William Nast College of Central China (named for WILLIAM NAST, the German leader and editor in the U.S.A.). R. Y. Lo wrote in 1926 that most of the preachers in the Kiangsi Conference were former students of Kupfer. Some college courses were given until 1918, when upper courses were transferred to the University of Nanking, and the Kiukiang school became a secondary school.

When World War I began, Kupfer showed unmistakably his loyalty to the cause of the Central Powers. This made him unpopular with the other missionaries and, in spite of his seniority and high reputation as an educator, he was forced to resign in 1917. He retired to Wuchang and died on Nov. 16, 1925, in a Hankow hospital.

He was the author of several books: Sermons (1895); Exposition of the Articles of Religion (1896); God in Nature (1904, in Chinese); Sacred Places in China (1911).

KYNETT, ALPHA JEFFERSON (1829-1899), American minister and pioneer Church Extension executive, was born at Gettysburg, Pa., Aug. 12, 1829. He moved to IOWA in 1842 and joined the IOWA CONFERENCE in 1851. In 1856 the Conference was divided, placing him in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE. By 1860 he had become presiding elder of Davenport District. A financial depression had caught the frontier churches helplessly in debt. Kynett devised a Conference society to aid them. In 1864 he was made its executive. By 1865 all these debts had been removed. The General Conference (ME) in 1864 adopted the idea and formed a church-wide CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY, to which in 1867 Kynett was called to become Corresponding Secretary. During his thirty-two years in this office more than 11,000 churches received financial aid amounting to more than $6,000,000. He was a member of nine successive GENERAL CONFERENCES, one of the founders of the Anti-Saloon League and a delegate to the first ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in London in 1881. He died in the midst of his work Feb. 23, 1899. He is buried in Philadelphia, Pa.
